We know what the MacKinnon panel reported, that Alberta spends $10.4 billion more per capita every year than the average of British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec. Mr. Chair, the MacKinnon panel put a fine point on where our problem lies, and we have to deliver much more efficiently – much more efficiently – than the previous government delivered on behalf of Albertans. Moving ATRF to AIMCo is a value proposition that will benefit teachers, that will strengthen their pensions, that in the long term will reduce their contributions while maintaining their defined pension benefits.

Mr. Chair, it will also reduce taxpayer cost to supporting the other half of pension contributions, which lies squarely on the government as the employer and ultimately on Alberta taxpayers.

But there's more because the government or employer contributions actually come out of our Education budget. As you know, this government committed to Albertans that we would not reduce the Education budget. K to 12 education is critically important even at a time of fiscal restraint.

Last year, Mr. Chair, Alberta Education spent $405 million on their portion of the defined benefit premiums. As we can find savings and efficiencies due to using AIMCo, which manages a larger volume of assets which will create economies of scale and drive down the costs of managing those investments, not only will teachers benefit – and they will – but Alberta taxpayers will benefit. Those funds that we saved will remain in our Education budget. By moving ATRF pensions to be managed, for the investments to be managed by AIMCo, this will add $20 million to the front lines of education spending every year. Albertans elected this government to deliver more efficiently, to deliver more effectively, to respect Albertans' hard-earned tax dollars. This move accomplishes that.

Mr. Chair, I haven't mentioned the cost to this government to pay for the unfunded portion of the pre-1992 teacher pension plan, which the Alberta government, Alberta taxpayers, have taken sole responsibility of. That is an additional $471 million. This government, the taxpayers of this province have every reason to be very interested in the risk management and the returns of the Alberta teacher pension plan. The really great part, Mr. Chair, is that the teachers' goals and taxpayers' goals are congruent. Both parties will benefit from increased returns, lower costs, and less risk. We have the same goals, the same end. This transfer of managing the investment assets of ATRF, moving that investment responsibility to AIMCo, will accomplish just that.

I want to reiterate a key important fact that gets lost in the discussion at every turn, and that is this: that ATRF will continue to manage the pension plan, that representation on ATRF will remain the same, that ATRF will continue to own the pension plan. The government is not taking the teachers' pension plan. ATRF will continue to provide high-level strategic policy direction for those pension funds.

Mr. Chair, I just believed it was incredibly important as we discuss clarity in the amendment before the House that we clarify some key facts around one of the provisions in Bill 22.

The Acting Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, we will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Acting Chair: We will now move on to further discussion on Bill 22. Any members wishing to speak to the bill, Bill 22? Thank you. The Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm rising in the House to speak against Bill 22. We had quite a bit of patience listening to the debate on Bill 22, the views of the government House members from the other side, for hours and hours. One thing I really wanted to stress is that it does not change the fact that through this Bill 22 the government is taking the case in hand to remove this very officer, the position that is investigating some of the government House members. This is a fact. This fact did not change. It does not matter, like, how long a debate we have and whichever government House members, you know, rise to defend Bill 22. This fact is obvious, and it's still there. The government has presented this bill to remove the Election Commissioner that had been investigating the government House members for the last almost two years.

I just wanted to stress that in a democracy one of the important tenets of the democratic principles is the rule of law, where government and government officials have to obey the same law just like everyone else. This is something under this bill that the government is trying to avoid to protect the members of the government that are being investigated by the Election Commissioner.

Going into a little bit of history, in 2017 the Election Commissioner of Alberta had levied more than $211,000 in fines against people and organizations involved with the campaign for Jeff Callaway, who ran for the leadership of the UCP in 2017. The same year the documents leaked and showed that people working on UCP leadership campaign for the Premier and Callaway for months exchanged strategies, ideas, memes, advertising, plans, and talking points. The commissioner has to date levied 31 administrative penalties against people and organizations connected to the Callaway campaign for allegedly funnelling money to Callaway to run a kamikaze campaign against popular party leader, contender, and former Wildrose Party leader Brian Jean. The Election Commissioner fined political actors for improperly funnelling others' money – others' money – not their money, to the Callaway campaign that was illegal, colluding to circumvent legal political contribution limits, and obstruction of an investigation. As a matter of fact, Callaway himself has been fined for accepting donations he ought to have known were prohibited. Mr. Chair, that is the reality of what we are debating here. That is what is existing as of right now.

Voting for this bill or even proposing this bill I would say is the largest attack on democracy. This is the greatest abuse of power that one can have. Just because the government six, seven months ago in the general election won the majority, it does not mean they can't play by the rules or that the government members will have a different set of rules. This obviously shows the culture of entitlement. When it comes to the ATRF, so many members of this side of the House, my colleagues, have very eloquently spoken on this issue. The hon. member of the government the Minister of Finance, you know, stood in the House many times and stated how beneficial this will be, that this will probably benefit the teachers and those very employees whose hard-earned contributions they are trying to raid, I will say.

If they're so confident, if they've heard this much expert advice, what is preventing them from talking to those very people whose hard-earned money they are trying to raid? It is simply clear that the government is moving forward to raid those funds to fund the $4.7 billion tax giveaway to big corporations because that is the hole this government has created in the budget. That move has not created a single job in Alberta so far.

I'm very concerned looking at what is happening in this House and what is being proposed. The systemic act of the government's proposal of almost seven years of going after youth workers, going after students, going after people with severe disabilities, and now the public-sector workers, teachers, nurses, when in fact the government is offering – not offering, threatening to force them to take the 5 per cent rollback. At the same time the government argued to give an unprecedented raise to their own people they hired for jobs, making the argument that their worth is much more in the private sector. This is very shameful. Looking at their systemic acts and steps, it's very, very important for us in this House to oppose this Bill 22, the biggest attack on democracy in the contemporary world, I will say.

I didn't plan to speak the full length of my time. The experts are actually, as we are debating this bill in the House, giving their views on the bill. I just wanted to probably reference one of these for the record to Hansard. The article in Global today by Heide Pearson is titled Firing of Alberta Election Commissioner Called ‘Political Interference,’ Opposition Seeks Intervention. In this article the political science professor at Mount Royal University states – his name is Duane Bratt – that it is believed that the move is “designed to end the investigation of the UCP leadership race in 2017.” This is not the view of the NDP caucus members.

The government House members are so confident. They have a majority. They’re going to pass this bill by the majority, but Albertans will speak up. As of today I just wanted to give you the feedback. The people are showing up in my riding, in my office. Those very people that in the last election did not vote for us, that took UCP signs for their yards, that supported the UCP for creating jobs: they are showing up in our offices. That was a mistake, voting UCP in the last election. You can pass this bill, you can use your majority in the House, but the people of Alberta will definitely speak up.

You know, I’m deeply concerned by systemic moves in the House. Looking at the historic acts and the moves of the government, I’m afraid if we don’t oppose this bill, if we don’t defeat this bill, it is not going to stop here. The government will keep going on and on, one after the other issue. I’m actually extremely concerned about the safety and the security of those very people. They had courage to reveal the kamikaze campaign. I don’t know what next step this government will take if this bill is passed.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

Madam Chair, I’m honoured to rise in the House to speak against this bill, and I also ask the members of this House to please vote against this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report progress on Bill 22.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 22. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. So carried.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Government Motions

Time Allocation on Bill 22

36. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 22, Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions and Government Enterprises Act, 2019, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good evening. Great to see you. Good morning, I think. We’re into the next day.

Mr. Speaker, in the interest of time and the hour I will be brief. I do want to point out that it is my duty to move this government motion today to continue to make sure that the Chamber can progress with Alberta’s legislation.

I do want to refer to some comments made by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I believe her constituency would have been a different name at the time, but while she was serving in the capacity of deputy House leader under then Government House Leader Mr. Mason, she spoke to what was the last time that she spoke to a time allocation motion inside this Assembly. Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, it was the time allocation motion brought forward by her government to appoint the current Election Commissioner. One of the comments that she brought up inside that was this. She said that in regard to that motion, which was heavily debated inside this Chamber, “it has been debated multiple times, for a total of about six hours,” at which time the government closed debate on the entire issue, not just one stage of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I’d like to point out that at this point we are headed towards nine hours already on this legislation. We are only in Committee of the Whole. At the end of this it will be over 10 hours of debate on this legislation. We still have one more stage of the bill to go, showing, certainly, the government’s commitment to continue to make sure that the Official Opposition can do their important role, their constitutional role, inside this Chamber of holding the government to account and making sure that we are able to prepare the best legislation that we can for Albertans, which is their job. They certainly at the time of debating similar issues thought that six hours was enough for the entire thing. At that time, actually, if you look further into Hansard, you will see that when I responded to the hon. member then as the Official Opposition House Leader, I protested about six hours, certainly would have been a lot happier at that time as the Official Opposition House Leader if I had already had 10 at this stage of the legislation. That was at the end.

So I’m glad that I’ve been able to fulfill the promise of the Premier and myself as the Government House Leader inside this Chamber to always make sure that the Official Opposition can do their job inside this Chamber, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the next hour of debate in Committee of the Whole. I do hope that the Official Opposition has some amendments. We would be curious if there’s some input to help us be able to make this legislation better. Then, of course, I look forward to the next stage, which will hopefully be third reading, assuming that Bill 22 makes it through Committee of the Whole if we have the support of the majority of the members of this Chamber. I don’t know if that’s the case, obviously, until the vote is called. I do suspect that it’s the case.

With that, I look forward with eager anticipation to the Official Opposition’s response to this important time allocation motion and to seeing if the Official Opposition House Leader has some quotes from me when I was the Official Opposition House Leader about time allocation.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to add to the debate on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very concerned, and I rise to object to this closure, this time allocation, that's being brought in because it is absolutely undermining the democracy of this House. He is comparing it to previous closures, but I want to point out a number of ways in which this is dramatically different than previous closures.

For example, he mentioned that there was a time when after a number of hours of debate the previous government invoked closure actually to appoint the Election Commissioner, and at that time it was a completely different circumstance. We hadn't designed the closure before the actual debate occurred, which is what has happened here. They didn't come into this and say: look; we've heard enough about this. They said before they actually introduced the bill that they were going to invoke closure, and now they're invoking that closure. A completely different circumstance. It wasn't like they heard enough and thought it was time to move on. They never intended to hear things. That's what's different about this one.

It's completely outrageous going into the House knowing that you're going to subvert democracy before you even actually begin to have the discussion. This is something that has never been done before in this House, where they plan it ahead of time, introduce it, and then they make sure that the whole thing happens in a three-day period of time. Sometimes bills in this House take weeks to get through because government is wanting to present their point of view to make sure people understand it. But, clearly, they don't want to present their point of view in this case. They do not wish to be able to tell the people of Alberta what is going on, and the reason why is because the only reason they're doing this is not to do something like the last time, where we were just simply appointing someone to a position; they're doing this to avoid the investigation of corruption in their party, a completely different circumstance than the last time. To compare those two is just outrageous. The fact that the leader of the government side could stand there and make that comparison just tells us how much he disrespects the people of the province of Alberta, how much he thinks he can slide under the carpet and pretend: nothing's going on here, folks; please, look away.

That's not something we're prepared to do on this side of the House because we understand what is happening here. We understand that invoking closure is to avoid prosecution. That's what it's about. It's not to end discussion in the House. It is to ensure that they can continue to engage in practices which people in the media have been referring to as corrupt. I can tell you that the media over the last number of days has been very clear that they see this as an illegitimate, autocratic behaviour by this government. They think they can fool people, but people are beginning to hear about this, and as they hear about it, they are outraged.

People coming into the House, sitting here to listen to the debate about things that matter to them, find out that they're not going to be able to hear that debate about the things that matter to them because this government really doesn't care to talk to the people of Alberta. They didn't talk to the teachers before they took their pension plan away from them. They didn't go out and say, "Look, we have a great idea that's going to be so good for you and for government," because they knew that wasn't the case. So what they've done now is that they've come in and they have created a bill in which they are hiding the truth. They are subverting the process of democracy in which we should have an opportunity to speak to things that matter, that are fundamentally important for people, that are about the trust that's been put in the government by the teachers after serious and long negotiations with the previous government some years ago to create a pension plan that the teachers would have a voice in. Now all of that has been taken away without any kind of discussion.

That's a dictatorial behaviour and one that's completely unacceptable to this side of the House and is unacceptable to the people of Alberta. They do not want a dictatorship, they do not want these totalitarian and controlling kinds of behaviours, and they're going to tell this government in due course that they will not put up with it. We will not put up with it on this side of the House either.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 36 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 12:13 a.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Government Motion 36 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

The Chair: Are there any speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to stand up and speak. I will try and keep it short. I just want to get some things on record because I, too, have had the phone calls to my office, the letters, the e-mails, some very, very concerned, especially from teachers and nurses, about some of the changes and especially from teachers about the pension. Ultimately, I think it comes from a difference in information and where they're getting their information from.

Now, I would like to challenge the multitudes up in the gallery tonight and the tens of people that are watching at home at this late hour. It is 20 after 12, after all. I'm actually going to clip the speech that the Minister of Finance just gave at approximately 11:40 to 11:50 this evening. I would encourage people to listen to that – it's written in Hansard; it will be there forever – and consider where they are getting their information from. Because I get calls from people that are friends of mine that are teachers. They're very concerned, and they're very upset. I say, "Well, where are you getting your information from?" And they say, "Well, you know, we're getting it from our union reps and from the ATA."

The Minister of Municipal Affairs read a little excerpt from the NDP's constitution, and I would like to add to what he said. I'm going to read you a little section from article 7, the provincial council and who makes up the provincial council.

7.01 The Provincial Council shall consist of:

- (a) the Provincial Executive;
- (b) two (2) members to be elected from the Party Caucus . . .

It goes down farther:

- (h) two (2) members of the Alberta Federation of Labour.

And then:

- (i) one (1) member from each of the affiliates in Alberta.

If you're a teacher or a nurse or a public-sector union worker in Alberta, chances are that you fall into the section of affiliate. I'd also like to add that as an affiliate every one of you members out there, since you joined your union and started working, have been paying $1.25 a month of your union dues that go directly to the Alberta Federation of Labour, and that's a fact. Now, you wonder where your messaging is coming from when your union leadership and the Alberta Federation of Labour are actually sitting on the provincial council for the New Democratic Party of Alberta? [interjections]

I'm going to go on, and I'm going to read you a little bit more.

7.02 Provincial Council shall meet at least twice a year at the call of the Executive.

I can see they're getting pretty riled up about this because they don't like the facts.

7.03 Provincial Council shall be the governing body of the Party in Alberta.

So membership from the affiliated unions and the Alberta Federation of Labour are the governing body of the New Democratic Party of Alberta.

Now, you wonder why you're getting misleading information from your ATA and your United Nurses association and your union representatives? The messaging is coming directly from the New Democratic Party. You wonder why you're getting conflicting, fearmongering messaging? It's because your messaging is coming directly from the opposition, the government opposition.

I would just like, folks, when you hear this fearful messaging that's coming out, listen to Mr. Toews' message. It's the truth. He stood up here. It's on . . .

Mr. Bilous: Name.

The Chair: Member, names.

Mr. Hanson: I'm sorry. Names. I apologize. It's late.

The minister went on quite eloquently for 10 minutes. It will be clipped, and it'll be on Facebook. Please share it. Before you fall to the fearmongering and the false information, consider your source. Please consider your source.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. Considering that time is of the essence – we now have less than one hour to finish debating this important and terrible piece of legislation – I need to clarify a couple of things that the member said. He's actually misinformed. The ATA is not part of the AFL, first of all. They're not part of the Alberta Federation of Labour. They are also not part of the NDP. The ATA is not affiliated with anyone. In fact, I'm pretty sure the previous member's comments have offended the ATA. They are a professional organization, just like the Law Society of Alberta and other professional entities.

Yes, part of – I'll explain it. They are both the professional body that approves who becomes a teacher – they set the standards – and they are also a union. They are both. But they are a professional organization. I guarantee that ATA members are offended by the accusation that either they are part of a political party or fund a political party. No, they're not. They are not. They are apolitical. They are nonpartisan. Individual members may choose to affiliate with a political party; the ATA does not. They are a professional organization. Anyone attacking the credibility of teachers or as a profession: I take offence to that. I'm a teacher. My teaching has nothing to do with my political views.

So for the record, to clarify, the ATA is not part of the AFL. They are not affiliated with a single party, not any political party. I encourage members to look at the ATA, and if they don't believe me, talk to them directly.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I would like to say every time I rise in this House that it's an honour because it's an honour to represent my constituents, but I'm not feeling very pleased to speak to Bill 22. This bill is absolutely an attack on democratic institutions. This is another omnibus bill, one of the many. I've got a few of them here. This was a Harper-era technique, throwing a whole bunch of bills into one, when each of the sections of those bills should really be a bill on their own. There are 31 statutes that are changed or amended in here. It's an absolute affront to democracy. It's an attack. As we've heard tonight, it's an attack on a whole lot of hard-working Albertans, which I'm going to talk about in a moment.

I'm not going to speak a lot about the Election Commissioner because I believe my colleagues have done a very good job with that. I've spoken a lot about what I've heard from teachers and nurses, but I can tell you that I'm hearing a lot from my constituents about the corrupt nature of this government and about the firing of the Election Commissioner. I find that interesting, you know, that the members opposite will insinuate fear and smear and will talk about how we're blowing things out of proportion, but I'm intrigued by the level of interest in this.

It reeks of corruption. I think why people are speaking out more than they ever have before is because it just continues. The corrupt acts continue. The entitlement of this government continues. I mean, we talk about the Election Commissioner, who is currently investigating the MLA for Calgary-East for fraud. We see entitled behaviour from this government already – what? – six, seven months into tenure: $16,000 charter flights; $18,000 for hotels; staff; something about vitamin C showers earlier.

What I want to speak about is the attack. That bothers me a lot because I have a lot of friends, a lot of neighbours, a lot of constituents who are public-sector workers. So I want to talk about pensions, and I want to talk about the unprecedented attack on teachers and nurses and other public service workers in this province. I was really proud to see so many teachers and nurses here tonight in the gallery. There's at least one teacher still up there in the gallery, and we're at – what? – about 12:30 a.m. I'm confused about a few things as well. You know, I know that the members opposite, many of them, have teachers in their own families. They're telling stories about how they've got a teacher in their family and that person is fine with it. Well, I'm telling you that 30,000 teachers and counting have reached out to us. And counting.

I wish this was just about pensions. Truly, it's not. It's not just about pensions. It's about so much more. It's about a continued pattern by this government of attacking teachers in many ways over a short tenure. I've spoken about this before. The list is pretty lengthy. We can point to things, obviously, like the attack on pensions, but we can point to other things. The curriculum review panel: set up a curriculum review panel, but don't put a single practising teacher on it. Yet, there's room for businesspeople. There's room for an American researcher, who is funded by the – who are they? – Koch brothers in the United States, a researcher who's focused, you know, on privatization and bringing a voucher-style education system here to Alberta. Yet, again, not a place for a single practising teacher to advise on what is going to be a curriculum for this entire province. Just one example.

There are countless other examples. We've seen a few examples tonight, attacks on the professional body of teachers, the Alberta Teachers' Association, right? Your insults aren't helping tonight. We're talking about tens of thousands of Albertans, and to insult them, as some of the members here tonight have, is shameful. And I'll tell you that the word will spread about this display, not just the comments towards teachers but the undemocratic acts that are happening, the invoking of closure on a bill that in itself should take many, many hours. We should have a fulsome discussion on the elements within this bill.

Let's get back to the attack on pensions. I actually want to quote the Alberta Teachers' Association. I was a teacher myself, just like one of my colleagues here, from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I respected the Alberta Teachers' Association. I still respect the Alberta Teachers' Association. They're the voice of Alberta's teachers.

We put our hopes and dreams for our retirement into these pensions. We also put in half the funds! The least the government can do is let us have 50 per cent of the say when it comes to how the funds are managed.

Now they don't even want us to have that.

The Alberta government has proposed removing the fund assets from the [ATRF] . . . and transferring them to [AIMCo].

This will not save the government any money, but could actually cost the fund through lower returns.

12:30

These are the countless e-mails we're getting, and as another member on my side mentioned tonight, these aren't just form letters. I'm getting a lot of really personal e-mails. In fact, I've had a few e-mails from teachers that I used to teach with not only saying, "How is this happening?" and "How could they do this?" but then their next question is: what can we do about this? They're getting mobilized. Teachers are getting mobilized. Nurses are getting mobilized. It's a whole heck of a lot of Albertans who are getting mobilized.

Now, it's interesting. We've heard this Premier talk about how, you know, he's sort of thrown around the fact that: "We might pull out of the Canada pension plan and create our own Alberta pension plan, but don't worry; Albertans will have a say before we do that. There will be a referendum."

Ms Renaud: Just trust us.

Member Irwin: Trust us. Exactly.

So he is willing to have a referendum on something like the CPP, yet he's not even willing to talk to teachers before making this move? Not even willing to consult with teachers? I think that that's one of the things that hurts teachers the most right now. He couldn't even bother asking us? He couldn't even bother engaging?

You know, it's interesting. I've been in this House only – what? – six, seven months, and I remember the members opposite talking about consultation and engagement and being so proud of their record and, you know, criticizing us for our record, yet, wow, we're talking about tens of thousands of Albertans. You couldn't even have had a conversation with them.

No wonder teachers are angry. They have every right to be angry. Like I said, I don't understand how the members opposite can't also be angry, because I know – I guarantee you – there are members in this House from the government who are not supportive of this move because they've got family members who are impacted. Now, I know that your Premier has said that you can have free votes, so I'm still hoping that there will be members opposite who will make use of their free votes and vote against this terrible bill.

As I said, I've heard from many teachers, many of my old teacher colleagues, and they're not just angry and furious, like I said, they're sad as well. They're just feeling deflated. Again, it's not just about pensions. It's about the continued attack on them and their profession.

I actually talked with one teacher who told me that, you know, she's been teaching for nearly 30 years, giving it her all, someone who's entirely active in her school community, coaching, doing so much beyond teaching, always there late at night, that kind of thing. She's been there nearly 30 years, so she's getting close to retirement, and she's upset. She feels betrayed. Why would they do this without asking teachers? That's a long-time teacher, someone who's been in the classroom for nearly three decades.

I've also heard from brand new teachers. One teacher talked to me about how she started teaching a bit later, in her late 20s, not that long ago, but she plans to teach for 30 years, so, you know, she's in it for the long haul, and she's excited about that. She mentioned how she struggled to get through university. She's now paying student loans, which, incidentally, I reminded her will be going up as well because this UCP government has also in their short term attacked postsecondary education. She's a new teacher paying into her pension, and she's now thinking: well, when am I even going to be able to retire? She's concerned about that.

I remember when I started teaching, I was out in rural Alberta. I told this story before. I was teaching in the metropolis of Bawlf, Alberta, and, you know, it was great. It was a great place to start teaching, in that village, but I remember that I didn't have a lot of money, and with every paycheque a lot of money went to our pension. It was a big chunk, and I remember thinking: "Oh, my goodness. This is a lot coming off my paycheque." But then you think about it: wow, this is an investment for the future, right? It's hard when you're trying to make ends meet, but you've got that long-term vision of: "Okay. You know what? It's for the greater good. It's savings. I'm putting it away." So I think about teachers like that, who are now in the position that I was. But they're facing retirement insecurity whereas I was feeling pretty confident when I started teaching that that pension was going to be there for me and it was going to be stable.

You know, we've heard a couple of the members opposite going on some interesting tangents tonight attacking teachers. One of the members, the associate minister for red tape, talked about, you know: Albertans chose a different path. I wrote down some of his words. And I'm thinking that, yeah, they sure did. Yeah.

You can go on about how we lost the election, but I'm hearing from a lot of Albertans who are having buyer's remorse. They didn't vote for their pensions to be attacked. They didn't vote for AISH recipients to be attacked. They didn't vote for their own income taxes to be going up. The list goes on. I mean, I want to let other people speak, so I won't go on with the list of attacks this government has levied on folks that they weren't expecting, that they didn't vote for.

In fact, we were out in the rotunda talking with a number of teachers and nurses, and one of the teachers shared a story about a friend who works at a large energy company in Calgary. She conveyed the conversation, saying that, you know, they were going back and forth for a while, and this person who works for a large oil company said, like: "Yeah. I voted for this government, but I didn't vote for this." Downtown Calgary attitudes are starting to shift. Folks like that who did admittedly vote for the UCP, someone who works in the oil industry. As I said, I've heard from a lot of folks from all corners of this province who are experiencing buyer's remorse.

Again, I wanted to share that story to encourage the members opposite to think about perhaps exercising their free votes and actually reading your e-mails. I know that, if you're like me, you're behind on your e-mails, and you don't always see your constituents' e-mails. Go through them. Read the stories from teachers, from nurses. Some of them are incredible, and some of them voted for you. So I urge you to listen.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill. I guess I want to come at it from the perspective of – I sit as the chair . . .

An Hon. Member: These guys here are getting time.

Mr. Orr: Oh. Okay.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Given that we are in the final hour of debate at Committee of the Whole, I certainly appreciate a little bit of the time to talk about some very real, serious concerns that there are in Bill 22 and the significant changes. My colleagues have talked about a wide range of impacts within Bill 22, which, to remind everyone, is an omnibus piece of legislation that changes 31 statutes, that does so many different things.

With my limited time to speak at Committee of the Whole, I'm going to focus in on pensions. Specifically there are some major changes to public-sector pensions in Bill 22. There's a very good reason why teachers and nurses have been in the galleries today, because of these significant changes, changes that in many cases put Alberta completely out of step with pension governance in other jurisdictions.

I'm going to quickly run through it because, again, I don't have much time, but there are some serious concerns. I really believe that we cannot pass omnibus legislation without fully investigating the questions that it brings up. I'm going to pose you some questions. We have to understand the impacts.

Firstly, with the change to move ATRF to AIMCo and removing the ability for LAPP, SFPP, PSPP, to leave AIMCo, AIMCo becomes the permanent and exclusive provider of investment management services. There is no choice. None of these bodies are able to change. AIMCo is de facto what they must use.

Secondly, AIMCo is an agent of the government of Alberta. As a Crown agency it is subject to direction by the responsible minister.

Now, we've only had this bill and been able to review it since 3:15 on Monday, an omnibus piece of legislation that does so, so much. Our ability to really dig into this has been hampered by the time pressures involved. So I want to say thank you to those who have been doing the work of analyzing this bill.

So we agree that AIMCo is an agency of the Crown, and as a Crown agency it is subject to direction from the minister. Our analysis of Bill 22 shows that there is no clear protection for public-sector pension plans and their members if there is a conflict of interest between ministerial directives and their obligation to act in the best interest of their clients.

Bill 22 is literally putting politics back into pensions. Our government worked hard to take politics out of pension governance, and, instead, Bill 22 firmly reinserts it. Most pension arrangements across Canada have no provisions whatsoever that allow a ministerial or political direction on investments. But here we're at real risk of AIMCo being directed for political purposes instead of in the best interest of pension plan members. The fact that Bill 22 creates a confusing and contradictory governance structure for Alberta's public-sector pension plans should be concerning for everyone.

Bill 22 should be clear: is it the responsibility to the plan members and to getting the best returns, or is it the responsibility to follow ministerial directives? Bill 22 doesn't tell us that. It's confusing, it's contradictory, and right now plan administrators are fiduciaries and owe their fiduciary obligations to the members of the respective plans, as they should. As a Crown agency the corporations will have obligations to the minister.

And in order to write a ministerial order, the minister is able to do that quite easily. I will note that federally there is the possibility for regulations to adjust pensions, but in order to do that, it has to be fully transparent, public. There are votes. It's a whole thing. Here: a ministerial order, and all of a sudden politics are directing our pensions and how investments are being made.

Now, there have been some changes on the boards for PSPP, SFPP, LAPP. The principle of proportional representation has been severely weakened, and it's taken a significant step away from the democratic foundation of the joint governance of pension plans act. It was originally set up to ensure that there were balanced interests and to make sure that workers had a fully representative seat, across multiple seats, at the table. But now the seat has been taken away from AUPE and given to non-unionized management employees, which, I will note, do not have the organization to let someone represent their interests on employment-related issues. There are no elections for this seat. There is no way to be accountable to the membership on employment-related issues because it's not set up that way. These are non-unionized employees, and unlike unionized employees, non-unionized employees are subject to dismissal without cause if, for example, an employer doesn't like the position that they're taking on pensions.

So we have a really big problem. The seat that has been removed from AUPE will potentially have decisive voting rights, and it's being given, in a way that there is no possibility for representation or accountability, to a person who may be under pressure from the employers. This changes the balance on these boards. It changes how decisions are made. This is significant, and it's included in a larger, omnibus piece of legislation. I cannot emphasize that enough.

I also want to just stop and make note that there are 400,000 Albertans with assets in ATRF, PSPP, SFPP, LAPP. So 400,000 Albertans are involved in these pensions, and here we've already raised several significant concerns.

Now, I also want to mention what Bill 22 does that I didn't even realize Bill 22 did for the longest time because the minister never mentioned it. It erodes significant member protections that were provided under the joint governance of pension plans act. The rights of part-time, non-unionized employees to continue their membership in the LAPP and the PSPP have been removed. Part-time employees and their ability to continue in these pension plans: this is a significant concern, particularly during a time when this government is cutting back and hours of work are being reduced. I'm concerned about this, and I think pension plan members are concerned about this.

It is my opinion that members of the government should be concerned about the changes that no one has talked about in this House so far. The minister has not talked about part-time, non-unionized employees losing their rights to be in the pension. As well, the rights of all new part-time employees to join the LAPP and the PSPP used to be protected. Bill 22 removes this protection. I can tell you that the life of part-time employees is difficult enough. We've all heard about the gig economy. We've all heard about workers having to work multiple part-time jobs. Now the pension rights for these workers are being removed in this bill, but because it's a small piece in such a larger piece of legislation, an omnibus bill, nobody is even noticing. Well, Madam Chair, I noticed, with the help of some analysis of this bill, and I have serious concerns that it doesn't appear the government is interested in responding to.

As well as the concerns around part-time employees, successor right provisions have been removed. What does that mean? Well, it means that if an employer privatizes their operations or contracts out a portion of their work, the successor employer will have no obligation to maintain the employees' participation in LAPP or PSPP. I can tell you that there are many Albertans concerned with this government starting to privatize services to the public. Now, on top of the concerns that that might happen, we have the knowledge that thanks to Bill 22, if the employer privatizes operations or contracts out some or all of the work, then the new employer has no obligation to continue employees in the LAPP or the PSPP. That's a significant concern to workers.

So here we are. It's nearly 1 in the morning. We're in the final hour of debate in Committee of the Whole. I've raised a number of significantly serious concerns to do with pensions that impact 400,000 Albertans, on top of the already discussed, through limited second reading debate, concerns around firing the Election Commissioner. We really haven't talked at all about allowing political parties to merge. The government hasn't said a word about that, but we know that that's contained in this bill. The change to the ATB mandate: I have raised questions about what this might mean for the ATB and how this might impact rural Alberta, small-business loans. We hear crickets on these critical issues.

In my view, Madam Chair, Bill 22 brings politics into pensions. It confuses how pensions are governed. It is not clear through the bill. If the minister writes a directive and tells AIMCo how they need to invest their money, do they need to follow that directive, or do they need to follow their duty to their members? Bill 22 doesn't clear that up. It introduces that. We know that of pensions across the country, this is unique.

So I would urge this government to change its direction. I would urge all members of this House to not vote in support of legislation that has not been fully canvassed, that there are significant concerns with from all of our public servants, many of whom have come to stay in the gallery to watch this debate. I believe I heard that 29,000 teachers have sent correspondence of some kind on the issues of Bill 22. Bill 22 opens the door for political interference in pensions. That is what it is doing. Bill 22 takes away the power for workers to have a right and a say in what happens with their pensions, that they pay into.

This is their money. This is their future. They didn't ask for this to happen. The government certainly didn't run on it in the election. There are serious questions about how this will work and the impacts it will have, and I'm not hearing those being addressed, which is a serious concern to me. So I will be voting against Bill 22 in Committee of the Whole. We will go from a bill being introduced on Monday that looks like it's going to be passed on Thursday, with significant issues, concern from the public.

As much as the government would like to talk themselves into believing that this is the NDP stirring up fear, I can tell you, Madam Chair, that this is not. People are worried. People have questions that are unanswered. There are major topics like successorship that the minister hasn't even mentioned in this House. How many other pieces are in this bill that haven't even come up for debate? I think there are a significant number, just based on my understanding of Bill 22 and the things that I am still discovering as I sit here tonight through this debate reading the bill and trying to do the best job that I can as an opposition MLA.

Thank you for the limited time.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move an amendment.

The Chair: Hon. members, this will be known as amendment A2. St. Albert, please proceed.

Ms Renaud: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 22, Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions and Government Enterprises Act, 2019, be amended by adding the following after section 44:

44.1 Sections 11, 12(2) and (3)(a), 13, 14(2)(a), (5), (17) and (18), 15, 17, 18, 27, 30, 35 to 38 and 40 come into force on November 1, 2024.

As you can see, this amendment actually extends for five years these particular changes that I think we've been talking about all evening, talking about why it's not just the perception of what's happening here but what actually is happening. By pushing it ahead by five years, what it allows for is an appropriate transition. Without sort of messing around with the language, it ensures that there is no interference in this investigation or in the investigations undertaken by the Election Commissioner.

I think we can all agree that continuity is important, particularly when we're talking about investigations. I think it would give the people of Alberta some reassurance, actually, that the government is serious about hearing the concerns around not just the appearance but what this bill actually does in terms of interfering in an active investigation, a serious investigation, a serious investigation of collusion, about donations and all of the things that we've talked about.

It's unfortunate that the amendment is getting ripped up before we're done, but okay. It sort of goes right along with closure and the earplugs, but let's just proceed.

Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to move this amendment, and with that, I will sit down.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to the amendment here, making, I guess you could say, an opportunity for the government to tap on the brake, push pause, and consider some of the implications around some of the legislation that's being considered here, particularly around the Election Commissioner.

One of the things that I don't think we've had the opportunity to really explore here, because we certainly aren't seeing it in the legislation, a very large piece of legislation – you know, it's funny. I've said before that history matters. Being one of those members that was around in the 29th Legislature, I certainly remember members of the opposition at that time making comments whenever a bill got over about 50 pages. They were quite concerned with the amount of information and the amount of time that they were able to digest it in and what kind of consequences there could be. Here we have an omnibus piece of legislation, one of four pieces of omnibus legislation that the government has brought in, that they used to criticize quite highly. As a former member of the 29th Legislature, Madam Chair, you probably remember some of those conversations around that. They accused the former NDP government of trying to ram through all kinds of legislation, which, coincidentally, at the time was all around just labour, within one ministry.

If I remember right here, we are talking about changes or repeals of 31 statutes and repeals of two acts, the Alberta Sport Connection Act and the Alberta Competitiveness Act. We're seeing changes that dissolve the Campus Alberta Strategic Directions Committee, the Social Care Facilities Review Committee, the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, the historical resources fund, the Alberta Competitiveness Council, and the Alberta Capital Finance Authority. This amendment gives us the opportunity, again, to kind of tap on the brake and take a look at what we're doing.

I really want to thank the Member for St. Albert for bringing this forward. Those, again, that might have been around a little bit in the 29th Legislature probably remember saying things along the lines of: "You know what? This amendment will give us the opportunity to maybe try to take bad legislation and make it less bad." When we are seeing changes that could potentially affect literally hundreds of thousands of Albertans and their money – I mean, I've heard the Minister of Finance go on at length about how great this plan is and how much extra money it's going to make and how it's going to lower our costs and everything. I think the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford kind of probably said this fairly well. I'll see if maybe I can repeat it with as much clarity: if it was such a great plan, Madam Chair, they should have been able to take it to these fine workers, and I would suspect they would have been clamouring over each other to accept such a great deal. But the problem is that it isn't.

It wasn't some kind of fear and smear plan that the NDP put together. This happened all by itself. It didn't even need our help. The media picked up on this; the workers picked up on this. I kind of think of it this way, Madam Chair. If we were all asked by our bank, "Well, hang on just a second; we've got this really great plan for your bank account; we're going to let this other bank manage it," I have a feeling that people in here would have a really significant problem with that. "I'm not dealing with that bank. I'm dealing with this bank. This is where I want my money. This is the company I want to have manage it." But we have legislation that's proposing a similar thing. This amendment, again, will allow us to tap on the brake, consider what we're doing. We might want to talk to some of the folks about what they want. Do they want their bank account to be managed by another bank?

1:00

As we've seen at this very late hour – we're already at 1 a.m. discussing a bill that, if it was such a great idea, there would have been no problem taking it to the people and saying: "Here's our plan. This is what it could do, and it's going to be great." I'll bet you that they would have come onboard. Again, here we go with history coming back. You know, I remember hearing at length about how the former NDP government didn't consult, that they didn't talk to anybody about anything. Then you get a new government in that criticizes and has the chance to show how to do it better, and they end up doing it worse. We've seen the people outside. You just can't ignore that. Well, I guess you can ignore it. You just pull down your shades, close the windows, turn on some loud music, and pretend it's not there. We need to slow down. This amendment I think at least gives us a partial opportunity with which to do that.

As I've said, Madam Chair, I have significant concerns around the Election Commissioner. Again, I know we had a bit of a discussion earlier tonight about language and one simple word and how they're interchangeable, but the problem is that my experience tells me that that's not the case. You know, when I think about an Election Commissioner who has 800 files or more, if we end up getting rid of that individual, what is going to happen with those files? How are they going to be transferred over? Will they be secured in the meantime, until the next individual can come in and try and catch up? I mean, 800 files: that's a lot. I think that's going to significantly slow down any kind of investigations that are currently going on, and I must say that there are a few investigations that are whoppers, I mean, fines over $200,000.

Ms Renaud: Two hundred and eleven thousand.

Mr. Nielsen: Two hundred and eleven thousand. I mean, you just don't rack up those kinds of things if there's not something significant going wrong unless, of course, there might be some kind of an idea of how to maybe derail that sort of thing.

We need to slow things down. We need to take this amendment; we need to accept it. We need to think about what we're doing. Let's consult with people about how they would like to see their money handled, not tell them what's going to happen. I mean, I think it was somewhere in the neighbourhood of – oh, yes; I made note of that – 29,000 letters. Not 29, not 290, not even 2,900, but 29,000 e-mails expressing concerns about how pensions are being handled by this government. That alone should be enough to push the pause button.

Again, I'm sure the former members of the 29th Legislature that currently serve in this House right now would have had significant problems had the former NDP government brought in omnibus legislation like this and not only once but four times in this one single session. We probably would have been here in these kinds of hours just listening to that alone, not even necessarily the contents of those bills, just the fact of the number of changes that are going on. If we don't press the pause button, Madam Chair, we are in for a rough ride.

I remember the government – we heard it over and over again. To be elected on creating jobs and growing the economy, they say that we have to bring back investment into Alberta. A simple change like taking hard-working Albertans' pensions and telling them what to do with it, I guarantee you, will not create labour peace in this province. Companies looking to invest in this province will look at that, and they will hit the pause button. We're already probably upwards of around 30,000 job losses in a short six months, and you want to create more labour unrest? We've already seen the protests, more protests and growing protests in the short six months than I think we did in our four years when we were government.

Another favourite line: "The Official Opposition is here to help. We're here to help. We're going to help you take bad legislation and make it less bad. We're offering an opportunity to hit the pause button by accepting this amendment and giving us the opportunity to rethink how we're doing things." When there are 400,000 people, almost half a million, that are very concerned, and we've only heard — like I said, 29,000 teachers so far have expressed; I can't even begin to count the number of nurses. At some point in time you have to sit there and say: "You know what? Maybe this isn't quite the right path that we're on." Madam Chair, I'm really expressing sincerely that the government look at this hard, take the opportunity to press the pause button, relook at this legislation, and perhaps we might be able to make some bad legislation less bad.

With that, I will take my seat and allow others because all we have is an hour left in this debate, which doesn't give much time for voices to be heard across this province. That, unfortunately, is shameful, something that we definitely heard when members were the Official Opposition. Hopefully, others will get a chance to express their constituents' views.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Decore for his insightful remarks. I know that there are only a few minutes left to speak to this stage of the bill. I know that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford talked about the significance of closure.

Briefly, Madam Chair, you know, bills normally pass through first, second, Committee of the Whole, and third, and there is always an opportunity for members, all members, should they so choose, to speak to each reading of the bill. When closure is imposed, basically, it limits the amount of time in debate that can happen in this House. Now, I appreciate the Government House Leader and others will say that there's been more than enough time, that it's been more than enough, that the time has been adequate to debate this bill. I disagree. I think we have different opinions on what is adequate.

First of all, Bill 22 is a significant piece of legislation that amends, I believe I heard my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods say, about 31 statutes. That's significant, Madam Chair. It's also important to note that this was introduced fewer than 48 hours ago. We're already in Committee of the Whole, and in four minutes this bill will be voted on. Because the government has a majority, I believe that there's a good chance that they're going to win that vote, and then we'll move on to third reading, all within one week. There are a couple of aspects of this bill that really fly in the face of democracy. I know that we have at least one teacher in the gallery, who is here at 1:13 a.m. listening to debate, I imagine, because she's quite concerned and I doubt was consulted on the future of her pension and the fact that this government is unilaterally moving teachers' pensions over to AIMCo.

Now, the argument that has been put forward by the Minister of Finance is that there are going to be cost savings because there won't be a duplication of the board or the ARTF with AIMCo, but then in the next breath he says that the ARTF will still have oversight; it's just that they won't actually make the investment decisions. That's clear as mud, quite frankly, and that doesn't make sense. For me, the frustrating part and what I'm hearing from teachers is that they weren't consulted; they weren't asked. This is a unilateral move by government saying that they know what's in the best interests of the teachers. You know, quite frankly, if the government is so proud of this move, then why didn't you talk to teachers about it? I don't think it was in their campaign platform. I know that there are often boastful comments about the 300 and whatever pages. I'd love for someone to point to where you claim to increase personal income taxes on every Albertan and campaigned on that one. This is another example.

You know, in addition to that, Madam Chair, the fact and the reason that I'm supporting the amendment to delay this coming in by five years — and as the Member for Edmonton-Decore said: listen, it will make a really bad piece of legislation a little less bad. It's not going to make it good; nothing could make this good. The shredder would make this good. But the fact is that the very individual who is investigating criminal charges is about to lose his position and we're told: oh, no; that won't affect the investigation whatsoever. Nobody believes that, quite frankly. At least this amendment delays this move by a couple of years so that the current commissioner can continue his investigation unfettered, uninterrupted, and we can get to the bottom of some of these serious investigations. I mean, it is a very, very significant matter that this bill essentially ends the investigation, muzzles the lead investigator, and we're told: no, no, no; don't worry; it will continue. I think from the letters that I've heard and that my colleagues have received, Albertans are outraged. Again, examples or similarities would be, you know: if during the SNC-Lavalin investigation the lead investigator was fired, do you think Canadians would go, "Yeah, that seems fine; there's nothing going on here"?

I think that people are flabbergasted, and the fact that the government is ramming this through shows that they're hiding something. They're scared to face Albertans, who are just learning about what's going on. This is just part of the reason why we normally take a couple of weeks to pass pieces of legislation, so that Albertans can weigh in on it. This was introduced this week, and I'm pretty confident that it's going to get passed tomorrow, and that's it. Again, you know, teachers: well, sorry, your pension has now been moved over to AIMCo, and if the government or future governments decide to backdoor claw some of your benefits from your pension, well, too bad. The government didn't run on that. At least, I'd love for a member to show me where in the UCP platform it talks about moving the teachers' pension from their own pension fund to AIMCo. Again, as I've mentioned before, Madam Chair, the fact that the teachers' pension has had a better rate of return than AIMCo: there's not even a financial argument that holds any water whatsoever.

This bill is awful, Madam Chair. It's antidemocratic. It flies in the face of democracy because it is essentially eliminating the very person whose job it is to investigate complaints. In fact, that position has over 800 complaints to investigate, and they're now going to disappear. How is that transparent? How is that democratic? You know, for those reasons, this amendment at least delays the firing of the commissioner by five years so we can at least get to the bottom of these active investigations, that are occurring right now. These are criminal investigations. This is no light matter. The fact is that this bill is an affront to Albertans' democratic rights.

It's also an attack on the future of the teachers. I don't know and don't recall any teacher being consulted on whether they want the government to move their pension over. For anybody in here who has a pension or even savings, if someone came in and said, "Yeah, I'm going to take it over, and we're going to move it into what someone else feels should control your money," I don't think anybody in this House would say: "Yeah, please. You know what? Go ahead, take my money, and you can decide what to do with it."

The fact of the matter is that if the government is so proud of this piece of legislation, then why didn't you talk to teachers about it? Why don't you have a referendum? You seem to love referendums. Have a referendum with the teachers – what do you want to do with your pension? – and then respect their decision as opposed to making a unilateral move that they had to find out about through the media. Like, talk about not just a lack of consultation, but clearly this government is showing the little respect it has for teachers.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Government Motion 36 I must now put all questions necessary for the disposal of this bill at this stage.

[Request to report Bill 22 carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report Bill 22.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 22. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Deputy Speaker: So carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to all hon. members of the Assembly for all their hard work this evening. Lots of progress today. I am just checking. I am going to move to adjourn the House till technically today, though it's tomorrow in legislative time, Thursday the 21st at 9 o'clock a.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 1:23 a.m. on Thursday]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, November 21, 2019

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions and Government Enterprises Act, 2019

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good to see you. It feels like I only saw you just a few short hours ago. It's my pleasure today to rise on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move third reading of Bill 22, the Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions and Government Enterprises Act, 2019.

As you know, this is the third and final budget implementation bill along with bills 20 and 21 and is aimed squarely on getting Alberta's finances back on track. Bill 22 accomplishes this by improving the efficiency and the oversights of public agencies and eliminating needless government spending.

It will require the Alberta teachers' retirement fund, the ATRF, to exclusively use AIMCo to manage its investments. The ATRF currently manages its investments in-house, with assets of around $16.5 billion as of August 31, 2018. Shifting management of these funds to AIMCo is expected to save .25 per cent on administrative fees when the changes are fully implemented. This may seem insignificant, but because of the scale of these investments it equates to an annual savings of $41 million for the ATRF, or almost $500 annually for each teacher that contributes to the fund. Mr. Speaker, I would assume that you would agree that that is not insignificant. Under these changes the ATRF board would retain control of how the pension fund is invested at a strategic level as well as retain ownership of the plan's assets. Most importantly, it will have no negative impact on teachers' pensions. In fact, it is likely the contribution rates to the fund will be able to decrease over time because of the economies of scale. It's a winning scenario for those with pension benefits under the ATRF and for Albertans as a whole.

Similarly, Bill 22 will require Alberta Health Services and the Workers' Compensation Board to use AIMCo to manage their investments and endowments. Again, this will enhance AIMCo's economies of scale, Mr. Speaker, reducing investment costs and contributing to higher expected investment returns. There will be no changes to the workers' compensation benefit or employers' cost. For the WCB these savings are approximately .4 per cent annually on administrative costs, which equates to about $15 million a year. In total it's estimated that moving management of these funds to AIMCo will contribute to an overall annual savings of $91 million for AIMCo's investment management costs. This is all through leveraging economies of scale and getting the best outcome for taxpayers.

In addition, Bill 22 will consolidate the office of the Election Commissioner into the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, as has been the situation inside this province for over a century. The Chief Electoral Officer will have the full authority, Mr. Speaker, to continue or initiate any investigation currently being pursued by the commissioner in line with the existing Alberta law, despite what the opposition continues to tell Albertans. This administrative change will not affect the oversight or the investigatory powers under any relevant act.

Bill 22 would also dissolve and make board changes to support the reform of Alberta agencies, boards, and commissions throughout many areas.

At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, Bill 22 will be able to help the Alberta government implement a budget, that they promised Albertans they would bring forward, that would help to get our finances back on track inside this province as we continue to fix the astronomical mess that was made by the former NDP government when it comes to their mismanagement of the financial situation in this province.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

Time Allocation on Bill 22

37. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 22, Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions and Government Enterprises Act, 2019, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my duty to move this motion on behalf of the government. It is important that we continue to maintain pace through the Legislature to be able to accomplish all the goals that Albertans have asked us to be able to accomplish inside this place.

Mr. Speaker, last night we talked at length about Bill 22. In fact, I think it's important to note that Bill 22 has already passed the length of any other bill that has been debated inside this sitting of this session by quite a bit. In fact, we are well over 10 hours already of debate on this legislation and have been debating it since Tuesday inside this Chamber, using basically the majority of time that this Chamber has this week on this bill, and we'll continue to debate it this morning. At the end of it, it appears that Bill 22 will have had the most debate of any bill that goes through this sitting of this session inside this Chamber.

Now, the other issue that I think is important to note as we discuss this is that last night the opposition only had one amendment to Bill 22. I do appreciate that they brought it forward. That is a great sign that the hon. Finance minister has drafted an excellent bill. I have very rarely seen on any contentious bill the opposition only have one amendment. I do appreciate them taking the time to bring that amendment forward, but clearly there's not much else to say on the bill if they only have one amendment when it came to this important piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker.

The reality is that we have mechanisms within this Chamber to be able to keep the pace going through the House. House leaders often negotiate speaking times. We use critics to speak to certain things. We use ministers to speak to certain things. We limit certain members from being able to speak to be able to keep the pace going through the House, Mr. Speaker. If we did not do that, we would end up in situations where we would only pass two or three pieces of legislations in a sitting, something that is unacceptable to Albertans. There are also two other mechanisms: one, which I am using today, is time allocation, and second is a standing order where we can move the previous question. These are all tools that are used to be able to keep legislation moving through the Chamber.

I do encourage members to utilize the remaining time on Bill 22 to make sure that we have a good discussion and ultimately are able to get this legislation out of the House in a way that is good for Albertans, Mr. Speaker. With that, I ask all of my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has moved Government Motion 37. Is there anyone in the opposition that would like to respond? The hon. the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the conversation that we're having is a bit not on point. I think that when the Government House Leader rises to say that this bill has had more debate than any bill in the House – this is a bill that was introduced on Monday. We are speaking today, Thursday. In fact, that's less than three complete days that this bill has been in the public. I hasten to remind the members that when we talk about the amount of debate that a bill has had, it's not really just about us. It isn't just about us. It's about the public. It's about the public's ability to engage with the bill. It's about the public's ability to understand what's happened. It's about the media's ability to ask questions about the bill. It's about our ability to have an actual dialogue back and forth.

Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader also references the fact that we didn't raise a sufficient number of amendments. I mean, this bill is no good from beginning to end. How are you supposed to amend a bill that removes pension rights from people, that fires an Election Commissioner in the middle of an active investigation?

On that note, this sort of long diatribe about the fact that the investigation will continue – you know, if we read a story about another country and we heard that the king in that country was discontinuing an investigation but he was only discontinuing it so that he could allow it to continue at his discretion, how would we respond to that? This idea that at the government's discretion the investigation can be allowed to continue: well, that's the entire problem. That's the point, that we are all supposed to be subject to the same laws.

Those laws are meant to be investigated and enforced by independent branches. Mr. Speaker, we have heard the hon. Minister of Justice rise in this House how many times and say that he has no impact at all on the Crown prosecution service, that he has no impact at all on the police, that those investigations need to be completely independent. Apparently, the same does not go for this particular investigation. The idea that it's impossible for the minister to impact Crown policy, that it's impossible for the minister to name the special prosecutor who is involved in the investigation of these same charges or this same matter under RCMP investigation, while meanwhile the government is able to come in and remove the Election Commissioner in the middle of an investigation: I think that that's absurd.

I think the idea that we have debated this for too long or it has had too much time – we're talking, Mr. Speaker, about the fundamental underpinnings of our democracy. We are talking about a person whose job it is to investigate whether or not the democratic rules we have all collectively selected to govern ourselves ought to be enforced. The question we're having here isn't about how things should be enforced; it's whether those rules ought to be enforced at all. I think that the public should be deeply concerned about that, and I think that they deserve time to respond to that.

This is an enormous piece of omnibus legislation. I can remember, Mr. Speaker, several members from the then opposition, now government, who used to complain when we put two related statutes together, the labour code and the Employment Standards Code. Both deal with the same thing, employer-employee relations, in different areas, whether unionized or non-unionized areas, and the now government members, then opposition members, were incredibly up in arms about that. This amends far more than just two statutes, so I think the idea that we've had sufficient debate – we're still finding things in this bill.

You know, certainly one of the other things that's in this bill is the ability of two political parties to merge. That wasn't an ability that existed before, and what this essentially does is to allow the United Conservative Party access to funds donated to the former Wildrose Party and the former Progressive Conservative Party. Honestly, Mr. Speaker, seeing the way the United Conservative Party is now behaving, seeing the return to Tory land, I feel like there are at least a few people who donated to the old Wildrose Party who wouldn't be really happy to have their money transferred over.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members to vote against this motion.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 37 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:14 a.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Government Bills and Orders

Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions and Government Enterprises Act, 2019

[Adjourned debate November 21: Mr. Jason Nixon]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we're at third reading of Bill 22, and I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has risen.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to take a few minutes just to counter some of the things that the Government House Leader said very recently. One, he said that this bill has had more time given to it than any other bill. Well, again, it was introduced Monday late afternoon, and here we are, Thursday morning. The government has brought in time allocation, so around about 59 minutes from now they expect to be able to ram this through.

The Premier has not addressed this bill even once in this place, and I think that that is shameful. I think that if you want to bring forward a bill to fire the guy who's investing fraud, forgery, and bribery in your own party, you should at least stand in this place and defend that, but the Premier has refused to stand in this place and speak to this bill in any way or fashion. I think that if the Prime Minister would have done that in the SNC-Lavalin case and then fired the investigator in the middle of the case, there would have been even more outrage than Canadians rightfully expressed.

I think that when the House leader talks about economies of scale at the same time his Premier is talking about pulling out of the CPP, it definitely seems to be an attempt to speak out of both sides of the mouth at the same time. You know, the CPP isn't good enough for the Premier. The Premier thinks that we need to create our own Alberta-based pension. Then here we have teachers, who've had their own pension, and they've had joint governance. They've had the ability to make decisions about their own money, their own future, and their own contributions since 1939, and here we're going to tear that all up in less than four days. I think it smacks of hypocrisy.

I think that that definitely doesn't reflect the things that I hear when I'm talking to folks in Edmonton-Glenora. They want fair, respectful, transparent government. They want a government that respects law enforcement, doesn't fire them in the middle of an investigation and certainly one where there are 800 open files and more than $200,000 in fines levied against the party that is indeed bringing forward this legislation to fire the law enforcement that's been tasked with enforcing fair elections in this province.

I also have to say that the folks that I've talked to in regard to ATRF and this heavy-handed attempt to take away any kind of say that teachers have over their own pensions and other public service workers as well, of course, definitely don't feel that this has been well canvassed or that it reflects their values or that it reflects anything that was campaigned for in the very recent election, an election where a lot of people said: "Oh, don't worry. It's fear and smear from the NDP. Nothing to worry about here."

I'll tell you who else doesn't think this is fair or well canvassed, Michael O'Neill. You may not have had a chance to meet him. He's booked four days to protest on the front steps of the Leg. He comes to us from Myrnam, Alberta, not necessarily known as the socialist democracy of the north, but he certainly begs this government and all members of this Assembly to respect him, to respect his pension, and to give him at least due consideration. He booked four days to protest because he assumed that there would be at least four days of debate, but here we are, ramming this through in such an expeditious fashion that totally disrespects the will of folks who own those pensions.

As well, I would have expected – you know, a party that likes to talk tough on crime sure seems very eager to fire the people who are tasked with actually investigating those crimes and making sure that people are held to account and that we have fair and open elections in this province. I would say that not only is this disrespectful to future democracies in this province; I think it's disrespectful of everyone's current mandate as well. The fact that here we are, more than $200,000 in fines, and we're firing the person who's tasked with upholding that law: I think it's blatant disrespect to every democracy in the developed world, and I think it also is disrespectful to our own duty and responsibility.

Certainly, when the Speaker, multiple times a day, reminds us through the prayer of the day that we have an obligation not to do things that are self-interested, to work to improve the condition for all and at the same time we're firing somebody whose very task it is to ensure fairness, I think that that is only self-serving. I think it's incredibly disrespectful, and I think it speaks to the arrogance that has evolved so quickly. Somebody – they're a math teacher – said to me: you know, when you add two fractions, which we saw through two previous parties, you have to have a common denominator. It seems that the lowest common denominator has been achieved here, one where we have extreme arrogance in terms of thinking that we're above law enforcement, and we also are attacking important public services and those who provide them, like the folks who are very rightfully worried about their pensions.

The last thing I want to say on this matter. Folks who were here in the 2015 Assembly have heard me talk about my dad and how he was a principal in northern Alberta and how frustrated he was when he was forced to lay off so many staff, forced to cut so many services in his school, and then also forced to take a rollback. The part I didn't mention is that in his dying days he talked about how that rollback that was forced upon him not only attacked his earnings for those years; it attacked his pension, and it also impacted what he was able to leave my mom because, of course, she would receive his pension after he died. That very pension was attacked through changes to his compensation, and now that very pension is being attacked through this change to the ATRF. I think it's shameful. It's incredibly disrespectful.

I think that every child in this province who should be able to look at their parents and think that they are engaged in the public service and that the public and the government, as the representatives of that public, respect the work that their parents do – I think that this is not what any person in this Assembly ran to do, and if they did, I think that they should give their head a shake because I think that this definitely isn't what they canvassed on at the doors when they were asking to be the representatives of the public and to work for all of those teachers, to work for all of those students, to work for every single person who lives in our individual ridings.

That's what I have to say about that. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others wishing to join the debate? This would be on the main bill, not on 29(a)(a) as it's not available. The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on Bill 22, a bill that I wholeheartedly support, the Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions and Government Enterprises Act, 2019. I have sat in this Chamber and listened to quite a bit of debate. You know, it's been robust. I think it's been a good opportunity to hear what other members of this Chamber think of this piece of legislation, a good piece of legislation, in my opinion, but there have been a couple of things that I do take a little bit of issue with, and I wanted to address that in my remarks. I did speak on this in second reading, but having heard more, I think that there's more to respond to.

The first was a comment made by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View regarding a king, a king who would ultimately fire one investigator and control the investigation under his own purview. I don't think that that is an accurate description of what has happened here in the slightest. The reality here is that the office of the Election Commissioner has been moved under the purview of the Chief Electoral Officer. These investigations are going to continue, which, I believe, is the most important point here, the fact that these investigations will continue.

What I found most frustrating, though, was the insinuation by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View that now that things will be moved into the purview of the Chief Electoral Officer if this bill passes – I would hate to presume the outcome of a vote – somehow that means that the Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Glen Resler, operates at the discretion of the Premier or Executive Council. How arrogant is that, for the Member for Calgary-Mountain View to suggest that we control what Mr. Resler does? His is an independent office, and one that must be respected and not passed around this Chamber like a political football. I would caution the Member for Calgary-Mountain View about that.

Also, something that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora had mentioned in her remarks here was that the Premier has yet to speak on this. Well, the reality is that our hon. Premier is currently in Texas doing what the previous . . .

Mr. Eggen: Point of order.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Schow: I do retract that. I recognize that that was out of order, and I apologize.

The Speaker: You might wait until I call the point of order, but you are correct. Referring to the presence or the absence of a member would be a point of order, and I appreciate your apology.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for that point.

Debate Continued

Mr. Schow: Our Premier is doing what the previous government failed to do, which was to attract investment to this province. Investment was driven away by the billions of dollars, Mr. Speaker, over the last four years, and we are now putting measures in place to ensure that the message is sent across the country, across the world that we are indeed open for business. But that's not just going to happen itself. The Premier has made many visits across different provinces, different countries, and his job is to ensure that we can have a prosperous province here, that people recognize that Alberta has a distinct advantage, especially with some of the new pieces of legislation that are being passed. So it is a bit ironic that the hon.

member opposite would say something like that because we do believe that what the Premier is doing is well within the job description that Albertans gave him on April 16.

But the truth here is that this bill is an attempt to make government lean, to make government operate more efficiently, and to improve economies of scale. Currently AIMCo manages $110 billion. The ATRF moving into AIMCo has no impact – no impact – on teachers' pensions. I don't know how many times that's been repeated in this Chamber, but that is the reality there. The second thing is that there is no impact on the ATRF board's control over said pensions. The board still sets the investments. I would see this as a net positive because we are improving economies of scale. The same thing goes with WCB and AHS moving into long-term investments, moving into AIMCo: $10.7 billion with WCB, and $2.3 billion with AHS. The discretion over the funds has not and will not change. These moves alone, Mr. Speaker, add an extra $30 billion to AIMCo.

Now, the member opposite also talked about moving Alberta pensions back here and doing an Alberta pension plan. I would see that, again, as a positive move. One, it does send a message that Alberta is certainly looking to have more control over the money within its jurisdiction. But so does – that brings back $40 billion into AIMCo's investment, which again improves economies of scale, gives AIMCo more ability to invest.

I don't try to venture into trying to understand the logic of the members opposite, and I'm not looking to venture into personal attacks because that's not appropriate in this Chamber. But I don't know where the financial literacy side comes into this on the opposite side.

We've also had a move to move the Alberta Sport Connection programs into the ministry, dissolve Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, the historical resources fund. The mental health review panel is moving from four to three members. We dissolved the Alberta Competitiveness Council and repealed the Alberta Competitiveness Act. Like, the list goes on and on and on here of moves that this government is making to achieve its ultimate goal of becoming more lean. It's what Albertans asked us to do. It's what our boss has asked us to do. Anybody in this Chamber on this side of the House who listens to their constituents would know that when you knock on those doors, when you talk to your constituents, when you read the correspondence, which we do, the message continues to come in, floods in: please continue along the path of restoring Alberta's advantage, restoring Alberta to a province that is a beacon of hope and opportunity. What this means for Albertans is that we are again returning to a place that they can be proud of, a place that I can be proud of.

Now, I love this province. It is a place that my parents grew up in. It's a place my grandparents grew up in and their parents before them. There is a lot riding on what we are doing here, and that's why I believe so strongly that we are on the right path. The path that we were moving on under the previous government I argue was not the correct one. I argue that there was mismanagement of the province's finances, and I believe that we are now stuck in a situation where we have to make some difficult decisions.

Mr. Speaker, I don't intend to take up a lot of time, but I did want to quickly respond to comments from the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I look forward to further debate.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to be able to respond to some of the statements that the Member for Cardston-Siksika made and some of the things that have been raised in debate in third reading of this bill.

Certainly, what I've heard from all members who have spoken so far is that we've had a lot of correspondence from our constituents about this piece of legislation. Indeed, our office in Edmonton-Gold Bar has been flooded with e-mails from constituents, not just my own but also of the members opposite. They've made it quite clear in their e-mails to my office that members opposite are not listening to their own constituents, which is shameful.

You know, I've had people like David and Rosemarie and Gerry and Dorothy and Val write to us about the undemocratic actions of this government and express deep concern about the move to take teachers' pensions away from teachers and move them into AIMCo. Honestly, Mr. Speaker, in the four and a half years that I've been elected, I've had more letters on this particular piece of legislation than anything else that has gone on in provincial or federal politics over the last four and a half years, which is remarkable.

What's also remarkable, Mr. Speaker, is who hasn't written to my office. You know who hasn't written to my office? The CEO of Suncor, the billionaire owner of Husky Energy, Cenovus, EnCana. None of the CEOs or shareholders of those companies have written to my office. They're more than happy to sit back and let the most antidemocratic and corrupt government consolidate power with this legislation because they know that the gravy train is going to keep on rolling. They've been given a $4.7 billion corporate giveaway, they've been given tax relief at the municipal level, they've got a $30 million propaganda machine that's being run out of the Energy minister's office and the environment minister's office, and they keep asking for more. Now they want CN Rail workers to be forced back to work so that the oil can keep on flowing and their profits can keep on rolling in while CN workers struggle for the right to fair wages and safe working conditions. Of course big business in Alberta is not going to raise a voice. They're not going to lift a finger to do anything to prevent this government from consolidating power because they have billions and billions of dollars at stake.

Mr. Panda: They were your friends until yesterday.

Mr. Schmidt: The member for wherever the hell he's from, the Minister of Infrastructure . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we are very familiar with what is and what isn't parliamentary language inside the Chamber, and I think that we can apologize and withdraw for the use of unparliamentary language.

Mr. Schmidt: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for not remembering the constituency that the Minister of Infrastructure represents and using unparliamentary language to express that. But I am incredibly passionate – and so are the people of Alberta – about what's going on here today.

You know, there was a recent poll out, released earlier in November, that said that 70 per cent of Albertans think that big corporations have way too much power in this province – and that was before this bill was introduced – and now that power is being consolidated in the hands of this group, who dare to call themselves a government. They've consolidated power and moved so quickly that Vladimir Putin would blush at the gall that these people have in crushing democracy.

You know, back to the issue of corporate power, it's not just about crushing the Election Commissioner's investigation into their potentially fraudulent activities in the UCP leadership race. It's also about getting their greasy, fat little fingers on teachers' pensions and using that money to prop up an oil industry that can't get investment from anywhere else. The central bank of Sweden won't invest in it, right?

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I oppose this legislation and everything that the members opposite have said about it to date.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I would like to just be clear. I have no concern with anyone's passion, and I encourage passion inside the Chamber. I only ask that we do it through the use of parliamentary language. We all know that that swath is very wide, as we just saw in your remarks.

We are on the main bill, Bill 22. I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move an amendment to this bill, and I will await its arrival.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this amendment will be referred to as HA1.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 22, Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions and Government Enterprises Act, 2019, be amended by deleting the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 22, Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions and Government Enterprises Act, 2019, be not now read a third time but be read a third time this day six months hence." This, Mr. Speaker, as you will be familiar, is commonly known as a hoist. The hope is to pitch this bill forward into the future.

Mr. Speaker, I think that if ever there has been a bill that could use some additional time to contemplate, it is this. We have heard repeatedly from members of the government benches how much time there has been to debate this. I point out again that this was introduced Monday afternoon. We are now at almost 10 o'clock on Thursday morning. In terms of enormous lengths of time, I feel that if your employer were to tell you to analyze and speak to and get a public debate going on 80 pages worth of material in less than 72 hours, normally you would find that a bit onerous.

I really think that the time for debate of this has been insufficient, and I think that the time for the public to engage in this has been insufficient. That is the main thing. It is the public here that has been affronted. Certainly, we in the opposition are offended by this action, absolutely, but it is the public whose rights are ultimately being undermined in this case. It is the public who has that concern in ensuring that each and every member of our society is held subject to the same laws and that those laws are investigated fairly, that they are investigated impartially, and that they are investigated in the absence of political interference. That is a basic principle of our system.

Even more so, this is a person who's investigating offences against our democratic principles. So it's not just the rule of law; it's actually democracy itself that has been called into question here. I think the public has a really sincere interest in this. As members of the public, we pride ourselves on the fact that we are governed democratically. If we allow it to be the case that that democracy can essentially be for sale, that big money can come in and can purchase power and voice in this place – and not just purchase democratic power but purchase democratic power that then puts it above the rule of law, that then puts it in a position to undermine the very laws that are in place to protect our democracy – I think that's just incredible.

Mr. Speaker, there are so many things that are wrong with this bill. Opting out people who are part-time – and we know Conservatives are famous for leaving average working people with part-time, tenuous work so that they are not in a position to speak up for themselves, so that they are not in a position to be able to feed their families, so that all of their energy is dedicated to meeting their basic needs – this is another step along that way. They are taking control of people's pensions. This is people's life savings, that they've worked for. They're relying on those pensions.

There is so much that is wrong with this bill, but primarily I think the thing that I would say is most wrong with it is that fundamentally it is an attack on justice, democracy, and the rule of law.

With that, I will end my comments.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Seeing none, on the bill, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak against Bill 22. On this historic day we have the first time ever . . .

The Speaker: My sincerest apologies. It's on the amendment, not on the bill. I'm sure that you don't mind. I just wanted to make sure that we're all talking about the same thing.

Ms Phillips: Thank you. That was part of the confusion but, I'm sure, not all of it. Mostly mine, Mr. Speaker.

It's a pleasure to rise on this historic day. This bill needs to be stopped. Certainly, this is one of the fastest bills to ever move through the Alberta Legislature. Also, today we're hearing, down south in impeachment hearings, about corruption and obstruction of justice. Today the Israeli Prime Minister, Benjamin Netanyahu, will be charged with bribery, the first time in Israeli history. So we have examples of places where justice has been obstructed, where power has been abused, where democratic norms have been subverted, and on this day I rise in Alberta to provide comments on exactly the same thing.

Now, the pink slips are raining down, particularly in Calgary, where 250 people have lost their jobs at the University of Calgary, with 300 layoffs at the Calgary board of education, 125 at Alberta Innovates. This is on top of many private-sector layoffs. People are losing their livelihoods right before Christmas. What happens is that this government then moves forward with a cover-up. No one voted for this. They didn't vote for the pink slips. They didn't vote for the cover-up, either, of the investigations that are ongoing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've spent a lot of time knocking on doors in Lethbridge. I'm quite certain that nobody in Lethbridge, in that entire city, voted for a cover-up. They didn't vote for fraud. People in Lethbridge didn't vote for self-dealing arrogance or obstruction of justice. People in Lethbridge did not vote for making excuses or trying to cover up bribery, forgery, abuse of power, entitlement, destruction of democratic norms. They did not vote for anyone to ally themselves with a Premier who has been variously now described as a strongman and tone deaf on democratic norms. They did not vote for $211,000 worth of fines for breaking elections laws. They didn't vote for rigging elections. They didn't vote for people that would make laws that would only benefit themselves. I know that what I am doing here today on this historic day is voting against those kinds of abuses of power.

It is regrettable that not everyone in this House shares that commitment to democracy. It's actually not that hard. There are basic rule of law principles that are being violated here by this government's actions and by this bill. This is to say nothing of the attack on pensions. This is to say nothing of taking away the power of working people to decide how their retirement security is going to be invested. This is to say nothing of the 741 e-mails that I have, at last checking, received from constituents who are worried about their retirement security and their own savings, the future of their own money.

Mr. Speaker, I am dismayed that this government and these government members, these backbench members, are voting for things that no one should endorse. I am dismayed at the principles at work here and at the willingness to sell out those basic principles that brought us to this Chamber in the first place. It is profoundly disappointing on a personal level that some members of this Chamber – I thought they were better than this, and that is disappointing to me. We will continue to work for people to uphold the rule of law, to advocate for basic democratic norms, to ensure that obstruction of justice does not go unchallenged because ultimately that's what the people from Lethbridge who sent me here asked me to do, and that's what all Albertans have asked every single UCP MLA to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Anyone else wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)?

On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak because despite the assurances that have been made repeatedly by the Government House Leader that there has been plenty of time for debate, this is actually my first opportunity to stand to speak to Bill 22, and we're already running out the clock on that. The reason it's my first time is not – I've been in the House every single day, all day, all night Monday night, all day Tuesday, all day Wednesday, but guess what? This government scheduled debate of Bill 22 for the dead of night on the two nights, yeah, when I was not scheduled to work. And guess what? This is not a fulsome debate. This is not a lot of time to discuss something that goes to the very heart of our democratic institutions. This is absolutely an intention to stifle debate. We've seen this government do it over and over again, but now we're seeing them do it on a bill that goes to the heart of our democratic institutions and chips away at it. Actually, more than chips away at it; cuts at it.

I'm actually going to take this time and say that I'm pleased to be able to speak because I have an obligation to speak on behalf of my constituents and on behalf of the numerous Albertans who have flooded my constituency office with outrage with respect to Bill 22. This bill was introduced Monday afternoon. In less than 48 hours I had over 400 e-mails alone, not to count letters that have been coming in and phone calls but e-mails alone, over 400 from constituents who are outraged about Bill 22. I have an obligation to stand right now even though the government is doing their best to stifle opportunity for debate, to stifle the opportunity for Albertans to be heard in this Chamber.

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

I'm taking that opportunity to say that I am incredibly disappointed and disheartened. I am a new member to this Assembly, and when I decided to run for office, it was because I profoundly believed in the institution of democracy. I believed that we had a system, that we had checks and balances in place to make sure that the voices of all Albertans could be heard. I remember in the first session watching the government caucus and particularly the Premier swing around their big mandate based on their platform because they were bringing in legislation. Well, of course, I don't agree with what was in their platform because I didn't run for the UCP. I ran for a party that has principles. While they swung that big mandate around, we had to say: "Okay. You know what? That was in your platform. You're bringing in legislation to bring in your platform. All right. We don't agree with it, but that is what has happened." However, we have now far deviated from that platform.

Albertans did not vote for a cover-up of an investigation into this Premier and into this caucus and into this party. I certainly don't think that the constituents for all of the members across the way in the government – all of their constituents, did they vote for a cover-up? I don't think they did. I'm actually quite surprised. I should actually say that I'm quite disappointed to see how few government members are actually there to represent their constituents, to actually stand up and say: "You know what? I have a problem with this. I have a problem with supporting a bill that is going to terminate the Election Commissioner who is there and is actively investigating 800 complaints into violations of the Election Act." Eight hundred.

Let's be clear. A significant amount of that so far, at least based on the fines that have been levied, are with respect to this Premier's leadership race. What is the first thing that this government does? We actually talked about it. We actually mentioned it in spring session. We said: how long – how long – until this Premier fires the Election Commissioner? Oh, and everybody stood up on the government side: fear and smear, fearmongering; it's outrageous. Of course, they'd never do that. Of course, they never did it. Guess what? They did it.

Not only did they do it, but the Premier has not had the courage to stand up and defend why he's done it. In fact, what he's had is the House leader – quite frankly, this morning I was quite impressed by how sober and quiet the House leader was when defending Bill 22 because normally when he stands up in the House, particularly in the evenings, he's a lot more spirited. But this morning he was very sober and calm and gave his presentation about why he believed this was just an administrative change, just going to combine two bodies into one, and it'll save the government $220,000 approximately. That's according to the Finance minister, which is interesting because they didn't seem to have a problem throwing around $16,000 on pancake plane parties or $18,000 on secret missions to the U.K. Oh, but $200,000: that's enough to justify gutting our democracy. So it's interesting that the Premier hasn't had the courage to stand up and say that in this House; however, he's having his members do that for them.

Well, all I can say is that I am standing up here to defend democracy and to stand up for what I've been hearing not only my constituents but from what I know that constituents across Alberta have been saying, which is that to fire an Election Commissioner who is in the middle of investigating and has already levied hundreds of thousands of dollars of fines against other people who were involved with the UCP leadership race is outrageous. To fire that investigator and to do it with such speed, to do it with such force, to invoke closure, to close debate, and to force it through in less than three days after the bill was introduced, well, that suggests to me that this government is in a rush to hide something. Guess what? They're not fooling Albertans. Based on my inbox, based on what I'm seeing across social media, across the institutional media, a media who, actually, by the way, have typically been very supportive of the government caucus, they're all saying: what is the rush to hide?

Well, I guess, if the government gets their way, which they will because they have their numbers and they're forcing this through, we'll never know what they have to hide. That to me is an affront to democracy. It's an affront to why we are here today, and every single member in this Assembly that is going to vote in favour of Bill 22 should be ashamed of themselves. They should be ashamed that they are not standing up for their constituents, who did not vote for this.

I'm glad that I had an opportunity to speak because the government has sure done its hardest and its best to deprive the opportunity for Albertans and the opposition to speak on this. I'm glad I had the moment to do it here. I think it's absolutely outrageous that we even have to have this debate. I think the government has really done their best to really undermine the trust of Albertans in them, and it will be them who will have to pay the price for that the next time there's an election.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Is there anyone wishing to add a brief question or comment?

Seeing none, on the amendment, is there anyone else that would like to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak on this amendment to Bill 22. Certainly, I'm standing in favour of it. Like my hon. colleagues on this side of the House, certainly – you know, there is a significant issue with Bill 22. We know that for government to operate in a fair and just manner, there are three branches of government. There is the executive, the legislative, and the judicial, and currently this bill is actually interfering with that process that creates fairness and justice in our system. The executive branch is really messing up with the legislative branch here, very heavy-handedly moving in to terminate the Election Commissioner.

You know, one of the reasons that I ran politically was because I was disheartened by some of the things that were happening and the decisions that, you know, different political leaders were making, and I wanted this system to be respected, as you do, Mr. Speaker, to make sure that the people who are governing our province are doing so in a fair and just way, that our systems are respected, that there's accountability, that the rule of law is being respected, that there is citizen participation. These are all sort of tenets of a democracy.

Like many members, sometimes when I knock on the door of a constituent, they tell me: "I'm not voting." They tell me: "I'm not voting." They say: "Oh, you know, everybody is interested in their own interests, and I don't trust that system. What's the point? It doesn't matter what I say." I'm always wanting to encourage them and convince them that: "No, no. It's so important for you to be involved, to have your voice heard. Each Albertan who's eligible to vote, each has equal power to do that." But you know what? When this kind of stuff happens, it's shaky ground I'm standing on because people will point to this, and they'll say: "Come on. Look what happened just now. Look what happened. The Election Commissioner was doing an investigation into the leadership of the UCP, and they are firing him through legislation."

I have very shaky ground to stand on when, you know, our government is doing this kind of disrespectful action that interferes with the different branches of government. Albertans have the right to be outraged, really, by this. It's not okay what this government is doing. I know they have argued: "Oh, it's just administrative. It's not a big deal. It's up to the CEO of Elections Alberta, who can just hire this fellow back." I mean, come on. We're not so naive to see that that's really happening. If that was true, then why go through this whole process? I mean, the economic issues: I think the $200,000 a year that will be saved is like a drop in the bucket. There must be another reason.

Certainly, we're hearing from, you know, many students or professors of politics that there must be an underlying reason. Certainly, Duane Bratt, a political scientist from Mount Royal University, is saying that it's a cover-up; it's black and white. Keith Gerein, the journalist for the Edmonton Journal – it was this morning that I read his column – said: hey; the UCP is using up its political capital pretty quickly.

I mean, the election wasn't that long ago, and there have been many egregious things that have happened: chartering a plane with Conservative Premiers and their wives, sending staff over to the U.K. on the taxpayers' dime. I mean, these are all things that certainly are not fair or just, and Albertans have the right to be outraged. The government, frankly, should be listening to them instead of, first of all, giving notice of closure and then denying that: "Oh, no, no. We've already debated it four times. We didn't do that." But it's so clear that they had a plan in place so that they could rush this bill through. It's just disingenuous to sort of suggest that having done that, they were open to debate. The government is not open to debate on this. They're going to push it through in whatever way they possibly can. Certainly, on this side of the House we are extremely concerned about that because we see this as just another aspect of not respecting our democratic process here, and it's not okay.

This bill amends or alters 31 statutes. I mean, this is the biggest piece of it, the firing of the Election Commissioner, but of course, we know of moving the Alberta teachers' retirement fund over to AIMCo. That doesn't even fit with Conservative principles. What is the political expedience there? It isn't about, certainly, fairness at all. The fact of self-determination: teachers have had their own pension plan, they've had excellent returns, they've managed it themselves, and then arbitrarily the government just says: oh, we're moving it over here. I don't know. My understanding of Conservatives is they want to not muck around in things so much. Let things run as they do. It's certainly a pretty heavy hand of government that is taking the Alberta teachers' retirement fund and moving it over to AIMCo. I mean, I don't know. If I was sitting on that side of the House, I would really be wondering: what's the rationale for that? It certainly doesn't seem to fit with what I understand of Conservative principles, so there is some political expedience that's going on here and, I feel like, an erosion of values, really, on the government side.

Those two aspects of this bill are certainly very egregious, and our side of the House stands very much against them. Certainly, we stand very strongly with teachers, that they have the right to manage their own retirement funds. Certainly, they've done that very well for many years.

With making those two strong points, I will now take my seat. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Is there anyone wishing to add a brief question or comment?

Seeing none, is there anyone else wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the third reading of Bill 22. Let me start by saying that it's a defining moment for this Legislature and for this province. The reason I'm saying this – and we have been saying it, Albertans have been saying it, it's everywhere – is that nobody believes that the change government is suggesting, the firing of the Election Commissioner – the government wants us to believe it is just a simple administrative consolidation. Nobody is buying it, and there are very clear reasons that everyone should be able to understand why they are not buying that.

A reason for that is that this very Election Commissioner is investigating somewhere around 800 cases. Among those, there is one case that relates to this governing party, its leadership in 2017. That's a matter of public record. It's also a matter of public record that from this governing party, if I start from one corner, the Minister of Justice has been reached out to by law enforcement in relation to this investigation, the Minister of Infrastructure has been reached out to by law enforcement in relation to this investigation, the minister of culture and status of women has been reached out to in relation to this investigation, the Minister of Seniors and Housing has been reached out to in relation to this investigation, and the MLA for Calgary-East has been reached out to in relation to this investigation. No one, even from that side, can deny that there is an investigation that's ongoing.

In a democratic society, when there is some investigation that's ongoing, we don't use and abuse power to interfere with that investigation. That's rule of law, and that's fundamental to our democracy. What we are seeing in this bill is that that fundamental principle of rule of law has been attacked, and our democracy has been attacked. Every member of this House, on both sides, should take a moment and think about how they will go down, how their stance on this bill will go down in history. Will you be standing on the side of this bill, that is attacking rule of law, that is attacking democracy?

That is just an attempt to get rid of the commissioner who is investigating some of the things that your party may be involved in. There may be some consequences for the governing party. That's how you want to be remembered? It's a serious obligation. The bill was just introduced Monday, last Monday.

Ms Hoffman: This Monday. Yeah.

Mr. Sabir: This Monday.

If nothing else, take some time. Go to your constituencies over the weekend and ask Albertans what they think about it. Ask the people who you represent. Ask them whether they want you to stand for this cover-up or whether they want you to stand with democracy and the rule of law. You have not consulted anyone on this. The public is skeptical of the motives behind this bill.

Anybody who knows that the Election Commissioner was investigating the UCP leadership, they have questions about it, whether it's real or perceived. I think for the sake of rule of law, for the sake of democracy, you can leave this aside and bring the other 30 changes that you're bringing through this legislation. Once that investigation is concluded – I guess somebody may buy that, that you're now consolidating their office, but so far I have not met a single person who thinks that this is an administrative consolidation. Political scientists, academia, political commentators, columnists, journalists, everybody. They're saying one thing, that it's a cover-up, that it's an attempt to stop the investigation into the UCP leadership race.

Many of you have spoken on this bill. Not a single person touched on this investigation. Acknowledge there is an investigation that involves your members, people from your front bench. Acknowledge that. It's out there. It's public record and has been confirmed many times. Acknowledge that it's an ongoing investigation and then tell the public that you're firing that commissioner who is in charge of that investigation and see whether they buy your argument or not.

It's clearly an attack on our democracy, on our institutions, on our principles like rule of law, and on every one of us. If government is doing it, it's the obligation of private members on that side as well to think about it. They were elected to represent Albertans. We were all elected to represent our constituents, not the party. Especially when you all know that there is an investigation and your party is implicated in it and that's the commissioner who is investigating it, firing that commissioner doesn't send a good message for anyone in this province, in this country.

This is a serious, serious issue. Everyone in this Chamber has a responsibility to rise above the party lines and think about the consequences for this House, for the rule of law, for our democracy, for our independent officers. It will erode public confidence in our institution of democracy, that you can win an election, use your majority, abuse your power, and do things that otherwise would not be allowed in any democratic society.

I urge all members of this House to vote down this piece of legislation and vote against the firing of the Election Commissioner, who is investigating your party. That's the least you can do for democracy and for the rule of law.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Is there anyone wishing to bring a brief question or comment?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on the amendment.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For everyone's awareness we are considering an amendment to Bill 22, the bill that has been referred to as a bill to cover up investigations and charges related to fraud, forgery, and bribery in the UCP, just to be clear, the party, specifically. More than $200,000 in fines have been levied, members of this very House have been under investigation, and there are significant concerns that the Premier has failed to even stand in this House and defend this piece of legislation.

The amendment here is that it be amended by essentially referring this to come back to the House six months from now to give everyone the time to prove that this isn't about shutting down investigations, that this isn't about firing law enforcement in the middle of their investigations. Law enforcement, you know, is supposed to be about making sure that we uphold the law, that we have a place that enforces democracy in all of our pillars that make us proud to be Canadian and to live in a democratic society, one where people who are elected don't have the ability to act as though they are above the law, that we have a law that is fair and just for all. I am deeply concerned that what we have here is a government that continues to push forward with their own interests, their own self-interests as the guiding force.

We wrote to the Ethics Commissioner after this bill was introduced. And just to remind everyone again, this bill wasn't introduced until Monday afternoon. The Premier has not stood to defend this legislation in any way in question period, in bill debate in any way. The Premier has failed to defend it. That's why it's only fair that we have the ability to delay this and return six months from now.

We wrote the Ethics Commission about our deep concerns with this legislation, the fact that there are people in this House that plan on voting on it, and the commissioner has said that she absolutely does not have sufficient time – she responded to us just a few moments ago – or ability to be able to review this and determine if members of this House rightfully deserve to be able to vote on this bill or not. The letter is here, Mr. Speaker. I'll be happy to table it at a time that I am able to. The Ethics Commissioner said that she requires more time, which I think that the only right and fair thing for us to be able to do, then, is to move to adjourn this bill so that we can review the Ethics Commissioner letter and be able to make sure that any member of this House is voting with the proper authority and support of the Ethics Commissioner before they put themselves in further risk. They've already been under investigation for fraud, forgery, and bribery. They certainly shouldn't be causing the Ethics Commissioner in this place – and that is essentially what she says in this letter.

I move that we adjourn debate, Mr. Speaker.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 24 Appropriation Act, 2019

The Chair: Are there any speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Certainly, this continues the frustration that I think many Albertans have been feeling, particularly when it comes to the Appropriation Act and a number of the clauses in it. This budget is a direct attack on the things that the Premier and his entire caucus said they weren't going to be attacking. The Appropriation Act certainly doesn't reflect what they said, that they were going to maintain or increase education funding.

Just yesterday over a hundred teachers in the Calgary board of education, that's one public school district in one city, received termination notices. Probably like me, Madam Chair, you have spent time on social media hearing from families and hearing from students and hearing from those teachers who are directly impacted about how difficult it is to think about how to finish off this current calendar year knowing that they won't be there to support these kids in the upcoming months. For those parents who are finding out about these teachers being laid off, St. Albert is another example. St. Albert full-day kindergarten is being eliminated, kids partway through their school year being moved into different classrooms with different classmates and different instructors. For anyone who has loved a five-year-old . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, could you just turn the volume down on your chit-chat, please, so that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora can be heard.

Please proceed.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. For anyone who knows and has loved a five-year-old or can remember when they were five themselves – I know it's challenging, but some can challenge their memory to go back that far. Starting school that first official year of kindergarten is a scary enough time as it is. You spend a lot of the year trying to develop routines and learn to love learning and just appreciate being at school. I know that for the five-year-olds in my life, their teacher is a big part of that, their teacher and their classmates. That's what determines whether or not they're excited about going to school.

When they have layoffs mid-year, which of course were inevitable because the government chose to bring in their austerity budget mid-year because they were too busy campaigning on the federal election and not wanting to impact outcomes of that election to bring it in prior to the commencement of the school year, which would have been bad enough. If that budget would have been brought forward in June and schools would have been given their targets in June, which normally happens, even the one year – people often go back to: well, the NDP didn't pass a budget until the fall when they were first elected. We were elected around the same time. That is true; we didn't pass a budget until the fall, but what we did do is that we gave schools their targets. We said to schools: "This is how much your per-pupil funding is going to be. This is how much we're going to invest in the class size initiative fund. This is how much we're going to invest in the small schools by necessity grant. From that you can extrapolate and do your best to estimate what your funds will be." We did that so that staff could staff appropriately. In fact, in 2015 it meant many more teachers were hired because, of course, our school districts were growing.

The UCP government, however, decided that they were going to refuse to do that, refuse to bring forward those targets. Instead they would have messaging, and this was referred to often in the House: our messaging has been clear; we are going to fund enrolment growth. That's what was said in this House. As a result, teachers had their contracts either extended or new ones were hired. That's what was done because that's what was said in this place. That's what was said in the House.

Now here we are a few months later, and of course what happened instead is the shell game of the century. All those little pots of money that were hidden underneath these shells got cut. A number of grants were completely eliminated, like the class size initiative or classroom improvement fund or the bill to reduce school fees for parents. Some money was put into new enrolment but not as much money as was taken away – right? – not as much money as was taken away. Some money was put into new students but not as much as was taken away.

Here we are months into the school year when these young children have developed their routines, understand their classroom conditions, understand what they need to do to be successful, and boards are left with no choice. Now that the budget has actually been given down and they find out that they are losing tens of millions, some even more, in funding, they're left to lay off staff. This isn't just in Calgary public, as I've mentioned, or St. Albert, as I've mentioned. Maybe two weeks ago now a letter surfaced from Sturgeon school division. It goes on in great detail to say, you know: we voted for this government in large numbers. Quite a significant mandate in that riding in particular, for example. They said: we voted in this government based on the promises that they made, the promises that they made in the spring about maintaining or increasing education. Instead what they've been given is multimillion-dollar cuts. They said: this is going to mean real impacts in every single one of our schools; there will be staff reductions. They go on to say: we will also have to consider increases to school fees.

When we're talking about appropriating the budget, these are the kinds of things that we are being asked to go ahead and authorize. Go ahead and authorize the breaking of a major campaign commitment. I get why that commitment was made in 2019. It's because in 2015 when the PC government said, "Oh, we're not going to increase funding even though there will be an increase in the number of students," that set off a massive chain reaction that cost the PCs a number of seats, I would say. Arrogance and entitlement, that was definitely part of it, a culture of . . .

Mr. Schow: Vote splitting.

Ms Hoffman: Vote splitting? Maybe. Maybe people chose to vote for a different Conservative party because they thought that the one that was there was too arrogant and entitled and had definitely strayed from its original values system. I think that people who voted for the, quote, United Conservatives this time didn't think they were voting to bring corruption back or at least not quite as quickly as it seemed to have been. It definitely united votes. It also united them around what clearly seems to be voting on things that, even when the Ethics Commissioner, as yet another independent officer of this Leg, says that you shouldn't be voting on – it doesn't seem to be slowing down the expeditious nature with which this United Conservative Party has decided to move forward.

Back to 2015. There was definitely a campaign to not fund enrolment growth, and we know that a lot of Albertans thought that that was completely wrong. I think that's one of the reasons why the now leader of the UCP in the election said: we will fund education; we'll either maintain or increase. Then in the spring in this Legislature, when the Finance minister that day was answering questions on behalf of the Education minister, the Finance minister said: we will absolutely fund enrolment growth.

I guess, you know, today we have the Education minister saying that, well, she's completely blindsided that because she cut education funding, teachers are being fired when that is absolutely what everyone was saying, since the 2015 election presumably, would happen if you cut education funding and a budget area where the significant lion's share – last I heard it was about 80 per cent of education funding – is for front-line staff. These are the custodians in your school that keep your school safe and warm and clean. This morning I was dropping my niece and nephew off. The custodian is out there with a backpack clearing the walkway so kids can get to school, so that kids can have a good day and they can be safe when they're there.

The admin assistant at the front desk who makes sure that when kids don't show up, their parents and guardians immediately get notified so that they can be safe, they can be accounted for, and they can either confirm that they are at home or they can make sure that that person knows that they're not there and finds a way to get them there; the educational assistant who spends time one on one with students, working through many, many students with complex learning needs, that have continued to grow over the years, to get the appropriate support and attention that they need to learn in the classroom as well as other basic human dignities – like, there are students who require support in the washroom and students who require support in social settings – making sure that they can have a fully inclusive educational opportunity; the principal who makes sure that leadership is provided to that school system, that timetabling is done appropriately, that when there are behaviour challenges, they're addressed, that when parents need a voice, they are heard through the school council or one-on-one meeting opportunities: all of these front-line folks account for about 80 per cent of the education budget.

When you cut the education budget and you're surprised that these folks are losing their jobs, either I don't buy it, or I think it shows gross incompetence. Either I think you knew what you were doing, or you were in way over your head, and either way I think it's highly problematic.

The good news is that we as members of this Assembly have an opportunity to right the path. We don't have to just rubber-stamp what gets proposed; we actually get an opportunity to engage with the real consequences, engage with the constituents, our bosses, in our ridings and right across this province to make sure that we move forward with something that we are proud of and that we know will actually result in improving the condition for all, something that we literally say a prayer for multiple times a day in this House: improve the condition for all. Undoubtedly, this budget that we are considering does no such thing. It very clearly is an attack on the condition for our most vulnerable, including people who I mentioned, students.

Let's also talk about seniors for a moment. I was door-knocking again last Thursday when I stumbled across a door, and one of the seniors said to me, "Am I personally going to see any difference in the way my life is today?" He said: "Of course, if I go to a hospital, I will. Like, that would be really difficult, if these kinds of impacts, cutting $100 million from registered nurses, for example – I don't want to see that negative impact. But on my day to day, if I'm not at a time of crisis where I really need public services, am I going to feel it?" And I had to say, "You know, I'm really sorry to tell you this, but the government is considering deindexing, which means taking away the increase that you are currently entitled to for your seniors' benefit." He said, "Holy man, that's money out of my own pocket." And I said, "Yeah, it is, but that's one of the things that they're doing right now."

He said: "But they said that they were going to balance the budget. Are they doing that?" I said: "No. Actually, this year the deficit is about $2 billion more than it would have been under the plan that we were proposing during the election." Then he said that he was appalled by that.

Then he said: "But, clearly, they're going to help municipalities, right? They're going to help fix the potholes on my street. They're going to help make sure that the services that I rely on – you know, I'm starting to use DATS occasionally. That's going to be better, right?" I had to say: "No. Unfortunately, they're talking about cutting municipal funding." He said, "Oh, but they wouldn't touch police officers, would they?" I said: "Well, municipal police grants are definitely one of the areas that we've heard there are significant reductions in. You know, the city of Calgary's chief of police, who I think is a very worthy authority on this, has talked about the reductions there." He was quite rightfully appalled.

As well as downloading all of this – not all of this; a significant amount – onto individuals, there's also downloading onto municipalities. The regular grants that they count on to ensure that they can maintain their services, their infrastructure, and the local supports they provide to their communities are also being attacked in this current budget.

He said: "Now, I've heard this 4.7 number. What is that?" I said: "Well, it's on page 144 of the actual fiscal plan of the budget. It says that there will be $4.7 billion less collected from corporations. That's essentially giving that money to corporations." He said, "But they must have to create some jobs to go along with that, right?" "No. No, they don't." He said, "So Husky, who, you know, just announced that they're downsizing, gets to keep all of this money?" "The truth is: yes."

You know, these kinds of conversations are happening right across our province. Again, the truth is that we don't have to just come into this place and rubber-stamp things that somebody has told you to rubber-stamp. We all were sent here to represent folks like that gentleman I was talking to on his front step that snowy Thursday. We are sent here to make sure that we are standing up for every Albertan.

Let's mention folks who are on AISH, the assured income for the severely handicapped. I'm sure you all know somebody who is on AISH; I know I do. I know a lot of people who are on AISH who scrimp and save and pull together from their little bit that remains once they pay for their accommodations and once they have copays and those types of things that are required with regard to their health care plans, who scrimp and save to have a little money to spend in their local economies. You know, they're not socking away big amounts of money to send to private offshore savings accounts or even buy things on the Internet, like others might do. They are spending their money in their very local economies. For the vast majority, if there is any additional money once those immediate expenses are gone, it's spent in the local economy.

Oh, I should tell you about Sam. I'm 90 per cent sure that's his name. He wears this jacket, and I joke that he's almost like the Neighbourhood Watch in Dovercourt, one of the communities that I represent, because he spends so much of the day walking the street, checking in on things, making sure that everything is safe. He lives on AISH. I saw him the other day at one of my friends' houses. He rang the doorbell, and he said, "Hey, can I have some sugar?" which is a very neighbourly thing to do, to ask for a cup of sugar. I said, "Yeah." While my friend was getting the sugar, I said, "Oh, are you baking something?" He said: "No. It's for my coffee." I said, "Oh, did you just run out?" He said: "It's $6.75 at Rexall, it's $6.75 at Safeway, it's $6.75 everywhere I shop. I can't afford to buy sugar anymore, so I knock on my neighbours' doors, and good thing they give me some sugar." We're literally taking somebody who's living on AISH and taking $30 that he is entitled right now to have but, once this bill is passed, will not. As a result, he literally has to beg his neighbours for some charity, for some sugar for his coffee. You know, this isn't what I thought we were sent to this place to do.

For that reason and so many others, I will be voting against this appropriation act, because I think it's important that we have a government that represents all and fights for all, not just a $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout to those who, arguably, will move from one of the lowest taxed jurisdictions in North America to by far – I think that only a few, like, less than 10, will be lower taxed. You know, it doesn't seem to reflect the values of the folks that I represent in Edmonton-Glenora, and I doubt it reflects the values of many of the folks that we represent in this fine province.

I'll be standing up for students, those living on AISH, seniors, and ordinary families who rely on the government to put their needs above their own personal interests, desire for power, and other things that we say the prayer in opposition to, every single day in this House.

Thank you very much for your consideration, Madam Chair.

The Chair: All right. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glenora for her comments. I do have some questions about this bill, and I'm wondering if anybody from the Treasury benches can answer this. Before we vote on this bill – and, of course, Committee of the Whole is our opportunity to amend these kinds of things – I note that we are voting to spend $2,021,000 on the office of the Election Commissioner. I'm wondering if anybody from Executive Council could tell us where that money is going to go now that this House has just voted to dismantle the office of the Election Commissioner. I'm wondering if anybody from Executive Council can inform this House where the money that's slated for the office of the Election Commissioner is going to go.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. I think that's a very fair question. Thank you very much to the member for asking it. I think that when you're passing a budget and at the same time you're abolishing an office, it makes sense to ask that fine question.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, it's a real shame that we can't get an answer from any member of Executive Council on where this $2,021,000 is going to go, especially since the stated reason for dismantling the office of the Election Commissioner is to save $1 million over the next five years. Now we're voting in favour of a $2 million expenditure on an office that legally no longer exists. I think that's rather odd, and it's concerning to me that nobody from Executive Council is willing to answer the question.

I'm also concerned, Madam Chair, about the amount of money that's allotted for the office of the Ethics Commissioner. I see that we only have $945,000 allotted to her office for the work that she's going to do in this fiscal year. Given the fact that we've seen the result of the vote on Bill 22, we know that we have at least 33 UCP MLAs who are probably going to be under investigation by the office of the Ethics Commissioner. I don't know exactly how much each investigation costs, but conducting at least 33 investigations is not going to be a cheap endeavour. I expect that the office of the Ethics Commissioner is going to need significantly more than $945,000 to carry out that work unless, of course, it's the Executive Council's plan to scrap the office of the Ethics Commissioner as well once she launches her investigations. But I guess that remains to be seen.

You know, there are a number of concerns, as my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora has outlined, with the overall outlays of the budget and the fact that big corporations here in Alberta are getting a $4.7 billion windfall while folks on AISH, seniors, and students are getting far less. For those reasons and the fact that Executive Council can't even answer a simple question about the budget of the office of the Election Commissioner, that doesn't even exist anymore, I can't support this budget.

Mr. Schweitzer: Madam Chair, I move we rise and report progress.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 21, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

Statement by the Speaker

Former MLA Manmeet Singh Bhullar

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we begin the business of this afternoon, I would like to acknowledge the anniversary of the passing of a dear colleague and friend to many members of this Assembly, Mr. Manmeet Bhullar, the MLA for Calgary-Greenway. Mr. Bhullar was a dedicated and deeply kind member of this Chamber, and he was tragically taken from us doing what he loved to do best, selflessly helping a fellow Albertan. We continue to think of and pray for his family and many friends. He is profoundly missed. Please join me in a moment of silence in his memory on this anniversary.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have several guests in the galleries today, including two school groups from Davidson Creek elementary, students of the constituency of Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Also in the gallery are students from the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod, from Livingstone senior high school.

Joining us at 2 o'clock from the constituency of Edmonton-West Henday is Unlimited Potential Community Services.

Please welcome our schools with us today.

Hon. members, it is my great pleasure to welcome – and I know we'll have some more to say on this a little bit later in the proceedings – a most familiar face to this gallery in celebration of his recent retirement from the Legislative Assembly. Seated in the Speaker's gallery is our former Sergeant-at-Arms, Lieutenant Colonel Brian Hodgson; his wife, Bonny; their children Alastair, Gillian, Heather, and Chloe; along with a number of his friends and family. Thank you so much to each and every one of you for being here today.

Hon. members, guests from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills: welcome, Larry and Grace Martin; Erhard Poggemiller and his wife, Evelyn; and their grandson Cameron.

Also joining us in the gallery are family and friends, stakeholders of the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

We also have guests of the Minister of Seniors and Housing. Here celebrating National Housing Day are various housing foundations and societies from across the province.

I invite you all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Statement by the Speaker

Former Sergeant-at-Arms Brian Hodgson

The Speaker: Hon. members, if you will indulge me for just a few brief moments, I would like to have a small amount of Speaker's latitude today to make a statement for Mr. Brian Hodgson. He was appointed the Sergeant-at-Arms in January 1993 and served an impressive 27 years in that role before retiring in September of this year.

In his role as Sergeant-at-Arms, director of visitor services, ceremonial and security services, he served through eight general elections, 11 by-elections. In the entire history of this Assembly's 113 years Brian Hodgson served with 408 members of the only 950 members in Alberta's history. He was an integral part of the planning and execution of the royal visit of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and the province's provincial centennial, in 2005; the centennial of the Legislative Assembly, in 2006; the centennial of the Legislative Assembly Building, in 2012; and countless other historical moments that will live on as cherished memories.

He was first introduced in this House on January 25, 1993, by then Speaker David Carter, who at that time asked members to take a look at the very distinguished resumé on their desks in front of them – the resumé showed the new Sergeant-at-Arms – and asked that he rise and be acknowledged by the House.

Prior to starting his career with the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, he was an intelligence officer for the Canadian Security Intelligence Service for six years. It was around this time last year, November 5, 2018, to be exact, that Mr. Hodgson was most recently recognized in the House for his involvement with the Armistice 100 Committee, a group dedicated to preserving and celebrating the memory of the 100th anniversary of the First World War. As an Army Reserve Lieutenant Colonel, Colonel Hodgson was the first member of his regiment, the South Alberta Light Horse, to volunteer to serve in Afghanistan. In 2004, with the full support of the Assembly, he was granted leave of absence by then Speaker Kowalski to carry out his service to Canada.

In addition to being a dedicated husband and father, it is clear that he has spent the better part of his life dedicated to local and national as well as provincial public service. His contributions in these areas have been recognized through the awarding of the Queen's golden and diamond jubilee medals, the Canada 125 medal, the Alberta centennial medal, and the Canadian Forces decoration with two bars.

I know that we already did this, but I think it is worth another opportunity. I would ask all members of the Assembly to rise and thank him for his dedicated service to our province. [Standing ovation]

Members' Statements

Campaign Investigations and Provincial Legislation

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, before the election, when the members opposite were first thinking about running for office, I wonder how many of them sat at the kitchen table with their loved ones and said: this is a great opportunity for me to help cover up corruption and illegal activity. Hopefully, none of them, but during the last days of that campaign and into the first weeks of government, as the Election Commissioner and the police and the special prosecutor began to investigate, the more perceptive members probably sensed that a moment was waiting for them just over the horizon, a moment of moral testing.

That moment was today. The Premier asked his caucus to disband a law enforcement agency that is closing in on at least one member of that caucus. The Premier directed government MLAs to participate in a cover-up of corruption and illegal activity. Maybe they think they can hide behind the flimsy fiction that this is just an administrative adjustment, but nobody is believing that nonsense. Or maybe they hoped they could hold their nose and vote and the whole thing would just blow over after a few weeks.

It won't, Mr. Speaker. The MLAs that are complicit in this cover-up will wear that stain for the rest of their careers. The RCMP is still investigating. We may well have charges and trials and testimony that will open this whole sordid affair to the public, but by then the good names of the members opposite will be tarnished forever.

It's not an easy thing to refuse an order from your Premier or your House leader, but all of the members of this House will have to go back to that kitchen table and sit with their loved ones again. On this side of the House we will say: I did what was right. On that side they will say: I did what I was told.

Former MLA Manmeet Singh Bhullar

Mr. Gotfried: November 23, 2015, a day I will always remember, a day we lost a dear friend and colleague: Meeta to many who knew him, the hon. Manmeet Singh Bhullar. We lost Meeta as he selflessly lost his life doing what he did best, helping others. When first elected, in 2008, after a long history as a PC youth, Manmeet was the youngest member of this House but by no means the smallest. The occasional eruption of Mount Bhullar was a contrast to his reputation as a gentle giant amongst all who came to know him.

He served as Minister of Service Alberta, minister of human services, and Minister of Infrastructure during his impactful time in office. He was one of only nine PCs left in this House in 2015, and his loss was deeply felt amongst us, his absence today reminding us of what could have been.

Mr. Speaker, I sat beside this mountain of a man. A member of this House who served with him can attest to a great young Albertan, larger than life, who was taken from all of us too soon. He was a man of integrity, a champion for youth, always willing to lend a helping hand or word of encouragement to all members of this House. His warriorlike commitment to building a better Alberta was truly an inspiration to us all.

Manmeet is survived by his loving wife, Namrita; his parents, Baljinder Singh and Sukhvir Kaur Bhullar; his sister Tarjinder; his brother Appy; and a large extended family of dear friends in the Sikh community and well beyond. His legacy lives on through the Manmeet Singh Bhullar Foundation school and park, created to inspire and empower Albertans to follow in his footsteps in making the world a better place. Albertans embraced the hashtag #nicetomanmeetyou. An honour for all it was, indeed.

In further remembrance, I would ask everyone in this House to join me in a few moments of reflection for our friend, our colleague, our own fallen soldier, Manmeet Singh Bhullar.

Rest in peace, dear Meeta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, and thank you to the member for those kind words for a dear friend of mine as well.

Former Sergeant-at-Arms Brian Hodgson

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, as you know, our Sergeant-at-Arms, Brian Hodgson, served his last day with the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on September 16, 2019. After 27 years of distinguished service Brian is the longest serving Sergeant-at-Arms in the province's history, and we could not be more grateful for his dedication and service to this Assembly.

Brian has contributed to our country and province through many forms of service, including military service and community outreach. He even served with my father in the reserves. Brian took great pride in ensuring the safety and security of the Assembly and its members through his role as the Sergeant-at-Arms. He was also incredibly passionate about parliamentary democracy and upholding the ceremony and traditions of the Legislative Assembly and the Westminster system, on which it is based. During his exemplary military career he was involved in operational service with the British and Canadian armies in Germany, Northern Ireland, Cyprus, and Afghanistan. His service in Afghanistan while on temporary leave from this Legislature further demonstrates his commitment to advancing democracy.

Brian was also instrumental in many of the historical moments at our Legislature. One of the highlights of his career was, of course, the royal visit in 2005, where Brian escorted Her Majesty the Queen into this very Chamber. That was the first royal address from a reigning monarch in Alberta's history. He was always eager to educate others and share the importance of parliamentary democracy and its traditions.

In his retirement Brian will continue his lifetime of service through his passionate participation in various community boards and associations. He also plans on spending some very well-deserved and quality time with his wonderful wife, Bonny, and his four children – Alastair, Gillian, Heather, and Chloe – as well as his beloved horses at his ranch.

On behalf of everyone in this Assembly and the people of Alberta thank you, sir, for your service. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Former Sergeant-at-Arms Brian Hodgson

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleagues in the NDP caucus I'd like to take a moment to congratulate Brian Hodgson on his retirement and thank him for his service in the Legislature as the Sergeant-at-Arms for the past 27 years. Brian and I met in 2012, when I was first elected, and it was obvious then, as it was throughout his career, that Brian was dedicated to serving this Assembly and this province. He worked – and worked out – tirelessly and effectively to make sure the Legislature is a safe and welcoming place. He helped ensure that this place was always accessible to members of the public, which is vital to allowing Albertans to come here and engage in the democratic process. The work that goes into making this a safe and welcoming place often goes unnoticed, so today I'm grateful to have the opportunity to extend my thanks and appreciation on behalf of my caucus colleagues to Brian Hodgson.

I know that members of this Legislature will remember Brian for his community service, his service to his country and province, and his love of cycling. Sir, we do miss seeing your bicycles in the Legislature. After 27 years Brian deserves some time to relax, and we wish him and his family all the best in their future endeavours.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not on my notes, but Mr. Hodgson's horses are out in the finest part of Alberta, which is in my constituency. So welcome, sir.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize that tomorrow, November 22, is National Housing Day. National Housing Day is an opportunity to bring awareness to the challenges Albertans with low income face finding a place to live and examine new solutions to address this need. Affordable housing is a critical issue for some Albertans. Currently there are more than 110,000 Albertans living in 65,000 government-subsidized housing units.

Our government is committed to making housing affordable and accessible for Albertans. We're exploring creative solutions to accomplish this such as mixed-income models and private-public partnerships while getting the most out of every taxpayer dollar. We aim to support more affordable housing developments with the same amount of taxpayer investment. Our 2019 capital plan includes $619 million over four years to deliver 2,700 new and regenerated affordable housing units and to maintain the 26,400-unit Alberta Social Housing Corporation-owned portfolio. We are also sustaining capital maintenance and renewal funding to ensure that safe and maintained housing units are available for Albertans with low income. As a member of the minister's advisory committee on housing we collaborate with community leaders, build knowledge, share ideas, explore potential opportunities, and help to identify priorities.

This morning the Minister of Seniors and Housing announced a review of the income verification process for affordable housing applications. This common-sense initiative will make the process easier and more efficient for Albertans who apply for affordable housing. We have listened to tenants, applicants, and housing providers who say that they could benefit from a simpler process. We will continue to work closely with our partners to help us deliver affordable housing in a way that's efficient and effective.

Mr. Speaker, as we approach National Housing Day, I can assure you that our government is dedicated to strengthening our affordable housing system so it can support Albertans who need it most, now and in years to come.

Thank you, sir.

Affordable Housing

Ms Sigurdson: Each year since 1998 communities across Canada have marked November 22, tomorrow, as National Housing Day. This day was created to raise awareness about the importance and need for affordable housing. Our NDP government made affordable housing a priority. We created Alberta's first-ever affordable housing strategy. We invested an unprecedented $1.2 billion to maintain and build public housing. This was a long-overdue investment as the sector had not been supported well for decades. In fact, this investment was four times greater than the previous Conservative government's affordable housing budget.

Sadly, in the current government's budget we see a backwards move; $17 million was cut from the budgets of public housing management bodies. This means that ongoing maintenance and repairs are being delayed. In some instances units are being closed, which means that affordable housing availability is decreasing.

In addition, $44 million has been cut from the rent subsidy program. Albertans looking for support only get an announcement on the website that no applications are being accepted. This creates health issues because rent payments cut into money available to purchase healthy food. It also means living in housing that is not well maintained: leaky roofs, drafty windows and doors, exposed electrical wires. Research shows that children who live in this housing have poorer health outcomes and increased behavioural challenges. This can then lead to failure to thrive, low levels of academic achievement, and ultimately the inability to secure a well-paying job in the future. Lack of affordable housing has far-reaching implications.

The benefits of affordable housing are manifold: improved health and well-being, improved educational outcomes, increased employment opportunities, improved personal security, flourishing personal relationships, and positive financial outcomes. These findings are well documented in academic research. Governments need to look at this data and make evidence-based decisions.

Besides all this, Mr. Speaker, I know the importance of affordable housing first-hand . . .

Oral Question Period

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the government rammed through Bill 22 even as the Ethics Commissioner raised serious concerns of conflict of interest for government members. The Ethics Commissioner's letter was delivered while this government was voting down attempts to delay this corrupt bill. The commissioner wrote saying that she did not have sufficient time to properly investigate allegations of conflict of interest against the Premier, his ministers, and members of his caucus. What was so urgent about this corrupt bill that it couldn't be held while the Ethics Commissioner did her work?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this is the problem with the NDP. At this point Albertans can't believe anything that they say, and I certainly would not. I don't blame them for that, because they continue to come in and misrepresent facts. First of all, the Ethics Commissioner's letter says no such thing. It does not say anything about investigating the Premier in any such context or any member in this Chamber. The Ethics Commissioner provides advice on how members can vote in this Chamber when it comes to certain things that could be problematic under the Conflicts of Interest Act. Our staff has spoken with the Ethics Commissioner today, and we are confident that everybody is within the Conflicts of Interest Act.

Ms Hoffman: The Ethics Commissioner advised that anyone in the process of being investigated by the Election Commissioner or the RCMP or who has colleagues or staff under investigation would likely be in breach of the Conflicts of Interest Act, breaking the law, if they debated or voted on Bill 22. That's exactly what happened here this morning, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: why did you risk every member of your caucus breaking the law this morning? What are you hiding?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again, you can't really trust what the NDP have to say. This is the same opposition who said that there would only be three hours of debate when it came to Bill 22: not accurate. This is the same opposition who said there was time allocation on Monday on this legislation: not accurate. This is over and over an Official Opposition who accuses random people of things that are just not factual. It's extremely disappointing. Let me be clear. Again, we have been in contact with the Ethics Commissioner, and we are confident that all members who participated in Bill 22 and in debate are within the Conflicts of Interest Act.

Ms Hoffman: It is truly shocking to see this government pressing forward with a corrupt bill to silence an independent officer of the Legislature and then doing so over the objections of another independent officer of the Legislature, this time the Ethics Commissioner. What occurred this morning in this place is a travesty, and there will be numerous ethics investigations in its wake, so I must ask the Premier. You silenced the Election Commissioner. How can Albertans be sure you won't silence the Ethics Commissioner as your next target?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again the NDP are misrepresenting facts. Actually, at the end of the Ethics Commissioner's letter she was clear that the political decision that was before this Assembly was a decision of this Assembly, and that she in no way had any ability nor would she try to interfere with a political decision of the Legislative Assembly, unlike what the Leader of the Opposition did, calling on the Lieutenant Governor to do something unconstitutional and not sign a bill that was decided upon by this place. Again, the NDP need to stop misrepresenting facts. At this point nobody believes them anymore. That's the reality when you continue to misrepresent facts all day.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: By using its majority to shut down an investigation into law-breaking in its own party, the UCP has secured its legacy as the most corrupt and undemocratic government in the history of Alberta, perhaps even the history of Canada. This is not the stuff of a democracy; this is the stuff of a strongman regime. Does the Premier even understand the damage that he has done to the rule of law in our province?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it doesn't matter how many times the NDP misrepresent facts; they're not going to make what they're saying factual. What they're saying is not factual. You know, what Albertans are most frustrated about was a former government who signed up with Justin Trudeau to stop our energy industry, who supported a federal NDP leader who tried to block our pipelines. That's who Albertans are frustrated by. That member was a Deputy Premier of a government who hired Tzeponah Berman to then go out and try to shut down our energy industry. I can tell you that the people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre haven't forgotten that, and they sure have not forgiven it.

Ms Hoffman: If Justin Trudeau had dismissed the ethics commissioner before he could release the damning SNC-Lavalin report or if Paul Martin had dismissed Justice Gomery before he could complete the probe into the Liberal sponsorship scandal, just imagine the howl of outrage that we would have heard from the members opposite. But now, when we see unethical behaviour in Ottawa in the future, no one will listen to this Premier. No one will listen to Alberta. Was destroying Alberta's moral authority within Canada worth it for the Premier to save his own political skin?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again, the temporary leader of the NDP Party is misrepresenting facts or the party is certainly misrepresenting facts . . .

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mr. Jason Nixon: . . . when it comes to this issue. The reality is that the Election Commissioner office remains in this province. That's the fact. That legislation is very, very clear on that, that passed in this place this morning. In addition to that, I passed an amendment myself last night that made it clear that all investigations must be able to continue and be transferred over to the Chief Electoral Officer. [interjections] No, it doesn't say "may." It says: must be transferred over to the Chief Electoral Officer.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 1:55.

Ms Hoffman: Every member of the UCP who voted for Bill 22 will be remembered as being complicit in shutting down an active investigation into fraud, forgery, and bribery. Every member who voted for Bill 22 voted to protect their Premier's political career at the expense of their own integrity and the voters who elected them to this House. It is shameful. What was so damaging to the Premier that he had to drag down the entire caucus, their reputations? What are you hiding?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, more ridiculous comments from the deputy leader of the NDP. None of that is factual. Again, making up investigations inside this place does not make them true. Let me be clear. Investigations that may have been taking place under the Election Commissioner remain intact. There's still an Election Commissioner. There's still a CEO of Elections Alberta. There is no political interference within that operation. It remains an independent officer of this Legislature. That's what is taking place. Those are the facts. It doesn't matter how hard the NDP work to misrepresent them to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora for her third set of questions.

Calgary Board of Education Layoffs

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On June 20 the Education minister told this House: "This morning I met with the CBE and they were able to confirm for me that the reports of 300 job losses are false. Their plan is to keep teachers in front of students and maintain existing staff levels." A week later the CBE passed its 2019 budget and submitted it to the minister, who raised no objections to it for five months. To the Premier: what has changed at Calgary public since June other than the deep cuts you made to their budget?

Member LaGrange: The CBE's decision to end the contracts of 300 temporary teachers is unacceptable. I made it very clear that that board needed to look at other options in terms of dealing with their fiscal mismanagement. Right now I have ordered an independent financial audit and a governance review of this particular board. At the end of the day, we need teachers in front of students, and that is the direction that they need to take.

Ms Hoffman: Now thousands of kids in Calgary are having their education compromised while this minister points fingers and announces reviews. These kids won't get another chance at these classes. They can't wait. If the Premier truly believes that CBE is at fault, why won't this minister intervene immediately, today, and make sure that all 300 teachers are still in their classrooms in January? Why won't she stand up for kids in Calgary public schools instead of a $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. As the hon. member knows, school boards have contracts with their teachers and their support staff. They're in the position to do this. But CBE playing politics with our teachers and with our children is unacceptable. This reckless mismanagement of taxpayer dollars cannot be allowed to continue. That's why I've called for these reviews.

Ms Hoffman: In June the minister said that everything was fine. Three hundred job losses: that's just fear and smear, she said. Then she cut their budget by $32 million. Yesterday the minister said that she was shocked. She couldn't understand how 300 job losses could have possibly happened in Calgary schools. Either she's grossly incompetent, Mr. Speaker, or she's something that I'm not allowed to say in this House. Will she commit to a fully independent audit of the CBE, and will she commit to resigning from cabinet if the audit finds that the cuts were caused by her budget?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what a ridiculous attack on our Education minister. Let me be very, very clear. Every member of this government and every member of the government caucus is proud of our Education minister, who is working very hard to be able to restore the mess created by that party when they were in power when it came to education.

This cabinet and this party stand side by side with our Education minister. Let me be very, very clear: the Premier is very proud of our Education minister. You know who should resign? Every member of that caucus who worked against our energy industry while they were in power, who worked against Albertans each and every day and sold them out to Justin Trudeau.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Bill 22 Public Service Pension Changes Budget 2019

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 22 does many awful things, but one part that hasn't gotten enough attention yet is that this UCP government has removed an AUPE seat from the pension sponsor board and corporation board. When asked about removing workers from the oversight of their own retirement funds, the Finance minister said that the change was about restoring competence. Suggesting that the representative AUPE workers put forward were not competent is heinous. To the Finance minister: when will you do the right thing, immediately repeal Bill 22, and apologize to the people?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are doing the right thing. We're managing this province's finances responsibly. We're ensuring that we're making changes that will strengthen pensions, that will improve returns, that will improve governance on pension boards. We have ensured that there's adequate representative representation on pension boards, and for that reason we've added one member that represents nonbargaining management staff as they had no previous representation.

Ms Gray: If this minister wants to talk about who is competent and who is not, let's start by looking at his budget. What would you say, Mr. Speaker, about a budget that breaks election promises by slashing health care and education and somehow raises the deficit by $2 billion over last year? I'd call that incompetent. To the Premier: when will you unreservedly apologize to the working women and men of this province for your Finance minister's comments, when will you replace him, and when will you start worrying about the real lack of competence, which is around your cabinet table?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, this government has brought forward a responsible budget, a budget that brings this province back to balance in its four-year fiscal plan. We inherited a financial mess from the members opposite. Albertans elected us to get our house in order. We will do that.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, all members of this House know that we have received serious concerns from over 29,000 teachers about Bill 22. Teachers, nurses, and public servants were in this gallery until very late last night because their government is playing politics with their pensions, and their concerns fell on deaf ears. To the government cabinet: when will you take out the earplugs, meet the Albertans who have been on the steps of the Legislature, finally start listening to the people that teach our kids and care for our loved ones, and repeal Bill 22?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we have great respect for the public servants that deliver on behalf of Albertans every day. Bill 22 and the changes we're making to pension governance will strengthen public service pensions. They will reduce costs. They will ensure that we have strong governance. In terms of ATRF it will result in better returns, lower costs, lower premiums for teachers. The ATRF continues to own the pensions, manage the pensions, and provide high-level direction. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Homeless Shelter Services in Fort McMurray

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans experiencing homelessness need somewhere to go, especially now during Alberta's cold winter. My community expects that its various orders of government will work together to ensure that resources are effectively and efficiently supported. The closure of the first floor of Marshall House in Fort McMurray has left people with questions about what is being done to take care of the folks that were staying there. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: how is our government ensuring that all individuals experiencing homelessness have a place to go this winter in Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the member for that question. Mr. Speaker, we will not be leaving these individuals out in the cold. The government of Alberta works with our community partner, the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, to ensure that community needs are addressed. Since 2012 the government of Alberta has been funding empty beds at the Marshall House Emergency Shelter. Empty beds. Last year the government of Alberta funded 70 spaces at this shelter while on average only 24 individual spaces were used per night. Sufficient shelter capacity will continue to exist in Fort McMurray at the Salvation Army . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, given that if we evaluate those that are disadvantaged in maintaining housing, we see that many are afflicted with mental illness and addictions related to alcohol or drugs and that when addressing homelessness, our society recognizes that we need to allow for people who are inebriated to have a safe space, and given that the member opposite, in typical fashion, gave ignorant statements about the lack of intox beds available at the Salvation Army, again to the Minister of Community and Social Services: can you tell this House how many spaces will be available for the intox community?

The Speaker: Point of order is noted at 2:06.

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the Salvation Army will have a total capacity of 91 beds, including 56 sober spaces and 35 intox mats. Marshall House, however, did not have intox spaces at all. We are confident there will be more than enough space for homeless individuals needing shelter in Fort McMurray.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the Salvation Army in my community has stepped up to address this void with space for the homeless, and given that as the largest nongovernmental direct provider of social services in Canada, with a mandate of providing shelter for homeless people and rehabilitation for people who have lost control of their lives to addiction, the Salvation Army will address these issues in Fort McMurray, the question is: will this government support the Salvation Army to host these additional individuals?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, absolutely. Our government is consolidating shelter services at the Salvation Army, which will be expanded from 67 to 91 beds. The Salvation Army will receive additional provincial funding to operate 24 additional sober spaces, which equates to the approximate daily occupancy of Marshall House but at about one-third of the cost. This change will ensure that tax dollars are spent wisely while taking care of the individuals experiencing homelessness in this northern city.

Thank you.

2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigations

Ms Sweet: Well, Mr. Speaker, last night our caucus proposed an amendment to Bill 22 to allow the current Election Commissioner to continue his work independently, without control by this government, for five more years. The government promptly voted it down. To the Government House Leader: did you vote against the amendment because you were worried just how much corruption the commissioner would uncover when it comes to the UCP if given five more years?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, here lies the problem. For some reason the NDP don't trust the current independent officer of the Legislature, the Chief Electoral Officer, who is now ultimately responsible for investigations and the Election Commissioner position, which will answer to the Chief Electoral Officer. Again the NDP is misrepresenting facts. This government, this Chamber, MLAs, cabinet have no connection at all to the investigations. They fall under an independent officer, the Chief Electoral Officer of the Legislature, who has served this Chamber for well over a decade and served it well.

Ms Hoffman: You broke the law.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: I will acknowledge another point of order at 2:09.

The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Chief Electoral Officer's contract actually expires in six months and we don't know who will be replacing that person and given that with the termination of the Election Commissioner Albertans wanting justice will now look at the RCMP investigation into the UCP leadership contest and given that the Minister of Justice clearly has a conflict of interest in this matter, to the minister: will you remind this House why it took you so long to appoint a special prosecutor to oversee the RCMP investigation into the UCP and release the process to Albertans so they know that it actually happened?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, there have been many statements by the Minister of Justice, including statements that have come out from his department, making it clear that what that hon. member is referring to is just not factual. That's just not how the process works. With that said, the hon. Justice minister is not in conflict in any way. This is the problem: these members continue to get up in this House and accuse other members of the Legislature of things that are not factual. You cannot trust the NDP. You can't trust them politically because they're out against Alberta's best interests, but you also can't trust what they're saying because they keep misrepresenting the facts.

Ms Sweet: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the House leader just won't say whether or not there's an independent prosecutor that's been established and given that we know nothing about the steps the Minister of Justice has taken to ensure he's not involved in an investigation in which he's been called as a witness and given that the people of Alberta have likely lost trust in this government to do the right thing given what's happened over the last three days, to the Minister of Justice: isn't it time that you name publicly who is the special prosecutor responsible for overseeing the RCMP investigation into the UCP leadership? What are you hiding?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, absolutely nothing is the answer. There's been a heck of a lot of hypocrisy from the other side. This hypocrisy needs to stop. They're smearing people's good names. If we're getting into the politics that they're playing, they appointed under their administration six judges that made material donations to the NDP. One made a $4,000 donation right before being appointed. I'm not saying that they're not fit for office. People can be involved in a political process. They have to stop the hypocrisy. They have to stop this politics and seeing everything as an ethics violation. Stop it.

Sport and Cultural Organization Funding

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, in their rush to give wealthy corporations $4.7 billion, this government is abandoning Alberta communities. Their omnibus bill to fire the Election Commissioner and attack people's pensions also dissolved the Alberta Sport Connection, which provides funding and support to more than 80 groups. Can the minister of culture tell this House why she is cutting support to organizations like the Special Olympics – the Special Olympics – while giving corporations hundreds of millions of dollars to invest in places like Wisconsin?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we continue to hear rhetoric from the other side, rhetoric that attacks job creators in this province. It's no wonder that when the members opposite governed, we witnessed an exodus of billions and billions of dollars of capital out of the province and, with it, jobs and opportunities. This government is changing that narrative. We are introducing a very competitive business environment, including the most competitive corporate tax rate in the country.

Ms Goehring: Given that in addition to taking funding away from the Special Olympics, this government is slashing support for other organizations that support sport like the Alberta Schools' Athletic Association and given that this government is literally taking supports away from sports development centres in this province to pay for their no-jobs $4.7 billion corporate handout, can the minister of culture explain why this government appears to value sports less than they do subsidizing Husky's investments outside of Alberta?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, included in our budget is an effort to become much more efficient, to remove redundancies, and to streamline government because that results in saving hard-earned tax dollars on behalf of the taxpayers of the province. We are dissolving funds wherever it makes sense. The function of those funds, including the Alberta sports council, will continue through the department. Committed amounts to special sports events will continue to be funded in the future.

Ms Goehring: Given that this government is also dissolving the Alberta historical resources fund, which preserves and protects historic projects and preserves Alberta's history, and given that when also dissolving the fund, this government fired the existing board without even giving the courtesy of a phone call, can the culture minister explain why the Premier's friends and their spouses get charter flights from this government but dedicated volunteers get tossed out on the street?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. Again, we are presenting a budget that streamlines government, that finds efficiencies, that ensures that we can be on a path to balance within our first term. We committed to Albertans that we would do that. We are delivering. The function of these funds and these boards and committees will continue, as they have in the past, through the departments, only in a much more cost-effective manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Rural Schools

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural education systems work a little bit differently than they do in cities, and as our province urbanizes more and more, this disparity grows. Among other things, when rural schools are funded for enrolment, it often fails to meet the needs as rural schools get smaller and inflation goes up. This becomes more and more true as rural populations decrease. To the Minister of Education: what is your ministry doing to address this very real issue faced by small, rural schools as they struggle to make ends meet?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for the question. We know that rural schools often face unique challenges such as declining enrolment, long distances, and sparse populations. Recognizing this, rural boards benefit from a higher rate in the one-time transition grant as we transition to a new funding framework next year. As we develop a new funding framework, one of the key goals is to provide equitable funding so students can receive an education that prepares them for success no matter where they live.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for her answer. Given that rural schools tend to be older than urban schools and given that weather and time have more of an effect as a result of a lack of shelter due to residing on emptier landscapes and given that such schools in my riding, like J.T. Foster, Blackie and Livingstone school, have long been in need of modernization, can the minister describe what she and her department are doing to enable schools in my riding and those across rural Alberta to maintain themselves and modernize?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I am aware of the situations facing the schools in the member's riding. For schools to be considered for modernization funding, school divisions must submit a proposal to the government outlining their request. Once received, my department analyzes the request and prioritizes applications as a result of a series of metrics, which includes enrolment growth and health and safety concerns. I can assure the member that projects proposed by this local board will be assessed under this model in upcoming capital budgets.

Mr. Reid: Thank you again, Minister.

Given that many of my constituents have reached out to me and to my office expressing their concern that once again no new school projects have been announced in southern Alberta and given that schools in my riding such as Blackie, J.T. Foster, and Livingstone, which were mentioned before, are desperately in need of modernization and repair, can the minister please outline options for these schools until such time as they qualify for capital plan funding?

Member LaGrange: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question, hon. member. Local school divisions are in the best position to comment on their own capital projects and their own needs. As I previously stated, for schools to be considered for modernization funding, school divisions must submit a proposal to the government outlining their request. Each school division outlines their own priorities annually, and I will have more to say on future capital projects when Budget 2020 is released.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert would like to ask a question.

Henson Trusts for Persons with Disabilities

Ms Renaud: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you'll remember that our government passed legislation that would allow people with severe disabilities to support themselves after a caregiver passes away. Henson trusts are allowed by law in every province across the country and are supported by people with disabilities. Why is this government turning its back on the disability community by sneaking a provision into Bill 21 that would repeal Henson trusts and make it harder for people with disabilities to pay for their very basic needs?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I absolutely reject that language of sneaking around and making changes. Absolutely not. Since I've been sworn in as minister, I've made a concerted effort to undertake extensive stakeholder engagement to hear the voices of the disability community, and we are doing our level best to make sure that our services are sustainable and efficient.

Ms Renaud: Mr. Speaker, given that I don't care what verbs you're comfortable with, you are cutting this. Given that this government has not conducted any consultations on these changes and given that these changes are not supported by the disability community, that this government has already sent into a tailspin because you cut AISH, why is the government making a bad situation for people with disabilities worse by taking away the ability to support themselves after their loved ones are gone? [interjection]

The Speaker: Order. I would just provide some caution to the member that she would address her questions through the chair and maybe say "this government did something or other," and not "you." It's not parliamentary.

The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to emphasize that we have not cut AISH. AISH benefits are maintained. In fact, the core benefits are the highest they've ever been historically.

One thing I want to talk about today is that when I speak to stakeholders, when I speak to parents, their biggest worry is: what is going to happen to my children after I'm gone? The question that we're facing now is how to make sure that these programs are sustainable for the long term. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. The hon. Member for St. Albert is the only one with the call.

Ms Renaud: I'm stunned by that.

Given that the repeal of Henson trusts was hidden in Bill 21 and given that when Henson trusts were brought in by our government, the CEO of Inclusion Alberta said, quote, we'll no longer have to fear our children with disabilities having to be impoverished by the government in order for their benefits to be sustained, end quote, and given that this government has already cut benefits for people with disabilities to pay for your $4.7 billion handout, what exactly is this government doing to ensure fiscal sustainability for people with severe disabilities in real time, right now?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, again, the rhetoric that we've cut AISH benefits or that we've cut disability services is not true. It's simply not true. It's simply inaccurate. We're committed to working with the disability community in addition to Inclusion Alberta to make sure that we are focusing on the issues that matter most to the disability community, which is sustainability for the long term, not just for the next four years but for decades and generations to come. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has the call.

Health Ministry Consultations on Biologic Drugs

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, thousands of Albertans living with Crohn's or colitis are currently dependent on biologics to keep those painful and debilitating bowel diseases in remission. Dr. Remo Panaccione of the University of Calgary, a world-renowned expert in this field, sat down to share his expertise with the Minister of Health, but before they could talk, the minister asked him to sign a 10-year nondisclosure agreement, or NDA. This is outrageous behaviour, and it begs the simple question: what does this minister have to hide about his plan for biologics? Who does he think he is? Vladimir Putin?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, that's categorically false. I never asked anybody at that meeting to sign an NDA. It's absolutely false.

It is true that the Ministry of Health, as has happened in previous administrations as well when it has consulted with stakeholders, has asked for NDAs. Yes, those folks who met with me in that meeting this week asked me why the ministry had asked them to sign an NDA. I have never asked anyone to sign an NDA. I am not going to be asking anyone to sign an NDA. I was very happy to be able to answer their questions. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has responsibility for his ministry and given that Dr. Panaccione rightfully refused the bizarre request and given that he reported that the conversation that followed was at best awkward and one sided and given that while this Minister of Health has spoken about his desire to move Alberta's drug plan away from biologics towards biosimilars and given that he still seems to have no desire to actually listen to experts or people living with these conditions about the impact that could have, to this minister: is this really how he conducts himself with Albertans, refusing to speak with anyone who isn't sworn to secrecy in writing?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, if the conversation was one sided because I was listening to the stakeholders, I don't know why that would be a criticism of me.

Yes, it is true that Budget 2019 did announce that we would be expanding our biosimilars initiative. The exact details have not been determined. They have obviously not been announced either. I hope to be able to determine the details of that expansion of the initiative by the end of the year and be able to announce those details. Of course, before we do that, both my office and the ministry will listen to stakeholders, including patient groups, before we make those decisions.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the conversation was also described as the minister being barely interested and given that biologics are a small component of Alberta's health care system but are life altering for the patients who depend on them to keep their disease in remission and given that this minister, as part of his ambitious plans to transform our health care system, will have to meet with thousands of Albertans and discuss a wide range of issues that affect them directly and given that there can be no good public policy without real consultation, how often does he request that Albertans sign NDAs, and will he commit to ending such an insulting practice?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I have not asked anyone to sign an NDA, and I'd love to hear again Edmonton-Glenora heckle me as I answer this question because it was a practice that the Ministry of Health did under her as well. Before the Ministry of Health is able to consult with people and able to provide details on what's being considered – yes, they have in the past, both under this administration and previous administrations had NDAs. I've never asked anyone to sign an NDA, but I do encourage all patient groups and other stakeholders, pharmacists, and physicians to be able to work with the ministry to be able to give them their best advice.

Highway 628 Capital Plan

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Highway 628 is a crucial highway that connects the town of Stony Plain to the Whitemud freeway in Edmonton. The previous government committed to a reconstruction of highway 628, a necessary project given the number of my constituents that commute to Edmonton every day for work. I'm grateful to see that highway 628 is still on the 2019 provincial construction program posted on the open Alberta portal as of November 8. To the Minister of Transportation: what is the current status of this project, and when will my constituents finally see this major transportation link completed?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would say to the hon. member: thanks for the question. We know that highway 628 is an important link between Edmonton, Spruce Grove, and Stony Plain and residential developments in Parkland county. We have allocated $46 million in Budget 2019 towards rebuilding 16 kilometres between highway 779 and west Edmonton city limits. We intend to get going on that construction project this summer coming up, and I hope that the hon. member will both enjoy the benefits and remind his constituents to drive safely as they go through that construction zone.

Mr. Turton: Again to the minister: given that the congestion on highway 16 is a barrier to commuting for the many constituents of Spruce Grove and Stony Plain who work in Edmonton and given that the only other avenue into Edmonton is highway 628, which needs reconstruction to be a viable option, and given that our government promised to prioritize capital plan spending on projects that are important to enhancing economic prospects, can the minister commit to following through on that promise by enhancing access to the large job market of Edmonton for the people of Spruce Grove and Stony Plain?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thanks, Madam Speaker. Despite the financial mess that was left by the previous government, we are still committed to building infrastructure in Alberta. We know that highway 628 provides a direct connection to Whitemud on the south side of Edmonton. Design work is already under way on this important project to reduce congestion, and by accommodating drivers that would otherwise use highway 16 and 16A into Edmonton, these improvements to highway 628 will help ease congestion for residents and commuters trying to get to work, and we are looking forward to delivering this important project.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: given that this government has already promised an expansion of highway 1A for the sake of providing greater access and safety to First Nations and for improving economic opportunities for the Stoney Nakoda First Nations in particular and given that it was already mentioned that a safer reconstruction of the highway will increase access to multiple urban centres, will the minister commit to working with the Enoch Cree Nation to expand highway 628 all the way to Edmonton, thereby increasing economic opportunities for the First Nation?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to working with indigenous people in Alberta and protecting them when they travel around the province. As the hon. member rightly points out, 628 runs across the boundary of Enoch Cree Nation, and we understand the importance of this highway to them. That was one of our considerations. By improving travel in and around the Edmonton region, we hope to make life more convenient for all Albertans, including our indigenous partners, and we will continue to work with First Nations and indigenous people as we have demonstrated with the aboriginal opportunities . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has a question.

2:30 Seniors and Housing Minister's Remarks

Ms Sigurdson: Seniors built this province and deserve respect and support, neither of which they are getting from this UCP government.

On Monday the Minister of Seniors and Housing said that seniors need to "live within their means." Seniors can take no lessons on living within their means from this plane-chartering, London-hopping, patronage-appointing government. Can the minister of seniors explain how she can say that seniors need to live within their means while the Premier's staff are living in five-star London hotels?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, this patronage stuff that they're talking about here has to stop. This hypocrisy has to stop. Provincial Court Nominating Committee: appointed by the NDP, a member of that committee donated $20,000 to the NDP. Alberta Human Rights Commission: one person on this committee donated $13,000 to the NDP. You have four other people on here as well that donated over $1,000 to the NDP. This hypocrisy has to stop. These people are qualified for their roles. I'm not questioning that. The hypocrisy has to stop.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that this minister who thinks that seniors need a lesson on living within their means is supporting a budget that is kicking 46,000 Albertans off the seniors' drug plan and given that this minister is supporting the same budget that gave $233 million to Husky to invest in New Brunswick and the United States, can the Minister of Seniors and Housing please explain to seniors why she expects them to live with less so that wealthy corporations can get a $4.7 billion corporate giveaway?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we've said before, this year's budget is a balanced plan focused on creating jobs, growing the economy, and protecting vital services for Albertans who need them. We're providing support for those most in need of seniors' programs and services as well as affordable housing. We are maintaining funding for seniors' benefits at current levels, ensuring the most vulnerable seniors can count on a stable source of income and financial assistance during this difficult financial time in our province.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that the minister can somehow justify slashing seniors' benefits while applauding the Premier's adviser expensing $45,000 in six months on top of his $200,000 salary and given that this minister has the gall to tell seniors to live within their means while handing out $4.7 billion for wealthy corporations, will the minister apologize to seniors for telling them that they need to live within their means while the friends of this government are living large on the backs of seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Seniors and Housing has said in this House, Alberta has had an overspending problem thanks to four years under an NDP government who drove us to be on track to exceed $100 billion in debt. We cannot unfairly burden this and future generations ahead of us. We are acting now, taking care of Albertans, including our seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has a question.

Calgary Police Service Funding

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A spike in gun violence this year has the residents of Calgary deeply concerned. The news reports 76 firearms-related calls to Calgary police since the beginning of October compared to 47 reported incidents last year, yet this government's budget has left the Calgary police with a $13 million shortfall. Can the Minister of Justice explain to Calgarians why he is cutting Calgary police funding, or is his Twitter fight with the mayor a higher priority than the safety of Calgarians?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the little part that the hon. member said that I agree with is that our government has asked cities and municipalities to tighten their belts. There are some areas that have got less funding, but where they spend less funding is what they consider their lowest priority. We are suggesting that municipalities use policing as one of their top priorities, which means that they wouldn't cut funding there. If some municipalities consider policing the lowest priority, it's their decision, but it's not the decision we recommend.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the Calgary police have indicated that the budget shortfall resulting from this UCP budget could force the service to cut another 130 positions and given that this UCP government can find money for five-star London hotels and a no-job $4.7 billion corporate gift, can the minister tell us why he has taken money from Calgary police fine revenues when they need these resources to protect Calgarians from gun violence? Isn't the minister worried that gun violence will rise even further if police have less resources?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right in that we've asked the cities to live with less provincial funding, but the decision on where they take that funding from belongs to the cities. Again, we are concerned about violence in the cities, which is why we recommend they do not take that funding from the police, that they find something else to consider their lowest priorities. When they take the money from the police, that means they think the police are the lowest priority. In this case we don't agree. We think the police are a high priority and that's one of the last places they should reduce funding from.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the Justice minister claims that public safety is his most important job and given that Calgarians and Albertans expect their governments, both provincial and municipal governments, to work together with police to keep our streets safe, can the Minister of Justice suppress his ego, call the Calgary mayor today, and figure out how to ensure safety on Calgary streets?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, it's without question that the mayor of Calgary and I disagree from time to time. Trudeau's mayor needs to get his fiscal house in order. As the Minister of Transportation has mentioned, policing should be the top priority of city hall in Calgary. I'm a Calgarian. I want my fiscal house in order there. I'm tired of paying higher taxes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to his question about violence in Calgary. We're taking that very seriously. I've done two town halls in northeast Calgary, where that member represents. I'll gladly go back there again if that member wants me to come and talk to people in the community. [interjection]

The Speaker: Order. Order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung will come to order.

Public Inquiry on Antienergy Campaign Funding

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we learned that the foreign-funded eco-activist group Ecojustice has launched a lawsuit to try and stop the public inquiry into the foreign-funded attacks on our energy sector. I have to say that my constituents and myself are completely tired of these attacks on our energy workers. Like most Albertans, we don't believe that extreme, foreign-funded interest groups should be able to interfere in our economy or our democracy. To the Minister of Energy: can you tell this House why it is so important that we continue to stand up to these foreign-funded interest groups like Ecojustice?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you for that question. Like many of my colleagues on this side of the House, I proudly worked in the oil and gas sector for many years. For 13 years I worked in the pipeline sector, and from there I saw first-hand the effects and the tactics of energy opponents who attacked our pipelines. They directly attacked our pipelines. They stopped our processes. This was a direct attack on Alberta, a direct attack on pipelines, a direct attack on jobs. We were elected on a platform to stand up for those jobs, and that's what we're doing.

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, given that the public inquiry is specifically targeting foreign sources of funding for the campaign against our energy industry and given that Ecojustice has received $815,000 from the U.S.-based Tides Foundation, one of the central groups involved in the anti-Alberta oil sands campaign, given all of that, could the Energy minister tell us what she thinks the motivation behind the Ecojustice lawsuit might be?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you look on the website of Ecojustice, it says that their mission is: we go to court. They litigate. They like to highlight their litigation against Northern Gateway pipeline, Energy East pipeline, Trans Mountain. They even went after the line 9 pipeline. They call our oil sands the "tar sands," and they say that it's one of the most destructive places on the planet. [interjections] Their motivation is obvious. Their motivation is to shut down the oil sands, to land-lock our province, and it's appalling that the NDP go "hear, hear" and applaud Ecojustice. I will stand with Albertans.

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, given that we are looking forward to reading the forthcoming report from Commissioner Allan on the public inquiry and given that groups like Ecojustice and the Official Opposition, who are chirping so much right now, seem so intent on standing in the way of completing this inquiry and report, can the Minister of Energy confirm that Commissioner Allan will be proceeding despite these attacks and advise us on when this report will be available?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government was elected on a platform promise to launch a public inquiry into the foreign sources of funds behind the anti-Alberta energy campaign. That's exactly what we did when we asked Commissioner Allan to lead this fully independent inquiry. Commissioner Allan will release his report no later than July 2, 2020.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will proceed immediately to Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross has a statement to make.

Provincial Pension Plan Administration

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta deserves fair and unbiased treatment from the federal government, but for decades Ottawa has given us little attention. The only time they seem to care about us is when they think they might lose out on some of our tax money. The federal government should adequately reciprocate the financial contributions our province gives them with effective services and funding.

A key first step in maintaining provincial autonomy, lowering costs for Albertans, and granting our province more leverage for itself would be to decentralize some of the services that are currently being provided by Ottawa. Starting an Alberta pension plan would be an important change that could bring massive benefits to the people of our province. Quebec has had a provincial pension plan since 1966, and it has worked with success, despite its median age being one of the oldest in the country.

Mr. Speaker, a provincial pension plan could provide incredible results for Alberta. If we chose to maintain the current CPP contribution rates, our annual payments would drop from 9.9 per cent to 5.85 per cent. This would translate to a 2 per cent cut for businesses and individuals, while keeping all of our retirement benefits intact. This drop would leave Albertans with more money in their pockets and would spur business growth and investment. Alternatively, Alberta could keep the 9.9 per cent rate and provide our citizens with one of the most generous publicly funded retirement savings plans in North America.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has the youngest population of all provinces and one of the highest workforce participation rates, and our pension plans should reflect that. Albertans that work hard their whole life and pay into pension plans should be contributing to their own future retirements, not for retirees in the east.

Thank you.

Norwegian Oil

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, recently Greta Thunberg called out the Nordic countries for basically doing nothing despite having the possibility to do the most. I agree with Greta. The Nordic countries have failed to live up to their vaunted reputations on the environment.

Specifically, let's talk about Norway. Alberta is often compared to Norway, although instead of doling out its financial windfall to its neighbours, Norway tucks it safely away in a nice sovereign fund. Did you know that Norway is one of the original purveyors of oil dependency? They were leaders in the mass slaughter of whales for oil, which they rendered from the blubber. They got people addicted to convenience lighting in their quest to profit from oil. Shame. Soon they discovered oil offshore. Despite having a strong domestic supply of hydroelectricity, they have drilled hundreds of sites, pulling out massive amounts of hydrocarbons in the middle of the rough ocean waters, and there is leakage. It's time environmentalists broadened their views and looked at the pollution we're imposing on our oceans.

I am calling on the folks from across the way to get their friends from Leadnow, Greenpeace, Environmental Defence, and the rest as well as all those cool celebrities like Leonardo DiCaprio, Jane Fonda, and Neil Young to go visit Norway. Just like when you visit Fort McMurray, you can fly in, grab a franchise coffee, and head out for your photo op. You can do the same thing in Norway, but unlike Alberta, where our entire province depends on oil and gas revenues to put food on the table and to heat our homes in the winter, Norway mines those hydrocarbons to sell to the world. If these environmental crusaders can put enough pressure on Norway, this is a nation that can afford to stop their hydrocarbon production because they have their trillion-dollar nest egg. Environmentalists can feel pride knowing that they've made a difference, a difference in actually making an entire nation give up an industry it does not even need. So go on, go away, go visit Norway.

Alberta in Canada

Mr. Loewen: Albertans have never been so disappointed and frustrated with their federal government. As I've met with my constituents, I've heard the same word over and over again: enough. Enough of the federal government undermining our economy, enough of the federal government sucking this province dry, enough of our federal government taking us for granted, and enough of Alberta accepting it. Alberta is and has been pivotal to the prosperity of Canada as a whole for generations. Every province in this country benefits from the success of our economy, especially our oil and gas sector.

Some people say that this is biting the hand that feeds it, but it's actually so much worse. It's like our fellow countrymen are trying to cut the hand off entirely. There is a deep-seated resentment for Alberta in some corners of this country, and it is being pandered to by our federal government. Again we say: enough. Enough of a federal government that wants to keep our natural resources in the ground; enough of a federal government that would like to land-lock our natural resources from the rest of the world, driving the price Canadians receive for their product down; enough of an attitude that tells us oil and gas pipelines are unacceptable while cash pipelines flow wide open to the east.

It is time to control our future, to claim our destiny. It starts with the realization that we will never be offered a fair deal without demanding it. We will never get a fair shake unless we are truly prepared to stand up for ourselves and fight for it. What a fair deal looks like is up to Albertans, but we know from the experience of other provinces that we can assert our place far more effectively by seriously considering ideas like a provincial pension plan, a provincial police force, opting out of federal programs in exchange for full compensation, triggering a referendum on ending equalization, the collection of our own taxes, playing a larger role in international relations, and more.

We have real tools at our disposal. My constituents have told me that it's time to use them. Albertans aren't asking for special treatment. They just want fair treatment. Albertans finally have a provincial government that will stand up to our federal government. Why? Because Albertans have had enough.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Bill 28

Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand before you to beg leave to introduce a bill, a bill named the Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act.

This legislation will enable our province to participate in British Columbia's proposed national class action against opioid manufacturers and wholesalers. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta taxpayers should not be forced to shoulder the cost of opioid-related injury, illness, and disease when we can trace the roots back to the unlawful actions of these companies. This legislation would allow us to hold opioid manufacturers and wholesalers accountable for health care costs and other damages related to opioids.

I therefore move first reading of Bill 28, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with section 19(5) of the Auditor General Act as chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I'm pleased to table the report of the Auditor General of Alberta, November 2019. Copies of this report will also be provided to all members.

Thank you very much, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has a tabling.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of the correspondence received earlier today from the office of the Ethics Commissioner regarding the deep concerns around there being violations of folks voting on Bill 22, which passed third reading earlier today. I'm tabling it as I referred to it in my debate earlier today as well as in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by Edmonton-South.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of two articles. The first article is about climate change. It's called the Last Arctic Ice Refuge Is Disappearing. The second one is The Most Important Climate Numbers You Need to Know. Both are informative and show the absolute dire nature of climate change.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of tablings for you today. First, I've received hundreds of letters, but here are 10 letters from teachers telling the government to keep their hands off their pensions.

I also have a tabling of a petition I ran, in which 1,457 Albertans have said no to firing the Election Commissioner and corruption in the UCP government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite copies received by the NDP caucus members concerning the corruption of government in passing Bill 22.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of an open letter from a constituent, Mary Pinkoski. She writes asking to consider the ramifications of what happens to a population when they are presented with a multiplicity of cuts in all areas of their lives. Albertans "are complex individuals who are now experiencing the resounding fear and desperation that naturally comes with having many areas of our lives placed in jeopardy by these austerity . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I appreciate the reading of the letter, but that's the purpose of tabling it, so that all members have the opportunity to do so.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Member for St. Albert I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from a constituent, Élodie Maunder. She's a teacher who sets out her great love and passion for teaching and how she is concerned about the challenges faced by the government's changes to education.

The Speaker: Thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Shandro, Minister of Health, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College of Combined Laboratory and X-Ray Technologists annual report 2018 and the College and Association of Respiratory Therapists of Alberta annual report 2019.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Toews, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Pension Plan Act the annual reports for the years ending March 31, 2015, March 31, 2016, March 31, 2017, March 31, 2018, and March 31, 2019.

Pursuant to the provincial judges and masters in chambers registered and unregistered pension plans regulation the annual reports for the years ending March 31, 2017, 2018, and 2019.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. But prior to doing so, perhaps the Government House Leader would like to provide the House an update.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity. I rise on what I believe is the Official Opposition House Leader's first point of order . . .

The Speaker: Sorry. I'm hoping that you might consider extending the Routine.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Oh. It would be my pleasure as the Government House Leader to extend the Routine. [interjection] Well, let's just do it, just in case, Mr. Speaker. In honour of the Brian Mason standing order I extend the daily Routine.

The Speaker: Well done. Thank you.

The hon. Official Opposition House Leader. Apologies to the House.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j). At approximately 1:56 the Government House Leader made a statement accusing the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, referring to her as the interim leader, misrepresentative of the truth. I don't need to go much further than that. As you know, as you've ruled in the past, I would request that the Government House Leader withdraw that comment.

The Speaker: Thank you to the hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Given the recent interest in points of order, I might just provide some context around why this might be a point of order compared to other situations that may not be. The hon. Government House Leader did on numerous occasions refer to groups of people like the NDP misrepresenting information or the Official Opposition misrepresenting information. But in this case he referred specifically to the temporary leader of the NDP, being an individual, accurate or not, misrepresenting the facts. As such, this particular instance does constitute a point of order.

I'd ask the member to withdraw and apologize.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Throughout a lengthy question period I managed to deliver it right every time but one, and I certainly do agree that it was unparliamentary. I do withdraw and apologize.

The Speaker: Hon. members, point of order 1: I consider it dealt with and concluded.

Point of order 2: at 2:06 the hon. Official Opposition House Leader raised a point of order.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on Standing Order 23 (h), (i), (j), specifically where the statement, that I will share with the House in a minute, not only makes an allegation of another member but "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo made a comment referring to one of our members, stating that the member opposite made ignorant statements about X, Y, Z. That's less important for this. But, again, that type of language is meant to create disorder, is an allegation against a member. For those reasons, I request that that member apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: The government whip.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly thank the member opposite for his submissions on this particular point of order. However, I happen to have the sheet. I'm not necessarily mentioning the question that, of course, the member was asking, but what he said was: "given that the member opposite, in typical fashion, gave ignorant statements about the lack of intox beds available at the Salvation Army." I would submit to you that he was referring to no one specifically, in particular, of the members opposite, certainly referring to a member within the NDP but not identifying a specific member. So I would argue that that particular point would be considered a matter of debate.

Secondly, I would also further argue that, you know, to be ignorant of a particular subject would certainly mean to be unaware or have a lack of understanding of a particular subject. I know for myself, as an example, or somebody who has not been to Fort McMurray in, I would say, decades, that I would be somewhat ignorant as to what is going on in the Salvation Army regarding intox beds in that particular area.

I do not believe in any way that he was trying to incite but instead state, really, a fact that there was a lack of understanding or awareness of this particular subject by a specific member opposite but not directed to any one particular member opposite. So I would argue that this is just simply a matter of debate, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for your time.

The Speaker: I appreciate the submissions with respect to this point of order. I would suggest, as I do have the benefit of the Blues — and while members may find ways to get transcripts of what happens or doesn't happen inside the Chamber prior to the publication of the Blues, of course, only the Speaker has access during question period. The Blues read that "given that the member" not "a member" has been spoken. But with that, I will say that there are some validities to the points of the government whip saying that one could make an ignorant statement without being ignorant.

Given the closeness to the line of being unparliamentary — I've never tried to actually split a hair, but we may be doing that — I think I will rule in this case that it was a point of order and ask that the member apologize and withdraw.

Mr. Ellis: On behalf of the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo I apologize and withdraw the comment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: So well done.

At 2:09 the hon. Government House Leader raised a point of order during questioning.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I'll let the hon. member reply.

The Speaker: Would someone like to rise and provide some direction to the Speaker? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. Perhaps she's rising to apologize and withdraw a statement she made.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Like the Government House Leader, I got it right about 15 times today, but one time in a heckle I said something that I regret. I apologize, and I withdraw the remark.

The Speaker: Teamwork makes the dream work.

Hon. members, we are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, first of all, through you to everybody in the Chamber as well as staff, your team, and across the LAO for another good legislative week. It's been a long week, with some late nights.

As I always do, Mr. Speaker, at this time I encourage all of our colleagues on all sides of the aisle to drive safely — I'm hearing of some bad weather in certain parts of the province — as people travel back to their constituencies. Of course, today is a particularly tough day for many members of this Chamber, the anniversary of the loss of our dear friend Manmeet in a highway accident. I just want to encourage everybody again, from every party, to be careful.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, I think it's time to get everybody back home to their constituencies for the weekend. I look forward to seeing everybody next week. I will move to adjourn the House until next Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 1st Session (2019)

Activity to Thursday, November 21, 2019

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitzings.

1:30 p.m.

Monday, November 25, 2019

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by the Glendon school choir. I would invite you all to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's my pleasure. This morning I had the opportunity of meeting with the consul general of the Netherlands, Mr. Henk Snoeken. He's accompanied by the honorary consul general of the Netherlands in Edmonton, Jerry Bouma. It's particularly special having these gentlemen here this year as it is 75 years of freedom in the Kingdom of the Netherlands. Canada and Holland share a deep and meaningful bond stemming from the results of the Second World War, that continues to be a rewarding relationship all these decades later. Thank you for coming, and welcome to Alberta.

Also in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon a special guest: the Member of Parliament for Lethbridge, Ms Rachael Harder. She is accompanied by a number of constituents of hers and of the members of Lethbridge-West and Lethbridge-East. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, this afternoon, here for the School at the Legislature: from the constituency of St. Albert, students of Muriel Martin school.

Also, our anthem singers this afternoon, as I previously mentioned, guests of the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul: from Glendon school grades 2, 4, and 7, a range of students. A huge thank you to their teacher, Ms Amy Charter. Thanks for doing such an amazing job.

Also, guests of the MLA for Sherwood Park: Gunjan Mehta and Kashyap Pandit from the Hindu BAPS organization. Welcome.

Guests of the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat: welcome the Newell Christian School all the way from Duchess today.

Last but not least, joining us and visiting the Official Opposition caucus are Wallis Kendal and Jasmine Nepoose.

Hon. members, please welcome our guests today.

BAPS Charities

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize BAPS, which is a Hindu religious and social organization. It is a Gujarat, India based global spiritual organization that is dedicated to community service, peace, and harmony. As a world-wide Hindu organization BAPS actively engages in a number of endeavours aimed at spirituality, human development, and welfare. BAPS has more than 50,000 volunteers and 1,100 Hindu temples, with 100 centres right here in North America.

I have had the honour of attending BAPS events in Edmonton and Sherwood Park along with visiting the BAPS temple in Calgary. Most recently in Edmonton I along with the Minister of Municipal Affairs attended the BAPS Annakut Mahotsav event. Hindu community temples celebrate Annakut Mahotsav after the Diwali festival. The event had an exhibition stall that promoted the message of the Hindu Vedic literature: the world is one family, unity and tolerance. What an incredibly positive and inclusive message.

The inspiration behind the activities of BAPS in Edmonton is His Holiness Pramukh Swami Maharaj and His Holiness Mahant Swami Maharaj. The Premier has had the opportunity to personally meet His Holiness and has a long-standing friendship with BAPS. The Minister of Infrastructure and the Minister of Community and Social Services have been to the BAPS temple in Calgary, too.

Mr. Speaker, BAPS is a great example of a faith-based civil society group that greatly contributes to Alberta through volunteerism, charity, spirituality, and social welfare supports. It is my sincere honour to recognize and salute BAPS in the Legislature today.

Thank you.

Campaign Investigations and Bill 22

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, numerous members of this government's cabinet and caucus have been interviewed by the RCMP in their ongoing investigation into voter fraud and identity theft that appear to have plagued the UCP leadership race. The Minister of Justice, the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women, the Minister of Infrastructure, the Minister of Seniors and Housing, the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions, also the Member for Cardston-Siksika and the Member for Sherwood Park were all interviewed by the RCMP as part of this scandal.

Let's keep in mind that the Premier tried to shrug this off as Twitter gossip at one point. But before the Justice minister turns his all-caps rant at me, let's make one thing clear: Albertans know that Twitter gossip doesn't result in over $200,000 in fines. Albertans deserve a government that is up front with them. They deserve a government that doesn't try to hide from accountability or the rule of law, they deserve a government that doesn't fire those investigating them, and they deserve a government that takes their responsibilities under the Conflicts of Interest Act seriously. Just how many of the members I listed off earlier checked with the Ethics Commissioner before voting on Bill 22? My guess is none, Mr. Speaker.

I implore my colleagues on the other side of the House: take a stand. You know what this government is doing isn't right, and I know that your constituents are telling you that, too. This is your chance. Listen to the people who elected you instead of the Premier's office. I hope you take it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tax Policy

Mr. Guthrie: I'm not sure if you've heard, Mr. Speaker, but the NDP are claiming a $4.7 billion corporate tax giveaway. The NDP claims: tax cuts don't work; the only way to help the economy is to continue increasing taxes. They say that they would balance the budget and would do so while ramping up their spend-and-tax policies. I am so looking forward to the NDP shadow budget that shows their path to balance in the next three years.

But let's talk numbers as we do have four years of NDP governance to look at for the effects of tax increases. First, we have the surprise-of-a-lifetime tax, called a $1.4 billion carbon tax, that caused every Albertan to suffer; followed up with a 20 per cent increase in corporate taxes, increases to personal taxes, and a $350 million increase to provincial property taxes. But it didn't stop there. They agreed to increasing CPP and WCB premiums. They packed on regulations and red tape which further reduced business competitiveness. As Alberta's only single-term government the NDP decimated the resource sector and drove capital investment out of the province in every sector by double-digit numbers. They shrunk the private sector and reduced our provincial earnings growth to the slowest in Canada by a country mile. Unemployment skyrocketed, vacancies grew, private-sector wages plummeted, and bankruptcies erupted.

The NDP claimed that they would gain $6 billion in tax revenues, but all they did was realize an $8.5 billion tax revenue shortfall, average over $12 billion in debt each year they were in office, proving through their own doing that tax increases hurt all Albertans.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to reverse this catastrophic economic failure by the NDP. It will not be easy, and it will take time, but we will not be deterred.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Campaign Investigations and Bill 22

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, Bill 22 has passed, and I'm sure this government has moved at record speed to fire the Election Commissioner and any trace of his investigation into the UCP leadership race. For those wanting justice, we hope and assume the RCMP investigation into UCP voter fraud soldiers on.

Let's be clear that Bill 22 is the most undemocratic and unethical act this Legislature has ever seen. Albertans won't forget, neither will this Official Opposition, and neither will I as the opposition critic for democracy and ethics. Albertans won't forget that these days just before the spring election the Member for Calgary-East had his business raided by RCMP officers in connection with the voter fraud investigation. Albertans also won't forget that the Member for Calgary-Glenmore was specifically named in a letter provided to the RCMP about the voter fraud that occurred. The letter detailed offshore e-mail servers and voting kiosks being run specifically to put the campaign by the current Premier over the top. Albertans also won't forget that despite being Members of this Legislative Assembly for seven months, neither of those members have come clean about what they know and whether they believe it's acceptable to remain as MLAs while under RCMP investigation. To both members: your silence is deafening.

The Premier, for his part, has dismissed all these allegations and called them Twitter gossip, but Bill 22 indicates that there is much, much more at play. And this Premier hopes that he can change the channel after his Texas hideout. I promise him this, that neither myself nor the 23 other MLAs on this side of the House will let Albertans forget what occurred last week, because it was shameful. Still, I believe in my heart that justice will be served someday.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-North.

High School Construction in North Calgary

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak to declare my commitment to education in our province and investment in public infrastructure. Education is the most basic right for our children, and an educated Alberta is better for all of us. Our province is known for being innovative and entrepreneurial. That is because we value education and investment in our youth.

I want to express my excitement and appreciation regarding the recent announcement to build the north Calgary high school. For more than 15 years the families of Calgary-North have been advocating for a high school, and I am so pleased that our government has listened to their voices. In fact, Mr. Speaker, while I was door-knocking last spring, this was a high priority for parents in my constituency, among other things like jobs, economy, and pipelines. The new high school will have the capacity to serve about 1,800 students from north Calgary. A high school in Calgary-North was a growing need for the community and is well received by its residents. The announcement of a new high school shows Albertans that our government is committed to education. Having a high school closer, too, will increase a student's ability to participate in extracurricular activities and be more active in the community involvement. A new high school in Calgary-North will give students not only the opportunity to go to school closer to their home but also offer them excellent learning opportunities and better community participation.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to express my sincere thanks to the Northern Hills Community Association, who worked tirelessly for the past 15 years advocating for a high school, as well as all the residents of Calgary-North. Their commitment, hard work, and dedication paid off.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Climate Change

Ms Renaud: According to the UN's World Meteorological Organization the concentration of climate-heating greenhouse gases has hit a record high. The rising concentration of greenhouse gases follows inevitably from the continued surge in global emissions. We know that the world's scientists have calculated that emissions must fall by half by 2030 to give us a good chance at limiting heating to 1.5 degrees Celsius, beyond which hundreds of millions of people will suffer more heat waves, droughts, fires, floods, and extreme poverty.

Our planet is undergoing one of the largest changes in climate since dinosaurs went extinct. Although some of the changes our planet will undergo in the next few decades are already baked into the system, how different the climate looks at the end of the 21st century will depend largely on how humans respond now.

In April Environment and Climate Change Canada released Canada's Changing Climate Report, and the report states that Canada's north has started melting. It's projected that Canada overall will warm almost twice the global average regardless of what we do to fight it.

UCP members like to point out other bad-actor countries when trying to deflect from their dismal action on climate change mitigation, energy efficiency, and climate leadership. Whataboutism will not solve the massive climate change challenges ahead of us. Swearing allegiance to one type of energy producer and plastering their signs on the people's House, our Legislature, will do nothing to address the massive challenges ahead of us. The only way that we as a province and country address the massive challenges and opportunities ahead of us is to unite behind the science and to act like our house is on fire.

Thank you.

Parliamentary Democracy

Ms Rosin: Mr. Speaker, I have a massive amount of respect for our democracy in this province, and part of my respect for our democracy, of course, includes its processes. That's why I'm always a little amazed when I witness members of this Assembly completely disrespect the institutions that make this province so great. Every time I enter this House, I'm overwhelmed and humbled by the opportunity I have been granted to represent Banff-Kananaskis and to make decisions that will hopefully make life a little bit better for Albertans, but it's becoming increasingly obvious that some enter this House and see it as an opportunity and a platform to spread fear and division instead of promoting constructive dialogue and cohesion.

I'm particularly unimpressed by the calls of the Official Opposition and their leader to pressure the Lieutenant Governor into behaving in a way that undermines our democracy and disregards the voices of Albertans. Last week the Leader of the Opposition demanded that the Lieutenant Governor block and barricade Bill 22 from becoming law. You see, Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to live in a province where we can't demand that democratic institutions be overturned just because we don't like them or personally agree with them. I'm proud that we can't bully our way around the processes or make unfounded demands of those involved in it.

For those on the other side of the aisle who feel like they can bend the process for their own agenda, do these members not remember what they themselves said about a man who attempted to petition the Lieutenant Governor in 2016? Twitter was overwhelmed by the hashtag #kudatah and the widespread mockery of the NDP, who lambasted the very idea that someone would petition the Lieutenant Governor. Yet here today it seems that that opposition has decided to take a page right from the playbook and make kudatah the official NDP policy.

Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. I for one don't stand for this hypocrisy, nor do I stand for political moves that erode our democracy and undermine our institutions. The opposition can stomp their feet and bully and tweet all they want, but it won't change the outcome of this democracy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona would like to address the House.

Member's Apology

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to address my comments from question period last Tuesday. Last week we witnessed an unprecedented attack on Alberta's democracy, namely the firing of the Election Commissioner while he was actively investigating members and associates of the government caucus.

During question period I used unparliamentary language to describe the Government House Leader's actions when he claimed that Bill 22 does not fire the Election Commissioner. In fact, the bill did specifically fire the Election Commissioner, and he has now been fired. In the face of the contradiction that appeared between the statement of the House leader and the words within the act, I used unparliamentary language when I said that the House leader was misleading the House.* While I retain my position that the House leader was incorrect when he suggested that Bill 22 did not fire anyone, I respect the rules and traditions of this Chamber, and as such, I withdraw my comment.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I consider this matter dealt with and concluded.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Election Commissioner and Bill 22

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good to be back, and I also offer a welcome back to the Premier. Bill 22, jammed through the Legislature while the Premier was in Texas, is an abuse of power that breaches the rule of law. The Premier fired the Election Commissioner in the midst of active investigations into him, members of his caucus, and members of his party. The House leader had the gall to tell this House, "No one is firing anybody," but the bill says that Mr. Gibson is "terminated." To the Premier: if you believe you did the right thing, will you at least correct the record and admit that as of today Lorne Gibson is no longer the Election Commissioner? Please tell the truth.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Leader of the Opposition knows full well, the position of Election Commissioner carries on within the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, which has been responsible for the administration and enforcement of Alberta election law from 1905 until July of 2018, analogous to the system that exists in every other province. As the Chief Electoral Officer said last Friday, "All investigations begun by the Office of the Election Commissioner will continue under Elections Alberta's statutory mandate." Nothing could be more clear than that.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier is wrong. The folks over there are not telling the truth, and they know it. There is no Election Commissioner right now, and this public firing has intimidated anybody tasked with holding this Premier accountable. The investigation has already been compromised. This is classic political interference, intimidation, and abuse of power. This is not, however, the classic behaviour of democratic leaders. The House leader said there was no panic, but they passed the bill with an urgency of someone on the run from the law. To the Premier: what are you hiding?

Mr. Kenney: Absolutely nothing, Mr. Speaker. In fact, Bill 22 received more hours of debate than any other bill before the Legislature in this fall session. Let me carry on quoting from the Chief Electoral Officer, who says:

Prior to July 2018, when the Office of the Election Commissioner was created, Elections Alberta was responsible for receiving complaints and conducting all investigations regarding non-compliance with the Election Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. Elections Alberta is once again tasked with performing this regulatory role. It will resume the role in accordance with its duty to act independently and to apply the election and election finance legislation consistently and fairly.

Ms Notley: Well, thanks to Bill 22, Mr. Speaker, there's no such thing as anybody having a duty to act independently. The Supreme Court of Canada defines the rule of law as "supreme over officials of the government . . . and thereby preclusive of the influence of arbitrary power." This Premier thinks he's above the law and that he can fire those who would hold him to account on a whim. Last week the Premier forced this House to serve as his tool for this abuse of power. What is so damaging that this Premier has to abuse his power, corrupt this House, and break the rule of law to keep it secret?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, all of that sounds like the campaign of fear and smear we heard in the spring election that Albertans rejected. Instead, I'll quote from an independent officer who has been independently administering Alberta elections law for several years, who was in fact appointed by the previous NDP government, when he said on Friday, "All investigations begun by the Office of the Election Commissioner will continue under Elections Alberta's statutory mandate." All that's changed is that instead of the commissioner being accountable to the Legislature or the government, the commissioner is now accountable to an independent, arm's-length official.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition for her second set of questions.

Ms Notley: What's changed, Mr. Speaker, is that the guy that has fined those guys over $200,000 just got fired by those guys, but you know what? Let's go into quotes because it's not just me and some of the folks at the Grey Cup who were worried about this Premier. The Star says that Bill 22 "amounts to an abuse of power" and "an affront to democracy that will not be easily swept under the rug." The Globe and Mail says it "raises serious questions about democracy in Alberta." The Edmonton Journal says this commissioner should have been allowed to finish the job. To the Premier, Albertans don't believe you. Why won't you come clean with them?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, many commentators remarked on how the real violation of the democratic spirit came from the Leader of the Opposition when she wrote to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor asking that she violate our Westminster parliamentary constitution by effectively vetoing a law duly passed by the elected representatives of Albertans. I know that the leader of the NDP has had a hard time coming to terms with Albertans firing her last spring, but here's the reality. Albertans' elected representatives passed this law to restore . . .

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I have a hard time coming to terms with is the attack on democracy by this Premier.

But let's keep going in terms of what other folks think. Graham Thomson calls it dangerous. Ryan Jespersen calls it disgraceful. Rick Bell says that it stinks. Jason Markusoff asks, "How the (expletive) does he think he can get away with this?" And Charles Adler says, quote, we've just witnessed goons laying a beating on democracy and then denying they did. Premier, are all of these people wrong, too?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you what's wrong: the opposition leader violating our Constitution by seeking to have the representative of the Queen refuse to pass into law a law duly adopted by the elected representatives of the people of Alberta to strengthen the independence of the Election Commissioner so that he or she will in the future be accountable to the Chief Electoral Officer, an independent officer of this place, as opposed to directly to the government. This is common sense, what every other province in Canada does. It's what Alberta did for 114 years.

Ms Notley: No other government in Canada or anywhere in the Commonwealth has presumed to fire someone who's in the midst of investigating them, Mr. Speaker.

Now, more people. Mount Royal professor Duanne Bratt calls it, quote, a cover-up, plain and simple, and a travesty of democracy and justice. U of C political scientist Lisa Young says that the Premier is "trying to lay the groundwork for those who have [already] been fined for breaking election law to walk away." U of C political scientist Melanee Thomas says, quote, the Premier is using the power of the state to silence an independent body, and this is corrupt. Premier, a simple question: why do so many Albertans think you are corrupt?

Mr. Kenney: It's so sad over there that they're now resorting to quoting NDP candidates like Ms Thomas as objective sources.

Mr. Speaker, for 114 years this province had one bureaucracy administering the elections law until the NDP decided to create an entirely redundant office. We have restored the same independent implementation of election law that existed for the first 114 years of our history, the same model that exists in every other province and at the federal level. It's going to save taxpayers' money and will strengthen the independence of the office of the commissioner.

Bill 22 Votes

Ms Notley: Quote: I don't see a conflict of interest. End quote. That's the Premier telling the Ethics Commissioner that he, the one under investigation, is the best judge of whether or not he can fire his investigator. This Premier fled the province to avoid voting on this bill. He knows that he's in conflict. Clearly, this plan to abuse their power was cooked up behind closed doors within his cabinet. The question is: did the Premier recuse himself, did he hide from those discussions, or did he in fact orchestrate those discussions? We need an answer.

Mr. Kenney: Again, Mr. Speaker, Bill 22 was principally about the consolidation of agencies, boards, and commissions per our government's budgetary mandate to reduce unnecessary duplication. We did this with respect to dozens of agencies, boards, and commissions. I will remind the NDP leader that both of our legacy parties opposed the creation of the separate Election Commissioner's office because it was completely unnecessary and redundant bureaucracy, so we have followed through on the position that we took two years ago and during the last election. Now the Chief Electoral Officer says that "all investigations begun by the Office of the Election Commissioner will continue under . . ."

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, most people do not believe that their accountability to the law is redundant.

The Ethics Commissioner warned these folks that anyone under investigation and anyone with direct associates under investigation would likely be in breach of section 2 of the Conflicts of Interest Act had they voted. Since this Premier is under investigation, discussing this bill with his whole cabinet, who would consider this Premier their direct associate, not to mention the many other UCP operatives under investigation, will this Premier admit that this corrupt bill is an attempt to further his own political interests by making his cabinet break ethics laws?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the NDP leader is just reaching beyond the point of desperation now. The truth is that she was seeking to break the Constitution of Canada by encouraging the Lieutenant Governor to ignore the democratic will of the elected people of Alberta. [interjection] The NDP leader is heckling angrily. You know why? She's still upset that she was fired by Alberta voters a few months ago.

We are keeping our word to consolidate redundant agencies, boards, and commissions and the position we took, consistently opposed to two separate election bureaucracies. [interjection]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie will be cautious with what he chooses to heckle or not heckle.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our Constitution is founded on the rule of law, and the member opposite is now the absolute textbook case of what it looks like when you break the rule of law. Now, the Ethics Commissioner said that several members of the UCP either are or likely would be in breach of conflict of interest if they voted on Bill 22. Now she will have to investigate serious breaches of the law over there as a result of this rushed vote. To the Premier: with new investigations under way, how can we be sure that you're not going to be firing the Ethics Commissioner next?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, once again, the enforcement of the elections law now continues with the Election Commissioner consolidated within the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. That is effectively the system that Alberta had in place for 114 years, that exists in every other province. It's the position that the two legacy parties of this government took in opposition. It's consistent with the position we took with Albertans, and it's consistent with the continuation of any investigations with the office of the Chief Electoral Officer.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition for her fourth set of questions.

Bill 22 and Public Service Pension Changes

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, this Premier loves to brag about his mandate, but he does not have a mandate for corruption, and he also doesn't have a mandate for stealing control of people's pensions, two things in Bill 22 he never consulted on, never ran on, never told anyone he was planning to do. Unlike this Premier, these public servants weren't handed a golden pension from Ottawa. They earned it by paying into it their whole career. Why does this Premier think his opinion is more important than theirs when it comes to their retirement savings?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the leader of the NDP should know that all public-sector pension plans in Alberta have been managed, in terms of their assets, by the Alberta Investment Management Corporation. There was one outlier, which is costing taxpayers and teachers $42 million a year for redundant administration. Taxpayers contribute 50 per cent of the premiums to that plan. The ATRF board will continue to oversee its administration by AIMCo. The chair of that ATRF board will be an ATA representative. This is consistent with how all other public pensions are managed.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, historically AIMCo has been a reasonably safe bet because they're free from political interference, but as we see with this Premier, all he does is politically interfere. No laws apply to him. He'll fire his own investigator, and he'll start telling the experts at AIMCo how to invest Albertans' retirement savings, too. Bill 22 says that the government can dictate 10 per cent of AIMCo funds, billions of dollars. To the Premier: what gives you the right to make risky decisions with the retirement savings of regular Albertan families? Who do you think you are?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the entire preamble of the question was false. Secondly, who did she think she was when she had AIMCo investing all of the public-sector pensions in the province save one?

We are able now to take the $20 million of government savings by consolidating asset administration at AIMCo and put that to the front lines of the education system. The NDP would rather use that money to offer seven-figure salaries to investment managers for a redundant public-sector pension plan. It makes no sense.

Ms Notley: The Premier seems to be struggling. Let me help. The Premier gets a sweet six-figure pension from Ottawa when he turns 55. I'm sure he's looking forward to it. Let me help you understand what it is you're doing. Imagine Justin Trudeau took control of your pension without your permission and started investing it in SNC-Lavalin. I think you'd be a touch upset. You would want to defend your pension from greedy politicians, just like these workers do. Why won't you listen to these Albertans and leave their retirement savings alone?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it is becoming shameful to hear the leader of the NDP raise totally unfounded and irrational fears amongst people about their retirement savings. Let me remind her that as Premier she maintained a policy where AIMCo was managing the assets for every public-sector worker in the province, save one group, which is spending $42 million in redundant administrative costs, which can be saved to provide greater resources for front-line education and, in due course, to also reduce premiums for teachers.

Gender-based Violence Prevention

Ms Glasgo: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has the third-highest level of reported domestic and intimate partner violence. It is reported that a dozen Alberta women are killed every year in domestic disputes. We also know that coming forward can be frightening due to stigma. Can the Minister of Community and Social Services tell us what the government is doing to empower survivors of domestic violence and ensure that Alberta women can make informed decisions about their domestic partners?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the member for that question. Mr. Speaker, Alberta has one of the highest rates of domestic violence among Canadian provinces, and we're committed to protecting vulnerable Albertans who may be at risk or affected by this pervasive issue. In fact, Alberta had 10,000 victims of domestic violence in 2017 alone. In October we introduced Bill 17, disclosure to protect against domestic violence legislation, that will give people the ability to request information about an intimate partner's violent past. We believe this law could save lives and empower people at risk to make informed decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Minister of Community and Social Services for her advocacy. Given that today is recognized as the first day of the 16 days of activism against gender-based violence and given that this government has prioritized the prevention of intimate partner violence and given that there are community stakeholders doing significant work to prevent violence, what is this government doing to engage, inform, and educate Albertans about this important issue?

The Speaker: The minister of the status of women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been an absolute privilege, especially this past weekend, working with the CFL commissioner, Mr. Ambrosie, along with the work that we're doing to really shine a very, very bright light on domestic violence through their programming. I'm very proud to work with the Premier and the Minister of Community and Social Services, who are so completely dedicated to making sure that we attack this absolutely abhorrent act and that we shine bright lights on it as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are many types of gender-based violence that go widely underreported and given that there have been reports of Canadian women taken abroad for female genital mutilation and given that this barbaric practice permanently maims women and vulnerable girls and given that our government is taking action on gender-based violence, can the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women tell us how we can all get involved in raising awareness on this important issue.

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We begin this 16 days of activism against gender-based violence, and this is a vital tool that encourages people every single day to be able to go out into their communities and to stand beside each other, especially acknowledging bystanders and what the importance is of what people can do. We are going to be having a free screening of a very, very important documentary on Wednesday, and we would invite all members of the Legislature to join us to learn about female genital mutilation.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public- and Private-sector Layoffs

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans didn't vote for this corruption and abuse of power. They thought they were voting for job creation. Well, let's check in on that. On Wednesday 125 workers at Alberta Innovates got the news that this Premier had fired them. That's about 20 per cent of the workers at an agency that created 2,000 new private-sector jobs over the past year alone. Why is this Premier firing people from an agency that was creating private-sector jobs and diversifying our economy just to pay for this Premier's $4.7 billion corporate handout?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Layoffs are always challenging, especially for the families affected. The decision was made due to the fiscal situation the previous NDP government left us. Their reckless spending policies have required us to clean up their mess. Alberta Innovates, as all government departments, is in an effort of restructuring, finding efficiencies, and finding ways to deliver more effectively.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that on day 2 of the Premier's trip to Texas 300 teachers in Calgary found out that the Premier had fired them, too, and given that that's what happens when you cut more than $30 million from a district budget and given that the Education minister actually told this House that she doesn't understand what's going on, I'll ask the Premier: why are 300 classrooms full of children losing their teachers to pay for this Premier's $4.7 billion corporate handout, and does the Premier think that that's what Albertans voted for?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I'm surprised that a school board with a $1.2 billion operating budget wouldn't be able to find enough efficiencies and be able to optimize to ensure that layoffs didn't occur. The Education minister announced that she will be conducting a financial review and a governance review of the Calgary board of education, a school division that, quite frankly, in the past has been known to not make financially responsible decisions. We will get to the bottom of that.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that on Thursday, day 3 of the Premier's Texas trip, Calgarians rallied at the U of C to protest the Premier's firing of 250 workers there and given that that adds up to 675 public-sector jobs lost in three days to pay for the Premier's $4.7 billion corporate handout, what does the Premier have to say to those hundreds of Albertans who were working to make their communities stronger, and did he go to Texas just to avoid looking them in the eye?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the challenge when jobs are lost and the hardship experienced by families. We recognize that that is true, but in October there were over 20,000 private-sector jobs created, which we find encouraging. We're confident that the policies that we're implementing will attract investment and create good jobs for Albertans. This government was elected to bring financial responsibility back to the province, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since this government was elected, we've lost over 10,000 jobs. Now, clearly the Premier thinks his government gets a pass on corruption if his $4.7 billion corporate handout creates jobs, but while the Premier was in Texas, Lowe's Canada announced the closure of six stores across Alberta, more than 300 job layoffs, and this, of course, follows Husky and EnCana and others who took the Premier's handout and laid off hundreds of Albertans. How much evidence does this Premier need before he admits that his no-jobs corporate handout is a complete and utter failure?

Ms Fir: Mr. Speaker, it's strange to see that the member opposite, the Leader of the Opposition, suddenly cares about the economy after their government raised taxes on job creators by 20 per cent, took in less revenue from those taxes, and drove tens of billions of dollars in investment out of our province. We take no lessons from any of the members opposite on how to grow an economy after they spent four catastrophic years destroying it. If what they were doing was so right and they knew what they were doing, why did Albertans put them on that side of the bench?

Ms Notley: Well, given that the members opposite have broken pretty much every promise they made to Albertans since the election and given that also last week Federated Co-operatives announced the closure of its warehouse in northeast Calgary and the layoffs of more than 200 Calgary workers and given that Federated Co-ops is closing that warehouse because its main customer can get a better deal from a B.C.-based company, how does the Premier – the Premier – explain the failure of his $4.7 billion corporate handout to those 200 Calgary warehouse workers?

Ms Fir: Mr. Speaker, once again, we take no lessons on job creation from the NDP government, that oversaw the loss of 170,000 jobs and the loss of tens of billions of private-sector investment. As was mentioned, October job numbers show an increase of 20,000 private-sector jobs in Alberta. The members opposite didn't care about layoffs in Calgary when they brought in their job-killing carbon tax and raised taxes on job creators. Once again, if they knew what they were doing, and if what they were doing was in the best interests of Albertans, why did Albertans put them over there?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that “We won; they lost,” is not actually an economic plan and given that just last week, while the Premier was in Texas, we saw retail sales in Alberta fall significantly even as they rose everywhere else in the country and given that's hardly a surprise since this Premier is sacking thousands of Albertans, who have then less money to spend in their local stores, causing more private-sector job losses, why won't the Premier spend more time creating jobs, less time firing people, less time abusing his power, less time attacking democracy, and less time breaking the rule of law for the first time in history?

Ms Fir: Mr. Speaker, our government and our Premier and our entire team are working hard to bring jobs back to Alberta. Our Associate Minister of Natural Gas was in Japan and South Korea, the Premier was in Houston, and I was in Chicago and Minneapolis, taking a team approach to bringing investment back to Alberta, not spending four years sitting behind a desk, raising taxes, and driving investment out of this province. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. [interjections] Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland is the only one with the call.

Traffic Safety

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When travelling our roads and highways, we feel safe and with good reason: we have good infrastructure. When something happens to us motorists, we feel safe because only a cellphone call away there is a tow truck driver to help us when we need them the most. It has come to my attention, however, that we've recently lost another tow truck driver while performing his job. Such a loss cannot be acceptable, and the safety of these hard-working men and women must be ensured. I and many of my constituents want to ensure that such a tragedy is prevented in the future. To the Minister of Transportation: can you advise what is being done to assist our tow truck drivers so that they can be safe on the road while doing their jobs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. First of all, I'd like to express my concern and sympathy for the tow truck driver that lost his life, for his family, and loved ones. I want people to know that we take safety on Alberta highways very, very seriously. We are constantly looking for ways to improve safety on Alberta roads, and right now we're actually spending some time thinking about how we might make life more safe for tow truck drivers and other people working on Alberta's roads. When they're keeping the rest of us safe, we need to look after them, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that another vital part of our economic growth is transporting goods and services in a timely manner and given that the Acheson business park is a major economic hub for the capital region and given that the transportation of goods and investment in the area is stifled due to the movement of 50 trains a day crossing highway 60 and given that we are also concerned about safety, committed to job growth, and growing opportunities and investment for Albertans, can the minister please advise the Assembly on what we are looking to do for the solution in Acheson regarding the highway 60 overpass?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member. Safety on every road in Alberta is an issue that just doesn't sleep, and we need to be constantly vigilant. Budget 2019 commits $8 million to major improvements on highway 60, west of Edmonton. It will twin highway 60 between highway 16 and 16A and construct an overpass over the Canadian National Railway tracks, when they get back to work, and realign the interchange at highway 16A. This is a safety issue, as every construction project is, one of many that we are considering.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, I'm sure that there will be some connectivity here in the third supplemental.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll connect the dots quickly. On anything that has highway or train traffic, we're talking about safety here. In my constituency we have a bunch of them, sir.

The third question that I have here is given that rural communities are intersected by and often have major highways running through them and folks need more time to transition and slow down while they're going through these communities and that out in my area we have Gainford, where they're looking to have their speed limit sign moved to the east approximately 500 metres, which will give the traffic that's travelling through that area ample time to slow down, can you please advise, Minister, what can be done out in Gainford?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the third question on highway safety. I wanted to let the hon. member know that the speed limit review completed in October 2019 found that the existing 80-kilometre-per-hour zone through Gainford is appropriate. However, the review also recommended that the 80-kilometre zone be extended at both the east and west ends of Gainford in order to enhance safety. So I'm hoping that the hon. member's constituents will be pleased to know that we expect to have the extended 80-kilometre zone done by the end of this year.

2:20 Support for Youths Transitioning Out of Care

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, according to the Children's Services website at least two former foster children have died in the past 11 days. We have learned as well that there may actually be three deaths and that all came as a result of suicide. In light of these tragedies I rise in this House with the hope of convincing this Premier and the Children's Services minister to reverse their heartless cuts to the support and financial assistance agreements program that support these young people. To the Minister: what can you tell us about these tragic deaths, and will you now reconsider the cuts to these vital supports?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Any time a young person in our province dies, it is a tragedy, and my heart goes out to their families. We post all deaths publicly and are committed to being as transparent as we can, although the member opposite would know that I can't speak to specific cases. I rely on the great work being done by the office of the Child and Youth Advocate to point out where we can make continuous shifts in policy and practice to better support children and youth in care in our province, and a large part of that is working to identify ways we can work with the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions to better support young people who have gone through such trauma.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that long-time advocate and outreach worker Wallis Kendal said today that this government is playing Russian roulette with the lives of these former foster children by cutting their age of eligibility for supports from 24 to 22 and given that the Premier can somehow find $4.7 billion to hand over to big corporations but is turning his back on young adults attempting to get their lives on track, once again to the Premier or the minister: will you please reverse the cuts to supports for these young people?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Currently part of the work that our ministry is undertaking is reviewing all support and financial assistance agreements. Ultimately, a number of these young people past the age of 22 choose to end their connection with the Ministry of Children's Services. A number of these young people between the ages of 22 and 24 are making a transition into other lifelong adult supports through government. We are working as the Ministry of Children's Services along with the Ministry of Community and Social Services to ensure that at whatever age those young people transition, it is seamless.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a number of the young people who recently lost their lives were actually above the age of 22 and on the support and financial assistance agreements and given that the Child and Youth Advocate released a report today on six young people transitioning out of government care who died in 2018 and given that the advocate in response to these deaths made recommendations to strengthen supports such as safe housing and staff training and given that it's clear the advocate believes that the age of eligibility should remain at 24 and that these people need more supports, not less, to the Premier and the minister. The budget hasn't passed yet. I'm begging you. Will you reverse the cuts to supports for these young ...

The Speaker: The minister.

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing these programs and identifying where there are ways where policy and practice can shift to better support these transitions into adulthood. The reality is that oftentimes some of the most important supports are the social and emotional supports for these young adults as they transition into adulthood. We are going to continue to fund mentoring. We have increased the advancing futures program by a million dollars. This is a program that doesn't exist anywhere else in Canada. We are going to continue to support these young people as they transition out of the child intervention system.

Seniors Advocate Health Advocate Appointment

Ms Sigurdson: "What steps will this new government take to answer the Wildrose call to create an independent advocate for our seniors?" That was the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I did answer his call and appointed a dedicated advocate for seniors. That member must be crushed to learn that his own UCP government is undoing that and merging the job into the Health Advocate. Did the minister of seniors explain her decision to this member before she went back to the failed PC-era plan?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the current Seniors Advocate for her service to seniors and their families and wish her well as she returns to teaching, her academic career. The current office of the Seniors Advocate will continue to support Albertans until December 24. Health and Seniors and Housing staff will develop a transitional plan for continued service to Alberta's seniors, their families, and service providers who are asking for information and referrals on issues of concern.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that the Health Advocate is also taking on a third job, the Mental Health Patient Advocate, and given that seniors will now have at best a third of the advocacy that they got under our government, again to the minister: why do you have money for private planes, energy war rooms, and five-star London hotels but no money for seniors?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The service currently provided by the office of the Seniors Advocate will continue. Funding for the office of the Seniors Advocate staff will be transferred from Seniors and Housing to Health, and a combined office can address concerns more efficiently given that in 2018-19 almost one-third of inquiries were health related.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that this government is already deep into PC-style patronage appointments for their cronies, donors, and supporters and given that the appointment of former PC Party and United Conservative Party executive director Janice Harrington to be the advocate for health, mental health, and now seniors is perhaps the greasiest patronage appointment of them all, did the minister look for a qualified person at all, or is she content to reward her partisan friends at seniors' expense?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has risen.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We were pleased to appoint Janice Harrington as our new Health Advocate. She is highly qualified and will serve Albertans well. With an extensive background in leading organizations through rapid transformation and change, Janice is uniquely qualified to advocate on behalf of Albertans for positive health and mental health outcomes. [interjections] The incumbent Seniors Advocate as well will be returning to her job at the University of Alberta. A combined office will result in annualized savings of close to half a million dollars, and this matters at a time when we must be very mindful of the costs. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Camrose has a question.

Rural Crime, Biosecurity, and Property Rights

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Camrose recently hosted the Minister of Justice on his tour around the province to discuss rural crime. There was an outcry from the community about the heinous crimes that had been committed against them in rural Alberta. Recently, while at the RCMP Regimental Ball in Viking, members and constituents shared with me their frustration regarding dropped charges after an extensive effort to catch criminals. To the Minister of Justice: what proactive initiative is our government taking to correct this injustice?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Our prosecutors simply have too high of a caseload. That's why I'm proud that today we announced the fact that we're doubling our articling class of law students for the next year, 2020. We will be increasing it by 150 per cent in 2021. This will give us a pipeline of young students and Albertans to come and be part of Alberta Justice. We're also encouraging many of them to take up positions in rural Alberta. Once a lawyer sets up roots in a community, we will be making sure that those members also build relationships in the community, and then they will have a higher likelihood of staying.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for his answer. Given that protesters are causing cross-contamination by trespassing from regular farmland onto organic farmland, a massive issue in my constituency, and given our government's recent announcements about rural crime and given the difficulty in being recognized as an organic farm and given our government's commitment to protecting farmers and their property, to the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General: what is our government's plan to protect the biosecurity of Alberta's environment?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things we heard loud and clear from Albertans is that they want the strongest property rights possible. We've worked with the minister of agriculture to bring forward Bill 27, and that right there is going to provide Albertans with the security they need to know that they have the strongest property rights possible. We're going to make sure that we have fines for people that trespass: $10,000 for the first instance and up to $25,000 for a follow-up and also jail time if they repeat. Albertans deserve clarity that we stand with law-abiding Albertans. We stand with our farmers. They do amazing work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given the importance of maintaining accreditation to many of the local organic farmers in my constituency and given the risk that trespassers pose via the risk of cross-contamination and given there seems to be no ability for farmers to protect their property under current legislation and given our government's promise to take action in regard to the protection of rural property rights, can the minister please elaborate on what kinds of changes are being considered for the protection of my constituents and other law-abiding Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition to making sure we have the strongest property rights possible, we're also providing enhanced powers to our sheriffs, our fish and wildlife officers, and also our commercial vehicle officers. That's what we're calling our RAPID force, an additional 400 law enforcement boots, with enhanced powers, on the ground to help keep law-abiding Albertans safe. We heard this loud and clear. We consulted with Albertans, and we've taken action based on their recommendations. This isn't done. We're not spiking the football. These are concrete steps that we're taking. It's the beginning of helping to right the wrongs of rural Albertans. Many of these people have felt like they haven't had a voice for years. They have a voice now in this government.

Speaker's Ruling Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: I might just provide a cautionary note to private members who are asking questions. Traditionally the lead question and two supplementals all connect. I think I've provided significant latitude in the past. Perhaps today that latitude has been stretched beyond the point of what a supplementary question is. We can do better in the future.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Government Photography Contract

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, communications and public engagement is an agency within Treasury Board and Finance. It's supposed to be nonpartisan. It's supposed to follow government rules for competitive bids for contracts, but in July a small Calgary company called Vek Labs got a $73,000 sole-source contract for "photography and video services." Why did the Minister of Finance approve this lucrative sole-source contract for Vek Labs?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, our government was elected to bring fiscal responsibility to this province. We've delivered a budget that will do just that. We're confident that our four-year fiscal plan is the plan that Albertans elected us on. We will deliver on that plan. Careful procurement is very important to us and part of our plan going forward. We will look into the member's question.

Ms Phillips: Given that I might have a partial answer for the minister, Mr. Speaker, and given that the young man who owns Vek Labs is the son of a generous UCP donor, given that Vek Labs made several campaign videos for the UCP on the party side, including a short documentary film about the Premier visiting his hometown that was shown at the UCP convention in February, isn't it true that the Finance minister handed a $73,000 no-bid contract to this company because of its close partisan ties to the UCP and to the Premier himself?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, the hypocrisy of the other side needs to stop. Let's take a tour down NDP lane, this time in advanced education. Athabasca University: we have a donor here of $3,000 to the NDP, appointed to the board; $4,000 donation to the NDP, appointed to the board; $3,000 donor to the NDP, appointed to the board. Stop the hypocrisy.

Ms Phillips: Given that, Mr. Speaker, if the Justice minister wants to attack the judiciary, he should just come out and say so, but given that the film industry is reeling from this government cancelling their tax credits in order to pay for the Premier's $4.7 billion corporate handout, given that Alberta's hard-working and talented filmmakers and videographers should have been able to put in a competitive bid for that government contract, to the Minister of Finance: please explain to Albertans why this government has returned to Tory-land tactics and reserved fat, no-bid contracts for donors and friends.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this is just more fear and smear from the Official Opposition. You want to talk about appointments. That member was the environment minister for an NDP government who appointed Tzeporah Berman to an official panel associated with the oil sands, a person who is dedicated to stopping the entire energy industry. We will not be lectured by that side of the House when it comes to appointments. We will not tolerate the fear and smear over and over from the NDP. This is why Albertans fired them seven months ago.

Bill 207

Member Irwin: Mr. Speaker, a few days ago four UCP MLAs stood with our caucus to vote down the repugnant Bill 207 in committee. This bill posed a real threat to the health care of many Albertans, so I thank those UCP MLAs for standing up to protect Albertans' access to reproductive health services and medical assistance in dying. A few ministers also declared their opposition, including the minister responsible for status of women, but she did so without mentioning women's reproductive rights, abortion, or LGBTQ2S-plus rights. Will she now acknowledge that Bill 207 was an attack on those rights?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Bill 207 was redundant and unnecessary, and that is why I did not vote for it.

Member Irwin: Given, Mr. Speaker, that a majority of UCP MLAs on the committee voted to uphold the rights of Albertans to access abortion and other reproductive health services, but given that the MLA for Cardston-Siksika did vote in favour of this terrible bill and that during debate he even tried to compare reproductive health to eugenics – shameful – will the Minister of Health reject the shocking and hurtful statement from the MLA and call for him to publicly apologize?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons why I'm so proud to be part of this government is that we committed to being able to respect the private members' process of this place and respect free votes. Albertans were clear to us that they wanted their MLAs to be able to have free votes when it comes to private members' business before this House. I'm proud of this government for enshrining that within the standing orders of this Legislature. We will continue to stand up for the right of each individual member of this place to be able to exercise their conscience when it comes to private members' business because that's what we promised Albertans. Promise made, promise kept.

Member Irwin: Given, Mr. Speaker, that many members of the UCP caucus relied on support from antichoice groups like RightNow and The Wilberforce Project and given the Premier's long-standing opposition to abortion, including statements in the past comparing it to slavery, and given that voting against Bill 207 could maybe indicate a potential fresh start for this government on women's rights, will the Premier confirm that he himself will vote against any further attempts from his colleagues to limit reproductive rights?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I'm very honoured to be part of a very diverse caucus. It's a huge privilege to be able to debate in this House, but I will not, nor will anybody else on this front bench, be commenting on potential legislation that has not crossed our desks yet.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Postsecondary Education System

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's postsecondary system is broken. Costs are through the roof on spending per student. Alberta spends nearly double on administration than Ontario and B.C., and despite all this spending, our province underperforms in participation and completion. Albertans are not graduating and not getting jobs. To the Minister of Advanced Education: just how serious is this situation, and how does this spending impact services to students such as those at Lethbridge College and the University of Lethbridge?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaidis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is absolutely correct. The situation that we've inherited is quite problematic and quite dire, and we are absolutely intent on addressing the real systemic problems with the system. To give you some perspective, over the last 15 years enrolment in our postsecondary system has increased by 21 per cent. However, funding to our postsecondary institutions has increased by 106 per cent. What's more troubling is the amount that we spend on administration. We spend $8,000 per student on administration here in the province of Alberta. B.C. does it for $4,000 and Ontario for $5,000. We believe we can do better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given the commitment for a funding model change and given the necessity of finding a solution for tuition that makes sense for students and for the public purse, can the minister elaborate on how the current funding method contributed to this fiscal situation and how a new funding model will correct it while ensuring access to services is not inhibited for students like the ones who choose to study in Lethbridge?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaidis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the member is correct. The current funding mechanism that we have for our postsecondary education system is not working. There's a wide discrepancy between the amount that's distributed per student – for example, there are some institutions where the amount of funding is upwards of $30,000 per student, and in other places much less – so we are really looking at addressing this situation. We'll be moving forward, implementing a new funding model that will help us be more diligent with our tax dollars.

Mr. Neudorf: Given that Alberta has a long-standing spending problem that spans multiple governments and given our government's commitment to sort our fiscal situation out, to the same minister: will reform in our postsecondary system give institutions more flexibility to generate their own revenue, while maintaining consumer protection for students, in order to create a system that is more innovative in its delivery of postsecondary education and more independent from relying on taxpayers?

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction will be quite happy. We're looking at taking a series of different approaches to reduce red tape in our postsecondary institutions so that they can be free to innovate and compete and continue to generate high-quality research and, by the same token, be innovative in their revenue generation, engage in commercial activities without having to get drawn down in red tape.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will proceed to Members' Statements.

Bangladesh

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, on October 7, 2019, Abrar Fahad, a 21-year-old student at the Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology, was brutally murdered for taking a stand on Bangladesh's interests through a social media post. His attackers were members of the student wing of the ruling party. Before perishing, he was tortured for seven hours. Abrar's right to free speech was upheld by the Bangladeshi Constitution and the universal declaration of human rights, but this right and Abrar's life were still undermined and coldly discarded by his assassins.

That anyone should fall victim to crime or fear for their safety for exercising their fundamental human rights is absolutely unacceptable. In solidarity with the Justice for Abrar movement, Bangladeshi community members gathered on the steps of this very Legislature yesterday to form a human chain and demand that justice be served, and I was proud to stand with them. At their event they stated that the systemic use of violence to suppress free speech is unfortunately commonplace in Bangladesh and is often sanctioned by political doctrine. The tragedy that befell Abrar Fahad is not an isolated incident.

In solidarity with them I bring this injustice to the attention of the Alberta Legislature to heighten public awareness of human rights violations in Bangladesh and to urge not only us but the Canadian government as well to take action in addressing this internationally. Abrar Fahad was a young student with a promising future who meant only to think critically and to express his opinion. For this, he lost his life. By raising our voices against this oppression and encouraging others to do the same, we aim to inspire and lay the foundation for a brighter future in which civil discourse and exchange replace senseless violence and conflict.

Free speech is likewise protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and to have this value violated in one country is to have it violated in all. The Bangladeshi community believes that it is imperative that we all stand united in calling for accountability and prompt action, united in calling for principles for which we stand, and that the perpetrators of this heinous crime be brought to justice.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Scleroderma

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Scleroderma: hard word, harder disease. Affecting approximately 1,700 Albertans, scleroderma is a rare, chronic, multisymptom autoimmune disease that affects the body's connective tissue. In scleroderma, cells start making collagen as if there was an injury that needs repair. The cells do not turn off as they should and end up making too much. The extra collagen in the tissues can prevent the body's organs from functioning normally. In simple terms, the disease creates a thickening and hardening both internally and externally. It's like your organs are slowly turning to stone. The cause of scleroderma is unknown, and currently there is no cure.

Mr. Speaker, there are treatments that can help slow the process down and improve the quality and quantity of life for persons affected by the disease, but these can be costly or difficult to access. Albertans living with this rare and debilitating condition face significant physical and emotional challenges, often resulting in feelings of helplessness, hopelessness, and being a burden to others. At first glance those living with scleroderma can seem perfectly healthy, which makes the disabling condition even more challenging. The fatigue alone can be debilitating and misunderstood. Those suffering will face unwitting comments like: yeah, I had a bad sleep last night, too.

But with despair, there is still hope. The scleroderma society of Canada is an organization focused on raising awareness, funds, and support for those with this disease in an effort to find a cure. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the entire team at the scleroderma society of Canada, who joined us last week here at the Legislature. They are terrific leaders in the fight to find a cure for this little-known but disabling disease. In particular, I'd like to thank Maureen Sauvé for sharing so openly her personal and painful journey of living these past 18 years with scleroderma. Currently there is no co-ordination of support groups in Alberta, and the society is working to change that. To those in Alberta living with this debilitating condition: they want you to know that you are not alone.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I, too, would like to thank the team for scleroderma. I've been practising the word all weekend.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to provide oral notice of Government Motion 38. Shall I read it into the record?

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to take all steps necessary to immediately introduce emergency legislation to compel Canadian National Railway employees to return to work in order to prevent the potentially devastating impact of a strike on not just Alberta's economy but Canada's economy as a whole.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Are there tablings? I see the hon. Member for St. Albert is rising.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have copies of some of the correspondence that I've received at our constituency office from teachers in St. Albert talking about the pressures of classroom sizes. I'd like to table those as well as an article from Stanford University entitled Climate Change on Pace to Occur 10 Times Faster than Any Change Recorded in Past 65 Million Years, Stanford Scientists Say. I referred to it in my member's statement today.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? Someone circle the calendar.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Dreeshen, Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, pursuant to the Farm Implement Act the Farmers' Advocate Office annual report 2018-19.

On behalf of the hon. Mrs. Sawhney, Minister of Community and Social Services, pursuant to the Protection Against Family Violence Act the Family Violence Death Review Committee 2018-2019 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at Ordres du jour.

Bill 204 Election Recall Act

[Debate adjourned November 18: Mr. Bilous speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone wishing to join in the debate this afternoon? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has risen.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate you recognizing me this afternoon to be able to speak to Bill 204, the Election Recall Act. As you're probably aware, I was a part of the committee that initially reviewed this bill. We, of course, decided to send this back to the House so that we get a chance to talk about this bill today. At this moment I'm not in a position that I would be able to support the bill. However, if there were some changes that were made around this bill, I might have the opportunity to take a second look and possibly put my support behind it.

Of the concerns I have, one of the biggest ones, of course, is language. We see some language in here, and just based on some of the debates that we've had in this House and the bills that we've seen passed, including such things as Bill 22, where we seem to have had a bit of a discussion around what the word "may" entails and how, apparently, according to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, that's interchangeable with the words "will" and "shall" – keeping that kind of thing in mind, I have some concerns around Bill 204 and around how some of the wording may play out.

Some questions that I think I might have, moving forward, would be around corporate and union donations. Certainly, when we look at the recall act, it excludes those within it, but should the government of the day decide to repeal those kinds of things, how would that, then, affect this recall act?

I think that when you're looking at the topic of recalling an MLA, certainly I think that is a situation that exists solely between the constituents of that MLA and, of course, themselves. When I start seeing, potentially, some loopholes here around third-party advertisers getting involved, I get a little bit concerned around that, Mr. Speaker. So I would like to see some language that maybe inhibits third-party advertisers to participate. Again, this should be between the constituents and the MLA. I mean, if they're that angry as to recall the MLA for whatever their actions may or even may not be, then certainly I don't think third-party advertisers need to be involved in that sort of thing.

We've seen some things around some of the timelines, things like that, and some of the discussion that ensued around maybe some of the fees. Obviously, we're going to have to have a bit of a deeper debate, going forward, on that.

I didn't want my comments to go too long here. I just wanted the opportunity to get up and point out some things that I would like to see potentially adjusted and some further debates around some of the other language. Like I said, when I'm seeing things like the Election Commissioner being terminated, around that language, and then not being rehired immediately – you know, the word "may" is supposed to now mean the same as "will" and "shall," and that certainly doesn't seem to be the case – then I would be very, very concerned, potentially, around some of the language that's contained in 204.

So at the moment I'm not prepared to support this moving forward, but I do look forward to maybe more debate further on, including in Committee of the Whole, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other hon. members looking to join debate?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon to close debate.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and speak to Bill 204, the Election Recall Act. It's my belief that this bill will strengthen Alberta's democracy by enabling Albertans to recall an elected official should the need arise. The right of recall, I believe, helps to ensure that a member of the Legislature stays truly accountable to their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, this important piece of legislation is crucial for keeping our democracy thriving and our members truly serving the needs of Albertans. By definition we are a representative democracy, and that's the very core of what we are called to do, to represent. That means that we must embody the needs of our constituents.

Trying to ensure that representatives actually represent their constituents has a long history in Alberta. Sir Frederick Haultain, Premier of the North-West Territories, successfully lobbied for provincial status but was not successful in creating a Legislature where party politics and party solidarity would not dominate the Legislature.

Recall was introduced to me when I became a member of the Reform Party. This party espoused a grassroots vision of democracy that spoke to myself and to thousands of Albertans and Canadians.

Recall should not be easy, but allowing for recall brings the benefits of accountability to the electorate and provides a positive way forward for the electorate when it realizes that their representative must be replaced. This Election Recall Act is an attempt to rebalance our representative system of democracy so that the people of Alberta will be able to hold the MLA accountable when they stray too far from their primary responsibility of representing their constituents.

The use of recall legislation is a just and proper tool to hold those elected officials accountable for their actions, and it reminds everyone in their party that individual MLAs are ultimately accountable to their electorate. Recall legislation exists in over a dozen countries, including the United Kingdom, and most states in the United States have recall legislation, but B.C. is the only other Canadian jurisdiction to have recall legislation in place. B.C. adopted the Recall Initiative Act in 1995. Mr. Speaker, recall should not be easy, and it does need to be crafted in such a way as to reduce the likelihood of recall for partisan reasons.

In B.C. 26 recall petitions have been requested, with only six petitions returning to the Chief Electoral Officer within the 60 days and only one petition having achieved the threshold for recall. However, the MLA in question resigned office before the recall petition came into effect. We can conclude from the example of B.C. that recalling an elected member has not been easy to achieve, and therefore it has not resulted in partisan politics disrupting an MLA's four-year term.

Secondly, B.C.'s recall history demonstrates that the recall legislation, in one sense, is a last resort to be used when an elected representative has lost their way and is no longer representing the high standards of elected office.

Private member's Bill 204, the Election Recall Act, is based on the thresholds of the B.C. legislation. It will require a petition numbering more than 40 per cent of the total number of electors that appeared on the post polling day list of electors from the last general election, and it has to be gathered within 60 days. Only those currently eligible to vote within the riding can sign the petition, and as done in B.C., there will also be a buffer before a recall petition can be started. Constituents will have to allow their elected MLA the chance to perform their duties; therefore, no petition can be started until 18 months following the election. In addition, no petition can be started within six months of the beginning of an election window, and only one petition can happen at a time.

Five hundred dollars will be required as a fee to initiate a recall, which will be refundable upon filing the financial statements, and donation limits are set to $4,000 a person. Lastly, unexpended funds must be given to a charity to prevent political parties from using recall to pad their bank accounts.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204, the Election Recall Act, will add one more needed piece of accountability into our system of democracy.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a second time]

Workers' Compensation (Enforcement of Decisions) Amendment Act, 2019

The Acting Speaker: I believe that the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod has the call. Should the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod wish to move second reading on Bill 206, he has the call.

Mr. Reid: Absolutely. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today on my private member's bill, Bill 206, the Workers' Compensation (Enforcement of Decisions) Amendment Act, 2019.

Over the years I have worked through various professions and for various companies, and I understand the reality of what happens in the workplace. One of my favourite places that I've worked and one of my favourite jobs was with a great Alberta company, WestJet.

WestJet prides itself on being a company that embraces and works hard on what we called our culture of safety. There are inherent risks in working in the airline industry, and the company worked very hard, right from the CEO all the way down, to ensure that a culture of safety was not only maintained but continued to be developed day after day.

However, even in the midst of those cases, I met many colleagues who had been injured in the line of work. Having the right mindset, having the right procedures, and having the right type of equipment all worked to reduce workplace accidents, but we also realized that sometimes they just are inevitable, and it happens. I've heard the tragedy of lives that were tragically changed by a simple overlooking of safety issues or just the fact that there are hazards that are present in almost every job in our society.

My understanding of workplace accidents grew more after I became a small-business owner and was responsible myself for developing that very same type of culture of safety in our workplace. We worked with hot ovens, sharp knives, hot beverages. We worked with a mix of young and old in a very fast-paced environment. Again, as much as we worked hard to make sure that accidents did not occur, sometimes they were unavoidable. Fortunately, they often tended to be minor burns, minor cuts, but sometimes slips and falls also happened as well.

As a small-business owner I had a great interest in making sure that my staff were well looked after. As a small-business man in Alberta we work very hard alongside those that are employees of our companies, and they become like family. I know we often had conversations with folks in the workplace when something would happen. We'd say: we need to make sure we do an incident report; we want to have the paperwork in place just in case this isn't as simple as we think. I wanted them to be able to make sure that they were compensated should the injury take them out of the workplace for a while.

As a business owner we pay our dues to WCB, and our expectation was that when our employees needed those benefits, those would be paid out to them in a timely manner. As I came into this role, I learned that that's not always the case for all workers in Alberta, and I think that's a tragedy. I was really excited to be able to bring forward this piece of legislation, which was actually started by a predecessor in the previous session, to really ensure that workers in Alberta that are injured in the workplace are properly taken care of. Those of us that run and own small businesses know that workers are our greatest asset, and to make sure that they and their families are taken care of well should be important to all of us.

The goal of my legislation is simple. It's to ensure that those who are forced to take a leave of absence because of a workplace injury can continue to put food on the table for them and their families. Difficulty in receiving money duly owed by a public agency should not mean a missed mortgage or credit card payment. Again, as a business owner I saw this all too often, employees who had missed time and were left abandoned by a system that we as business owners pay into for their protection. As a result, employees can feel pressured to return to work before they are really healthy enough to do so or will take out loans or put on extra credit card debt just to keep their heads above water.

There is an emotional toll on families who don't know where their next paycheque is coming from. We have seen that far too clearly over the last number of years as families struggle to make ends meet. Whether through the rapidly expanding opioid crisis in Alberta or increasing rates of suicide and depression, the last couple of years have demonstrated the large effect that economic issues can have on social issues. This bill does not claim that it will reverse these issues en masse in any way, but if we can prevent even one family from facing that kind of economic uncertainty, the kind of uncertainty that breeds these issues, then it's worth it.

You may or may not be aware that there are five steps to any WCB claim. Hopefully, no one in this House has had to go through those procedures, but if you have, let me just bring you up to date. First, you need to report your injury. Next, your claim is classified as either a lost-time or no-time-lost claim. The third step is where my bill starts to have some effect. At the third stage a decision is made on whether a claim will be accepted, denied, or needs further medical investigation. If a claim is denied, an appeal can be made through the Appeals Commission. The Appeals Commission, should they reverse the decision of the WCB, then hands the decision back down to WCB, who is forced to comply. The Alberta Workers' Compensation Act, the legislation which oversees the Workers' Compensation Board, already puts a 30-day deadline on WCB to implement a decision of the Appeals Commission.

While a claimant could go to the courts already, Bill 206 reaffirms the rights of the claimant to go to the Court of Queen's Bench and ask for a court order directing the WCB to pay the due compensation immediately. This common-sense solution that prevents greater losses for families is a small change that I believe can have a large positive impact. The bill also grants claimants the ability to seek remuneration for legal costs related to any appeal made under section 13.3(2). This allows workers to proceed with a greater level of certainty. Again, Mr. Speaker, this is a very small change.

Bill 206 simply addresses a gap in the legislation that can and should be addressed. Chances are it will only affect a handful of decisions each year, but the scale of the change doesn't determine the importance of this legislation. Bill 206, should it pass, ensures that a family going through what is already a tough stretch of time has a little bit more stability.

Mr. Speaker, my final point is about accountability. I, like many on this side of the Assembly, ran on bringing accountability back to government, and this is one way we can do that. I believe that both of these changes can do much good for families going through trying times. Albertans who have been injured at work deserve to have peace of mind and know that they will be compensated on time. While small, I believe this change has potential to have wide-ranging positive impacts around the province.

I'd like to thank you all for your debate, and I'd like to thank all members for the support that they've expressed for this bill. I hope that we will see support from both sides of this House when we go to vote today.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Sorry. To the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod: I just want it to be clear for Hansard because I'm not sure that I heard it. Just to be clear, you are moving second reading of Bill 206. If you could just say yes.

Mr. Reid: I am moving second reading of Bill 206.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Are there any hon. members looking to join in this debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has a thought.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a pleasure to be able to rise in support of Bill 206. Of course, I would highly encourage all members of this House to support this as well, but I think we should talk a little bit about what we're seeing here with this. With the Member for Livingstone-Macleod bringing this forward on behalf of some constituents that, unfortunately, had a problem with WCB – my background being in labour, I'm always about the front-line worker. It's very, very, I guess, disappointing when I hear cases like this happen and constituents are not actually able to get a judgment that was due to them. I mean, when WCB was originally created, it was meant as a safety net for workers and, to some degree, as a safety net for businesses as well when workers get injured. We've heard that sometimes no matter what you do, the odd accident occurs. Thankfully, most of the time, hopefully, it's a cut finger, maybe a small sprain, something, you know, not too serious. But when there are serious injuries, that needs to be there to take the burden off workers while they're away from work and, of course, to be able to take the burden off employers as well. I mean, that's what they pay their premiums for.

I guess when I'm looking at this bill, as somebody who sat on not only my workplace health and safety committee – I sat on my union's provincial health and safety committee – I see a very genuine commitment from the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. You had talked about your time at WestJet. I do, of course, know that they place very high standards on their safety, trying to reduce the risk at the work site. I don't know if you remember, Mr. Speaker, on some other pieces of legislation where I'd be talking about how we're doing one thing over here, yet we're making decisions over here which may be a little bit counterproductive to that. So when I do see the government benches bringing in a government motion around legislating back to work for CN workers, promoting that, who are currently out on strike because of safety concerns, just like the folks from WestJet that work in a very, very dangerous situation – I mean, I don't know if I'd be willing to walk around on a tarmac with active aircraft driving around on it, but, you know, our CN workers are actively walking around with trains moving around that, quite honestly, just like a jet engine on a plane, could kill them, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate: such a great piece of legislation coming forward to help workers, yet some decisions by the government are being counterproductive to that.

I also noticed the one comment you made around how workers are our greatest asset, and I couldn't agree more with that statement. But then I see, unfortunately, again, decisions. You know, we're taking away overtime pay potentially to workers who earned it deservedly. We're potentially pulling back on holiday pay, which is counterproductive to our greatest assets to businesses. Again, in my time back in labour, your business probably would have been one of the ones that I would have promoted as the way to do it. You were the example of how well you looked after your employees.

You'd also mentioned around accountability. Again, a great piece of legislation, you know, talking about how we need to be accountable to our workers. Decisions around, you know, firing the Election Commissioner potentially removes that kind of accountability. So in a way I really feel for the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, who has these types of legislation pieces coming forward, which is counterproductive to the spirit in which he is bringing this legislation forward.

You know, when we talk about standing up for ordinary working Albertans, making sure they're protected, we see $4.7 billion corporate handouts for companies like Walmart. Again, a little bit counterproductive. Of course, we heard a little bit earlier, you know, around that figure. I guess I'll just remind everybody that it's on page 144 of the budget.

I think that when we're crafting legislation, Mr. Speaker, we always have to look at how workers fit into that because Alberta workers build this province – they're currently building it – and I think government needs to do more to respect that. Bill 206 certainly, absolutely does that. It's unfortunate that we actually have to enshrine in legislation that they even have to go to court at all. It should just absolutely happen, especially when they get a judgment in their favour. But to just simply delay it because that just seems to be the easiest thing to do – again, WCB was never meant as an adversarial system. It was supposed to be there as a safety net for workers that get injured.

I just struggle, Mr. Speaker. Seeing such a great piece of legislation brought forward like this to close an unfortunate loophole, again, sometimes it takes something to happen before we realize that there might be a little bit of a hole that needs to be plugged up. But I'm seeing pieces of legislation that are just completely counterproductive to this: a youth minimum wage for people just because they're not 18 years old. That's very counterproductive to workers. You know, we see other things like maybe potentially studying the minimum wage as a whole and considering bringing back a liquor server wage, which is, again, counterproductive to the well-being of workers here in the province of Alberta, which, of course, primarily will affect women in that industry. Again, I can't commend, you know, this legislation enough around standing up for workers, but I see legislation that's counterproductive to that, which is trying to actually drag them down and bring them backwards.

I know there'll be others that want to get up and share their support for this legislation, Mr. Speaker, and I do look forward to getting the chance to talk about this more later on. I will support this legislation wholeheartedly, and I would certainly encourage all members of this Assembly to support this legislation as well.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members looking to join debate? I see the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright has risen to speak.

Mr. Rowsell: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to rise to discuss Bill 206, presented by my friend and colleague from Livingstone-Macleod. This legislation will ensure that Albertans who have been through the rigorous process of appealing a wrongfully refused Workers' Compensation Board claim are not put under further stress by being subject to additional costs when asking the Court of Queen's Bench for assistance in receiving the compensation. In these cases the individuals undergoing the stressful process have already been subject to workplace injury, undergone the disappointment of their claim being refused prior to undergoing the process of appealing that claim. At the very least I think it's only proper for WCB to provide them with the compensation they are owed within 30 days of being advised to do so.

Mr. Speaker, the injured person is not alone in being penalized in this situation. Clearly, this process is unfair and discouraging to the injured worker, but the process can also put strain on the employers. This lengthy appeal process and the uncertainty, whether the WCB will provide compensation within the 30-day time frame granted, can also leave employers unsure about the future of their employees, and in the cases involving small businesses with a few employees, they may be left unsure about the future viability of their business. While the legislation, Bill 206, would help to provide the certainty that business owners and employers need, the real purpose of the legislation is to protect the injured individuals, individuals whose families are relying on them. These people have been working hard for their families, and in some cases the appeal process has left them without resources to support their families.

At this point their next course of action is to appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench for a court order. The proposed legislation would ensure that workers who follow through with this process would be remunerated for their legal costs following obtaining an order. If this legislation is passed, my hope would be that the WCB would manage to implement more if not all of the advised compensations within a 30-day time frame. Their incentive will be to avoid being held accountable for additional court costs.

This is a modest proposal. The cost impact of this isn't large as, in truth, there are not many cases brought to the Court of Queen's Bench. But, Mr. Speaker, for the families who do have to take this step, the costs associated are significant. In some cases workers have had to wait for 90 days after the Appeals Commission rendered their decision advising that the claim should be compensated. That's 90 days of potential financial hardship, 90 days of not knowing how and if they're going to pay their bills or perhaps put food on the table. To add insult to injury, literally, they will likely incur additional fees if they choose to pursue a court order. This is unacceptable.

Although this bill is unlikely to affect many of the people here in this Assembly today, we need to stand up for the individuals who at a low ebb find it difficult to stand up for themselves. Accidental injury in the workplace could happen to anyone. No family is prepared for this to occur. The WCB is an important service legislated to protect Albertans sustaining an injury in the course of working to earn a living.

The value of this program must not be taken for granted. The WCB fulfills a valuable social function. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it's disappointing that the WCB on occasion appears to not meet fully the expectations we place upon them. These people deserve to be dealt with in a timely and fair manner. They do not need financial or bureaucratic issues adding to the physical problems that they're already dealing with.

When I first heard about this situation, I found it hard to comprehend. How is it that a public body like the Workers' Compensation Board, when advised by another public body such as the Appeals Commission that they owe money and should within 30 days pay, is unable to comply? This is a flaw in our bureaucracy which can have a deleterious impact on families.

If we look to our colleagues in Ottawa, the federal government has a similar issue in their Department of Public Services and Procurement. This issue can be summed up in one word, Phoenix. Many have heard about the Phoenix pay system, which has created a poor reputation for itself by persistently paying federal government employees incorrectly, neglecting to distribute pension and vacation pay, and failing on a number of other administrative fronts, impacting negatively on people. Like Phoenix, the current system of appeals deemed successful by the Appeals Commission has failed Albertans. These government agencies are withholding money from hard-working Canadians, releasing it to them at a leisurely pace of their choosing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that neither the employees at the WCB nor those at Phoenix are doing this maliciously. We all experience problems created by system errors, as in the case of Phoenix. However, in this case we're not dealing with a system error. This is something our government can regulate, and I believe we owe it to Albertans to do so.

So, Mr. Speaker, I stand today to invite all colleagues in the House to support my colleague's bill. I invite you to support both the workers and the employers who face difficulty in these rare but nonetheless disappointing circumstances. If this legislation moves forward, my hope is that all deserving workers will be compensated fairly and in a timely manner with the compensation they truly deserve and are entitled to.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any others? I believe I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has risen to speak.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to Bill 206, Workers' Compensation (Enforcement of Decisions) Amendment Act, 2019. Over the last several years the operation of the workers' compensation system and ensuring that there is fair and adequate compensation for injured workers as well as support for an overall sustainable system has been very, very important to me and to the work that was done under the previous government in completing the first comprehensive review of the workers' compensation system in 15 years.

Through that work, the review that was undertaken, to my knowledge there was a very in-depth consultation process where workers were able to come to in-person sessions. As well, we received over 1,700 online submissions. The issue with workers not receiving payments that had been ordered by the Appeals Commission did not make it into the report and into the work that we did. Bill 206 is a bill that I will give my support to. As the member who has moved second reading spoke to, it reaffirms the rights of the claimant, potentially closing a gap here, and adds something that I agree with, which is simply that if an applicant is incurring costs to get the compensation that was ordered for them, there should be a clear opportunity for the courts to award those costs, because the family that is fighting for adequate compensation should not be the ones paying for that fight that they are having.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I think Bill 206 really reinforces, to me, something that I know. Our workers' compensation system is incredibly important. Albertans, both workers and employers, place a very high value on this system, and we've heard that from the speakers who've spoken already today. We know that the WCB covers, when I last looked at the numbers, nearly 2 million workers here in the province and over 160,000 employers. Both workers and employers rely on this system, that was based on a historic compromise to make sure that there's fair and adequate compensation, that should be delivered in a timely way. The timely compensation when there is an appeals award is what Bill 206 ties into.

Now, I do want to emphasize that through the very large consultation that we undertook, we heard many, many times about the vast majority of claims being handled well by the system and usually being resolved within a couple of weeks. But we also know that when claims start to get complicated, when there is something that isn't straightforward, because worker injuries can have multiple factors playing into them, that's when we start to see parts of the system break down. The consequences for workers not getting fair compensation and the consequences for employers who have workers out on injury who are not able to get the rehabilitation they need to get back to work can be quite devastating. It can be very, very life impacting if the WCB system is not assisting people as best as it possibly can. That was one of the reasons why we revised the workers' compensation legislation, the system.

More importantly, Mr. Speaker, I was very proud of some of the changes, things like establishing the Fair Practices office to help Albertans navigate, to provide resources and support to workers and employers using the system, addressing part of the concern around how complex WCB can be. Some of those changes were great. I think we were able to identify and resolve some major issues with the system, but the thing that I think is even more important is that we actually put into the Workers' Compensation Act a review of the act, where we will not let 15 years elapse without a thorough review of something that is so critical to both workers and employers in the system.

Right now in the WCB act it says that on or before February 1, 2021 – so, likely, our minister of labour is already starting to hear about this from the department as they put together timelines and plans for what the next review might look like – the WCB act needs to be reviewed by a panel of experts representative of worker interests and employer interests and then every five years thereafter. This first review, mandated by the legislation, is happening at a little bit of a faster pace because, of course, we want to check in on the system and all of the systems that have been touched by the work that our government did to do things like implement the Fair Practices office; establish the code of rights and conduct; change supports and improve supports for young workers, who can often have very, very negative, life-changing impacts when they incur an injury when they're just starting out in their career; and improve the benefits for surviving spouses and children.

All that said, Mr. Speaker, I think the workers' compensation system is incredibly important to workers and employers. I think that it can and often works very well. When it doesn't, we need to address that because of the huge negative impacts that that has on both workers and their families as well as the employers, who genuinely want to see their workers rehabilitated, supported, and returned to the workplace whenever possible. In Bill 206 the reaffirmation of rights of the claimant – I will be supporting Bill 206, and I hope that through the work mandated by the legislation, this government will undertake to continue to review and improve the workers' compensation system and that this important system will be there to support all of Alberta's workers.

In my opinion, I will just mention, that should include workers who work in farming and agricultural industries. I think that will be something we debate under other pieces of legislation, but in this case I will support Bill 206, this clarification and this amendment act, and will thank the MLA for bringing it forward to make sure that workers are getting the compensation that has been deemed appropriate and ordered for them in a timely way.

Thank you for this opportunity to respond to Bill 206.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members looking to join the debate? I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has risen to speak.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to stand in this House today and voice my support for Bill 206, brought forward by the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. Workplace accidents are stressful and difficult to manage regardless of the type of injury or incident. The pain and stress of these incidents often extend far beyond the initial occurrence and can have a lifetime of consequences for those that are injured. The last thing that someone working their way through the workers' compensation process needs to be dealing with is an unnecessarily long and tedious route to receiving the compensation they have proven to need from the WCB. Those that follow the due process, ensure the accuracy and thorough completion of their claim, do not deserve to be additionally hindered by arduous disbursement processing times.

There are several examples we can point to throughout our country of how negatively long disbursement processing times impact individuals and their families. One stands out to me in particular. Not too long ago we witnessed the hardships that the federal government's Phoenix pay system caused for employees paid through that process. Under the Phoenix pay system federal public employees were experiencing delays in pay, overpayment and underpayment, and this wasn't just a select few. It impacted many federal public service workers and negatively impacted their families in a demonstrable way. Families couldn't put food on the table or keep the power on without a consistent paycheck. In some cases questions of foreclosure and eviction were raised.

We cannot allow space for similar occurrences to happen in our province. Granted, I consider this example to be a worst-case scenario, but the undue stresses of having questions and vague areas when it comes to receiving remuneration are visible here. More than that, it seems fairly obvious to me that an increasing waiting period for compensation would be detrimental to anyone or their family. Getting behind on bills often leaves families in a hole that can take months or even years to climb out of. It is simply not enough to tell those who are waiting for compensation to just keep waiting.

The rest of the world keeps going if you're not ready for it, Mr. Speaker. It's not like any of us can politely ask the bank to please wait a few more weeks until we get our mortgage payment to them. Albertans who are hurt shouldn't be left in the dark or left hoping for disbursement. This is a process that should be clear and without any guesswork or hope involved. When it comes to remuneration, a few days late is often too late for many, let alone weeks beyond that. The data speaks for itself here. The change proposed in this bill will only affect a handful of individuals as 97 per cent of WCB claims are not appealed and are paid out on time according to what's set out. But those that are not living in this 97 per cent need to be noticed and addressed as well. Of those that appealed their WCB ruling, 67 per cent of decisions made by the Appeals Commission were implemented on time, with those individuals seeing disbursement on schedule.

There is, then, still a relevant proportion of individuals who are not seeing disbursement in the time that they need. We have an opportunity through this bill to become the first jurisdiction to legislate a time limit on when these decisions must be implemented by. This bill is not creating red tape or providing the opportunity for future burdening through the introduction of such a change; instead, it is providing a concrete and viable solution to the issues that injured Albertans face when receiving the remuneration that they are duly entitled to. When an injured worker goes through the tedious appeals process and wins, they have fought for longer than required to justify their disbursement. It doesn't make sense to allow these processes to drag out for an individual to receive what they have proven they are entitled to.

There are many negative assumptions and stereotypes discussed when a worker is injured on the job and must go to WCB for help. The system isn't meant to be adversarial and isn't meant to be an added stress on workers who are already facing struggles from their injuries that may likely impact their careers and their lives. It is wholly unfortunate that when these Albertans are needing aid, they are meeting roadblocks and red tape instead. These are Albertans who have fought and proven that they require more assistance than initially assessed. For many, filing a WCB claim is a first step in a long journey of healing and reintegration. When injured in the workplace, there is enough stress and panic inherent in these incidents. We do not need to add to these stressors by allowing their compensation to be an unpredictable variable.

Therefore, I am proud to speak in support of this bill. I urge my colleagues to consider supporting it as well as it is one piece of holding WCB to account as we set a new standard of excellence. We have an opportunity to trail-blaze in this area and help this small sector of injured Albertans who need our assistance the most when navigating through this process.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, are there any wishing to speak on this matter? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has risen.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to rise today on Bill 206, Workers' Compensation (Enforcement of Decisions) Amendment Act, 2019. This bill, as we've heard from some of the speakers today, ensures that the Workers' Compensation Board is accountable to complaints.

I've risen in this House multiple times to stand in support of workers' rights, and I will always stand in support of workers' rights and working people. We've heard from countless working Albertans over the last little while. In particular, I've heard from a lot of folks on some of the previous legislation wherein their rights were being attacked, whether it was pensions, whether it was their constitutional right to collectively bargain, the list goes on. This bill aims to address a challenge, but I would argue that it really doesn't make up for a lot of the attacks that we've seen on workers.

While I support this bill, I find it troubling that this government continues to sort of pick and choose when they're in support of workers. I'm not talking about a small segment of the population; I'm talking about tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of Albertans, the same workers who built and are building this province. Like I said, I've heard from a lot of them, and not just constituents in the beautiful riding of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood but across the province. Some of my hon. colleagues have risen today and tabled the piles and piles of letters that they've received from teachers and nurses and others. Again, I just really want to point out that I'd ask this government to think about the many conflicting messages that they're sending to workers of this province.

Now, one of the things that I also want to highlight is the fact that I'm so proud of the work that our NDP government did to ensure worker safety. In fact, the previous speaker from our side, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, did an incredible job as our Minister of Labour. One of the things that she did was that she brought in An Act to Protect the Health and Well-being of Working Albertans, the point of which was to improve workplace health and safety and provide compensation and meaningful support to injured workers and their families. The point in doing so was to ensure that workers would have the same protections as other Canadians. I appreciated them, and I quote what she said. This was in 2017, and I can provide it to Hansard. She said:

Every Albertan should be able to go to work and come home healthy and safe at the end of the workday. When they don't, they deserve to have access to the medical and financial supports they need to get healthy, care for their families and return to work.

This bill would better protect hardworking Albertans and provide fair compensation to Albertans injured on the job.

I so much appreciated the work that that hon. member did to ensure worker safety. She didn't just focus on one aspect of workers, such as worker safety; she focused on increasing the minimum wage; she focused on ensuring that workers would be fairly compensated for overtime, for instance.

As I said, while I support this – and I've heard actually from folks in my own constituency about their concerns around WCB, and we know that there are a number of stories that have come forward about concerns around workers' compensation – I just wanted to get it on the record that I really want to urge this government to think about the message they're sending to Alberta's workers: while on one hand we want to support their health and safety, on the other hand we're attacking pensions; we're decreasing the minimum wage, cutting overtime. We're trying to bring in American-style labour laws to Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members looking to speak to this matter? I see the hon. Member for St. Albert has decided to rise.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 206, Workers' Compensation Act (Enforcement of Decisions) Amendment Act, 2019. Just to sort of echo some of the comments of my colleagues, it's my understanding that the bill ensures that WCB is accountable to complainants. Of course, I will always stand in support of workers' rights, as will my colleagues.

I think we can expand that a little bit to say that we'll always stand in support of ordinary working people. Although I do appreciate that this particular bill looks at perhaps a weakness in the system or a piece of the system that really has the potential to harm people in terms of their well-being and their family's well-being – you know, I guess that's the point of legislation like this: when you find loopholes or difficulties, you fix them through legislation when you have the ability to do so.

While I appreciate this effort and I appreciate that it is important to deal with the issues that the member opposite has identified through his constituency work or his outreach, I think it's really important to back up a little bit and look at the larger problem. Unfortunately, some people don't get to this place and won't be able to use this piece of legislation. I think that it's really disingenuous, I guess, for me to even talk about this and say why it's a good idea when you back up and look at the larger problem around worker safety and around WCB.

Of course, like most of us do in this place, I think that we use the lens of what is familiar to us to try to understand sort of the implications of legislation or the implications of legislation that's missing or pieces that are missing, so I'm going to use the lens of disability workers. I would like to say that it is one thing to protect the rights of people who've been injured and who have gone through due process and have gone through all of the stages that they need to, but it's quite another to not do your part to prevent these problems from happening. I'm actually a firm believer in prevention. Certainly, you need to have the safeties in place after the fact, but I'm a firm believer in prevention in that if we can prevent some of these things from happening, perhaps one day we won't need any kind of legislation like this. Who knows?

I did want to talk about disability workers. I think that it's important for the government to understand that some of the things they've done in the very short time that they've been in power do have the ability to harm workers. They might not harm them this week, but there is a potential for great harm to happen. For those of you that don't know, disability workers are highly underpaid, in my opinion. Actually, I think that they provide one of the most important and vital services to Albertans. They work with young people with disabilities. They work with youth with disabilities. And by disabilities I don't just mean developmental disabilities or somebody with, let's say, Down syndrome. I'm talking about perhaps someone that's been diagnosed with FASD, somebody who is on the autism spectrum, somebody that might have behavioural difficulties. They provide essential services that allow people to live in their community, to live as independently as possible, hopefully to go on to postsecondary education and inclusive employment. The problem is that when you erode the funding or the support for these particular workers, if you erode, let's say, the minimum wage of these workers or you erode the earning capacity around overtime of these workers or if you cut funding to individual contracts for these workers, you create an environment that is actually quite dangerous.

I'm sure that most of you know or have heard of – I'm sure it's been in the news. Actually, there's one that's been in the news quite recently of a woman who was supporting somebody with quite challenging behaviours. And I'd like to add a note that during my time as a disability worker I supported a number of people with very, very complex disabilities who perhaps had the ability to be aggressive. But when you properly train staff and you train them around safety and you train them around how to de-escalate a nonviolent crisis intervention – of course, you have to train them around first aid as well. But when you train people properly, you put in the time and put in the money to train people properly, and you staff these individuals properly. Sometimes that requires, you know, not having just one person there with them. When you train disability workers properly, you allow them to maybe focus on one job.

You may not know this, but a lot of community disability workers have to work more than one job to be able to support their family. So very often you will have somebody show up for a shift who has already done maybe an overnight shift that was supposed to be a sleep shift, but they were unable to sleep because somebody that they were supporting was having difficulty.

You can see that all of these things are risk factors, and if indeed you want to prevent a WCB claim or an injury or a fatality, these are the things that you have to do. You have to invest in prevention.

For anybody that's interested – I could tell that there are people just riveted right now – there was a case in 2011, I believe, and it was a woman from Camrose. I believe it was Valerie Wolski. Valerie Wolski was supporting a young man who was about 25 years old. It's not unusual to have smaller in stature women supporting larger men. When you're trained properly in nonviolent crisis intervention or you're not tired because you've had to work a couple of jobs or you are not always working alone because you have adequate funding, when these things are in place, tragedies like Valerie's are less likely to happen. As you may know, Valerie was, I believe, strangled and died in her workplace, which is tragic, but what's even more tragic than this is that this isn't the first time that it's happened. What's even more tragic is that it happened again quite recently in Calgary.

There was a fatality inquiry that happened after this, and there were a number of recommendations that really focused on some of the issues that I'm talking about, about the need to prevent these kinds of tragedies from happening.

I guess I continue to go back to this, that I think it is, again, wonderful using a private member's bill to close a loophole that the member identified for people going through that system, that appeal system or that judicial system. I think it's really important to back up and to look at: what are the things that we can do to prevent these injuries and these fatalities from ever happening in every sector, not just the disability sector but in construction, whatever it is?

I'd like to also, you know, focus on another area. I'm sure most members in this place have been inundated by letters from teachers. Let me first say that for the rest of my life I will be eternally grateful for the teachers that participated in raising my children, that taught them at every phase of their life, that actually created a solid foundation for them and, more than anything, inspired confidence and curiosity. I am thankful for the teachers, but I want to talk about these teachers. In the letters that I tabled earlier today, they focused on class size. What the teachers did that was really quite interesting was talk about: what were the risks associated with the increase in class size? Very often those risks focused on not being able to meet the very complex needs of the students that were joining their classrooms.

For example, with a grade 3 class – already difficult if you've ever tried to corral a bunch of grade 3 children – it's challenging.

Add to that mix more children than you anticipated, then add to that mix the loss of an educational assistant, and add to that mix a child or two with very complex learning needs or behavioural needs, and what you do is that you increase the risk of that teacher being injured. I don't just mean a physical injury. You add the risk of a really serious injury. I continue to focus on these examples because it's really important to prevent these things from ever happening. There are absolute savings in terms of cost if you are preventing this: costs to WCB, costs to the system afterwards.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members wishing to join debate on this matter?

Seeing none, should he choose to take it, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod to close debate.

Mr. Reid: I rise and close debate on Bill 206, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a second time]

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 8 to allow the Assembly to immediately resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider Bill 206, Workers' Compensation (Enforcement of Decisions) Amendment Act, 2019.

[Unanimous consent granted]

3:50            Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 206 Workers' Compensation (Enforcement of Decisions) Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has risen to speak.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise in Committee of the Whole to speak to Bill 206, a private member's bill, Workers' Compensation (Enforcement of Decisions) Amendment Act, 2019. I had the opportunity to hear a little bit about this bill as a member of the private members' bills committee, which heard from the member sponsoring the bill, as well as had the opportunity to receive a technical briefing from the ministry of labour with respect to this bill. That was a great opportunity to hear a little bit more, and I appreciated the words from the sponsor of the bill, the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, who spoke to why he brought it forward.

I'll begin by saying that I support the idea, of course, of us as private members in this House bringing forward the concerns of our constituents. I think that's a very important and most fundamental role that we serve as representatives of our ridings. The opportunity to hear from your constituents is something I know we all take very seriously. We spend a lot of time responding to their concerns and meeting with them. Having this chance to bring forward a bill to speak to concerns that we've heard from our constituents is a very meaningful process. I know that as a new member of this Assembly myself I'm looking forward to the opportunity, when my name gets drawn, for a private member's bill and that I can bring something forward myself. I certainly am very respectful of the chance that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod took to bring forward his constituents' concerns.

Of course, I will echo the comments from a number of my colleagues to say that, of course, I absolutely support the idea that for workers who are entering into and engaging with the Workers' Compensation Board, that process should be as simplified and easy as possible, particularly because we know that when a worker is injured on the job, it's always a very challenging time, both for the employer and the employee and the employee's family as well. So in resolving those matters and moving forward quickly and seeking to address as timely as possible the injury that the worker suffered – and we know that in seeking supports from appropriate health care professionals to get back to work, because everybody wants to get back to meaningful work, it's in the best interests of all that that happens as quickly as possible – I certainly support the process or any measure that would certainly expedite the workers' compensation process, because we know it is a process that has historically been very challenging for both workers and employers.

I commend the work that my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods did, when she was the former minister of labour, to really make some substantive changes to the Workers' Compensation Act with those objectives in mind, of seeking to protect those employees but also the employers so that everybody can get back to work. I really respected the very meaningful engagement and review that the member did, when she was the minister of labour, to engage with all stakeholders who are invested in the process to find ways to improve that. You know, Bill 30, which was a former bill brought forward by the former minister of labour, went a long way to addressing a lot of those concerns. Certainly, again, I speak to the value of improving the process.

I will say that I do have a bit of a hesitation with Bill 206, only because I take to heart some of the comments from the technical briefing that we received from the ministry of labour when we were in the private members' bills committee. In that briefing the representative from the ministry of labour did go through and talk about what was currently in the Workers' Compensation Act, and in particular he pointed to section 13.3(2) of that act, which speaks to the implementation by the Workers' Compensation Board of a decision from the Appeals Commission. Actually, built right into the existing Workers' Compensation Act in 13.3(2)(b) – and I am a lawyer, so I like to talk about the subclauses of sections – it does actually already prescribe a 30-day timeline for the implementation of a decision of the Appeals Commission. That's currently already in the act, so while I support the bill and what it's bringing forward, I will say that I'm not certain that it is achieving the objective that was originally laid out by the sponsor of the bill, which was to implement Appeals Commission decisions in a timely fashion, only because it appears that the act already has that provision.

In fact, the representative from the ministry of labour gave a great overview – unfortunately, I can't recall the statistics at this time – about how many of those Appeals Commission decisions are implemented within the 30-day timeline that's set out already in the act. I only speak to this because I have a bit of a hesitation around making changes to legislation where those changes are actually not completely necessary. In this case it does say that the existing act already requires the Appeals Commission to implement decisions within 30 days or within the prescribed timeline limits that are set out within the decision of the Appeals Commission on a matter before them.

What I see Bill 206 doing is not actually implementing that 30-day timeline, but in looking at the specific provisions of Bill 206, it says that if the board has not implemented the decision within 30 days, that person may then seek an order from the Court of Queen's Bench to implement the decision. It doesn't actually introduce a 30-day time limit. That actually already exists in the act. What it does say is that if the board does not implement the Appeals Commission decision within 30 days, the applicant has another 30 days to go to the Court of Queen's Bench to enforce that order.

Again, for me, this is simply about: if the goal was to make sure that the Appeals Commission is implementing its orders within 30 days, that's already in the act. What Bill 206 really does is simply say that they have a right to seek an order enforcing that from the Court of Queen's Bench. It doesn't necessarily move the process forward. It simply adds another layer, within which the applicant can then make an application to the Court of Queen's Bench, which, as we know, can in and of itself be a bit of an onerous process. I do note, though, that Bill 206 also does allow that for an applicant who seeks an order enforcing that decision from the Court of Queen's Bench, the applicant may recover their solicitor-client costs. Again, that's a notable thing, because we do know that it is a great burden for an injured worker to take on to then have to continue to advocate for themselves. They often do retain legal counsel, so to be able to recover those costs is an important element to that.

I do support this bill, but what I do see is that I'm not sure it's achieving the objectives the sponsor had in mind. It does still send a message – and I think that that perhaps is the greater objective of Bill 206 – which is that decisions of the Appeals Commission should be implemented in a timely fashion and that it is important to that worker, to that employee that that takes place. Certainly, I think that's a valuable message. I'm not sure that the content of the bill changes the process as much as we would like to hope or believe that it would, but certainly I am proud to consistently stand up in this House and advocate on behalf of workers and employees.

While I commend the sponsor of the bill, the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, for bringing this forward, particularly because it is in the best interests of injured workers, I have to echo the comments of my colleagues on this side of the House, which is to say that we have seen already in the short time of this 30th Legislature a number of attacks on workers. We've seen attacks on their overtime pay. We've seen attacks on the minimum wage. We know that there is a review of the minimum wage going on for serving staff in restaurants, and we know that that's probably coming as well, because, quite frankly, a number of these review panels that have been established by the government have predetermined outcomes. We all know what's going to happen.

We've seen the attacks on minimum wage employees. We've seen the attacks on overtime. We've seen the complete attack on workers' pensions. Without consultation, without a mandate, this government has transferred their pensions. While I will continue to stand up – I'm proud to see that my colleagues are of course also going to stand up for workers' rights, and I'm happy to see a member from the government side stand up and seek the protection for workers in this specific way – I really think that this government has a bit of a credibility issue when it comes to standing up for workers' rights because we've seen an unmitigated attack on workers' rights so far.

This is a small change. I go back to the fact that I'm not even sure it's a necessary change or that it's going to achieve the objectives set out by the member. Really, if the government and the members of the government caucus want to have some credibility and actually stand up for workers' rights, they should rethink a lot of the decisions that have already been made by this government. Perhaps they have an opportunity going forward to amend some of the things that they have done already to attack workers' rights.

So while I will support Bill 206, it is certainly not an endorsement of the government's approach to workers thus far. I'm proud that we will continue to stand up for workers' rights on this side of the House.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members looking to speak on this matter?

Then I am prepared to call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 206 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Chair: Any opposed, please say no. That is carried.

Mrs. Savage: I move that we rise and report Bill 206.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 206.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. Carried.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika has risen to speak.

Economic Diversification in Rural Alberta

510. Mr. Schow moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to identify and eliminate red tape that prevents innovative private-sector economic diversification in rural Alberta's communities for the economic benefit of these communities and Alberta as a whole.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today. I'm pleased to rise and move Motion 510. Now, this motion is important to draw attention to rural Alberta. As many of you know, 41 seats in this Chamber are considered to be rural Alberta seats, seats that are representing areas that are not part of our major city centres, you know, places where agriculture is our main economic driver and where people toil outside for hours at a time. They're the kind of people who shower after work, not before work. Some of these men and women are the backbone of Alberta. They're the people that I'm proud to represent in Cardston-Siksika.

I wanted to start with a bit of a story about one such type of business. I live in Cardston, Mr. Speaker, as you know. It's a beautiful place to be. You should come visit some time. I highly recommend it. I think you'd love the view, especially of Chief Mountain. In Cardston there is this clothing store. It's called Atkins, and Atkins can be traced back to 1893, at the time of the arrival of the Card family. Now, when the Card family came – as you can imagine: Cardston, Card – they came with a shoemaker, and that shoemaker ended up leaving. They needed one, so they sent off for Frederick Walter Atkins and offered him $16 to come to Cardston and make shoes.

He was making shoes and making boots for the mountains, and he travelled, as I understand it, by horse to Cardston. Later, in 1947, his son Henry Harwood Atkins constructed the building that is the current location of Atkins. He built this building, and it still stands today as a staple of the community of Cardston. Later on Bert and Shirley Gibb took over in the 1960s. They held this business in their care and maintained it for years, until 1997, when their daughter Kris MacDonnell took over the business.

This is an example of a southern Alberta success story, the way that businesses can thrive and they can succeed in what others might consider to be difficult economic or climatic, you know, parts of the province. I know that people don't come to Alberta necessarily for the weather but for the opportunity, and they make the most of it.

When I was talking to Kris MacDonnell about Atkins, she said that one of the greatest pieces of advice she had ever heard was something that her grandfather said to her dad. As you can imagine, through the over a hundred years of its history Atkins has gone through some difficult times, times when, you know, they could have considered closing their doors because maybe it just wasn't going quite as well as they would have liked it to. He said: "When you owe people money, send them bits of money over time. Don't just disappear on them. Maintain a relationship with those you owe money to even if it's just a little bit. That will improve your credit and your credibility with those you owe money to and show good faith to the people that you do business with." Now, it's my belief that the people in Cardston-Siksika in general all operate in good faith, and I think this lesson is a great example of that.

The point here is that there are lots of opportunities that aren't being realized in Cardston-Siksika and, I believe, across the province, and that is why I think that we need to look at opportunities to remove red tape, Mr. Speaker, to remove barriers that hold back these businesses, some of the great ideas that could be fostered right here in Alberta. It's no secret that Alberta is heavily dependent upon our oil and gas sector, the most ethical oil and gas sector, I think, around the world. It's a world-class product that we should be getting to market, but we're having a difficult time there. While that's happening, I think that there are opportunities here, and we should be exploring those.

So I was pleased during the campaign when I heard our Premier talk a lot about getting rid of the barriers that are standing in the way, this red tape, and setting up an Associate Ministry of Red Tape Reduction, something that my colleague to the left here is working tirelessly to execute. Mr. Speaker, the saddest thing in life is wasted potential, and while that is a quote from one of my favourite movies, it is the truth not only in life but also in business. Are we realizing our potential in rural Alberta? I think that there are opportunities there that we're not quite exploring.

I want to talk about one of those opportunities that comes to my office, comes to my attention quite often, and it is the fact that in Alberta we have only one border crossing that's open 24 hours a day – it's in Coutts – whereas just south of Cardston we have a border crossing that closes at about 11 o'clock. This poses a bit of a problem, a bit of a barrier for those who live in the area. Cardston has just a wealth of history. There's so much to offer in Cardston and southern Alberta in general. Those coming to southern Alberta might have a bit of a concern about the ability to get home at the end of an evening if they stay a little bit late. They're always checking their watches.

One opportunity – and I know it's not entirely within our control – is to look at an option of supporting a 24-hour border crossing at Carway. Carway is only 20 minutes from Glacier national park in the United States. This is a park that sees between 3 million and 3 and a half million visitors each year. It's also not far, again, like I said, 20 minutes from us. So, you know, if you want to come across the border into Canada, you can do that, but if you want to stay, there might be the concern of not getting home in time. Going to visit places like Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump or plays in Cardston or visit the Remington Carriage Museum or Writing-On-Stone or beautiful Waterton is another reason, Mr. Speaker, that you should most certainly – and I encourage everyone else in this Chamber – come down to Cardston. If you have not been to Waterton, you are sure missing out on a real treat.

Another part here is the reality that there is a lot of truck traffic that comes through southern Alberta and goes through Coutts, and that truck traffic, if they're not going to make it through the border, is going to be diverted all the way through Coutts. That's an extra hour on your drive time when you could be going straight through Carway as opposed to going to Coutts. When you think about trucking, as someone who did drive a truck for a while in a previous career, time is money, Mr. Speaker. Time is money. Tick-tock. I'll tell you that it's important we save money where possible. That's an opportunity to look at.

This red tape reduction is so important because there are so many people who are looking at Alberta as this beacon of hope and opportunity, this place where you can come and start something fantastic, something you can be excited about, something that I'm excited about. But what's in the way? Oftentimes, red tape and bureaucracy.

To use a bit of an example about how that gets in the way, growing up in the rural part of the country, my friends and I got our hands on a mid-90s Honda Accord. It was a manual transmission. That's when I learned how to drive a manual. This was long before I turned 16. We would drive this car – not on the road, of course, Mr. Speaker; that would be illegal – in the field. It was a field car. Driving it around – we were getting used to driving a manual stick shift there – we noticed that between two of the fields, as they connected, there was a bit of an incline. It was a bit of a bumpy ride as you went over it, and I thought: well, what if you go a little faster; what would happen?

You can imagine that if you go a little faster, maybe the front tires come off the ground. Naturally, we began to explore this more, with seat belts on of course, and realized that there was a real opportunity to jump this car and really catch some serious air in this field car of ours. It just weighed a lot. Between the passengers and everything in the vehicle, it was really hard to maximize that air time, that hang time, in this vehicle. But as we started jumping it more and more, we realized that parts started falling off. As the parts fell off, we reduced the weight. As we reduced the weight, we got more hang time. It was a nice little cause and effect there.

So we got to thinking: what else can we take off this vehicle? We parked this thing in my garage, and we went to work on it. We started taking out the spare tire. We took out any other unnecessary weight, even parts of the exhaust pipe. We took out some of it; other parts of it just fell off, bumpers, Mr. Speaker. Now, these are all integral pieces for the road, but if you're trying to get maximum hang time in this field car, you've got to take them off. We did just that, and lo and behold you get going at about 90 kilometres and hit this incline and – bam – air time like you wouldn't believe.

Now, I relate this back to the point that I'm trying to make here: what's holding Alberta back? What's holding Alberta back from getting that maximum hang time, all that potential? I'll tell you what it is. It's red tape and regulation, and I encourage us to get rid of it.

Well, that's all my remarks.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members looking to join the debate on this? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has risen to speak.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your recognizing me. I was listening intently to the story there, and I must admit, Member, that I'm glad you didn't remove the seat belts. We don't even want to think about what might have happened with that.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon on private member's Motion 510, which, of course, says:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to identify and eliminate red tape that prevents innovative private-sector economic diversification in rural Alberta's communities for the economic benefit of these communities and Alberta as a whole.

I have to say that I rise at this moment with a bit of confusion, to say the least. I just talked about some of these things in the last discussion on a bill. I've talked about these things in previous bills where we see something being brought forward in terms of legislation, but the actions and the bills that we've brought forward previously are counterproductive to that.

When we're talking about trying to create an atmosphere for innovative private-sector economic diversification, I would of course be remiss – the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview would want me to mention these things. Cancelling things like the capital investment tax credit, cancelling things like the AITC and the digital media tax credit: these were things that were going to allow small and medium-sized businesses to be innovative, to be able to grow. When we take these things away, it's counterproductive to what we're asking to do right here in this motion.

I guess I'm looking at the Member for Cardston-Siksika. He's trying to, you know, work hard for the businesses that call his area home, allowing them to grow, to prosper, to be able to create jobs, hire more people, grow their businesses. Yet we see things going on within the government that are counterproductive and that are actually hurting your businesses and their ability to be able to grow. We've heard comments, like from the Finance minister, that these types of economic diversification are just a long-term luxury. I would highly disagree. I think your businesses trying to grow, create jobs, and be prosperous is not a luxury. I think it's a necessity. That kind of a comment is counterproductive to how we can move these things forward.

Of course, you were talking about red tape, and the government did create an Associate Ministry of Red Tape Reduction. That is going to cost Albertans over the next four years $10 million. We've seen the government moving, cancelling, you know, things like the Election Commissioner because that's going to help save us a million dollars, yet what I've found, Mr. Speaker, during estimates when I was talking to Treasury Board and Finance, when I was talking to Municipal Affairs, when I was talking to Labour – I've seen other critics when they were talking to their ministries – is that there are clearly red tape reduction strategies going on within those ministries that didn't need the help of the red tape reduction ministry. Right there, just in terms of efficiencies, I think we could maybe take that $10 million that we're going to spend, and maybe we could do things that could invest in, like, Cardston-Siksika and its businesses to allow them to grow, to be innovative, and to start playing on a larger scale or maybe even the world scale. Wouldn't that be great?

I mean, we've seen things – I'm sure that the Member for Lethbridge-East would be very, very aware of this – like Cavendish Farms, a fantastic business that wants to grow here in the province, yet we are seeing things that are working against them to be able to do that. I mean, we were talking about them investing $360 million in the plant, $430 million in the facility where full production capacity is going. I was astounded at this, quite honestly. I mean, processing 735 million pounds of potatoes: I can't even imagine what that looks like. That's a lot of potatoes. That is a lot of potatoes, Mr. Speaker. You know, in creating the French fries to be able to ship them around the world, what would have helped them to do that would have been things like the capital investment tax credit, like the Alberta investment tax credit. That would have helped them to be able to scale up and do those types of production levels. Again, it's counterproductive to what this motion is trying to do. It just really feels like the government is actually working against the Member for Cardston-Siksika with his motion and him trying to advocate so hard for his businesses.

You know, in terms of budget cuts, Mr. Speaker, that again are going against rural Alberta and their ability to be innovative, to be able to prosper, Agriculture and Forestry saw a budget cut of 9.1 per cent. Environment and Parks was ending the Alberta community resilience program, which provides flood and drought mitigation funding for municipalities, First Nations, Métis settlements, improvement districts, special areas. All of these things would have been able to help rural Alberta to be able to prosper, to be able to protect their investments from things like floods. We've certainly seen some of the floods in this province getting much, much worse. We've all heard that term about 1-in-100-year events. It seems like we've had three or four of those 1-in-100-year events just in the last decade alone. It's taking away those types of funding to be able to provide things like flood mitigation, which will protect the assets of rural Albertans and their businesses to be able to continue to innovate and prosper.

We've seen Transportation cutting highway funding maintenance by 25 per cent. I mean, if rural Alberta businesses are going to try to innovate and grow, create jobs, not only service Alberta but the world as a whole – I've always believed that our businesses can all work on the world stage. I've always, always believed that. But how are they going to be able to get their products to market, to that world stage, if we're cutting back on maintenance? Again, it's counterproductive to what the Member for Cardston-Siksika is trying to do, advocating hard for his businesses. The government is working against him. I'm very, very confused with regard to this.

I think that, unfortunately, because of that, it's incumbent upon the government to be able to step up, to back up the Member for Cardston-Siksika. I think we can take that $10 million from the ministry of red tape, invest it in your businesses to be able to prosper and grow because, clearly, red tape reduction is happening within the ministries themselves. I have yet to see any red tape reductions create jobs. Well, except for one. We've created one job, probably the minister himself.

Unfortunately, I'm not prepared to be able to support this motion at this time. I do hope that the member's businesses will be backed up by maybe some different policies from this government, hopefully other investments that will allow them to prosper, but right now the indication that I'm getting from the government is that they don't care about that member's businesses. I would like to see that $10 million invested in your riding and your businesses and in my businesses as well in Edmonton-Decore. I'm known as the shopping district, Mr. Speaker. I have three major malls. I have so many businesses within my riding. They're fantastic. I would invite you to Edmonton-Decore as well. We've got some great restaurants. I'm sure you'd love them.

But I'm going to urge other members to not support this at this time.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of this motion and would like to just comment a little bit about the last member's speech, from Edmonton-Decore. There was a word that he used, "confused." I have to say that that is a fairly appropriate word that he used. I think that it's interesting. I see the confusion probably in that there are a few words in there that would confuse him like "innovative private-sector" jobs. Obviously, something that we've seen for the last four years from this government is that their whole strategy has been that they believe that injecting the government and the government's role into society in a free-enterprise society is actually the solution. In fact, if you read through their appendix in their constitution, you'll see that their job, they believe, is to actually micromanage and that they think that they're smarter than the economy.

What we've learned through years of trying different types of economic models is that a free economy, where it has the minimal interference by the government, is the most prosperous. This is really why I'm in favour of this motion. I think that the Member for Cardston-Siksika has gotten it bang on when it comes to the need to be able to have government get out of the way, get out of the way of our job creators and our innovators.

It always amazed me listening to the members opposite when they were in government not too long ago, Mr. Speaker, argue that they were confused why so many private-sector jobs – I think there were at one point over 180,000 private-sector jobs that had fled our markets. It confused them. They were confused because they didn't seem to understand that there is a direct relationship between the government's intervention and taking away that incentive for our job creators to actually get in and to start a business, to take on that risk. I actually do understand why the Member for Edmonton-Decore is confused, but that is actually no excuse.

The truth is that we were hired on April 16 to get Albertans back to work and to jump-start our economy. They hired us not to get in the way of our job creators and innovators but to get out of the way. I think that the member needs to realize that. I would have to say that I don't know if the member has gotten out enough and talked to our job creators and our innovators, because what he wouldn't hear from them is: "You know what? We need you to hold our hand and we need you to actually make us into this successful business." No. The number one thing that I hear, Mr. Speaker, is: "The government needs to get out of our way. The government needs to let us be so that we can actually do what we feel is the right way to be able to create wealth, to be able to start a small business, and to risk and to become an innovator and to hopefully knock it out of the park." The sky is the limit for entrepreneurs.

It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that there are many, many immigrants that come to this province. A lot of the immigrants come to this province because they think that this is the place where they can actually make something of their lives, that, again, the sky is the limit here, that Alberta would be a place where they could come and start a business, that they can actually provide for their families better than they could where they were living. Now, when the government gets in the way and when the government, through continual red tape, heaps on layers and layers of red tape, it takes away the incentive for those newcomers to come to this province and to try to start a business. I've said this many times in this House. Small businesses are disproportionately affected by red tape, so it's extremely important for us to be able to turn back that tide.

There's an interesting study that was done down in the States that showed that had the United States curbed red tape or regulatory increases since 1980, they would have seen an increase of almost 32 per cent in the size of their economy. An eight-tenths of a per cent increase year over year they would have seen. That's a substantial amount, Mr. Speaker. Think about the size of our economy, what we would have done had we also tried to curb this thing called red tape.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I like how the Member for Cardston-Siksika is talking about innovative private-sector economic diversification in rural Alberta. What I think is important to recognize is that, really, of our job creators and innovators in rural Alberta, a lot of them are farmers and ranchers, and we made a huge step forward – I have to take my hat off to the agriculture minister and the labour minister for being able to come together in repealing Bill 6, that devastating NDP bill that added, again, so many layers of red tape onto our rural job creators and innovators, our farmers and ranchers.

I want to tell you a story, Mr. Speaker, about how those unintended consequences have really affected a member from my constituency. I won't use names. This family has asked me not to. They're humble people, as you often find in rural Alberta. This family had a very small farm. It wasn't a big farm, but they had the option of – when Bill 6 was introduced, they didn't really know what was expected. They had to figure out whether they were going to hire another person and become completely occupational health and safety compliant or – the wife was going to be going and getting a hip replacement. Now, she could no longer help her husband on the farm, so they had to make a choice. The choice was either they hire another person to help take care of what she was normally doing or she goes and gets a hip replacement done. She had been waiting for about a year and still no hip replacement.

They did like everybody does. They just basically said: well, our option for getting a hip replacement is going to cost us X amount; our option to become occupational health and safety compliant so that we can have another person come to our farm and work is going to cost us this much. Well, Mr. Speaker, they had a consultant come in. I haven't been able to verify or validate their numbers, but they said that this consultant told them that it was going to cost them $200,000 to bring their farm up to occupational health and safety compliance – $200,000 – whereas they could go down to Kalispell and get a $39,000 hip replacement done. Guess what they did? They mortgaged their house, they went down, and she got a hip replacement done in Kalispell.

What a terrible option for them, Mr. Speaker. On one hand, you're going to have to spend $39,000; on the other hand, you're going to have spend $200,000 because of some unintended consequences of a government that was more interested in piling on red tape than they were interested in actually helping our job creators and innovators do what they do best, create jobs. This is the reason why job creators rejected them en masse on April 16 of this year. They rejected their approach. They said: no, you do not have any interest in being able to help our job creators jump-start; you're interested in being able to maybe start increasing public-sector jobs. They did a lot of that, but they certainly were not interested in private-sector jobs.

Mr. Speaker, this is a legacy that the NDP will have to wear. The legislators opposite will have to remember that instead of them being able to actually jump-start the economy through intervention by the government, in reality they actually destroyed the economy by government intervention.

So I am all in favour of this motion. This motion speaks to a truth, which is that when the government gets out of the way of our job creators and innovators, they know best how to be able to jump-start the economy and get Albertans back to work, and that is the solution, Mr. Speaker. It's not anecdotal. It is the solution. We've seen numerous examples in different parts of the world where they've done this right. In fact, there are some studies done in Scandinavian countries that did this right and found that they can get up to a 2.3 per cent increase in GDP by just focusing on red tape reduction.

This is something that I'm very much in favour of, and I'm grateful for the member bringing it forward.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler has risen to speak.

Mr. Horner: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak in support of Motion 510, brought forward by the field-car-driving Member for Cardston-Siksika. I just would say that I learned to drive the same way, drive a stick, and I appreciate his analogy. As the car loses parts, you definitely get more air on the incline of opportunity, so I think it's quite fitting.

Mr. Speaker, if you ask farmers around Canada, they'll tell you that Albertan farmers are some of the luckiest in the world – maybe not this fall, though; it has been a challenging harvest – a wealth of land turned into a wealth of resources. As the subsurface of Alberta was mapped and analyzed for oil and gas, many did well by becoming partners of industry, leasing surface rights to companies that wished to further explore the subsurface or install infrastructure. Others found work and participated directly as this new economy demanded more and more labour. These jobs were high paying and easy to get.

Those days appear over for now. The easiest resources to find and to extract were targeted first, and through 2014 a high price created an opportunity for further growth in more unconventional plays such as SAGD and more marginal oil sands deposits. As the price of oil has stagnated in recent years, the jobs have dried up and the investment has fled.

This is not our province's first experience with the cyclical nature of the energy industry. Energy is a global commodity, and the price is subject to forces outside our control. This means that when the price is low, our province is hard hit. The energy industry remains the main economic driver of our province, and I'm certainly not downplaying its importance. When we discuss economic diversification, we must therefore place it in terms of supplementing the industry rather than replacing it.

Albertans' hard work exploiting our world-class energy reserves has been so successful that it shifted our entire country's economy. Mature labour markets like those of the Maritimes, where jobs were often hard to find and far lower paying on average, saw an exodus of people moving westward seeking prosperity.

The creation of economies of scale in the oil sands has incentivized companies to invent and deploy innovative technologies that have given Albertan engineers a reputation as some of the most versatile and qualified globally. While the oil sands remain innovative and productive, opportunities for rural populations to share in the prosperity have evaporated as companies have stopped drilling. They're asking for help, and they deserve it. They're not asking for a handout but a hand up.

The previous NDP government often paid lip service to diversification of the economy, but their efforts were doomed to failure. Albertans have created new industries before through hard work, innovation, and prudent governance. Burdensome taxation, overregulation, and complex red tape stand in the way of entrepreneurs and businesses from setting up operations in rural communities. Our government must be prudent and stand behind Albertans that are working to meet these ends.

The labour market has become increasingly bloated as layoffs have continued and the need for service companies dwindled. This is a highly skilled labour base that would be a tremendously valuable asset to any industries that choose to call Alberta home. I do not know the specific industry we should be courting, but what I do know is that the skills and talents of Albertans go far beyond the oil and gas industry.

Alberta has world-class business and postsecondary programs in forestry, agriculture, mining, and technology. Innovative companies like Shaw Communications, WestJet, ATCO, and Sport-Chek were all started right here in Alberta. There is no reason that we should not be fostering an environment in which small companies with big ideas can thrive. New opportunities for business in fields like ag tech, energy efficiency, cannabis, and many more must not be passed up. We as a government must be actively working to be sure that Albertan businesses are not overly constrained by red tape as they try to innovate and Alberta competes with other jurisdictions to draw in business. We have always been a province in which entrepreneurs can thrive.

Mr. Speaker, we must find a balance between diversification and a strong energy industry. The previous government could not find this balance. When the bottom fell out of the oil industry, the NDP was left with a $6 billion hole in their budget. A diverse economy is an essential step towards smoothing the boom-and-bust cycle of the energy industry, but that does not mean we should forgo the next peak. Energy has always paid the bills in Alberta, whether privately or providing the means for expansive government services. Our province is uniquely positioned in Canada, still managing to create a sizable sovereign wealth fund as eastern provinces claimed a piece of the pie. This is a savings account for every Albertan.

Rather than raising tax rates and creating additional regulatory burden for small businesses and entrepreneurs, as our previous NDP government did, we must rely on rational decision-making to set them on the path to success. We must attract investment, both foreign and domestic, and incubate small businesses so that those who innovate can quickly scale right here in our province. It is imperative that we work to cut the red tape that has kept businesses from basing themselves in rural Alberta so that our next recession is less deep than the last.

Our government has already put forward several programs to help improve conditions in rural Alberta. The rural entrepreneur immigration program in tandem with the rural renewal program will help our province to direct skilled labour to rural communities, with the intent of starting or taking over existing businesses. We have also committed to expanding our programs which incentivize media production in rural areas, which follows the lead of Manitoba's film tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's economy is one of the best in the world when hydrocarbon prices are high. When they are low, milk and honey are harder to find. I want a province for my kids where they have opportunities of all kinds. By the time they grow up, I'm hopeful that whatever their passion is, there will be an opportunity for them to thrive right here at home.

I have heard criticism related to Alberta pension funds that Alberta is just too small to have world-class financial services expertise. This is absolutely ridiculous, and Albertans should be livid about this patronizing attitude. We're no longer the expansive and empty prairies. It is time we built an integrated and diverse economy which reflects that. Cutting red tape on rural businesses is the first step in the right direction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has risen to speak.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to this bill. I don't believe, in substance, that the idea of allowing economic diversification – I think that that's a very good thing. I think my main objection is that this government's approach to that has been incorrect. I mean, over a number of years it has been tried many times, to reduce the general corporate tax rate and hope that that spurs innovation, but that hasn't had that effect. The reason for that is because a corporate tax rate is paid only on profits, and in fact it's paid only on profits in excess of half a million dollars.

A lot of businesses, when they start up, are not in that position, so they need a different sort of assistance, assistance that I think the Alberta investor tax credit was providing, and I think it was doing a very good job of that. In fact, I've certainly heard from a number of individuals and from members of the legal community that they were working with companies who had planned to come here, to open offices or to open up here, who are no longer going to do that because those opportunities are no longer available to them, whereas programs like that exist in other jurisdictions.

I think that that is a huge concern because, really, the point here is to diversify the economy, to assist businesses in other areas to spring up, and I don't think that this rhetoric that the members across the way put out, that if we're in support of other industries, we can't possibly be in support of oil and gas, is correct. I think you can be in favour of both of those things at the same time. I don't think they are anything resembling mutually exclusive.

I think, you know, this idea that somehow that plan wasn't going to work: I mean, not only had it begun to work already, but it would have only increased in the future. We'll never see that now because it's been cut off. We have credible reports of all sorts of industry folks that could have come here, particularly in the tech sector, that won't be doing that now. I think that is a real shame because I think that those were good, solid, mortgage-paying jobs, which, at the end of the day, is really what we're after.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that while I'm on my feet, it's worth commenting on some of the comments made by the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction because I do think that it is possible for us to disagree in this place without becoming personal or without becoming insulting. To see that member rise in his place and suggest that when the Member for Edmonton-Decore says that he's confused about how this is supposed to work, which is a legitimate question – and he laid it out on a number of legitimate bases – that's just because he's confused about life generally is deeply inappropriate, especially coming from someone who has risen in this place and suggested that potable water is red tape, who, when asked what red tape he plans to reduce, couldn't provide a single example of a bill, couldn't provide anything resembling an operational definition, and to date hasn't provided anything resembling an operational definition.

I think that if one is confused by that, one is rightly confused by that, because it's confusing. When you say, "Oh, well, it's things that harm business, but we won't in any way reduce it in such a way that it impacts the lives or livelihoods of Albertans," well, I mean, that's not a definition that anyone can sort of operationalize in a way that's important. Those are my comments on those comments.

You know, I think that when we're talking about attracting investment to rural Alberta, the Cavendish facility in Lethbridge is definitely worth mentioning. That was an investment that was attracted by our government. We did that by working with the folks there. They made that investment, and it will produce a lot of jobs, jobs in an area that could use jobs.

I must actually say that I met recently with the folks from Team Lethbridge. Their municipality and their businesses and their nonprofit organizations all tend to come up here together to talk to MLAs, which is actually a very effective strategy, in my view. They had some fantastic ideas having to do with economic diversification and what sectors they wanted to attract and how to attract investment from outside the province rather than attracting it from other municipalities.

I think there's a lot of good evidence that there are a lot of ways to go forward with a strategy that isn't based on trickle-down economics. Honestly, you know, we hear the members across the way saying that the problem is that we think we're smarter than the economy. I mean, setting aside for a moment the fact that an economy isn't anthropomorphic, that it's not the sort of thing that has an intelligence, I think it's entirely possible – and I do hear the member laughing. I realize he thinks it's impossible for someone like me to have something relevant to say in this place, Mr. Speaker, but fortunately we have the opportunity for all of us to debate here.

The members across the way and I have a fairly deep disagreement. We have a deep disagreement over whether trickle-down economics works, and I think there's an enormous amount of evidence on our side. I think that in the last 20 or 30 years the entire field of economics has done a lot to change from being based on theories to being based on evidence, and I think that's a really good change, a positive change in the world. I realize that the members over there appear to think that it's hilarious that anyone would think that that's a good thing, but it is a good thing.

I think that as it becomes more and more the case that economics is based on actual evidence in the world, we're seeing more and more that the trickle-down theory just doesn't work. That's not a method that's effective, and it's certainly not a method that's effective under certain circumstances. Having now dropped the corporate tax rate 1 per cent, if we continue to drop it – we're already at the bottom, so that's not going to attract any additional investment, and I think that generally that's been clear. The aim of attracting investment specifically intended to diversify our economy is a good aim. What we have seen under this new government's policies is companies taking the money and running to other jurisdictions to invest the money. I don't think that's an effective strategy, and I think that the numbers bear out my conclusion that it's not an effective strategy because all we have seen is more and more job losses under this government.

I think, Mr. Speaker, you know, that spending particularly $10 million over the next four years on a ministry that is, in my view, redundant is probably not a really good use of taxpayer dollars, especially at a time when we're talking about cutting educational supports in classrooms, when we're talking about cutting health care funding, when we're talking about cutting funding to police. Why it is that we would be spending $10 million on a ministry that, as far as I can tell, isn't actually doing anything is entirely beyond me.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that that will end my comments with respect to this matter. The members across the way and I are obviously going to disagree rather strongly in terms of whether economic diversification is a priority or whether it ought to be, as they say, a long-term luxury. I don't think it's a long-term luxury. I think it's something that we have to do. I think it's something that we have to do now, and I think it's incredibly important.

Mr. Speaker, I will not be in favour of this motion, and as we move forward, I hope that we see a level of debate in this place that is perhaps a little bit more elevated. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Camrose has risen to speak.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was my pleasure to spend time over the last number of months in my constituency consulting with constituents. One of the main issues that continues to arise is the excessive red tape that is strangling our economy. This is especially true when speaking to business owners. Rural entrepreneurs face an increasing number of challenges in a rapidly changing world. On top of the struggles caused by the NDP mismanagement of Alberta's economy and those faced by urban entrepreneurs, rural business owners face declining populations, high transportation costs, and the fear of vandalism, pushed by a rural crime crisis in our province.

Mr. Speaker, in talking to my constituents, they have outlined a number of regulatory issues that hinder the success of small-town entrepreneurs. I'd like to highlight just one of them now. Interference with project management makes jobs take longer. Project management is less efficient, and it becomes harder for small businesses operating in areas with fewer customers to turn a profit. Because of this, jobs become harder to come by and families are forced to relocate to cities, further exacerbating the problems. Because of this difficulty in moving projects forward, business has left Alberta. The regulatory burdens imposed by all levels of government have led to a hurry-up-and-wait problem and a failure to guarantee anything our job creators strive for.

Maybe I'll use a large-scale familiar example to explain this problem. As I'm sure everyone in this House is aware, the Trans Mountain pipeline has struggled with moving regulatory goalposts for years. It has been approved and reapproved over and over again. Recently the Liberal government of Justin Trudeau has introduced Bill C-69, the no more pipelines law, a new framework for infrastructure projects. The issue, Mr. Speaker, is that C-69 fails to address any of the real issues and allows the goalposts to be moved indefinitely. As a result, Albertans have suffered. A failure to get this project completed has real effects on the daily lives of Albertans.

Now imagine this happening to multiple projects in rural areas. These delays all have an effect on the health of our rural communities. This is a major barrier that rural areas need to address. This isn't to say that urban areas don't also face issues with regulatory barriers placing roadblocks in the way of major infrastructure, but there is a massive difference in a delay in road construction adding a couple of minutes to a commute in comparison to a rural road adding half an hour to your drive into town. As our towns shrink, it becomes even more difficult when businesses promising employment are delayed in opening their doors by red tape and excessive regulation.

One area where we saw regulations threaten our rural areas was the imposition of the previous government's seriously flawed Bill 6. Thanks to the organization of a number of farmers the bill was significantly amended, but as I along with many of my colleagues have heard, this did not go far enough to protect our farmers from more regulation. That's why I was so glad to see the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry bring forward Bill 26 as a replacement to ensure worker safety while also reducing the regulatory burden on family farms, who don't have the tools to navigate red tape that large corporate farms do.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, regulations can have a devastating impact on small rural communities. This is something that our government should be taking very seriously. I'm glad that my colleague from Cardston-Siksika has brought this issue to the forefront, and I look forward to advocating for further red tape reduction in rural areas alongside him.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has risen to speak on this matter.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think I'll keep my remarks with regard to Bill 25 to the municipal affairs areas if I maybe could just ask a number of questions or concerns that have been brought forward.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. We are currently discussing Motion Other than Government Motion 510. If you would like to speak on that matter, please feel free.

Member Ceci: With regard to the red tape reduction . . .

The Acting Speaker: And I will also just mention to the member that in about three minutes we will have reached 55 minutes of discussion on this matter.

Member Ceci: Yeah. Okay. Thanks.

With regard to Motion 510, then, you know, red tape is certainly something that's important for all of us to address. We, of course, endeavoured as government, when we were in government, to ensure that only the regulation that was important and necessary was put into place. The fact that we're talking about red tape generally helps out other orders of government, particularly the local levels of government. When we get to Bill 25, I'll have the opportunity to address it in more detail. But, Mr. Speaker, the importance of generally addressing red tape is obviously brought forward in an actual bill that's before us, including the one that's with regard to the farm areas, farm implementation, farming.

We, of course, are getting feedback from the different organizations, RMA in particular. I've been reading their website with regard to this. They speak specifically to Bill 25. They don't talk about this motion that's before us. They do say about Bill 25 that they would like to find out more information. When we get to that, I'll talk to the associate minister.

We, of course, worked very hard to make sure that projects like the Cavendish Farms had the infrastructure in place, got that put in place as quickly as possible, so there was no real issue there.

We, of course, want to make sure that we're not standing in the way of economic diversification throughout Alberta, including the rural areas. We see a benefit to addressing red tape.

I do have many questions about the municipal affairs area and Bill 25, and I'll wait to get there for that discussion.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

About one more minute, if there are any hon. members looking to speak quickly on this matter.

Mr. Rowsell: I've got, like, 50 seconds to talk. Is that right? Okay. I'll start. Mr. Speaker, no one can deny the positive effect of our energy sector. The point I want to make is that, you know, it sustains our province, and therefore any discussions about economic diversification must remain focused on supplementing our energy sector, not replacing it or shrinking it. We should follow the lead of the hard-working oil and gas workers and be proud of our rich energy resources, which, through the hard work of Albertans, we developed into the greatest wealth-generating asset in the country.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Given the time I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika to please close debate on Motion 510.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to close debate on Motion 510. If there's one message that I can get across through the debate that we've had in the last hour, it is: don't forget about rural Alberta; don't forget about rural Alberta and the hard-working men and women who live there.

I represent one of the most southern constituencies and live in one of the most southern parts of this province, right by the U.S. border. We have so much to offer Alberta. We have so much to offer this province and this country. Any opportunity that we have to start something great: we'll snatch that opportunity, and we'll make the most of it. That's what we do in the south. While I know that the urban parts of this province play an integral part of our success and our prosperity and I'm grateful for those places – I'm grateful for Calgary and Edmonton and Red Deer and all the other major cities, Medicine Hat, where my own parents live – we cannot forget about rural Alberta.

I feel like some of these messages that have been sent are that rural isn't as important. I can't speak to the logic behind the committee that redrew the boundaries for this Chamber, but we lost four rural constituencies, Mr. Speaker. That suggests that there are four fewer voices in this Chamber on behalf of rural Alberta. For anyone living in the urban parts of this province, I encourage you, as I do all the time when I stand up and speak on behalf of my constituents, to step out of the urban bubble. Step out of that bubble, and come visit for an extended period of time rural Alberta, and see the kind of men and women and the families we're raising and the way that we do business out there. Then you'll recognize why we advocate so hard for what rural Alberta has to offer this province.

You know, we talked a great deal though the campaign and even in this Chamber now, with all the things that were passed in legislation, about how important it is to support small businesses and the agriculture industry out in these rural parts. We promised that we would cut taxes on small businesses, and we've done that with our job-creation tax cut, that will result in a sustainable growth and diversification of this economy.

One piece of red tape in other provinces that we've seen that drew people to Alberta was that medical professionals could incorporate here in Alberta. A number of people have come from other jurisdictions to Alberta because it's a more favourable place to do business.

Now, like the member who just previously spoke said, you know, we don't want to replace our oil and gas industry, but we'd like to supplement it with other economic opportunities. That is exactly what I'm hoping to do.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business even gave the red tape costs per employee as $6,744, which gave us a failing grade. I'm not looking to throw shots across the aisle, but what I am trying to say is that we do have barriers here, Mr. Speaker, and they cost real money. They cost real money. It costs businesses, and the reality is that it costs jobs.

When you live in a community of 3,500 people, like I do, or other communities across Cardston-Siksika, where the town sizes range between, well, I guess, very small to 1,800 people, 2,000 people, 3,500 – they're not all bedroom communities for Lethbridge. These are all communities that need support, that have hard-working men and women there who just want to make the most of their opportunities, and they're there.

I encourage this government and I encourage the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction to keep along this path to supporting economic diversification in Alberta. Don't forget about rural Alberta, Mr. Speaker, because rural Alberta plays such an integral part in this province. We contribute so much to the country. We produce, we work hard, and all we ask in return is for a little bit of support, to not be forgotten when the time comes when policies are developed. I implore the government to do that. I've received a lot of feedback. In fact, when the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction just spoke, I was greatly encouraged by the continued direction of his ministry.

If I can close by simply saying, Mr. Speaker, how grateful I am to have this opportunity to move this motion, to speak on behalf of the fine people of Cardston-Siksika, and to have it echo through this Chamber as many times as possible: don't forget about rural Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 510 carried]

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Deputy Government House Leader has risen to speak.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until this evening at 7:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:04 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, November 25, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening, hon. members. Please take your seats.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 24 Appropriation Act, 2019

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I move on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board Bill 24, the Appropriation Act, 2019, for third reading.

Madam Speaker, it's pretty exciting that this government's first budget is here, a transformational budget. I'm sure all members of the Chamber certainly agree with that. I know that my side of the aisle, or the government side of the aisle, is excited to be able to fulfill promises that were made to Albertans along the lines of getting our fiscal house in order with this important piece of legislation and starting the path forward to fix the absolute catastrophic damage that was done to this province financially by the NDP in their time in government.

With that said, Madam Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 28 Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Minister of Health to move second reading of Bill 28, the Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act.

Madam Speaker, it's a privilege to rise to speak about this important piece of legislation. It's my hope that Bill 28 will gain the support of all members of this Assembly. I think it is important before we talk about Bill 28 that we take a step back and look at the situations Albertans find ourselves in in regard to opioids and addiction. Alberta continues to see the lasting effect of the overprescription of opioids, with an average of two Albertans who fatally overdose every day. The situation is far from resolved. The opioid crisis has touched Albertans in all corners of the province, of all backgrounds.

In 2016 alone 37.2 per cent of opioid overdose deaths were related to prescription opioids. This is in large part because of the overprescription of highly addictive opioid medication, including drugs like OxyContin, hydromorphone, and prescription fentanyl. The opioid manufacturers' and wholesalers' aggressive marketing efforts lead to this overprescription. These efforts included spending hundreds of millions of dollars to educate doctors on the use of opioids for treating chronic pain over the long term and stating that the risk of addiction was less than 1 per cent.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, we will never be able to bring back those who we have lost. We pray for the families who lost their loved ones as a result of those actions. We're working to strengthen a system of care that gives families avenues to access support and to heal. There are also many more Albertans who find themselves in the grips of addiction, battling a disease that is left untreated. The untreated one is only leading them to a fatal and progressive illness. That being said, there are a large number of Albertans who have found recovery from addiction and who live lives in recovery every day.

Our government recognizes that recovery is possible and recovery works. That is why we are focused on developing and expanding access to treatment and recovery resources so that all Albertans who face addiction have an opportunity to recover. We believe in Albertans, we believe in their resiliency, and we believe in their ability to recover. We have committed $40 million over the next four years specifically for opioid response and an additional $100 million over four years to improve access to recovery-oriented mental health and addiction services. Every Albertan deserves the opportunity to recover and to live a life of health, wellness, and positive, engaged citizenship.

Madam Speaker, with all that being said, Alberta taxpayers have been on the hook for the health care costs that have been incurred as a result of opioid manufacturers' and wholesalers' unlawful actions. The Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act is the first step in our efforts to recover those costs. Not only have Albertans had to pay with their extra tax dollars, they have had to pay with their communities. The actions of those companies have led to heartache, loss, and death while also leading to enormous costs to the health care system as a whole.

Let me give you some examples here. In 2014 the total cost of substance use to the Alberta economy was estimated at $5.5 billion. Of that, approximately $52 million was spent in 2016 on health care costs related to opioid use. This is according to the Canadian Centre on Substance Use and Addiction. We estimate that since then opioid-related health care costs have increased significantly with the subsequent growth of the opioid epidemic. The aim of the proposed action is to recover health care costs and other damages caused by the defendants' unlawful actions, including their aggressive marketing efforts. These efforts led to the overprescription of highly addictive opioid medications. These medications, as I mentioned earlier, have caused many to experience heartache and pain, and a great many more lost their lives.

Alberta has experienced many costs at a system-wide level as a result of those actions. This legislation would allow the use of statistical and population-based evidence to establish causation and quantify health care costs and other damages caused that can be attributed to the opioid-related wrong actions here. It would allow Alberta to recover costs on an aggregate basis rather than on the individual it incurred on a personal basis. It would also allow the recovery of health care costs regardless of when the damage occurred. If the directors and officers of a corporate defendant are implicated in opioid-related wrongs, this legislation would make them jointly and severely liable with their corporations. Bill 28 would also demonstrate to the defendants in a proposed national class action that Alberta has the tools in place to proceed with litigation, should that be necessary. This all means that Alberta would be able to participate in the national class action in the most practical and efficient manner.

Madam Speaker, we are committed to holding opioid manufacturers and wholesalers to account for the opioid damage and health care costs that they have contributed to. This legislation will enable us to try to recover most of those costs that Alberta taxpayers contributed to. Our priority is to reinvest any damage awarded back into our health care system to strengthen the health care system that has taken on so many costs as a result of this issue and to ensure that all Albertans have access to a recovery-oriented system of care that encourages health, wellness, and a positively engaged citizenship.

Madam Speaker, I encourage all Members of this Legislative Assembly to support the second reading of Bill 28.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise and to speak to Bill 28. First off, I just want to start by saying that we will be supporting this bill.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Hear, hear.

Ms Sweet: Yeah. We can work across the aisle. I know, shocking.

This is something that obviously is important to all Albertans, when we're looking at the issues around the opioid crisis and the significant impact that it's had on all Albertans across the province, the family members, the friends that have been lost unfortunately because of the crisis, and, of course, the ongoing issues that continue to happen with the use of fentanyl. Now with it being laced, obviously, with other drugs on the streets, we're seeing an even more significant increase. Of course, this is extremely important.

I think it's important to recognize that although this bill doesn't address the supports and services that can be provided to Albertans, it does speak to looking at holding individuals accountable for the responsibility that they have around ensuring that when drugs are being created, they are being distributed and used in an appropriate way. I also recognize that it's important that, as other provinces are doing – and I'm glad to see us joining other provinces in this lawsuit – we're looking at what this means for the impact on the resources for health care front-line workers, treatments, emergency services, as well as our overall health care system.

In saying that, the one thing that I did notice in the bill, that I know the minister and I will probably continue to chat a little bit about, is just where the money will go. As we know, typically when issues like this occur and there are lawsuits on behalf of the Crown, the money automatically goes back into general revenue. Then once it's in general revenue, as the Minister of Finance would know, he gets to kind of decide where it goes from there and if it goes back into Health or if it gets allotted to just paying down deficits or different things like that. One of the things that I would like us to be able to have a chat about, and would be interested to hear from the government side at some point, is that there be a commitment that a portion of the dollars that are returned to the Crown at some point, whenever this lawsuit occurs, would be allocated to ensure that it's going directly to supports for mental health and addiction and that it's not just being put in general revenue to then be allocated wherever it may be.

I recognize that – and I do want to thank the associate minister for being open to having a dialogue with me – of course, some of the concerns around this are that it's not just about treatment and mental health and addiction services completely. It's also about the overall health costs that are associated when supporting someone with opioid addiction. Of course, there needs to be some supports and financial returns to the Ministry of Health around emergency services, around health care services for individuals that have been hospitalized due to struggling with their addictions, so I recognize that not all of the money that would be coming back through this lawsuit can go directly to Mental Health and Addictions. Although I would love it all to go to treatment, I recognize that there needs to be some ability to return the funds to areas where support services have been provided. Of course, I recognize that, and as we continue through the stages of this debate, I'm looking forward to hearing from the associate minister or the Minister of Health around what those options might look like or if there have been conversations on the government side around how some of that can happen.

Another thing that I do want to just quickly chat about is, of course, that there is a little bit of a difference in the bill when it comes to Ontario and B.C. It's just a question that at some point, again, over the debate I would like clarity around. In Bill 28, section 8 is different from the B.C. bill, which excludes certain officers and directors from liability. I'm assuming that's something that the government of Alberta has learned from the B.C. lawsuit so they're just trying to strengthen the ability to look at other, bigger jurisdictions or making sure that there's a broader ability to look at more directors and officers than just what B.C. was able to do. I think that's great if that's what's happening. I think it's extremely beneficial to learn from what other jurisdictions are doing and be able to strengthen our bill to be able to do that.

Also, there have been some pieces added to this bill, which I think is also probably learning from other jurisdictions, about making sure that we're using aggregated data and, obviously, being able to use that information and taking that forward so that we can actually demonstrate in court the measurements that are being used. I appreciate also in this bill that although this is going to be happening on behalf of all Albertans, Albertans' health information doesn't actually have to be shared. There is information within the bill that says that you can talk about a group of individuals instead of having to look into identifying individuals that may have been impacted. I think it's important, given that this is a very sensitive topic for Albertans, that we're protecting as much personal information as we can. Again, I see that that's happening in the bill – again, I support the government in this and acknowledge that the bill has been written quite well – and that's great.

I also want to of course – why not? – just mention that this was something that was also in our platform. I mean, it's always nice to see that both sides of this House can agree on something. Even though it was in our platform, it was also something that was important to the government side, so there are some things that, obviously, both sides of this House can agree on.

I think I'll just leave it at that. Again, I just want to say that we will be supporting the bill, of course with some questions as we move forward. I'm sure the associate minister and I can chat a little bit, and he'll be able to answer my questions in the future.

Thank you. [some applause]

The Deputy Speaker: Oh, the things that happen in this House.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 28, Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act. I just wanted to reiterate what my colleague just said, that it is quite interesting that the government chose to take a piece from our platform, and I'm actually quite happy that they did. Obviously, it was our intent to go forward with – I don't know that the bill would have looked identical to this, but I am happy to see that this is happening.

I think that before I speak to some pieces of this, I would like to just be clear and put on the record some of the actions we had taken and some of the investments that we made that were particularly important. The reason I say that, as I said even earlier today, is that this is a tool, a great tool, a tool to try to mitigate and recoup some of the damages and some of the costs. But, of course, some of the most serious damages we'll never be able to recoup. We've lost too many people because of opioid addiction and other addictions, actually, and that is a very sad piece. But, again, this is a useful tool.

I do want to focus and I will focus a little bit on prevention. Although this is the end result of trying to recoup some of the costs of these very damaging opioid addictions, it is really important to focus energy and resources on preventing this in the first place. Of course, we will support this legislation.

Some of the investments that we made in 2018-19 were that we directed $63 million to address the opioid crisis. The breakdown of that was $39 million for the 2018-19 opioid response budget, which was dedicated to the implementation of the Minister's Opioid Emergency Response Commission's recommendations and continuing to fund initiatives that were previously recommended. There was a $4 million investment for community and addiction beds in Alberta Health Services. For anybody that has worked on the front lines and had to assist someone into an acute-care facility, I'm sure that you will attest to the fact that beds are scarce. The wait is often very, very long, and it is a difficult process. So that was a welcome investment. Also, there were $10.4 million for opioid treatment, $9 million for opioid medication coverage, with GOA Health and supplementary benefits.

Again, some of the more specific key investments were just over $14 million in start-up and operational funding for safe consumption sites – I certainly hope that we have more of an opportunity to discuss the merits of these sites; I think we hear on a regular basis just how much benefit there is in terms of life-saving benefit, actually lives that are saved, because of these sites – $9 million in funding for Suboxone and methadone; $4.3 million to establish the virtual opioid dependency program. I've not actually looked into that or talked to anybody that has used that, but it certainly seems like a good investment.

This was really important: almost $3 million to improve access to opioid treatment in primary care, again going back to the number of addiction beds available through Alberta Health Services. For anybody that has ever supported somebody to try to get primary care treatment for an opioid addiction or even an opioid overdose, it actually can be quite challenging.

Let's move on here. There was a $1.3 million investment to develop an injectable opioid therapy program, $1 million for a community-based naloxone program. You know, I would say that if any members in this place have not had any training around this or, you know, even just gotten a kit for your office, it's not a bad idea. I know we did a couple of years ago. Thankfully, we've not had to use it, and we've not had to give it out. But it is there, and we do use it as a bit of a teaching tool for anyone that comes in that has access to the public or that maybe finds themselves in a situation where it would be useful. We talk about that, how to get it, and then how to use it.

We also made a significant investment in needle debris mitigation, which I think is important, and there were some other initiatives.

I think it's really useful for us to talk about just how many naloxone kits were distributed between January 2017 and December 2018. It's actually a staggering number; 124,000 naloxone kits were distributed, saving – and these were self-reported reversals – 7,700 lives. I think that is an amazing investment.

As of October 2018 six safe consumption sites are operational in Alberta. There are four in Edmonton, one in Calgary, and one in Lethbridge, and the first hospital-based safe consumption site in North America is at the Royal Alex. Again, it is worth mentioning that from January to September 2018 there were a total of 122,497 visits to the Lethbridge, Calgary, and Edmonton community-based safe consumption sites. A total of 1,316 overdoses were attended to, and there were no deaths on the sites. I think, you know, that if we're going to talk about what a successful program looks like, that would be it.

Again, I will support this bill, certainly, but I think it is really important to emphasize again and again that this is a tool. Once is too late for many people. It's a tool to recoup some of the costs, some of the loss, but I think the biggest opportunity we have is to prevent this from ever happening.

How do you prevent addiction? Well, there are a lot of thoughts on that, but there are some very straightforward things that we as legislators can do to do our best to legislate, to do everything we can to prevent this. There are a few things that we know for sure contribute to the prevention of addiction, and one of those things is poverty eradication. Although it's a simple phrase, it's an incredibly complex action that requires a focus on the work, and it requires dedication of resources.

I guess it's a few months now that we've been in this place debating pieces of legislation and certainly the budget, and what I have seen – I've heard again and again, you know, that it's about sustainability, that it's about, I guess, giving tax breaks to large corporations and then hoping that that trickles down to everybody else. But there has not been, in my opinion, a consistent, focused effort on poverty eradication.

That requires a lot of work on multiple fronts. [interjection] Yes, it does require jobs, but it also requires good-paying jobs at the very lowest end. That means low-income earners. That means young people that earn the minimum wage trying to save for school, of course now trying to save for school with slightly higher tuition. That means people on income support. That means people that are unable to work for a variety of reasons, some of those reasons being addiction, mental health. That means people being on income support and knowing that that income will be indexed, at the very least. These are grinding poverty wages, but at the very least this was a little bit of a hand up.

Poverty eradication requires investment in safe and affordable housing. It requires investment in access to medication, access to therapy, access to all of these things that people living in poverty cannot afford. You know, it's not surprising when you hear somebody that has lived their life in poverty talk about the path that led them to the place where addiction was the result. You can see very clearly all along the way the failure of whatever systems we've set up in terms of poverty.

As legislators there's not a lot that we can do to help individual people from this place, but what we can do is introduce and support legislation that does everything we can to ensure that we address poverty.

You know, I talked a little bit about the therapies that are required. I don't know if you've ever supported somebody who doesn't have any disposable income. They're trying to live on under $900 a month. If you've ever tried to do that, it's virtually impossible. Every month that goes by, you are further and further in the hole. Then someone will say to this person who is living in poverty: "Well, you really need some therapy. You should really go see a therapist. You should go see a counsellor. You should go to this group. You should try this." But in real time that means maybe having a bus pass or being able to afford a bus pass or being able to afford your portion of the counselling fee, any of those things, or being able to afford child care or having a home.

All of these things are interrelated, and I understand that this piece of legislation is not focused on eradicating poverty. In fact, it's more about lawsuits. I understand that completely. But I just want to continuously remind this government that we have more tools to use. There are more things that we can do, and you have to know that any investment you make to eradicate poverty has a direct result on addiction. We know that. I think that the science is pretty clear. We've known it for a while, yet I don't know why – I guess it requires a lot of attention and resources. But we do know what the answers are, and they are prevention and investment.

Again, I do understand opening the doors to have producers of this product, very much like cigarettes, be responsible for what they have done and what they have created and what has been misused. I support that, and I agree with that. I don't always agree with all class-action lawsuits. With this one I actually would, because I do think that ultimately, as a class of people that are represented together to seek damages, they are harmed, and I think that in this environment and in this day and age we see these types of lawsuits more and more frequently. We have seen it with survivors, I think, of the '60s scoop. That was a class-action lawsuit.

More and more these days we see – and, again, I don't mean to skirt my responsibility to be loyal to certain sectors of this province – that the reality is that in our world, in North America in particular, there are more and more people coming together to look towards producers in certain sectors, sometimes oil and gas, that are saying that they want class-action litigation because of the implications or the ramifications of what different sectors have created, for lack of a better word. I don't always agree with every piece of litigation or every action. However, I do understand that it is a tool to use with producers and people that have reaped enormous benefit, not just a little bit but enormous benefit, from producing things like opioids and other things.

Again, I just want to reiterate that I am supportive of this legislation. I think it would have been quite lovely to have other pieces of legislation that addressed prevention so that we would never get here. Ultimately, of course, that is the goal, that we don't get here. I would have liked to see that. I would like to see that in the future, because I think that if we're just constantly trying to put a Band-Aid on a gaping wound, we're not really going to get very far.

On that note, I will take my seat. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to also support Bill 28, the Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act. I think this is a good step in supporting those with addictions. I would have liked to see it do a little bit more, but I'm happy to rise and talk about things that we can do as a government to support those that are struggling with opioid addiction.

We know that Albertans need this government to take action. Action: what does that mean? I think that means making sure that there are resources available for our health care and front-line support being put in place, expanding treatment and wraparound supports that are already in place, providing more for those that offer support and services to those struggling with opioid addiction.

We hear the countless heartbreaking stories of those that have died because of opioid use. When you sit down with a family and talk about the loss of their loved one, it's heartbreaking. You hear from families that if only there were more supports within the system, if only their child, their spouse, their grandchild was able to access more resources, more supports, perhaps this person wouldn't have died from an opioid overdose. Madam Speaker, I can tell you that I've heard these stories too many times from friends who have family members who are struggling with opioid addiction and just feeling completely helpless to what they can do.

I have a very good friend whose sibling suffers from an opioid addiction. He is a parent. He's now a grandparent. He lives in rural Alberta and really, really struggles to find resources, to find a physician that fully understands the needs that he has rather than writing another prescription for an alternative medication. He's struggling with opioids, and he's turned to the streets to find these drugs because the physicians have stopped providing the prescriptions, but they're not providing an alternative. They're not providing him services, addictions treatment that would perhaps save his life, and he has begged for some of these services. He has told me that he doesn't want to live this life, that it's something that he's embarrassed by. He makes promises to family that he's going to stop but can't. I know that in my friend's efforts she's met with addictions counsellors to try to get some resources, what they can do as a family to try and support him. The thing with addictions is that the majority of the services that are available, unless the addicts themselves want to get help and services, are not able to provide supports.

So knowing that we're making a step forward with supporting those suffering is a good thing, Madam Speaker. I think that hearing from Albertans about their concern about this crisis is essential, and we've heard that supports and resources are absolutely essential when we look at ways that we can support those suffering from addictions.

Our government, like we heard the Member for St. Albert talk about, made significant investments in ensuring that supports were available for those that were suffering. We made sure that community and addictions beds were funded, that specific opioid treatments through Alberta Health Services were funded. We increased access to things like naloxone, making sure that our first responders had them because we know that when someone is using and they are overdosing, naloxone will save their life. We know that safe consumption sites save lives. These are the types of steps that we took as a government to assist those struggling with opioid addictions.

It's not so much looking at the crisis but how did we get here, looking at prevention for those even starting on opioids. We heard the member talk about things like poverty having an impact. We know that for those that are struggling, that are dealing with job loss, that are dealing with threats of potential job loss, that are dealing with financial barriers, employment barriers, those are major stressors in peoples' lives, and they might then turn to ways to numb that. Right now it is a crisis of opioid use, and that's very tragic because people are dying. It's something that you can use once and overdose.

I've heard stories of parents whose children are struggling. Hearing a parent talk about the acknowledgement that they need to go and get a naloxone kit because it could save their lives – the terrified look on their faces is heartbreaking, knowing that they need to access a drug that potentially might save their child's life in the event of an overdose. Then trying to educate their child about the importance of safety: risk management, when you're working with people that are struggling, having that conversation; not using alone, making sure that you're around people that are aware that you are using opioids. Then how to administer naloxone, should that happen, is part of that conversation that we're trying to educate people with.

It's absolutely essential that we keep talking about this because without funding and without providing essential resources into our health care system, people are going to continue to die. I think that having a bill that is talking about that and looks at ways that we can start supporting people is something that's really, really important. Like I said before, this is something that doesn't go, I think, far enough, but it's a good first step. I know that it's something that I'm proud to stand in the House and talk about.

I know that the Royal Alex here in Edmonton was the first hospital that had a safe consumption site in North America. I know that that's a hospital that my constituents access. It's somewhere that my constituents go. You hear the stories about people in the community that are using in that area, so it's a logical, natural place to put a safe consumption site. If that's the community where people are using, it only makes sense that that's also a community where they're going to use the safe consumption site.

I have statistics here. From January to September 2018 there was a total of 122,497 visits to the Lethbridge, Calgary, and Edmonton community-based safe consumption sites. A total of 1,316 overdoses were attended to, and there were no deaths on these sites. We know that investing in services that help people, that meet people where they're at, saves lives.

Talking about this opioid crisis is so important. I'm happy to stand in the House and just say that this is something that I know was in our platform in supporting the opioid crisis, and I'm glad that this government has taken that leadership that we provided and is making a piece of legislation that is moving in the right direction. We know that we need to continue to improve access to opioid-dependency treatment facilities: perhaps opening clinics, opening more services, doing more education.

Making sure that our indigenous communities are properly funded: that's something that is very important. We took that to heart in our government. We heard from indigenous communities that this is something that they needed, so we invested. We put an additional $4 million in funding to support their own opioid-related initiatives in their communities. They have practices in their communities that they work through with treatment, and we said: "We want to support you. You come up with your program, and we will help fund it. It's your community. You're asking for this, and we want to support it."

Continuing to provide public awareness, like I talked about, initiatives within communities where they're self-identifying that they're struggling, listening to the community because they're the ones who see those that are struggling with addictions, believing in them, and making sure that they have the resources to support the community – we need to make sure that we're continuing to raise awareness and reduce stigma around opioid use. Like I said, if someone is using and they have shame and embarrassment about that use, they're more likely to use alone, in isolation, and overdose. If we're talking about it and acknowledging that someone is struggling, we can then provide services and support to that person that could perhaps save their life.

Madam Speaker, I again say that I rise today to support Bill 28, and I look forward to further debate and discussion on this as we move through this legislation. I just want to say thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak to this.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, would any minister like to close debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 20 Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019

The Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 20, the Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019. I mean, I think it's a bill that's caused quite a bit of debate in this House already, but it's always important to go back and look at what the consequences of the bill will be and how it will affect our families, our communities, and our neighbours.

Obviously, this bill makes every single Albertan pay more, right? It uses a sneaky measure, which the Premier himself railed against and called bracket creep when he was on the CTF, Canadian Taxpayers Federation, to do a tax grab and make every single family pay more in personal income taxes. That's something that is in black and white in this bill, and it's something that I think members of the House need to be aware of when they vote for or against this bill. I mean, we also think that there are going to be higher property taxes.

We think that investors are going to be moving their capital to other places. Indeed, we've already seen quite a few losses in the film and television industry. We've seen investment and jobs leaving this province and moving to other jurisdictions. We're also seeing things like tech jobs disappear because many of the investor tax credits and the digital media tax credits and the capital investment tax credits that were important in bringing technology, gave companies like BioWare the ability to double the size of their staff here in Edmonton, and attracted investment in jobs and technology jobs here to Alberta – they are now looking elsewhere. They're moving to other jurisdictions. They're moving to the United States. They're moving to other parts of Canada like Vancouver or Toronto.

It's something that I think is disappointing to see in this bill. It's disappointing to see that this bill basically takes a program that was diversifying our economy, that was investing in communities, making good new jobs, that supported things like oil and gas and also had the opportunity to diversify away from oil and gas, to do both of those things at the same time – we had these targeted investments to start bringing new corporations and new companies and start-ups and innovation here to Alberta. Instead, what we see is a $4.7 billion handout to the wealthiest corporations, that doesn't create any jobs and isn't effective at spurring innovation or helping start-ups because, Madam Chair, as we know, start-ups don't benefit from this $4.7 billion corporate handout; only wealthy, profitable corporations do, and that's something that I think is disappointing to see.

We think that there are going to be things like property tax hikes. We can see that money is going to be diverted from things like community organizations when we see the lottery fund being brought into general revenue. We can see that different funds that support cancer research are being abolished, and environmental protection and enhancement are being abolished. Those are all very disappointing things. It's the type of values that this government has. They don't think it's important to have these separate funds that are targeted to supporting our communities, supporting our communities in specific ways. The values show that they think it's better in general revenue, that this government knows better, that this government doesn't need direction on these funds, and I think that's something that's disappointing.

It's disappointing that this bill also attacks things like light rail transit. We know that the green line is now in jeopardy in Calgary. We know that the west LRT is now in jeopardy in Edmonton. It's really shocking, the attack on municipalities and the inability for the province to have actually gone to the table and negotiated some of these changes with municipalities. Instead, the government decided that they're going to tell cities what to do, that they know better, that that's their job. That's the government's prerogative. I think it's disappointing. I think cities are disappointed, I think municipalities are disappointed, and I think Albertans are disappointed. It's something that's shocking, and it's shocking because – I've listed this laundry list of changes that are coming that are going to hurt families, that are going to hurt communities, that are going to hurt Albertans, Madam Chair.

But you'll note something, that not a lot of them are quite that related, Madam Chair. It's interesting because it speaks to this government's direction for the Legislature. It speaks to how this government wants to treat the Legislature. What's happening is that this government is trying to Americanize this Legislature. They're bringing in an omnibus bill, a bill that changes, I believe, something like 20-some things at once. That's something that we've seen happen in American Legislatures, the Congress in the United States, the Senate in the United States, where they do these big omnibus bills and try to tack on as many things as possible so that it's hard for the opposition to understand, it's hard for the opposition to debate effectively, and it's hard to really narrow down what the intent of each single bill is, because it has multiple intents. That's something that's disappointing.

I don't think it's what we want to see here in the Legislature. I don't think we want to see an Americanization of our democracy. I don't think that we should Americanize how we do things in this province. I think Albertans are proud that we have our own way, that we can do things in a respectful manner, and that we don't have to try to use underhanded tactics like omnibus legislation to try and hide what's going on.

If the government indeed was proud of what they were doing and if they thought that Albertans supported what they were doing, they would know that they didn't have to do this, that they didn't have to try and wrap it all up and ram it through the House in one big package. They would know that they could bring each piece of the bill individually and debate it to its full merits. If they believed that Albertans supported it and they believed that that was something that they were proud to present, they wouldn't have tried to bundle it all up and try and hide it in one package to make it as complicated as possible and address almost every single ministry in this House. I think it's something that's short-sighted, I think it's ideological, and I think it's something that's going to hurt Alberta's prosperity. When we look at this clear partisanship, this pure ideology, and this pure changing of how we want to do things in Alberta to be more like the Americans, I think that's something that Albertans aren't going to be very happy about.

I'm going to go back and talk a little bit about some of these broken promises. We can see in this bill – again, Madam Chair, it's an omnibus bill, so I have to be all over the place here – that the dollars that were promised and the multiyear agreements for charters, for example, that were in the UCP platform are simply not being followed through with. The platform is actually just being broken. The promises are being broken by the government. It's in black and white, and perhaps that's why they tried to bury it in a 102-page-long bill.

Perhaps they didn't think that people would notice, Madam Chair, but we noticed. We noticed that on page 77 of the UCP platform it says, "Maintain dollars promised to municipalities for 2019-20, as well as the multi-year agreement in the Bill 32 Charters for Calgary and Edmonton." That's the quote from the UCP platform. Instead, what we see is basically a complete broken promise here. Instead, they're going to tear up the contracts. Instead, they're going to dictate to the cities how they want to move forward. Instead, they're going to dictate the terms of the agreements that are going to be negotiated moving forward, so they're not really negotiations. It's bad faith. I think this government knows a couple of things about bad-faith negotiations. This just again plays to that narrative and shows that they don't respect actually talking about how things should be done.

Again, from page 81 of the UCP platform, Madam Chair, they also said that they would "consult with stakeholders in the film, television and digital media industries to create an optimal tax credit designed to attract large productions and series." Again, given that the industry basically hates this tax credit – indeed, by cancelling the other film production grants and the former digital media tax credit, basically it's going to cost jobs right here in this province, it's going to cost people their livelihoods, it's going to cost families the ability just to make a living. Given that this is what this bill is doing and that the type of things they are doing directly affects the pocketbooks of Albertans and directly puts Albertans out of work, contrary to what their platform had intended to do, contrary to what they promised Albertans, given that they are directly, intentionally putting Albertans out of work – I think that's something that's very disappointing. I think it's something that all members of this House should be concerned about, that members of the opposition are particularly concerned about.

I think it's disappointing because we're seeing that when they give $4.7 billion away to big corporations, there are no returns and there are no jobs and there's no investment here in Alberta. In fact, we're actually seeing companies take their money and take it somewhere else. A big example is the United States. EnCana is walking away, and they actually said that they're taking $55 million additionally as profits as a result of the Premier's wealthy gift to profitable corporations. The Premier promised that his giveaway to big corporations would create jobs, but instead what we're seeing is that we're losing 27,000 jobs. That's something that's disappointing. We're seeing that this government's $4.7 billion giveaway to wealthy corporations, profitable corporations, is doing absolutely nothing to fill office towers. It's doing nothing to provide relief for out-of-work oil workers. It's doing nothing to provide relief for the economy.

In fact, as people continue to struggle and jobs continue to be lost, the types of cuts that are being brought in in this bill, the types of cuts that make life more expensive for every single Albertan, the increase in personal income taxes: all these things basically show that this government is standing up for wealthy corporations instead of for everyday Albertans. That's something that's very disappointing. It's something that's very disappointing, that we're seeing these types of cuts, because the investment tax credits and the capital investment tax credits and the digital media tax credit and all of the types of credits that were targeted and actually working are now just being removed. They're actually just being taken away, right? They were creating jobs, and families depended on them for their jobs.

As we can also see, this government's reckless cuts to the public service and this government's reckless cuts to innovation are now resulting in another 25 per cent layoff of the entire Alberta

Innovates Corporation staff, Madam Chair. Alberta Innovates is an organization that helps spur innovators, helps spur start-ups in particular and other organizations to do diversification – for example, they do things like oil field technologies; they do things like agricultural development – all across the spectrum. Instead of supporting innovation, instead of supporting these new jobs and diversifying our economy, instead of supporting these organizations and start-ups and job creators, what the government is doing is they said: we're going to remove all your grants, and then we're going to cut the actual branch that is there to support you.

Again and again this government is not standing up for small businesses, this government is not standing up for Albertans, it's not standing up for jobs. Instead, they're giving money away to their friends and donors and the wealthiest corporations.

I think it's something that's very disappointing because we're also seeing that on one hand, while they're making life harder – they're taking jobs away; they're removing funding from things that were creating jobs – they're slashing and burning the benefits that Albertans rely on as well. I mean, the new Alberta child and family benefit will reduce benefits for, I think, about 165,000 Albertans. That's something that means 165,000 Albertans will basically have less in their pocket at the end of every single month. That's not what this government ran on. I don't think this government intended to try and hurt this many families. Out of those 165,000, 55,000 of those Albertans will lose the benefit entirely, so there are 55,000 Albertans that are completely losing the child and family benefit tax credit. That's something that's very shocking to me because basically they've made 55,000 Albertans' lives harder – right? – 55,000 people in this province. Their lives are undeniably harder. They will have less money in their pockets at the end of the month because of the changes that this government wants to bring in this bill.

I think it's something that's disappointing. I think that this government should speak to it and explain to those 55,000 families why they think it's okay to take money out of their pockets without asking, why it's okay to take money out of their pockets without consulting at all. I know that the Premier and this government have spoken to how they wanted to move without consultation. I think that's very reckless. I think it's something that is going to hurt a lot of families, and it's going to make a lot of families suffer. I think that that's something that nobody in this House wants. When we see the government moving forward with these reckless cuts, these reckless attacks on basically every facet of our province, it is really shameful, and I think it's really disappointing.

We can also see that pretty clearly the government doesn't care at all about postsecondary students and their families. They're raiding financial supports for students. Tuition is going to go up by as much as 23 per cent, Madam Chair. Student loan rates are going up, so basically if you had a student loan, good luck, because now you're paying more. It works out to thousands of dollars per loan, something that is being used basically to pay for the $4.7 billion giveaway to profitable corporations.

If we're looking at postsecondary and we're looking at how people keep diversifying and how people get back to work and how people try to support themselves, well, postsecondary is one of the best ways to do it, to go back to school, whether it's another trade or some other form of postsecondary, and try to learn other things and try to be able to be useful in the workforce and have other opportunities in the workforce.

But instead of actually giving those opportunities to people that are out of work and young people, this government has decided that they're going to cut that and give $4.7 billion away to profitable corporations, that are going to lay off workers, lay off thousands of workers, and then move out of the country and take the money out of the country because they're just pocketing those profits, and I think that that's something that's very concerning. I think it's something that this government should be concerned about, but it appears that they either don't understand the impact or they don't care, Madam Chair, and that's something that's pretty disappointing.

I mean, I think I've spoken a lot about how basically this omnibus bill, this American-style omnibus bill, that attacks so many Albertans and attacks basically every facet of our community, is shameful and it hurts communities and families, but I want to hear from some of my other colleagues here as well, so I'm going to make sure we give some time for that.

I encourage every single member to actually read the impacts of this bill, to actually look at the bill and say that there are 165,000 families that you're taking child benefits away from. There are 55,000 families that you're actually taking the child and family benefit completely away from. I want every single member to think about that because what you're doing is that you're reaching into those households and you're telling them that they deserve less and that they shouldn't have support and that it's going to hurt and that you're okay with that if you support that.

That's just food for thought, Madam Chair, but I look forward to hearing from the rest of my colleagues.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak and perhaps offer some constructive changes to Bill 20. As my colleagues have said before in the media and the general public, these omnibus bills are problematic because of the scope and the breadth of what they try to cover. Perhaps, you know, totally unrelated, different topics sometimes can be both confusing and maybe not focusing in exactly how it should be.

I am this evening going to propose a specific change to a section. This section is 24, and it's talking about postsecondary education specifically, which is, of course, my responsibility as critic for the Official Opposition. What my amendment will try to address is issues around enrolment. Quite frankly, it took me a while to even sort of get my head around this one. I figured that if I was the critic, then I should know better, and I do, but for the general public and for others, you know, we need to cast some clearer light on this.

Maybe what I'll do, Madam Chair, with your consent, is to pass this amendment around, and then I will make some comments on it, okay?

The Chair: Awesome. Thank you.

Hon. member, do you have the original copy?

8:30

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Sorry.

The Chair: Okay. Hon. members, this will be known as amendment A3. I'll just give the member a minute to get a copy back.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Great. Thank you very much. This amendment, I think, has to do, like I said, with enrolment. The amendment should do the following things, right? When the minister wants to change enrolment targets, he or she must consult with the faculties or institutions in question. I think that making that explicit is pretty much a prerequisite for any changes to enrolment. You know that we want to make the best, efficient use of the positions in the faculties that we have around the province or the trades colleges or what have you – apprenticeship programs, let's say – and it's important to have conversations with the people on the ground that know best what's going on.

Second of all, if enrolment targets would affect a regulated profession, then the minister would have to consult with those responsible bodies as well. Again, I know from experience – you know, speaking to the teachers, for example, or with the licensed practical nurses' regulatory body, with the doctors – that this is all absolutely essential. We know that, let's say, for example, enrolment is quite explicitly determined in trades colleges like NAIT and SAIT in consultation with industry. They can give a pretty good idea. That's how places like NAIT and SAIT end up with an 80 or 90 per cent job success rate for their graduates in the trades, because they have an explicit conversation setting enrolment spaces with industry. That's worked really well for many years, and I think we need to continue with that.

Thirdly, the minister would have to ensure that enrolment targets are not adversely affecting completion rates of Alberta high school students, including First Nations, Métis, and Inuit high school students. Again, we want to make every effort to increase our graduation rates here in the province of Alberta. I know that, for myself as a minister, we employed a "Where is there room for most improvement?" sort of model in trying to improve high school graduation rates, and where there's room for most improvement is definitely with First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students. So we want to make sure that we are creating an environment where kids can look to graduate from high school with a purpose, that purpose being that there are postsecondary positions and opportunities for them to look forward to, to move to after they get their high school graduation completed.

I mean, that's, I think, a very practical and friendly change to this section of the bill that I believe will benefit lots of students. I'm doing this just to avoid, perhaps, unintended consequences – right? – down the road, because we don't want to limit the opportunities or possibilities of students, especially students that otherwise maybe don't normally go to a trades college or university or something like that, and just to keep the doors open fully for everybody.

These enrolment targets can be a signal to students and to institutions, and we want to make sure that we're sending the right message, not the wrong message. Setting the wrong enrolment target could lead to a number of challenges for institutions that may not be able to meet arbitrary targets, or they may just not be able to make sense of them at all, right? Again, you want to make sure it's something that people can live with, can live with in their planning. You know, one of the strengths of our postsecondary system here in the province of Alberta is its diversity. We have smaller colleges like Lakeland or Portage or Keyano, let's say, that provide very targeted regional programming and know what their students and what their clients and what their potential students are and how they could reach them in the future.

I noted, when I visited Concordia college here in Edmonton a couple of weeks ago, how their long-term planning was very specific to their college and I think offered an insight that is unique to their ability to see where their students had been coming from and where they will be coming from in the future. Indeed, they were super successful. They've, you know, doubled their enrolment in a very short period of time. They're growing. They need capital investment, just as a little hint to the hon. minister that they are growing and that they will come, and we need both the capital investment and the teachers' support to make that happen. That's just one of our 28 or so colleges across the province, and many others are in the same situation.

We want to build. That's my point, Madam Chair, that we want to build growth based on being creative and responsive to the regions, and we want to make sure that if we are setting targets and so forth, we're doing that in a responsible and fully open and consultative manner. I think this amendment does the job. It's a pretty fine, fine amendment if I do say so myself, and I would encourage constructive reflection and criticism of it, perhaps with the idea that we would pass it and make an amendment to Bill 20.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise to speak to this amendment, which I do plan on supporting. I thank the Member for Edmonton-North West for bringing it forward. I think it's important that we do support it.

Once again, looking at the legislation as it currently is stated, the minister may establish an enrolment target for a public postsecondary institution. Now, this amendment would change that to seek consultations of no less than six months before allowing a minister to establish such an enrolment target. I'm very concerned with the legislation as it's originally stated in Bill 20, with the fact that the minister now wants to further meddle in the postsecondary institutions within our province. We've heard this minister stand up day in and day out and say, you know, things like, "We need to get the politics out of postsecondary education" and "We need to let them be independent of the minister," yet here we have in Bill 20, in black and white, that the minister actually wants to further meddle in their ability to offer programming. So that's very concerning to me.

Once again, the philosophy of this UCP government on one hand says that they want to get out of the way of organizations like postsecondary institutions, yet in this legislation they're trying to do the exact opposite, which is very concerning. Really, the amendment is very reasonable in the fact that it asks that the minister provide six months of consultation with these institutions before making these arbitrary enrolment targets, and I think that it's the right thing to do.

This government talks day in and day out – their actions speak louder than their words, of course, but they talk about consultation very often. I would be interested to find out who they consulted with that brought these concerns about enrolment targets being enforced by the minister. I'd be very interested to hear from that minister how this came into Bill 20 in the first place.

We have many concerns. Once again, we look at Bill 20 talking about getting rid of these very important tax credits, which I will speak more to later. Their reasoning is that we need to get out of the way of politicians making decisions about where money should be moved. Well, of course, we will talk about the $4.7 billion that they are planning to move outside of the province, which is very concerning. On one hand they're getting rid of these very important tax credits which align us with other provinces in terms of the ability of the government to support industries like the digital media industry among others. Unfortunately, they are trying to get into the politics of deciding where students should go to school.

Once again, I thank the Member for Edmonton-North West for bringing this forward. I do plan on supporting it. The role of consultation in our democracy and as we create legislation is incredibly important. I would hate to see this section of Bill 20, which will, I imagine, hastily be moved through this Legislature, just like the previous bill was, and have wide, sweeping changes to the way that we do business and the way that we interact with our postsecondary institutions – that's very concerning to me, Madam Chair.

Once again, I don't think that the government should be in the business of deciding where students go to school or what they are doing in school, and I think that students who are in high school right now and thinking about what they want to do will be very offended that now we have a minister trying to pass legislation that may, without consultation, dictate how they are receiving their education in postsecondary or what education they are getting in the first place.

Of course, postsecondary institutions, as has been discussed, offer a wide array of programming, whether it be bachelor studies or – for myself, when I went, I first obtained a certificate in radio-television broadcasting, a two-year diploma. Then I returned for my electrical apprenticeship. I think that people should be able to study whatever they want to study. With this Bill 20, if it weren't to accept these amendments, that may change, and that's very concerning, especially when we consider the funding that these postsecondary institutions receive from the minister and from the Ministry of Advanced Education. If a postsecondary institution decided that they wouldn't in fact listen to the minister in how they would provide programming or establish enrolment targets, there's concern that the minister might come back and, you know, hold funding as a dangling carrot over these institutions. That's very concerning to me.

Once again, I hope all members will support this amendment to Bill 20. I think it's common sense. I think it's the right thing to do. Consultation is always the right thing to do, and rarely is there enough consultation. I think this strikes the right balance.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any more speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak in favour of this amendment. Certainly, you know, this omnibus bill that we're discussing right now, Bill 20, needs a lot of improvement. This goes partway to creating some improvement, so I appreciate my hon. colleague's amendment to shift things to make sure that students are able to access programs as they need to. I mean, one of the things that we know about this legislation that is proposed before us is that it is challenging students, absolutely, to make sure that they have the support that they should have in a province that's rich like Alberta, that should be supporting students to access postsecondary education.

There are other aspects of the bill that certainly are, you know, really – one of the questions I've posed in this House before is that when you look at legislation, when you look at policies, it's really important to ask: who benefits? Who benefits from this? Then you can tell whether – that goes a long way in terms of the assessment of that policy. There are many people who are not going to benefit from this legislation. Certainly, you know, two big players in our province are the big cities, both Edmonton and Calgary. Both of our mayors have come out very strongly against Bill 20. Quite frankly, they've been kind of shocked. Of course, I know that it's very important to this government to recite repeatedly, "Promise made, promise kept," but in terms of the city charters it's: promise made, promise broken. Both big-city mayors have talked about them scrapping the city charters fiscal framework, going from a $500 million plan that we, when we were government, worked very long and very hard on and really did our due diligence on to support really progressive, positive wins for both the province and those big cities. Of course, they need a bit of a different setup than the other centres that are smaller. The big cities have sort of unique needs and demands, so we worked very closely with both Mayor Iveson here in Edmonton and Mayor Nenshi in Calgary.

Mayor Iveson said that he was very disappointed because he was not expecting this change and that the province broke their commitment. He said: it was completely blindsiding to us that that's been reneged on as a campaign promise and as a piece of legislation that the UCP themselves voted for. This is also confusing because I know that the government likes to talk about making commitments and fulfilling their promises, but here's a clear one where they absolutely didn't. Certainly, Mayor Iveson has talked about, you know, the impact that it's going to have on the city of Edmonton and said: we're going to have to make some cuts, and they're going to hurt, and I'm going to explain to Edmontonians why the government of Alberta's broken promises are making life harder for Edmontonians. A direct quote from the mayor: projects like the LRT expansion will be delayed as funds aren't coming until later.

Mayor Nenshi also said, you know, understanding certainly that it was a part of the platform that this would be continuing, that the City Charters Fiscal Framework Act would continue: the United Conservative caucus voted for it in the fall Legislature sitting and will respect the multiyear funding in that agreement. Nenshi said: that's a black-and-white promise. With that, Nenshi crumpled up the piece of paper he was holding and threw it away because it meant nothing. The commitment dissolved right before him.

Certainly, the big cities are not benefiting, and much more is expected of them from this government. That's a pretty – I don't know – damning situation, I would say, because I think that any government wants to have integrity. I'm just confused by this omnibus bill where they clearly have ripped up those agreements with the big cities.

Besides that, there's just, you know, unrelated – really, as we know, it's an omnibus bill; it has all sorts of things thrown together in one. It makes it kind of difficult to make any coherence out of it. There are many funds that are going to be cancelled, and whatever reserves are left in them will just be transferred to general revenue. For example, with the access to the future fund, about $58 million will be transferred; with the environmental protection and enhancement fund, $150 million will be transferred just to general revenue; with the Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund, $451 million; and then with the Alberta lottery fund, $52 million. These organizations that are being disbanded by this omnibus bill provided some valuable contributions to our province.

One of them that I'd like to talk about a little bit is the Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund. Certainly, this organization supported society to have awareness about cancer, how to prevent it. You know, certainly, we know that cancers are linked to how we live. Some cancers are; some cancers aren't. Things such as what we eat and how much alcohol we drink, whether we're active or up to date with our screening tests: these are all important things. And this Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund would actually do education programs, support Albertans to understand: what are some things that we can do to take care of ourselves? You know, having a cancer diagnosis can create a huge difficulty for a family.

I mean, we know there is a tremendous amount that can be done to overcome a cancer diagnosis. I'm living proof of that. I have had treatment for leukemia, and I am doing quite well now. I'm being followed for the next year and a half or something, and then, they tell me, I'll be cured if things go well. I'm so grateful for the tremendous work that this group has done with all sorts of different kinds of cancers.

One of the things they did was that they did reach out all over Alberta, to many different towns and cities and people living on-reserve, and actually helped them to understand what are some things they could do to overcome the challenges, you know, to make sure that they were healthy and living well.

Here in Edmonton the Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund actually funded the Kids on Track Association of Edmonton. That helps kids who live in low income, new Canadians, ethnically and culturally diverse, and marginalized families who may be socially isolated and face barriers to inclusion. They were given a grant to increase operational capacity to provide more opportunities for the families that they worked with. That's just one of them. I have, like, several pages.

Up in Fort MacKay they had an outdoor community garden project to build on the success they'd seen with the indoor tower garden. This garden will become a community hub and create a sense of community and togetherness for residents and community members.

The Samson Cree First Nation was partnering with a number of community agencies to engage youth in a new health program, Cree youth cooking skills, and it'll focus on promoting a healthier lifestyle through an improved understanding of healthy eating, cooking skills, and cultural teachings.

The Boys & Girls Clubs of Calgary received a grant; Jasper Place Wellness Centre, Food4Good received a grant; the North Peace Youth Support Association in Fairview and the Alexander First Nation and the Viking Community Wellness Society received a grant. You know, I hope I'm making myself clear in that I'm explaining that all over our province people benefited from this program, and now it seems that our current government no longer thinks that this is important and has just put the excess revenues, I guess, into general revenue.

We also know that with the access to the future fund, Alberta Advanced Education, there was $58 million in that. That helped our advanced education system be innovative, supported them to develop excellence in Alberta's advanced learning system. I mean, that's one of the key words, it seems, maybe a buzzword that this government likes to use, "innovation." You know, innovative things are going to happen so that magically programs can go on without funding, just through innovation somehow. But innovation actually needs funding. It needs support, and it needs money. This is a program that was already set up that, unfortunately, is no longer going to be served. Are we going to be able to continue to have that innovation in the advanced ed system?

One of the areas that I'm certainly quite concerned about is just, you know, what this government has done to the film and video industry in cancelling grants and replacing them with tax credits. The issue is kind of twofold. One is that the grants that have been cut have been replaced by tax credits. You know, some people have low budgets, and because of that, they can't really claim anything. They need those grants. They can't go ahead with a project without those grants.

When the cuts to the grants were made, the film industry and the video industry were, you know, strongly impacted. I met with representatives from the film and video association, FAVA, here in Edmonton. Their office is located in my riding, in the Orange Hub, which is sort of a building that has many nonprofits. They said that they're just overwhelmed with the changes and that so many projects are now in limbo. Projects can't go ahead with the smaller creative artists trying to do these projects because the grants have been cut, and the tax credits just aren't enough. There's actually a whole year in there, because of just the way this government has changed the rules on when you can apply and when you can't, that they won't have funding.

You know, when I talked to the staff there, they said: I don't want to move out of Alberta, but I feel like this change in how we're going to be funded is actually forcing me to. They're looking at places like Manitoba, possibly, having to move projects out of the province. This is just tragic because the industry was really building and growing and had some momentum. To have almost a year of funding not come through really has stymied so many projects. It's really very sad because a lot of the work that they're doing is local. It's about Alberta. There are a lot of projects focused on, you know, indigenous Albertans. These projects may be lost or moved somewhere else because this government is not supporting our film and video industry. That is very troubling. It's a creative industry that was really beginning to thrive, and we're very sad to see that happen.

You know, other aspects that I'm concerned about, too – again, it seems almost illogical that we're talking about the film industry, talking about those funds, talking about the city charters, and now I'm going to talk to you about indexing tax brackets, yet this is all in one bill. This is in this omnibus bill. It's very clear that this government just wants to ram things through without us really having the time to understand and clearly debate fairly.

Now I'm going to talk about indexing tax brackets. It's the first time since 2001 – that's, you know, 19 years ago – that tax brackets have not been indexed. Even though this government's narrative is that, "No, we're not raising taxes," they absolutely are because their neglecting to do this has meant that all Albertans will be paying more, $600 million more in taxes over this term. That is a concern, absolutely, for our opposition here. We are not in support of that. Each year, we know, the cost of living goes up. Those kinds of things are just done, and this government is just trying to grab money from individuals. Despite them saying that for sure they're not going to raise taxes, it's a clear indication that they are.

You know, in moving to do so many different things with this bill, it's confusing for regular Albertans to even understand what this government is doing, but I think that perhaps that's part of the plan. The plan is: we're just going to try to ram as much through, and Albertans won't really understand, so they can't actually be concerned about it. Certainly, on this side of the House we are concerned, and we are doing our best to identify these things that this government is doing that are hurting Albertans. It's not as rosy as it was presented during the campaign and what they said in their platform. There are clear broken promises, and I've identified some of them right now: not indexing tax brackets, breaking the commitment regarding the city charters. These are things that are hurting Albertans, hurting Albertans here in the big cities . . .

Mr. Ellis: Point of order.

Ms Sigurdson: . . . and certainly also . . .

The Chair: Sorry, hon. member. A point of order has been called.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Ellis: I apologize. I hesitate to interrupt. I'm sorry. I was certainly listening intently to what the member was saying. I rise under 23(b):

speaks to matters other than

(i) the question under discussion.

I certainly appreciate the member's opposition to the bill itself, but we are talking about the amendment here, postsecondary enrolment targets. I appreciate the fact that the member has talked about everything in the bill with the exception of postsecondary enrolment targets, but I certainly ask the chair to try and bring this under the amendment on which we are talking.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. member, I would tend to agree with this point of order. You have about three minutes left, which I'm sure you will use to talk about the amendment. Please proceed.

Debate Continued

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I will focus now more closely on the amendment. Certainly, the amendment is to Bill 20, and that was my focus. But I understand that this is – I just want to again reiterate that I certainly am concerned about many things in Bill 20, and this sort of amendment does go some of the way to improving the legislation before us and making sure that students are supported.

With that, Madam Chair, I think I'll take my seat.

The Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Happy to rise to speak to the amendment before us. You know, I'll be voting against the motion, and I'll be encouraging them to do the same. I find the amendment quite prescriptive in what it's seeking to achieve here. I mean, it's absolutely important that as we look at moving forward and we look at developing enrolment targets with our postsecondary institutions, we do that in a collaborative and a consultative way, as we have been, as I have been with our institutions thus far in terms of fulfilling our campaign commitments that we made to Albertans as they relate to postsecondary education. We've doing that with a lot of very thoughtful discussion, very thoughtful debate and deliberation with our postsecondary stakeholders, our university administrators, our faculty representatives, our student leaders. There's definitely a very strong desire and a very strong history already from our side in terms of active consultation with our postsecondary institutions, and we will absolutely be continuing that as we look at developing enrolment targets for our postsecondary institutions.

The bill already makes it clear, on page 64 here if you're following along, in that it says, "The Minister, in consultation with public post-secondary institutions, may identify and establish enrolment targets." It's a little redundant and too prescriptive. I think it's important that we do have consultation with our postsecondary institutions, which is already proposed in Bill 20 here for us to be able to do that. Again, I find the amendment quite prescriptive, and it may result in many unforeseen problems and challenges. There are specific timelines in here, a requirement for six months of consultation for enrolment targets, and other prescriptive elements such as competitive admission requirements and that it cannot change more than 5 per cent from the previous year. I think we absolutely have to be very careful and diligent about how we establish enrolment corridors. There's no question about it. We have to be very thoughtful, and that'll be done in consultation with our postsecondary institutions in the right way.

I know that the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction would agree with me when it comes to this amendment as well. This has been a recurring theme that we've seen over the past few years, and our institutions are really looking to us to follow through and fulfill our campaign commitment of removing onerous red tape. There's been a lot of that which has been imposed by the former government. We believe it's important that our institutions have the ability and the time and the resources to engage in those activities that are central to their mandate – pursuing research objectives, innovating, providing high-quality education to the young people of Alberta – not filling in needless reports and onerous administrative requirements, a lot of which have been imposed on them by the former government.

So I encourage my colleagues to not support the amendment that we have before us for the time being. Again, I believe that it's too prescriptive. I do believe, again, it is important that we do work in consultation, in collaboration with our institutions. They certainly know that that's my preference moving forward. That's the relationship that we've cultivated.

I'll yield the rest of my time to you, Madam Chair. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any other members on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank my friend the Member for Edmonton-North West for bringing forward this amendment and my friends the members for Edmonton-West Henday and Edmonton-Riverview for speaking so thoughtfully to the amendment, and I also want to thank the Member for Calgary-Bow for actually getting up and speaking to the amendment. It has certainly not been the habit of members of Executive Council to debate in any way the amendments that the opposition has brought forward, so I do appreciate the fact that the Member for Calgary-Bow has at least engaged in the debate. However, I do take issue with a number of the points that he raised.

First of all, you know, I think it's important for us to establish that here in the NDP caucus we believe that access to higher education is a right and that every student in Alberta should have a fair shot at going to the university or college of his or her choice. That's why we're bringing forward this amendment, Madam Chair. First of all, the first section talks about making sure that the enrolment targets that are set don't adversely affect student completion rates or negatively affect competitive admission rates. One of the things that we've seen already in the postsecondary sector here in Alberta is skyrocketing admission requirements because of the lack of spaces available in postsecondary programs. That's across all programs. It's not just limited to medicine and nursing, business, those high-demand programs. Even for programs that in other jurisdictions see falling enrolments – and I'm thinking about a basic science degree, for example – enrolment admissions for those kinds of programs have skyrocketed.

I've got a number of young people in my life who were in the process of enrolling in university or college over the past year, and even though these people had averages in their grade 12 years in the high 80s and low 90s, they couldn't get a space in a basic science program at the University of Alberta. That's the case at many universities all across the province. We heard, when I was Minister of Advanced Education, from a number of parents, particularly in Calgary, that their students who were high achievers – by any standard, they were high achievers – couldn't get into the programs of their choice, Madam Chair. That speaks to the lack of accessibility in postsecondary education in this province, an issue that will only get worse under the policies of this government. You can't cut government grants to every college and university by 5 per cent or more and increase accessibility to those programs.

I would be curious to see what's going to happen at the University of Calgary, who just announced that they're laying off approximately 350 staff. What is that going to do to the enrolment requirements in basic arts and sciences programs at that university, when you've got 350 fewer people to deliver those programs to the students?

That's going to be the case at every university and college because we know that all of the layoffs are not being announced yet, but we anticipate that with the massive reductions in the government grants that we have seen under this UCP government, we can anticipate far more layoffs of that magnitude all across the sector.

I would just note that it's interesting that the government presented in its full-time equivalent estimates in the fiscal plan that there were only going to be 300 layoffs in the entire postsecondary sector with the government grant reductions that the government brought forward, and I would hope that perhaps the Minister of Advanced Education would at least ask the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board to revise those numbers so that they more accurately reflect the number of layoffs that we have seen already. They've already exceeded their targets, and that's only one institution that's announced layoffs, and there are far more to come, but that's a side note.

We also want to make sure that, you know, the minister and the department are engaging in consultation, and in section (2) of this amendment that we're bringing forward, we specifically list students because students are often left out of the consultation processes that take place in the postsecondary sector.

Under our government we were quite proactive in making sure that students had a seat at the table. We were engaged in a number of consultations. We engaged in student mental health improvements, and we had students engaged in the consultation process around how to improve the delivery of student mental health programs on campuses all across Alberta. We engaged in a tuition review and a funding model review. We made sure that students were at the table when we were consulting on those issues.

We also had a tech seat enrolment increase plan, and we had student representatives involved with those consultations as well. It's important, I think, that we establish the legal requirement, then, that students be included in making sure that consultations happen with their voices heard because we certainly don't want the people who are going to be most affected by the minister's decision to monkey around with enrolment targets to negatively affect students and not have their voices involved in the process before the minister engages in those kinds of decision-making efforts.

I think that, you know, the one aspect that the Member for Calgary-Bow raised in his opposition to this amendment was the fact that we're prescribing a target for a period of not less than six months on the proposed enrolment target, and I think that that's only fair and reasonable given the speed at which changes in the postsecondary sector have been imposed by this government. It came way too quickly, completely by surprise. There was nothing about any of the changes, other than the adoption of the Chicago principles, that was in the UCP campaign platform, and the system can only handle so much change at once. So if the minister engages in this enrolment target project, we need to make sure that it's done in a thoughtful and timely manner, and I think that a period of not less than six months to engage in those kinds of consultations is reasonable given the sudden shocks that have been applied to the postsecondary system already by this government and the need to engage in any further changes in a thoughtful and reasonable manner.

The Member for Calgary-Bow well knows how difficult it is to make change in the postsecondary world, and I think that all of the stakeholders who are involved in the postsecondary world would welcome and appreciate a six-month time frame for consultations around proposed enrolment targets.

You know, the enrolment targets, of course, with respect to including members of the regulated profession: I think most universities and colleges who do provide programming for students who are going into professions that are regulated already have some kind of mechanism to consult with those professions. But I think that in these cases it's even more important that those representatives be at the table, particularly given the fact that this government is waging an all-out assault on members of the public sector. Regulated professions who will be working in the public sector will be significantly and negatively affected by this government's decisions to kick a number of public-sector employees to the curb, and we want to make sure that we're not imposing enrolment targets on those kinds of programs and then graduating students who don't have a possibility of a job because this government refuses to fund an adequate number of spaces in the public sector.

You know, it's interesting. In his response to this amendment the Member for Calgary-Bow has complained on the one hand about it being too prescriptive yet on the other hand complains that he's the great laissez-faire, hands-off government, and of course nothing could be further from the truth. This accessibility and affordability clause was nowhere to be found in the Post-secondary Learning Act, and enrolment targets are an entirely new thing in the postsecondary sector, that the Member for Calgary-Bow seems to want to impose on the system with no good justification.

Now, I will say that we did fund targeted program growth in the postsecondary sector under my watch, but that was a response both to our government's desire to diversify the economy of Alberta away from oil and gas, something that this current government has completely abandoned, much to the detriment of future generations of Albertans, I'm sure, but also to the demand from the growing tech sectors in the cities of Edmonton and Calgary and other places where that sector is growing. They told us that in order to attract investment and to create growth in that industry, we needed to graduate people with technical skills that would allow them to be employable right away upon graduation. That's why we funded those enrolment growths.

You know, it's interesting that the government has moved away from that. We had set aside $50 million to create 3,000 new tech spaces in the postsecondary sector over the next five years, and the government has completely removed the funding available for that. It's interesting that the minister is so eager to impose enrolment targets, yet any funding that was made available for creating enrolment targets has been removed from this budget.

I also want to express some concerns with the fact that the Member for Calgary-Bow seemed so reluctant to include students in the consultation requirements, as this amendment does. I want to warn him against just listening to the voices of university administrators, who, I can tell you, don't always have the best interests of students at heart. They are considering a wide number of factors when they make their decisions. Students are certainly one of them, but it's not always the overriding factor. In a climate where government grants are drying up pretty quickly, you know, university and college administrators are focusing more and more on what's best for the bottom line and making sure that students' concerns are not addressed as the top priority.

The minister is going to be approached with fantastic-sounding programs, you know, a new certificate in synergy or a diploma in interdisciplinary studies or a master's degree in business for engineers or I don't know what other kinds of things. The price tag for those kinds of programs is going to be extremely high because any time a university or college introduces a new program, that is an opportunity for that university or college to also set a new tuition rate. They're going to recommend the creation of a bunch of fantastic-sounding programs that are going to cost an arm and a leg and that will only provide access to the absolutely wealthiest of the students here in Alberta and will do nothing to increase access for the people who are disadvantaged due to social, economic, geographic, or cultural factors.

That's why it's really important, Madam Chair, to have students at the table, because they understand what it's like to struggle to get into a university or college, and they act as an effective counterbalance to the voices of administrators, who are definitely not shy about creating very expensive programs that cater to only the wealthiest in the province and do nothing to enhance the accessibility or affordability of the postsecondary sector here in the province.

You know, I would encourage the Member for Calgary-Bow and the other members of the UCP caucus to give this amendment careful consideration. I think it would be wise for everyone to vote in favour of this amendment because we want to make sure that the enrolment targets that are set by this government do not negatively impact students in this province, which, if left unchecked and left only to the desires of the minister alone in consultation with postsecondary-sector administrators, would probably not happen.

I'm sure that all members want to go back to their constituencies and tell the young people in their constituencies that there will be a place for them in the university or college of their choice and that they voted in favour of this amendment to make sure that those spaces were provided, so I hope that all members here in this House will vote in favour of this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I welcome the opportunity to speak to this amendment. As many of you will know, I have been an instructor at the University of Calgary for many years and, in fact, continue to hold tenure at the University of Calgary in the Faculty of Social Work.

You know, some of the considerations in this particular section of this, well, simply ridiculous compilation in Bill 20 of unrelated phenomena are of concern. We know it's of concern because whenever you're trying to bury things in a pile of other things, you know you're trying to hide them. I am very concerned about what the intention is and what direction we're going with here. The underlying concern for me is the difference between myself and the members of the government in terms of our attitude toward university and other postsecondary institutions in terms of their purpose and their value in society.

Now, the thing that concerns me is that in this section of Bill 20 that is being amended by the amendment we're discussing right now, it's trying to introduce into the Post-secondary Learning Act some increased influence by the minister on the decisions of the institutions which are provided with the responsibility of educating our citizenry. That concerns me a great deal. One of the important aspects of a democracy is that we have people who have a variety of backgrounds and experiences all being given the opportunity to bring their talents and understandings and their skill sets to make decisions on behalf of that section of society for which they are responsible. Now, sometimes that feels a little bit mucky. Sometimes it feels like there are a number of different people making decisions for different reasons.

If we were talking about business, for example, the government members would be very happy about that. They would say that government should stay out of the way and allow businesses to compete against each other and do things. From that organic process, then, good things will rise, and because of the competitive nature of the marketplace, things that are not successful will fall away over time.

Here we have a section of Bill 20 where the government is doing exactly the opposite, so there's inconsistency in their fundamental understanding of what they believe about the nature of society. In this case they're trying to insert the government into the discussion on what institutions will do in order to ensure enrolment in particular areas. That's of great concern because, again, like almost every bill that has been brought forward by this government, it's a centralization of power and decision-making into the hands of a few. We'll literally be in a place where 24 members of cabinet will be making decisions that used to be made by thousands of people around the province of Alberta. When you do that, when you create this small oligarchy of power, then we are in danger of having only a very narrow philosophical range being pursued in terms of our education of our citizenry.

That's of deep concern to me. I'm very concerned that the underlying intention of this act which we're trying to amend here is to bring it into a small group so that they can push particular ideological notions about: what is a valuable piece of learning, what is a valuable pursuit at a postsecondary level versus a nonvaluable? As soon as you have government deciding that these things are valuable – we'll support them, and we're going to increase enrolment in these areas, but we will not do that in these other areas – then we have centralized control, which I think is problematic and even dangerous.

I can tell you that I know that the government very often has a very simplistic view of what education is about, that somehow education needs to be specifically and concretely directed toward a particular form of employment; that is, if one goes into a university or NAIT or one of the academic postsecondary institutions, the government is saying that they should only be going in there because they have the ultimate ideal of obtaining employment in that particular area. I think that that's a very dangerous concept in a democracy.

In fact, we know that in universities a significant number of the students in any program will never actually be involved in the profession for which they're being trained. If you go to an average law school, for example, you'll find that it's almost 50 per cent of students that never actually end up practising law beyond a very brief time after they've gone to law school. Instead, they use it as a kickoff place to move into places such as politics, very common for people with legal training, or go into business, where, while they may bring some of their legal knowledge, they're not actually acting as a lawyer or solicitor in any way but, rather, acting as an executive within that operation. We know that students do that. Every professor will tell you that a significant portion of their students are not going in the direction of the employment to which the government would like them to be trained.

We think that's okay, and we think that it's okay because our understanding and our value for university education goes much beyond the practicalities of being trained for a particular function in society. Those other things that students learn are fundamentally important in a wide range of things in society. The ability to analyze situations and to engage in complex problem solving is fundamentally important in almost anything you do, not just your business or your occupation but, rather, your whole engagement in society.

We talk often here about the fact that we're very concerned about the undermining of democracy that's been going on in this Legislature over the last number of weeks. One of the things that a good postsecondary education does is provide people with the tools to effectively participate in that democracy, to not just simply vote for whatever is going to give me my job, my profession the greatest outcome – how am I going to personally gain from this? – but to think in a more community-oriented, publicly oriented manner so that they are pursuing not just the simplistic demands of their own wants and needs but, rather, looking at: how do we create a society in which the greatest number of people will benefit and that all people will have opportunities to enjoy participation in?

It's that kind of thinking that has led us to the place where we can now say that compared to 100 years ago or 150 years ago, people have an ability to participate in the benefits of society in a way that was not true 150 years ago. In Canada 150 years ago and before that in England and other places from which many of our people came to settle here in Canada, they didn't have opportunities. If you were born into the wrong class, you simply would never have an opportunity to move out of that class and participate in society in a new way. It was completely unlikely that if you were born into a poor family, you would ever become a doctor, you would ever become a lawyer, or you would ever become an academic.

It's because we believe in the values inherent in all people that we believe that all people should have the opportunity to move from whatever circumstance they happen to be born into into the circumstance that would allow them to express their greatest abilities and to contribute the most to the larger society, not just for themselves but for all people. For some people, we know that their contribution will be affected by the barriers that they experience, whether it happens to be poverty, whether it happens to be disability, whether it happens to be, you know, family trauma, all of those kinds of things. Our desire is to understand those barriers and to move beyond those barriers so that we can help all people to step over the barriers and move into a place where they would not have been unless we had created the opportunity for them to do that. That's what happens at a university, at a postsecondary institution like a technical institution, not just simply training for the job.

So it's really important that when we start to look at the issue of enrolment targets, we have to be very cautious about the limited philosophical point of view we have about a university and the danger of using an act like the Post-secondary Learning Act to pursue that limited philosophical perspective. Instead, what we want to do is that we want to look at those broad, grand ideas that have helped us to rise above the chaos of our life, the kind of life that has been described as short and nasty and difficult by philosophers, to a life in which people can be celebrated for their talents, whatever they may be, and for their opportunity to contribute those talents to the larger society.

That's the kind of thing that we're getting at here when we talk about amending this section of Bill 20, and that is that we want to ensure that none of the decisions that are being made by the minister are going to stop us from engaging in those grand philosophical ideas that have led to us having the best standard of living in western democracies that the world has ever seen, the least amount of violence that history has ever seen comparatively to what it would have been like 300 years ago, the greatest amount of opportunity to change your socioeconomic status, the greatest opportunity for you to travel and to see greater parts of the world and to participate in the governance of your own society through a democratic process that requires that you have knowledge and the ability to engage in analysis and thoughtful decision-making in terms of that participation. Those are the kinds of things we need to protect if we're going to move forward here.

If we suddenly revert to, "We need more doctors, so we're going to try to increase the number of doctors, but we don't really care whether or not they have a broad education; we simply want people to perform a function," then we're going to find ourselves going backwards in terms of what we have achieved as a society, and that's really not acceptable. That's true of any profession. If we say that we want more lawyers – God forbid; I come from a family of many, many lawyers – but we didn't ask them to think broadly beyond their own profession, then we would find ourselves in trouble. There is no profession that by itself completes society. We need all professions. We need the talents of all people, who bring with them different experiences, different understandings of the universe, and different ways of engaging in the democratic process and in the community in which we all live.

This is the thing that's of concern here in Bill 20, that we are moving away from these fundamentally important democratic processes that we have literally spent thousands of years creating and that have helped the greatest number of people to rise up from the hard-toil work of having labour that only is directed at feeding themselves for a day in hopes that the next day they can also do the same thing to being able to actually contribute in a grander, more celebratory way in the benefits of all society, some of them by being excellent doctors, some of them by being excellent lawyers, but some of them by being the sort of people who help us to think better and to make better decisions by bringing incredible artistic talent to the visual arts, to the dramatic arts, to sculpture, and to dance and all those other kinds of areas. That's what enriches society, and you don't get that by saying that we need more people to perform a particular governmentally decided function.

We need people to be able to move into those kinds of professions because they are personally engaged and have within them talents and abilities that other people don't have. I would love to be able to say that I can sing, but I simply cannot. I could certainly clear out this House if I were to start singing now, but I certainly admire the people who can do that. I can tell you that they truly enrich my life and enrich the life of the society in which I live. I have friends who have moved to Edmonton simply because we have such a wide range of possibilities here in Edmonton. They came here. One friend, who I had an amusing conversation with, said that he came to Edmonton because they have things like the Folk Festival and the Fringe Festival and the jazz festival and the Heritage Festival, and I said to him: "Oh. Which one of those do you like the most?" He said: "Oh, I don't go to any of them. I just love to live in a city that has all of those things."

I thought that was amusing but I also understood what he was saying. It wasn't about his own personal needs that were being satisfied and fulfilled by any of those particular things. It was about creating the opportunity for society to thrive, not simply to survive by completing the functions that are necessary for a society to get along day to day to pay their bills but to actually create an opportunity for people to enjoy their lives and to enjoy their relationships with other people and to create the society in which the outlook of your day is about being in relationship with others and not just simply providing the function as a cog in the machine to some other system merely so that you can put food on the table. I think that that's the concern that we have here in this amendment, and that is that we need the government not to be overly controlling in terms of making decisions about the enrolment targets.

Now, we know that universities for a long time have been engaged in processes where they try to encourage enrolment and try to ensure that students are successful. It's generally referred to in academic settings as strategic enrolment management, or SEM. I just want to read you a quote by Michael Dolence, who said that SEM is "a comprehensive process designed to help institutions . . .

It’s very important that we trust our institutions, that when we create universities, we trust them to have an understanding of their own function and their part in the larger society. We encourage them in their strategic enrolment management, but we do not control it. We do not move that kind of decision-making away from the universities and the colleges into the role of the minister because I think there’s danger when we do that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members looking to speak to amendment A3? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It’s always a pleasure to rise and speak to an amendment in this place, particularly when it’s an amendment from my hon. colleague for Edmonton-North West.

I think that it’s a very reasonable amendment, because when we look at amendment A3 and we look at Bill 20, Bill 20 basically does every single thing it can to attack postsecondary students, right? It makes life harder in almost every single way for postsecondary students. So why don’t we try to do something about actually getting people into postsecondary? If we’re going to make their lives hard and we’re going to make their lives expensive and we’re going to make their loans cost more and their tuition cost more and all the things that they do cost more, Mr. Chair, then perhaps we can at least make sure that they get into school first. I think that’s something that’s very important.

I think it’s very important. When we look at the way Bill 20 is worded before the amendment, it basically gives carte blanche to the minister – right? – to do whatever he wants, to have no guidelines on how to set out these targets without doing any consultation. I think that’s something that’s very shocking. I think that governments shouldn’t move in that way. Governments shouldn’t do things without consultation. They shouldn’t do things without understanding the effects it will have on communities, without understanding the effects that things will have on completion rates of high school students, FNMI students, and so much more, and without understanding what it will do to affect things like competitive admission requirements.

When we talk about these types of issues, Mr. Chair, we have to understand, in a wholistic picture, that postsecondary education is not in a bubble, right? Everything we do at one end affects the other end. When we do things like increase tuition by 23 per cent as a means to pay off the $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate giveaway, when we do things like try to increase student loan rates by 1 per cent, on the other end you’re going to be affecting enrolment. You’re going to be affecting the ability of people to enter the schools. So when the minister makes these carte blanche changes to entrance requirements and enrolment caps and enrolment targets – this amendment allows us to ensure that we’re not prohibiting, in a negative way, students from entering postsecondary education, because we know that postsecondary education is so essential to having a strong workforce. It doesn’t matter whether you go to a trade school or a college or a university. Going to postsecondary education improves your life outcomes in so many different ways. That’s something that I think that members on both sides of this House will understand and support.

When we talk about these programs, we have to understand that we should be trying to have a measured or reasoned approach, right? The minister got up earlier and spoke a little bit about how he thought it was too prescriptive and how he didn’t like how prescriptive it was and how it kind of told him what to do. I think that’s something that’s a little bit disappointing, Mr. Chair, because when we look at the amendment, it says: well, the minister must consult. That’s basically the crux of the amendment here, that the minister should actually talk to people about what he’s doing. If the minister doesn’t think that’s an important aspect of his job, then I think that perhaps the minister has a lot of things about his job he needs to reconsider.

I think it’s very important that when we look at amendments, we actually understand what they’re proposing, understand what the core values of the amendment will be, and understand how the core amendment will change what we’re trying to move forward with. When we talk about having a proposed consultation period and enrolment target period and all these sorts of things and when we talk about the different types of professions that are being governed and having these types of significant changes, that the minister in the original bill, without the amendment, is being given carte blanche to change, when we see these significant powers being given to the minister without any consultation, it really begs the question: why should we trust the minister? It’s not that I say that I don’t trust this minister, but legislation has to work for years – right? – and potentially decades, Mr. Chair. It’s important that when we pass legislation, we understand what the long-term impacts are going to be.

Without doing adequate consultation and without requiring the minister to do adequate consultation, I think it’s doing a disservice to all of our constituents. It does a disservice to all Albertans, really, because having the ability to actually understand the impact by talking to administrators, by talking to students, by talking to high schools, by talking to school counsellors, by talking to teachers – doing consultation is not a bad thing. This government seems to think that doing consultation is a dirty word. Consultation, for them, is a dirty word, Mr. Chair. The Premier himself said that they wouldn’t stop for consultation, that they must move forward quickly. I think that that’s something that doesn’t speak to why we are here as legislators. It doesn’t speak to: what is the best type of change we want to make for our province? It doesn’t speak to the type of bill that we want to be passing. I think that’s something that’s a little bit disappointing. I think it’s something that I’m hoping the minister will reconsider, that I’m hoping all members of this House will reconsider as well.

When we talk about planning to increase participation, when we talk about trying to kind of improve the livelihoods and abilities of students across this province, it’s important that we actually understand what we’re doing. Right here, in section (a), sub (b) of the amendment, we want to make sure, for example, that we don’t do things to increase the competitive admission requirement significantly. These competitive admission requirements, Mr. Chair, are something that many institutions use in many different fields. I know that the field that I went into, computing science, had competitive admission requirements. I know that the fields a number of my friends went into, such as engineering, had competitive admission requirements, and many, many other faculties had them as well. But when we talk about competitive admission requirements, basically by the stroke of a pen, by a very, very minor change, this minister could suddenly have somebody who would have gotten in one year, and the next year they could be 10, 20 per cent out of the admission requirement range, right?

That is something that students should have. Students should have a stability of knowing that they need to aim to have certain targets. Students should understand that if they want to get into certain fields, they sort of have a ballpark at least of where they want to perform. I think that’s something that’s very important, that we can give students this stability. We’re already taking away the stability of students in terms of tuition, for example, knowing that tuition is going up potentially 23 per cent to pay for the $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout. We know that student loans are going up a percentage point as well, working out to thousands of dollars. I think it's over $7,000, if someone will correct me, per student over the life of their loans. When we're talking about large numbers like that that are already affecting students' ability to plan effectively, students' ability to have that effective long-term planning, and affecting their ability to enter school – that's on the back end, Mr. Chair. Things like student loans are on the back end. Things like how much tuition cumulatively adds up over four, five years is on the back end.

But the front end, getting students into school and into postsecondary, should be this minister's primary goal, to actually help more and more students get into postsecondary. Instead, it seems that this minister doesn't actually care about that because he thinks, in this case, Mr. Chair, that a clause making sure that we don't adversely affect competitive admission requirements would be negative. That's, of course, very concerning, especially when he's also rebuking a clause that says that we want to make sure that completion rates of Alberta high school students, including FNMI, First Nations, Métis, and Inuit high school students, are maintained without adversely damaging the ability of students to complete their secondary and then enter postsecondary education.

When we're looking at these types of changes and the minister not actually reading and understanding that the consultation with these groups is important and not understanding that the consultation would allow us to have better policy and better targets, I think that's something that's very concerning. I think it's very concerning that the minister just doesn't think it's valuable, doesn't think it's valuable to consult and doesn't think it's valuable to talk to the actual people who are being most affected by this. We understand in this House that we want people to complete postsecondary education, we want people to attend postsecondary education, and we want people to have the best experience possible in postsecondary education, but we know that this bill, Bill 20, is making many, many if not all of those things harder. We're trying to make this bad bill better by making it on the front end for students to enter university, NAIT, whatever it is, whether it's a trade school or a college or a university, whatever they need to enter, Mr. Chair.

What the minister doesn't understand is that bringing in adverse requirements like this and bringing in adverse outcomes like this can actually harm those entry rates, right? So why don't we step back? Why don't we consult on that? Why don't we actually talk to the people that need to get into these schools and people that are running these schools and all of these things, Mr. Chair? I know my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar has spoken about how perhaps not only listening to administrators is good, but it seems that the minister doesn't even want to listen to administrators. I mean, administrators don't always have the best interests of students in their role, and I understand that, but at least they have some interest. Without accepting this amendment, the minister doesn't want to listen to even the administrators, doesn't want to listen to anybody. The minister thinks he knows best, and I think that that's something that's a little bit disappointing.

I think it's disappointing because we know that in some cases we do need to collect information – right? – that we do need to collect a better picture of what's going on and how the things and policy that we set in this place and in Executive Council will affect thousands of people if not tens of thousands of people, Mr. Chair. That's why we look at this amendment. That's why we look at saying: "Let's just slow down. Let's consult. Let's talk to people. Let's understand the impacts." I think it's very reasonable. I think that members of the now government caucus, when they were in opposition, brought amendments forward like this many times and spoke at length about how consultation, slowing down the process would benefit Albertans and would benefit the ability of the government of the time. I'm sure that they would agree that the government now could make better decisions as well if they simply actually talked to Albertans and actually talked to the people they were affecting and talked to the families that they were affecting.

It's disappointing that this minister doesn't think that's something that's important to him. It's disappointing that this minister doesn't think it's something that's important, to have those types of conversations and to understand the types of impacts we'll have. When we look at Bill 20, we can see, again, that 23 per cent increase to tuition. We see a 1 per cent increase to student loan rates. We see in all of these attacks again and again, for example dissolving the access to the future fund and all of these types of attacks on postsecondary, that this minister doesn't seem to actually have the best interests of the students at heart, doesn't seem to want to be encouraging more students to enter.

When we look at this and say that, well, the minister doesn't even want to consult on the enrolment targets that he's giving himself the power to set and doesn't even want to talk to people about the enrolment targets that they want to set, Mr. Chair, I think that's something that's very concerning, because we can see throughout this bill, time and time again, that it's an attack on students, that it's an attack on the ability of students to enter and maintain and sustain and stay in postsecondary education. It seems the minister doesn't really have the answers to why that's an adequate thing.

I think the minister got up early and said that this amendment was too prescriptive. Well, Mr. Chair, it says that the minister should consult. If that's too prescriptive, then I don't know what the minister thinks his job is. I think it is the duty of the minister to make sure that he has the best information for the bill moving forward, and I think that many members here would agree with me. I think it's disappointing that the minister doesn't understand that.

I think it's a very reasonable amendment. I think it addresses a lot of the clauses that are concerning in terms of not recognizing that you could have spikes in competitive admission requirements, not recognizing that those fluctuations in competitive admission requirements can adversely affect things like school completion rates, can adversely affect secondary completion rates, not postsecondary but secondary school completion rates, can adversely affect things like, obviously, postsecondary admission rates.

It's this whole idea, Mr. Chair, that students don't deserve stability, right? The Conservative government here is bringing forward a bill that overwhelmingly says: "Students don't deserve stability. They don't deserve stability in their tuition fees. They don't deserve stability in their student loan rates. They don't deserve stability in their admission requirements." Again and again and again we see that this government doesn't seem to understand why somebody might want to be able to plan, why they might want to be able to plan the next four or five years of their lives. Especially as a young person, especially as a student, when we look at students – and let's say that you're 17 or 18 years old and planning to enter a postsecondary institution, whether that's a two-year trade program or a four-year degree or whatever it is – when students are looking to enter postsecondary, they want to be able to have a plan.

I know that when I entered postsecondary, I thought I had a trajectory. I said, "In four or four and a half years I'll be able to complete these programs and enter into additional streams," whatever it was. I know a lot of my friends had the same thoughts. I know that even, like, many years ago – I won't say how many,

Mr. Chair – when my father entered and he went to NAIT and got a computer programming certificate, he knew that he wanted to complete it over two years, and then after that, he'd try and find a job. But this type of stability, that students want to plan for, wanting to understand what their life will look like: especially when you're a younger person, 17 or 18 years old, you're looking at spending upwards of a quarter of your life in postsecondary, basically – right? – because you're going to spend four or five years in it. You're looking to spend a quarter of your life, and you want to plan that next quarter of your life. Instead, this minister thinks it's not important that that stability exist, that it's not important that these students be able to plan, that it's not important they know what their tuition is going to be, that it's not important that they know what their student loans are going to be, that it's not important that they even know what the admission requirements are going to be, so they don't even know if they're going to be able to get into the thing they've planned for.

I think that's something that's pretty shocking. I think it's something that I hope we can do better. I hope we can do better because students deserve to have that knowledge, right? If you're entering school, in many cases, Mr. Chair, for example, you're in an advanced program at your school, so you're in an advanced placement program, AP, which is commonly seen here in Alberta, or you're in an international baccalaureate program, IB, as well. If they're in either of these programs, in many cases, when they're in grade 11, so when students are 16-ish years old, they're already planning their entry into postsecondary. They're already planning their entry into degree programs, and they're taking requirements to get into degree programs. They're doing things like arranging their courses for their grade 12 year to make sure they get into degree programs and not understanding the stability of those admission requirements, let's say, if they want into a science or an art, if they want to get into chemistry or biology or computer science or whatever it is. Not having that stability and not having the understanding of what the admission requirements are can really adversely affect the ability of these students to plan.

It speaks again and again to how this government doesn't seem to understand the needs of students. When we talk about the needs of students and that stability and how they need to be able to plan their lives, Mr. Chair, and plan the next, probably, most formative years of any of their lives, that's where consultation comes in, right? That's where the minister needs to go and actually talk to people and understand how these are going to impact their lives, but the minister doesn't think that's important. Being forced to actually go talk to the people about the changes his bill is bringing forward in Bill 20 here: the minister thinks that those types of things are too prescriptive. Perhaps telling the minister to do his job is too prescriptive, and that's a little bit disappointing.

It's a little bit unfortunate, I think. It's unfortunate for students and unfortunate for people planning to enter the postsecondary system. It's unfortunate for people that want to get into a trade school or another postsecondary institution, Mr. Chair. That's something that's unfortunate, because this minister, I think, needs to do better, right? We need to understand how you're going to be affecting the largest stakeholder, the most important stakeholder when you're the Minister of Advanced Education, the students. If you don't understand how this is going to be affecting the students, if you don't care how this is going to be affecting students, I think we have to have a really solid conversation about: what are you doing as the Advanced Education minister? If the enrolment caps without this amendment suddenly spike 10, 15, 20 per cent, then some of these students aren't able to get into postsecondary, and that begs the question: what is the Advanced Education minister even doing in their portfolio? What is that minister even doing, and why does that minister think it's okay to try and restrict the students from entering the fields and entering the postsecondary? I think that's something that's very concerning.

I think it's something that needs to be answered here today because when we look at the minister's authority, when we look at what we're giving the minister authority to do today, we need to understand that students deserve better, right? Students deserve a government that is listening to them. Students deserve a government that is trying to fight for them, is trying to make their life more affordable, and this bill does none of those things, Mr. Chair. It does none of those things. This amendment doesn't fix many of those things, actually. I'll admit to you that it fixes one of those things. It fixes admission a little bit. It kind of fixes admission, and it fixes some enrolment targets, but this government doesn't even want to go that far. They don't even want to make one change that would benefit the students.

I think that when the minister refuses to want to listen to students and listen to consultations and actually understand the impact they'd be having on high school students looking to enter postsecondary – it's not only high school students, Mr. Chair. I know that many people go back to postsecondary some way through their career as well. That allows them to do things like upgrading. It allows them to do things like mid-career changes. But if they don't understand and they don't really have the ability to predict what the competitive admission requirements are going to be for their re-entry into postsecondary either, that actually limits the ability for people who are looking to find different types of work and new work as well. It speaks again and again to how this minister and this government don't seem to care, don't seem to understand that adversely impacting people's entry into postsecondary is a negative thing. Adversely impacting people's ability to understand and have stability around postsecondary is a negative thing.

I don't know why we need to explain this to the government. It's something that should be self-evident, Mr. Chair, but perhaps it speaks to their values and how they don't really believe that we should be supporting these people. I think that the people who are looking for new jobs, the people who are looking to enter the workforce and get this type of education, would disagree. I hope that every single member of the House will think very solidly about that and understand how this is going to affect their constituents and their families and their neighbours and their communities.

I encourage every single member of this House to vote for this amendment, and I look forward to hearing from the rest. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members looking to speak to amendment A3?

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Moving back to Bill 20 proper, are there any members looking to speak? I see the hon. Member for St. Albert has risen to speak.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 20, Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019. This is yet another huge piece of legislation. You know, it's sort of interesting. I can remember not that long ago, when some of the government members were on opposition benches, that regularly they would quote the number of pages in pieces of legislation that were in front of them and would proceed to go on and on about the time that was required to read it or how perhaps pieces didn't fit together. Suddenly that just seems to be gone, so we're just inundated with these massive pieces of legislation that do a really good job at camouflaging quite a number of things. Let's just start. Where to start? Let's start at the beginning, I suppose. Just for the record, for clarity, this bill has 102 pages, repeals five different acts, creates two new ones, and amends a dozen other ones. It's a little bit disturbing.

Let's focus first on tax credits that are in this piece of legislation. Although there are a number of things that are changed in this legislation, what is disturbing is the theme, and the theme seems to be: investment in other sectors or unique sectors or sectors that would lead to true diversification just doesn't seem to be very important. We've seen just systematic cutting, reducing, or completely eliminating the work that's been done, the path that's been laid towards diversification.

I really question why that is. Of course, the answer has got to be that if you're going to create a $4.7 billion giveaway for already profitable corporations – and let's be clear that these are corporations that, I believe, are earning a net profit of about $500,000 a year. These are fairly profitable corporations – and, you know, great for them for doing so well – but it's unfortunate that we are directing these kinds of resources to these companies. These fledgling start-ups or these companies in really unique sectors that have the ability to take us in new directions and truly are job creators in and of themselves: these are the folks that are really suffering. Again, I don't know why. I guess this government really does want to take us backwards in all kinds of ways, some of them in terms of our human rights and social justice and, it looks like, in terms of our economy as well.

Let's call this $4.7 billion giveaway what it is, and it is – you know, we've called it before trickle-down economics, which really is kind of a joke. It started as a joke, but that's what this is. So I just want to talk a little bit about – there's a business columnist out of the United States that had quite a bit to say about this sort of thinking. Some of the things he had to say were quite interesting and, I think, add to the discussion here. He says:

One of the biggest lies foisted on the American people . . .

Again, he's from the United States

. . . is that rich people getting richer – when rich people get richer, we all benefit, that being the basic premise of so-called trickle-down theory. For decades working families have been told not to worry about the growing wealth gap between the nation's haves and have-nots. A rising tide lifts all boats: we've been told that with encouraging smiles and pats on the back.

You can see sort of where he's going with this.

Here's another contributor. I'd like to quote William Darity, who's a professor of public policy at Duke University. He says:

It's nonsensical to think that greater wealth for the rich translates to improved fortunes for everybody else. Otherwise, we would not have observed such an obscene increase in the degree of income equality that has restored the magnitude of levels that existed on the eve of the Great Depression. I've not seen anyone make a serious claim for a trickle-down effect with respect to wealth. Put simply, there is no empirical evidence, none whatsoever, that trickle-down economics deliver as promised, bringing more jobs, higher pay, and better conditions to millions of people. The reality is that the rich get richer – the rich get richer – full stop. They buy more houses, cars, boats, and stuff.

That's how he ended his quote. I mean, it's a little bit flippant towards the end, but I think you get the message.

I think that when we look to the south, we see an entire country really engaged in this – I don't even want to call it "trickle-down" – move towards creating more tax breaks and tax incentives and wealth for a very, very small portion of the people that live there. We know that the gap between the very, very wealthy and then the rest of the people continues to grow. I'm sad that this government has chosen to emulate those choices. You know what? I must add that in the United States currently, their President – we'll see how long that lasts – a Republican, has done what Republicans have always wanted, to give great big tax breaks to wealthy people and to wealthy corporations and then tell the rest of the American people: yeah, this will trickle down; you'll be great. In fact, it hasn't. These fiscal hawks, these fiscal Republicans have now created the largest debt they've ever seen. How does that work?

I think that in such a short time – and I also find it quite interesting that before we even began to see what was in the government's budget, before we had a chance to debate anything, this government jammed through a corporate tax break of such magnitude that it would jar everything else after it. That's very telling, that they wouldn't wait to put it into the budget to discuss, to debate, to allow questions on. They just did it at the very beginning, knowing that Albertans would see what they're doing.

We are seeing this almost on a weekly basis, that very large profitable corporations, having already received the benefit of this tax break, are actually taking their money and going elsewhere when really this was supposed to be about job creation. It turns out that it's more about wealth creation, which is unfortunate.

Again, let's go back to some of the other things that have been jammed into this huge piece of legislation, which is really unfortunate because when we have such a small amount of time to go through this and to talk about what this means for the future of Alberta, for the future of Albertans, we don't actually have time to go through and to really examine all of these pieces.

As I was flipping through it, I noticed that one of the tax credits cancelled – and I have to admit that I'm not totally surprised by this – is the scientific research and experimental development tax credit. This particular tax credit provides support in the form of tax credits and/or refunds to corporations, partnerships, or individuals who conduct scientific research and experimental development in Canada. Now, of course, thankfully, there is still a federal program in place. This particular tax credit is 35 per cent of the first $3 million in qualified expenditures and then 15 per cent on any excess amount. Alberta now will join Prince Edward Island as the only provinces that don't offer a provincial top-up to this federal program. Once again, it's just another step backwards. It's almost like a systematic changing of where we were, a very progressive province that was sort of leading the way in Canada, to: now we just are joining the back of the pack. We are losing really important tax credits, and people will go elsewhere. We are losing important tax credits, important programs. Why? I don't really know.

One of the things that will impact thousands of Albertans is the education and tuition tax credits. It's hard to believe that this government is so arrogant and entitled that they would believe that Albertans can manage the kind of cuts that they're just throwing at them by saying: "Trust us. Trust us. By investing in this large corporate tax giveaway, everybody will benefit." Well, let's look at an average family with a postsecondary student. You've now cut the education and tuition tax credits. Students will pay more for their tuition. If they're required to take out a loan, they're going to pay more for that loan. If they tried saving for tuition for postsecondary, they would have likely earned less than minimum wage because this government saw fit to reduce that as well. It's like this full-frontal attack on postsecondary education and Alberta families. Once again, it's just another example of the very wealthy doing quite well, and the rest of us just need to suck it up.

One of the other things that I was really disturbed about was the child and family benefit tax credit. What really bothered me is that on the day that this budget was dropped, actually, as we were feverishly going through it trying to figure it out, we calculated very quickly that by changing the income thresholds, what this government had essentially done was cut. Of course, they like to spin it. In their minds, they way they spin it is: "Nothing is cut. Nothing is changed. Everything is great. Nothing to see here. Move along." But really there has been a lot of damage done here. The child and family benefit tax credit: we'll reduce the benefit – here's a big number. Listen to it: 165,000 Albertans will be impacted by these new income thresholds. Now, I know it doesn't bother you because this doesn't impact you, but I can tell you that there are thousands and thousands and thousands of Alberta families that barely get by. This particular tax credit: if they are just on the cusp of that income cut-off, when you change this benefit, you are going to cause damage. But you don't seem to care. You don't seem to listen. All we get back is: "Nothing has changed. Nothing to see here. Everything is fine. It'll all trickle down. We'll be rosy. Everything will be good." It's not good.

The Alberta child benefit: let me give you an example. When I talk about . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for St. Albert, but in accordance with Standing Order 64(5) the chair is required to put the question to the Assembly on the appropriation bill standing on the Order Paper for third reading. The committee must first rise and report without question put.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 20. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. That is so ordered.

Prior to moving to the question on the appropriation bill, I believe the hon. Government House Leader has caught my eye.

Mr. Jason Nixon: It's like you're a mind reader, Mr. Speaker. I'm just so blown away by that.

I'd like to move that we move to one-minute bells for the remainder of the evening.

Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 27, the Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019.

Mr. Speaker, over the last few months as I've travelled across Alberta, I particularly focused on rural communities and mid-sized centres across Alberta, talking about rural crime, talking about the challenges that we have in our communities: too many people that are living in fear, too many people that are too brazen in their criminal activities targeting rural communities, targeting Albertans. The feedback that we received from Albertans was crystal clear. We need to make sure that we have the strongest property rights possible in the province of Alberta, and that's what this bill here works towards, Mr. Speaker, to make sure that Albertans know that their property rights will be respected.

We heard on a couple different areas, Mr. Speaker. One is on trespassing. People just have been too brazen in their trespassing, so the purpose of this bill helps tighten that to send the clearest signal that that can't be done in the province of Alberta without facing a stiff penalty. In addition to that, we also saw the fact that criminals, people committing a criminal act on property, then have the brazen determination to sue a law-abiding property owner. Mr. Speaker, that is unacceptable in the province of Alberta. This bill seeks to make the proper amendments to address those issues, and I'll get into the details here.

Today I'm seeking support for Bill 27, the Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act. If passed, it will help halt the erosion of property rights in Alberta and deter those seeking to trespass on private property. The proposed amendments will add an explicit reference within the Petty Trespass Act to land use for the production of crops, the raising and maintenance of animals, and the keeping of bees.

It will also increase the maximum fine for trespass without notice from $2,000 and $5,000 for first and subsequent offences to $10,000 and $25,000 respectively. It will increase the maximum penalty for trespass with notice to fines of $10,000 and $25,000 for first and subsequent offences respectively, a term of imprisonment of up to six months, or both; create an offence for a corporation to direct counsel or aid a trespass; create a maximum fine of up to $200,000 for corporations; create provisions in the Petty Trespass Act and the Trespass to Premises Act to address entry under false pretenses; increase the maximum compensation that can be ordered for loss of or damage to property under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act from $25,000 to $100,000; reduce property owners' civil liability for injuries or death to criminal trespassers and make this retroactive to January 1, 2018; and amend the Limitations Act to suspend the limitation period for a civil action pending the determination of possible criminal conduct on the part of the property owner.

Mr. Speaker, these are measures that Albertans have long been calling for. They're asking to be protected. They want to make sure that their property rights are respected. I hope the members, on both sides of this House, will support this legislation and for the rights of property owners across Alberta to be respected in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any members wishing to speak to this bill? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has risen.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and to speak to Bill 27, the Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019. That's a long title. First off, I want to recognize and acknowledge that, of course, trespassing on anybody's property is obviously a very scary thing, even scarier in rural Alberta when you're isolated and you're not as close to your neighbours and it feels like the police are too far away. This bill, obviously, addresses a real concern, but there are some questions and some clarity that we're asking for at this time as we move forward into Committee of the Whole.

Part of the question and concern that we have is that most Albertans are good neighbours, and we all look out for each other. We understand, you know, that making sure that our neighbours are protected and safe is important. But what we see with this bill is that there's a potential to be going down a dangerous path, and that's the path around stand your ground legislation. What we're looking for and what we need clarity on is what this will look like. Obviously, there is a way that this legislation can start creating changes that could potentially start looking at stand your ground.

We have some questions for the minister. If a trespasser is shot on someone's property, will there continue to be a criminal investigation? This seems to make the law more complicated in many ways. How will people be educated about the profound changes in this bill, particularly in regard to the duty of care?

There's also a provision in the bill that speaks to the government's plan to train wildlife officers and others to respond to 911 calls. Again, we just have some questions about: how will they be trained to deal with the particular situations that they may be responding to? Will they be given the same authorities as police officers, and what will those look like?

The other piece that I am curious about as well is why the bill is retroactive to January 2018, why it's not coming into force at proclamation, and why it's backdated to January 2018, a full year, well, two years prior by the time this bill may potentially be proclaimed.

There are questions around the exemption from civil liability for injuries to trespassers when the owner has reasonable grounds to believe the trespasser is committing or about to commit a criminal offence, also around landowners not being liable for injuries or death unless it was clearly caused by the landowner. Trespassers that get injured have no civil claim unless it's proven that the landowner or occupier committed a criminal act. The landlord does not owe a duty of care to the trespasser.

There are lots of questions just around the retroactiveness of this and then why it's so explicit around some of these questions. Again, I'm not saying that they aren't justified. They're just for clarity and just pieces that we're asking for.

Then, of course, why have the references for the penalties increased to the point that they've increased to? Where was the decision and what was the rationale around the dollar amounts that were chosen? Again, I'm not saying that there shouldn't be penalties but am just wondering why they were increased to the levels that they were increased to and then, of course, substantially for first and subsequent offenders.

Those are just some of the questions that we have. Obviously, as we move into Committee of the Whole and the minister is able to maybe respond to some of my questions, that would be beneficial.

I do want to highlight, though, that there is definitely some real value in some of the concerns that are being addressed around the trespassing component. I know that we've heard from experts about the risk to biosecurity around some of these farms. Obviously, hog producers have some real concerns around the swine flu and the fact that it's easily transferable to people if they enter the barn without going through the appropriate steps to make sure that they're not transferring it. When the issues around the Hutterite farm for the turkeys became an issue, again, there's a real concern and real risk around the biohazards around turkey farms and making sure that we aren't transferring diseases between animals and humans and then taking them off the property.

I think that those concerns are definitely valid and definitely things that we need to discuss. It's just clarifying some of the other questions around where and why we're doing that. To be honest, my biggest concern is why it's retroactive. Like, what's the rationale to 2018 and not coming into force when it is proclaimed? There has got to be some rationale there that I'd be really interested in and curious to hear about.

Obviously, as we continue forward, there may be some more questions that come up from my hon. colleagues, but for now I'll just leave it at that and look forward to hearing from the minister in response to some of my questions.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak at this time?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Government House Leader has risen.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you. Man, things are just moving through here so fast. I love progress. I know you like progress, too,

Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the opposition for being so co-operative this evening. As such, I'll move that we adjourn until tomorrow, Tuesday, November 26, at 10 o'clock a.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:33 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, November 26, 2019

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideals but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. So may Your kingdom come and Your name be hallowed. Amen.

We are at Ordres du jour.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise today for the second reading of Bill 25, the Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019. The proposed legislation reflects our government's commitment to cut red tape and to make Alberta one of the freest and fastest moving economies in the world. It also reflects our commitment to reduce red tape in order to make life better for everyday Albertans. The Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019, builds on the momentum established by actions already taken by our government to reduce red tape.

It makes changes to several pieces of legislation. Generally speaking, the changes proposed by Bill 25 can fit into three themes: to encourage investment by speeding up regulatory approvals, to reduce regulatory burden for municipalities and other government partners, and to eliminate or modernize outdated and redundant rules.

Under the first theme we have three amendments designed to encourage investment by speeding up regulatory approvals. Bill 25 will amend the Forests Act and give the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry the authority to approve forest management agreements. Currently these agreements are subject to approval by cabinet. Allowing the minister to approve forest management agreements will make the approval process less burdensome while continuing to allow proper oversight by government. Of the 17 submissions submitted by the Alberta Forestry Association, this was number one on their list because it allows them to get wood to the mills faster and allows them to be able to get their people back to work. The proposed change aligns with other land-use dispositions such as those for oil sands or gravel operations.

Bill 25 proposes an amendment to the Hydro and Electric Energy Act as well. Currently stand-alone legislation is required for every hydroelectric development in Alberta once the normal regulatory process is complete. Bill 25 proposes to repeal this unnecessary requirement in order to encourage the development of small-scale hydroelectric projects. All projects must still undergo public hearings and environmental impact assessments, but cumbersome legislation isn't required to get these projects under way anymore.

This bill proposes to repeal also the Small Power Research and Development Act as it is no longer required. The act was created to support renewable small-power generation development in the mid-1980s to early 1990s in Alberta. The program expired in 1994, and the last contract ended earlier this year. Alberta has a thriving renewable energy sector, and the small-scale generation regulation already supports market-based electricity generation for renewable and alternative energy sources.

Moving on to our next theme, to reduce regulatory burden for municipalities and other government partners, Bill 25 proposes an amendment to the Municipal Government Act to streamline provisions that hamper administrative efficiencies for municipalities. This bill proposes the repeal of a provision in the Safety Codes Act to better align with national building and fire codes. Government will follow future editions of national building and fire codes, ensuring we meet strict standards while still promoting safety for workers and for the structure.

Moving on to our final theme, to streamline, eliminate, or modernize outdated or redundant rules, Bill 25 proposes to amend or repeal six different pieces of legislation. First, the bill proposes to repeal the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Foundation Act. The foundation has not existed since 2002, and its functions are no longer a part of the persons with developmental disabilities program. Repealing the act will dissolve this inactive foundation and would have no impact on delivery of PDD services.

Second, Bill 25 proposes to remove a provision in the Glenbow-Alberta Institute Act that prescribes that management, in displays of items in the Glenbow Museum collection – actually, it describes prescriptively those collections. This amendment removes red tape and encourages an innovative collaboration by allowing the Glenbow to loan out parts of its collection. Because the amendment requires an agreement with the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women, the government of Alberta will continue to have a say in the ongoing protection of Alberta's cultural assets.

Third, the bill proposes an amendment to the Health Professions Act to dissolve the Health Professions Advisory Board. The board's advice has not been requested since 2012. The board's dissolution was recommended by the Public Agency Secretariat as part of a review of agencies, boards, and commissions, and we're acting upon that review.

Fourth, Bill 25 proposes to repeal an outdated reference to chiropractic services under the definition of basic health services in the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act as chiropractic services have not been covered since 2009.

Fifth, Bill 25 amends the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act to make it easier for Albertans to become organ donors. Albertans will now be able to register online in one easy step to indicate they want to donate their organs and tissues after their death. This will save Albertans, and it will reduce time and confusion regarding their wish to donate their organs and tissues.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I want to be able to remind the Member for Edmonton-Decore, when he continues to say that this ministry is doing no good for Albertans, that when B.C. did this, they actually increased organ and tissue donations by fourfold. B.C.'s residents were richly blessed because of this kind of a legislative change and because of the red tape reduction efforts there. We're going to do the same thing here, so I hope that the member is seeing this as a very positive effect and the reason why we should be actually effecting red tape reduction here.

This also clarifies how Albertans can donate their bodies to educational research. To be clear, this amendment is separate and apart from the private member's bill currently before the House. However, this bill allows those who do not want to opt in to organ donation because of religious or cultural reasons to also opt out online.

Sixth, this bill will amend the medical services incorporation foundation act. The M.S.I. Foundation's board appointment process hasn't changed since 1970. It is outdated and causes unnecessary delays in appointments. Currently three public board appointees must be made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Additionally, the MSI board's chair is to be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council as well. This amendment would change this to allow the Minister of Health to appoint the three public board members and for the MSI board of trustees to select the chair from among their membership, giving them more control over what happens in that board. The proposed changes will improve efficiencies of the foundation's operations and will streamline its appointment process.

Now, this concludes my overview of Bill 25, Mr. Speaker, the Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019. These changes are designed to encourage investment, reduce regulatory burdens, and streamline, eliminate, or modernize outdated or redundant rules, allowing government to move quicker. Together the changes proposed in Bill 25 represent a conscious and co-ordinated effort to reduce red tape across government, to free up the creativity of our partners in businesses and government, our job creators and innovators, and to make life better for all Albertans.

I'd like to thank the members for their time, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to a healthy debate on this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Just for the purposes of clarity of Hansard, I would like it if you would just please state that you are moving second reading of Bill 25.

Mr. Hunter: With that, Mr. Speaker, I move second reading of Bill 25.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has risen to speak.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good morning to you on this rather wintry day as we were coming in here. We now have before us, finally, in second reading, Bill 25, the Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019. Seeing as how we brought it up right out of the gates, I will of course mention around the organ donation that I am part of the private members' committee that was reviewing the private member's bill that came forward. On the theme of organ donation we're certainly very excited about what that could be, and hopefully the minister will be quick to amend his rules should that private member's bill pass because the two would kind of conflict a little bit. But, you know, that's really just a little bit of housekeeping there.

On the whole, Mr. Speaker, when we are talking about Bill 25, an omnibus piece of legislation, the fourth such piece of legislation that we've seen before this House, I have to admit that seeing this type of bill being presented in the House here today is kind of contradictory to some of the members that served in the 29th Legislature, particularly their displeasure around omnibus legislation or what they felt was omnibus legislation. As you know, Bill 25 proposes approximately 13 different changes across six different ministries. I do remember a certain discussion around some labour legislation that was changed back in the 29th Legislature that absolutely dealt with several different changes within that bill but within one ministry.

You know, the associate minister, of course, back then had said something, I believe, on May 30, 2017:

This legislation from the NDP government is omnibus in nature and would be best served if split into two distinct components to allow for faster passage of compassionate care leaves. This government is being disingenuous by lumping together changes to both the Labour Relations Code and the Employment Standards Code into one big omnibus bill.

Yet here we are looking at 13 different changes across six different ministries. I think I've said it before on other pieces of legislation that are like Bill 25, Mr. Speaker, that to come across with those types of comments and then, when you have the opportunity to do it different and apparently do it right, you actually just seem to repeat the cycle, which we've seen four times now, including Bill 25 – so is this a disingenuous attempt at lumping a whole bunch of legislation into one bill and, you know, justified in that?

Whatever the case is there, Mr. Speaker, we do have this here before us, and we need to look at its components, some of which, again, I don't have any potential concerns with, including things like the organ donation. But I do have some concerns around some of the other pieces that are being proposed in this.

You know, I think the one thing that we have to remember is what this ministry was mandated to do. It was supposed to be able to help to create an atmosphere that creates jobs and helps to grow the economy. So when I see such things like "How do we store some of Alberta's museum treasures?," I'm wondering: how is that creating jobs? How is that growing the economy? It seems more like a statute change than red tape reduction.

I mean, we've seen in other legislation where the government has been very, very proud that they are, for instance, merging different departments, all under the umbrella of red tape, being more efficient, and saving Albertans money. When we get excited about a million dollars – say, for instance, we roll the Election Commissioner into the elections office – and then we look at this ministry in itself dealing with red tape, very clearly we saw during estimates that ministries were able to deal with red tape on their own, making their own decisions. I mean, the labour ministry, right out of the gate, actually created a bunch of red tape, you know, but that's beside the point here at the moment. But they were very clearly making decisions around red tape. The Ministry of Municipal Affairs was very clearly making red tape decisions to try to help municipalities do their jobs a lot easier. The Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance very clearly was making decisions around red tape.

Funny, of course, that the red tape ministry, which Bill 25 came out of here, is very clearly making red tape decisions without the ministry. Maybe I might want to suggest to the government that with this $10 million ministry we have here, that seems to have only created one job so far, they maybe might want to look at just rolling it all into Treasury Board, letting everybody else do their red tape decisions. Then maybe we can take that $10 million and put it into something effective, maybe like not rolling back AISH recipients' incomes.

We're starting to see a pattern, Mr. Speaker, around how legislation like Bill 25 is coming forward. Of course, there's a great, big emphasis on giving, for instance, $4.7 billion in tax breaks to great, big, wealthy corporations like Walmart, but we're focused on legislation that, quite honestly, I think could be simply dealt with through statute changes. But we're trying to claim red tape reduction here and claim a ministry, so I guess if I was in that position and I had to justify $10 million, I'd probably be looking for any kinds of little things that I could find as well.

Some of the things that this thing is looking for include changes within the forestry act. It proposes to transfer things from orders in council to a ministerial order. I certainly remember members opposite in the 29th Legislature getting rather excited about more powers being given to the minister to make decisions. Here again we're in that situation where we're saying one thing, yet actions that we're doing say something completely different, and they're contradictory, Mr. Speaker. I'm not necessarily possibly concerned around this, but I do have to point out that, you know, this was something that was a problem for some of the members opposite, including the associate minister of red tape, when it came to giving more ability for the minister to get business done.

We have things around the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Foundation Act. I was able to do a little bit of checking. This is a bit of a housekeeping item, Mr. Speaker. It hasn't existed since 2002, so it's probably pretty safe to say that we won't be using that going forward at this point. But, again, is this creating jobs? Is this growing the economy? I would argue that that's not the case. We're not creating jobs. We've created one job, but we're not growing the economy with changes like that. I think it's a little bit, I guess, short when it comes to being able to say that, you know, we're making substantial changes that will – I think the words were: supercharge our economy.

Again, I'd mentioned a little bit earlier around the Glenbow-Alberta Institute Act. You know, I guess again I'm questioning: is this really red tape reduction? Is this creating jobs? Is this growing the economy? That was the number one thing that the UCP ran on during the election, Mr. Speaker, and this is our A game coming out of the gate. I know the first bill was to help to create the ministry and sort of some of the framework for how it was going to operate. It sure would have really been nice to have seen a definition around red tape. Maybe then we wouldn't be potentially considering some of these things as red tape reduction. Maybe they would have been more considered like statute changes and things like that. But I just struggle to see how this creates jobs and how this grows the economy.

We also see some changes in the Small Power Research and Development Act. Of course, this is a repeal. The government says, of course, that contracts have been concluded and that the small-scale generation regulation already supports market-based electricity generation from renewable and alternate energy sources. While I think this is probably a good idea, I guess I question that because I haven't seen a lot of interest in this government, Mr. Speaker, around renewable and alternative energy.

Again, you know, we have a potential piece of legislation here that we're changing. We're saying one thing, but things that we've done before, things that we've said before are a little bit counterproductive towards that. I don't think it necessarily sends a signal to investors to be able to help grow an economy when we're not really supporting the industry but we say that we're going to help make things more streamlined. I'm really not too sure whether this will be a benefit or not, but time will tell with regard to that.

We've also seen some changes around the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. I think this could be a positive change for approval, that it's not going through legislation. Certainly, you know, we've seen in the past – and, I think, the easiest example, Mr. Speaker, around changes, and I'm surprised this one's not in this bill because this would have been a really simple one, Minister – where schools can't change their name without coming to the Legislature for approval and having an MLA sponsor that, I mean, really, just to change the title at the top of the paper or on the envelope or something like that. I'm surprised that that one wasn't in here because that actually would have been red tape reduction, helping those not come through the Legislature. I think given some of the cuts that we've seen, though, with regard to the budget, we might have some worries around that change here for the Hydro and Electric Energy Act.

We're also seeing some changes within the Health Professions Act. Now, that's the one thing about omnibus legislation, Mr. Speaker: it can be difficult sometimes to reach out to stakeholders to be able to get their input. Again, we're looking at 13 different changes across six different ministries, and it's been difficult to try to get some feedback. I am concerned that, you know, some of the changes – and I'll get to those shortly here, Mr. Speaker – maybe haven't necessarily been thoroughly consulted on, again, another point that members who were part of the 29th Legislature and are serving within the government and the government caucus very regularly accused the previous NDP government of not doing around consultations. Again, we have the chance to show how to do it better, how to do it right, yet we're not seeing those types of things.

It's reviewing a number of agencies, boards, and commissions. That work, you know, rightfully is being continued, so I will give kudos in that sort of department there. That was work that was started by us to try to make things move a lot more efficiently. I'm always willing to listen to those types of things. I know that for the former Finance minister that was something he wanted to make sure was done. He didn't quite get a chance to finish that work, but at least this government is continuing on that fine work that he started.

I'd already mentioned around the tissue, organ. I don't think I need to continue around this one.

I would like to spend some time, though, Mr. Speaker, on one part, and that's the Safety Codes Act changes. One of the things that we've seen change over the years is around the height that wood structures can go to. We're always, you know, mindful of checking with people, checking with builders around how we can do those structures, but one voice that has always been absent from the table has been fire. When we're talking about a structure that potentially could be going over six storeys now, I think it's very, very important that we have those voices at the table.

You know, when we look at house construction, for instance, Mr. Speaker, they used to have the really big, thick beams through the house to help support the house, and from what I understand, those were designed at the time to be able to survive in a fire, giving as much as an hour or even maybe a little bit more. Certainly, people would be able to egress from the building, but then fire coming into the building would be safe enough to try to get that fire put out. What we've seen in some of the changes now is a lot thinner beams around that. It's my understanding, speaking with folks from fire, that on average those things may only last somewhere between eight to 15 minutes, and a lot of times we see fire showing up on location, ready to go to deal with the fire at the eight-minute mark, which means that there are about four minutes left for them to try to get that fire out.

When we translate that now to a building that's potentially going over six storeys, we need to make sure that we have fire at the table in order to look at how that structure is built so that not only does it give people time to get out of the building safely but that fire has time to get into the building and actually put the fire out. That is something that has been very much lacking not only on the provincial scale but also on the national scale. I think we have an opportunity here to bring that voice to the table to make sure that as we're moving forward, changing these safety codes and the regulations, the building codes and such, those are expressed within that to make sure that our first responders, our firefighters are able to go safely – well, relatively safely – into a structure and come out again when it's done.

Of course, when you have these structures, the most critical part is during construction, Mr. Speaker. Those things can sometimes go up like a Roman candle. I lived in the west end of Edmonton here, and there was a large structure – I believe it was four storeys – that was being built at the time. Unfortunately, it caught fire, and all of the structures that were nearby in terms of, you know, lower buildings and whatnot – it completely melted all of the siding off these buildings, generating an incredible, incredible amount of heat.

Again, I think that as we move forward, when we're looking at these safety codes within Bill 25 and some of the changes that we might be proposing, we need to have those voices at the table in order to make sure that we are building these structures in the safest way possible not only for people to be able to get out but for firefighters to be able to get in and put that fire out. Hopefully, we might be able to have a larger conversation in Committee of the Whole around that, and maybe we can look at some ways that we might be able to deal with that in terms of getting fire at the table during that part.

We've also heard of some of the changes for municipalities. I know there's a bit of a concern from the RMA around some of the changes that are being proposed in Bill 25. Perhaps it was just simply an oversight at the time, but the deadline for completing ICFs, the deadline here . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has risen.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 25, the so-called Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act. You know, I reviewed this act, and while I'm new to the Legislature, I have had experience in the past working within government and seeing things called miscellaneous statutes amendments acts. Some of you members, especially those who had been part of the previous Assembly, would be familiar with that. When I actually reviewed Bill 25, I was surprised or maybe I will even say amused to see how a lot of what is actually proposed as significant red tape reduction would be changes that would actually be part of a miscellaneous statutes amendment act, something that, of course, I hear and understand from my colleagues that the previous members complained about.

Let me just say that calling it something else, calling it a Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, doesn't actually make it anything different than, really, a miscellaneous statutes amendment act although I will note that there are a couple of other pieces in there that don't actually fall within that but are actually either policy changes or increase red tape. This is actually a great exercise in irony, I have to say, to call something red tape reduction when what we've really seen is that this government has increased red tape by creating – well, they have created one very significant public-sector job, which is the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Again, I mentioned that I worked in government for some time before. I know that the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction has stood up in this House and has questioned a number of times the credentials of members of the opposition as Albertans because of, apparently, where we lived before we moved to Alberta or how many of us were actually born in Alberta. Apparently, that's significant to the associate minister since he continues to bring it up over and over again. I have actually spent most of my life here in Alberta, and I can say that I actually have a little bit of Alberta history, a little bit of Alberta government history that I recall.

I think it would have been in 2006 that the Alberta government, under the former Progressive Conservative governments, the previous ones, had a ministry called RAGE, which was the restructuring and government efficiency ministry. A very apt acronym was RAGE because it really caused nothing but rage for most of the bureaucrats and, probably, Albertans because it was a giant waste of money and time. In fact, that seems to be what this government is repeating here. Let's create a body; let's fund it with $10 million I believe it is. I'm looking at the Member for Edmonton-Decore. Yeah. Head nodding. Yeah, $10 million given to create an Associate Ministry of Red Tape Reduction. Well, we've been through this pattern before.

Now, I appreciate that this government seems to like to repeat some of the worst parts of previous Conservative governments. They seem to be very quickly falling into some old habits: you know, entitlement and cronyism and these patronage appointments that they love to do and creating panels and talking about fiscal responsibility when really they're throwing away money on pancake parties and planes and, you know, very, very five-star hotels. I mean, like, obviously, the lessons are hard to unlearn, apparently, for Conservatives. They haven't learned the lesson about the waste of time that was the restructuring and government efficiency ministry back in the previous Conservative government, so they're repeating that mistake, which is the Red Tape Reduction Act.

You know, I think I'm allowed to speak about my own absence and presence in the House, so I will say that I wasn't present in the House when late last week the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction stood up and introduced this bill. I believe – I saw it on social media – that he made a very bold and very classy statement. I know sarcasm sometimes doesn't come across in Hansard, so let me just state that I am being sarcastic when I say that it was classy when he referred to the fact that he was going to be giving an enema to government about red tape reduction. Very classy for an associate minister. Then I thought: well, interesting. Then I read Bill 25, and I thought: "Wow. Is this the bold statement that he's going to make? Is this the quote, unquote, enema that he's giving to government?" He has a pretty different understanding of what an enema is than I do, I guess. I mean, I've never had one, but clearly he thinks it's a pretty mild procedure, considering this bill and the contents of it. Let's be honest. There's very little in here that does anything to substantively reduce red tape, and it does nothing that could not have been achieved by simply doing a miscellaneous statutes amendment act.

I note as I'm going through it: okay; so they're repealing some acts that apparently have been spent in terms that the contents and the objectives of the bills have been achieved or completed, such as the Small Power Research and Development Act. The government claims: okay; that's no longer necessary, so it's repealed. Great. That's fine. It could have been done by a miscellaneous statutes amendment act.

I note that they have made changes to the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Foundation Act because they're saying that the foundation has not existed since 2002, so there's no need for the foundation. That's fine. I can't see a real concern with that. Again, that could have been done by a miscellaneous statutes amendment act.

I believe that the same applies to a number of other bodies or advisory committees, and I do note that the former government actually had done a complete review and was doing these reviews of these agencies and boards, so certainly this was probably inevitably going to be happening anyway.

They dissolved the Health Professions Advisory Board under the Health Professions Act. It hasn't been in place and used since 2012. Yeah. No problem. Go ahead and do that. Again, it could have been done by a miscellaneous statutes amendment act.

Really, if this is the bulk of the associate minister's work, he must be quite disappointed. I wonder: what is he going to do once this bill is passed? Of course, I'm not naive. We know that this bill will likely be passed. Despite whatever we say on this side of this of House, the government will vote in favour of passing it. I just think that then his work is done, right? And this cost Albertans $10 million? This is what we established one new position within the public sector for? This is what we've done? Well, he must be very proud of himself to complete his entire mandate with this bill.

The other thing that's important to note, apart from the quite minor amendments that this bill makes that could have been achieved without the establishment of a $10 million position and department staff and everything to review that, is that there are some pieces in here that I'm not even sure are red tape reduction. I'll go back to one piece in particular that I have a little bit of familiarity with given my past work. I note, for example, that Bill 25 amends the Education Act to require school boards to enter into joint-use agreements with municipalities when school boards provide services in one or more municipalities. Well, of course, all school boards provide services in one or more municipalities, so essentially this is mandating all school boards to enter into joint-use agreements with municipalities.

Now, my background is that I've worked with Alberta Education, but I also worked directly with school boards for many years, and I'll say that this already takes place. This is already happening. Almost every school board that I've worked with has joint-use agreements with their municipalities. But further to the point, for a government that stands up and says that they believe in government efficiency and in lowering red tape to actually mandate locally elected bodies, which are both school boards and municipalities, force them to enter into agreements and then create a system within this act with the amendments to the Education Act where they actually monitor those agreements and make sure that they're in place – they actually mandate how those agreements can be amended, which is quite intrusive, actually, for a government.

It's actually getting quite into the weeds with other locally elected bodies who are entering into agreements about what those agreements must say. Not only is that contrary to, I think, the position that this government has repeatedly stated, which is that government should be hands-off and entities should be able to do whatever they want, but apart from that, it actually goes contrary to the principles behind the Education Act. Now, we stood up on this side of the House when this current Education Act was being debated again in the summer session, right after the election. I actually have a very detailed understanding of the Education Act given my past work, and I've stood up in this House and said many times to the members opposite, particularly the Minister of Education, that I wasn't confident that the members were actually familiar with the contents of the Education Act.

It seemed to me – and it's plainly obvious to most Albertans as well – that they were only fixated on one piece of the Education Act, and that was the piece that rolled back protection for LGBTQ2S students, which they achieved because that was the only purpose behind why they brought in that Education Act. That's why they sought to bring it forward. Promise made, promise kept. They rolled back protections for LGBTQ2S students, so good for them. The problem, as I pointed out a number of times in the Legislature, is that the Education Act has a whole bunch of other pieces involved in it, and one of the core fundamental pieces is that it grants natural person powers to school boards.

That was as a result of school boards, again locally elected bodies – and I have to emphasize that given the statements by the Minister of Education last week where she's threatening a locally elected school board, the largest in the province, because she's so shocked that cutting education funding means laying off staff. She's now threatening a locally elected school board with disbandment. I appreciate that she might not be very familiar with the powers and responsibilities of a locally elected body like a school board, but those natural person powers were critical to what school boards wanted in the Education Act.

They wanted to be able to make decisions about when they enter into agreements. They wanted to be able to have the authority, as they are locally elected, to manage their budgets to some extent but also to make those decisions of when and if to enter into joint-use agreements – that's just one example – to enter into any agreement, really. That was a core part and a core principle behind the Education Act.

But here we see, by virtue of what I will say is essentially a miscellaneous statutes amendment act or a red tape creation act, that this government is now meddling with that, which speaks to me again about the fact that this government is not familiar with what was in the Education Act, is not familiar with what were the core principles and objectives behind that act, which was to grant greater authority. Now they're going in and mandating that school boards enter into those agreements.

Look, I'll say this again. Most school boards already enter into these joint-use agreements because they're critical. To actually treat school boards as if they don't know already the value of joint-use agreements, the value of working with our municipalities to talk about how community spaces, things like – we see now, you know, the development of schools that are connected to community rec centres and spaces that are really designed to work with the community, not just serve either schools or municipalities but actually to serve the community. School boards and municipalities have been doing this for ages. They think it's really great. The ones I've reviewed have always been very great and very co-operative.

I just find it very ironic that it would be included in this act as if it's some kind of red tape reduction because actually it's about now government overseeing. I imagine they'll have to mandate or somehow require a review of these agreements to make sure that they're actually in place and have the provisions in place. So they're actually creating red tape, which is completely unnecessary, for the most part. To include it as part of red tape reduction says to me that this associate minister really has very little to do.

In fact, where we heard this government stand up and beat the drum about red tape reduction is about approving projects, approving energy projects and all that. I see none of that in this act. Of course, I think it's going to be diffused, as it always has been, into the work of each individual ministry and their responsibilities within their ministry to create efficiencies, to make sure things are working properly, to make sure the objectives of the ministries are met. That's always been the responsibility of individual ministries, and I imagine that's still happening right now. I imagine we're going to see that review as it constantly was happening through all government, making sure that things were happening the way they should.

But it only speaks to, again, the fact that the creation of a separate, stand-alone, red tape reduction associate minister and ministry is actually a facade because red tape reduction is about making sure that all the government ministries are operating efficiently. No further evidence is required than this, frankly, anemic bill that we are seeing right here. Really, what this is, again, is to show that red tape reduction and creating an associate minister and all of that responsible for that was just some sort of symbolic measure to show to their base that they're taking red tape seriously. Well, if this is their evidence of taking red tape seriously, if I was – and I'm not – a UCP supporter, I would say: "Wow. That's pretty sad. This is not very effective. This isn't going to do much." I'm also wondering what the associate minister is going to do next because, really, this seems to be all that they have coming forward.

You know, again, I was not part of the previous Assembly, the previous Legislature, but I understand and I'm not surprised it's been a constant criticism whenever big omnibus bills are brought through. We've seen at least four of them this session alone, and it's a make-work project for a government who has demonstrated in the last few weeks that they actually do not have efficiency at the heart of what they're doing. I think this is a very good piece of evidence to support that; $10 million thrown away on a bill that, frankly, could be achieved with a miscellaneous statutes amendment act and actually does not eliminate red tape.

I think that once again we're seeing more proof that this government really is not about fiscal responsibility or fiscal efficiency. They're throwing away money on pet projects. I, for one – I'm sure many of my constituents feel the same way – am starting to get a little bit fed up with that.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise to speak and to voice my objection to the contents of this bill, mostly because it's a waste of time. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments.

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to speak to Bill 25, Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019, specifically focusing on the issues with regard to the MGA and the changes proposed in this act that reflect on the MGA or amend the MGA.

You know, as I was going through it, there were a number of things, of course, that I want to focus on. I want to pick up first where my colleague left off with regard to the ICF process, the intermunicipal collaboration framework process. I note that on the website for the RMA they do go into this a great deal because there are a number of proposed changes that would impact the ICF process. Perhaps the Minister of Municipal Affairs or the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction can provide some clarification at some point. I did listen to the associate minister talk about how the proposed changes to the ICF and the Municipal Government Act would improve things for municipalities, but I'm not sure of all of the changes that he's talking about and how it's actually red tape reduction and how it would improve life for municipalities throughout the province.

For one, the deadline for rural-to-rural ICFs remains at April 1, 2021, and as I understand it, some of the rural municipalities can have a dozen or more other municipalities on their boundaries. That remains quite challenging in terms of a timeline for them, April 1, 2021.

I do note that many of the things in this bill soften or make it easier for municipalities to focus on the issues that are important between them and not on all of the long laundry list of services that they potentially had to go through. This bill kind of says, "Where there's disagreement, that's where we want you to focus" or "Where there's a benefit, we want you to focus on that area and not other things that you won't be working together around." You know, on the surface that makes sense. I do wonder about the comprehensiveness of future intermunicipal collaborative frameworks and intermunicipal development frameworks with that kind of understanding. The concern that was brought forward was: is the deadline for rural-to-rural ICFs remaining at April 1, 2021, when there are such a significant number of counties and MDs on the boundaries of some? Do they need more time? I think this is suggesting they need more time to do that.

I just want to also say that there are some things in this around the arbitration process, that is a significant portion of this bill. Arbitration between municipalities is an important aspect of sorting things out. The question that I have, though, is: do any of these changes in the bill deal with who actually pays for the arbitration or the experts that are brought in? If this is making it more challenging for municipalities to resolve disputes between them, perhaps the province should be putting some money on the table to incent or to help municipalities work together so that they can get to the end process, which is, you know, the sharing of resources, the sharing of services, so that we're not making things redundant at the municipal level that they could very well share like waste-water and water services.

Speaking of waste-water and water services, I know that the AUMA received over 140 responses when they asked their members and surveyed their members about: what would be important in a red tape reduction bill? Many of those responses, 60 per cent of the responses, identified that they encountered regulatory barriers when dealing with drinking water, stormwater, and waste water, and I fail to see in any of this bill where that is being addressed. It strikes me that the AUMA membership went to the extent of talking to their members and getting some feedback, and I fail to see where that feedback is incorporated into this bill. You know, you don't get many chances to bring forward bills, probably, if you're an associate minister, so I would think that you would want to make sure you're addressing the needs of those AUMA members that are out there.

Also, just looking at what was important for those members of the AUMA, it says that over 50 per cent of the respondents highlighted that they experienced red tape in grant applications and reporting. Now, I have looked throughout this bill, and I fail to see where, under the various ministries that are impacted by changes here, grant applications and streamlining of regulations are identified. I could be wrong, and that's where the associate minister or the Minister of Municipal Affairs or any other minister dealing with grants may have the opportunity to clarify for me when they get the opportunity.

I'd just go back to additional changes that are proposed in the bill, that come forward from the RMA in this instance. You know, I just look at joint-use and planning agreements that are between municipalities and school boards. Certainly, I know there are challenges in that regard, and I just don't know if all of the proposed changes here will benefit municipalities and school boards. I think they're intended to. But I can tell you that forever in Calgary we've been working very closely with the two, now four, school boards in that municipality for the benefit of both the taxpayers – children, parents – and good planning. I'm not sure where the problems are that are seen as being fixed by what's before us today.

The review of ABCs was talked about by my colleague previously. I can tell you that we did a significant review of agencies, boards, and commissions. I'm not sure that I'd see it as red tape reduction to say that one is being killed that hasn't been in service since 2004, whatever it was. That doesn't really kind of address the definition of red tape reduction. When we did the review of agencies, boards, and commissions, there were over 200 and some – I can't remember the exact number – and it was reduced to under 170. I think that would qualify as red tape reduction. But that's already been done, as I said.

The other aspects of changes that I'd like to focus on that I read in this bill have to do with making life simpler, I guess, and easier for municipalities. You know, it's eliminating the requirement – I just don't see it as red tape – for names of people who are attending in camera sessions of a council to not be put forward or to not be documented. I'm not really sure what that's about. I wonder if there's a concern about in camera sessions of councils generally and that this is an attempt to take that opportunity away from councils. You know, it's certainly something they do when there are issues that can't be relayed to the public immediately. They go in camera to essentially get their act together and find out more about a particular issue before it's reported on. But you do have to report on what the issue was when you come out of in camera. So I'm not sure what changes in here would be red tape reduction. I'm certainly looking forward to the associate minister telling us.

There is a change from 90 days to 120 days for by-elections. I'm not sure how that's red tape reduction, but, you know, perhaps you can clarify. There is a need, of course, when there is a vacancy on council and there's a significant amount of time before the next election, that that seat get filled, and there's a process that has seemed to work forever. Now there's a change to 30 more days to allow councils to fill that position. If anything, it would seem to delay it up to 120 days. Perhaps the associate minister can tell us if that came out of any of the discussions that he had with the RMA or the AUMA or who brought it forward and if it's a long-standing, nagging thing that municipalities have worried about and wanted changed. Certainly, I don't know what the problem is.

I think those are some of the concerns I have. Obviously, the RMA has given a significant amount of feedback. From reading their website, I can see that the concern is around arbitration cost and that the concern is around the number of changes to the IDP process, the arbitration process, and several other things that are other proposed changes that are in here.

I will sit down now, Mr. Speaker, and hopefully the associate minister and others can provide some clarification to me. Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments.

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and speak to Bill 25. For anyone who has taken the time to read through it, it's misnamed, quite frankly. It's not red tape reduction at all. I mean, I think there are actually two pieces that may reduce cabinet approval time, again not necessarily having the effect that the minister will tout or that this government claims about how it's making it easier to do business in the province. I don't know of a regulation change, other than one in here, that actually does that.

You know, I want to start off, first of all, reading into Hansard the dictionary definition of red tape, which is important because many of my comments to follow are about the fact that I'm going to give examples of how it's not actually red tape reduction. Red tape, as defined by the Oxford dictionary, is "excessive bureaucracy or adherence to rules, especially in public business." I don't know if you know this, Mr. Speaker, but the origin is from Bill C-18 federally, so named because of the red or pink tape used to bind official documents. That is actually the history of red tape.

Now, a number of changes that this bill makes, as my colleague had mentioned, don't actually require legislation. They can be done through miscellaneous statutes. There are some that could be done through OIC changes, including the dissolution of some boards. In fact, by bringing forward a piece of legislation, it's actually added levels of bureaucracy, the fact that we are taking time, all of us, to be here to debate a bill where many of the functions of this bill aren't necessary in its own stand-alone provision. This government is gung-ho to put forward omnibus legislation that has sweeping changes to dozens of acts affecting every single Albertan. That can be done in omnibus legislation like raising the personal income taxes of every single Albertan. Yet making a few statutory changes needs its own piece of legislation?

I think what we're seeing here, Mr. Speaker, is a trend, that this government is trying to create the illusion of doing things but isn't in fact moving them forward, not much. Again, I will come to a couple of examples here, and one of them I do agree with, so I will give credit where credit is due.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, first of all, that the dissolution of some of the boards in this that have not been functional: that's not red tape. The board is not even meeting. There is no red tape. That's not preventing anyone from doing anything, including the minister or any government. That's a dissolution of a board. That could be done in a statutes act. It doesn't need to be put in its own stand-alone bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as well, the appointment – I think it's the health board the minister spoke of. Appointing board members now can be done by the minister. Now, is that going to save time on taking it to cabinet and going through the cabinet debate process? Yes. Does it make it more expedient? Yes, it does. Now, I can tell you that there is a reason and a long-standing history for why appointments go to cabinet and aren't done by individual ministers. Part of that is to ensure that there is oversight, that it isn't a minister appointing friends or buddies or others who maybe aren't qualified. But they could do that if they had the sole discretion and the sole authority.

The other thing is that, again, part of that process is so that cabinet members can deliberate. I'll give you a great example of something that I find concerning. The change to the Forests Act: now the minister has the exclusive authority to enter forest management agreements. Now, the challenge that I have with this – I mean, first, my question is: how many forestry companies did the minister speak to, and how many of them are asking for this? This is news to me. I have a pretty good relationship with the forestry sector, but maybe they came and spoke to the minister about this change.

The challenge with this is that the forest management agreements, including dealing with the amount of harvestable timber, impact more than just this single minister. This has incredible impacts on the surrounding municipalities around the Crown land. It has impacts on the Minister of Energy's portfolio because these forest management agreements impact the oil and gas sector. They have significant impacts on the Minister of Municipal Affairs' portfolio. They have impacts on Environment and Parks. The challenge with giving the minister exclusive authority to enter into forest management contracts or agreements is that you've now siloed this one responsibility that the minister has, so now the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry doesn't need to talk to the other ministers. They don't need to be looped in to talk about: what are the other points of view or perspectives on approving a certain section of land for use in the forestry sector?

The other thing that's interesting is that I don't know if all of the forestry companies are going to be in favour of this, where it may give certain benefits to individual companies and not to others. I hope that when we get to Committee of the Whole, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry can talk about the number of companies that he's consulted with and how taking this to cabinet was so onerous. I can tell you that I've been part of cabinet deliberations on forestry management agreements and felt that I appreciated having the different perspectives of the different cabinet ministers, each of them coming, obviously, with their own individual lens and with the lens through which they see different issues through their portfolios. I found it very, very beneficial to have those conversations. So that's one that – I guess, you know, we could consider that eliminating red tape, not having to go through cabinet. The challenge is that there's a reason behind it and, I think, quite a legitimate reason.

The other one that's interesting in this bill, Mr. Speaker, if I can find it here, relates to the AUC approving hydroelectric dams. I'm curious to know: who was consulted on this? Again, what is the new process for the AUC to ensure that they are adequately consulting with indigenous groups, consulting on the environment, consulting with municipalities who are going to be impacted by this, by the creation of dams? This is going to have significant impact on wildlife habitats.

I can tell you that under the PC government, between 2012 and 2015, I sat on the Resource Stewardship Committee, where we took a significant amount of time to travel the province and study the issue of hydroelectricity in northern Alberta and the impacts that a new facility would have, whether that's run-of-the-river or an actual dam. You know, I'm interested to know the impacts that this will have for the electricity companies – on their transmission, on supply, on their costs – which also would go through the AUC.

The other thing that's fascinating is that I've recently learned that the controversy around the Oldman dam – this is why we actually have the existing legislation, because it was so controversial. There was a Supreme Court decision on that project. Anyone who lives in that area, I think, will recall that part of the reason there are these processes in place is to prevent another situation like that from happening.

Yes, I guess you could make an argument that that's red tape, but it's red tape that's there to ensure projects get approvals. I mean, what's interesting is that, again, the government talks about the disappointment with the Northern Gateway being torpedoed – fair enough – and feeling disappointed that it did, but let's look at: why was it torpedoed? It goes back to failure to adequately consult before that project was given the green light. In order to ensure that we get projects moving forward, whether it's pipelines or hydro dams, you know, having these pieces in place – they serve a purpose. They may be a little time consuming, and they may be onerous, but if it means that the project will go forward, then I think it's worth it, rather than being embroiled in courts and injunctions, tying up dollars. Again, I mean, you want to talk about eliminating uncertainty. Well, that creates uncertainty for investors. Having a very clear process mapped out, I think, is your better approach.

The other thing that's interesting is that in estimates with the Energy minister we talked about ways to improve the AER, how they can expedite their approval processes, because we know that that's an issue, especially for energy companies. There are examples of projects that have been tied up for years. You know, I appreciate the Minister of Energy responding or answering this question, saying: "Well, we are working on that. We are working with the AER to identify ways that they can expedite their approvals." Okay. Well, it sounds like the Minister of Energy sure doesn't need the minister of red tape to get involved. If anything, he's probably going to slow it down.

I don't see the value-add of that ministry. I agree with what she's saying, that there are a number of things that we did, whether it's regulations that came through cabinet, et cetera, and to look at them with a lens of: what service are they providing? What purpose do they provide? Is it still necessary, and if not, do they need to be amended, or can it be eliminated? But we don't need a whole new ministry to add a new layer of bureaucracy looking at bills and regulations when, quite frankly, as the Member for Edmonton-Decore said, we can use that $10 million elsewhere. You basically mandate to every ministry that they look at every single regulation and piece of legislation through the lens of: what new regs would this create, and would that be a burden for either businesses or others? I don't see the clear value of that ministry, quite frankly.

Now, having said that – and I don't think it was necessary to come through a whole ministry – where I will give credit, whether this is for the minister of red tape or the minister of ag and forestry: allowing buildings to be higher than six storeys, I know, is a huge boon for our forestry sector. I'm quite confident that they were quite happy about this. They were asking at least our government to consider this. I know that there's an example; I believe it's in British Columbia. It's the tallest wood-structure building, that is really a showpiece. It's, like, 20-some storeys high, Mr. Speaker, built of wood, standing today, with absolutely no problems. We'll knock on wood. Really, it points to how the forestry sector, through innovation and their technologies, can build structures that are as fire resistant as those made of other materials.

Now, I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Decore talking about: I hope that our firefighters have been consulted on this and discussed and weighed in on the impact. But I know that, from a forestry point of view, aligning Alberta's regulations with federal to 12 storeys is a good thing. The one piece in this bill that I do agree with and appreciate is that section. I will say "Good job" to the government and, quite frankly, "Good job" to the forestry sector because I know that they've been very vocal in asking for this. But, again, this one piece: does it need to be in this bill when you have three other omnibus pieces of legislation that are making amendments to a number of different statutes?

Really, it begs the question: is this creation more of a talking point? It was part of the election platform. You know, I guess, to put it one way: where's the beef? We're talking about all this red tape elimination. I don't see it, quite frankly. This bill, unless I overlooked it – I encourage the minister, when we get into committee, to talk about which of these changes will expedite or help businesses, because so far I haven't come across examples where this actually helps resolve the issue of red tape. To go back to where I started, Mr. Speaker, with the definition of red tape, many of these changes are not actually red tape reduction. It's a great talking point. It's flashy. The government can go to Albertans and say, "Look at what we're doing" although anybody who dives into this says, "Where's the red tape reduction?" Again, is it necessary to create a ministry and to have a bill which does this?

With that, Mr. Speaker, I mean, those are really the issues that I have with this unnecessary – there are three massive omnibus bills before this House right now, maybe two, that it could be a part of. I'm curious to have the debate continue in Committee of the Whole, and I will leave my comments there.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should anybody wish to make quick questions or comments.

Seeing none, are there any other members looking to speak to the bill? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has risen.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 25. As my colleague was finishing up his remarks, he was asking, “Where is the red tape reduction in this bill?” and he was looking around. I think I would agree with him. I didn’t see any red tape reduction in this piece of legislation. Rather, it’s more like an omnibus bill, which makes amendments that deal with 13 pieces of legislation.

Some of the members on the other side will remember that when they were in opposition, we were bringing forward changes to workers’ compensation and the Labour Relations Code, fairly connected pieces of legislation. They were doing everything, essentially, to split that because that was an omnibus bill, that was too much for them to deal with, that was curtailing debate on these bills. Now here we are. That’s the third or fourth piece of legislation in this sitting where they’re dealing with as many statutes as they want and want us to debate all of these changes.

I think, as was mentioned before, that some of these changes have nothing to do with red tape reduction. If you’re getting rid of some body, some foundation that was never consulted, that was never in the way of making decisions, that was of no use, I think those are the kinds of things, cleanups, that are for a miscellaneous statutes act. In every session, every sitting there used to be one, at least, that dealt with those kinds of changes.

Then there are things that are more like policy changes. As was mentioned about the wood structures, changing the wood structures, allowing wood structures more than six storeys or changes to the Safety Codes Act: these are substantive changes, policy changes. I think that the ministries that deal with these pieces of legislation, I would argue, are better positioned to make those changes. If those ministers need another minister to look into their ministry and tell them what process is not good, I think that’s a bigger concern.

When I was in Community and Social Services, we looked at AISH application procedures, and we were able to reduce the information that we were getting from individuals that was not needed. Their applications were 22 or 23 pages, and we were able to bring it down to 16 pages. Then the application was in two or three parts. We were getting one section filled, and then we were giving the medical form for clients to take to their doctor and get that filled, so we combined that application as well. That was somewhat of a reduction in the red tape. Today, when I looked at this legislation and went through the pieces of legislation it deals with, I quite frankly had to look up, really, what red tape reduction means. As my colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview quoted from the dictionary, I also googled it to just, I guess, clarify for myself that whatever I’m thinking red tape reduction is, that’s exactly what it is. That is, I guess, cleaning procedures. How it’s defined in Google is that you are reducing the bureaucratic obstacles. I think that here we don’t see any kind of reduction on those lines at all. It’s either a cleanup that was done previously in a miscellaneous statutes act, or it’s some kind of policy changes that are better suited for the ministers who are in charge of those ministries to deal with.

I don’t see a huge red tape reduction if I talk on a couple of statutes, a couple of changes that relate to the Energy ministry. One was the Small Power Research and Development Act. The government says that all contracts have been concluded, so repealing this may be a good idea, but as such it’s not reducing any kind of bureaucratic obstacles that were in the way of these projects or that will change the way we do things. Rather, I would say that it only gives another indication on the part of this government that renewables, as we have seen before, are not a priority for this government. I’m not sure if the programs that were previously under Energy Efficiency Alberta will continue with the target of over 30 per cent; in Energy estimates we were told that they are not.

I don’t think it’s in any way, shape, or manner red tape reduction as I understand it.

The second thing is the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. I think that’s the most important change contained in this piece of legislation, how we will deal with hydroelectric projects. These are oftentimes projects of huge magnitude and importance, and meanwhile many other considerations and just leaving it to one minister may remove some unnecessary requirements. Considering what we have seen from this government and different ministers, I think it’s concerning that they are just consolidating powers in their hands. What we have seen in this Energy ministry so far is that there will be some war room, the Canadian Energy Centre, where they appointed a failed UCP candidate to look after our oil and gas resources’ reputation. The same thing happened with the inquiry when that kind of power was exercised. They appointed a commissioner who awarded another $900,000 contract to a firm where his son is a partner. That kind of consolidation of power under this government’s minister is also a concern, and again I don’t see how this is reducing any kind of bureaucratic obstacles from any of the process.

When the UCP was campaigning, they were using this red tape reduction, essentially, to make Albertans believe that somehow there is a huge bureaucracy, that somehow the size of the public service is huge, that there are managers managing the managers, that kind of rhetoric. They promised Albertans that they would clean up those things and make processes easier. This bill doesn’t do anything along those lines. It’s just another miscellaneous statutes act, or the changes contained in it should have been properly consulted on and dealt with by the minister responsible for these statutes.

Based on these, I will not be supporting this piece of legislation because it does nothing to reduce red tape at all.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to rise to speak to Bill 25, Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019, briefly and focus on some elements of the proposed legislation. Although it changes or repeals up to 13 acts, the same thing could have been accomplished, as other speakers have talked about, by using a miscellaneous statutes amendment act, not a red tape reduction act in and of itself. It’s trying, actually, to give purpose to the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction. It’s an attempt to give him something to do and speaks to how unnecessary the whole bill is and the whole ministry is.

Reducing regulation and updating existing regulations and statutes is an ongoing process, Mr. Speaker, that has historically taken place throughout governments. It can be dealt with by cabinet decree or a Premier’s mandate letter to the ministers without creating an entire ministry to be the red tape minder overlooking all ministries. All of this, as other speakers have mentioned – and I certainly concur with them – could have been accomplished through miscellaneous statutes amendment acts, which is a rather normal process of updating existing legislation and statutes.

The government uses the language of red tape to justify eliminating key services to pay for their $4.7 billion corporate handout, and it does nothing to create jobs. This bill is simply a collection of housekeeping items that can be done, as I mentioned, in the statutes amending act or done by the ministers responsible for their own acts.

As critic for Ag and Forestry I wanted to touch briefly upon a couple of things that this act does to touch that ministry. For example, the entry into forest management agreements can now be done through a ministerial order instead of an order in council. While I agree that this is a reasonable change, it could have been done in a statutes amendment act or by the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. It does not justify the associate minister's job.

Secondly, with respect to the forestry end of the ministry that I'm the critic for, of course, the measures would be better placed in a miscellaneous statutes amendment act, as I mentioned. The parts of the Safety Codes Act which would be changed allowing wood buildings to be higher than six storeys is something that I applaud along with our Opposition House Leader, and it is bringing it in line with federal regulations. It is something that will allow larger, higher buildings to be built out of wood.

I note that in the Alberta Forest Products Association election platform, that they released last March, they were hoping, as a key recommendation, to seize "future opportunities including building public projects with wood, investing in research to develop new products, and helping to open new markets." All of these hopeful recommendations from the Alberta Forest Products Association are things that are reflected in the desire to amend the regulations allowing higher buildings, taller buildings, to be built with wood. We certainly applaud that. However, expressing this desire to have more public projects built out of wood is something that the Alberta Forest Products Association envelopes in a goal of having regulations that allow the development of new products here in Alberta and, of course, is always involved in making sure that any proposals they make to change safety codes do in fact reflect their desire to maintain safety of buildings.

Much, much work has been done by the Alberta Forest Products Association in concert with their scientific wing, and nothing in their recommendations would be something that could be described as an unsafe or unexamined factor when they talk about increasing the number of storeys that they're allowed to build with wood. I certainly support that, but the Safety Codes Act changes, once again, did not have to be implemented through a mechanism such as a red tape reduction act and would more properly have been found in a piece of legislation under a miscellaneous statutes amendment act.

I certainly applaud the Alberta Forest Products Association for its desire to promote the building of higher structures with wood and also certainly hope the government would concur that we should be seeking every opportunity to make sure that the construction of public buildings with wood to a higher height is something that is actually discussed seriously and, hopefully, promoted within government circles so that we can see more structures using Alberta's technology to create taller structures with wood implemented in the very near future. But, once again, it didn't have to be implemented by way of a bill called the red tape reduction act, something that's simply here to justify the minister's existence. It is a ministry which really is looking for a role to play when, in fact, the role was already being played by ministries themselves, as historically has taken place throughout time.

I wanted to touch upon one more of the elements of this act. I could reiterate a few other things, but I think I will probably just stick within my critic role as it relates to Agriculture and Forestry and suggest that the ongoing recommendations of any minister to his deputies are always to make sure that redundancies and unnecessary legislation and regulation are brought to his or her attention. The whole concept of a red tape reduction act is really an effort to try to create an impression in the public that governments don't have this as an ongoing measure when, in fact, it can be pointed out that in our past government's history this was an ongoing process – we had made great strides in reducing inefficiencies and reducing the number of agencies, boards, and commissions that were not operating or operating efficiently – and that the whole creation of the red tape reduction ministry is a rather ironic creation of more red tape in and of itself.

Once again, a miscellaneous statutes amendment act has historically been used for this type of legislation. We didn't need an omnibus bill that kind of showboated what governments normally do as a matter of process. I would hope that this is the last time that we see the creation of a ministry designed to do something which, in fact, accomplishes the opposite.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I won't be supporting the legislation. I do look forward, however, to seeing the pieces of it that are touching on particularly our forest industry and developing technologies and implementing regulations to allow the creation of public buildings in particular to a higher storey made out of wood, particularly wood that is designed and engineered in this province for export globally. That's something that I hope to see. But, once again, it wasn't necessary to do it through this piece of legislation. A miscellaneous statutes amendment act would have been the better mechanism to have used.

Thank you.

11:30

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak on this matter?

Seeing none, the hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction to close debate.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the robust debate and the presentation by the members opposite of their concerns. I will let them know that we have made copious notes and are looking forward to being able to discuss them in Committee of the Whole.

I would like to just really quickly confirm to the members that – I want to remind them that we are not creating a new budget item, that this is actually an associate ministry under Treasury Board and Finance. So we are reallocating some of the funds that that ministry has in order to be able to focus on and address the issue of red tape reduction, which the hon. members had the opportunity in the last four years to do but failed to do. Albertans have said that this is important to them.

One of the other concerns that I've heard is that this is not a red tape reduction initiative. Now, I would obviously disagree with them on that, and I would state to them that this actually does matter. I stated at the beginning, when I talked in my introduction of this Bill 25 in second reading, that when B.C. did this organ and tissue initiative, they actually saw a fourfold increase. That actually had a material effect on individuals' lives, a fourfold increase in organ and tissue donors. So, Mr. Speaker, this actually does matter. It doesn't just matter to businesses; it matters to individuals. This was a red tape reduction initiative which took place in B.C., and this is a best practice that we've decided to put into effect as well here. It is actually something that I very much enjoy doing, to be able to work on these red tape reduction initiatives.

I would like to speak also to another point that they made, that it could have been done in other ministries. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a government-wide initiative. It's just focused under the red tape reduction ministry's responsibility and mandate. Each of the ministries that have brought forward these submissions has been well vetted. I have the greatest confidence in these ministers and their ability to be able to look for those redundancies, which is what we've seen today with this bill.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks and thank the members and move to close debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: Just prior to moving to Committee of the Whole, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader did catch my eye. If she could please continue with some remarks.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move to adjourn the Assembly until this afternoon at 1:30.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 26, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, this morning I had the pleasure to meet with the consul general of the Czech Republic in Toronto, Mr. Ivan Počuch. He's accompanied today by Jerry Jelinek and Trade Commissioner David Müller. Thank you, all, for joining us at the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, there are several guests joining us today. We have school groups here, starting with the school group from Edmonton-Rutherford, students from George P. Nicholson. From Edmonton-Whitemud please welcome students from Monsignor William Irwin school. Last of our school groups today, from the constituency of Edmonton-South welcome students from Roberta MacAdams. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Hon. members, also in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon I'm very pleased to welcome the better half of the Member for Lethbridge-East, Ms Deanne Neudorf.

Also in the Speaker's gallery today are guests of mine. Welcome Mr. and Mrs. Peck – these are the parents of Samantha Peck, who works for the Associate Minister of Natural Gas – and also a son of constituents in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Welcome here today a guest of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, Mr. Hamish McNaughton Kerfoot, a board member of Rocky View county FCSS program.

Visiting the Minister of Transportation: please welcome members of the Canadian Urban Transit Association.

Also, visiting the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction: a very warm welcome to Alberta Sugar Beet Growers and constituents joining him from Taber-Warner.

Also, special guests of the Minister of Seniors and Housing: from the city of Edmonton, Chief of Staff Aileen Giesbrecht and social development branch manager Jackie Foord.

Last but certainly not least, constituency guests of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora: please welcome Sylvia Krogh and Louise Swift.

Please rise, receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Raging Grannies

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, thank you for acknowledging my guests: Sylvia Krogh, Louise Swift, and Edda Loomes. They are constituents and active participants in public life in the province of Alberta. They also happen to be Raging Grannies. This is their second trip to the Legislature in less than 10 days. Last Monday Sylvia, Louise, and Edda came here to take part in a demonstration against the government's cruel cuts to our postsecondary institutions.

For those of us not born into privilege and wealth, postsecondary education is a crucial doorway to a career and a better life, both for ourselves and for our families. But this government is slamming that door shut for many Albertans with a 23 per cent tuition fee hike, jacked-up interest on student debt, and cancellation of the tuition tax credits, just to pay for a $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout.

Sylvia, Louise, and Edda could have stayed home. They could have stayed warm. But they came here to support Alberta's young people and make those points using their constitutional rights of freedom of expression and peaceful assembly. After the event was concluded, Sylvia, Louise, and Edda, who are all seniors, were hoping for a moment to sit down, warm up a bit, have a cup of tea, and maybe use the bathroom. But when they came into the front doors of this House, the people's House, they were denied access and turned away. Imagine that, Mr. Speaker, tour groups being ushered in but engaged and publicly active citizens from Alberta turned away. This is disgraceful.

It is also very symbolic of this government, a government that has broken its promise to Albertans, a government whose attention is focused on rewarding its cronies and donors, a government that is dismantling and firing agencies and people who hold them to account. The Alberta public is the final check on this government. How quickly they are returning to the PC era of the front doors of this building being locked to keep the public out.

I hope that the presence of Sylvia, Louise, and Edda in the gallery today can help remind this corrupt government that Albertans will make them answer for their choices in this place.

Millar Western Forest Products Centennial

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to acknowledge the incredible contributions of Millar Western within my region for the last 100 years. This summer I had the incredible honour, along with the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and the Member for Central Peace-Notley, to participate in the 100-year celebrations of Millar Western. That day, as I am certain my colleagues will attest, I also showed off some pretty impressive axe-throwing skills at the celebration.

J.W. Millar incorporated his company, which was active in logging and construction, in 1919 in Saskatchewan and shortly afterwards was logging and sawmilling in Alberta. Mr. Millar chose to make Edmonton the home of the company's head office. In 1988 Millar Western pulp became Alberta's first bleached chemithermomechanical pulp, or BCTMP, mill.

You see, Mr. Speaker, while some may only recognize Millar Western as the company which supplies the 70-foot Christmas tree to Churchill Square each year, the contribution this company has made to my community is much, much larger. They employ hundreds of full-time and contract employees and contribute millions of dollars to our local economy. Millar Western leads the way in sustainable forest practices and environmental stewardship. They represent our province and country with their market access in the U.S., Asia, and Europe, yet here at home they ensure that our province and country are well represented by providing scholarships and training in trades to young people.

Three generations of the Millar family have been actively involved in the operations of Millar Western. Today Mac Millar and Janet Millar keep a watchful eye on the company, and I must say that they are truly incredible and genuine people.

Mr. Speaker, while I am here today to acknowledge Millar Western and the incredible milestone of 100 years, I trust, from what I have seen as I get to know them and with the forward thinking and leadership of Mr. Craig Armstrong, that Millar Western is indeed a young company as they will inevitably be here for generations to come.

The Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Calgary Dinos' Vanier Cup Championship

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My wife loves it when I start talking football, so I know that every member of this House will be excited to hear about my great love for this game.

Mr. Speaker, the final game of the season. We had trained all year: 6 a.m. workouts, after-school practices, an entire summer dedicated to exercise. It's minus 10 outside, but you don't feel the cold. Adrenalin is keeping you warm. Your team, your brothers, are huddled up. Coach calls your number: blitz. You hover towards the line, then back. You keep 'em guessing. Ball is snapped. Go. You hid your blitz well. Unabated, clear path to that quarterback. I was the inside linebacker in a 3-4 scheme, and I loved it when the coach called my number.

Football is one of the great sports. Some may argue that hockey in Canada reigns supreme, but I would be happy to take on that debate. No matter your perspective it is fair to say that with 107 years of the Grey Cup, football is a big part of the Canadian identity.

That is why it is my pleasure to rise in this House today to congratulate the Calgary Dinos on their 27-13 victory over the Montreal Carabins. It has been 24 years since the Dinos hoisted the Vanier Cup back in 1995, with a close call in 2016, when they were edged out by Laval for the championship. Twenty-four years is a long time, but I'm sure any Blue Bombers fans in the House know the pain of a championship drought.

Through hard work and dedication, giving as good as they got, the Dinos showed Calgarians and Albertans that they were unstoppable. Their second touchdown a beautifully connected 10-play, 87-yard drive. Their quarterback, Adam Sinagra, and their head coach, Wayne Harris, led their team with distinction. When injuries took out defensive players, they soldiered on and claimed the Vanier Cup.

As an alumni of the University of Calgary I am very proud of the Dinos' win, and I would ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the Dinos in their victory. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Sports in Alberta

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about my experience as a football mom, a hockey mom, a dance mom, a soccer mom, and in general a sports parent. All three of my children have been involved in sports growing up, and my youngest still plays hockey.

I've been at the early morning practices and now the late-night hockey games, freezing my feet and my buns off in the arena, cheering on my son. I'm such an enthusiastic and proud mom that, to my son's embarrassment, I have a blanket with his face on it that I showcase in my particularly proud moments.

I've also been involved in managing and coaching teams and know the level of commitment put in by parents, youngsters, and volunteers to foster a team atmosphere and a family dynamic amongst all the players and families. It's for this reason I want to thank the Northeast Zone Sports Council for continuing to foster their incredible work ethic that makes everyone feel like they are included and part of a larger family. This year marks their 50th anniversary in north Edmonton, and I want to congratulate them for being a stalwart in the community.

Opportunities to participate in sporting activities are vital for communities. This is why I am deeply concerned with the dissolution of the Alberta Sport Connection. I know the positive impact sports has on all who participate, and this decision is creating confusion and uncertainty for the community groups and organizations throughout the province as they work to ensure participation in sports for all. With this decision this government and the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women are once again sacrificing communities and families in order to pay for their $4.7 billion giveaway, and I will continue to call them out each and every time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Aviation Industry

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As an airline alumni I proudly rise to speak to an important element of Alberta's economy and future. Air services are a vital asset in our transportation network as we develop comprehensive multimodal infrastructure to better serve all Albertans. Aviation is a key driver of global economic development. It is a proven stimulant with respect to tourism, commerce, investment, and trade. Time and again we see how strategically planned air services support employment, increase labour mobility, add value by enabling trade, and set the stage for building strong and impactful relationships across all sectors of the economy.

We all enjoy travel opportunities, but let's not forget the economic benefits also brought to Alberta. Strategic thinking and planning are required to launch and sustain air services as an enduring pillar of the Alberta advantage. Mr. Speaker, under the previous NDP government we saw indifference that may have contributed to the loss of vital air cargo links such as Cathay Pacific and Air China. These were important international air services which brought business to Alberta and export capacity to the world, now likely lost for the foreseeable future.

Air services, including the operations of our own provincial flag carrier, WestJet, provide many direct employment opportunities for Albertans, including but not limited to pilot training, aircraft maintenance, ground operations, and deep Arctic aviation such as the proven skills of Alberta's own Kenn Borek Air. This industry brings diversification and new opportunities and emerging markets to all Albertans while encouraging innovation and leading-edge technology investment in broader aerospace applications, including UAS and UAVs, commonly known as drones.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we need to recognize the vital importance of this industry and strategic attraction and retention of air services to ensuring that Alberta is well served now and into the future with respect to building the bridges of trade, tourism, investment, commerce, and friendship in an increasingly global economy. Our future depends upon it, and we can and will get it right under this UCP government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has a statement to make.

Budget 2019 Petition

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past couple of weeks we've been talking to Albertans about this budget, and what we've heard is that people are disappointed, frustrated, and angry. My office has received hundreds of letters, and I've been meeting with more concerned citizens than ever before. They're concerned about the attack on Alberta's most vulnerable citizens, from deindexing AISH and destroying Henson trusts to increasing class sizes and eliminating 100 per cent of the urban indigenous programming in my former ministry.

People know that this budget is mean-spirited and will cause significant difficulties for years into the future. That is why over 10,000 Albertans signed our bad-budget petition and counting. They are angry that they are paying more and getting less, all so this government can give a $4.7 billion giveaway to the largest corporations, who then in turn are investing in Wisconsin and not here in Alberta. Calgary lost 1,000 jobs last week alone. This government is failing to create jobs and at the same time is asking families to pay more income tax, pay more to send their kids to school, pay more for seniors' drugs, and the list goes on.

I encourage all Albertans who watch my member's statement to head online, sign our petition, and join us in sending a message to this government about their terrible budget. I want to tell this Premier that Albertans are frustrated. He has broken countless campaign promises and made cuts that most would deem unthinkable. He's made postsecondary more difficult to attain and has threatened the well-being of patients who depend on biologics for inflammatory bowel disease. Just yesterday we watched as this government plowed ahead with cuts to supports for former foster kids even as reports of some of them dying as a result of suicide went public.

This budget is shameful. It's heartless. It's cruel. But we have tens of thousands of Albertans behind us, and as the numbers grow every day, together we will stand up to this government.

Energy Industry

Mr. Neudorf: Mr. Speaker, Albertans know the value of the oil and gas sector here in our province. We live in an ecosystem where we cannot ignore the ongoing impact of our energy industries. Some of our province's largest donors to youth programs, community initiatives, and arts and culture projects are the businesses and business owners that choose to invest in Alberta energy. We know that when our industry is strong, flexible, and fully allowed to innovate, we all reap and enjoy the benefits of industry's success. It is difficult to imagine an Alberta without Alberta energy, yet it seems that an Alberta without Alberta energy is the vision of our future that some of our neighbours are committed to.

To our neighbours in Quebec, who in one breath oppose Alberta resource development while wondering in another why they do not have a reliable source of propane in the face of a CN strike, I remind them that pipeline projects are the safest and most reliable way of getting energy across our country. As long as this country utilizes oil and gas, this energy should be from Alberta. Beyond that, it should be transported by pipeline projects that get our energy across our country and empower numerous communities along the way.

I agree that developing an answer to how we will fuel the future is a priority to all of us. Albertans are known for their resiliency and their comeback stories of success. Strong leadership and a vision for a better Canada of tomorrow require investments in renewable resources. This is not a question of if we will invest but a question of when and how we will invest. Management by crisis will not produce answers, and refusing to participate in Alberta-based pipeline projects across this country is not realistic, admirable, or saving anything. There is no solution to renewable resource development that doesn't come hand in hand with our current energy sector. That is why I am absolutely committed to supporting our platform promise of a TIER fund and supporting real, fact-based science. Technology and innovation have always moved us forward and will again while working with and in support of our Alberta oil and gas industry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Alberta and Quebec

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Late last week Quebec's Finance minister, Eric Girard, published a column in the Financial Post which struck a conciliatory tone with western provinces. Girard wrote: "Québec is a partner of Western Canada and wants it to prosper. Québec supports Alberta's proposal that the federal government make the necessary improvements to the fiscal stabilization program." Girard said that his government is working to increase Quebec's GDP, which will eliminate the need for equalization, and notes that while the province will not accept an oil pipeline, they would be open to courting LNG development. This tone is refreshing to hear, but make no mistake, the political reality is muddy.

While Girard promises that Quebec's "government shares [our] concerns about the economic challenges [we] are facing, and the hardships experienced by families living [here]," just as loud is the absolute rejection of these same statements by Blanchet, who recently said that western separatism is inevitable because Canada is not a coherent or relevant country. When we have politicians attempting to soothe western worries while simultaneously their nationalist counterparts belittle and alienate our questions are raised. We must ask ourselves: which of these two speaks for Quebec?

Girard offers a calming hand to the west. He assures us that our interests are interlinked and that the west's pain is felt by the provincial government of Quebec. Blanchet scoffs at these same statements and calls Canada itself a petrostate, seeming to suggest that the interests of the west supersede those of the east. As our government fights to have our voice heard in Confederation, Quebec will never help us achieve that goal. They seem to feel that Alberta has an extra seat at the federal table when out here we know that exactly the opposite is true.

Preliminary discussions between our Premier, our Energy minister, and their new federal counterparts have been promising and optimistic, but this all feels very familiar. Until we have shovels in the ground, Albertans will be hoping for the best while preparing for the worst.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Election Financing Legislation

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as if it's not enough to breach the rule of law, abuse power, and likely breach the Conflicts of Interest Act, yesterday this government sent Justice lawyers to delay hearings into the Canadian Taxpayers Federation's challenge to laws designed to keep big money out of politics. These government lawyers promised the court that the law would be changed so that the CTF would no longer have a complaint. To the Premier: is there no end to your self-interested abuse of power to promote your own political success?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I guess the Leader of the Opposition didn't bother to read the platform upon which this government received a historic electoral mandate. It committed us to getting big money out of Alberta politics. NDP-affiliated unions spent millions of dollars trying to buy the last election. Thankfully, they failed. This is why we will keep our commitment to Albertans by bringing forward amendments to the election finance disclosure law to limit contributions to so-called political action committees to $30,000 a year.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this is not about that particular transgression. This is about the gift to the CTF and others like it. The election finance laws were passed by this House to close loopholes that allowed foreign, corporate, or union money to influence elections. We put people first. Yet multiple third-party supporters of the UCP challenged these laws in court, and now it appears the Premier is going to fix the problem for them, the very people he used to work for, for heaven's sake. We took dark money out of politics. Why does the Premier want to put it back in?

Mr. Kenney: They did no such thing, Mr. Speaker. They created a legal structure that helped their union affiliates to spend millions of dollars trying to buy the last election. Albertans weren't buying it, though. Instead, they voted for a platform to finally get big money out of Alberta politics by limiting to $30,000 the amount of money that so-called PACs can receive. In addition, we're going to get the NDP's green left, foreign-funded interest groups out of our politics by banning them from contributing to political action committees in Alberta.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the Premier doesn't appear to understand what it is I am talking about. Yesterday Justice lawyers told the court that the government is going to rewrite these laws, likely to the satisfaction of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation as well as other corporate, foreign-funded third parties supporting them. You know, this government claims to be fighting against foreign-funded interests, just apparently not the ones who support this Premier. Premier, why do you support foreign-funded interests that support only you?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, not only have they not read the platform, but they refuse to listen to the answer, which is that we will act for the first time in Alberta political history to make it illegal for foreign interests to interfere in our politics by contributing to the so-called political action committees that the NDP created in their legislation. There are other issues before the court dealing with the constitutionally protected freedom of expression. For example, we don't believe people should be prosecuted for publishing books, and we'll stand with Charter rights for freedom of expression.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Election Financing Legislation Election Commissioner

Ms Notley: This Premier wants to stand up for the Charter rights of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, who he used to work for, but nobody else's. It's part of the same plan to unlevel the playing field, to pick winners and losers, to help his friends get him re-elected. It is outrageous, Mr. Speaker. Why is this Premier playing games, abusing his power to further his own political interest at the expense of Alberta voters?

Mr. Kenney: I think I get what's going on here, Mr. Speaker. They don't want us to limit their union buddies from spending millions of dollars in the campaign. They don't want us to stop the foreign-funded green left from interfering in our politics. They don't want us to stop the government from prosecuting people for publishing books. But we won't listen to the NDP. We'll listen to Albertans, and we'll keep our word.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier tried to call the Election Commissioner's office redundant. Now experts are telling us that the separation of the commissioner from the CEO is actually a step forward because it guarantees investigations into misconduct involving election officials. So from a pure policy perspective, Bill 22 takes Alberta backwards. That's on top of the abuse of power perspective, the breach of rule of law perspective, the political interference perspective, the conflict-of-interest perspective, oh, and the corruption perspective. To the Premier: what in God's name are you trying to hide?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, some of Canada's leading experts on elections law have confirmed that it is inappropriate to have an Election Commissioner, who enforces the law, responsible to politicians. We are following their advice. In fact, Mr. Gibson himself, I believe in a report on the Northwest Territories, suggested that election commissioners should be integrated within the offices of chief electoral officers, which is why every other province in Canada and the federal Parliament have followed that approach. It's only the NDP who wanted a separate, redundant commissioner responsible to politicians instead of an arm's-length ...

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, in fact, B.C.'s former Chief Electoral Officer said that we were truly ahead of the curve, and other experts say that probably the rest of the country is going to adopt the rules that this guy just got rid of. But you know what? The Premier fled the province and ducked the vote last week because he knows that this is a gross abuse of power. Political commentator Rob Breakenridge called it "one of the biggest acts of political cowardice in recent memory." Before the Premier is forced to change his party colours from blue to yellow, will he finally stand up and explain why he fired Mr. Gibson and Mr. Gibson specifically? Why the gag order? What is he scared of?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the real question for that failed former Premier is: why was she the only Premier in Canada to create a separate, redundant election bureaucracy that was answerable to politicians and not to the Chief Electoral Officer? Why was she mucking around with Alberta election law in this way? This government has kept its word with Albertans. We opposed this unnecessary, duplicate, redundant bureaucracy in opposition. That opposition has been expressed in Bill 22. We've kept our commitment to Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, be cautious with the allegations that you might make either during debate or outside of debate.

The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, I know the Premier is intimidated by experts, but he really should consult one or two of them.

Calgary Finances

Ms Notley: Nonetheless, this Premier's $4.7 billion corporate handout is hurting Albertans. Last night hundreds of Calgarians showed up to a town hall to hear how the Premier's cuts to the city will impact families. Low-income transit passes: gone. Mary Salvani is on AISH, which this Premier also cut, and relies on that pass to get groceries and visit the doctor. She said, quote: I feel like everything is coming up against me. To the Premier: are these the kinds of efficiencies that the Premier promised to find in Calgary, and why is he most focused on attacking the most vulnerable?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what the Leader of the Opposition said is, as is so often and sadly the case, completely wrong. In fact, the budget renewed the low-income transit pass. Why? Because of the general approach of this budget to prioritize support for the vulnerable. Even in the midst of a fiscal crisis created by the NDP, we are increasing significantly the budgets for Community and Social Services, Children's Services as well as for mental health and addictions. [interjections] Now they're so angry that they can't stop heckling.

Ms Hoffman: We are angry.

The Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora will come to order.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier created this problem by cutting funding to Calgary halfway through the year. Now, Poverty Talks! says that the cuts will mean fewer affordable housing units at a time when the province – read you guys – is also cutting rent supplements. Quote: it's going to mean a lot of evictions, and it is catastrophic to the whole system. Evictions at Christmas, in the middle of winter. Premier, why are you making those with the very least pay the very most to cover your $4.7 billion handout to big, profitable corporations?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the NDP created, in the words of former NDP Finance minister Dr. MacKinnon, a fiscal crisis, a track towards over a hundred billion dollars in debt, which would have us spending billions and billions on interest payments to bankers instead of social services. This government has a credible plan to stop that fiscal disaster while protecting the most vulnerable in a budget that actually increases funding for Community and Social Services by 7.6 per cent and for Children's Services by over 8 per cent. We got it done.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the choice this Premier's cuts are forcing on Calgary is simple: raise taxes or cut jobs. Now, I'll assume the Premier doesn't want higher property taxes and would rather see more people fired. That's kind of been his shtick so far. So, Premier, help Calgary decide. Who should they fire first: police officers, firefighters, EMTs, bus drivers, or snowplow drivers? Those are the top contenders at last night's meeting. That's the decision. Premier, your cuts are doing this. Help them decide who gets fired this Christmas.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I guess four years in government did not mitigate the NDP's total fiscal and economic illiteracy. Here are the real questions. How would they stop a reckless dive into over a hundred billion dollars in debt? Would it be just borrowing more and paying more in interest, or would it be raising taxes? Why doesn't she just come clean and admit that what the NDP really wants is to impose a sales tax on Albertans, and if that's not true, when are they going to finally come forward with their so-called shadow budget? It's so far in the shadows that we can't even see it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order is noted at 2:01 on behalf of the official . . . [interjections] Order. [interjections] Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is the only one with the call.

Calgary Board of Education Layoffs

Ms Hoffman: Yesterday I met with some of the 300 Calgary public teachers who are losing their jobs as a result of this UCP budget and this Education minister's incompetence. One teacher I met with has been teaching for 32 years. She specializes in working with vulnerable children who are struggling with their mental health. Her school hired her because of the classroom improvement fund. This minister cut that funding, and now those kids are going to lose this crucial support. There are reports that more than 200 students have walked out of Calgary classrooms today because they are protesting this government's budget, so to the Premier: why did he choose a $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout over the well-being of children living in Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. the Education minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really do sympathize with the teachers and the families and the children that are involved here. But, at the end of the day, this was a decision that the CBE made. They chose to end the contracts of 300 of their teachers, of the most important people next to the students themselves. They are responsible for this decision. They did not reach out to our department to help them in this process, and ultimately they have the responsibility of this decision.

Ms Hoffman: Another teacher I met yesterday in Calgary was the spouse of an active duty member of the Canadian Forces. When this member was deployed to the Calgary area, the whole family moved there. This teacher got a temporary contract with the Calgary board of education. But this minister cut more than $30 million out of Calgary public's budget, and now this teacher is out of a job. To the Premier: why is he pushing hardship and unemployment onto a military family who are already facing and sacrificing so much for our country? Why would he make this woman sacrifice her job as well?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. The school board, the CBE, actually has a budget of $1.2 billion. It's an operating budget serving 130,000 students. The city of Calgary has an operating budget of $3.5 billion. They have an operating budget a third of that of the whole city. I do call them to account because instead of prioritizing the students and the teachers in the classroom, they chose to cut the teachers, who are one of the most important people next to the students themselves. They are responsible for this decision.

Ms Hoffman: The minister is the one who cut more than $30 million from Calgary public's budget, and she won't even take responsibility for that decision. She created the conditions that have resulted in this.

Another teacher I met yesterday is married to somebody who worked in oil and gas. He recently was laid off. The $4.7 billion corporate handout didn't save his job. [interjections] And the members opposite are laughing. Now his wife, a teacher, is laid off from Calgary public schools. Just like that, both incomes gone. This household has faced such brutal cuts, that Education and a massive corporate giveaway have only made worse. To the Premier: the Calgary families have . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We've seen over the years, obviously, a pattern of mismanagement by this board, so that is why I'm calling an independent financial audit and a governance review. What I see happening is the CBE using our children and our teachers as political footballs. The Grey

Cup is over. They need to stop playing political football with our children. [interjections]

Thank you.

The Speaker: Order. [interjections] Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein is the one with the call.

Energy Project Regulatory Reviews

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On September 6 the Energy minister launched, quote, a thoughtful and thorough evaluation of the Alberta Energy Regulator in order to maintain the high standards that have made Alberta a global oil and gas leader. Unquote. In the past few years the red tape in project approval has threatened to eat away at the Alberta advantage. We had reached a point where it took twice as long to get projects approved in Alberta than it did in Saskatchewan. Can the minister update the House on what progress is now being made to lower the differential of approval times between Alberta and our peer competitors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy has risen.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're committed to improving investor confidence in this province, and that includes having a regulatory process that attracts investment. That's why we launched a review of the Alberta Energy Regulator. We're looking at the governance, the mandate, and the operations within the AER. We're looking to find out why the process became so bogged down over the last four years. We're looking for transformative change and for continuous improvement. At the same time we're also cutting red tape. All of this to return and attract investment to this province.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's oil and gas industry faces many challenges, including the uncertainty now created by the passage of federal Bill C-69 and the creation of a new Impact Assessment Agency, and given this government's commitment to champion new oil and gas projects within Alberta and reduce red tape for the new approvals to restore Alberta's competitive advantage, can the minister please answer how Bill C-69 could potentially introduce even more uncertainty for Alberta's approval process?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a lot wrong with Bill C-69. Our Alberta Energy Regulator review is meant to find efficiencies and efficient process to attract investment, but Bill C-69 does the absolute opposite. It creates lengthy, costly reviews with unlimited public participation. It creates a polarizing process where public policy is debated. It's lengthy. It's an uncertain process with political interference. It's also unconstitutional – it reviews projects in our exclusive jurisdiction – and that's why we've launched our constitutional challenge.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. I'm glad to hear there's hope on the horizon for Alberta's oil and gas producers.

Given that the review of the AER is ongoing, can the minister please answer how the government of Alberta will continue to reform this regulator and bring its activities back in line with the needs of industry, Albertans, and reality to reduce red tape, get Albertans back to work, and shorten and streamline the regulatory process?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The review of the AER will be completed shortly. As I said before, we're looking for transformative change. We've also replaced the board of directors of the AER, and they're in the process of hiring a new CEO. We're cutting red tape, and we're implementing the recommendations of three independent parliamentary oversights, including the Auditor General, that found serious mismanagement of funds, conflicts of interest between 2015 and 2018 at the AER. We're reviewing this to make sure that type of stuff never happens again.

Government Alcohol Purchase Contract

Ms Goehring: In the past six months the Ministry of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women has purchased more than $35,000 worth of alcohol from a company named Prestige Liquor. That's the first bulk purchase of alcohol by the government of Alberta for at least five years. Can the minister tell the House what the purpose of this purchase was?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Actually, Mr. Speaker – and thank you for the question – no. I have absolutely no clue, and I'm happy to get back to the member once I figure out what that is all about.

Thank you.

2:10

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Minister. Given that the government already has a track record of corrupt procurement and no-bid contracts for supporters, cronies, and family members and given that Prestige Liquor has only been in business for just over a year and has never done any business with the government of Alberta before this Premier was elected, can the minister say why Prestige Liquor was selected as the sole supplier of alcohol for her ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We continue to see the NDP play fear-and-smear games inside this Legislature. The minister has already said that they'll get back to the hon. member in regard to that specific issue. The real question is: when the NDP were in power, why were they giving contracts to antipipeline and anti-oil and gas friends? Tzeporah Berman is a perfect example. [interjections] That former government, that Leader of the Opposition, when she was Premier, put Ms Berman in charge of a committee in charge of reviewing the oil sands even though she was dedicated to destroying the energy industry. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. [interjections] Order. Order. It's important for all members of the Assembly to be able to hear the answer.

Ms Goehring: Given that the owner of Prestige Liquor, Mr. Keshav Pareek, is a long-time Conservative donor dating back to 2004 and given that Mr. Pareek had donated $4,250 to the Premier's 2017 PC leadership campaign, isn't it true, Minister, that Prestige Liquor got a corrupt contract to sell the government more than $35,000 worth of alcohol because of their partisan support and personal friendship with the Premier?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, as the minister said, they'd be happy to get back to the member specifically on that issue. But there the NDP go again jumping the shark. Let me ask them a question I already asked them before. Did Tzeporah Berman get the contract to help shutdown the Alberta oil and gas industry because she was friends with the NDP? [interjections] Was that corrupt? I don't know. I certainly know my constituents thought it was pretty corrupt that the NDP, when they were in government, hired somebody to be in charge of the oil sands who was dedicated to destroying the oil and gas industry. That's the legacy of the Leader of the Opposition and her party. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The Member for St. Albert has the call.

Henson Trusts for Persons with Disabilities

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I was joined by Albertans concerned about further attacks by this government to the AISH program in Bill 21. Our government, I'm sure you'll remember, passed legislation to establish Henson trusts in 2018. The change gave disabled people the ability to manage money they might receive as a financial gift or an inheritance by placing it in an exempt asset like a registered disability savings plan or trust fund without risking their eligibility to AISH. Now those trusts are gone. To the minister: what could possibly be your reason for this change? Is it to kick more people off AISH so you can pay for the massive $4.7 billion . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, I want to be absolutely clear that Bill 21 does not change how the AISH program treats trusts, including Henson trusts. Albertans can continue to place assets into these trusts for their loved ones without it impacting their benefits in any way. Again, to reiterate, there has been no change to Henson trusts.

Ms Renaud: Given that we understand how this works – Bill 21 moves eligibility criteria for AISH from legislation to regulation, allowing the minister to change it at will – and given that this UCP can't be trusted to support AISH and given that they didn't campaign on cutting AISH and given that cutting the cost of living is a cut, will you admit that you're changing eligibility criteria so you can make further cuts going forward without consultation, or internally consulted, as the minister likes to say?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, we have not made any cuts to the AISH program. I've said this many times in this House, and I'm going to say it again. That's absolutely incorrect, and perpetuating the same narrative just creates unnecessary fear in the disability community. In terms of why these provisions were moved from the act into regulations: it's consistent with how the income support program works, and it's consistent with the PDD program as well.

Ms Renaud: Given that I was joined today by the parent of a disabled Albertan – her name is Christie – and given that Christie said, and I quote, as a family we're working very hard towards our child's independence, and if something happened either to my husband or myself, I know tomorrow I want to rest assured that neither of our children nor their guardians and trustees will struggle, unquote, and given that ending Henson trusts throws Christie's plans into disarray, to the minister: what do you say to her? Drop the rhetoric. Put away the notes. Answer the questions. You might not call it a cut, but you have done something very negative and very harmful. Just answer the question.

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, I have answered the question, but I'll answer it again. To this individual that the member opposite is speaking about, through you to her directly: we have not changed Henson trusts. They are intact, and they will remain intact. Certainly, if the member has any questions about this, I mean, she can feel free to contact me directly for some more clarity. I have stated many times that there is no change to these trusts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain has a question.

Stony Plain Central School Replacement Project

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Stony Plain Central school is an incredible middle school in my riding, and it does a fantastic job of delivering high-quality service despite the fact that the school is extremely overcrowded. Plans for a new replacement school have been in the works for years. The replacement school would offer vastly increased capacity and better facilities for students and is desperately needed in the riding to address the growing population in the community of Stony Plain. To the Minister of Education: is this project continuing under this government?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question, and thank you, hon. member. The Stony Plain Central K to 9 replacement school project was approved in 2018 and is currently in the design phase. Budget 2019 included $1.4 billion over four years to continue work on previously announced school projects across Alberta, including this one. Alberta Infrastructure is expecting a schematic design report to be completed in early December.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for her answer. Given the importance of the reconstruction of Stony Plain Central to the education of middle school aged children in my riding and given that my constituents have already been forced to wait for a long time for this critical need to be addressed and given the delays my riding has seen under the previous government in getting school projects completed and completed well, can your ministry illustrate to us a timeline of when the new school in Stony Plain can expect to be receiving students for the very first time?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. The timeline for the completion of this project will be determined once it's gone to tender. At that time, the construction schedule will be developed and an estimated completion date will be made public. We'll be able to get back to you with those dates as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the importance of this project to my riding and given the fears raised by poor execution of previous projects, in particular the failure to plan for or fund a playground at Prescott school in Spruce Grove, and given the hoops that families of Prescott students have had to go through just to find funding for a playground, which they still haven't received, and given the importance of playgrounds to a school environment for encouraging outside play, can the minister commit to ensuring that important equipment like a playground is funded?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and hon. member, for the question. As part of Budget 2019 our government has announced that funding to help build playgrounds will continue to be provided to new school projects with K to 6 programming. Moving forward, new schools will have playground funding included in their project budgets. This removes funding from a separate pot and puts it into the overall project. No longer will parents have to fund raise for hundreds of thousands of dollars to build playgrounds, which are as essential as any gymnasium.

Thank you.

Bill 22 and Public Service Pension Changes

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, we all continue to be inundated with letters and calls from workers who are horrified at this government's plans to take political control over their pensions. The Minister of Finance should clearly know at this point that Alberta teachers do not trust his plan to move their pensions to AIMCo. I'm asking this minister to make a promise to these folks today. To the minister: can you promise here and now that you will never ever politically direct AIMCo how to manage Albertans' pension funds?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I appreciate the opportunity to clear up a lot of misinformation on ATRF pension investment management moving to AIMCo. ATRF will continue to provide high-level strategic direction and investment policy over their pension assets. ATRF will continue to manage the pension plan. AIMCo operates at arm's length from this government. We're confident that AIMCo will deliver excellent results on behalf of Alberta teachers and taxpayers.

Ms Gray: Given that with the corrupt Bill 22 this government has also moved to weaken the pension protections for part-time workers and given that this government jammed Bill 22 through the House in a matter of days, before many hard-working Albertans even knew that their rights had been stripped away, to the Minister of Finance: can you please inform this House how much the government is saving by stripping away pension protections for part-time workers, or is that something that you hoped workers wouldn't notice?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, Bill 22 strengthens public-sector pensions on behalf of Alberta workers. We've made changes to improve and strengthen the governance of pension plans to ensure that we have the competency and skill sets required. We are confident that our world-class asset manager AIMCo will deliver high-quality results for Alberta public-sector workers and ensure that we receive maximum returns on behalf of Alberta taxpayers.

Ms Gray: Given that the minister can't seem to bring himself to talk about part-time workers and the implications in Bill 22 that impact them and given that I've searched the UCP platform from front to back and found no word of these pension changes and given that there are massive concerns, indicated by rallies and 30,000 letters that have come to MLAs, to the minister: will you undo your pension changes, commit to more consultation, promise you won't politically interfere, or finally tell this House what your real plan for pensions is?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, with respect to ATRF asset management, teachers' pension assets going to AIMCo, that will result in $41 million of savings as the large asset balance that AIMCo manages drives down the costs of managing those assets, $41 million in savings, which will improve, in fact lower, the contribution rates for Alberta teachers and move $20 million into the classrooms as we as an employer save premiums.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Health Consultation Nondisclosure Agreements

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, last week the minister adamantly denied that he'd asked a physician to sign a nondisclosure agreement, or NDA, before he'd share vital information about changes to medications used to treat Crohn's and colitis. He even took to Twitter to defame Dr. Panaccione by accusing him of lying about having been asked. Today I'll be tabling copies of that NDA. I'll ask the minister again: why would you ask a physician to sign an NDA before you would share information about your plans to make significant changes to how he can care for his patients?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to rise again in this House and again talk about nondisclosure agreements that stakeholders might be asked, if they're asking for a ministry to provide confidential information — as I said last week, I did not ask a physician to sign a nondisclosure agreement. At the end of the meeting I was asked by that physician why the ministry is asking for NDAs if a stakeholder is asking for confidential information. Well, let's answer that through three questions. Has the Ministry of Health used NDAs in the past, including under previous governments, including under Edmonton-Glenora? Yes.

Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'll answer the rest later on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that Dr. Panaccione rightly refused the NDA as it would leave him unable to advise his patients about changes that could drastically impact their health and given that he left the meeting feeling handcuffed and unable to practise the best medicine possible, to the same minister: is the real reason you wanted that NDA because you know that both patients and doctors would resist your plans to interfere in their medical decisions and gamble with their health and their quality of life just to save a buck?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying previously, has the Ministry of Health used NDAs before? Yes. Do other ministries use NDAs sometimes when a stakeholder is asking for confidential information? Yes. Have other provinces used NDAs in the consultations regarding biosimilar consultations? Yes, B.C. and Ontario. The manufacturer, or the originator, that's upset about these NDAs: that originator manufacturer actually has executed the NDAs in those two other jurisdictions, B.C. and Ontario. This is about the ministry providing confidential information to these stakeholders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that this minister has broken trust with medical doctors, nurses, health care aides, lab technicians, and now gastroenterologists and thousands of Albertans living with Crohn's and colitis and given that his and his staff's bumbling of this file has now prompted a protest at this Legislature by patients asking this government to take them as seriously as the corporations benefiting from their $4.7 billion handout, to this minister: will you end your government's practice of blindsiding Albertans with life-altering changes without consultation and commit to never asking another stakeholder to sign an NDA?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, again, I have not asked anybody to sign an NDA. Anybody who wants to meet with me does not have to sign an NDA. Anyone who wants to speak with me does not have to sign an NDA. I will never ask anyone to sign an NDA to speak with me, to give me their feedback. I said that last week, and I'm going to say it again. Nobody has to sign an NDA to speak with me, to meet with me or meet with the ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat is rising.

Choice in Education

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to ensuring that Alberta students receive a high-quality education regardless of which school system they choose, whether that be public, separate, francophone, charter, private, or even home-schooling. Alberta Education recently launched a survey to collect feedback from Albertans regarding school choice in our province. Some Albertans have expressed concern that choice in education would mean that different systems provide different education. To the Minister of Education: how does Alberta Education ensure that education continues across the board?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and hon. member. Alberta has a long and successful tradition of supporting school choice, and our government is committed to preserving, protecting educational choice. Choice does not mean differing qualities of education. Rather, it provides parents with the opportunity to choose the type of education that best fits their unique situations and their needs. Regardless of the educational path a parent chooses for their child, Albertans can be assured that their students will receive a world-class, high-quality education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for her answer. Given that our province has a long history of supporting school choice and given that many loving Alberta parents are passionate about their children's education and given that the previous government would not divulge the names of all who contributed to the recent curriculum rewrite even when outright asked to do so by the opposition of the day, to the same minister: who is the government interested in hearing from with regard to the choice in education survey?

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We want to hear from every Albertan. Every single Albertan has a unique perspective on educational choice, and we want to hear from them on what opportunities they believe can help protect, improve, and enhance education choice in Alberta. The feedback gathered will be used to inform the development of the choice in education act, and I encourage everyone to fill out the survey that is online at alberta.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that the universal declaration of human rights states that parents have a prior right to choose the kind of education that their child shall be given and given that the previous government placed school choice under attack and took an adversarial approach to loving parents, to the same minister: how will this government ensure that parents have a strong voice in their child's education? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. The hon. minister has the call.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and hon. member, for the questions. We were elected with a very clear mandate to bring forward a choice in education act which will reaffirm and make firm that parents have the primary responsibility for the education of their children. We have a long and rich history of school choice to celebrate in this province, in fact, over 170 years. Our platform was very crystal clear. We will protect and preserve educational choice in Alberta. Parents can be confident that their role in their child's education will be protected by this government. Promise made, promise kept.

Environmental Policies

Mr. Schmidt: A recent report from the United Nations environment program states that if drastic action isn't taken, our planet will be heading towards warming of 3.2 degrees Celsius in our kids' lifetimes. This report, compiled by many leading scientists from institutions around the world, makes it clear that urgent action is necessary. Can the Minister of Environment and Parks tell this House what additional steps he'll take to reduce emissions and combat climate change, or does he think that dusting off and renaming the PC's old plan is good enough?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are quite happy with the TIER program that we've introduced inside Alberta. We're partnering with our largest emitters inside this province and working on 55 per cent of our GHG emissions inside the province right now with concrete action, working on technology and innovation, and actually moving forward on the file, unlike what the previous government did and that member did when they were in power, which was to tax hard-working Alberta families at the very time that they needed their government to stand with them, with no environmental gain. All economic pain, no environmental gain. Alberta voted for a different approach. We followed through on that promise, and I'm proud to say: promise made, promise kept.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, given that the minister has dealt significant economic pain to this province by slashing renewables and the energy efficiency industries in favour of a $4.7 billion corporate handout and given that the UN report states that renewables and energy efficiency are one of the key measures to effectively reduce emissions, can the minister of environment state what steps he will be taking to rebuild the thriving renewables sector devastated by his policies and actions?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it's disappointing to see the NDP continue to misrepresent the job-creation tax cut, which actually is only $100 million in cost, not four point whatever billion dollars. [interjection] What you see with that hon. member and the party across the way, that is heckling me right now during the answer, is that they don't want to stand with job creators.

They don't want to stand with our largest industry while tackling this problem because they, like their federal party, are committed to stopping the energy industry. Our party campaigned on a different approach. Albertans voted for it in overwhelming numbers when they fired that party, and we're proud to have brought it into place.

Mr. Schmidt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that our party is not in the pocket of big corporations like the members opposite and given that the United Nations report states that the world is seriously behind when it comes to reducing emissions and given that the report also states that in order to address this crisis, efforts to cut emissions will need to be tripled, will the Minister of Environment and Parks tell this House what steps he's considering to further reduce emissions? Or is the so-called TIER program all that we get?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, that hon. member is right. Albertans know for sure that they did not stand with job creators. In fact, they stood with the green left, the foreign-influenced green left, who is dedicated to shutting down our energy industry. While that member was in government, just a few short months ago, he went out of his way to be able to support his federal leader and those types of organizations, who then caused devastation to our province, record job losses, record deficits, record debt, and caused over $50 billion in investment to flee this province. That hon. member and his former government failed this province. We will not.

Government Photography Contract

Ms Phillips: Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Finance minister why his department handed a $73,000, no-bid government contract to Vek Labs, which is a partisan UCP ad firm. The minister didn't seem to be much aware of the corruption in his own department, but a spokesperson later told media that they were pressed for time during transition and had to pick someone quickly. The trouble is that the contract didn't start until July, two months after the cabinet was sworn in, so that wasn't true. Let's give the minister another chance to explain away patronage and self-dealing. Why did the Premier's partisan friends get a lucrative government contract from this Minister of Finance without bidding for it?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, this contract was awarded at a time when there was high demand internally for the services, for these types of services. The rates being proposed by the vendor were analyzed to ensure that they were competitive with other suppliers for the same product. One thing: we will not be lectured about economic matters by the members across the House. They had this province on a trajectory to economic failure. We will turn this province around and deliver a balanced budget. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. It's important that all members can hear the answer as well as the question.

Ms Phillips: Given that this Minister of Finance's debt is the same as the previous government's debt, given that the legal exemption clause that this minister used to justify this corrupt contract was not urgency – it was that only one vendor could provide this service – and given that there are obviously many professional photographers and videographers in Alberta, isn't it true that Vek Labs got this contract because they are buddies with the Premier and shot a hometown hero flick for him during the last provincial election campaign? That's what this is about.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, the opposition continues to create fear amongst Albertans, unfounded fear. Again, we will not be lectured by the members across the House. We've inherited a fiscal mess left by the previous government, which includes uncontrolled spending at a time when revenues remained flat. We are managing this province's finances responsibly. We've delivered a four-year fiscal plan that will lead us to balance. We're delivering for Albertans. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. [interjections] Order. The Official Opposition has plenty of time to share their opinion, and it's only when they are standing.

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that someone has to lecture this government about corruption because, clearly, the minister is not listening and given that this minister's spokesman said, "We needed somebody who the Premier's office was comfortable with, so we asked them, which is how we came up with that supplier," and given that that's about as clear a confession of corrupt procurement as you will ever hear, why did this Minister of Finance abandon his ethical and professional standards and sign off on the Premier's friends getting a no-bid government contract?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, Albertans elected this government to bring this province back to fiscal responsibility. The members opposite had us on a trajectory of continued job losses and the flight of investment capital by the tens of billions. We are changing that trajectory. We've created a competitive business environment that will attract investment, create jobs, and bring this province to fiscal balance.

Natural Gas Industry

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, Canadian natural gas is produced under a world-class regulatory system. It is being used throughout the world to reduce global emissions. The world needs more natural gas from Canada and, in particular, from Alberta. Estimates show that in the next five years global demand for natural gas will increase by more than 10 per cent. To the Associate Minister of Natural Gas. Alberta is a major supplier of clean and reliable LNG. Can you please share what the level of interest is from Japan and South Korea to purchase our natural gas?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Natural Gas.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I'm pleased to share that there's a renewed sense of optimism regarding natural gas in Korea and Japan. Now, it's no secret that the NDP spent four years stifling free enterprise and innovation, and it didn't go unnoticed by the international community. They damaged our brand, but I'm happy to report that our message of natural gas and Alberta being a destination for clean, secure, ethically sourced natural gas landed well with investors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that on your mission to Asia you met with government and senior leaders across the energy industry to promote Alberta's clean, secure, and ethically sourced natural gas and given that part of your mandate is to get more Alberta natural gas to Asian markets through LNG projects, can the associate minister please share, from his perspective, what potential opportunities were discussed that could get Alberta natural gas to overseas markets and get Albertans back to work?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to visit two of Asia's largest LNG importers, and this is critical because we have to find markets and destinations for LNG off the west coast. But we didn't just go to Asia for LNG. I'm pleased to report that we had a number of great conversations with pet-chem companies, petrochemical companies that didn't even have Alberta on the map, and now they're looking at us as a serious destination for petrochemical facilities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the former NDP government drove much-needed foreign investment away from our province and given that this government was elected on an overwhelming mandate to bring investment back into this province and given that this government recently announced its commitment to continuing with the petrochemical diversification program, which is so important in my riding of Sherwood Park, can the associate minister please tell the house how the companies he met with responded to bringing their investment dollars back here in this province of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Natural Gas.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After four years of the NDP damaging the Alberta brand and chasing investment away from the province, we had to send a message that Alberta's experiment with socialism is over. We are now open for business. Our message of being a destination for secure, clean, ethically sourced natural gas is landing on strong ears.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche.

2:40 Driver's Licence Road Tests

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Getting your driver's licence is a rite of passage in rural Alberta. It signifies maturity and responsibility given the importance of road safety. For many years Alberta had a system that was envied. Our system placed safety as the priority while ensuring a low-cost, efficient system for driver certification. Now we have a system that is envied by no one, and my office is flooded by complaints. To the Minister of Transportation: what is the government doing to clean up this mess?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. The hon. member is right. Since the public takeover in March 2019 road test times have skyrocketed to 12 weeks' waiting time. This is unacceptable. Our government has taken action since day one. We've authorized overtime and weekends. We've added more government employee examiners. We've licensed examiners from outside of government to help us catch up, and we have returned the class 5 basic test to 30 minutes from 45, which will allow us to do thousands more tests per month.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for the response. The public is furious about the current state of driver certification. Given the correspondence I've received in my office about the impact that these changes have had on potential drivers getting their first licence and given the impact to our economy by delayed driver certification, can the minister tell us how the government plans to fix this system in the long term?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll say to the hon. member that my phone rings off the hook every day with Albertans concerned about this. Last week we announced the beginning of a public review of the driver examination system. We will be engaging Albertans and key stakeholders, including driver examiners and registry agents and Albertans, about road tests. We are going to take action to reduce wait times to make sure that Albertans get the level of service that they expect and that they deserve because it hasn't been acceptable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. It's shocking how badly the system is performing. Given how well the previous system served Albertans by ensuring safe drivers on the road while maintaining a low-cost, efficient system before being blown up by the previous government and given how awful the current system is serving Alberta drivers and job creators, why did the NDP make such a disastrous change?

Mr. McIver: Well, I don't know that I can answer for what the NDP was thinking, but the hon. member is right. They absolutely blew up the system on March 1 of this year during the beginning of the busiest time of the year for driver examiners. They cut the number of driver examiners to less than half. Mr. Speaker, if hon. members want to know whom to blame, they only need to look across the aisle, as Albertans do. But we're cleaning it up. We're adding driver examiners. We are looking at how we can increase the system more. Again, we've added thousands more tests each month in one step, by simply changing some of the tests from 45 minutes apart to 30. But we're not done; we won't be done until there's an acceptable wait time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I might just provide a little bit of caution. All private members will know that questions that they ask should be about government business. What a previous government did or didn't do may not in fact constitute government business.

In 30 seconds or less we will proceed to Members' Statements.

Support for the Energy Industry

Mr. Schow: This past Sunday 3.9 million people tuned in to RDS and TSN to watch the Winnipeg Blue Bombers thump the Hamilton Tiger-Cats in the 107th Grey Cup. It was a convincing win that ended Winnipeg's championship drought, which my friend tells me lasted 10,535 days. But who's counting? That is a long time, though.

While thousands took to the streets to celebrate the win, others took to social media. For what, you ask? A hoodie, specifically the Premier's hoodie, worn at centre field for the coin toss, that said on it: I heart Canadian oil and gas. How absurd, how pathetic. To the Twitter trolls: shame on you. Go find a hobby.

It's clear as day that the world needs more energy. World-class, ethical oil and gas is the pride of Alberta and the economic engine of Canada. It is highly ethical, innovative, and life-changing work. As someone who worked on a drilling rig, I am fiercely proud of our energy sector and all the good it does. Its prosperity affords so many things that we value while creating hundreds of thousands of jobs and billions in economic activity.

Sadly, the pride I have for our energy sector isn't shared by all, not by people who dump their raw sewage into the rivers, lakes, and oceans or those who happily receive billions in transfer payments made possible by our oil and gas, and it's also not shared by those who'd rather import their oil and gas from countries with appalling human rights records.

Our oil and gas sector needs hope. Blocked by our own federal government, we can't get pipelines built even when parts of our country can't fire up a barbecue. If the public and the media spent more time promoting our oil and gas sector and less time dumping on it, we might actually find some public support across this province and shovels in the ground.

To our Premier, thank you for making the most of every opportunity to stand for our ethical energy sector and for saying what needs to be said over and over and over: I love Canadian oil and gas.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First off, as chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills I'm pleased to table the committee's final report on Bill 205. That's the Human Tissue and Organ Donation (Presumed Consent) Amendment Act, 2019, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-South East. This bill was referred to the committee on November 6, 2019.

The committee's final report recommends that Bill 205 proceed. I request concurrence of the Assembly in the final report on Bill 205.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the motion of concurrence in a report is debatable pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(b). Are there any members who wish to speak to the motion for concurrence?

Seeing none, the chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills has requested concurrence in the report on Bill 205, Human Tissue and Organ (Presumed Consent) Amendment Act, 2019.

[Motion for concurrence carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much again, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills I'm also pleased to table the committee's final report on Bill 207, Conscience Rights (Health Care Providers) Protection Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Peace River. This bill was referred to the committee on November 7, 2019.

The committee's final report recommends that Bill 207 not proceed. I request concurrence of the Assembly in the final report on Bill 207.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the motion for concurrence in the report is debatable pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(b). Are there any members who wish to speak to the motion for concurrence? Please rise. Hon. members, seeing that there are members who wish to speak to the motion for concurrence in the report, that debate will take place on the next available Monday under the item of business Motions for Concurrence in Committee Reports on Public Bills Other than Government Bills.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks and the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to provide oral notice of Bill 29, Municipal Government (Machinery and Equipment Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019, sponsored by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, in accordance with section 4(7) of the Election Act and section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I'm pleased to table the following report, A Report of the Chief Electoral Officer: Annual Report 2018-19.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Are there others wishing to table documents? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a document entitled Climate-heating Greenhouse Gases Hit New High, UN Reports.

I also have a document I'd like to table on behalf of the Member for St. Albert that's titled Climate Change: Greenland's Ice Faces Melting "Death Sentence."

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of hon. Mr. Toews, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Conflicts of Interest Act and the Legislative Assembly Act the Report of Selected Payments to the Members and Former Members of the Legislative Assembly and Persons Directly Associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly for the year ended March 31, 2019.

On behalf of hon. Mr. Wilson, Minister of Indigenous Relations, responses to questions raised by Mr. Feehan, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and Ms Phillips, hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, on November 5, 2019, Ministry of Indigenous Relations 2019-20 main estimates debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order, and at 2:01 the Official Opposition House Leader raised one.

Point of Order False Allegations

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(h), (i), (j). At approximately 2:01 the Premier accused the opposition, the Alberta NDP, of wanting to introduce a PST. Now, again, this is under 23(h), (i), (j), makes allegations, imputes false or unavowed motives, or uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder. That is exactly what the Premier did.

I appreciate that momentarily – I can only imagine what the Government House Leader is going to say. The reality is this, Mr. Speaker. The government is continuing to misrepresent the facts by making an allegation such as that, which is patently false. I would demand that the government prove this allegation, which we know is false because never have we proposed such a thing. The fact of the matter is that the Premier and the government are trying to divert from the fact that this UCP government is actually raising income taxes on every Albertan. They are raising taxes. It's in their budget. They are trying to do the old bait and switch or misdirect and point blame to us when they are, in fact, the only party that is raising taxes on every single Albertan.

For that, Mr. Speaker, I request that the Government House Leader on behalf of the Premier withdraw those comments.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that's going to happen today. It is interesting to see how sensitive the Official Opposition is in regard to a PST. I'll use one quote from the Canadian Press. In March 2017 the now Leader of the Official Opposition, the then Premier, the leader of the NDP responds to a question in regard to a PST, and she goes on to say that bringing in a PST in Alberta might be talked about in the next election.

That's just one of many quotes associated with the NDP that I could utilize this afternoon, but I won't bother because you and I both know that this is clearly a matter of debate. Now, I as an Albertan am very shocked at the love affair that the NDP appear to have with the PST, and I certainly hope that if they ever are given the privilege of forming government again, they won't do that to Albertans. Mr. Speaker, I don't think Albertans will ever give them the privilege again, but that also is a matter of debate. This clearly is not a point of order, and we should move on with the day.

The Speaker: In fact, this is not a point of order. It is very clearly a matter of debate. The leader of the government made some statements that the Leader of the Opposition may disagree with from time to time. As it turns out, the Leader of the Opposition sometimes makes statements that the government also disagrees with. This is why we are here. This is a matter of debate, and as such it is not a point of order.

Speaker's Ruling Bills Containing Similar Provisions

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am prepared to provide some guidance and ruling with respect to Bill 25 and Bill 205, that are both now on the Order Paper for second reading.

Bill 25, the Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019, received second reading in the last 24 hours. Members will be aware that section 7 of Bill 25 would amend sections 4.1, 4.2(1), and 9(3.1) of the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act. Bill 205, the Human Tissue and Organ Donation (Presumed Consent) Amendment Act, 2019, which will be placed on the Order Paper for second reading following the Assembly's concurrence in the committee's report, which happened this afternoon, proposes numerous amendments to the act, including the repeal and replacement of sections 4.1 and 9 and the amendment of section 4.2.

The principle at issue, as stated by Speaker Zwozdesky in his December 3, 2014, ruling, found on page 335 of Hansard for that day, is that "a Parliament or Assembly should not debate the same issue twice in the same session." Erskine May's Treatise on the Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament, 25th edition, at page 634, notes:

There is no general rule or custom which restrains the presentation of two or more bills relating to the same subject, and containing similar provisions. But if a decision of the House has already been taken on one such bill – for example, if the bill has been given or refused a second reading – the other cannot be proceeded with if it contains substantially the same provisions.

House of Commons Procedure and Practice, 3rd edition, at page 568 also provides that "two bills similar in substance will be allowed to stand on the Order Paper but only one may be moved and disposed of. If a decision is taken on the first bill . . . then the other may not be proceeded with."

Accordingly, Bill 25 has now received second reading. I must determine whether Bill 25 and Bill 205 contain substantially the same provisions. Although Bill 25 proposes amendments to sections of the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act that Bill 205 also seeks to amend, I have concluded that the two bills, although inconsistent in some respects, cannot be said to contain substantially the same provisions.

In arriving at my decision that these two bills may both proceed, I reviewed Erskine May's summary of a somewhat similar case in the U.K. House of Commons, found at page 635 of the text, involving a government bill and a private member's bill with some overlapping provisions. On January 24, 1995, the Speaker ruled that although the bills clearly overlap,

"in many respects they are incompatible and they cannot be said to contain substantially the same provisions. To the extent that their provisions differ and are incompatible, the House may at some stage have a choice to make between them," as I do today. The Speaker in that case did not . . . consider it right to prevent the House from proceeding with the second reading of either bill.

Accordingly, debate shall be allowed to proceed on Bill 205 if it is called in the Assembly for second reading. There is also nothing preventing the Committee of the Whole's consideration of Bill 25. I am confident that members will be able to work together to resolve any inconsistencies between the bills should both continue to progress through the stages of bill debate in this Assembly. This concludes my ruling.

As such, we are at Ordres du jour.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 26

Farm Freedom and Safety Act, 2019

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move second reading of Bill 26, the Farm Freedom and Safety Act, 2019.

This bill is the result of extensive consultations over months with agriculture stakeholders and fulfills our platform commitment to build common-sense farm workplace legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to start with quotes from the Alberta agriculture sector – these are farmers, farm workers, ranchers, and people in the industry – because ultimately this is a piece of legislation where we actually got consultation from the industry. As I mentioned, it took months in the making to get to this point. Just to read off some quotes, if you would indulge me, on what the industry folks, what people in the agriculture sector are saying about Bill 26, this was in the Calgary Herald today, from Will Verboven. The government "directly consulted producer organizations and the public at large and came up with legislation that takes a more common-sense approach to the farmworkers rights issue." Again, from Albert Cramer, the president of the Alberta Greenhouse Growers:

The greenhouse industry is very thankful to the Government of Alberta . . . for [their] support in recognizing greenhouses as farms. Being excluded from the definition of farms under the Employment Standards Code was a huge challenge for our industry and we are grateful that this has been [reflected] in the Farm Freedom and Safety Act.

Tom Steve, Mr. Speaker, from the Alberta Wheat and Alberta Barley commissions, their general manager, said:

In terms of the overall shape of the industry, consultation has been a critical feature of the new government [in terms] of Bill 6 and the Farm Freedom and Safety Act. We didn't have that under the previous government in 2015 when those changes were rolled out. We are very encouraged and optimistic about the future shape of farm safety legislation in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, here's Ryan Koeslag, the executive vice president for Mushrooms Canada, who said: we are very happy to see the Alberta government making agriculture a priority and applaud the minister's leadership – but we don't have to get into that – and consultative approach to building this policy and legislation; we are pleased to see that Bill 26, Farm Freedom and Safety Act upholds the right balance between recognizing all farms, big and small, having unique work challenges, and at the same time includes important farm safety standards.

Again, I'll go on, Mr. Speaker, to Maria Leslie from the Alberta Chicken Producers, who said: what stands out to me the most is the consultative process that's taken place throughout the entire process – to consult, then legislate, hearing from producers – we're really looking forward to seeing it come into legislation and how it rolls out with education for producers, what the supports are, if there are tools for producers with farm safety down the road; from an industry association perspective, we want to be able to support our producers as much as possible, so that's something that's very supportive to us.

Tom Lynch-Staunton, from the Alberta Beef Producers, said: one of the things we're very happy with is a focus on education and awareness and creating a culture of safety, rather than being heavily regulated and forced into compliance, so that you can create safety, and farmers and ranchers will want to make sure that their farms are as safe as possible.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, another industry quote is from Janet Krayden from the Canadian Mushroom Growers Association: the entire Alberta Agriculture team took a lot of time with us, and they really listened; they even came to the farm and met our workers and were able to go through what our issues were, and they listened, and because of that, we're able to make changes that are acknowledging that agriculture is unique, but also having the balance with farm safety.

Mr. Speaker, that's just a small sampling of industry reaction from farm workers and from farmers actually appreciative of something that we campaigned on back in April, that we would actually consult with the agriculture industry on how we could repeal the disastrous, failed NDP Bill 6. Going back a little bit into the history of 2015, when the NDP did bring in Bill 6, there are many members here in the Legislature that saw the massive farm protests. It was from farmers from across the province, Mr. Speaker, from every different commodity association that felt that they were having the rug pulled out from under them. It was a government that didn't consult, that didn't listen to them, and they implemented Bill 6 which had no practicality on a farm, and there was no way to actually implement it.

Over the years, the then government, the NDP government tried to tweak and make changes to Bill 6, but at the end of the day, it was always set up to fail, and that's why it's great to move second reading of Bill 26, which will finally get us past that disastrous phase in Alberta.

Again of disastrous phases, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to mention that the Teamsters strike is finally over against CN. I'm glad that the Teamsters finally came to the table and are actually getting back to work. It's also nice to see that the Leader of the Official Opposition has ended her own self-imposed strike and is back here in the Legislature.

Mr. Dach: Point of order.

Mr. Dreeshen: Not only did we consult with farmers in 25 different consultations . . .

The Acting Speaker: I heard a point of order, but it is my understanding that that point of order has been decided to not be moved on, so if the hon. minister could please continue with his comments.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, a little bit more on the consultations. We had 25 different consultation stops across the province, listening to thousands of farmers over the summer, but we also had an online survey as well that had over 1,000 different responses that came in. I put 8,000 kilometres on my truck driving to every corner of the province and having face-to-face meetings with farmers and farm groups and farm workers.

The four main themes that we consulted on during these consultations were employment standards, insurance, labour relations, and the Occupational Health and Safety Act. We also asked, as a fifth theme, to get farmers' actual direct input on research. That's something, again, that we campaigned on in April, Mr. Speaker, moving away from the previous NDP government's government-led research priorities to actual industry-led research priorities and actually having industry lead research decision-making in the future. Now that we've compiled all these 25 different consultations and all these online submissions, taken all this feedback to me and to the industry associations, I think we've actually built common-sense farm workplace legislation that actually works for farmers and ranchers and not against them.

This proposed legislation allows workers to have choice when it comes to workplace insurance. It exempts small farms from employment standards legislation and workplace insurance requirements. It ensures basic safety standards but provides flexibility on OH and S. It includes nurseries, greenhouses, mushroom and sod farms, ranches, and ranch employment standards that ultimately they will be exempt from. It reinstates the exemption for the farm and ranch sector from the Labour Relations Code, minimizes red tape, and reduces the regulatory burden on farmers and ranchers. Through the Farm Freedom and Safety Act, we're going to restore balance, fairness, and common sense to the regulation of Alberta's agriculture sector.

Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, we recognize that farms are unlike other businesses. Farmers and ranchers require flexibility in meeting labour and employment standards. This act allows farm employers to have choice when it comes to workplace insurance. The new legislation requires that some farm and ranch employers must have insurance but ultimately allows business operators and farms to choose what type of insurance works best for them and their employees. For example, large farms with six or more employees must have either WCB or private insurance. The previous government forced all farms to have WCB insurance, which, again, didn't make any sense. There were lots of farmers – and we heard it on our consultation tour – that had private worker insurance. They ended up having to pay their private worker insurance plus pay the mandatory WCB worker insurance, which ultimately duplicated their cost and was completely unnecessary, but again was the tone-deaf nature of Bill 6 in the previous government.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, we're also including nurseries, greenhouses, and mushroom and sod farm operations to have the exemptions from employment standards. These changes are directly based on feedback that we heard during these consultations. This grassroots approach that we took was key because we know that operating a farm is unlike operating any other kind of business. Farmers and ranchers need that flexibility to meet their unique business needs. As they make investments to create new jobs in our communities and continue to contribute to our provincial economy, it's important to have a piece of legislation that actually encourages job growth, economic activity, and investment in our agriculture sector.

Mr. Speaker, coming from a farming background, this legislation means a lot to me and to the constituents of mine in Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. That's why I'm so honoured to move second reading of Bill 26, Farm Freedom and Safety Act, and to see through an important government platform commitment. Again, as a new minister in this government it was a great opportunity to be able to go out and talk to farmers and go to every corner of the province and actually talk individually to people. Lots of us here have heard of dome disease and that government officials and MLAs can be talking to bureaucrats and not have a good understanding of what happens outside in reality. I think in the farming sector there are no more down-to-earth, real people than farmers, being able to go out and talk to them and understand how they do what they do best. We've had farmers in this province for well over 100 years, and they've always cared about their employees. No one cares more about farm workers than farmers. It's great to see that now a government is actually being responsive to farmers. They're not thinking that their ideological bent somehow needs to be pushed down onto farmers.

Mr. Speaker, again, I'm very proud to move second reading. I'm looking forward to the ongoing debate and discussion on Bill 26. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any members wishing to speak on this matter? I see the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition has risen.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not that pleased, really, right now to be speaking to this, but I am certainly pleased to have the privilege to begin debate on this matter on behalf of Alberta's Official Opposition. Ideological bent: that's the phrase that the minister of agriculture and former campaign worker for the current President of the United States, Donald Trump, described or attributed to those of us who would make Alberta the last province in the country to protect the health, safety, and working conditions of farm workers. Ideological bent. Here's an ideological bent: surviving at work, staying alive at work, not being permanently injured at work.

The reason our government and, in fact, many, many opposition members for decades leading up to our government pushed for Alberta to finally join the rest of the provinces throughout this country in providing the most basic of workplace protections to farm workers is because what we were seeing was that the agriculture industry actually saw the highest numbers of deaths per capita of any other industry in the province. People went to work and they died, Mr. Speaker, and there was no provision for protecting them. They were not covered under health and safety, and they had no access to compensation, and of course their family had no access to compensation should they die at work. So we thought: "Gee, that's strange. We are in Alberta, and Alberta farmers are some of the best farmers in the world, let alone in the country of Canada, and they are perfectly capable of ensuring basic minimum protections for their workers." That's why we brought in Bill 6.

Now, I'll be perfectly honest. The way it rolled out and the way people started talking about sort of the application of a broad range of the inapplicable and nonapplicable rules to farms created a great deal of fear and concern, and certainly we have to take responsibility for that. There is no question that what we then did do is that we spent at least two years meeting excessively with farmers in order to talk about practical applications of health and safety rules in the workplace. What we did not do, however, was delay the application of the Workers' Compensation Act to farms nor did we exempt them from simple, basic – basic – employment standards rules that you would expect to see in most developing countries, let alone in the province of Alberta. That is what we did.

Just to talk a little bit about the history, just to begin with this, as I said, we got off to a very bad start. Farmers were very concerned about the complexity of the particular safety regulations in particular that were going to be imposed upon them and the way in which they would be applied and enforced. There was a tremendous amount of work that went into working with farmers and different commodity groups. We had probably, if I recall correctly, about five or six different working groups where people sat around the table and spoke at great length about the particular elements of the agriculture industry to ensure that none of the rules that were put in place were too onerous. It was a lot of work. A lot of work. When that work was ultimately done, the vast majority of stakeholders who were part of that process were pleased that it had happened.

When we finally got the regulations in Bill 6 completed, we had the second vice-president of the Alberta Federation of Agriculture say about the changes that were brought in: it was about time. He said: you know, I don't want my kids and grandkids going into a career path, if this is what they choose, where they won't be treated well; we believe that farm worker protection is important, and I don't see a lot of changes that need to be made. These were changes that needed to be made from the changes that we brought in initially.

In 2018, when asked about the repeal of Bill 6, Albert Kamps, who was the chair of the ag coalition, said that repealing the farm safety act would be throwing out a lot of good with the bad. Yet that is what this government is proposing to do.

Let's talk about what has been ripped from farm workers, what rights have been exploited or stolen through the application of this bill to people who work for farmers in Alberta, rights that, as I've said before, are enjoyed by farm workers in every other part of the country, Mr. Speaker. I don't know why it is that we feel we have to wear the mantle of the most exploitive farm worker jurisdiction in the country, yet that seems to be something that our ideological minister of agriculture, in pursuit of imposing the values of the President of the United States onto the people of Alberta, thinks is wise for Albertans.

The first thing, of course, is the issue of the application of workers' compensation. Now, the minister suggested that he heard from people who were in a position of having to pay both. They had to pay for their private disability insurance, and they also had to pay for WCB. That's not true. No one is forcing them to pay for their private insurance. They were being told that they have to pay for workers' compensation.

Here's a news flash, folks. There is a tremendous amount of difference between what workers' compensation will provide if someone is injured and what certain disability plans will provide if someone is injured. A tremendous amount of difference. In most cases, the vast majority of cases, what you're going to see is a profound reduction in benefits that working Albertans who are employed on farms will enjoy. If farmers find that it is less expensive to pay for disability insurance or injury insurance than it is to pay for workers' compensation, I am willing to bet my house on the fact that it's because the benefits that would be provided to that injured worker will be substantially less. As a result, we are making a very considered decision in this House to take money away from workers who are on farms, who do not have care and control of their workplace because they have to legally follow the directions of their employers, should they get injured, should they get permanently injured.

You know, we have the situation of the young man who was killed in a silo, whose body was mutilated in a silo, just a few years ago, and it was his accident at work that generated a fatality inquiry, which, of course, recommended a number of things, including the application of workers' compensation law so that his widow and his children would be left with something. But this government has decided that that is no longer necessary.

Now, this bill doesn't set any minimum standard for what the alternative disability or accident insurance should provide. For all we know, it could be one of those great little things, where, yeah, you sign here, and if somebody gets killed at work, yeah, there you go; there's your $30,000 payout. Yeah. Thanks, Dad. It was lovely knowing you until you died at work. Here's $30,000, compliments of Jason – compliments of the Premier and the UCP government. My apologies. I wouldn't want to say the name of the Premier in association with the decision to leave orphans without access to compensation benefits should their father die while working on a farm that is no longer required to provide for access to the orphans of the dead worker.

To be clear, there is an average of 18 workers who are killed on farms every year. Eighteen. It's actually been going up a little bit but on average 18. Eighteen workers die. Now what's happened is that this UCP government has suggested that they are not entitled and their family members are not entitled to benefits, to orphan benefits or to widow benefits, as a result of this act.

Now, the government itself suggests as well that they will be also exempting, I believe, farms with five or fewer permanent employees. That amounts to, according to the government, I believe about two-thirds of the farms. I'm just trying to see here somewhere in my notes. I think it suggests that it also means that we are exempting roughly – oh, it's somewhere here; just give me a moment here. Okay. I will find it and get back to you. But what we have is that we are exempting well over 50 per cent of farms and employees who work in farms from even the obligation to have any kinds of protection, whether it be WCB or even some other kind of alternative disability program.

What that means is that of those 18 people who die, probably 12 of them will find themselves with almost no eligibility for any kind of compensation for their family once they are killed at the workplace. That's, you know, 12 people roughly a year whose families will find themselves with virtually no longer any kind of compensation coverage. I appreciate, you know, that's only 12 families who are left with nothing. It's only 12 deaths. I guess folks over there can go to bed at night and say: "Ha, those 12 folks. Who knows? If we're lucky – we'll cross our fingers – maybe they don't have families. Maybe they're not married. Maybe they don't have kids. So we'll cross our fingers and hope because that way when they die, the 12 of them die, no one is going to care that there's no compensation for when they die." Maybe. The other six or so will be eligible for compensation, but it will be significantly less than what they were eligible for before. That's the 18 people or so that die every year.

Now, as well, since 2016, when Bill 6 came into effect, people then had the ability to apply for workers' compensation benefits should they be injured. Just to be clear, the number of people who were doing that: in 2016 it was 777 workers that were injured while working on a farm. In 2017 794 workers were injured and filed claims with workers' compensation because they were working on a farm. In 2018 it was 886 Albertans who work on farms that were injured and filed claims for workers' compensation. So far this year we are on track to exceed the number of 886 Albertans who work on farms who were injured.

Next year those roughly 900 people who are injured when working on farms will no longer be able to apply to WCB for benefits. Now they will have to file a claim with a private disability provider, and for all we know, they will get 30 per cent of what they would have gotten, 20 per cent of what they would have gotten. But – oh, wait – because roughly two-thirds of them are exempted completely from having to have any kind of coverage because they are now considered part of small operations, 600 people will get nothing. Maybe they, you know, fracture a disc. Maybe they are temporarily paralyzed from the waist down. Maybe they lose an arm. Maybe they have a dislocated shoulder. Maybe something falls on their head. These are all the kinds of things that happen in workplaces when people are injured, and they lose time from work. All those things can happen, and now, thanks to this government's actions, roughly two-thirds of them will have no claim for anything. About 600 Albertans injured every year: bye-bye.

I guess, you know, it's just part of making sure that we have the lowest standards of care for people who work on farms anywhere in the country of Canada. Great. You know, I have to tell you that I've met with a lot of farmers who really don't think that they need to be those people, but that's what this government is allowing to happen. That is workers' compensation. To be clear, this idea that we were forcing people to pay for both WCB and private insurance is ridiculous. The minister is incorrect. What we said is that they had to pay for WCB, and if some farmers were paying for more that is great, but no one said that they had to pay for more.

Now, what else have we seen as a result of this bill? To be clear, this bill goes farther. This bill actually makes the situation for people who work on farms worse than it was before we brought in Bill 6 in 2015. How? Well, we've expanded to include a whole swath of groups that were not exempted in the past, whose employees were entitled to be members of unions, to be covered under the Employment Standards Code, to receive the minimum wage, to have access to WCB. All those people in these additional areas that this government has decided to expand the application of this to, those people are now also exempted. We have taken quite an effective run at clawing back the rights of a whole schwa of people who were previously not even impacted by Bill 6 before because they already had rights, but these guys figured: "No, no. We need to expand the group of exploited employees in Alberta. That's our create-jobs plan."

It continues to amaze me when I hear members opposite suggest that their economic development plan is premised on the idea of paying people less or nothing or forcing them into situations where they get injured or ensuring they get no compensation for when they are injured, that sort of importing developing country standards into the province of Alberta is somehow part of some brilliant economic development plan. It's beyond backwards, Mr. Speaker.

What kind of other things have been clawed back from workers who work on the farm? Well, overtime, hours of work. Now to be clear, we were very responsive on these issues when we brought in Bill 6. We allowed for a tremendous amount of flexibility around overtime and around hours of work to accommodate the nature of farming and the sort of urgent nature that occurs at certain times of the year or with certain types of livestock or with certain processes, to allow for the kind of flexibility that farmers were asking for. But these guys thought: "No, no, no. No need to sort of balance people's rights or balance people's needs. No, no, no. Heaven's no. We'll just get rid of all the standards." As far as I can tell, it seems that everybody has been exempted from the standards with respect to being eligible for overtime or ensuring that they are not forced to work more than 12 hours at a time because, you know, you might actually do something unsafe, like hurt yourself, if you're working 13, 14 hours. No; just keep working. There's no limit on that now.

Interestingly, this so-called small producer or small operator I think is the category, anyone that has five or fewer employees, which amounts to somewhere between half and two-thirds of the farmers that are out there, is not apparently covered by the Employment Standards Code at all anymore. From what we can tell between looking at the act and reading what is on the minister's own web page, it appears as though we've decided to exempt them from the minimum wage altogether. I don't even know how you do that, simply don't pay anybody minimum wage. Like, seriously, these folks aren't going to be entitled to minimum wage at all. Over half of the employees working on farms now will not be entitled to a minimum wage. I've just never seen anything like this before. It's shocking. You know, it's sort of Oliver Twist, Charles Dickens. Let's go right back to southern U.S., early 1800s. Why pay anybody anything? I guess that's how we're going to create jobs. Jobs, they say.

That is absolutely shocking to us. I don't know how folks over there sleep at night. Like, literally, you want your kids to go out and take a job where someone says: "Nah, today I've decided not to pay you. Sorry. That's how you run a business. I know you all showed up today. I know that you got injured and that you're probably not going to be able to work for another three to six months, but I've decided not to pay any of you because minimum wage doesn't apply." Yeah, that's what this legislation appears to do, as far as we can tell.

Another thing, of course, is that it worked very, very quickly – the very, very unorthodox and aggressive, I would say, bullying and unprecedented decision to bar at the introduction of this bill, at first reading, the access of any workers, either on small farms or larger farms, to the Labour Relations Code such that they can't unionize. Somehow we had to write it that way. We couldn't possibly let anybody debate it before we did that. I have no idea what the point of that was. I mean, it's an exceptionally undemocratic thing. You guys have a majority. You'll absolutely be able to strip basic constitutional rights to unionize from these workers until such time as some of them, you know, cobble together what pennies they have to go to the courts, to have the courts tell them that you're breaking the Constitution again. Somehow it was so important to you that you had to make that effective on first reading. Wow. You must really hate these workers. It's really shocking to me how much you guys must dislike people who work for farmers. I don't know why you have such a hate-on for them.

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Transportation.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, in 23(h)(i) and (j) it talks about imputing motives to another member that are not true, saying things designed to create disorder in the House. The Leader of the Official Opposition's ridiculous statement that "you must really hate [farm] workers," clearly falls under both those categories. Now, I understand that the Leader of the Official Opposition is upset about their severely unpopular legislation being overturned. She's certainly allowed to say that. She's certainly allowed to say she doesn't like our legislation. She's not allowed to make claims like that.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to respectfully ask the hon. member to withdraw and apologize for those remarks and then carry on with whatever diatribe she has remaining.

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has risen on this point of order.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's fairly transparent that we're talking about a matter of debate. We've just seen, mere moments ago, a ruling that the government is allowed to say that we're in favour of a PST despite the fact that we've never made any such statement because it's a matter of debate.

We're now dealing with a situation in which the government has brought forward legislation that basically takes away the rights of certain farm workers to work in a safe workplace, to have access to disability or death insurance should they be injured or killed. I think in terms of why it is that the government is doing that, you know, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was clearly speculating with respect to what the motives could be. This is clearly a matter of debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I'm prepared to rule on this. At this point I do not believe that this was a point of order, the reason being that without the benefit of the Blues, it's my understanding that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition was discussing the government generally.

That said, I would like to take the opportunity to mention that I think that where we are with the debate at this stage is that there could be some language that is getting close to causing disorder in the House. I would just take a moment to remind all members of the House to ensure that they do not use language to incite disorder within the House as the goal of this endeavour that we are in is to have effective debate, and language that causes disorder does not do that.

If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona could please continue with her remarks.

Ms Notley: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that. I'm certainly quite happy to hear from members opposite exactly why it was that they had to take the unorthodox and really quite unprecedented step of barring farm workers from access to the rights provided by the Labour Relations Code on the reading of the bill at first stage rather than letting it go through reading at all stages and the votes at all stages as with every other part of the bill. I'd be very curious to find out why that is. I mean, it is an extremely unorthodox and, I would say, heavy-handed step to take. It absolutely impinges upon my rights as a member of this Assembly to even debate this and to, you know, perhaps be successful at amending it because it's apparently already in effect. I'm not even sure what the rules of order are with respect to whether we can at committee even try to amend that section of the act since it apparently came into effect with first reading. It is really a heavy-handed strategy that is very unprecedented. I'm just not sure why it is that we have to have that particular element of this rather heinous piece of legislation jammed through so quickly. Like, was there an organizing drive under way somewhere that we didn't know about? I literally don't know.

What we do know is that actually very few workplaces were impacted by providing access to the Labour Relations Code, exactly as we said when this first came into effect, but we wanted to give workers that opportunity should they at some point choose to seek out union representation. Mind you, it might be more applicable now given that we have so broadly expanded the number of workers who are exempt from these basic fundamental human rights. There's no question that we have added a very large number of working people to the list as a result of this, but I remain curious as to why this government had to remove these workers from the protection of the Labour Relations Code

I mean, it's quite, as I say, beyond the pale that we are actually suggesting that they're not protected by basic minimum wage laws. I think that probably they would care a lot more about that than access to the labour code because, in fact, up until now they were all getting paid the minimum wage and now they may not get paid anything. We don't know. I suspect that workers are more concerned about that than they are about access to the labour code in the immediate term. Then again, the Supreme Court of Canada has said that this is a fundamental right that all workers should have access to, so it is very troubling to me that the members opposite would have moved so fast to exempt workers from the application of the labour code.

Basically, what we've got here is a bill that is designed to attack the rights of some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens and also the rights of many foreign workers and temporary foreign workers. You know, I'd say that it's probably fair to say that the majority of workers who will be impacted by this are people of colour, and I would argue that there's probably an adverse effect discrimination going on here on the basis of one's membership in a racialized community, but we will follow that . . .

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. McIver: Again under 23(h), (i), and (j), language designed to create disorder in the House. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition just stood in her spot and suggested that this legislation is because the government is racist.

Ms Hoffman: She did not say that.

Mr. McIver: She did. She said that this is based on racial things. Certainly, the suggestion was there. That is language designed to create disorder. I respectfully request that you ask the hon. member to continue in a more appropriate manner.

The Acting Speaker: I will hear from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Official Opposition was speaking to the impact of these policies. I think it's well known that disproportionately the individuals who will be impacted by these policies are individuals who are more likely to be members of racial minorities. I think that there's good evidence for that. Again, this means that it's having an adverse effect, so this is possible. Policies do this all the time. When certain policies are put forward, whether it's the intention or not, they have impacts on people, and sometimes those people are members of minority groups at a greater rate than the general population.

Mr. Speaker, this is clearly a matter of debate. What we're talking about here are the facts, the population that this has an impact on and who the members of that population are. I think it's pretty clear that this is not a point of order, that this is simply a difference of opinion.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you hon. members. I'm prepared to rule. This, in my estimation, is a matter of debate and specifically a disagreement on the facts. Taking into account the previous point of order, I would take this opportunity to make a further statement to the House. Language that ultimately does create disorder in the House is one of the key aspects that we should be, obviously, not working towards. Points of order, though, in themselves do not necessarily showcase that that wording that is being used does create disorder. However, I think that in this circumstance we are seeing that points of order often are related to when language creates disorder within the House.

What I would ask is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona ensure that the language that she uses focuses towards the bill at hand and that there is not any purpose behind the language to create disorder within this House.

If the hon. member would please continue.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that ruling.

Debate Continued

Ms Notley: Let me just clarify. You know – there are some lawyers here in the House – there is a principle in law called adverse effect discrimination. Fundamental to it is the notion that it's not actually intentional but that sometimes laws are passed that have an adverse effect on a particular protected group under either human rights law or the Charter. Sometimes it's women; sometimes it's people by age; sometimes it's people with disabilities; sometimes it's people with, you know, different sexual orientations; sometimes it is racialized minorities.

The principle, adverse effect discrimination, is a legitimate point of law. I've argued on that principle numerous times in this House since first being elected, in 2008. I just want to assure the chair that in no way was I attempting to create disharmony or unhappiness in the House, but I would not be doing my job if I did not raise the potential of adverse effect discrimination arising from the contents of this bill. Indeed, that's what I was intending to do.

Going forward, though, Mr. Speaker, I think that, generally speaking, what we know is that we are creating a situation where a large number of working Albertans will not be paid as much. They will not work as safely. They will have fewer rights. Their rights under the Charter are being violated. They are being treated differently than almost every other worker like them in the country, at the hands of this government. Their families and loved ones are also being attacked by this bill because their eligibility for survivor benefits is being either eliminated or significantly jeopardized. Their right to be compensated should they be injured, in an industry which the evidence shows is very dangerous and has a much higher rate of injury than most other industries in the province, has been significantly attacked by the terms of this bill. These are the things that are happening in this bill.

Now, if we were in a situation where the application of Bill 6 had ended up looking like people had threatened or feared and smeared that it would look like back in December 2015, it might well be the case that changing the bill to support the rights of Alberta's farmers would be an important step in supporting their economic well-being. However, it is my view and it is the view of many farmers themselves who participated in good faith in the more than two years of consultations that our government undertook after the introduction of Bill 6 that in fact what we ultimately reached in Alberta was a reasonable compromise and that it did not impede the ability of Alberta's farmers to do the best they can economically in their field.

I get that there are many things challenging Alberta's farmers these days, not the least of which was the recent CN strike, the bad harvest this year, previous bad harvests, commodity prices. I know there are many things that Alberta farmers struggle with each and every year, and it's an industry that is harder and harder to make one's way in. But that being said, one doesn't make one's way in an industry by insisting on having a set of rules for one's employees which are the lowest and the most unsafe in the country and exempting them from basic principles like access to the minimum wage.

I actually do look forward to being corrected by members opposite on this matter of the minimum wage because, honestly, we saw it on a web page of the government, suggesting that we were actually exempting these folks from the minimum wage. I actually find that so shocking. I can't believe it's actually true, so I would be happily corrected by any member opposite about the access to basic minimum wage rights for any worker employed in these small operations. We certainly do need clarity about this because it's the government's own briefing and the government's own web page that suggest that these workers would not actually have a right to any minimum wage. I certainly hope that that will be corrected, but if it's not, well, then we're going to hear a lot more about that because that's, obviously, kind of a basic, fundamental breach of UN human rights, that I can't imagine most folks over there, even, would actually sign on to.

With that having been said, I will happily cede the floor and look forward to having a more detailed discussion about the terms in this bill and hearing from the government, in particular, why it is that workers who are injured need to have the compensation to which they are entitled so significantly reduced, why it is that workers in big, commercial agriculture operations need to have their Charter rights so significantly attacked by this government, why it is that they should be compelled to work more than 12 hours a day without a rest break, why it is they should not be eligible for basic minimum wage payments. These things are all very critical questions that need to be asked. These thousands and thousands of people who work on Alberta's farms are also Alberta citizens, and, to me, I just don't understand why it is that we would treat them as if they were not.

With that, I cede the floor and look forward to having anybody else offer up comments. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members looking to join debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has risen to speak.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tempted to say, any time I follow the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition in debate on the same subject matter, "Yeah, what she said; ditto," because of her eloquence in delivering and her total coverage of the subject matter six ways from Sunday. It's always a challenge to follow a debater with the skill of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. But, yea, though I walk in the valley of the totally covered subject matter, there is more to say on the topic. I think I speak from some personal experience when I talk about WCB coverage and the effects that it has on families, those that find themselves with coverage and the effect that it will have on paid farm workers, those that find themselves without coverage at all or perhaps with diminished coverage as a result of the legislation, Bill 26, the so-called Farm Freedom and Safety Act, 2019, which certainly has no freedom involved for farm workers and diminishes their safety.

In my consultations with stakeholders and experts, whether they be academics in the field or occupational health and safety experts, one of the things that I found very recently – and it was very disappointing and disheartening, shocking, and it made me angry to know – is that there's a chill that has descended over this province among those who would seek to express an opinion publicly in dissent to any government position that might be brought forward, whether it be legislation or regulation. It's a chill that I felt growing up in this province during 44 years of PC reign, when you would find that nobody wanted to speak out publicly about government policy in any form of dissent for fear it might hurt them, for fear it might hurt their business, that they would suffer the wrath of the existing Conservative hegemony, for fear that they might not get promoted, for fear that they may not have the opportunity to apply for a grant or to perhaps receive further funding for a research project, for fear that their career would be under threat.

Mr. Speaker, when government members opposite talk about this party in opposition creating fear in the province – I'll tell you what – there's no greater source of fear in this province than the government of Alberta's policies towards the workers of this province as expressed in Bill 26, the Farm Freedom and Safety Act, 2019.

People who would normally be expected to have expert opinions brought forward and heard on the floor or at least allow their names to stand in opposition to the measures contained in this bill are saying: certainly, I'll talk to you on the phone, but don't use my name because I really don't want my research grant to be pulled; I don't want funding to be cut; because of my fear for the 15 or 20 people who work under me who would no longer have employment if, indeed, I was to come out and express publicly my opinion about this piece of legislation. That is the chill on democracy that we've seen before. I grew up with it. When you went to school and high school and university, with that chill in effect, where public servants, where individuals who would be fully expert in their field wouldn't deign to say something publicly because they feared retribution in some form or another from the existing government, the Conservative government of the day.

That same fear now is totally embedded throughout the province, and I'm very, very concerned about that. Bill 26, in my efforts to consult with stakeholders, is a perfect example of the type of intimidation tactic that this government has placed on opponents to any piece of legislation that this government brings to the floor of this House. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there's no fear on this side of the House about bringing those concerns forward to the Legislature and also, as publicly as possible, to represent those who've been muzzled by this government or feel they can't afford to risk their job or their funding to come forward and talk in opposition to this government's proposals and proposed legislation.

I heard earlier this afternoon on a different matter the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat cite the universal declaration of human rights in relation to how it supported the families and their rights to choose the education of their choice for their children. Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you something else that the universal declaration of human rights also protects, in article 23. It protects the rights of working people. It protects their rights to work. I'm quoting from article 23 right now, which I'll table although I'm sure it's been tabled in the House numerous times when people stand to protect workers' rights and the universal human rights that all of us should enjoy, although in Alberta that seems to be something the government doesn't believe in. Article 23, universal declaration of human rights:

- (1) Everyone has the right to work, to free choice of employment, to just and favourable conditions of work and to protection against unemployment.
- (2) Everyone, without any discrimination, has the right to equal pay for equal work.
- (3) Everyone who works has the right to just and favourable remuneration ensuring for himself and his family an existence worthy of human dignity, and supplemented, if necessary, by other means of social protection.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, under article 23 of the universal declaration of human rights:

- (4) Everyone has the right to form and to join trade unions for the protection of his interests.

The universal declaration of human rights, relied upon to support the argument earlier this afternoon of the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, equally applies to the rights of workers. Indeed, this government is totally ignoring that declaration of human rights when it comes to, in fact, the introduction of this legislation. The moment it passed first reading, what this legislation did was deny the right of workers on farms to organize and form a union.

In many cases we've heard members of the government suggest that it would just apply to a small number of people so it really has no bearing; it's an insignificant piece of the legislation. If indeed it was that insignificant, why in the world did they find it necessary to make it for the first time in Alberta government history, I believe, enforceable upon the passing of first reading of the act? It's totally shameful, or perhaps I should say shameless. The government seems to be proud of attacking workers whenever they possibly can. They love to beat their opponents and reward their supporters in legislation, which aren't necessarily the rules of the game that a fair-minded government will employ when looking to govern this province with legislation and bring forward legislation to benefit Albertans.

As I mentioned, in my consultation with stakeholders, occupational health and safety experts, they are universally appalled by this legislation, knowing that indeed it's going backwards and backwards in time. That's really what this government has been doing since day one with legislation aimed at turning back the clock in so many respects. I'll remind the House that the date is 2019. It's not 1919, but 1919 is a date that we should remember in Canada. Of course, I speak about the date 100 years ago when we had the Winnipeg General Strike. The Winnipeg General Strike resulted in the deaths of some workers at the hands of police in a strike that was designed to establish the rights of working people to organize, form unions, and negotiate an agreement with their employer and have those rights enshrined in law. In fact, the Canadian Constitution does have those rights enshrined, so it's another significant document that this legislation flaunts and this government chooses to totally ignore. In fact, it's insulting to have a government in this province, my province, suggest that workers' rights are something that they can ignore with impudence.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that there will be a price to pay for this. I've taken a few taxi rides lately. I know it's anecdotal, but very seldom have I had cab drivers offer opinions about what people are saying. The first thing they talk about is: "Why in the world did they pass that law to fire that guy, you know, the guy that was talking about investigating the election of the leader? And what the heck is going on with people who want to form a union? They can't do that anymore? Is that something that's not possible? I thought that we had a Constitution in this country." Well, in fact, they're right. We do. People are talking, although some people are unwilling to come forward and to speak publicly for fear of retribution from this government, and that's the aura that we've now begun to live under once again in this province.

It makes me more than a little bit angry when the government members suggest that we are an angry opposition. You better believe we are because we reflect what's going on in the province, and the members of this society who respect working people are more than a little angry once they get over the shock and dismay of the gall of this government to go ahead and do such things as disregard the universal declaration of human rights and our Canadian Constitution by taking away the right to organize from our working people. Although they may be a small group of people on farms – and calling it an ideological bent, that is unacceptable, to say the least. The protection of health, safety, and rights of farm workers: the universal declaration of human rights has this embedded in it. It's done so to protect workers who are in some of the most dangerous kinds of work in the world. Of course, I speak about agricultural work, farm work. It is one of the most dangerous workplaces. In fact, in Alberta it is the most dangerous workplace to work in.

We brought in Bill 6 to address concerns and to bring Alberta in line with other provinces so that the workers in Alberta could actually have the same protections that workers in every other province and jurisdiction of the country enjoyed. It also allowed us to fall in line with the Constitution and the universal declaration of human rights regarding the rights of workers. Certainly, we have no disagreement that the farm is a unique place of employment in this province. Be that as it may, it doesn't exempt the farm from the obligation of providing a safe work environment and also worker protection as far as their right to organize goes. I know that the government has asked us to examine and consider the options that have been given to farmers, where you would have WCB insurance versus a private insurance option. But I ask members to consider what, in fact, benefits you would get if you are the victim of an accident and you have had the necessity as an insured worker under WCB, if you've had that happen to you, what you actually find yourself doing to support your family.

When I mentioned that at the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I talked about having some personal experience in the field. It didn't happen to be myself who suffered an injury in the workplace. It was my dad. Over the course of his construction career, which is a significantly dangerous career as well though not as dangerous as the agricultural sector, he suffered four different injuries which required time off and recovery during periods of receiving WCB benefits. Let me tell you that if it weren't for those WCB benefits, we would have been out of our house, on the street, perhaps living in the basement of relatives or anybody else who would take us in. Us six kids who were living under WCB benefits never knew what financial straits we were in. We knew things were tight, but because of the management of my parents, they managed to keep a roof over our heads and us fed. Subsequently I learned that at the end of each month, we had three bucks left over. There was a lot of hardship, but we actually were able to get by, even with the benefits of WCB.

That is what the government wants to take away or deny farm workers as a result of the passage of this bill to supposedly provide freedom and safety to farm workers, the security of an insurance that will at least allow a family to survive during a period of convalescence. At one point it was actually a period of two years where my father was not working, and we certainly were grateful for that coverage.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for questions and comments should anybody wish to take that opportunity.

Seeing none, are there any other individuals wishing to speak on this matter? I see the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler has risen.

Mr. Horner: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak in support of Bill 26, Farm Freedom and Safety Act, 2019, the bill to replace Bill 6, the slap to the face from the previous government to small farms and families all across the province. For a little context for this House, I'm a beef producer farmer, and I employ one full-time employee. We ranch and live in outback Alberta, at least an hour's drive in any direction to buy a jug of milk or find a bank. I'm not complaining. It's the wide open prairie: land too poor and region too dry to farm more than pockets, but great natural cattle country. It takes a pretty large spread to run enough cows to raise a family, so neighbours are far apart, and there are not many amenities for newcomers or people looking to start a life. I'm telling you this to explain the relationship, at least in my case, between employee and employer in rural Alberta. You cannot attract labour and you definitely cannot retain labour by treating workers poorly or asking workers to perform unsafe tasks.

For the purposes of this speech and to try not to embarrass him, I'll refer to the wonderful employee who works for me and with me as Bill. After a death in the family I had the opportunity to buy the family farm at a young age. I was in my early 20s. This is rare for intergenerational farms. It usually happens a lot later in life, but I embraced the challenge, got a bank to believe in me but knew I would need full-time help. Shortly after, I met Bill. Bill and I are the same age. He was born and spent his youth in Mexico, worked in agriculture throughout the U.S. as a young man, and ended up working in Leamington, Ontario on a tomato farm. It was in Ontario that Bill met his wife, who I'll call Susan. She will hate that if she ever hears this. Bill and Susan decided to come west, following the advice of family and friends, in search of opportunity and a safe place to start a family.

So Bill and I met. He needed a job, and I needed help in a hurry. We were a week away from seeding. When we seed this upcoming spring, it will be 15 years that Bill and I have worked together. Along the way we've learned a lot and from each other. I've learned how to be a more compassionate, flexible employer, to never ask something of someone you would not do yourself and that understanding Bill and Susan's life away from the job is more important than the job. This hasn't always been easy. There have been many hurdles along the way.

One of the main issues, and how this ties back to Bill 26, is in regard to health and safety. Farms and ranches can be dangerous, no question, full stop. Livestock are big and strong with strong fight-or-flight instincts. If you're new to handling cattle, things as basic as how to stand when running a sorting gate or how to approach an animal in tight quarters make all the difference between a safe task and a dangerous one. Equipment is fast-moving and unforgiving. PTOs, post pounders, and augers have led to many a wreck, many horrible, some even fatal. Bill was new to handling cattle. He'd worked on some extremely large feedlots in the corn belt but had never really gotten out of the feed truck, so we always tried to be training and explain why we do things: try standing here when loading the crowding tub, how to load the liner in a safe way for the cattle and for you.

In around our second year together Bill cracked his wrist. He had a gate come back at him while loading some yearlings. I remember this event clearly. He received a cast in town and returned to work the next day. I asked him what he was doing here. Whenever I break something, they usually say four to six weeks. He said that he didn't know how this worked. On the huge feedlot in Iowa or on the industrial tomato farm in Ontario you felt like a number and could just be replaced. I sent him home to chill with his family and said: come back when you're healed. He asked if anything would change regarding pay while he was laid up. I said: "Of course not. You were hurt working for me." I joked with him: "I doubt I could replace you if I tried." He thought it was a joke; I was kind of serious. Not many want to live in Pollockville, Alberta, and it would take me years to train them up to how we do things. I told him that he was stuck with me.

After the cracked wrist we decided to get some workplace insurance just for peace of mind. It was a simple plan that covered Bill and his wife whether he was hurt at work or not and while he travelled. This policy seemed to suffice for a couple of years. Once in a while Bill would get terrible gout. He used to say that it was from gorging himself on tomatoes from his couple of years in Ontario. One day while visiting his doctor for gout relief, they did some tests and found that he had poor-functioning kidneys. Bill didn't seem totally surprised. He said that it runs in his family. He has since stabilized his condition through diet and lifestyle changes, but it will never get better. His doctors have told him that he can maintain this for a long time, but at some point he very well could need a kidney transplant. This forced Bill to think about his own mortality and his family's future. It kick-started a desire to try and pursue a life insurance policy. He soon learned that locking down a life insurance policy was basically impossible with a prediagnosed condition.

We made some inquiries and after many dead ends found a group policy that, with my wife and I involved, we could qualify for. That's what we did. Bill now has coverage that protects him, his wife, and all three of their children. It has a full dental plan for their entire family. It covers them anywhere in the world at any time. It has disability and a life insurance rider payable to his family. We did this around 2011. No government had to tell me to.

When Bill 6 was brought forth by the previous government, I remember being shocked that what I was doing as an employer was not good enough. I remember telling Bill that the government wants me to sign on to WCB insurance. He was quite concerned that I would cancel our existing policy in favour of WCB. I could not do that to him and his family, so I signed up for the WCB coverage and just paid the extra fees.

The linkage to occupational health and safety was a huge concern for most small employers like me. It just doesn't reflect farm realities. I remember hearing about an information session on Bill 6 where people were talking about working farm hours. Someone asked: what about calving season, up all night trying to save as many calves as you can? The response was: well, just turn the bulls out during the day. It would have been hilarious if it wasn't so scary and ridiculous.

I'm proud to have been part of the consultation process on Bill 26 with the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. I think the bill represents a balance of the different realities between small farms and bigger, more industrial farms. We need to aspire towards a culture of farm safety always. It's critical that we continue to teach and present the dangers of farm work in schools and out.

As for Bill and Susan, they are staples in our community, have three kids in our local school, and are working towards owning their own home. When I decided to run for this role, I had to ask his permission. When I asked my wife, the first thing she said was: have you talked to Bill? Bill and my wife gave me permission, he got a raise, and here we are.

I realize not every situation is the same, but this is a story I knew to tell. Bill 6 was a terrible bill built in urban Alberta to appease organized labour. We know how to take care of our people on small farms in Alberta because they're like family. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Calgary-West has risen.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Those were certainly wonderful comments by my hon. friend. You know, I know that he is a farmer. I know that there are many farmers within the United Conservative caucus. I would certainly like him to talk a little bit about his experiences not only farming but certainly the experience on Bill 6, which is something that I was a part of in this Chamber during the last Legislature, when there were thousands – not hundreds, Mr. Speaker, thousands – of Albertans on the front steps of this Legislature protesting Bill 6. Maybe, or maybe not, that member was a part of that.

I would like to know what impact that Bill 6 had had on the community which he certainly represents and is a part of. I'd also like to know, Mr. Speaker, what experience, I guess I'm going for, people like him bring to the table, and maybe, when people are commenting about certain subjects which they have no experience on, what possible adverse effects that that may have when they're certainly criticizing someone who is a farmer, who owns a farm, who understands what it is to be a farmer.

You know, I do remember the former minister. I forget the exact context, but I know it became very much a running joke within this Legislature, the thought that calving could only occur during the daytime. It completely tells me the absolute naïveté of the previous government and, I would argue to say, the current members of the Official Opposition, so I would like him to make a few comments in regard to this.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question from the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

I remember the Bill 6 rally very clearly. I was not present, but I had very many neighbours and friends that took part, and it was mostly a feeling of shock. You know, when people read the original bill, if I recall, before there were some amendments, they said: oh, this is going to kill 4-H. The family exemptions weren't there yet. Our 4-H clubs were concerned.

I have a lot of elderly neighbours that use seasonal help that thought it would have to speed up their retirement. We already are seeing a big turnover in rural Alberta with larger farms swallowing up the smaller farms. It's about economies of scale. It's about technology. Plain and simple, a bill like this just made it impossible for the smaller farms to have the safety protocols in place with a small number of employees. That was where you saw a lot of this. It was elderly couples. They'd worked their whole lives. They weren't ready to sell their farm and retire, but they couldn't take on the additional help to continue on with their farm.

The adverse effect? Well, it made a lot of people angry. It made a lot of people upset. They didn't know why decisions were being made from the halls of urban Alberta when they weren't being listened to. They thought they had common-sense objections and amendments that could be made, and it just seemed to fall on deaf ears.

A lot of the farm data that was used to propose some of this I have a big problem with. At my house where I live, if you go a quarter mile behind my house, 400 yards, there's a body of water.

If my two-year-old son crawls through the fence, makes it out there, and drowns in that body of water, that is a farm accident. If the exact same situation happens in a house backing onto a park in an urban area, it's just an accident. There are things in play when we live within where we work, and that can't change in rural, farming Alberta. Decisions that involve how we live with our families, with our hired people: they need to consider that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to join debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has risen.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak against Bill 26, the so-called Farm Freedom and Safety Act, and I want to address a couple of points that have been raised by the members opposite during debate.

First of all, they continue to point to the number of protesters who were out on the steps of the Legislature as justification for the bill that they're bringing forward here to this Chamber. I would certainly hope that if the number of protesters is an indication of the urgency of a matter, then they would look at the number of protesters who were on the steps of the Legislature when Greta Thunberg was here. It was tens of thousands of people, the biggest rally in Alberta Legislature history. The members here in the intel caucus to my right are laughing at the issue, but the issue of climate change is urgent . . .

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), language designed to create disorder in the House: the hon. member just called the members of the government the intel caucus. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. If you can't draw the line here, I'm not sure where you can draw the line. I would respectfully ask you to insist that the hon. member apologize and withdraw the remark. If there's anything designed to create disorder in the House, we just heard it loud and clear. I realize it's your decision; I'm not pretending it's not. If you can't have this withdrawn, I guess there's no line.

The Acting Speaker: I see that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is rising on this matter.

Mr. Schmidt: I apologize and withdraw my comments. I'm sure that that's not the last we'll hear from the Minister of Transportation during the next 15 minutes.

Debate Continued

Mr. Schmidt: If the number of protesters on the Legislature is any indication of what the government will take seriously and deal with as a matter of urgency, then climate change would be the number one issue that this government is dealing with rather than giving away $4.7 billion to their corporate friends.

The other issue that I want to raise is, you know, that the accusations about misinformation that has been propagated by members of our caucus while discussing matters of public policy that the government is bringing forward pale in comparison to the misinformation that those members spread during the Bill 6 debate, which I was here for. Of course, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler and the Member for Calgary-West referred to one of the classic pieces of misinformation that was continually repeated during debate, this idea that somebody from our caucus or somebody from the agriculture ministry made this comment about turning bulls out during the day so that people don't have to calve at night. That's ridiculous. There's no proof that anybody ever made that statement. It's a Facebook meme, but of course we see a government that's run by Facebook memes now, so we understand, of course, why they continually believe this garbage that they tell each other.

Anyway, I do want to also address one of the issues that was repeatedly raised during the Bill 6 debate and is being raised now, this issue that farmers are nothing but good employers who treat their employees with the utmost respect and pay them what they're worth and deal with their safety standards as a matter of urgency. This issue was triggered by the fact that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, I believe, earlier today had guests from the Alberta sugar beet farmers. With respect to sugar beets, Mr. Speaker, we have a terrible history of forced labour in agriculture in this province that I want to remind all members of this House of.

First of all, I want to refer to an article that was dated February 11, 2018. It's called Sweet Irony: Zen Garden Memorializes Forced Labour on Alberta Sugar Beet Farms. It was published by the Canadian broadcaster. It talks about an artist who is a descendant of sugar beet farmers in the Lethbridge area. She describes what her great-grandparents and grandparents were forced to do during the Second World War. Because they were farmers in British Columbia and because they were of Japanese descent, they were forced to give up their farm to the government of Canada and move to Picture Butte, Alberta, and were forced to labour on sugar beet farms during the Second World War and for five years after the Second World War ended. She describes the conditions that her grandparents and great-grandparents had to live through.

At the farm her family was made to live in an old granary with no insulation. In the winter, many people grew ill.

"A lot of people died from that illness," said McKinnon. "It was hard, and the labour was tough, too, it's very difficult to grow and harvest."

Working sugar crop fields, both cane and beet, is notoriously brutal work. Despite the hardship, her family survived and McKinnon's mother was born on the farm.

That is the history of Japanese-Canadian internment labour on Alberta sugar beet farms.

But those weren't the only people who were forced into labouring on Alberta sugar beet farms, Mr. Speaker. I want to share with the House another story that was also published by the Canadian broadcaster. This one is dated June 18, 2017, and says 'You Had No Choice': Indigenous Manitobans Shed Light on Exploitative Farm Labour Program that Ran for Decades. The subtitle is: Called 'Grab-a-hoe Indians,' Were Recruited to Work Sugar Beet Farms with Brutal Conditions, Little Pay. Now, Rebecca Bone of Camperville, Manitoba, in the story talks about being forced by the government of Canada to work on the sugar beet farms of southern Alberta. She describes it like this: "We worked until our hands were blistered, our skin was burnt and we were always hungry." They worked 12 to 14 hours a day, were not offered water, much less food to eat, and went home with $300 in their pockets if they were lucky. And you know the reason why, Mr. Speaker, they were forced to work on these sugar beet farms? Because the government of Canada threatened to take their children away from them if they didn't do it. That is the legacy of some of the farm labour here in Alberta that we have to deal with. This isn't in our grandparents' or great-grandparents' history.

This article goes on to say, Mr. Speaker, that these people were forced to work for next to no money . . . [interjections]

4:30

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I just want to remind those members of the House that there will be ample time to debate this issue, and if they have any questions or comments, there is 29(2)(a) available. All debate should be referred through the Speaker.

If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar could please continue.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's concerning to me that the Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock wants to make light of the issue of forced labour on sugar beet farms during debate.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I think that in that case that would constitute imputing a motive to the hon. member. I would ask that the hon. member withdraw that comment, apologize, and please continue with his comments.

Again a reminder to the whole House that we are endeavouring to have an effective and useful debate in this House, which also then would require all of us to ensure that we use language that is not abusive or insulting as that would lead to disorder in this House.

Mr. Schmidt: I apologize and withdraw, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schmidt: What I was going to say is that this was a government program that was enforced upon indigenous people, that continued on until the 1980s, Mr. Speaker. That means that when I and a lot of my caucus colleagues were happily enjoying preschool, spending our time watching Sesame Street and eating snacks, playing on the street with our friends, these indigenous citizens were forced to labour for next to nothing for Alberta sugar beet farmers. That is also the labour history of farmers and their employees in this province.

I appreciate the fact that most farmers are good employers, and I appreciate the fact that most farmers are concerned about safety conditions and pay for their employees on their farms. But, Mr. Speaker, we have a tragic history of exploiting labour here on farms in our own province, and that's why we have legislation like this, to protect farmers and their employees on the farm. We cannot rely on every single farmer being a good employer. We cannot rely on every farmer who employs somebody to work on their farm to pay them a fair wage and ensure that they have safe working conditions. That's why it was necessary for us to bring in Bill 6, that ensured farm workers the right to safe working conditions and the right to organize so that they can protect themselves and fight for fair wages and solid working conditions.

It is a shame, Mr. Speaker, that in defence of this legislation we are whitewashing Alberta's history with respect to farm labour, and I think that we need to just be honest with ourselves about what has happened in the past in this province, reconcile ourselves to what has happened, and admit that we need to do better as a province to protect farm labourers so that those kinds of exploitative conditions cannot be repeated under any circumstances on any farm in this province.

The other point that I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker, is that, of course, we see again in Bill 26 an attack on labour unions, this time making it completely illegal for farm employees, farm workers to organize themselves into a labour union. Members of my caucus have asked the question: why would the UCP strip somebody's constitutional right to organize? I think I'm willing to provide the answer. It's because organized labour is a legitimate threat to their power.

If you want any indication as to how seriously they take this threat to their power, you only need to look at the fact that on day 1 of the CN Rail strike the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake stood up on his hind legs and demanded that Justin Trudeau and the federal government . . .

Mr. Ellis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Point of Order

Insulting Language

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much. Under 23(h), (i), and (j) he certainly said – and I don't have the benefit of the Blues in front of me – that the Minister of I believe it was Agriculture and Forestry . . .

The Acting Speaker: I am going to rule on this point of order. I am going to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to withdraw and apologize, the statement regarding hind legs.

Before you do that, I'm just going to look for a nod from the Member for Calgary-West to ensure that that was the point of order that he was raising. Okay.

If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar would withdraw and apologize for the insulting language that he used.

Mr. Schmidt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I apologize and withdraw. The next time I'll say that he stood on his front legs.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Acting Speaker: We are moving on to the next speaker. Are there any . . .

Mr. McIver: I have a point of order, in that case, Mr. Speaker.

Point of Order

Insulting Language

Mr. McIver: Under 23(h), (i), and (j). Mr. Speaker, you just did the right thing. You made the member apologize and withdraw, and he repeated the insult using "front legs" instead of the – I'm sorry. I know the hon. member doesn't like the rules here. I know the hon. member doesn't care for any level of decorum or respect here, but I'm sure even his own teammates at this point are embarrassed. I think that to maintain the dignity of the House, I would respectfully ask you to insist that he apologize and withdraw for repeating what he just had to apologize for and withdraw about two seconds before he said it.

The Acting Speaker: I'd like to rule on this. I would ask that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar withdraw and apologize for the comment that he made regarding front legs as in my mind I do not see the difference within the context of how it was used immediately after the previous apology.

Mr. Schmidt: I apologize and withdraw it, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has risen to speak.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, a number of my colleagues have spoken to this bill already. I don't propose to go on for a long time. I would certainly concur in the comments of the Leader of the Official Opposition and Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a number of points that she said, but I think there is just one thing I would like to clarify, simply because I feel strongly about it because of my time, before I came to this House, in which I was a practising lawyer.

What frustrates me more than anything, Mr. Speaker, is when we're having a conversation that isn't about the actual facts. I think, you know, when we're talking about this bill, the part that frustrates me the most is the conversation we've had around workers' compensation insurance. Now, I had certainly worked with the workers' compensation system as it stood before we were in government, and there were a series of flaws with that system. I don't deny it. It was definitely not a perfect system. We did a lot to change that system, and I think we did a lot to improve that system. I think it's a much better system than it was. But this idea that people ought not to be subject to WCB because they can buy other insurance out there that's better: I think I need to quarrel quite loudly, I suppose, or at great length with that point because I just don't think that it aligns with the actual facts.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The purpose of WCB insurance, Mr. Speaker, is that it's no fault. It's no-fault insurance. So if a worker is injured, they get compensation. If a worker is killed, their family gets compensation. That's it. It's the beginning and the end of the matter. That is a very different situation than when you are dealing with private insurance. When you are dealing with private insurance, the insurer has the right to step into the shoes of the person so insured and litigate a matter. What does that mean? Well, what it means is that if a worker is injured, if a worker is killed, it is not necessarily for the insured to decide whether or not that worker will be compensated.

And I agree with the members opposite, the members of the government. It is absolutely true that there are farmers this country over who would buy that insurance voluntarily, who would comply with WCB, who would comply with OH and S and do all of that voluntarily, who care very deeply for their workers, who do things for them that are over and above the law. I absolutely agree that that is the case. I'm not quarreling with that at all. I'm not saying that it's 100 per cent of people, because it isn't. In fact, you make the laws for the people who are not behaving well on their own. That is usually the case with the law. The fact that we have a prohibition on murder isn't because everyone walking around out there is a murderer; it's because some people are.

But I think the members opposite are absolutely right. Most farmers would do the right thing in this case. But they don't necessarily get to make that decision. If someone is injured or killed on their farm and that person or that person's family seeks compensation, the insurer has the right to step into the shoes of the insured and run the case, instruct the lawyers. That is how an insurance contract works.

Mr. Speaker, the problem becomes – and, you know, we see this in the States a lot, where an injured worker is attempting to sue their employer. This is a worker who's injured. They can't return to the work they were doing. Usually they're already a marginalized person who has limited employment options to begin with. Essentially, their family is left with no ability to pay the rent, with no ability to buy food, with no ability to do anything for years and years and years while the matter is tied up in litigation. The family of a worker who has been killed on a farm doesn't need compensation six years from now, when the case resolves. They need compensation now. That person's wife and children need to eat now. They need to have shelter now. They don't have time to wait years and years for a case to resolve.

Again, many insurance companies will behave well, but we make laws for the ones who don't. There are certainly many cases in which a party with greater financial resources essentially engages in what would be termed exhaustion litigation. That means that they bring forward motion after motion after motion after motion, assuming that the injured worker who is suing them does not have the financial resources to send their lawyer to court over and over and over. Eventually they drop the case because they don't have the financial resources to continue, especially in light of the fact that they're unemployed.

Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I consider it quite an emotional issue because I have met people in these circumstances. These are real cases. These are real people, who really exist, who find themselves in a position of having been injured and having to seek compensation and being unable to get it. And whatever flaws may or may not exist in the WCB process, at least we're not dealing with an injured party who is essentially trying to sue an insurance company with vastly greater resources being tied up in litigation for years and years. That is my primary concern.

This conversation that we are having with the public about how lots of insurance is better than WCB is just false. It may be better in the sense that it is less expensive for the person who is insured to buy, but it is certainly not better from the perspective of the worker or the worker's family, who, rather than getting immediate compensation in the case of WCB, now has to wait for years and years while the matter is tied up in court and litigated, sometimes on grounds that are not meritorious, sometimes on grounds that have no basis in law. Sometimes the insurance company will just run a case to see if they can get the plaintiff to go away. And I think that is sad. The reason that it upsets me is that it uses the legal process, a process in which I have a great deal of faith, a process that I think is incredibly important to each and every one of us in our society, in a way that, in my view, is deeply inappropriate. Why I think that the WCB is often better is because when we're talking about cost and we're talking about benefit, we need to keep in mind when we are speaking that the no-fault component of WCB is a massive benefit to workers. That is an incredibly important piece of the puzzle, and somehow it is being excluded, whether intentionally or not, from the conversation about this.

Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to take the opportunity to rise and point out that that, I think, is something that is a very important factor. It's a factor that ought to be considered. It's a factor that ought to impact on every single one of us in this House.

Having now said my piece, I will take my place.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone has a brief question or comment. I see that the hon. Minister of Transportation has risen under 29(2)(a).

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very interested in the comments about the no-fault policy of the Workers' Compensation Board. I think that there are a lot of Albertans that might take issue with that.

I did spend a period of time, Mr. Speaker, as the labour minister for this great province, and I remember – I know that our current labour minister is here looking at me intently now, wondering what's going to come out of my mouth next. But the fact is that during that time in my office there were many days when there were people lined up around the block all day every day with WCB complaints. I think that they would say that it's not a no-fault insurance.

I had one constituent that actually lost both of his legs in an accident and had to fight to get prostheses. In fact, Mr. Speaker, he got prostheses about 20 years ago. You can only imagine, as I can only imagine, how much better the technology is for prostheses 20 years later. The old ones were clearly worn out, and we had to fight like crazy for about a year to get replacements for that person. I'm not sure that that person would agree that WCB is a no-fault insurance.

Many other people are injured on the job where the WCB has told them that it's their own fault. I'm not sure that that really squares with what we just heard in this House about no-fault insurance, people whose lives had been ruined. I would wonder how the hon. member would reflect upon that and whether the hon. member that just spoke has had any – I'd be surprised if the hon. member didn't hear from some constituents in her riding about similar things. I think the hon. member probably takes meetings with her constituents, and her constituents are probably similar to mine in that she probably gets them on a regular basis telling the hon. member similar things to what I just recounted to this House.

I could go on with hundreds of other examples because I've heard hundreds of other examples, and, no, that's not an exaggeration. I'm sure our current labour minister gets a regular diet of similar stories, complaints, appeals into his office as well.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask the member to think about the fact that many farmers, as our member talked about earlier, have not only WCB insurance but other insurance as well, and in many cases farmers and ranchers made it known to us that the WCB insurance was not as good as what they were already paying for.

I would ask the member also to reflect about the fact that probably a good part of the reason that the Official Opposition was very much removed from rural Alberta was the fallout from Bill 6. That wasn't the only thing. There was the carbon tax; there were a whole bunch of other reasons. But certainly Bill 6 is something that people in rural Alberta – to this day many of them will spit when they say "Bill 6" because they are so disgusted with the poor way that they were treated by the previous government, the poor attitude that they were addressed with when the previous government used phrases like "We are going to create a culture of safety," as if farmers in Alberta for a hundred years didn't care about their family and their friends that were helping them out on the farm and working for them. What an insult. What an insult, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the hon. member to think about those things.

You know what? The other thing, too, is that now, as the hon. member from our side who's a farmer said, we have sometimes farmers and ranchers that maybe don't have the physical ability currently to do some of the more dangerous jobs on the farm, which I've heard they actually are doing anyway because there's too much paperwork, after the NDP was finished, to make it worth their while. So they're doing things that they should be hiring other people to do, actually creating less safety.

Also, I'd ask them to think about the fact that we heard from the other side about how 12 families will have no coverage. Well, we don't know that. Those 12 families that the official leader over there talked about: there's a very good chance that those farmers and ranchers would have all had insurance other than WCB. We heard no mention from the other side about the 180,000 families without a paycheque after they were done in government. I didn't see any tears shed over there for their policies that caused all that to happen, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are back on the main bill, Bill 26. Is there anyone else wishing to add to the debate this afternoon?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call the question on second reading of Bill 26, the Farm Freedom and Safety Act, 2019.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

The Acting Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 20 Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019

The Acting Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to Bill 20? The Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak to the Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019, Bill 20. It's fairly difficult to keep track of what bills 20, 21, 22 do. This bill deals with 17 pieces of legislation, repeals five, creates two new ones. Certainly, I think that omnibus legislation pretty much is the norm for this government.

I would remind the other side that when they were in opposition, they used to object even to related pieces of legislation such as workers' compensation or labour relations. But now, when they are in charge, they can put almost 17 pieces of legislation together which don't have much in common other than . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Sabir: It amends or deals with 17 pieces of legislation, as I said. They have one thing in common, that all these changes that are brought through this Bill 20 take money away from the pockets of Albertans and give it to the $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout. That's what I find common in all these changes.

If we look at some of the things that they are doing with this piece of legislation, I think these things, whatever is in this piece of legislation, don't help us in any way, shape, or manner with jobs, the economy, and pipelines, which was their key slogan. For instance, if we talk about jobs, this piece of legislation ends all kinds of tax credits: the interactive digital media tax credit, the capital investment tax credit, the community economic development corporation tax credit, the Alberta investor tax credit, the scientific research and experimental development tax credit, the personal tuition tax credit, the personal education amount tax credit. Because of these tax credits, we were not only diversifying our economy, but these tax credits were attracting investment into Alberta, and they were creating jobs. Essentially, by removing these tax credits, this government is not only breaking their promise of creating jobs; rather, they are making us lose these jobs that were created by these tax credits or were going to be created by these tax credits.

Then the tuition tax credit that relates to postsecondary, advanced education: they are hiking the tuition fees on students all across this province, and on top of that, they are changing the tax credits. They are taking those tax credits away. They are charging more interest on outstanding student loans. Again, that will also shut down, make it difficult for students to seek postsecondary education. For many of us who are not born into wealth, education is the only way to get ahead or have a decent living. With these changes, I think this government is making it difficult for everyday Albertans to be able to attend postsecondary schools.

Then it also changes film and television tax credits. My colleague from Edmonton . . .

Ms Hoffman: Castle Downs.

Mr. Sabir: . . . Castle Downs has talked about it at length, that in our neighbouring jurisdiction, for instance, in B.C., these credits are way more than what we were offering, and they are bringing in way more revenue. They are attracting tourism. They are attracting these companies because of those credits. What we are seeing here is that these tax credits have been changed in a way that everybody in the industry is protesting against. They are not happy about this change, and they are of the view that this will stifle investment, that this will destroy our industry. Again, nobody is listening to the industry because they want to save some money so they can pay for their $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate gift.

Advanced Education, Environment and Parks, Health: there are many things that this piece of legislation is dealing with. They're eliminating the Access to the Future Fund Act, the environmental protection and enhancement fund, the Alberta Cancer Prevention Legacy Fund Act. The Gaming, Liquor and Cannabis Act: what they are doing is that they are, for instance, merging Alberta lottery funds into general revenue, and they are assuring Albertans that those funds will still be available to the organizations. The thing is that nobody wants to believe what this government says because they have said many things that they won't do, but they still went ahead and did those things anyway.

There are many examples. They said about AISH, the assured income for the severely handicapped, that they will not change that. In fact, they supported Bill 26 when brought forward by the previous government. What they did: they not only changed AISH; they deindexed it, taking $30 away from Albertans with disabilities, almost $380 per year, so that they can fund their policies like a $4.7 billion handout. Now, when they say that they are taking lottery funds and putting them in general revenue and telling organizations that these funds will be available to them, nobody wants to buy that argument because we have already seen an almost 35 per cent cut to CFEP, the community facility enhancement program, that many nonprofit community organizations and communities were using to build their centres, to build their cultural centres. From there they can provide services to the communities. They are cutting that one.

We have seen cuts to the CIP grant, the community initiatives program, and we haven't heard anything about antiracism grants. So when the government tells us that they're just moving the lottery fund into general revenue, nobody wants to trust this government because they have done things that they said they would not do. It's another thing that's of huge concern for organizations in our communities.

The Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund: they're also changing that one. We have heard from this government that they want the market to fix everything. They want market-based research, but I think that in this House there will be many people who have been impacted by cancer. Every year we see that there are many Albertans who are suffering from this, and having publicly funded research on the prevention of cancer is important. It's in the public interest. Taking that fund away I think is irresponsible. Again, that's not what Albertans voted for. What they voted for was jobs, the economy, and pipelines, and none of these things create any jobs. None of these things help us do anything with our economy or pipelines. All it does is take money so that the government later can fund whatever they did in their job-creation tax act, where they gave $4.7 billion to corporations.

I think I already spoke briefly about the deindexing that they have done through this legislation. They have done that with the AISH program, deindexing of the AISH program. That's something around $30 per month, and if somebody is living on a limited income and, on top of that, they have a disability, that $30 makes a huge difference. The explanation the government gives: oh, it's not that onerous. If you are living on a limited income, certainly taking $380 away from them per year is onerous, and it's huge for those individuals.

It's also deindexing income support programs. It's also deindexing the seniors' benefit. Again, these are small increases, but for those who are receiving these increases, that sometimes is the only source of income that they have, and it matters to them. It's huge for them. This legislation is also taking that indexing, those increases, away from Albertans. It, again, will have huge impacts for those individuals who were relying on these services.

I note that they said that times are tough, so that's why they are doing it, but they didn't put any sunset provision on when this deindexing will be lifted, when they will start indexing these benefits again. There is no such assurance provided in this piece of legislation, and Albertans certainly are concerned how their only support is dealt with by this government. Again, while they're taking money away from Albertans with disabilities, while they're taking money away from seniors, while they're taking money away from those who are on income support, this government is also giving $4.7 billion in corporate handouts and wants Albertans to believe that that handout will somehow create jobs, against all kinds of academic advice and data that is available on those kinds of policies.

We have seen that kind of trickle-down economics fail everywhere around the globe. When we see that, like we saw the evidence here in Alberta, even companies like Husky, who got $233 million out of it, were not able to invest that in Alberta because the issues facing our industry are different. It's about takeaway capacity; it's not about their production capacity. Even if they invest, they will not have takeaway capacity in pipelines; they will not have access to markets to ship that product and sell those products. So they are giving that money to the corporations who will not have an opportunity to invest in our province, and they so far have done nothing to address takeaway capacity and market access issues.

Every day we are just told that there is a $30 million slush fund that is monitored and administered by a failed UCP candidate, Tom Olsen, that he will somehow use that fund anyway on Twitter and rapid response, those kinds of things, which will help us get a pipeline or will help us get market access. That didn't happen. Then we also gained access to only new markets. There is an inquiry going on, yet of the $2.5 million they have allocated, $900,000 went to the inquiry commissioner's son's law firm, where our Justice Minister worked formerly. These actions didn't do anything to help us with market access or new markets.

With all these cuts, all these changes that are brought forward by this Bill 20, I think there are possible consequences. Clearly, we can see that because of the changes contained in this piece of legislation, Albertans will be paying more in income taxes. This is also dealing with services that they are cutting. They are off-loading onto municipalities. As a result, municipalities either will have reduced services or higher property taxes. With the changes they are bringing forward to the investor tax credit, it looks like we will be losing jobs, we will be losing investment, and venture capital will move to other places.

Similarly, we are losing millions of dollars in the television and film industry and the jobs that come with that. Again, government policies are driving investment out of the province, driving investment and jobs away from the province. Similarly, the tech sector will be heading somewhere else if we are not providing the right environment for investment. Fewer companies will then be interested in our research and development and innovations in terms of green infrastructure because government policies clearly show they are not there to support these kinds of initiatives.

That's on the one hand. There are many important programs like CIP, CFEP, and antiracism grants that were helping communities to address issues facing them. For some of those organizations, these grants were the only source of funding they were getting from government through the lottery fund. Oftentimes these organizations do organize casino nights where they volunteer for the funds they receive. Now through this bill those funds, those lottery funds, have been merged into general revenue, and none of those organizations know whether or not they will get funding going forward.

Again, they're also meddling with the cancer research fund. That's a very personal issue for so many Albertans, and we as Albertans have a vested interest in investing in prevention research, life-saving research when it comes to cancer.

Again, less funding for environmental protection and enhancement. There were two major initiatives, one in Calgary and one in Edmonton, the green line and the LRT in Edmonton. Those were the projects that would help us with many issues that are facing our cities. They will help us with traffic congestion issues. They will help us to take more cars off the roads and provide environment-friendly transportation. They are moving funds around from those projects as well, which means that these projects could get delayed.

Again, this bill is over 100 pages long and deals with dozens of acts. There's never enough time to deal with each change on an individual basis, how they will impact our constituents. All I'll say is that for the most part, when you go through these changes, one theme is common. It's taking money away from Albertans, it's taking services away from Albertans, it's cutting into the services that Albertans rely on, all in the name of a $4.7 billion no-jobs handout, that has not created a single job. In fact, we have lost 27,000 jobs under this government's watch. I think we saw 1,000 jobs lost just last week in Calgary, so clearly government policies are not working, and with the changes they are bringing through this piece of legislation, they are taking what Albertans have.

I will not be supporting this legislation. I believe the changes contained in this legislation will hurt Albertans. They will have an adverse impact on my constituents and Albertans across this province. These are the services that Albertans need and rely on. I think that nothing is safe from this government when it comes to cuts. For instance, when we became government, Alberta was the only province that didn't have an Alberta child tax benefit. In 2015 we brought forward that child tax benefit. If your income was below $43,295, you were able to get that benefit. Now they have changed that base threshold to $41,000, meaning that there will be families who will not be able to access that. Before, if it was 165,000 Albertan families who were able to access that benefit; with this change only 55,000 would be able to.

The Chair: Hon. members, is there anyone else wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 20, the Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019. You know, it's become incredibly clear over the two legislative sessions that we've had so far that in their election platform this government, the United Conservative Party of Alberta, misled Albertans. It was an utterly disingenuous document. In putting it forward, it was engaging in an elaborate shell game. It was playing hide and seek with the facts, concealing actual intent, and they were being a good deal less than forthright with Albertans. Indeed, I would say that that document was not honest with Albertans about what this government intended to do. Bill 20 is a prime example of that. You know, it's somewhat surprising because, Madam Chair, as I'm sure you're familiar, the UCP policy platform was 118 pages long – 118 pages. Indeed, this Premier and members of this government like to brag about the incredible detail that they put in their policy platform and what a massive mandate it gives to them, but in Bill 20 we have a number of pieces which they did not see fit to include.

So if they were so scrupulous, Madam Chair, in putting together this policy platform and ensuring that they wanted to let Albertans know everything they intended to do, then I can only assume that there was ignorance involved in the creation of that document as to actually what needed to be done and what they intended to do or there was a good deal of that policy platform itself that was incredibly dishonest.

Let's have a look here at what we have in Bill 20 and the incredible dishonesty that was contained in the UCP policy platform. Let's start with the cancellation of education and tuition tax credits. Now, Madam Chair, I recognize for many members of this Assembly, particularly those who've served in government before and many who perhaps are serving now as ministers, the times when they had to depend on a tuition tax credit are a bit of a distant memory for them, which perhaps makes it easier for them to foist this burden on students. They can file that away in the dusty catacombs of their memory, the times when they themselves took advantage of those very same credits to pay for their education, of when they took advantage of the significant subsidy that there was from government at the time and the, indeed, much lower proportion of tuition that students would have had to pay, so that they can excuse the fact that they are taking $20 million out of the pockets of Alberta students and their families this year alone.

Madam Chair, I can tell you that it was not that long ago that I returned to school to earn my bachelor of arts in professional communications. I can tell you that as I worked full-time and attended school full-time and took out lines of credit to cover the cost of my schooling, those tuition tax credits made a significant difference. They allowed me to upgrade my laptop when my old one was failing, and given that I was taking an online program, that was pretty significant for me. That is an expense I could not have afforded otherwise and would've had a significant impact on my education. But these government members are willing to callously disregard this burden that they're placing on students at the same time as they are, in fact, raising tuition rates for students across the province. They are making school more expensive and then taking away some of these small amounts from income tax credits that students had access to, to help defray the cost of their tuition and the cost of their books.

That was not in the UCP policy platform, Madam Chair. I dare say that if they had gone forward to their constituents or when they had sat down and met with postsecondary students and said that that was their intent of what they would want to do, that would not have been met with much good cheer or support, so they chose to allow their policy platform to be utterly dishonest with Albertans about their intent to do that. The average student will pay $600 a year more thanks to this government just from this change. That doesn't count the extra amounts they'll be paying in tuition.

The child and family benefit tax credit, Madam Chair: this government is merging what were two separate benefits that existed previously, the Alberta child benefit, which our government introduced, and the already existing Alberta family employment tax credit, which our government increased. We saw the impact of that over the time we were in government, with a 50 per cent reduction in child poverty in the province of Alberta. Now, that was not the work of those programs brought forward and invested in by our government alone; that was also the federal Canada child benefit program. But that had a significant impact on low-income families in the province of Alberta.

I would dare say that if we want to see a general improvement in our economy, then lifting people out of poverty is a very good way to do that. People, when they are lifted out of poverty, depend on fewer government services. They require fewer community supports. They are able to move into better paying jobs. Their health improves. It lowers costs in every area of our society. It improves what people are able to contribute.

Now, the thing is, Madam Chair, that there are challenges as people find that path out of poverty, right? It's kind of like if you're helping someone out who's stuck in the mud, so you're giving them that hand, you're reaching out, you're helping to lift them out. If you pull them halfway out and then let go, they're quite likely to fall back in.

What we have happening here, with the Alberta child benefit now being merged with the Alberta family employment tax credit to create the child and family benefit tax credit, is that on the surface it looks like a good thing in that it will increase benefits for the lowest income families by 15 per cent. To that, Madam Chair, I will indeed say kudos to this government. That is a respectable thing to do. That will help those families more and, indeed, will help contribute to moving that other 50 per cent out of child poverty. However, the new benefit phases the benefit out more quickly as incomes rise. As a result, there will be $40 million less overall going out to Alberta families because about 55,000 Alberta families are going to lose this benefit entirely.

Now, again, Madam Chair, one of the things we recognized as a government was that it's not enough to just get people part of the way out of poverty and then let them drop. You need to help get them completely back on their feet and up and rolling. That's why when we brought in the first actual provincial housing strategy that we had in the province of Alberta, one of the adjustments we made was allowing people to be able to stay in affordable housing, government-subsidized housing for longer. What we found and what we had heard back from our partners, stakeholders in the community is that when individuals were forced out too quickly, they did not land on their feet. In fact, they would have a more difficult time and oftentimes would end up falling back. Individuals needed greater support for a longer time to be able to amass the money they might need to make a down payment on a home or to buy that second vehicle that allows them to be a two-income household, or take other steps that, in fact, put them in a place of fiscal stability.

But what this government is doing is choosing to cut those families off sooner, much as this government is now choosing to cut off youth who turn 22, instead of at the age of 24. To save a few dollars, Madam Chair, this government is choosing to place people's hard-won progress in jeopardy. That's of no benefit to us as a society. That's of no benefit to us as an economy. It's of benefit, I suppose, to the government backfilling their $4.7 billion corporate no-jobs giveaway, but it is not prudent social policy. And it was not in the UCP policy platform, which so badly misled Albertans.

The Edmonton Social Planning Council noted this particular change. When I speak with community agencies and folks that are serving those who are living in or are on their way out of poverty, they are not encouraged by this government or that this policy is being brought forward without any consultation, without any prior notice, and indeed at a time when government is pulling back on funding for so many other things which help to address the issues that these families face, placing in jeopardy the great progress we have begun to make as a province. But you know, Madam Chair, the educational and tuition tax credits, the changes to the child and family benefit, family employment tax credit: the cherry on this government's sundae of disingenuity has to be their changes to personal income tax.

Now, thinking back to this past spring, Madam Chair, the Premier, then the Alberta opposition leader, told Global News that he would not be making any changes to personal income tax rates, okay? The article goes on to note that he said that the United Conservatives would delay any tax changes until the budget was balanced. Okay. Well, it seems quite clear now that that statement he made was far from straight with Albertans. Indeed, I would suggest that it was decidedly crooked. On hearing the Premier's remarks at that time, I think it would be fair for anyone listening to infer that any honest person making that kind of a claim would in fact mean that they had no intent of asking Albertans to pay more income tax. Government members like to talk about how plain-spoken they are and how plain-spoken folks in their area are. They like to talk about severely normal Albertans. I think if you presented any of those individuals with those two statements by the Premier, they would say: that is a man who is promising that I will not pay more income tax.

But in Bill 20 we see that was not in fact the case. At best this government is breaking that Premier's word and breaking the promise and at worst the Premier was being, shall I say, incredibly precious, rather smugly clever, utterly disingenuous with his choice of words. Of course, that's what we've seen with this government, Madam Chair. They do not speak plainly with Albertans. They do not deal honestly. We've seen that here in this House last week with their massive omnibus bill, Bill 22, which, again, contained many elements this government did not campaign on, had never introduced before, and which they rammed through at lightning speed without consultation or discussion with any Albertans. This government is not interested in speaking honestly with Albertans.

However much the government members may choose to sit here and try to convince themselves otherwise, that myself and my colleagues were such terrible people and did such a horrible job in government . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, my apologies. Can we just turn the volume down a little bit on the chatter? It's very loud. Thank you. Please proceed.

Mr. Shepherd: . . . that this level of disingenuity, that this level of antidemocracy, that these sorts of deceptive choices are justified.

Well, if government members want to choose to delude themselves in that, I suppose that is their choice, but I would note that when it comes to the question of personal income tax, the Premier, before he was the Premier, indeed, before he was the Official Opposition leader, was very clear about what he thought about deindexing income tax. To be clear, the government's own documents show exactly what this is, stating, "With the need to control spending, continuing to index these benefits is unaffordable for the time being. Alberta will resume indexing the tax system once economic and fiscal conditions can support it."

Clearly, they are changing income tax despite their promise, and they will be forcing roughly 2 million Albertans who pay income tax to pay more, $600 million more. The Premier, before he was Premier, before he was Leader of the Official Opposition, had made the promise that he would do no such thing, and made it quite clear what he thought of bracket creep, that it was a pernicious tax on inflation, an insidious tax on inflation, a hidden tax grab, a backdoor tax increase, a serious systemic flaw in our tax system, and that bracket creep constituted an annual tax increase.

So despite this government's repeated and utterly disingenuous claims that they are not raising income taxes for Albertans, Madam Chair, they are, in their Premier's own words, once again something that was not contained within the UCP policy platform, which was clearly, decidedly dishonest with Albertans. They were sold a false bill of goods. They were presented with a menu with many items they didn't know they were going to be served.

We've seen this time and time again on so many fronts with this government, Madam Chair. Indeed, Albertans weren't asking for $16,000 charter flights. They weren't asking for sweetheart deals in their energy war room. That wasn't in the platform either, much as all these other things which I am noting in this legislation were not present in that platform. They weren't told they would be served a side of entitlement and arrogance with a distinct flavour of the bygone Redford PC era. That was not included on the menu. Certainly, recently we've noticed a distinct bouquet of corruption wafting up from the actions of this government and the legislation it's choosing to bring forward, like this bill which we are debating here in the House today, Bill 20, the Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019. I can only wonder, Madam Chair, at the disregard in which this government holds Albertans and which each of these government members is choosing to make themselves a party to.

Again, they can sit and try to convince themselves that I am the deluded one and that I and all of my government colleagues are the awful, terrible people that perhaps they're being told behind closed doors that we are to help them stomach the passage of a bill like Bill 22. I can tell you that I speak to a pretty wide breadth of Albertans across this province, and while I recognize that there are Albertans that support this government and will continue to support these policies, even as disgusting as I may find some of them – the decisions of the government, to be clear, Madam Chair, because this government also likes to be rather disingenuous about how it quotes the Hansard, so I'll be very clear on that: the disgusting decisions being made by this government. I respect all Albertans regardless of what political choice they may choose to make.

Certainly, if they wish to take this government at their word, that is their right, but I can tell you that an increasing number of Albertans are unable to do that, not at a time when government is seizing their pensions without consultation, not at a time when this government breaks contracts with front-line workers, not at a time when this government fires the Election Commissioner.

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise tonight to speak to Bill 20, the Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019. I want to start by saying that I've spoken to this before in the House because this is something that – my community is reaching out to me to express concerns, whether it's parent groups, whether it's community leagues. Then, of course, being the culture critic – this is something that the film industry is very upset and concerned about. So I would just like to share some of the letters of concern that I've been receiving through my office, whether it's directly to me or whether I'm being CCed on a letter that perhaps has come to the attention of the Premier's office or other members that are in this Chamber. We have received a lot of correspondence.

One that I would like to highlight tonight is from the Edmonton Castle Downs Recreation Society, the CDRS. It's an organization that has compiled within it several community leagues that both myself, as the member representing the beautiful community of Edmonton-Castle Downs, and my colleague the Member for Edmonton-North West – we share community leagues that come together under this organization. I have to say, Madam Chair, that they are an absolutely essential part of north Edmonton. They do so much to give back to our community, and they are involved in so many aspects to ensure that the amazing community of Edmonton north is taken care of.

They wrote a letter, Madam Chair, and I would like to share that letter. It's addressed to the Premier. It says:

Community leagues are groups of neighbours who volunteer to organize events, activities, and programs in their local neighbourhood, who plan and build local amenities and who advocate for the services they need to make their community thrive. They represent and are supported by community members of all backgrounds, faiths, and political spectrums. Community leagues help people live active, connected lives, combatting social isolation and promoting inclusion and engagement.

The Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues, the EFCL, serves as an umbrella organization to connect, represent and enable community leagues to preserve and promote the community league way of life. The EFCL and Edmonton's 160 community leagues have serious concerns about funding cuts in Bill 20.

With Bill 20, the Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, the provincial government of Alberta plans to make changes to the lottery fund as well as cutting funding by more than a third for an essential grant project for community leagues, the community facility enhancement program, CFEP. This funding is what allows community leagues to build and maintain vital recreational infrastructure such as community halls, ice rinks, playgrounds, basketball and tennis courts. Because Edmonton's community leagues have their facilities on licensed land, they are currently restricted in the ways that they can fund raise for them. Many grants that community leagues are eligible for are matching grants, which match funds obtained through programs such as CFEP. This makes CFEP an essential source of funds.

Over half a billion dollars worth of community-based infrastructure exists thanks to community leagues, in partnership with the city of Edmonton and the province of Alberta. For close to 100 years Edmonton's community leagues have built hundreds of amenities, including 126 community league halls, 250 playgrounds, 119 outdoor community ice rinks, 55 water spray parks, 46 basketball court facilities, 25 community gardens, 24 outdoor tennis court facilities, 10 BMX-skateboard tracks.

Under Bill 20 significantly fewer community leagues will be able to access CFEP. This threatens not only community league facilities but also the programs and events they house and the collective community way of life. Without the ability to build and maintain community halls, community leagues will not be able to host programs and activities for all ages. Existing facilities in need of renovations to ensure accessibility will remain inaccessible to community members. Playgrounds will fall into disrepair and become unsafe for children to use. Some community leagues may need to cease operation as they lack funds to make critical investments in infrastructure.

Community leagues depend on CFEP funding for the ongoing repairs and renovations needed to ensure that these neighbourhood amenities provide vibrant and safe places for neighbours to gather. Cuts to this program will have a devastating and lasting impact on communities and neighbourhoods within the capital city.

We look forward to hearing from you on how you plan to help community leagues maintain their operations and preserve the community league way of life in Edmonton.

Sincerely,

Lynette Thompson, president of the CDRS.

Now, Madam Chair, this is something that I know not just the CDRS has been concerned about. These are conversations that are happening all across our communities. They rely heavily on the supports and resources and programming that community leagues offer.

I know that in my community of Castle Downs they host things like movie nights, where families can get together and watch movies and have popcorn and have snacks. They do things like cartoon breakfasts, where everybody gets in their jammies and they go sit in the community hall, watch cartoons, and eat cereal. We have skating in almost all of our communities, which is run by incredibly tireless volunteers that give up their time so that they can have kids actively participating in something that we thrive on here in Alberta as a recreational pastime, playing hockey, or just simply being out on the ice, skating.

There are several of the community leagues that, because of the generous donations of those in our community, offer skates to those that don't have skates. There are children and adults that will come out to Lorelei and skate for the first time. I know that I was so honoured to be able to help a three-year-old, Maggie, learn how to skate for the very first time. She was wobbly, and she looked a little bit like Bambi, but it was because the community league offered the arena and they offered the space to do that and the skates for kids to come and try that she was able to skate for the first time. She was cold, but she had fun. She had a smile on her face, and it was an incredible experience.

To know that there are so many families across this province that rely on the investment from our province, from our provincial government, to be able to maintain these facilities – it's very concerning to me that this is something that is being taken away. I know that we have Christmas celebrations in our community leagues. We have different Ramadan celebrations that are occurring. We have such an inclusive community in Edmonton-Castle Downs, where people of all ages, people of all different backgrounds – and it gives them an opportunity to come together as a community. That's their common interest in Edmonton and, I'm sure, across the entire province. The Castle Downs Rec Society strives to ensure that there is inclusivity in our community, and they work very, very hard at doing that, and they take incredible pride in our community leagues.

We have so many volunteers across Edmonton-Castle Downs that have been participating at the community league level for, sometimes, over 35, 40 years. They started when their children were young. They perhaps wanted to volunteer because their child was participating in a sports programs like soccer, so as a way to kind of reduce some of the fees, they volunteered, and now they have grandchildren and they are still involved in the community. Hearing that history and the passion that it brings, knowing that this bill is going to cut those monies that are so heavily relied on in our communities is just devastating.

Knowing that there are going to be facilities that might actually have to close down because there might be a major repair that's needed and they're no longer eligible for that funding – it's devastating to think that somewhere where you could just walk across the street to access your park or the ice rink might be gone.

It's something that's going to impact so many Albertans. I know that when we look at the importance of community, it's something that is really strong in Alberta. As a community we come together, and we support each other, and we take care of each other.

What I'm seeing happening right now, Madam Chair, is that so many across the province are coming together to fight what's happening with this current government. They're afraid, they're concerned, and they're rallying together. They're coming to the steps of this Legislature to speak against these drastic, senseless cuts when we know that it's because they put a $4.7 billion corporate tax giveaway without creating any jobs. It's at the expense of our communities. It's at the expense of those family members that so heavily rely on things that are happening right next door.

I know that as a mom I often spent time at the community leagues of my kids, whether they were taking cooking lessons – during spring break there were playschools that were offered through the community leagues. At my children's community league they have so many different fun things happening. We're looking at ways to engage adults in it, so one of the community leagues does a paint night, and it's very, very successful.

I know that our community league has reached out to the community of Edmonton-Castle Downs and Edmonton-North West to survey them about: what do they want? They're incredibly engaged in reaching out to community to find out what the needs of the community members are, and we heard loud and clear that they want activities. People want to be able to engage in their community leagues across Edmonton north. To be able to provide those services and to be able to rely on government for support is essential, and we're hearing that we're at risk of losing this. To me, that just is something that is so wrong. There are so many people that are organizing, coming together to speak out about it.

The other piece of this incredible, huge piece of legislation that I would also like to touch on is the film industry. As the culture critic we've heard, I've heard, my side of the House has heard incredible concern with what this government has been doing in terms of the impacts on the film industry. We've heard that they hadn't been consulted with prior to the budget coming out. They weren't consulted on this piece of legislation and the impact on them. We're hearing across the province that what's happening is that production and very, very talented people in the film industry are leaving the province of Alberta because of the decisions that this government has made.

When we're debating the amendment, which I appreciate, from the government to this bill, it speaks to the ability to actually open up applications. In the way it was written prior to the amendment, applications wouldn't be able to be processed until at least April 1, 2020. Industry was saying that that is absolutely going to collapse their industry here in the province. After some really well-attended meetings in Calgary and having had the estimates attended, film finally was able to get a meeting with the minister. The unfortunate thing is that this happened after Bill 20 had been introduced and after the budget had been introduced, which is too late when we're looking at ways that the industry needs to be supported.

We know that having a tax credit is absolutely essential, and we know that the industry wants more than that. They want the cap to be taken away on this. They've been asking for that, yet the amendment didn't include that piece of it. It included a small piece, which I was happy to support, but it's not enough. Part of this bill is still not doing enough and causing millions and millions to be lost in the industry in jobs and investment here in the province of Alberta. You hear industry folks talk with passion about what they do and how they want to stay in the province. They love where they live, they love doing content about Alberta, and they love the fact that we have such a beautiful landscape.

We have some of the most educated and professional crews in the world, Madam Chair, and knowing that decisions from this government are putting those projects at risk is devastating. Hearing people come to me and express concern that they might have to leave the province of Alberta because of the impact that this government is making on the film industry is devastating. They don't want to leave. They want to be able to stay here. But when you look next door, to our neighbours in B.C., who are thriving in their film industry, in order to have a job that pays for your family, that can put a roof over your head and food on your table, you have to go to where the jobs are. For a government that was saying that their number one goal is to create jobs in the province, they haven't created a stable environment for the film industry. People are leaving.

What that means is that millions of dollars that should be invested into this province are leaving, going to other provinces, and this isn't the only industry that the government's decisions are impacting. We know that people are coming to the government with solutions. They have ideas, and they're reaching out, expressing concerns. The government is not listening. We're listening, and we're paying attention, and we're going to continue to fight for what the industry wants. I know several of my colleagues on this side of the House have been fierce advocates here, talking about the importance of the film industry. They're meeting with stakeholders. They're meeting with those that have so many great ideas. We're pleading with the government to listen and to make change because once the film industry leaves the province of Alberta, it's very unlikely that they're going to come back.

I have a letter that I would like to read, Madam Chair, from an IATSE member. She writes:

Dear Ms. Goehring,

Thank-you for coming to the ASIAC meeting this afternoon.

I am a member of IATSE 212, and work in the Costume department.

It is positive to see that the Film Industry has been moved to the Economic Development, Trade & Tourism Ministry, and that the government has decided to move towards the Tax Incentive instead of the grant system, as we are a business. I am however puzzled, as to why the incentive was capped. According to Damian Petti, president of IATSE 212, the current $45 million cap generates 12-15 projects with budgets over $3 million, for over $300 million in production. Dropping the annual cap down to $15 million would only incentivize 2 or 3 large projects and we would lose several hundred million dollars' worth of production. Unlike in other industries, this tax rebate is paid out 1 year after the production has finished, not up front. The product is already delivered, the money is spent, so there isn't any risk to the Government with this investment.

The film industry has real economic benefits in that the money is spent in the community. In 2014, I worked on a large historical TV Mini-Series. I worked as a buyer in the Costume Department and I was 1 of 6 people buying for our department. At the height of production I was spending around $30,000 weekly at local businesses. I was 1 person in 1 department. Many of the vendors were small businesses, who were in turn able to continue to employ staff. This is one small aspect of the monies spent on a production. I should also mention that due to the nature of the projects we attract, we are often filming all over the province. Economic benefits reach across this province, from hotels and catering, local services such as porta-potties and tent rentals, antique shops and lumber yards, and so on. I have been on several productions where the director has opened up a tab at the local coffee shop and told the crew to have a coffee on them. When you have crews on set of 200+, this is a nice little payday for the local businesses. It all adds up.

On a personal note, since becoming a member in the Union in 2014, I have been able to qualify for a mortgage and purchase a little townhouse. Perhaps the biggest ramification of the exodus of film productions for myself, is that when I need to renew my mortgage I will no longer qualify and will lose my housing. I am born and raised in Alberta, and have parents in their 70's and 80's. I would like to be able to spend their last years in the same city as them, not be forced to move elsewhere.

I find it frustrating that, with the current economic climate in Alberta, and the Government's own stated desire to diversify economically, they fail to see this for the economic boon this could be. Obviously work needs to happen in other areas of the economy (oil and gas, agriculture), but the Film Industry could take some pressure off the Province, in the form of positive cash flow, while work is done to begin to resolve these other areas.

In 2017/18, the total volume of film and television production in Alberta was $255 million, while in BC was $3.5 Billion and Ontario was $2.8 billion. While we will probably never be at the level of Vancouver, I just don't understand why, in this economy . . .

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I just have a couple of moments here to say a few words around Bill 20. I mean, indeed, there are so many different pieces to this bill that it's worth while to take some separation, to separate the comments, to perhaps focus on one topic at a time. The topic that I would like to just say a few words about is the change to the personal income tax brackets that this Bill 20 is proposing, which is to allow what is known as bracket creep to take place in personal income tax here in the province of Alberta. This is, by the government's own estimation, going to cost Alberta taxpayers about $600 million over the term.

You know, there are about 2 million Albertans who pay income tax in any given year here in the province of Alberta, and taking off the indexation of taxes is a significant increase in personal income tax in this budget. I know that a lot of the UCP strategy over these last few weeks is to deny the existence of these things in the budget, but here it is in black and white, very clear, that the deindexation of taxation will cost Alberta taxpayers about $600 million.

You know, this is one of these slow-burn things, Madam Chair, because it takes place over time. People do their taxes, and you slowly come to realize over time that "Hey, our taxes have gone up" and that they've gone up quite significantly over time. I mean, certainly, you know, it's fair that people pay taxes for the goods and services that we provide on a municipal level, on a provincial level, and on a federal level, but this whole idea of reducing taxes, that the UCP seems to like to run on, is absolutely not true. Here in this bill that we're debating right now is an increase to personal income taxes for all Albertans, starting now, as soon as this gets passed. I mean, I find this to be disingenuous. I find it to be certainly difficult for people, and they need to get their head around it.

You know, it affects not just all Albertans, but I think it also puts pressure on other levels of government because, of course, there's only one taxpayer, Madam Chair, and now taking more money from that single taxpayer for this provincial level of governance also puts pressures on other levels of government, specifically municipalities, and on the responsibilities and the expectations that are being put on them with reduced budgets from the same Bill 20 as well.

You know, I find it to be quite surprising, Madam Chair, if you look at this. Of course, our Premier was previously a cabinet member and in opposition in the national government, and he spoke long and very eloquently, when he was in the federal government, about how dishonest it is to deindex taxation on a personal level. But obviously he was learning these tricks very well because now he's imported this idea from Ottawa, turned it upside down, and did this very thing to Albertans in this budget, increasing their personal income taxes by deindexing the tax brackets that are used. People call it a tax creep, right? Yeah, I think it's certainly a tax creep, and it's creepy, too, quite frankly, that someone would be so disingenuous as to suggest that they are lowering taxes or not going to increase people's taxes and, lo and behold, there it is.

I'm curious to know, Madam Chair, as people travel around and receive feedback from their constituents across the province, how they manage to sell this one, that this UCP government is increasing your personal income taxes with Bill 20 by deindexing tax brackets. I'm sure that people will bring it up because, you know, it flies in the face of all the rhetoric and language that we heard for so many months and years from the same government, talking about how you want to decrease taxes and liberate people's taxes or whatever language they like to use, and here you see the very opposite. They're decreasing taxes for corporate income tax, certainly for profitable corporations, to the tune of $4.7 billion. That puts a big hole in this provincial budget.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. The Committee of the Whole will be recessed until 7:30 this evening.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Please be seated. I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 25 Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? I see the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika has risen.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that when the committee rises, it report progress on Bill 20.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I just want to confirm with regard to your request to rise and report Bill 20: because Bill 25 has been put under consideration, we will have to rise and report both. Is that your intention?

Mr. Schow: Then in that case, Mr. Chair, I withdraw that motion at the moment.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered with regard to Bill 25? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has risen.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate you recognizing me this evening to further the discussion around Bill 25, the Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019, one of several pieces of omnibus legislation that we've seen come through this Assembly in this session alone, something, of course, that the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction was very firmly against, that kind of a practice. Yet here we are with a bill in front of us that sees 13 different changes across six different ministries, and arguably, I would say, most of it is not really red tape reduction. It's more like, you know, statutes amendments that could have been done throughout different ministries. It seems like a little bit of a reach just to maybe, potentially justify the $10 million that taxpayers are going to pay over the next four years for this ministry for decisions that are very clearly being made by many, many of the ministries all by themselves.

Nonetheless, we do find ourselves here, so for the moment I would like to key in on just a couple of items with regard to this bill. The first one is around the Safety Codes Act. What that is bringing forward is allowing wood buildings to be higher than six storeys. Of course, we understand that this may be bringing this in line with federal regulation, but of course we have heard that there are, potentially, regulations that'll be coming into force which may allow structures made of wood up to 12 storeys. I know that the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview had mentioned earlier, in second reading, that this would be a great opportunity for our forestry industry to be able to expand within the province, supplying materials to build these structures. I would certainly agree that that is an opportunity.

But I think what I really want to focus on here, which I really wish had maybe been mentioned within this, is the component around safety, Mr. Chair. When we're looking at building some of these structures, you know, we look at the types of standards so that in the event of an evacuation, can people egress from these buildings quickly, easily, safely? Certainly, in the event of fire you don't want to have things like a collapse while people are trying to get out. One of the components that seems to have been missed throughout the conversation – and this is widely just around building codes as a whole – is that firefighters have to go into these buildings to try to put them out. While we factor in the numbers for how long it will take people to get out, we tend to forget about the amount of time it's going to take for them to get on-site, to get into these buildings, and then put these fires out before we have any kind of structural collapses.

You know, given the fact that in many other components of other bills that have come before this House across this session, we've clearly seen that there has been very little to maybe almost even no consultation with stakeholders. I would suggest that with code changes of this magnitude we ensure that our first responders – our firefighters, our ambulance, our police – are able to safely get into these buildings to do their jobs before they come down, a very, very important component. I'm hoping that that will be very, very seriously considered, bringing those voices to the table, when we're looking at further expanding what will ultimately be the regulations around the safety code changes.

Again, you know, is this necessarily red tape reduction? I think that for the purposes of discussion here this evening, maybe I'll give the minister this one for tonight on this topic here.

The other section that I wanted to bring up, which I had started making comments on earlier and unfortunately ran out of time, was around some of the changes under the Municipal Government Act. There were some concerns from the RMA around some of the ICFs that they currently have on the go. Some municipalities have as many as 15, and with the timelines that we have here around getting these completed by April 1, 2020, there's a very, very high level of concern around those. I think that, you know, maybe the wisdom of this House might be able to prevail, and we would have the opportunity to maybe make those pressures a little bit less around that.

With that, Mr. Chair, I do have an amendment to present around that, and I will wait for your instructions once you get them.

The Deputy Chair: I'm going to let the pages run around to drop it off for everybody. Given the amendment you can go ahead and read it into the record right now.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Obviously, I would propose to move that Bill 25, the Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019, be amended in section 10 by striking out, "April 1, 2020" wherever it occurs and substituting "April 1, 2021."

The Deputy Chair: Just going forward, this amendment will be referred to as A1.

If the hon. member would like to continue his comments, please feel free.

7:40

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate that. In my quick discussions around that component with the RMA, there was a little bit of concern around being able to complete some of the outstanding work that the rural municipalities have on the go right now, with some municipalities having as many as 15 of these ICFs remaining. There's some concern that they're not able to get that work completed.

But also one of the things that I managed to have a quick discussion on: they had surveyed their membership specifically around, you know, Bill 25, some of the implications that it has for them. This was one of the things that they had identified. They had received responses from 46 of their 69 municipalities, which is approximately 67 per cent of their entire membership. What they noted, Mr. Chair, was that approximately 41 per cent of their respondents were either not so confident or not at all confident that they will be able to complete all the required ICFs prior to this deadline. They noted that there was a lack of time and capacity as the largest challenge for completing some of these.

The second-largest challenge was related to negotiating, of course, with their neighbours and some uncertainty around the municipal budgets on fulfilling cost-sharing commitments. Of course, I guess we can always have a discussion around the great many uncertainties that have been created around this budget that the government has introduced, but this is certainly something that they identified as being part of it.

Approximately 59 per cent of the respondents identified a timeline extension as the most helpful action that the government of Alberta could take to support municipalities in completing ICFs. I guess the last thing that I will note: the capacity challenges associated with completing many agreements in a short timeline are causing significant financial and workload issues for rural municipalities.

What I would suggest that we do is to amend this timeline by simply one year, because what will happen is that if they're not able to complete these ICFs in the required time, it's then going to go to arbitration. It will then take as much as a year to complete those arbitrations. It would probably be just simpler to extend the timeline by the one year, let them complete these ICFs, and then just simply move on with the business of the day.

It is my hope that members across the aisle will support this. Basically, it's a friendly amendment, almost, Mr. Chair, allowing the RMA an appropriate amount of time to complete all of these pieces of work that they need to do and get on with the business of serving their constituents of their municipality.

With that, I will take my seat, Mr. Chair. Hopefully, we'll get some feedback around this, a little bit.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any hon. members looking to speak to A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has risen.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the ICFs, the intermunicipal collaboration frameworks, the amendment that's on the floor, I think, makes good sense in that it was surveyed or canvassed with an organization that is supporting many of these municipalities in trying to complete them. It's difficult, time-consuming. I do note that throughout the bill and the changes to the proposed bill that'll affect the MGA, there are things that make it easier for municipalities, but this one remains difficult. The ICFs are challenging in that they need to get their own staff, perhaps hire other staff, contractors, to do the work that their own staff may not have expertise in. As the mover has said, there are a number of these municipalities that have numerous, numerous frameworks that they have to put in place.

So giving them another year from the anticipated date when this should be done is good. They probably will be coming back to their minister and asking for more time, and on an individual basis the minister will look at perhaps extending. But a blanket extension like this really provides them with the time and opportunity that they need to do a good job and be able to hand them in on the date that is anticipated that they hand them in, which is now just one year after.

I think that there's good sense here. I don't know if the member spoke directly to the RMA individuals. I know that he was quoting from their website and the information that he was able to obtain and did speak with representatives of RMA. They identified this as something that would be particularly helpful.

I just would say that one of the challenges that I've been hearing, with regard to this new government and their consultation with municipalities, is that – and we saw it in a previous bill that was brought here, Bill 7, Municipal Government (Property Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019, in the springtime, and there was a discussion about how that would make life better because municipalities could look at attracting businesses and give them up to 15 years of deferment. The consultation, I think, in that case was woefully inadequate. None of the municipalities were asking for that. They didn't put their hand up and say: this is what we need to get ourselves under way. It was really something brought forward from the other side, an ideological perspective, not unlike the $4.7 billion tax giveaway to big, wealthy corporations.

This is something that's different. This is something that they are asking for and do wish to see put into place so that they can do the job that they want to do, which is to improve their working relationships, their sharing of services with other municipalities on their boundaries. I would hope that members opposite would give opportunity to support this amendment, which is a reasoned one. I'm hopeful.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members looking to speak to amendment A1? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. I will keep my comments brief because I think that both of the members who have spoken before me have spoken well. Speaking to the government caucus through you, Mr. Chair, I just want to say: please consider this not an opposition amendment but, rather, an RMA amendment, because we are simply listening to feedback that they've communicated to us and, I imagine, directly to the government caucus as well.

It's a very straightforward amendment, very clear to understand. It doesn't prevent the government's intentions. This is really a one-year delay as requested by RMA. I really just wanted to stand up and suggest that this be considered an RMA amendment if that might help the government in considering it. I'd be very interested to hear what the minister responsible thinks of this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on this amendment? I see the hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction has risen.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I do appreciate the hon. member's amendment, and I agree with him that it's certainly something that municipalities have talked to, many on our side as well, saying that this is very difficult. Some of them have, you know, 12 to 14 of these ICFs that they have to do.

I actually commend the member for bringing forward the amendment. One thing I would say, though, is that what's interesting is that this is actually your doing. These timelines were actually created under the NDP, so I'm not sure what has changed other than the fact that you're not the government anymore. I'm not sure, Mr. Chair, why all of a sudden now there's such an interest in having this pushed back when in reality as the government there was no interest. There was always continual pushing for the 2020 date. I'm not exactly sure what has happened other than the fact that they have become opposition and they're in opposition to the bill, which they have already said.

Mr. Chair, we will not be accepting this. I recommend to the members on our side that we do not accept this. I think it's important to make sure that these timelines are met where we can, and for those communities that are struggling, I think that the Minister of Municipal Affairs can try to work with them in that spirit.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members looking to speak to amendment A1?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Moving back to Bill 25 proper, are there any hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 25? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has risen.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you again, Mr. Chair. I appreciate that. It's unfortunate. You know, this was again something that the RMA was looking for. I guess what we're going to end up doing is that should they not be able to complete these, we'll be going through the arbitration process, creating a whole bunch of red tape, which your ministry is supposed to reduce.

But on the whole with Bill 25, Mr. Chair, I'm not seeing a whole lot of red tape reduction around this. I mean, you know, we're supposed to be trying to create jobs. We're supposed to be trying to grow the economy. Yet when we are looking at things like how museums are supposed to store their artwork, I don't see how that's creating jobs and growing the economy.

I've also tried to reach out to the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors. One of the suggestions within this bill is to remove the references to chiropractic services. You know, any time we potentially look at removing language without consultation – and that was the one thing that I was very, very clear, that was communicated to me when I initially had the chance to speak with the association, was that they only found out about these changes when it was announced. So there was no discussion with them about how this may or may not affect them. Certainly, I remember the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction going on at length during the 29th Legislature about how consultation was never happening with the former government, yet here we are, you know, not practising what we preach essentially. I think it's a little bit disingenuous when you do those kinds of things.

I would, of course, like to make a few other comments around changes to the forestry act. Again, I heard members during the last Legislature, very concerned about giving yet more powers to the minister directly. I don't know if that's necessarily going to be a bad thing. Allowing forestry management agreements to move a lot faster may prove to be a good thing. But, again, you know, it always seems to be coming back, Mr. Chair, when we're talking about some of the things that we're doing based on some of the things that we've either said in the past or have done in the past that are counterproductive to those kinds of things. So when I hear things like, "Well, we can't be giving more powers to a minister," yet we're about to give more powers to a minister, it's just very, very conflicting information.

We kind of went quite a length during the second reading of this. It just seems to be a bill that's a bit of a – I think one of the members mentioned that it was a bit of a make-work project, trying to justify to Albertans why they need to pay $10 million over the next four years for this ministry to either make decisions or assist in decisions that, clearly, other ministries are already making all by themselves. I would suggest that if we're looking at things like folding the Election Commissioner into the Chief Electoral Officer's office so we can save ourselves a million dollars, I mean, I would suggest to the government that I could save you $10 million. Let the decisions that are already being made around red tape remain within the ministries, and maybe take that $10 million and give it to AISH recipients.

With that, I look forward to some of the rest of the debate here this evening in Committee of the Whole on Bill 25. At this time I don't feel that I can support this bill going forward.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 25? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has risen.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I rise to make a few brief comments with respect to Bill 25. Again we're dealing with a fairly long bill here. I definitely don't object to everything in it. There are certainly some things, I think, that are worth consideration. I will say that I question deeply whether we need $10 million and a minister to do this work. I do believe that this work can be done within ministries, and in fact I think we heard several times in estimates that ministries were perfectly capable of doing this work on their own. I feel like perhaps having a bill and having a minister and having a ministry is a bit, shall we say, of political theatre, if you will. I think that that's a bit sad.

You know, I think one of the things, perhaps naively, that I felt when I got into politics initially was that I hoped to have some honest conversations with the electorate. I hoped to have some real conversations about real issues that maybe occurred at a deeper and broader and more fulsome level than some of the conversation we've had before. I feel like red tape reduction is, in my view, one of the worst examples of that. It's something that is said. There's no operational definition. No one really knows what it means. It's kind of a thing that people nod along to, but they don't really know what, necessarily, we're talking about.

Mr. Chair, I absolutely think it's a good idea to do things as efficiently as possible, and certainly I took that to heart when I myself was a minister. There were tons of things we did. We implemented criminal e-file, which was a big change. We did a lot of changes to the way certain court processes worked. We made changes to the way enforcement worked; for instance, ensuring that individuals were not having warrants issued for their arrest for C-Train tickets. That saved an enormous amount of time on the part of court clerks, in addition to ensuring that individuals were not being put in jail for C-Train tickets, which is really, I think, not the best use of those jail facilities.

Certainly, there were things that were done in that direction. It's something that I think I was deeply committed to and that I think my colleagues were deeply committed to. This is probably very inside, but, of course, your Minister of Justice generally will chair the Legislative Review Committee, so I saw a lot of regulations that came before me, and I was able to witness a number of different things that were done to ensure that we made processes easier for different individuals. Obviously, the court things are the ones that I'm most familiar with, but there was certainly a lot done by my hon. colleague, now the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, who worked very diligently to ensure that there was a one-stop shop.

I mean, we created the ministry of economic development and trade, and that gave businesses a place to go. We certainly heard sort of resoundingly positive opinions on that, because they knew where to go to bring their issues and to bring their concerns and to have conversations about things.

I think that overall in terms of finding efficiencies, I'm absolutely in favour of that. I feel that most of the things in this bill are a bit of window dressing. You know, it's a bit of a political communications act, and I don't know if it's the best use of our time in this House or the best use of the public's understanding. You know, we're dealing with a budget that significantly changes direction. We're dealing with a number of gigantic omnibus bills, so I think that, you know, those things are all concerns for me.

With that, I think, Mr. Chair, that I will end my comments because I certainly know that my hon. colleague has a few more comments to make, so I will resume my place and allow him to make those comments.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is rising to speak.

Member Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You know, just looking at some of the proposed changes again in this act, I can tell you that this bill – and, of course, it covers a wide range of things, from intermunicipal collaboration frameworks to intermunicipal development plans to arbitration, which is a really long section in here. It would be really great to hear from the associate minister about why such a substantive, robust section on arbitration is necessary. You know, we proposed giving a little more time to municipalities around the province who are doing ICFs so that they wouldn't necessarily have to involve themselves in arbitration – they could work things out on their own – but that was turned down.

Another thing that's in here substantively is joint-use sites. But I do just want to point out one area that I think is good in relation to municipalities, certainly the ones that are trying to save money, and that's bylaws for sending certain documents electronically – that's under section 608 on page 18 – so it gives a little more flexibility to municipalities to do those things.

As we know, many, many, many people engage with, say, doctors, municipalities, universities, their own local community association bodies electronically, and they're kind of taking those steps to facilitate their contact with all these areas. Certainly, municipalities want to be on the forefront of that as well, to (a) save money, to (b) quicken the connection between themselves and citizens or ratepayers or taxpayers, property owners. The fact that this section has been added – and it looks to give councils the bylaw establishment abilities to send notices under electronic means, where before, I remember, we used to have to send out notices by Canada Post. It takes time, and it's a lot of money, as we all know, on our ad mail in elections, that we were all a part of just recently and in the past.

You know, of all the things that are in here, that seems to be one that's red tape reduction cost savings for municipalities throughout the province. That's a good one. You get a red mark for that. The rest, I think, soften some provisions, and they make, it seems to me, things more onerous for municipalities, particularly in the area of arbitration, and I'm not supportive of those.

Overall, I think that this omnibus bill is another unfortunate way of presenting something to this House, and it does not to me look like there's $10 million in savings with regard to the presentation here. I know that the associate minister in his presentation earlier said that there are, I think, six reasons why this is a good thing to support, but I think that what I see in here is a little bit more flexibility with regard to how documents can be shipped. That's good. The rest of it, I think, needs to go back to the drawing board.

Both of the large associations that deal with municipalities have some concerns with this bill, and I just think generally that the government is not in the mood of consulting with municipalities. They certainly didn't do that around Bill 7, that was in the spring, because no one that I know of wanted that bill to go through at the municipal level, but it went through nonetheless.

Those are my comments, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 25?

Seeing none, I am prepared to ask the question. Are you ready for the question on Bill 25, Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 25 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Any opposed? Carried.

Bill 27

Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has risen.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise this evening to speak to Bill 27, moved by the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. I'm delighted to be able to ask, I hope, questions that the minister might be able to help me understand around Bill 27. In my review of this piece of legislation there seem to be quite a number of changes to the justice system contained within. There are a few different acts that are modified: the Petty Trespass Act, Limitations Act, Occupiers' Liability Act.

The question that I wanted to ask in Committee of the Whole, to the minister and/or any government member who would be willing to explain it to me, is that in Bill 27 there's something happening that seems to be unusual or different than other legislation that I have worked on, in that in two sections – the Limitations Act, section 5.2(4); and the Occupiers' Liability Act – there are references to the date of January 1, 2018, which from my reading I think means that these changes are essentially retroactive back to that date. Now, the reason that I'm wondering about this is because very often – most often and almost entirely, in my experience – legislation is from the date going forward. I'm wondering just about unintended consequences.

Then I did some quick googling because I find the Internet very helpful, especially when we're dealing with legal things. My reading of the legal and practical implications of retroactive legislation seems to indicate that it's something used very, very cautiously because the Charter of Rights and Freedoms has section 11(g), specific to retroactive offences. Because retroactive legislation, from my reading, appears to arise infrequently, it appears to be and many times can be considered controversial. I saw language – this is more lawyer talk – in one article that said: it was against the principles of fundamental justice to have retroactive laws. I'm just quoting things that I read.

Given the past practices of this House and the potential for unintended consequences I'm concerned specifically about those two sections. I wanted to kind of ask those as questions to kick off my Committee of the Whole comments on Bill 27.

Thank you.

Mr. Schweitzer: When it comes to the date being effective January 1, 2018, typically speaking, for limitation periods there's about a two-year window to bring forward a claim, so the idea with getting this bill proclaimed would be to go back and make sure that claims as they come forward – it distinguishes any potential claims that could be brought. Going back to January 1, 2018, just gives clarity, for people that are law-abiding Albertans, that they won't be facing these claims, because typically speaking you have to bring a claim within two years of it arising. That's the intention of going back to January 1, 2018. We did research it with our department to make sure that that was appropriate in the circumstances, and there's precedent to be able to do that as it relates particularly to tort claims.

8:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members looking to speak to Bill 27? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has risen.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you very much to the minister for rising to respond to the concern raised around those dates. Now, in second reading my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Manning asked a number of questions. It is on her behalf that at this point I would like to move an amendment touching on the sections we were just discussing, and then I will continue to speak to it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. I would just ask that you read it into the record for us.

Going forward, this amendment will be referred to as A1.

Please feel free to continue with your comments.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. On behalf of the MLA for Edmonton-Manning I move that Bill 27, Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019, be amended as follows: (a) in section 1(2) in the proposed section 5.2 by striking out subsection (4); and (b) in section 2(2) in the proposed section 12 by striking out subsection (6).

The amendment touches on exactly the section that we were just having a quick conversation about. The reason for the amendment is the strong concern about introducing that retroactivity for the changes to the Limitations Act as well as the changes to the Occupiers' Liability Act.

Although the minister has spoken to clarity for Albertans, I'm concerned that by not having legislation that is on a go-forward basis, it would introduce confusion as well as introduce, potentially, discussions around what I found in researching retroactive legislation, the fact that similar provisions to our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 11(g), which speaks specifically to retroactive offences, exist in international, regional, and comparative law instruments. Based on my understanding of this piece of legislation and practice within legislating the law, putting in retroactivity to things that have to do with criminal offences appears to be incredibly unusual. I'm very concerned, especially when we start talking about something that – my concern might be that it could become a Charter challenge, given the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 11(g), and, generally speaking, just past practice.

Many of the colleagues who have been in the Chamber for a while will understand the phrase "unintended consequences," the potential for unintended consequences when you're putting in these changes and essentially changing the law and retroactively applying it back to January 1, 2018. The Member for Edmonton-Manning has proposed this amendment. I support the amendment and am pleased to move it on her behalf. What Bill 27 seems to be doing in these particular sections is highly unusual and could have negative consequences or unintended consequences that we want to protect against. I appreciate the opportunity to hear from the minister on this, but I still think that the most prudent course of action would be to accept this amendment and to not have that retroactivity.

Again I will say that I appreciate the minister speaking to give a brief explanation, but in what he said there wasn't something compelling or something that made it seem like this retroactivity was necessary or why this was important and good for citizens and for Alberta going forward. For those reasons, I will be supporting this amendment. I think it's fairly clear in what it's trying to do, and that is simply that the legislation that we pass in this Chamber does not do something unusual, does not to something that might be counter to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and force the government of Alberta or other parties to have to challenge this through the court system, which so often happens when legislation is not refined to the right degree.

With that, I will end my comments and urge all members to support my amendment to Bill 27. I will also be eagerly listening for additional debate on this amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

We are on amendment A1. Are there any hon. members looking to speak to this amendment?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are moving back to the original Bill 27. Are there any members looking to speak to this? I see the hon. Member for Highwood has risen to speak.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Chair. Today it's a great honour for me to be able to speak to Bill 27, Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019. This bill, I believe, if passed, will strengthen protections for law-abiding Albertans and their properties. I believe that this bill is a crucial step in tackling the complex and vast issue of rural crime here in Alberta. In our election platform we made the promise to Albertans that we would tackle rural crime. Albertans gave us an overwhelming mandate supporting that platform. Bill 27 helps us to fulfill one part of that promise to Albertans.

We saw rural crime rates skyrocket under the previous NDP government. When the Official Opposition wants to talk about statistics that show a downward trend in rural crime, I'll be quite clear: rural crime is still on the rise. You only have to walk out into the rural communities right now and listen to the residents to understand that.

People just aren't reporting anymore. They're frustrated and losing faith in the system. When Maclean's released their annual Canada's Most Dangerous Places 2019, Alberta had seven places ranked in the top 10. This report was just a small glimpse into some of the problems that Albertans are facing in rural communities right now, today. I can't stress this enough: Albertans deserve to feel safe in their own homes.

This bill will increase the fines issued to criminals that trespass onto law-abiding citizens' property through amendments to the trespass laws. This includes increases to maximum fines of trespassing, with fines up to $10,000 for a first offence and up to $25,000 for subsequent offences, as well as possible prison time of up to six months. I'll explain why this is important. The strategy of criminals when they're doing these crimes is to send people out to trespass. They case properties, they record what's there to be stolen, and they leave. So trespassing is a major issue. This is a major problem, and we have to have the fines behind this to give support to our enforcement to be able to make it that this is not work they're going to continue to do. We have to get this principal step in how they do this crime – we have to find a way to be able to stop this.

If this bill is passed, it will also introduce amendments to the Occupiers' Liability Act that will better protect law-abiding citizens. I want to be clear about this: law-abiding citizens. Mr. Chair, I cannot stress how important this part of the bill is not only to the residents of Highwood but to every single resident in Alberta. It's absurd to think that any innocent, hard-working, and honest taxpayer resident can be revictimized by the same criminals who break the law, steal their property, and trespass on their land.

Mr. Chair, when I mentioned rural crime, a couple of the first words that always come to my mind will always be Eddie Maurice. His story has shone a light on the issues that exist in our justice system and some of the gaps that need to be filled. An unfortunate reality in many rural communities across Alberta is that these law-abiding citizens have been impacted by what is happening, and they can be impacted in the same way by what's going on to Eddie and Jessica Maurice. This is a story that resonates with all of us. I've gotten to know Eddie and Jessica Maurice, the impact of their story, what has happened to them, two very hard-working people in this province. What is happening to them and what has happened to them in the past has affected every part of their life: their work, their family, the anxiety that's going on in their lives.

This is critical – critical – that we continue to support our rural residents and find ways to prevent this from happening and make sure we actually, finally take a stand and show rural residents that we do support them. This is a story many Albertans know and they understand quite well. Many individuals wonder themselves what they would do if they were in the same situation. They can relate to this. Rural residents are concerned, over and over, about how easily this could be them. They could be in this situation – they could be Eddie Maurice, they could be Jessica Maurice going through this – that is happening right now. Mr. Chair, our rural residents need our support. Support like this bill makes common-sense changes to help bend the curve on rural crime. This bill sends a clear message to criminals, and my hope is that we'll also provide a beacon of hope for our rural residents.

After four years of being ignored, for once they finally have a government that is here to listen, understand them, and truly support them. For four years rural crime was not properly addressed. The opposition can talk all they want about their increase to funding, some small changes they made, but they never set foot in my riding. They never talked to the residents out there. They never listened to their stories, and I have many more than just Eddie and Jessica Maurice. This government represents all rural areas in these seats over here, and we also have a minister that has travelled across this province and worked exceptionally hard, putting himself in front of everybody here in Alberta to hear these very difficult stories, hear the frustration that is here, that is now, and that is today.

The problem of rural crime has reached a boiling point. Rural Albertans don't feel safe anymore in their homes or on their property. Our government understands the anxiety and the trauma that have come from rural crime all across Alberta. During the campaign trail, over and over I knocked on every single rural door that I could, listened to as many rural residents as I possibly could. I've attended every rural crime town hall meeting. The biggest issue I heard, aside from jobs and the economy, was always rural crime. Many residents of Highwood have been calling rural crime basically a crisis, a crisis that needs to be dealt with, and it needs to be addressed seriously. I agree with that statement. This is a crisis.

I assured voters that this will be one of the priorities that a United Conservative government would tackle if elected. That is why I stand here today in support of Bill 27, the Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019. I made a promise to my residents during the campaign, and I want to be clear that this bill is only just the start. This government is committed to a continued effort to address this issue until rural residents once again will finally feel safe in their own homes.

I will always stand up for my community and all of the rural residents across all of Alberta. I will always be there to stand in front of them, listen, and hear their concerns. I want to continue to be a strong voice on this, and I want everybody to know, not just in my riding but across Alberta, that I'll continue to stand up in this House and fight for rural Alberta when it comes to the rural crime issue.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for allowing me this opportunity to speak to this very critical, important bill. I hope everyone in this House supports it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has risen to speak.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am pleased to rise this evening to speak to Bill 27. I'd like the House, all members on all sides of the House, to take a moment and listen to a short story, that I'll relay to you, with respect to a situation that I encountered a few years ago. I actually lived in rural Alberta for a while. I had an acreage property that was west of Edmonton, and I quite enjoyed it. I was there with my young family, three children and my spouse then, about 25 years ago. Every time that I have heard about Bill 27 when it's come before the House or when it was first introduced, I always harken back to the night I'm about to describe to members here in the House, that I won't ever forget. It leads me to question exactly what an individual member of this Legislature would do or would have done or would consider would be the right action to have taken. What if it had turned out differently?

What I'm speaking about, Mr. Chair, is a night in the dead of winter when everybody was asleep, about 3 o'clock in the morning, and I heard an ungodly crash. It sounded like somebody had actually come through the patio door. I was up like a bolt and raced downstairs with a knife in one hand and a tire billy in the other, yelling and screaming at whoever might be in the house to get the hell out or face the consequences, ready to defend my family with my life, if necessary. I was convinced that somebody was in the house.

I'm wondering exactly what would have been a defensible action in my case if indeed there was an intruder in the house. What it turned out to be was that above the fireplace we had a wind chime screwed into the wood facing. The wood had dried out, and the screw gave way, and the metal wind chime had fallen down onto the brick hearth. It sounded exactly like the patio window had been crashed into. There I was, standing in the middle of the family room on the main floor, ready to defend my family. It turned out, of course, that there was no intruder. Certainly, sir, I was convinced that there was. You know, had it turned out to be a drunken neighbour or someone seeking immediate help after a road accident and I killed him, then what? Or if I had shot them, what should happen to me then? What consequences there? Would I be absolved of any responsibility?

This is a situation that I think that we need to really take a hold of and something that I certainly think about whenever I've thought about Bill 27 and the legislation being proposed. It was a situation that was very real to me that cold winter night. I often think: back then, what circumstances would have allowed me to be absolved of responsibility had I actually used deadly force and killed somebody? Should I be absolved of responsibility? I mean, it's an issue that deserves some serious thought. We're talking about a serious issue with somebody coming onto somebody's property, but I think that there's also a responsibility, as is shown in the Criminal Code as well, that you better be doggone sure that you're in imminent danger. Not every situation is black and white. If indeed we are considering legislation which is going to absolve somebody of responsibility for using deadly force, I think that we should be very, very cognizant that not every situation is standard when it comes to the possibility of an intruder on somebody's property and that circumstances had better warrant the action that one takes.

It's not simply black and white, and it's not a rah-rah situation. It's deadly serious, and I can attest to that because I was in a situation where I thought I was going to be involved in a significant, deadly fight. I just wanted to relay that story to the House and have people picture themselves in that situation for real and consider what responsibilities they should have to themselves and perhaps what responsibility they might have to address the situation and make very quick decisions but decisions that have consequences for all concerned, no matter who's involved.

With that, I'll leave that question for members to consider and, hopefully, drive home my point that this is a very, very serious issue which deserves more than mild contemplation.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there any other hon. members? Of course, I see the hon. Member for Highwood has risen.

Mr. Sigurdson: Well, I would like to just address those recent comments about the concerns raised by the member opposite about this, and I think that I can put some of those to rest. I mean, the bill specifically states right in the line: Bill 27, Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019. Now, anybody that went outside of the law and did something that was a criminal act, of course, would be outside of that, as anybody would be. As the member opposite was saying about coming down and if he had found that it was not a wind chime that had fallen and that it actually was broken glass, it was a mistaken, just drunken neighbour and he had done something that was outside of the law, of course this bill doesn't apply. So I think that it's pretty simple to say that even in the name, just in the header itself, it's pretty self-explanatory and cleans up that entire argument to this bill in its entirety. This bill is designed to protect law-abiding citizens. I think and I hope that just by that statement that it puts those arguments to rest for the member opposite.

Thank you, Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members willing to speak to this matter? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just wanted to make a few comments on the bill and on the subject matter that was raised by the hon. Member for Highwood shortly there before me and by my colleague from Edmonton-McClung as well. I do want to say that I actually don't think that it's quite as simple as the hon. Member for Highwood would propose, that either there is law abiding or there's not law abiding. When it comes to defending oneself or to defending other people under one's care under the Criminal Code, I actually think that's a fairly complex test in terms of what constitutes self-defence versus what would constitute a criminal act. I think that that's actually quite a complex question when you're talking about someone coming onto your property and what you can do in response to them. I do think that what my hon. colleague from Edmonton-McClung has to say is actually a valid question. I do think that that remains a complicated area of law, and that's what a lot of the concern about this is around in the first place.

I did want to just respond to a couple of things. I think it's a bit of an unfair characterization to indicate that our government wasn't concerned about the issue, because we were concerned about this issue. We were concerned enough that we took action and, I would say, significant action. Ten million dollars is nothing to sneeze at. You know, the actions we took were having an impact. I do think that boots on the ground is a legitimate reaction to crime. Having more police officers is a legitimate response to: we have concerns about crime in our community. The suggestion that that was in some way not doing anything is just false. It was doing something.

In fact, those crime reduction units have been shown to work not just here but in other jurisdictions across the country. That method of thinking about crime, the idea that we ought to target prolific offenders because those are the offenders that are responsible for much of the crime: I think that's correct. Demonstrably in the court data, in terms of people who are coming before the court, it is in fact the case that there is a small number of offenders who are responsible for the majority of incidents, and I think putting in place crime reduction units to target specifically with surveillance, with proactive policing of those particular offenders is good. In fact, we were just in estimates last week. The current minister has confirmed that those units will be continued because they are working. So I think that actually we do have agreement on that, that that is a positive step.

Now, I'm not by any means suggesting that we had solved the problem. I think that as long as one person is the victim of crime, you won't have solved the problem. It's a problem that we need to continue to make progress on. For those victims it's a legitimate impact. It's a legitimate impact on them. So as long as there is one, it's one too many. I don't think I have now or ever suggested that that was the end of the matter. In fact, when we made that announcement, we said that we are going to add police officers, we are going to add civilian staff, we are going to add prosecutors, we are going to add better ways of doing business, we are going to increase funding to rural crime watch associations and to citizens on patrol, and we're going to help with information sharing between different units. We said all of that, and I think that all of that moves in the right direction. We also said that we will continue to monitor the situation to see if additional resources are needed or if additional steps need to be taken. I think that that was a good move. I know, certainly, that despite the UCP having voted against it at the time, it's being continued under this UCP government. It would suggest that they've changed their mind on that issue.

One other thing I did want to suggest: I do think that evidence is the important basis for decision. You know, the hon. members are right when they say: well, maybe that evidence isn't reflective of the reality on the ground. That's sometimes the case with respect to criminal matters in a lot of different ways, right? We're seeing much increased reporting in terms of sexual assaults, in terms of domestic violence. There is an open question: are those increased reports because the instances of those sorts of violence are in fact increasing, or are those increased reports because there is more attention around the issue and therefore more people who have been impacted are reporting? I'm not for a minute suggesting that that's unrealistic. What I am suggesting is that when the RCMP data indicates that there are, you know, 400 or more fewer vehicle thefts in 2018 than there were in 2017, that data could be said to be fairly reliable because I don't know anyone who wouldn't report their vehicle stolen however frustrated they are. Insurance requires that you make a police report on your stolen vehicle before you can get money back for that vehicle.

I appreciate that there are some types of crime in which the members may or may not be correct – and we can have an open conversation – but I think that when we're talking about vehicle thefts, there would be a lot of convincing necessary for me to say that those numbers are not in fact reflective. I think the RCMP certainly thinks that this has been an effective strategy and that it's having an impact. Are we there yet? Absolutely not. Should we take additional steps? Absolutely we should. But I do take offence when the members opposite suggest that we didn't care or that we didn't do anything at all because that is not correct.

With respect to this bill, I think the first thing I have to say is that I'm not actually opposed to everything in it. When we're talking about trespassing, certainly, we've seen recent instances of concern, and I obviously won't discuss those because of the sub judice rules. But it is absolutely the case that when you have people who do not understand livestock going into locations where those livestock are located, that is a very dangerous situation. It's also a situation that has the potential to have negative impacts on public health because there are potentially issues of communicable diseases there. I actually think that moves in that direction are not necessarily bad. I think that some of those moves are a really good idea because sometimes people do things without, shall we say, reflecting all the way to the end of those things, and I think that we should act to protect the people who own the property, the public in general, and also the individuals who may not be thinking their actions all the way through, who may be exposing themselves to livestock and to diseases that they don't fully understand, and that we ought to act to protect all of those people. So that portion of the bill I'm actually in agreement with.

I do think it's worth, just given the sort of high-level messaging around this, Albertans understanding that this amends the trespass statutes. This amends the Occupiers' Liability Act, which has an impact on people's civil liability. It does not and cannot amend the Criminal Code because the Criminal Code is not within the jurisdiction of this Legislature, and I think that some of the public debate on this issue suggests that people think that the Criminal Code is being amended. I would just caution Albertans that that is not the case.

The other comment I wanted to make with respect to this issue, because I do understand that people have a lot of fear, was that, just like my hon. colleague for Edmonton-McClung, I just wanted to tell a story. I had had a meeting when we were in government, when I was the minister at the time, with the hon. member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake and the hon. member for – another hon. member.

What is your riding, sir?

Mr. Hanson: It was Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Ms Ganley: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. That's right.

We had met with a number of residents, a number of councillors, a number of folks representing First Nations, and I remember a chief saying to us something that stuck with me, that really, really stuck with me. That chief had said: "People from my nation, when they go driving around and they're on the roads, if their car breaks down, they don't get out of their car. They stay in their car and they call someone for help, and they're scared. They're scared to get out of their car for fear of being mistaken for a trespasser." That had a real impact on me because I don't think that anyone should be scared in our province. I guess what I would say to that is that I don't think that residents should be scared. I don't think that people driving in their cars should be scared. I don't think that anybody should be scared. So that was just one issue that I wanted to raise.

With that, having spoken to the bill generally, I did want to add my concerns with respect to a specific section, and I am going to move an amendment. I will wait for that amendment to reach the table.

The Deputy Chair: If the hon. member would please just read the amendment into the record. Going forward, we'll refer to this one as amendment A2. Then please feel free to continue with your comments.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I move that Bill 27, Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019, be amended in section 2 in the proposed section 12(4) by striking out "or is about to commit".

The purpose of this amendment: I'll read the whole section just so that people can get a sense of this. Again, I do this because there are portions of this bill that I actually think are very important, but there are portions of this bill that I think create a level of legal uncertainty that I am not comfortable with. We're repealing section 12 and replacing it with this, so 12(4) is a new one, and it reads in its entirety:

For the purposes of subsections (2) and (3), a trespasser is a criminal trespasser if the occupier has reasonable grounds to believe that the trespasser is committing or is about to commit an offence under the Criminal Code of Canada.

The reason that I have concerns about this is that when we say "has reasonable grounds to believe that someone is about to commit an offence," my concern is that I think that an individual – because people could be mistaken about things and frequently are – can see someone and believe on reasonable grounds that they are about to commit an offence when, in fact, that person is a perfectly law-abiding individual who is there for whatever reason. Perhaps their car has broken down. Perhaps they've gotten lost. Any number of reasons. I think what concerns me about saying "reasonable grounds to believe" that someone is "about to commit an offence" would relieve the individual doing the injury from liability. I just think that that's a bit of a concern, and the reason that I think it's a concern is, again, because someone could have reasonable grounds to believe that someone else is about to commit a crime when, in fact, that individual has merely become lost or had their car break down. Perhaps they're inebriated, or perhaps they're a young person who's gotten turned around. There's any number of scenarios that the mind can dream up.

Suggesting that now the occupier doesn't owe that individual a duty of care I find a bit troubling. I do find that a bit troubling because it suggests that – yeah. I mean, I think objective tests exist for a reason. I think that this bit about "or is about to commit" just takes it a tiny bit too far, and that makes me very uncomfortable.

My hope is that the government will consider this amendment. I think it would improve the bill, so I would urge all members to vote in favour of the amendment. With that, Mr. Chair, I will end my comments.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Hon. members, I see the hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations has risen to speak to amendment A2.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We're country folks. If somebody comes on our land looking for help, we give them help. I've taken people to the service station to get gas. I've fixed tires for them. But where I live, if somebody comes to my farm at 4 o'clock in the morning, they're looking for trouble. I'm centrally located. I live an hour from anywhere. I live in the middle of a section. If you're from the city, you probably don't know what a section is. That means it's a half-mile to where my house is from any direction.

I just want to paint you a little different story than what you've heard. I wish this is the only story I had, but this is one of them. It's 4 o'clock in the morning, 40 below outside. I see some lights come in my driveway. If someone's coming in my driveway – it's treed. Believe it or not, I'm a tree hugger. It's all treed coming up to my house. I see these lights come in, so I look out the window. Whoops, they're at my nephew's truck. Oh, there goes his window. I get on my phone to 911. I say: "I've got somebody breaking in. What do I do?" "Well, what are they doing?" I say: "Well, they just smashed the window out of my nephew's truck." "Well, they're not breaking in your house, then?" I say: "No." "Well, call us if they break in the house." "Are you kidding me?" This is a true story.

I flick the lights on a couple of times. Then another vehicle comes in. They called their buddy because they think they've got more than one car to pick up. Now I've got three people in my yard at 40 below. I'm out on my step, not much on. That would scare most people away, but it didn't scare them away.

They can't get the car started, so now they're kicking the door of my shop in. I'm back on the phone again to 911. "What's your problem?" I say: "Well, I've still got these three people here, and now they're breaking into my shop." "Well, are they assaulting you?" I say: "What do you mean?" "Well, do they have their hands on you?" I say: "No. If they did that, I probably wouldn't be talking to you. We're exchanging colourful adjectives at this moment here." They say: "Well, we're really busy. We can't come out unless they're actually assaulting you." Click.

I'm an hour from anywhere. The next closest police are probably an hour and a half away, coming from Red Deer or someplace. I'm on my own. It's a different situation if you live in the city than if you live in a rural area. It's dangerous out there. Now I'm up here by myself. My wife is home alone. You have no idea what it's like unless you live in a rural area, what crime means.

I wish that this was the only story I had. I've had people with rifles on my property trying to steal things. My neighbours have lost – he's a young fellow. He's a surveyor. They've taken his truck. They've taken his quads. He can't even get insurance on it anymore. What's he supposed to do? There's no work for him out there as a surveyor, and he has lost all his stuff not once, but twice, out of his shop in his yard.

We're unprotected out there, Mr. Chair. We need help out there. To think that all country people are just waiting there with a gun to shoot somebody – we're not. I mean, like I said, we'll go out of our way to help people. We'll take them, we'll help them, but we need help out there.

This bill at least gives us some help. To think that if somebody is stealing my stuff and then they can turn around and sue me for slipping on some ice or spraining their ankle for kicking the door of my shop in – Mr. Chair, we need help out there, and this gives us some help. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Minister.

Are any other members looking to speak to amendment A2?

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Going back to Bill 27 proper, are then any hon. members looking to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, are you prepared for the question on Bill 27, Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 27 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Any opposed? Carried.

Bill 21

Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered at this time? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has risen to speak.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today to speak to Bill 21, the Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019. You know, as we were sitting and debating the last bill, I was taking the opportunity, while listening to debate, to also respond to one of my constituents, oddly enough a constituent that I went to high school with who, coincidentally, now happens to live in my constituency. It's always interesting how these things come around. She had written to me to express some of her concerns about the decisions she sees being made by this government. She listed several things, but the very first thing that she listed, that she raised as a concern – actually, maybe I'll just read it here. "Much of what the current government is pushing does not align with their platform commitments, and therefore is disingenuous at best, and more likely, entirely fraudulent."

Now, I spoke at some length about this earlier today as were debating the yin to this bill's yang, Bill 20, and talked about how on so many fronts the decisions that have been made by this government are absolutely contrary to promises they made in their election platform or are, in fact, simply not contained anywhere within that platform and spoke at some length about how that document was pretty much being utterly dishonest with Albertans about what this government intended to do. Indeed, in Bill 21 we see more of precisely that from this government, more changes that they did not campaign on, more things which they promised they would not do and are indeed doing. There's a word for that, Mr. Chair, but I'm not allowed to use it in this Chamber.

This government is not dealing from a straight deck, particularly when it comes to something like AISH. When we introduced the bill to index to the cost of living, members of this government had the gall to stand in this House and say: well, why didn't you do this sooner? Now, Mr. Chair, they are standing in this House to vote against doing it at all. They are happy to give $4.7 billion away in a corporate handout that is yet to create a single job but indeed has instead seen companies take their millions of dollars that they've received from this government and take them elsewhere, in many cases while, in fact, laying off Albertans, taking jobs out of our province. But they will reach into the pockets of every single person in this province who receives AISH or social assistance and take out $30 after they said that they would not do that. There is a word for that, which we are not allowed to use in this House. These members know well what it is, and they know well what their government has done and is doing.

They are increasing, Mr. Chair, interest on student loans by 1 per cent at the same time as they are taking away students' educational tax credits, at the same time as they are allowing tuition to rise by as much as 21 per cent over the next three years. They're spitting in the face of every single postsecondary student in this province.

Mr. Yao: That's a bit harsh.

Mr. Shepherd: It is harsh, Member. It is harsh. It's incredibly harsh for a student who has been working for years, who has graduated high school, who has spent their summers saving to afford their education, who has planned their budget, to have this government turn to them and say: "Goodbye to your educational tax credit. Six hundred dollars more per year. Your tuition will rise 7 per cent a year." Now we find out that the University of Alberta today announced they will likely be raising their residency costs thanks to cuts from this government. That is harsh, Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: You know your comment that we spit on people? That's harsh, sir.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, hon. members.

Mr. Shepherd: It is an insult to postsecondary students, Mr. Chair. It is disrespectful in the extreme. But that is what this government is choosing to do. That is the burden they are choosing to put on Albertans.

At the same time, they're also taking away the student temporary employment program, providing no other opportunities for students who, in fact, are then able to get valuable job experience while helping out organizations, nonprofits, other businesses, a win-win situation. But, no, this government would prefer to give those dollars away to corporations that are taking that money and saying, "Thank you very much," folding it into their pockets and those of their shareholders, and not investing a cent back into the province of Alberta. It is utterly disingenuous, Mr. Chair. They did not run on that. They did not campaign on that. Indeed, I'm sure the postsecondary students that went out and knocked on doors, because we know some did, for perhaps yourself, perhaps other candidates that now sit here in government – I'm fairly sure none of you told them. I'm pretty sure none of the members in this House told those students what they intended to do to them and raise their costs.

But this bill is not all about cuts and increasing costs, though certainly some of the other decisions will indeed, I would say, Mr. Chair, increase some costs for government. This, of course, is one of the many omnibus bills which this government has chosen to bring forward this session. Thankfully, they're giving this one a bit more breathing room than they did Bill 22 last week, where they fired the Election Commissioner, who's investigating their party, in a brief four days while the Premier did not take a single opportunity to stand in this House and defend his disgusting and corrupt legislation. Indeed, a noted columnist, Ron Breakenridge, today called that cowardice on the part of this Premier, cowardice which all members of this government chose to support. There's leadership for you.

Within this legislation we also see some changes in health care. Now, I spoke to this earlier, Madam Chair. Again, we had some students here, resident doctors from the U of A, who came to express their concerns about this government's intent to give the minister the ability to set conditions on issuing practitioner certificate ID numbers, again, an insult to students, an insult to those who have been going and working under a set of conditions that were set out and a reasonable, I think, set of expectations about the opportunities they would have here in this province, which this government seems intent on taking away along with their tuition tax credits, along with the cap on tuition, along with affordability for their education. Indeed, we have seen how this has failed in other jurisdictions where it has been tried. In fact, the province of New Brunswick, as I spoke on at some length before, is now recanting this policy, recognizing that it did more harm than good, led to a shortage of doctors in urban areas, led to a shortage of doctors in rural areas. It did not at all address the problem.

You know, I had the opportunity to meet last week with the members of the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta and have some conversation with them about their thoughts on this, and I spoke with a gentleman there who himself works as a rural doctor, worked as a rural doctor for a number of years, and said that what incited him to work as a rural doctor and to greatly enjoy that experience, Madam Chair, was the fact that he had had the opportunity to train in a rural area, to take part in a program which gave him the opportunity to try rural practice.

Indeed, there are programs which do this at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary, and when the student residents were here and when I spoke with them, that was their recommendation as well, that giving doctors the opportunity to practise in a rural setting, where often they face challenges that they would not face in the city, having the chance to learn how to work in those environments, to learn how to deal with the different kinds of equipment they might have access to or the lack of other specialists, finding out how they can still indeed provide quality health care in those settings, gaining that experience is far more effective than putting them at the barrel of legislation and saying, "You will practise where we tell you to practise," a proposal that has lost two constitutional challenges. Of course, we've seen with this government that they don't mind wasting taxpayer money in the courts. They seem to be pursuing that on a number of fronts with pieces of legislation and other decisions that they're making, and that is their prerogative. We'll see how Albertans feel about that eventually. But that is yet another one of the many provisions that are crammed into this omnibus Bill 21.

Now, another aspect of this legislation – I had the opportunity to speak with the minister about this at the estimates process the other week – is giving the government the ability unilaterally to terminate the doctor compensation agreement with the AMA. Now, I spoke about this earlier on Bill 20, Madam Chair, and the fact that this government seems intent on just building distrust with every possible demographic and community and stakeholder in this province, whether it's ripping pensions away from teachers and public health care workers, again without consultation, without mentioning this in their platform, without taking the time to discuss it and ramming that legislation through, again, in a mere four days as those public servants sat and watched in the gallery. That's harsh, almost as harsh as spitting in their face, the level of contempt that this government shows for those individuals and their concerns and indeed the democratic process.

We see that breaking of trust with postsecondary students. We see that breaking of trust with indeed all Albertans in the decision to fire the Election Commissioner in the midst of his investigations into this government's party and the leadership campaign which elevated this Premier to this place. We saw them breaking the trust of all public-sector workers back this spring with Bill 9. We see them breaking their trust in now asking for wage rollbacks, which they said they would not ask for, yet another area in which this government was utterly disingenuous. It is being entirely hypocritical. We have this government breaking trust with so many sectors of Albertans like education funding, on which this government swore up and down that it would not cut any amounts from education funding. Well, as you yourself, Madam Chair, have attested to, the school board in your area is indeed facing a cut now. You have your thoughts on what they should do in the face of that, but you have certainly in the press agreed that that was, in fact, the case. Yet your government, this government, swore they would not do that.

Yet another area in which this government is breaking trust: I'll talk about Bill 20, income tax, raising that, once again breaking trust with Albertans. Yet again we have this government saying: we want to reserve the ability to unilaterally terminate the doctor compensation agreement with the Alberta Medical Association. On that, the minister, when I raised this with him in estimates, said: "Well, no, I don't think that puts a chill on our relationship. I don't see why there'd be any reason that the Alberta Medical Association should distrust our government. Trust us. We're the government. We're here to help." Madam Chair, this government is fast exhausting any reason that any Albertan should trust them on any question. When they continue to bring forward legislation like this, which gives them sweeping unilateral powers to break contracts, run roughshod over agreements, I can't see what could be possibly more insulting, more harsh to Albertans.

Indeed, I've talked about, you know, that this bill calls itself ensuring fiscal sustainability. Madam Chair, you do not secure fiscal sustainability by creating chaos. You do not create fiscal sustainability by making enemies of every single partner you have to work with to achieve your goals and ends. This government seems to feel that it can simply impose order by diktat and fiat on every aspect of Alberta. They'll pass their legislation, and Albertans will all fall in line and do as they're told. That is how they intend to ensure fiscal sustainability in this province.

Madam Chair, our government worked collaboratively with Albertans on many fronts. I hear it every day when I go out and meet and talk with stakeholders in any number of fields about how they appreciated working with our ministers, that they felt listened to and heard, that their ideas were accepted, that our Minister of Health was able to speak to a number of folks about some concerning issues without requiring them to sign a nondisclosure agreement, was able to share information with them. Indeed, because of the collaborative relationship she had built, they were able to have those discussions and nothing was leaked to the media. But this government seems to feel that they can simply bully their way through, that they can order Albertans to fall in line, that they can simply pass legislation, ram it through this House without regard, without consultation, without discussion, and Albertans will simply fall in line.

Indeed, that's what we see in the labour provisions in this bill: the minister taking more power for himself, the greater authority to define what an employee is, to set restrictions on unionized employees for what services they can access from government, to repeal the essential services replacement worker ban. Now, on that, Madam Chair, that's a topic worthy of discussion. We saw how quickly members of this government leapt to their feet to call on the federal government to legislate CN workers back to work. They could not have seen a law passed fast enough. That was their first step. But what did we see today? We saw that the standard negotiating process worked.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise – I think it's my first opportunity in Committee of the Whole, certainly – to discuss Bill 21, the Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019, being proposed by the Minister of Finance, an act that amends a number of different pieces of legislation, 19 in all, so there's a lot for members to consider in this act. There might be some places where perhaps the government may want to pause and consider whether it is, in fact, worth it to take some of the steps that have been proposed in this legislation. A number of different people, organizations, groups will be affected by this bill.

Certainly, there's no end to the people that will be affected by the end to the regulated rate cap on electricity at 6.9 cents per kilowatt hour – that's pretty well every household, small business, and farm – who were to have their electricity rates capped until 2021 but now will no longer. While 6.9 cents per kilowatt hour represented the 10-year average of electricity pool prices, it has been the case in a couple of the months under consideration that the price has gone above 6.9 cents. I fully expect that this winter, given what we know about the electricity market right now, people's pool price, the rate, will go over 6.9 and potentially quite a bit higher. The depths of winter and the hottest of summers are when we see the most load on the electricity system and therefore the pool price piece going up considerably.

We know that ordinary people, who already have a number of affordability concerns – we hear affordability concerns all the time from our constituents. We hear them around things like car insurance and other drivers of our monthly bills, property taxes, those kinds of things. We certainly hear from our constituents on that. Certainly, the actual usage of electricity is only one part of the bill, and there are other pieces – certainly, the distribution and transmission charges – that people have quarrel with, and, I think, rightfully so. But there is one thing that government can do to control those costs, and that is to cap the electricity rates. I think it's really too bad that we are just leaving people at the mercy of higher bills.

Another piece that concerns me considerably and that has not had as much debate – and here's where I really do think that the government may want to pause – is around adjusting. It's on page 12. It's the piece that amends the Alberta Housing Act, and what it does is that it freezes the indexation for the amount that, when people are paying – if you're a senior in a standard seniors' lodge, you get an amount over and above your rent that is sort of a basic monthly disposable income amount, that is laid out within the Alberta Housing Act. What this bill does is that it pauses that indexation of that amount every year, so that will also eat into many seniors' disposable income. We're talking, in some cases, you know, $300 or $400 a month. Certainly, for nursing homes it's $322, so it is a small amount of money to government but a large amount of money when that's all you're looking at for your monthly disposable income amount.

We know that a number of the people that are affected by this are, of course, often women, and they are often on their own, and they don't necessarily have the benefit of a defined benefit pension or even defined contribution, in many cases. They didn't necessarily pay into CPP at the top end for most of their careers, women of that generation. This is an awfully mean-spirited move by this government, to freeze the amounts for monthly disposable income for people in seniors' lodges and nursing homes. Certainly, I have a number of both facilities in my riding, and people are worried. They're worried about what happens when this bill passes. They are, you know, not as worried about, maybe, January 1, 2020, but much more worried about what happens after that as the $30 become $60 through the power of compound interest, that we all know very well becomes much, much more over the years.

We also know that on these attempts to take away indexation of various benefits, it's not necessarily a pause at all. It took some 15 years federally to reindex a number of programs, so we know that this is just a grab of cash out of people who can really least afford it.

When you go back to the title of this bill, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, I think the question that we have to ask ourselves as an Assembly, as 87 people elected by constituents, is: fiscal sustainability for whom exactly? I mean, this is a budget bill that proposes all of these changes to ordinary people's lives, yet it also proposes – and I think we're pretty well past all of the various appropriation acts – the same level of debt at the end of the fiscal period under consideration and a higher deficit, also higher personal income taxes for people, fewer benefits for seniors, student loans that cost more, electricity bills that cost more. This is to say nothing of the other pieces of this bill around things that are proposed for the Alberta Medical Association and so on. Fiscal sustainability for whom? Really, the fiscal picture is essentially the same after all of this pain for ordinary people.

In fact, all of this traffic in e-mails and telephone calls and voice mails and letters written in cursive handwriting that I know all members of this House receive from people, especially older people, about the impacts on their daily lives: I really have questions about whether it's worth it, this $4.7 billion giveaway detailed on page 144 of the fiscal plan and then all of these political prices to be paid, whether it's with ordinary working people and their electricity bills, whether it is for those who are living in seniors' lodges or nursing homes, whether it is for those who receive AISH, for example, or whether it is for students, who are either going to be paying higher tuition, of course, but then on the back end, once they're finished, also subjected to higher student loan interest rates. The figure that I saw: over the life of an ordinary undergraduate degree, for a 10-year loan people will be paying about $2,000 more in interest.

Maybe that's not a lot of money to some folks that have six-figure pensions from Ottawa, but you know how it is a lot of money? When you need to replace the dishwasher or the washing machine or the roof and you've got two little kids and you're five years out of university and you've got a job but you're just getting by because you're trying to get rid of those student loans, and then you have an emergency like that. Those are the kinds of real-world consequences of decisions we make as a result of this bill. That's what will happen to folks.

You know, I might propose at some point in these deliberations that the government really take a look and decide: do we really need, for example, to punish those kinds of young families that I just talked about with a 1 per cent higher interest rate on their student loans? Perhaps that's something where there could be a climbdown given that the debt is the same and the deficit is, in fact, higher, so path to balance or those other drivers that the government claims are behind this bill are not actually real. If that's the case, then there might be some things here that – potentially they may either want to consider some compassion or consider some political consequences. Certainly, seniors are known to get their vote on, and they are noticing – folks who live in lodges are noticing that their benefits are going to be frozen, people in long-term care facilities as well – that maybe it's not worth it to finance a 4 and a half billion dollar giveaway that creates no jobs and is just simply a giveaway.

A couple of other things are of keen interest to me, Madam Chair, and those are around the AMA agreement. I am actually quite surprised that it contains within here the power to terminate the agreement. I don't know what useful purpose it serves to put a stick in the spokes of the ordinary course of discussions with physicians. I do not understand why the government and the minister would want to continue to breach the trust with physicians in order to get to a new AMA agreement. I have no doubt that there are a number of ways in which the existing agreement can be improved upon. That's the way of the world; it can always be improved upon. There's no doubt in my mind that the existing agreement as it is now was much improved over the previous agreement. I don't understand why this government would want to slam the door on further improvements by torching trust with physicians. I mean, physicians have said that the bill clearly identifies that government is not required to live up to terms of future contracts, and doctors have observed that the province is cynically asking them to work towards agreements when it appears they are the only party to be bound by them.

You know, this is about the kind of health care and the kind of expertise that we all expect in those moments of emergency, in those moments of needing acute care, in those moments of needing a specialist, in those moments of bringing babies into the world, in those moments of saying goodbye to our loved ones. Through the whole of our lives there are physicians and other health care professionals there.

I do not know why we would want to introduce this kind of chaos into our health care system were it not for the notion that chaos is actually a feature, not a bug, of this bill and that undermining the basic principles of universality in the health care system, having a rather pugilistic relationship with the five principles of the Canada Health Act and the notion of universality, is in fact the goal of this government. That's the only thing that actually explains this at all, because it has been proven that the AMA agreement can be improved upon through a respectful relationship with physicians. That's not to say that our government agreed with them all the time, and it's not to say that they agreed with us. That is the way of negotiation, and that is fine. When there are adults in the room, everyone recognizes that. But what this does is to posit that the role of government is to take their toys and go home, something of a tantrum. And that is deeply troubling, or it's foreshadowing for how this government is going to conduct itself with respect to our medicare system.

Finally, I'll turn my attention to this piece around police funding for municipalities. You know, I think it's clear that what's happening here is that that presentation, the sort of chit-chat time, that the province proposed with municipalities, especially rurals, on how to evolve, if you will, the police funding formula is contained within this act. Really, what this shows us is that property tax hikes, if people want to keep their policing, are on the horizon. This gives them the ability to do that.

The fact of the matter, I think, is that if the government wanted us to think that this was benign, (a) they wouldn't have consulted on something that is demonstrably not benign, which is raising the amount that rurals have to contribute to their policing costs considerably, and (b) I think we would have seen a much more robust approach to consultation with municipalities on this matter. So between that and the fine revenue piece, I think what we have is an indication that this is a government that says on the one hand that they are concerned about law and order and that they are concerned about front-line staff, but what they'll really do is turn around and blame municipalities, just as we've seen them blame school boards, for reductions in service in the front line. These are the sorts of things that will be noticed.

Again I wonder if at least some of these initiatives are just simply not worth it. In particular, given that the stated goal is ensuring fiscal sustainability and given that the debt at the end of the forecast period is pretty much the same as the New Democrats', I can only assume that the government has concluded what we concluded, which is that the lowest debt-to-GDP ratio, the lowest net debt position, and an excellent credit rating were in fact well supported by the structure of the Alberta economy at this time given that their numbers are the same.

There are going to be a number of folks who are very, very concerned about the outcomes of this bill. It might not be in the next four weeks, and, you know, the price politically to be paid may not be demonstrated fully until perhaps a year from now, when we're having these conversations and municipalities have actually had to respond to some of these police funding changes, when people have seen that the small increases to their monthly living amounts, if they live in a lodge or a nursing home facility, are not increasing, when AISH recipients are seeing that their amounts are not increasing and they're increasingly unable to keep pace with the cost of living. These things will add up over time, Madam Chair.

That is why I have proposed to the government that perhaps, for example, the minimum monthly disposable income amount for people who live in seniors' lodges might be something that they will want to back down on so that they can say that they did when they are called to account for this, which they will inevitably be. There are small changes that they could make that demonstrate good faith and goodwill for ordinary people, particularly people who do not have a lot to begin with, and I'm thinking here of the many, many seniors with whom I visit in my riding, in both lodges and in nursing homes, quite often.

The final piece that I will say here is that it really doesn't appear – there are a lot of health care and seniors' pieces within this act, but I've seen precious little appetite to actually improve the system in any way, shape, or form in the six or seven months I've been observing what is happening, both in my own constituency and across the province, with respect to, in particular, Seniors and Housing issues but as those intersect with health care. I'm seeing a few initiatives stuck in the mud such as the dementia care strategy, some aspects of the mental health strategy. In particular, the dementia care strategy: a lot of those folks end up in nursing homes, and they are affected by this bill.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I am pleased to rise and speak to Bill 21. Of course, my colleagues have raised a number of different concerns about this particular bill, and I think I have had the opportunity to raise some concerns as well. I think there are many, many sections of this bill that concern me.

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

In the main, in addition to the bill itself concerning me, the fashion in which it's being brought in concerns me. I think that these sorts of omnibus bills – and we have two of them before the House still and one which had passed through in what I would consider record time, in under three days, already. I think that that's a big concern because what this is designed to do is to ensure that the public doesn't have a chance to have understanding and to have input. I think that the point of democracy is for the public to have understanding and to have input, so when I see that it is the case that the government is attempting to evade that, it becomes a very big concern for me.

There are various different parts of this that continue to be a huge concern for me. One of the things, I think, that I wanted to draw to the attention of individuals is an amendment to the Provincial Offences Procedure Act. It doesn't sound very exciting, but what it actually does – in this case, we're talking about returned fine revenue, and initially it was meant to go specifically, essentially, to the processing of those tickets. That was what the province's share was for. Now we're talking about just anything that not only improves the administration of justice but literally any government initiative. Essentially, what that does is that it removes the collars around that. At the same time, the government is taking back from municipal police services a significant portion of that revenue, and now we're not seeing it used to process those tickets. We're seeing it used for anything the government wants. This is essentially a money grab.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

It's interesting that that would be coupled at the same time with stopping changes that we had made. Certainly, it was an initiative led by my hon. colleague the former Minister of Transportation to, as he put it, put the cash cow down humanely when it comes to photoradar. Certainly, we've seen the government make moves to back that off and to allow photoradar that is not based on safety to continue. I think that's a big concern for me, and particularly when coupled with this particular amendment in this bill, it is a concern.

There are a number of other, I think, concerns that I have with respect to this bill. Certainly, some of them having to do with impacts to the Labour Relations Code are of big concern for me.

One of the things that I thought we could do to try and at least improve some portion of this bill, since it is likely that the government will use its majority to move this bill forward one way or the other, is to move an amendment. I will wait for that amendment to make its way to the table.

9:40

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A3.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. What the amendment does: I am moving that Bill 21, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019, be amended in section 8(7), in the proposed section 8.1, by striking out "and" at the end of clause (c) and by adding, following clause (c), "(c.1) updates on the maintenance of existing capital assets, and."

Essentially, what this amendment is doing is that it's adding to that section the need for the government to report on the maintenance of existing capital assets. This is, in my view, important, because certainly one of the things I think that we've seen past Conservative governments do in an effort to make it appear that they are saving money without actually saving money is that they defer capital maintenance. I think that that's a real problem because ultimately it costs more money in the long run.

Certainly, my mother worked at the old cancer centre, the Tom Baker cancer centre, and for a number of years every time it rained, they pulled out the buckets because so little maintenance had been done that there were holes. The same thing happens here at the courthouse in Edmonton. The state of rural courthouses was quite abysmal, and there are a number of other buildings that are in that position.

Basically, in order to create what I would call a short-term win by making it appear that they've reduced spending, what actually gets cut is capital maintenance, and even though it appears to save money, it actually doesn't. This actually used to drive me crazy before I got into government – there were many things that drove me crazy, and this was one of them – because it's a shell game, right? It's essentially moving money around, making it appear that you've reduced the deficit, but you're doing it by failing to maintain your infrastructure, which actually costs you more money in the long run, so in fact it doesn't save any money.

I think this is worth noting, and I'm happy to have someone table it at the appropriate time tomorrow. I'm referring here to the UCP's platform commitment which included transparency on this. I'm looking at page 29, which, again, I'm happy to table. We're talking about:

- . . . provide transparency on prioritization criteria, establish predictable funding levels, and ensure adequate maintenance of existing [needs].

There's also a portion that says:

- Prepare and publicly release an annual Government of Alberta Infrastructure Report, as part of the province's Annual Report, to provide detailed information to Albertans on the progress made in meeting the various commitments.

One of the things here we're talking about ensuring is adequate maintenance of assets. Given that this was a commitment that this government made, I see no reason why they would vote against it. Actually, I think it's a very good idea. Sometimes that happens in life, where the party that you stand opposite from suggests something in their platform that actually you agree with, and I think that's happened on a number of different issues, probably, across the House.

It is my hope that this particular amendment will be accepted by the government because I think that in the long term it helps us all. You know, I think this bill is supposed to be, at least according to the title, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act – one might question, based on the clauses within the bill, whether that title is, in fact, accurate. If we're ensuring fiscal sustainability, if it really is the intention of this bill to ensure that long-term fiscal sustainability, I think this is a very good amendment because I think this amendment ensures that we're actually doing that, that we're not merely appearing to do that. I think that that's a very, very important thing.

You know, we talk about deficits – right? – and people look at the numbers. We can look at the deficit this year and see that it's $2 billion bigger than the deficit was last year. That number is an accurate representation of a certain number of things, but there are also things that come outside of that. In addition to the actual deficit and the actual debt, we have to consider things like infrastructure debt and consider things like: what costs have we pushed forward?

This is one of the things – I mean, there are a number of things that are like this. When we fail to invest in education, when we fail to give elementary school students the support they need and, in fact, even younger than elementary school students, when we fail to invest in affordable child care for young children, when we fail to invest in high-quality programming, we see these adverse childhood experiences that make it difficult for those children to perform later in life. That results in vastly increased costs, vastly increased costs in terms of potentially winding up on government benefits instead of ending up being productive members of society, vastly increased costs in terms of having trauma and conflict that may ultimately lead them to come into conflict with the justice system, and then, you know, we see those increased costs in terms of incarceration, which is extremely, extremely expensive. It would be much, much cheaper to just fix the problem at the outset.

We see those costs, too, in terms of a failure to invest in affordable housing. If we don't invest in affordable housing, when we get, you know, further along, those individuals who are not housed are incarcerated, and that again becomes very expensive.

This is just one more instance of the same thing, where perhaps we're pretending to save money, but really we're not. When you have assets, when you have buildings and you don't do maintenance on them – say, the roof is supposed to be replaced periodically.

When you fail to do that, the roof starts leaking, and that damages the insulation, and that damages the walls. Ultimately, what you wind up having to do is far, far, far more expensive than that which you would have had to do in the first place. You know, essentially, you save $100 this year, and five years from now you pay $4,000. That's not saving money; that's a trick, and it's designed, in my view – and this was used very much under former Premier Klein and has been used by other sort of right-wing governments. It's very much used to appear to save money while, in fact, not saving money.

I think this amendment will assist the government not only in fulfilling its platform but also in ensuring that when we're talking about financial sustainability, that's really what we're talking about, that we're really, actually saving money. We're not just playing a shell game that makes us appear to save money when actually we're spending way more money. I think that that's something that Albertans were concerned about in the last election. I think it's something that Albertans are concerned about today. I think it's something that they are rightly concerned about. So I'm very hopeful that we'll see this amendment go forward.

With that, Madam Chair, I think I will close my comments on the amendment and urge all members to vote in favour of it.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to stand and speak to this amendment as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I was interested to hear the comments made by the member stating that Bill 21 is a shell game. I had to think about the idea that she sees this as a shell game versus the idea that when the NDP took office on May 5, 2015, they had a $1.5 billion surplus provided for them. There was $13 billion of debt, but they had over $6 billion in a rainy-day fund as well, and they went from $13 billion in debt to $63 billion in four years. That is a shell game.

The truth is that what they've done is put so much pressure now because of the cost of servicing that debt that rather than taking the $2 billion or $3 billion that has to be used to service that debt to actually build schools and to provide for that capital investment or infrastructure deficit, as she calls it – we can't do that anymore. We have to send that over to Toronto, to bankers and bondholders. That is a shell game, Madam Chair. This is the place that the NDP has put us in, which is interesting because now they're saying: well, we've got to make sure that we keep maintenance costs and spending going.

Well, Madam Chair, I'm still interested to see the shadow budget that the NDP is going to be bringing out. Based on the information that they've been sending to us, Albertans don't believe that they had any credible ability to balance the budget in four years. So it's left up to us to be able to make some very difficult decisions. This was not an easy task, to be able to get to where we're at, but it was a reasonable approach that we took, finding 2.8 cents on the dollar of savings. Based upon being able to go out and consult with Albertans, we saw that they saw this as a reasonable approach. But, again, there has to be some things that we have to do to be able to bring our spending back in line.

So, Madam Chair, I do recommend to my hon. members that they don't accept this amendment, that they do not vote for this amendment. The NDP had their four years to prove to Albertans that they were going to be fiscally responsible. For them to now say that they're going to try to micromanage how we are fiscally responsible, I think, is disingenuous on their part, and I would recommend that the members do not vote in favour of this.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair and to my colleague for bringing forward what I think is a very reasonable and fair amendment. This certainly is about making sure that we maintain the existing capital assets we have as a province.

When I think about capital assets in my riding, I think about the many, many schools that exist, and for good reason, in Edmonton-Glenora. A lot of young families live in the riding. A lot of programs that draw students from across the city and capital region are in the riding. We have schools like Edmonton Christian west and Mac, which is the only French immersion Catholic high school on the north side. We also have Ross Shep, the other French immersion public high school on the north side. When I think about these buildings – both Mac and Ross Shep had renovations recently. Shep's is just about finished, thank goodness. It's been a long haul and something that I'm really glad is finally coming to a conclusion. When it was put on the capital list as a priority for a modernization, it was, I would say, long overdue.

This is something that – I think it's important to have updates about maintenance and existing capital assets so that we as a province, we as the owners of that facility know and understand what the checks and balances are for it and make sure that we maintain these capital assets that we all own. I emphasize “that we all own” because we do have a shared responsibility and a shared opportunity, I think, when it comes to public infrastructure. When I also think about other facilities like the Misericordia hospital, technically outside my riding but certainly a west Edmonton hospital that has punched far above its weight for many, many years and has been long overdue for a new emergency department in particular and other phases of redevelopment on that site, which, I would assert as well, must be a priority, I think it's only fair for us to report publicly and make sure that we are accounting for deferred maintenance that happens in our public assets as well.

We'll hear different numbers from different folks about what the deferred maintenance actually is, which is why I think having updates that are in a standardized provincial process in accordance with this proposed amendment makes the most sense. Some folks, when they count deferred maintenance, count asbestos abatement; other folks don't. Certainly, there would be very varying reports on what those liabilities would be as well as what the asset is valued at at any point in time.

When I'm talking about the schools and the hospital that serve my riding, for the most part I'm not saying that because this is something that only applies to me. Certainly, we know that every single one of my hon. colleagues in this place, Madam Chair, has schools in their riding, and we want to keep it that way. We want to make sure that we are holding to account the government for maintaining education funding and maintenance funding and doing replacement planning in a reasonable way.

I can't help but draw the parallel between us saying that we want to have updates on maintenance and existing capital assets as part of this bill and parallel legislation that we have. For example, when I lived in a condo and was on the condo board, there were requirements that we have a regular, ongoing, updated plan about what the long-term plan was for maintaining the building, our shared asset, we as owners in that facility. We as owners in provincial capital, I think, deserve the same. I think we deserve to know where we're at in terms of risk liability, maintenance, and assets. I think that that is fair and reasonable as owners of public assets, whether it's a home that you share as a communal asset among other condo owners or whether it's essential public services that we count on in our communities and throughout our province.

I think that this amendment is very fair and reasonable. I think that it's something that is worth due consideration of this House. You know, we've had one government member speak to it, and I would certainly welcome hearing opinions from others because I think many members of this House ran because we wanted to be good stewards of the public purse – hopefully, all members who ran for this Assembly wanted to be good stewards of the public purse – to make sure that we maintain and improve the condition for all, something that we literally say a prayer for every day in this House, and that we do so in a way that gives us the best information to be able to hold one another and ourselves to account in that effort.

Those are some of my main comments with regard to this specific amendment. There are many other pieces in this bill that I think warrant continued conversation and scrutiny. Certainly, this is one of the heavier bills this session, both in terms of the actual weight of the bill itself – it's 66 pages – as well as the number of different pieces that it amends. This is not something that anyone, I think, should take lightly. Sections like the Seniors Benefit Act, sections like the Public Service Employee Relations Act, not sections that I recall being talked about much on the campaign trail: there are many pieces in here that seem to have slid in under this, what many are calling an omnibus bill.

I think that it's important that we have due consideration and that the government entertains important amendments that increase transparency, accountability, and public reporting on things like capital assets that we have in this province. Those are some of the main points that I wanted to make at this point in debate, specifically as they relate to this amendment. I'm happy to discuss the bill and other amendments should they surface.

I hope that reflection upon some of those important public assets in individual ridings as well, I might add – actually, let's do another one. We're in a building right now that has scaffolding on it, and I'm sure many members of this Assembly, like me, thought: “What is happening to this building? What are the kinds of improvements that need to be made?” Particularly at this time we know that there is so much discussion around fiscal accountability, so I think it would be beneficial for the government to take the opportunity to have this kind of fair and open transparent reporting to the public about public assets, because I'm sure there is very good reason why there is scaffolding around the Legislature right now, doing work on this building, but I would certainly feel better if it was discussed and reported very publicly and we were all able to understand why that is.

I know that it's hard for a lot of folks, when they're seeing layoffs in the public as well as the private sector, to understand why government would be spending money on things like buildings, which is why I think increasing reporting about things like deferred maintenance and existing capital assets would be beneficial to all of us when we're understanding and holding to account the government for decisions it makes on its use of capital assets.

Those are some of my comments with regard to this particular amendment, and I look forward to hopefully hearing from other members of the government as to why they might be voting the way that they possibly could be. Thank you.

10:00

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A3 as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: We are now back on the main. Are there any members wishing to speak?

Mr. Schweitzer: Madam Chair, I move that the committee rise and report Bill 25 and Bill 27 and report progress on Bill 21 and Bill 20.

The Chair: Hon. minister, just to confirm, you want to rise and report on bills 25 and 27 and report progress on 20 and 21?

Mr. Schweitzer: Correct.

The Chair: Okay.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 25 and Bill 27. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 20 and Bill 21. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. So carried.
The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've made a lot of progress here today. I like to see that, people working together to get that done. I move that we adjourn the Assembly until tomorrow, November 27, at 9 a.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:03 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Wednesday, November 27, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning, hon. members.

Let us pray. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideals but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. So may Your kingdom come and Your name be hallowed. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Adjournment of Fall Session

39. Mr. Schweitzer moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the 2019 fall sitting of the Assembly shall stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

[Government Motion 39 carried]

Office of the Child and Youth Advocate

40. Mr. Schweitzer moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that:
1. The 2018-2019 annual report of the office of the Child and Youth Advocate be referred to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices for review;
  2. The committee may, without leave of the Assembly, sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
  3. In accordance with section 21(4) of the Child and Youth Advocate Act the committee shall report back to the Assembly within 90 days of the report being referred to it if the Assembly is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, are there any members wishing to speak to the motion?

[Government Motion 40 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019

Mr. Schweitzer: I'm standing up a lot here this morning, Madam Speaker. You know, I have to rise and give a speech on behalf of the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction. I'm going to read this speech for the first time as we go through it together, so hopefully this isn't a painful exercise for everyone. I'm going to do my best to read the notes.

I rise on behalf of the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction to move third reading of Bill 25, the Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019.

Bill 25 represents our next steps for making Alberta's economy freer and faster and upholds our commitment to cut red tape that impacts the lives of everyday Albertans. Bill 25 proposes changes to several pieces of legislation and repeals some legislation that is no longer in use. It reduces regulatory burdens for municipalities and other government partners and streamlines, eliminates, and modernizes outdated or redundant rules that impact all Albertans.

Some examples of this include speeding up processes for forest management agreements and regulatory approvals for small-scale hydroelectric projects, saving time for these businesses and encouraging future investment. Brock Mulligan from the Alberta Forest Products Association spoke about how this is going to affect the forestry industry. He noted how red tape around granting forestry management agreements created immense uncertainty for sawmills and that an FMA renewal takes years of planning and that any delay on top of that can be a huge setback. Allowing an approval that can now be made via ministerial order adds certainty to the process, speeds up approvals, and ensures stability for these job creators. I think we all agree that that's a positive step forward.

It also makes changes to modernize our building codes and brings them in line with upcoming federal standards. It removes legislation that is no longer needed – the Small Power Research and Development Act, the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Foundation Act – and repeals the out-of-date reference to chiropractic services from the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act.

As recommended by the review of agencies, boards, and commissions, Bill 25 dissolves the Health Professions Advisory Board, which has not been in use since 2012. It also updates the very outdated board appointment process of the M.S.I. Foundation and streamlines recruitment. It gives the Glenbow institute greater flexibility in the management and display of their collection.

A change that will potentially save lives: Bill 25 will make it easier for Albertans to provide online consent for organ donation. This is a new, one-step process that eliminates the paperwork to become an organ donor.

Ultimately, Bill 25 is about creating efficiencies and making it easier to deal with government processes and procedures. The savings earned from these changes aren't specifically monetary, but they do save Albertans, industry, and government something just as important, time. As we all know, time is money. If passed, these 11 changes will join the more than 80 red tape reduction-related initiatives already implemented or approved by government. I'm proud of the progress the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction has made in cutting red tape over the last six months, and I'm proud of how Bill 25 contributes to it. We know that there's more to do, and we're going to continue to cut red tape across government.

I'd like to thank the House for the thoughtful discussion and support for this bill. I look forward to the associate minister bringing forward more red tape reduction matters in the future.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate your recognizing me this morning to talk about an item that, of course, being the critic, is near and dear to my heart, red tape reduction. I guess the only problem I have is that we are looking at some changes within Bill 25 that really aren't red tape reduction. It's more like statute amendments that could have been done in other pieces of legislation.

We are looking at a bill right now that is omnibus in nature, something that the associate minister himself, during the 29th Legislature, was opposed to. The opposition that I had mentioned in earlier debates was around the labour legislation changes of Bill 17 in the 29th Legislature, which proposed, of course, many different labour changes within one single ministry, whereas here we have approximately 13 different changes across six different ministries. I can't help but wonder what the associate minister would have said had the previous government introduced a piece of legislation like that. I bet that he would have been very much opposed to that or maybe tried to break it up into a bunch of different parts, things like that.

Nonetheless, here we are looking at a ministry that was tasked to create an atmosphere that will create jobs and will grow the economy. Yet, you know, allowing a museum to better manage its assets and its displays: I'm struggling to see how that is creating jobs and how that is growing the economy.

You know, as we go through this bill, we see changes to the Forests Act, and I would probably agree that speeding up the process for those types of things would definitely move things along. Of course, I have heard the associate minister in the past being a little bit critical of a minister receiving greater powers to be able to move things along. It's kind of like what I've said before on different pieces of legislation, how we've said things in the past, but then we're doing something now, and they're contradictory. It sends a bit of a signal, I think, to outside investors that Alberta is confused about what it's trying to accomplish. We shall see how this one moves forward. My hope is that this will allow the Agriculture and Forestry minister to move some projects along a little bit quicker.

When we look at the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Foundation Act, this of course has not existed since 2002, so this will remove it from the legislation. Again, Madam Speaker, how is something like this creating jobs? How is something like this growing the economy? I realize that sometimes a government will look for low-hanging fruit to deal with here, but it looks like there wasn't even really an effort on behalf of the minister to just reach up to grab that low-hanging fruit, preferring to maybe find what was just already laying on the ground. This could have probably been dealt with through a statutes act and not red tape, but I guess, you know, that when you're looking at your ministry costing Alberta taxpayers $10 million over the next three and a half years, you'd better make some kind of a work project in order to justify your ministry. Clearly, right now the only job that's been created has been the minister's job. That has been it.

Mr. Schmidt: He has staff, too.

Mr. Nielsen: I guess he does have staff, too. That's correct. I guess we shouldn't forget about them.

We also see some changes within small-power research and development. Although repealing this may be a good idea, again, I see little interest on behalf of this government with regard to renewable and alternative energy sources. We do have a climate crisis facing us here, and if we don't start taking action on it now, it's going to be our future generations that are literally going to pay the price. We've seen weather events, you know, the 1-in-100-years events that have taken place. We've seen three or four of them just within the last decade alone. The costs for those kinds of events are climbing more and more with each one. I think it would be incumbent upon the government to maybe embrace renewable and alternative energy sources with a little bit more vigour. Hopefully, this change will inspire them to take that on and help reduce our emissions here within the province of Alberta.

We also see some changes around the Alberta Health Act. Specifically, one of the things I wanted to point out is with regard to the removal of chiropractic services. Upon speaking with the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors, they were not consulted on this change. I have unfortunately not been able to hear back from them on their review of this. The only way they found out about it was, of course, through a media report, a bit of a pattern which I've seen with this government around different consultations.

One of the ones at the forefront in our minds right now is the hijacking of pensions. For instance, the teachers were not consulted on this. We've heard from literally tens of thousands of teachers that are upset with this. If it was such a good plan, Madam Speaker, then they could have brought it to them. When we're looking at things like Bill 25, again I wonder just how much consultation was done.

That would then lead me around to the one item that I want to highlight first, the Safety Codes Act and the changes that are being proposed there. If we can give our forestry industry the opportunity to promote their products and their businesses right here within the province of Alberta, that's certainly not a bad thing, but I think that one of the voices that has been absent throughout all the discussions around building codes has been fire. They have some concerns around that in terms of getting into those structures to be able to put them out. What I've heard consistently from fire is: when we're looking at the building codes, we're focused, as we should be, on getting people out of the building should a fire occur, but we also have to keep in mind that someone has to go in to try to put that fire out. Their concern around floor collapse, building collapse has been absent from those types of discussions around building codes in the act.

I am hoping, should this go forward, Madam Speaker, that those voices will be added to the conversation. I'm going to advocate very, very strongly for that. Even at the federal level we've seen an absence of that when we're dealing with building codes. Again, I hope the government will take this very, very seriously, will bring them to the table, and will allow the changes that will come from the safety codes to create a safer environment for all with regard to that.

We've also seen some changes around the Municipal Government Act, and one thing that I wanted to specifically highlight was around the ICFs. Unfortunately, the amendment I brought forward earlier to Bill 25 was not accepted by the government. This was something that RMA was hoping to have changed. They felt quite strongly. As a matter of fact, out of 46 of their 69 members that were polled around this subject, 41 per cent of them were not so confident or not confident at all with regard to being able to complete their ICFs prior to the deadline of April 1, 2020. I had proposed that we extend that by one year to give them enough time to complete those. Some municipalities have as many as 12 to 15 of those on the go right now.

But, of course, what will happen now is that should they not be able to complete those ICFs, it will then proceed to the arbitration process, which could take up to another year, which means that we should have probably just extended that date by one year and allowed those municipalities to get that work done. Really, it kind of feels like we are creating some red tape when Bill 25 is supposed to be reducing the red tape, Madam Speaker.

You know, again we're seeing a pattern where pieces of legislation that are being brought forward were not consulted on. The RMA would have really appreciated having their voice heard around that. Not that they have any problems with most of the changes that are proposed within Bill 25, Madam Speaker, but this will create some problems for them.

So, unfortunately, I'm not really in a position at this time to be able to support this type of legislation. I think decisions around red tape are very clearly being made within the ministries themselves. That was made very, very clear during estimates. Treasury Board, Municipal Affairs, Labour: we've seen other ministries that are very clearly making their own red tape decisions. I think the $10 million that Albertans are being asked to pay for this ministry could be better served in other directions. Maybe we could look at giving AISH recipients that money and being able to raise up their lifestyle.

With that, I shall take my seat. My hope is that all members will seriously consider voting against this bill, and maybe we can find more efficient ways with which to bring legislation like this forward.

Again I would like to highlight that I do hope that around the safety codes – the reality is that the government does have the majority – they do bring fire to the table when they're looking forward and creating the regulations around the Safety Codes Act, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker. I rise this morning to speak in favour of the third reading of Bill 25. You know, I have listened to some of the arguments that have been put forward by the members opposite against this bill. It is very important to note my disappointment with the members opposite. On one hand, they seem to have their cake and, at the same time, eat it. They have spoken in favour of some of the things they like about this bill. Ordinarily speaking, you would think that they would vote for them. It is important that we listen carefully to what they are saying. This is not about them not liking the content of this bill. Again I go back to their view on government. We have dedicated the time and resources to make sure that we eliminate all of the burdens that we as a government have imposed on businesses, on municipalities. They do not philosophically support stuff like that. To the contrary, they want to heap on more red tape, big government. That is their idea of how governments should run, which we fundamentally disagree with.

Madam Speaker, I am going to speak specifically about some of the aspects of Bill 25 that pertain to my ministry. I am glad the member opposite, the Member for Edmonton-Decore, did indicate one of them, which is the Safety Codes Act's amendment, the repeal of a particular section that at this point in time only allows for the construction of six-storey buildings. When in a time of serious economic challenges, especially with respect to our oil and gas and our agricultural sector, and we have put forward an amendment that would help that particular struggling industry, you would think, again, that that in itself should be a consideration while members opposite vote for this bill. We're now allowing the construction of 12-storey buildings with wood, something that has been welcomed so much by that particular industry and something that they have lobbied for for years while the members opposite were in government. They didn't get it done, and finally we are getting it done. Despite their, you know, good talk and agreement that that's something that we ought to do, they are voting against it.

But, Madam Speaker, the other aspects of municipal affairs that impact this particular bill: I'm going to just give you a few examples. I heard them talk yesterday. They were saying: why would you extend the requirement for a by-election to be held from 90 days to 120 days? They took issue with that. You know, I can't tell you how many ministerial orders I have had to sign seeking an extension from 90 days to 120 days. I am having to spend so much of my time dealing with the request for an extension. Again, you would think that that would be a welcome development, that rather than municipalities having to send out this request any time they needed a by-election, in my experience – and I'm sure members opposite, those of them who have been part of cabinet, would know. They would not disagree with this. This is a constant request for extension. Finally, we are removing that particular red tape that requires our municipalities to come to us every single time they need an extension to extend the time period required for a by-election to occur. That's number one.

Number two. First, I heard the Member for Edmonton-Decore talk about intermunicipal collaboration frameworks, otherwise known as ICFs. Madam Speaker, let's be clear. The intermunicipal collaboration frameworks are a valuable tool to get municipalities working. They're meant to get them to work together, but what we have seen is that, again, these are – you know, I also heard the member opposite talk about the need for an extension from the deadline of April 2020. Again, this is something that they put in place, not us, so we inherited this problem from them. Our job is the difficulties that we have heard from our municipalities with the ICFs: how do we fix them?

That is exactly what the changes that we have proposed in Bill 25 with respect to ICFs seek to accomplish. Let's be clear. We now made it easier for municipalities to work together to build these agreements while still keeping the intent of having municipalities work together to find efficiencies. In particular, Madam Speaker, these changes will make it easier for municipalities to adopt ICFs, allowing them to do it by resolution instead of by bylaw. Think about that. Think about the amount of resources, staff costs that they would require when municipalities begin to formulate bylaws, the process in itself that goes into all of that. Now, as a consequence of Bill 25 they will be able to accomplish that by a simple resolution. That will save council time and money.

Madam Speaker, we also allow individual municipalities to notify us of when the ICF is complete instead of providing us with a full copy of that agreement. Again, this will save them time, and it will save them money. Most importantly, we have significantly simplified the contents of an ICF, giving municipalities more flexibility about what matters will be addressed within the agreement.

Madam Speaker, I also heard about arbitration: you know, how do we resolve disputes that come up as a consequence of ICFs? Let's be clear. The current legislation has created a burdensome and unnecessary dispute resolution process that doesn't make sense for Alberta's municipalities. The proposed changes not only limit what an arbitrator can provide rulings on; they also ensure that this process aligns with the Arbitration Act, the standard legislation all arbitrators use to help them resolve disputes. This will make it easier both for municipalities and arbitrators.

Madam Speaker, the other change that we are proposing has to do with the rightsizing of intermunicipal planning, and we will find that in sections 631 and 631.1. The current legislation creates a significant and unnecessary regulatory burden by requiring our municipalities to develop intermunicipal development plans, which then identify the kinds of development that occur on their shared border. These changes that we have proposed will make it easier for municipalities who share a border that don't have any significant growth to not have to complete these plans, an often onerous and complex process.

Again, this will save them time and money, and if that is not red tape reduction, I don't know what that is. Maybe the members opposite again need to, you know, think it through, when we bring substantive changes that will improve the lives of businesses and communities, rather than to always have to run to their ideological beliefs. That also eliminates the need for ICFs to have IDPs as part of their framework, ensuring that even if there isn't growth in the region, municipalities still have the opportunity to discuss shared services.

You know, Madam Speaker, the other proposed change that we are making is streamlining assessment processes, otherwise something we've called incorrect, when there is incorrect assessment information. You'll find that in sections 291, 295, 467(1), and 665(4). Currently the MGA creates a number of unnecessary and unclear rules around assessment and assessment processes, and we are making amendments to make this more straightforward. For example, we are clarifying that assessors and the assessment review boards don't need to use incorrect information.

We are also making it clear that assessment review boards can both increase and decrease assessments. We're also making a clarification about what improvements are assessable if they are being used as part of a manufacturing or processing facility. These changes will clarify and streamline the assessment process both for municipalities but also for individual businesses.

You know, Madam Speaker, I have heard the argument from members opposite about: why don't we use a different legislative tool to address the changes that we're making here? What we heard them talk about: they do not understand that what they are proposing is – in those cases only where there are no disagreements, there are no contentious issues, that's when you use the statutes amendment as a tool. Oftentimes this is always what I find with the members opposite. You know, they try to frame arguments in a way that doesn't really make sense. There is a defined process. There are defined changes and amendments that you could use the statutes amendment tool to accomplish. Those are really in matters where you are just cleaning things up. But you can tell, looking at some of the changes that we have, reports from the municipal government side, that that would be highly unsuitable, to use the statutes amendment act as a tool to accomplish this.

Madam Speaker, one of the changes that we have also proposed has to do with meeting minutes, section 208(1)(a)(i). The current legislation prevents municipalities from recording now something as simple as this, minutes with notes or comments. However, we heard from many municipalities that they would prefer to do so because it provides important context for residents. These changes would remove that requirement and make it so municipalities can provide more information to their residents.

Madam Speaker, we are also making changes with respect to the assessment review board and subdivision appeal board clerks. Right now the legislation requires that both assessment review board clerks and subdivision appeal board clerks must be designated officers. There is no additional authority provided by naming them as designated officers. We are removing this as an unnecessary requirement. Again, that will speed up the process of the work done by the assessment review board.

Madam Speaker, we are also allowing electronic notices. You will find that in section 608.1. Right now municipalities must send a number of notices in the mail. These changes will allow municipalities to send this information electronically should their citizens choose to opt in, again, a typical red tape reduction, something that we don't need given this day and age.

Madam Speaker, we're also removing the annual bylaw requirement in section 369.1. Right now there are a number of tax bylaws that don't change but have to be passed every single year. These changes, again, will remove that requirement provided the bylaws remain the same. This will save valuable time in council meetings throughout this province. Now, we see this all the time, bylaws that don't change. Nothing has happened that will require council to change them, but every single year council is required to revisit those particular bylaws and repass them. If that is not red tape, I don't know what that is.

Madam Speaker, we are also requiring tax rate bylaw changes. When a municipality, for example, makes an administrative error, they are required to obtain a ministerial order. This is something that – if I haven't dealt with this particular issue, you know, I've dealt . . . [Mr. Madu's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to take an opportunity to address some of the issues that the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West had brought up in regard to this bill. I think that his comments demonstrate his profound ignorance of what goes on here in the Legislature and how legislation is put forward and, indeed, ignorance of what his government is trying to do with this whole red tape ministry. Indeed, we can see many, many examples of why this ministry categorically is both irrelevant and redundant and is a way to try to mislead the public that this UCP government is trying to address certain issues around roadblocks that take place in the government.

You know, I couldn't help but notice just this morning, for example, that the Ministry of Service Alberta has a release saying that they're cutting red tape for Alberta condos. I haven't had a chance to read it yet. It just came up on the feed from the provincial government. But there you go. It could very well be a good bill, the Minister of Service Alberta looking for ways to perhaps amend something that's happening in regard to condominiums. Certainly, there are a lot of problems associated with leaky condos and the administration of condos and so forth, so the ministry moved forward and made some changes, and perhaps they did a good change. Is this anything to do with the ministry of red tape? No. Is it another layer by which this government can spend millions of dollars, tens of millions of dollars for a publicity stunt to say that they are reducing red tape for the people of Alberta?

You know, quite frankly, many if not all of the sections of this bill, Bill 25, which is hardly worth the paper that it's printed on, are things that you can do within your ministry. In fact, the Minister of Municipal Affairs should do well to take advice from his own department. They will tell him very clearly that he was fully capable of doing all of these changes to municipal affairs within his department and, quite frankly, probably without even having to use the time here in the Legislature to administer those changes to municipal affairs.

Many of these other sections: same thing, right? I heard the Minister of Energy speaking yesterday about changes that she was going to make around an issue, again with tacit knowledge that, in fact, there's no need to call the minister of red tape to do this. She did it herself and, you know, probably did it much more quickly and more efficiently and with great use of time and value of time, without having to move through this whole dog-and-pony show that they call the ministry of red tape.

I mean, let's just call things for what they are, Madam Speaker. This is an exercise in propaganda, right? Of course, the government needs to deal with these issues in energy and health and municipal affairs and so forth, but all this really ends up being, quite frankly, is another omnibus bill that has things in it that, you know, you could probably accomplish through regulatory means or by using the departments or miscellaneous statutes. Those are all tools that are available to this government.

I mean, I don't know. How much is the red tape ministry costing?

Mr. Nielsen: Ten million.

Mr. Eggen: Ten million dollars – there you go, right? – just exactly at the time when we're looking for ways to save money; $10 million dollars, I know, could certainly be of some assistance in regard to postsecondary education, in regard to health, in regard to core areas where we actually need to make investments during precarious economic times.

It's just really important for all of us to take two steps back and realize what you can actually do and the tools that you use and use them in an authentic, honest way here on the floor of this Legislature. Don't make up some bogus ministries and, you know, call bills something that they're not. Quite frankly, do your job.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise to speak to Bill 25, the Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019. As many of my colleagues have brought up, I also have some concerns with this legislation, mainly that it does at the end of the day seem to be a make-work project for the ministry of red tape reduction. That's a concern for me at a time when we are talking about reducing the cost of government while also adding an entirely new ministry for something that, as has been stated often by this side of the House, could be done within the ministries themselves.

I think that through the process of estimates we got a clear picture of that as our critic for red tape reduction asked every single minister or nearly all of the ministers about their capacity to eliminate red tape within their own ministry. They all seemed quite capable to do that on their own with the civil servants that they have within their own ministries. They seemed like they were moving forward on changes that would have reduced red tape without the need for an entirely new ministry at the cost of $10 million over the next three to four years. It's been stated that this could have been done through a miscellaneous statutes amendment act – I would tend to agree with that – some of it even done through regulations, without having to take the time of members in this House, where we could be debating important things like the fact that this government is cutting funding to classrooms and to municipalities.

I will get more to it here shortly, but when we hear from the Minister of Municipal Affairs that changes like changes to the framework for municipalities and growth management boards and his unwillingness to change the date that's in the legislation here, an opportunity to work with our municipalities and work with the RMA, who raised concerns with the date of April 1, 2020, I mean, that is – what? – four or five months away from now: with the cuts that they've been given by this Minister of Municipal Affairs and with the changes that have happened, they are expected to come up with these frameworks.

The consequences of not doing so, well, push through to arbitration. That's going to be a concern for these municipalities, and they've raised their concerns with this minister. I'm not sure why there isn't a willingness to amend such a small piece – well, it's quite a big piece of this legislation. I'm not sure why the minister is unwilling to budge on that date and the date for that framework. That's very concerning.

Just looking at the changes that we've seen to advocates, the advocates that are offered by the provincial government, and the cuts that we've seen there, I mean, we're supposed to take Bill 25 at its face value. You know, we've only seen this legislation within the last week, week and a half, and we're suppose to take it at face value, that it's doing what the government is telling us it's doing. On the other hand, we see this government amalgamating, for lack of better terms, advocates in our province and saying that that's a reduction of red tape. That's very concerning to me, Madam Speaker, as we see cuts to seniors' benefits and as we see the unwillingness of this government to move forward on supporting people on AISH. Now we're actually putting these advocates into one area instead of having several advocates for the different areas. That's very concerning.

The other fact is that this UCP government has brought in a party insider to advocate on behalf of Albertans against changes that might be coming forward from this UCP government. That really seems like a conflict of interest. Once again, we're suppose to take Bill 25 at face value, but in other instances what we've been told is not how things are going to play out. That's very concerning to me.

Once again, the changes in here, some more drastic than others, to Agriculture and Forestry, Minister of Community and Social Services, culture, Energy, Health, Municipal Affairs, and Education, changes to many different departments in this omnibus bill, which are very concerning with the amount of time that we've had to spend with this legislation – well, really, there still are questions that are unanswered by this government. That's concerning as well.

When we talk about red tape reduction, it really should be about getting people back to work: how do we do that? Unfortunately, nothing within this legislation is going to get people back to work. Maybe some small pieces, but I don't think I've seen any of that, getting people back to work, in this legislation.

Once again, as we went through the estimates process, as we asked the ministries, "What is your ministry doing to get people back to work? How are you speeding up approvals within environment?" – the fact is that this government has reduced positions in departments who are in charge of approving applications in environment and essentially putting people back to work. Unfortunately, when you start eliminating those positions of environmental protection officers and people who are working on moving forward applications, well, we are not going to reach the targets that we are trying to reach when you're eliminating something like over 200 positions from the ministry of environment.

Then on the other hand, you're going to say: well, you know, we lost all those positions, but we'll still be able to do just as much work. I don't think that's the truth. The people in the ministry or the department of environment across this province, the people who work hard to make sure that all things are considered before moving forward on applications and approvals: I don't think those people appreciate that this government is reducing the people in their department and then saying: "You have to do twice as much work. What are you doing?" That's very concerning. Once again, when we see changes like that, unfortunately we can't accept things from this government at face value, especially in omnibus legislation like we see here.

Now, the Minister of Municipal Affairs also said, you know, that the NDP opposition may agree with very small pieces of what we're seeing here, so why won't they accept the whole thing? Well, unfortunately, that's not how it works, Madam Speaker. Just because we support one little piece of this omnibus bill before us does not mean we can support all the other things that are of concern to us. That is the job of us as legislators in this Legislature, to bring forward our concerns, bring forward the concerns of the people in our community, and unfortunately there are still concerns that are unaddressed in here. Once again, as we've seen through Bill 22 and essentially every bill that's come through this Legislature in this session from this UCP government, we have not had adequate time to take these concerns back to our constituents, and we are going to see that once again here.

The fact is that when legislation is brought forward so hastily, as it is in Bill 25, and we see changes that are brought forward to the Municipal Government Act and concerns raised by the RMA and other organizations, well, really, that should give us cause for pause. We should really sit down with these municipalities, hear their concerns. Though it seems that they support certain aspects of Bill 25 or the changes to the MGA, on this very important one about building frameworks for municipalities and their boards and working with the other municipalities around them, unfortunately, they have concerns with this, and they have not been addressed.

Madam Speaker, at this time I do not believe I will be supporting this legislation. You know, the changes that we see to ABCs in here seem relatively – I want to be careful with my words – harmless in terms of the fact that some of these advisory boards, the UCP says, have not been used since 2012. But, once again, I still have concerns about removing advisory boards at a time when this UCP government is moving so hastily to reduce supports in education, for seniors, in AISH programming, and across the board. When we talk about reducing ABCs, when we talk about reducing the ability of advocates at a time like that, that's very concerning for me.

The fact is that in a democracy, in a strong democracy, there will be the opportunity for dissenting voices to be heard, and what we've seen from this government, as they cut back on the number of advocates and they put party insiders in positions to be the advocates on behalf of Albertans, is, once again, really, what I believe to be a conflict of interest. Unfortunately, it's setting a precedent that this government does not actually want to hear from the people that their legislation is affecting.

Once again, unfortunately, Madam Speaker, I will not be supporting this legislation as it stands right now. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 25. Every time somebody from the government side gets up and speaks about this bill and explains what red tape is, the meaning of red tape is completely lost on me. Every time I have to look it up and google what red tape actually is. Again, when I was looking at it this morning, I think it's something that's referred to as "excessive bureaucracy or adherence to rules and formalities . . . in public business." It refers to excessive regulations or rigid conformity to formal rules that are bureaucratic and hinder or prevent action or decision-making. That's the understanding I have of the words "red tape" and what red tape reduction would mean.

There are many clear examples in our province, in our regulations, where we can make improvements; for instance, the New West Partnership trade agreement between Alberta, B.C., Saskatchewan, and now Manitoba as well. That was one example of how governments were working together to reduce red tape, to facilitate business, to facilitate transactions across provincial boundaries. With red tape, I have something like that in my mind. That's what the reduction of red tape would look like. It will facilitate some process, it will facilitate small businesses, businesses to do things more efficiently and without any bureaucratic hindrance or without any adherence to rigid formal rules.

Before I go to the provisions of this bill, I also want to say that when the government was campaigning during the election, they used red tape reduction in a completely different sense. At that point they wanted Albertans to believe that there are managers managing the managers in the public service, that somehow there is bloated bureaucracy and that that's why processes are not very efficient, and that that's not what they would do. But now they are using that language, this bill, to just, I guess, check off something that they promised during the election. With this bill, they can check off that they have fulfilled that promise. However, I think what they are doing here doesn't reduce red tape within the meaning of that word. Rather, it's reducing services, eliminating services, all to pay for their $4.7 billion corporate handout.

If we look at the different acts that were changed, let's, I guess, start with the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Foundation Act. The government says that the foundation has not existed since 2002, and they're cleaning up that act. I don't understand how something that hasn't existed since 2002 and was never used was a hurdle, how that was obstructing any kind of decision-making. It's just a cleanup that is usually done in a miscellaneous statutes act, so this change doesn't do anything to reduce red tape. I think the Minister of Municipal Affairs would agree with me that this is not red tape at all. This thing hasn't existed, wasn't used since 2002. It's a cleanup, and standard government practice is that those kinds of things are dealt with in a miscellaneous statutes act.

We look at other changes; for instance, the Small Power Research and Development Act. Essentially, this bill repeals that act. The government is saying that all contracts have been concluded under this act and that the small-scale generation regulation already supports market-based electricity generation from renewable and alternative energy sources. Again, this act has already been spent. Whatever business was happening under this act, those contracts have already been concluded. Again, this is a cleanup typically done under a miscellaneous statutes act. It was not adding to any kind of red tape, and removing it is just a cleanup. It's not red tape reduction within the meaning of those words. I guess that repealing that may be a good idea, but so far the government has shown very little interest in renewable and green or alternative energy. I hope that by doing so, they are not just signalling once more that they have no interest in that kind of electricity, in those kinds of renewable or alternative energy programs.

Similarly, this piece of legislation also deals with the Hydro and Electric Energy Act. This change and also another change, that is in the Forests Act: for both these changes what they are doing is changing the process. Instead of cabinet approving a project or instead of legislation to approve a project, now the minister will be able to do these approvals.

A minister approving things may be more efficient and may cut bureaucracy, but I think that it's consolidating powers within the hands of the minister, and there won't be any oversight. Again, this change may not necessarily be red tape reduction. What we have seen from ministers when they had the power was, for instance, appointing failed UCP candidates to the energy war room, appointing your donors to the boards, and those kinds of things. So consolidating power in the minister's hands may not be a good thing. There may need to be better oversight instead of just consolidating all the power in one minister for decision-making. Again, I don't know if this will cut red tape or create some other issues that we have seen in other appointments and other processes.

Similarly, under the Health Professions Act, Bill 25 dissolves the Health Professions Advisory Board. The government is saying that this board has not been used since 2012. If something has not been used since 2012, it's clearly not in the way of any action or any decision-making. It's just a cleanup, and for the most part governments have done that in miscellaneous statutes acts. Again, in no way, shape, or manner within the meaning of the words "red tape reduction" does that amount to red tape reduction or even come close to reducing red tape. It's just a cleanup, standard practice in a miscellaneous statutes act. That's what governments previously have done, and by previously I mean for decades.

This repeals outdated references to "chiropractic services" in the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. It changes it, updates it. I don't know how it's red tape reduction because we have stopped using a term, "chiropractic services," and changed it to some other term. This piece of legislation just changes that terminology and wants us to believe, wants Albertans to believe that that amounts to red tape reduction. By no stretch can you bring that action under your red tape reduction. It's clearly not. It's just, again, a cleanup of legislation, and typically that has been done by previous governments under miscellaneous statutes acts. I don't know if they will count these changes toward their goal of cutting red tape by one-third and if that's what red tape cutting will look like.

Then there are changes to the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act. It changes the consent through an online registry and certainly makes the process easier. But, again, we don't know what kind of consultation was done with organ donor organizations or Albertans in general and whether it was a fit for Service Alberta or whether it would have been better for Health to take the lead on this one.

Lastly, I will speak a little bit about the M.S.I. Foundation Act. These changes update the board appointment process. The government says that the appointment process has not been changed since 1970. The way I think this change may work – at least, we are skeptical that it may be another opportunity for the UCP to appoint their friends, insiders, and 22 other failed candidates. One has already been appointed, so 22 remaining failed candidates.

Similarly, other changes in the Municipal Government Act are changes to their charter agreements. The municipal government gets 120 days instead of 90 days to call a by-election. We already know that this government initially, during the campaign at least, didn't mention that they would not respect the charters, and there may be some suggestion that they may have said that they would even honour those agreements. They didn't, and now there are further changes to that.

I don't know what kind of consultation was done with municipalities. These changes could very well – these are policy changes, substantial changes – have been brought forward by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, not of Red Tape Reduction. These are substantial changes. These have nothing to do with process. These are policy changes that will require consultation and conversation with municipalities.

Similarly, the government gets 120 days instead of 90 days to call a by-election. Before, a municipal government was able to do that in 90 days. Adding another month to that is not red tape reduction by any stretch of those words. It's adding more red tape. Instead of 90 days, now they have 120 days, so that will slow down these by-elections. I don't know who was consulted on this change, which municipalities were saying that they need to move to 120 days, and what the reasons were for that move. I think there is a lot that needs to be explained by this government. Again, if we look at this bill, this change is fairly substantive. It's a policy change, and I don't think it amounts to red tape reduction.

Considering that lately the government has gone after municipalities a fair bit, using this omnibus bill to hide changes to the Municipal Government Act I don't think is a fair use of this Legislature. As I said before, the rationale behind these changes needs to be explained. I think it will help us if we know what kind of consultation was done with municipalities, which municipalities were in favour, whether only pro-business councils were consulted or if councils in general were consulted, all of those kinds of things.

On safety codes: that's also a substantive change, that allows wood buildings to be higher than six storeys. That may very well be . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for recognizing me. I'm just listening to the talking points from the Member for Calgary-McCall, and I guess I'm a little confused here. Out of that whole thing, I gather that what he's saying is that if the name of this bill was just slightly different – he doesn't see any problems with what the content of this bill is. He seems to agree with everything that's in there, that they are improvements and that they're all seen to have a positive effect.

I guess what I'm trying to ask is: maybe the Member for Calgary-McCall could clarify, you know, that if the name was just slightly different, this would go through. I can't see any other reason in anything he said that was a clear objection to the positive things that are contained in the bill. So I'm just kind of standing up to see if he can clarify his position as to whether just a simple name change is what he's looking for.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. What I was saying is – I'm pleased that at least one member realized that what the bill said that it's doing is not what the bill is doing. That was the purpose of my comments this morning. What I said is that the bill is claiming that it's a red tape reduction act. I started my comments with a definition of what red tape reduction means. It means that you are removing "excessive regulation or rigid conformity" to some kind of process that hinders decision-making, that hinders action. That's what red tape reduction means. You're absolutely right that this bill says Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act. It doesn't do anything along those lines.

The things that are contained in it, as I said, may very well be good things, but they are not reducing red tape. For instance, the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Foundation Act hasn't existed since 2002, and removing that doesn't really do anything to reduce red tape. It's simply something that was sitting there, that governments have done through miscellaneous statutes acts. You're right that the name of the bill says something different. The bill actually is not doing anything along those lines.

Similarly, on the Small Power Research and Development Act, every contract, according to the government, has been concluded. This act doesn't do anything. It doesn't serve any purpose. It's not red tape. It's just sitting there and needs to be cleaned up through a miscellaneous statutes act. Again, you're right that the name of the bill is very confusing because it doesn't do anything in these changes.

Other things. For instance, there was one more thing on the Health Professions Act. It dissolves the Health Professions Advisory Board, that according to the government has not been used since 2012. So if a thing has not been used since 2012, help me understand how that can be red tape, how that can hinder any decision-making, how that can hinder any action. It's just sitting there and can be cleaned up through a miscellaneous statutes act. It's not red tape reduction.

Again, I agree with you. You're right. The name of the bill is so confusing. If it was something different, I may have been able to analyze these changes a bit differently. But since the government wants us to believe that this bill is about red tape reduction and it doesn't do anything to reduce red tape, that's why I'm confused.

Sure, there are changes that I may not disagree with. For instance, this bill will allow wood structures of more than six storeys. It's not red tape reduction at all, but it's a matter of, I guess, discussion and consultation, analysis on whether they're safe or not, on what kind of supporting infrastructure we need. It's a policy question. Again, it's not red tape reduction.

Similarly, with the Municipal Government Act, before they were to call a by-election in 90 days. Adding another 30 days, making it 120 days for a government to call a by-election instead of 90: how is that red tape reduction? That's why I was confused.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 25, the Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019. I have to say that I agree with a lot of the conversation that's happening on this side of the House about this piece of legislation. I think that in the past I've made reference to this ministry as being a little bit of a Seinfeld episode, a ministry about nothing.

[Mr. van Dijken in the chair]

There's a lot of information in this bill that could better be defined and used under the ministries that hold the piece of legislation that they're proposing to change. We know that ministers have the ability to go through their ministry and look at efficiencies, inefficiencies and make those decisions to streamline things, to make things easier. The fact that there is a ministry that specifically is on red tape reduction seems a little bit ridiculous in the sense that it's adding one more level of government looking through other ministries that are quite capable of doing that.

We've heard a lot from the critic from Edmonton-Decore, and I just have to say on the record, Mr. Speaker, that he's been doing some incredible work and advocacy in reaching out to the many different industries that are being impacted by this legislation. One of the themes that we're hearing is that there hasn't been a lot of consultation and that people aren't being asked when their industry is being impacted.

So we have questions on this side of the House when some of these things are coming forward through this piece of legislation. Who did they ask? Did they ask Albertans if this was something that was perceived to be a barrier? Did they have conversations with the ministers directly to say, you know, "Is this something that you would like to address under your ministry?" which makes sense to me, that they're capable of dealing with their own ministry and looking through their own capabilities, or is this something that was just kind of concocted within this ministry to show that they are perhaps doing something? That is a question that I have.

Specifically, when I look through this significant piece of legislation, there are so many different ministries that are involved. We have Agriculture and Forestry, Community and Social Services, Culture, Energy, Health, Municipal Affairs, Education. All of these ministries, I would argue, are very likely capable of reducing red tape within their own ministry, yet here we are debating this piece of legislation.

I would like to speak a little bit to some of the things that impact culture and, in my opinion, should have been addressed through the culture ministry, specifically to the Glenbow Museum and the Glenbow-Alberta Institute Act. It's something that removes a provision prescribing the management and display of items in the Glenbow collection. The government is saying that this will enable more long-term loans and changes how the Glenbow can manage its inventory. I would like further explanation as to what this means and how they came to this decision. Was this something that the museum had asked for? Was this something that they had heard through their ministry of culture? Perhaps it is. It's unclear how this decision came to be. Was it something that the Ministry of Red Tape Reduction came up with?

I know I've been meeting with museums all across the province. We've been listening to their incredible stories and prideful stories about what they do to contribute to the history of Alberta as well as what they do to engage with people that visit Alberta. We have museums in every corner of this province, Mr. Speaker. As a mom I've taken my children many, many times to the museums, the Glenbow included. I have to say that the curators of these museums, the volunteers that come in, and the staff work so hard to make sure that the experience of the person going to the museum is incredible.

I would say that I would trust the museums and their curators to make these decisions about their collections. I know these things are planned well in advance. They're constantly coming up with new experiences and new ways to tell the stories of the beautiful history that we have in the province. The Royal Alberta Museum here in Edmonton is highlighting some of the incredible stories of Alberta, of our indigenous communities. We have beautiful stories about the prairies. We talk about different collections that are coming through the museum, and I know that those decisions happen well in advance. In seeing that there's this change that's being proposed, I'm curious how this came to be.

One of the things that we saw in the budget was that museums would be getting less money, and the suggestion to make up for that is to charge people more in admissions, so asking Albertans to pay more while the museums are being given less to run their programming. I don't think that that's very fair. I think that that's probably something that museums absolutely did not ask for.

In the fall, Mr. Speaker, I attended the Alberta Museums Association conference gala and awards. I have to say that it was an absolutely incredible experience to hear from many museums and individuals across the province that spoke with such passion about the work that they do bringing the experiences to Albertans and to people that travel through our province. From military museums to the Edmonton Valley Zoo to a museum in St. Albert: just absolute pride. A lot of the discussion was about telling stories, being able to share experiences, and a focus on education with our young people.

Like I mentioned, as a mom I've often taken my kids to museums where we hear there's a new collection, and they're excited to go and see it. The Vikings collection that is happening at the RAM right now is something that I didn't think my 15-year-old would be excited to go and see, but he sure was. We put our hats on, and we went in and looked at what it was like to be a Viking. It's those experiences that you can have as a participant walking through the museum, or it's the experts that bring in that collection, that have that history, that took the time to understand and learn and then turn around and educate the public about that. It's incredible.

I know as a mom that those were some really great years when my kids were little, trying to find out what we could do in the city or around the province, being able to turn them loose on the museum staff and let them ask all of their hows and whys and have experts from the museum share the story, where I didn't have to answer those endless, endless whys with my children. I know it's something that they take great pride in. I know that they want to work with the government, and they want to be able to share the experience.

I'm curious if the culture ministry or the Red Tape Reduction ministry had these conversations and if this came from something that was authentic and came from the museum itself saying, "We would like this in place," or if this was something where they said: "Okay. We need to add one more ministry to this Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, so let's choose this." It feels like some of this stuff is just thrown together for the sense of throwing it together, which is a little bit concerning because the ministries, like the museums, are the experts in their area, and they know what's best. They should be having those conversations, and I fear that those conversations aren't happening with the experts. Perhaps this isn't even an ask from the Glenbow Museum. It might have been. It's not clear. This is definitely something that hasn't been explained.

I know that what the museums are looking for in the province is support to be able to share their story. When you have little communities, rural communities, that have a really great museum, it's a way to attract the public when they're travelling through. There's a fantastic museum, an aviation museum, in southern Alberta that I hadn't heard of. We were driving through on our way to Lethbridge, and lo and behold there was this beautiful museum, so we stopped in and, you know, were able to enjoy the museum and learn about some of the history of aviation in the province. Had it not been for the museum, I probably never would have stopped there.

Stopping at the museum also led me to stop at their candy store, and I have to say that I got some fantastic candy. It's investing in that small rural community in Alberta. The whole community comes together to celebrate these wonderful little pieces of history that they have. I know it's a place where families come together, and they talk about the history. There's pride when they're engaging in their museum. Sometimes in the small communities it's just a great hub for community to come together.

When we're talking about red tape reduction, I would suggest that the government created this ministry to say: "Check. We did this as a promise made, promise kept." So it's more wording than actual action. Like the Member for Edmonton-West Henday mentioned, if we're really talking about red tape reduction, what that means, and looking through this legislation, it should be about getting people back to work. I don't see how many of these actually accomplish that.

The strategy right now should be taking care of Albertans and looking at what we can do to support them and get them back to work at this time. Changing the structure of some of these things that the ministries could have done themselves is not getting people back to work. I would suggest that it's just smoke and mirrors and somewhat, like I mentioned earlier, like an episode of Seinfeld, a bill about nothing, a ministry about nothing that really has no impact on the betterment of Albertans.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

It's a little bit concerning that there is so much in this piece of legislation – like I mentioned earlier, all of the different ministries that are impacted – without a lot of outcomes. These things could have all been easily addressed, if needed, by the ministry that holds the portfolio. I don't feel that we're at a place right now, Madam Speaker, where we can say, "Yes, I believe that enough consultation has happened, that this is actually something that is reducing red tape" as opposed to just saying that it is, saying those fancy words. It's a word that this government has used, that they're taking pride in, but it's not actually doing what I believe they intended it to do, which is to remove some of that bureaucracy and to get people back to work, to make life easier for Albertans. I don't see how the majority of this piece of legislation does that, and I don't understand the rationale of taking it away from the ministries, which are quite capable of dealing with that.

When we talk about the Glenbow Museum, I don't know why it couldn't have been addressed under the ministry of culture. I think that she's a minister that can go through her ministry and meet with the different museums that are represented across the province and have those discussions and make those decisions if it's something that's required. I just question if all of the other ministries have done that.

When we look at the Human Tissue and Organ Donation Act, which some of the members have talked about. I think that anything we do that can make it easier for Albertans to consent to organ donation is absolutely something that is positive. I've spoken very, very openly in this House about my support for education around organ donation. I think that something that is being missed in this is: who should house this information? Does it really need to sit under Red Tape Reduction, or would it be better served under Service Alberta, where the registries of Alberta sit already? They're already the organization that's responsible for getting consent for those that wish to donate their organs.

It's something that should be happening at every registry across the province. Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, I can speak from personal experience that this question isn't asked. And being that my best friend's son is a heart transplant recipient, it's something that I'm very sensitive about, so I'm very aware of how as an Albertan I can become an organ donor. Waiting for it to be asked at the registry, it didn't happen this last time when I went to renew my licence. It's something that's already in place. It's something that already happens, so I would suggest that as a way to continue to support Albertans in becoming organ donors, it has to start with ensuring that the policies that already exist are happening as opposed to making new policies and new regulations. It doesn't make sense.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I had to get up because I appreciated the reference to Seinfeld so much that I felt the need to comment on it. As a huge Seinfeld fan myself I wanted to talk about my favourite show. I want to thank the member for that reference. I also wanted to point out that, as she actually just demonstrated for us, Seinfeld being the show about nothing actually seems to apply to absolutely everything, even here in the Legislature. I think most of us who are Seinfeld fans can think of moments where we have been living life and been able to reference a Seinfeld episode that applied to life. Anyway, thank you for that.

I wanted to talk a little bit because I think there's been an exception taken to the title of this bill, red tape reduction. As well, there's been some exception towards the department itself, saying that this is a way we can save $10 million. I wanted to comment a little bit just because of my history. I used to work at the Mustard Seed. My title was the mobilization strategist. That was kind of a fancy way of saying the volunteer manager, but the reason that they didn't just call me the volunteer manager is because they wanted me to think about mobilization and strategy across the whole organization. This wasn't just about recruiting, training, orientating volunteers and figuring out where they could fit within our organization. This was about coming alongside each department and helping the managers in those departments really think through how they could change their department so that they could include and incorporate the community in the work that they did. The point is that the mission of the organization was mobilization – that was one of our main pillars – but it wasn't happening. It didn't necessarily happen. When you're working with vulnerable people, when you're working in a shelter in crisis, there's always something else that's taking place.

I think that the Member for Edmonton-North West, being a former minister, could attest to the busyness of a ministry and that there's always some new priority on your plate for that day. So the idea of having a department, an area, a champion that is focused on the concept of mobilization or that is focused on the concept of red tape reduction coming and working alongside ministries, alongside government, helping us think through "How can we be better at this?" and making sure that it is a focus, that it is a priority – the idea that this can naturally just be done in the ministries: yeah, that makes sense. It should be done in the ministry. Just like when we worked at the Mustard Seed, our team should have been thinking about how they build their programs to incorporate and include volunteers, but it made a huge difference when there was somebody to do that.

Another example of that was when I worked at the Boys & Girls Clubs of Calgary. The same idea. I managed the shelters. We knew how important natural supports were for the young people that we worked with. We knew how important it was to focus on that, to be able to help wrap people around and reconnect back with family. But, again, we didn't necessarily always have the time to really focus on that or think about how to develop our programs around that. We started a pilot project called the fusion program, where we had a team that was dedicated specifically to doing that work. What we found by developing that team is that they came and worked with our programs, and it changed the entire culture of our organization to make sure that family worked, and natural supports were a part of what everybody did. But it took that catalyst, if you will, to come in and work alongside people to help develop that culture and motivate people towards that end. I've heard a number of speakers talk about whether or not this ministry should even be there. I'm very much supportive of this ministry.

The other thing that I'd like to comment on, too, is that there's been some talk about whether or not there's been consultation happening on this. I know we've been criticized for not consulting on some things, but from my perspective the entire Department of Red Tape Reduction is a consultation process. I know that the associate minister and his team have been stretched across this province trying to hear from people and have created mechanisms for people to be able to speak to this. This has been a massive consultation process to make sure that we're hearing from Albertans across the board, not just in business but also in government bureaucracy, recognizing that the better we are at reducing red tape and redundancies within the bureaucracy, we're going to save money and be more effective and efficient for the Albertans that we serve.

I just wanted to throw all of those things out there to create, you know, some counterpoints to what I've been hearing from the previous four speakers. Thank you very much for the Seinfeld quote. [Mr. Nixon's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Very good timing.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I am very pleased to take the opportunity to say a few words in regard to Bill 25, the Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019. Again, we've sort of heard a theme for the morning, which I think rings true when one looks to common sense and looks to the ways that things get done here in the Legislature. You know, the role of each ministry that we have here represented in this government and in this Legislature is to ensure the delivery of services that they are responsible for and to make adjustments along the way to ensure that those services are delivered in an efficient manner.

Although, you know, we certainly see ebbs and flows of the degree of efficiency in regard to those responsibilities. I think that is an ongoing process. Actually, the comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein are interesting and instructive in a way. Yes, it is important to always take a step back and reflect and perhaps have outside sets of eyes to help move things along – right? – in any given organization, and sometimes it's helpful to have someone point out those things that can be done differently. But the idea that you have a ministry that does do this: then things start to become obscured and confused and, I believe, actually serving to increase the bureaucracy and the so-called red tape that this minister and this ministry is supposed to be charged with reducing.

Again, I mean, I can't think of a better time and place to illustrate this very thing than to shine a light on a release that just came out here this morning, as we were debating this bill, from the Ministry of Service Alberta, that talks about revising regulations, governance around condominiums here in the province of Alberta. I can see that the minister is listening. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that on cursory reading of these changes that Service Alberta are making to condominium governance and so forth, they look pretty good. I think they're things that need to be done, right? I think there are a lot of, you know, overdue things that have been worked on for quite a long time, and here we are with a series of changes to condominium governance around these various things, I guess, in regard to bank accounts and insurance and reporting and so forth.

Two things. Number one, it's important to not categorically say: oh, well, you know, we're just removing regulation here to make things better for condominium owners and governance and so forth. You're changing regulation, right? One of the underlying messages that we get from this red tape ministry generally and this Red Tape Reduction Implementation Act, 2019, specifically is that somehow inherently regulations are bad and that the more you take out, the better. I know that this government has imported this concept from some American jurisdictions, some of them saying that, you know, if you make one law, you've got to take out two kind of thing. We've heard this from different places in the United States.

I mean, the idea behind that inherently is that you're saying: well, regulation in law and governance are somehow inherently bad, and the more you take out, the better off everybody is, right? For example, these changes to the Service Alberta condo thing: again, I could see some definite benefits. I've heard of issues that have come from condo governance and so forth that, you know, needed to be addressed. But it's a question of changing those regulations and sharpening and refreshing them – right? – not just taking things out and taking out regulation. This was all very happily done within the Ministry of Service Alberta.

You know, I noticed, sort of to my amusement, that the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction is kind of tagged onto the release, like colour commentary, and saying, “Hey, this is great,” sort of like Don Cherry talking about a slapshot or whatever and how great that was but having little or nothing to do with the whole process otherwise, right? Let’s call it for what it is, Madam Speaker. The Service Alberta minister is fully capable of doing his job. He seems to have done so at least today, and that’s great. It’s really little or nothing to do with the red tape ministry or ministry reduction or anything like that.

As we move through this specific bill, again, this is very poor governance because it’s sort of a mishmash omnibus bill. You can have statutes amendment acts that come up from time to time in a legislative session for things that maybe come due or need to be addressed or what have you. Often they will be discussed – well, almost always, in fact, they will be discussed with all parties so that you get a briefing on it and you come to an agreement or a concord around: yeah, these are a bunch of things that need to get done, we will put them together, and away we go. Again, this government is importing a very troublesome concept from Ottawa, which is to create substantive omnibus bills that span the globe, the universe of what the provincial government might be doing. You might have some things that are innocuous or self-evident tagged in with something that’s absolutely serious and reprehensible, as we saw with bills 20, 21, and 22.

Then you have Bill 25 popping up like a gopher on the prairies here. What it looks like to me is that the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction sort of made an all call-out and asked ministers if he could just hand them something, please, to put into a basket so that we can show that this red tape ministry is actually worth while or is doing something at least. I can envision, Madam Speaker, sort of a fire drill thing going on, people handing in stuff from the side of their desk and saying: “Okay. Maybe you can have this. You can’t have the condo one because that’s more substantive and we want to have a separate press conference for that, but you can have some small thing that you can tag onto Bill 25.”

Combined in there as well are things that I think are quite troublesome, as the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs talked about in regard to culture and museums and so forth, or the Hydro and Electric Energy Act changes in regard to hydroelectric projects, and the Health Care Insurance Act changes in regard to chiropractic services. You get the point, Madam Speaker. You have this mishmash of things that come together in this bill that – you know, you find to varying degrees. I certainly do see some concerns around some of these things specifically. I just wanted to go through some of them because it’s, I think, incumbent and responsible to do so. You have the Forests Act, talking about entry into forest management agreements. I’m quite certain that this is one of those classic ones that could have been dealt with in a statutes amendment act or by the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry himself. I just think that that seems self-evident. You have the issue around the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Foundation Act, and this repeals this one.

Now, again, it really speaks to me of the utility of having a statutes amendment act. This is a foundation that has not existed for 17 years, which is quite a long time, since 2002. It’s very straightforward to do this. It’s not like there was something – again, if you use the definition as the hon. member explained to us earlier this morning, of moving regulations getting in the way of progress, well, if you have something that’s been lying idle for 17 years, I don’t suppose there’s a whole heck of a lot going on there that would suggest that it’s within the definition of red tape reduction that has meaning. That to itself: I mean, maybe you can repeal the act or what have you. Again, it feels like someone that has tossed their share into the pot for the red tape reduction associate minister, finding something that otherwise they could just leave off to the side of their desk.

I think that the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs talked quite eloquently about the Glenbow collection. I concur with her. I think that a critical issue I know with the Glenbow is that they have one of the best collections of western Canadian history in the world, and they need support to ensure the integrity of that collection. Just trying to change some small regulation on them, that’s great, but I would suggest that’s a great opportunity for us to talk about something substantive in regard to the Glenbow, which is that it needs more support to both ensure the integrity of the collection and to increase the capacity for them to display that collection for the benefit of Albertans and the general world as well.

The Small Power Research and Development Act change is, again, repealing an act. You know, I think that the government says that all contracts have been concluded on this, so that means it’s kind of defunct, right? The small-scale generation regulation already supports market-based electricity regulation from renewable and alternative energy sources. Again, it begs the question of something that is substantive and top of mind and relevant to our economy, producing jobs and producing power and helping to diversify our economy, which is investing in renewable energy.

We know that we’ve seen substantial setbacks since this government was elected in regard to renewable energy because of the insecurity or instability that this government has created by signalling that they’re not interested in supporting solar and wind energy and geothermal to the degree to which our economy requires. Again, let’s maybe use this Bill 25 and just happen to hit on some small regulation that the government claims has already concluded – right? – and remind ourselves of the importance of actually making an investment in renewable energy.

Another area here is the Health Professions Act change, which is dissolving the Health Professions Advisory Board, which has been sitting idle according to this government for 17 years. You know, that just tells me that if that’s the case, then this is statute amendment act material and easy to work with in that regard. And on and on.

There are a total of 13 different acts here. You know, again, by looking for things that are self-evident that need to be changed, first of all, I guess, it’s important to try to have some sort of coherent package that you can work with to define those things and to make sure that you’re not taking one thing down by attaching it to something else. In other words, if you have something that’s self-evident and pretty obvious and easy to deal with and then something else that’s contentious, tying them all together is a problem.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

I see the hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I was listening intently to the Member for Edmonton-North West as he was commenting on this bill. I just wanted to rise quickly to make a couple of comments. First of all, I wanted to thank the member for mentioning some of the work that was announced earlier this morning out of Service Alberta but tied to red tape reduction. These things do go hand in hand. As the Member for Edmonton-North West mentioned, we announced the updates to the condo regulations that we paused back in June of this year, and I was very happy to be joined by condo owners groups like the COF and the Strathcona County Condominium Association to support the work we did as well as property manager groups like CCI north and south. At the end of the day, we've accomplished something really, really great here, which is to find an agreement among many different interests who all have a stake in the regulations that impact condo owners and condo managers and everyone in between.

At the end of the day, this does reduce red tape. This is reducing unnecessary burdens on condo owners and on property managers and ultimately eliminating and reducing the risk of increased condo fees. This is a perfect example of what, you know, our Premier and our Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction have always asked of us as fellow ministers and MLAs in this government. It's not just about reducing the number of regulations although that's a part of it. At the end of the day, at the root of what we're trying to do here is to reduce the unnecessary costs of compliance with regulations on Albertans and Alberta businesses. If we get that right, Madam Speaker, we're going to unleash the productive capacity of our citizens in Alberta and our businesses here, and we're going to make it easier for folks to invest in Alberta and to create jobs in Alberta.

In this case, with the condo regulations, we're going to reduce the risk of increased costs on everyday Albertans who live in condos. Madam Speaker, there are over 500,000 residents in Alberta that live in condos, and this impacts every single one of them. I'm really proud of the work that my officials have done, that my team has done, and of the time and attention we took over the last number of months to get this right.

I just wanted to, you know, make a bit of a comment: just because I did that in Service Alberta doesn't mean we don't need an associate minister leading this very important file. This was a huge platform commitment of ours: to reduce red tape and to make Alberta the most competitive jurisdiction for folks to do business in but to also reduce costs on everyday Albertans. That's why I'm very proud of the work that my colleague the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction is doing to lead this charge. He is making sure that every one of our government ministers as well as our MLAs are always thinking about: how can we reduce unnecessary costs of compliance related to red tape, unnecessary regulations? In some cases that might mean actually reducing the number of regulations.

In other cases, as with this condo example, it might mean tweaking the regulation to ensure that it is accomplishing the appropriate objectives. In this case my task was to find the right way to balance the need for improved governance for condo owners with the need to ensure that we don't layer unnecessary burdens on them that would cause an escalation in their condo fees in perpetuity. I'm confident we found that right balance. We have the support of the full condo industry on this. You know, it is because of the leadership of our Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction and the leadership of our Premier, who have both made it very clear that this is of critical importance to our broader vision as a government to get Alberta back to work, to attract investment to this province, to accomplish getting our province back to a path to balance. All of these things are interrelated and of critical importance.

I guess I just wanted to say that I take a bit of issue with the comments made earlier by the Member for Edmonton-North West. While I appreciate his complimentary comments about the work that Service Alberta did and announced today, I don't believe that that's evidence to support his claim that we don't need the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction or the bill that he's bringing forward. I think these things all go hand in hand. We need someone at the helm, leading this very important exercise, to make sure that we get it right. You know, I'm proud of the work that my team has done, and I'm proud of the minister.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, are there members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Red tape reduction, honestly, is wonderful. One of the reasons why I actually stepped off the bench of private industry and decided to throw my hat in the ring was right around this one particular item. I can give you an example. It was a project that I was consulting on. It was called the Whitefox project, and it was going to displace processed water that was being released back into the McLeod River, move that upstream to the Fox Creek region through 135 klicks of standard little pipeline, heavy walled, that we had put in there. It was going to start using processed water. It would make a value-added chain, so diversifying the economy, if you would. It would take ANC's processed water and also Millar Western's.

These folks had a process. They had a supply they're putting into the rivers. It's costing them money. The upstream side guys, the guys who are doing the actual fracking in that area: well, they're actually drawing out fresh water. They're taking it from lakes, they're taking it from rivers and streams, and they can't get a constant supply. Arguably, industry was looking at doing innovative green technology, looking at all those types of things, and that project got delayed.

Now, here's the reason why it got delayed. My team, my own consulting group, had to go find other work. I had to find places for my guys. The engineering group down in Calgary: well, they had to be displaced to other projects. The contractors were lining up to consult and trying to get some of that capacity back to work and folks in those areas, the drilling programs from the upstream guys all had to be rejigged and pushed back, and that money didn't go into the economy. And what do you know? The fresh water is still being used, and they're still putting it down a hole.

Now, the reason for this? Red tape, the red tape being that it wasn't an AER project. The commodity type: it didn't quite fit within the box because we were being innovative. They decided that both the AEP – well, actually, they had a choice to make: should it go under the AEP, or should it go under the AER? Well, pontification and these different groups doing all their due diligence, following all the processes and procedures, came up with the glorious decision that both of them should. That delayed the project another couple of years, with $135 million, $155 million sitting on the table. Investors were offering to give us another $200 million to spend the next year, and we can't even spend the cash.

There's no need for red tape. The well-intentioned groups, the well-intentioned ministries can come up with their own solution and point at themselves in the mirror and say: hey, we're part of the problem? Not a chance. Even the best intentioned ones in those groups can't break through that culture. The reason is simple, absolutely simple. We've seen this lots in industry. Bill Gates has spoken to it, about business at the speed of thought. When you've got a brontosaurus, a lumbering beast that's been built up for hundreds and hundreds of years based on our government procedures, it clumsily moves through the forest, you know, hypothetically. I know some of the members opposite won't get the concept unless it's literal and right in front of them. Brontosaurus don't exist. Climate change did happen. They got wiped out way long before. They're not around anymore. If you can stick with me, this would be great. There's this big brontosaurus lumbering along, and it can't react quickly enough to some other animal chewing on its tail. It'll bleed out by the time it hits the ground because of – here's the leap – red tape. It becomes too cumbersome.

One of the other things that I did in my prior life: I was one of those consultants that would get tapped on the shoulder and would be asked to go look at different divisions and different groups within business. You would go into these groups. They're all well-intentioned, well-run organizations, but they're always looking for efficiencies. The good companies are always looking for efficiencies. The way they do that is that they open up the dialogues and have, you know, little suggestion boxes, and they do all those things, but the really good ones get peer groups. They get either different departments from different divisions, different managers to come in, or they hire a consultant. They bring a consultant in with outside expertise, because as consultants, well, you're kind of the mercenaries of the world. You go to different organizations, and you get this tribal knowledge that you bring from these different groups, and the best part about that is that you get to bring in and plant new ideas and seeds. You wouldn't believe how many organizations, well intentioned or otherwise, had so much resistance internally because they're not adaptive to change.

There was this book called Who Moved My Cheese? I mean, Dr. Spencer Johnson labelled that one out. You've got, you know, a couple of little characters. They're at cheese station number nine or number six or something like that. Basically, these folks become normalized. They think that the cheese is going to be there every single day and that nothing changes and that life is good. All of a sudden these two other little characters come into the story. Well, it's Hem and Haw. No. I'm sorry. Hem and Haw were the characters, the people. You've got Sniff and Scurry. All of a sudden they show up, and they've got little running shoes on. They actually had to come from the outside world, not from cheese station nine. They had to look at something different. They came from the outside, and they find – ergo, the story, Madam Speaker, without regaling you with the whole book, is that things change. All of a sudden the cheese isn't there. Things aren't the same. You don't just have – let's take that leap – the fat of the land and money rolling in hand over fist anymore. There's a scarcity in that little market.

So what do the mice do? They take off those little running shoes they had. They go out and they find new cheese. They go out and they look for the innovations. They go out and look for the change. They come back at night, and they're kind of looking around, but they take that risk. They go out there and they make a change. One of the little people: all of a sudden they're starving. Well, they're indignant. "The cheese isn't there. We deserve this. We're entitled to it." And here's another leap. "Maybe we'll just, you know, tax everybody to death and have more cheese come." Well, that doesn't work. No cheese magically fell from the sky.

One of the characters actually took a risk. It was tough for them at the start, but then they found Sniff and Scurry down the road. What do you know? Things were actually better. They had a variety of choice, but they had to make that cognizant choice, that leap. The other little character: he was so entrenched. I think it leaves the story readers to their own devices, that he actually just starved to death because he wasn't adaptive to change.

I'll give you another example. In my little campaigning run I was up at the Rockyford colony. The Hutterites up there: they're a fantastic group. They've got a wonderful farm, like we've heard, down in Jumbo Valley. A lot of these communities have just the best stuff. You know, they're totally onto it. They produce eggs and poultry.

He gave me an example of how much red tape was being built up. He said: "You know, we produce the same eggs. We have the same chickens. We have the same barns. We have everything. It's all the same. It used to cost us about $5,000 a year for one person to kind of part-time do this. We do the same cleanliness in the barn. We do everything with all of the same protocols. All of a sudden, in the last four years, a new regulation comes out, and then that one gets taped over because it's partially covering the original one. Some of it's applicable, some of it's not, so you can't take them both off. It's not just a revision; you've got to have two. And then another one comes out and another one." He said: "The only thing that's changed is that it went from one or two inspectors to eight, and now I have to pay $45,000 to somebody off the colony to be able to manage the new regulations. Nothing has changed substantially." So we've piled this up.

I've used this phrase: the enemy is us. Yeah, we keep building this stuff up, all of these great intentions. The movie reference: we talked about Seinfeld. I'm thinking it's more like Guardians of the Galaxy. We've got the starship troopers next door running around thinking that they're saving things, and for everyone else in the studio audience it's a comedy of errors. We know that this doesn't exist. If we don't actually go and change something, it's just not going to magically work out in the end by happenstance or chance or, heaven forbid, a talking rodent who looks like, you know, whatever.

Part of the healthiness of all of this dialogue is that we're actually having a dialogue today. We're talking about some substantial changes – no, not substantial; tweaks, if you would. We've got one little piece of legislation. We were criticized that the red tape department wasn't doing anything. Lo and behold, we've done something, and here it is.

Well, now they're surprised, coming back to Hem and Haw, that you actually did something. Now that you've done something: "Well, yeah, it's not that specifically. We'll go to the dictionary again about what red tape literally is, what it means to you, what my feelings are," et cetera, et cetera. But it doesn't really change the thing. This little law that we put out here, this little Bill 25, is actually going to make some changes. Are they huge changes? No. But it's going to be a culture of change.

Again, coming back to that point, this ministry is self-sufficient. It's a subset of Treasury, so the money was always there. We're not going out and finding new money. It was always there. We're just reallocating it so that we can actually help. When the groups and the organizations understand that there's a red tape group, they're looking internally as well because this is that culture of change that's taking place.

As far as consultations, there's a website out there. People have been pouring all of their ideas, all of their concepts into there all summer long, and it won't stop. This is four years of change. Because we can't personally as an individual see everything around us, you get different lines of sight. You get different viewpoints that come in. That's true consultation. We had round-tables. I was fortunate enough to be at several of them to help facilitate those dialogues, and you wouldn't believe the gamut of information that came in, again because we're all experts in our own little areas. All of this stuff is coming, and I'd suggest that the members opposite, like those little mice in that thing, get on their little running shoes and get ready. Change is coming. We're keeping our word. We're doing what we said. We're making it happen, and this is proof. So if you like the cheese, fantastic. If you don't like it, too bad – go find some new ones – because we're going to have more of an appetite for it.

Minister, thank you so much for what you're doing. Don't get distracted by the little potshots that are taken from the sideline. Let's keep going forward. To all of those folks out there that have actually been sending in their information and their feedback and their comments, keep it up. We're acting on it.

I'm going to leave you with one other item, Madam Speaker, that came up at a round-table down in Calgary. This is from those, you know, energy guys. When they were looking at the energy market, some rules had been changed in behind. If I have a genset that's running on-site and it's producing all the power I need for my site and I have a surplus, I can't put that surplus back into the grid. Rules were changed. I might have a surplus of 50 to 60 per cent of my capacity. You know what they're doing right now because the rules in behind changed? Here's another thing that we can look at as red tape. They have to waste it on-site. They've got things out there called toasters. That's what the euphemism is. They put the energy into them, and they displace it in heat because they can't put it back into the grid.

So you can stick up as many windmills as you want, you can stick up as many solar panels as you want, but you've still got waste energy up there that's doing nothing. Industry wants to sell this power. They want to do something good with it. They want to have the capacities, but they can't because of these silly rules and regulations. And, of course, this department that's not doing anything: well, guess what? We are. We're looking at it. We're hearing what the stories are. We're hearing what you have to say. We're not going to boil the ocean all at once, but, guaranteed, we're going to stick with you. We're going to do the right things for the province, and we're going to get things done over the next several years, well, the next four years, for sure, and, you know, God willing and the creek don't rise and the voters come onside and like what we're doing, we'll be here a long time.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I shall call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 20 Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019

The Chair: Are there any speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to the Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019. This bill is also 102 pages long. It repeals five acts, creates two new ones, and amends a dozen others, clearly an omnibus piece of legislation. How quickly the folks over there forgot that they used to complain about even two pieces of legislation brought together by us. Now here we are dealing with more than a dozen pieces in one act, and it's becoming routine for this government.

I guess they're using this omnibus legislation to hide many things from Albertans. This legislation has a lot of broken promises, broken promises such as to "maintain dollars promised to municipalities for 2019-20, as well as the multi-year agreement in the Bill 32 Charters for Calgary and Edmonton." That's from page 77 of the UCP platform. Again, another quote: "consult with stakeholders in the film, television and digital media industries to create an optimal tax credit designed to attract large productions and series," on page 81 of the UCP platform. Given that the industry is calling this tax credit a catastrophe, I think it's safe to say that that promise was broken, too.

What this government has done through this bill, along with the budget and other related bills, is they have put forward their plan for this province. What we see through this is that they are giving $4.7 billion to corporations and telling Albertans, want us to believe that somehow that policy will fix everything. We know that this government promised Albertans jobs, economy, and pipelines. So far we have not see any improvement in the economy, we have not seen any improvement in job numbers, and we have not seen any progress on pipelines. Their policy of $4.7 billion follows, like, the classical trickle-down theory, which is not even economics. That kind of policy has been rejected, has failed previously. Even the Nobel laureate for 2019, one of them, Dr. Banerjee, recently stated that cutting taxes for the richest doesn't spur investment or create jobs.

We have clearly seen that in Alberta, where we saw the government promise that this $4.7 billion giveaway will help them create jobs, will help the job creators. Instead, what we are seeing here is that companies like Husky got $233 million from this, but they are still laying off Albertans. They may have money to invest, but they are not investing in Alberta because market conditions need something other than these tax breaks. Similarly with EnCana, they are leaving Calgary. They also benefited from this policy, but again they cannot invest here because market conditions need something other than these policies.

This legislation clearly is not helping us by any means to improve our economy or get some jobs or help with the pipeline. Instead, I think there are things contained in this piece of legislation that will make things even worse. For instance, this piece of legislation is ending all kinds of tax credits: the interactive digital media tax credit, the capital investment tax credit, the community and economic development corporation tax credit, the Alberta investor tax credit, the scientific research and experimental development tax credit. These are all tax credits that are in place to encourage investments that will create jobs. This government, again, wants us to believe that their $4.7 billion handout will fix everything, and they are getting rid of these important programs that were actually bringing in investment, that were actually creating jobs, to pay for their failed policy.

This legislation is also making life difficult for everyone, for everyday Albertans. For instance, it also takes away the personal tuition tax credit, the personal education amount tax credit. On top of that, we have already seen that they're increasing the interest rate on student loans. Again, this legislation is shutting the door of postsecondary on everyday Albertans. With the kind of hikes and elimination of these tax credits, it's becoming more and more difficult for everyday Albertans to get postsecondary education. Clearly, this bill is not helping with jobs, with the economy, or with pipelines.

Earlier I mentioned about film and TV tax credits. That's how they've bungled those credits, and the entire industry is not happy with that. They've been asking this government to reconsider their policies because the film and TV industries, those production industries, generate jobs, they generate investment, and they showcase our province. Cutting their support is clearly not helping us with the economy or jobs.

In Advanced Education they also are ending the access to the future fund and leaving it in general revenues. There was a certain for these dedicated funds: they were dedicated to achieving certain goals. Just mixing it up with general revenue is showing Albertans: "No, no. These funds will still exist to do the same thing." I don't think anybody is buying it. Similarly, they are cancelling, like, the environmental protection enhancement fund, the Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund, and the Alberta lottery funds.

A couple of these funds I want to comment on; for instance, the Alberta cancer prevention legacy fund. They are moving these funds into general revenue while these funds were set aside for reasons. They were dedicated to cancer prevention research, and there are many Albertans who are not pleased with this change. They don't trust the government that keeping these funds in general revenue will serve the purpose.

They did the same thing with the Alberta lottery funds. Nonprofits across this province are not pleased with this change, but this government is not willing to listen to them. They are moving these funds into general revenue and want Albertans and want these organizations to believe that even though they are putting them in general revenue, somehow these funds will still exist for them to use. There is a huge concern out there in the nonprofit sector, in community organizations, and in community associations who were relying on these funds for important programs.

Other changes: bracket creep. They are deindexing personal income tax. I think that when those things were done at the federal level, our Premier, then in the federal Parliament, was very vocal against these changes, how creepy those changes were, how insidious those changes were. Now they are sliding these changes into Bill 20 to increase income tax on every Albertan. That's the same bracket creep as when they were in Ottawa. They used to oppose it, but now they think it's okay while Albertans are not okay with their taxes going up because they were promised. They were even told during the campaign that the 5 cents that they were paying in a carbon levy on their gasoline was too much and that they will remove that one. Instead, they are adding in personal income tax. They're charging them more in income tax. They're cutting their services. They're cutting their health care. They're cutting their education. These things were never promised, and the public never gave them the mandate to do those kinds of things. This bill clearly breaks the meaning of those promises that they said they wouldn't do and that now they're doing through this piece of legislation.

Because of this legislation, I think all Albertans, in all our ridings, will end up paying more in personal income taxes because of these changes that are contained in this piece of legislation, omnibus legislation. This piece of legislation will have an impact on their services. This already has an impact on municipalities, and people in our ridings will end up paying more in property taxes.

The government said that their agenda is to create jobs, but through this piece of legislation they are taking away all the tax credits that were bringing in investment, that were creating investment and incentives for investment, and that were attractive for the venture capitalists. Now, I think they are chasing those investors and that venture capital to other places because of their ill-conceived policies. Similarly, I think we are losing millions in the film and television industry, again because of this government's policies. Those jobs along with tech sector jobs will be heading to Vancouver and Toronto just because this government can't get it right. Fewer companies will end up investing in our province in research and development, in development of new inventions, because they are cutting from those grants as well. They are laying off people at Alberta Innovates.

While we are losing all these important things, we are seeing our property taxes go up, we are seeing our income taxes go up, and we are paying more to get less. Money is being diverted, essentially, from our schools, from our health care, from our community organizations, from the lottery fund, from the cancer prevention legacy fund, all of those programs, just to fund their $4.7 billion tax giveaway. That's on page 144 of the budget, just in case. We have also seen reductions in capital spending. Two projects, the green line in Calgary and investment in the LRT in Edmonton, are in jeopardy as well.

I think the government needs to think about it. This was not what they promised Albertans. Albertans went with their promise on jobs, the economy, and pipelines. That's what their mandate was all about. But anything and everything contained in this bill is not helping us create any jobs. It's not helping us improve our economy. It's not helping us build the pipeline. Instead, it's taking things away from Albertans, what they already have. It's attacking their livelihoods at a time when the government has money, $4.7 billion, to hand out to companies who haven't been able to create any jobs because the market conditions are not there. The government is not interested in addressing those things, in addressing the takeaway capacity issues and in addressing new market access issues, which will automatically, I guess, attract investment, and with that investment will come jobs.

But here so far under this government's watch we have seen 27,000 jobs lost. We have downtown Calgary, where people are still looking for jobs. Just in the last week or so we lost 1,000 jobs. All of those jobs were lost because of this government's policies. They didn't fund the CBE properly. The CBE let go 300 teachers and instructors, support staff. Because of government policy, Calgarians are losing jobs, and that will also compromise our education. I don't think that is what Albertans voted for, what the UCP promised during the election. They said that they would fully fund education. Now we are seeing job losses, and then they find somebody to blame – in this case it's the Calgary board of education – and commit not to do anything. They know that their policies have resulted in that job loss. We are seeing cuts at the University of Calgary, and we are seeing cuts at Mount Royal, all because of this government's policies.

This bill, essentially, is helping them implement those policies, which clearly don't help Albertans, which don't create any jobs, which don't create any investment, which don't help us with the economy or help us with pipelines. They don't want to reconsider or listen to Albertans who are asking them to reconsider their policies. Every other day we see that their big mandate gets humiliated on the steps of the Legislature. Teachers are protesting, nurses are protesting, nonprofits are protesting, and kids are protesting: everybody is protesting against your policies. So I guess you need to listen to Albertans. You need to listen to what they need, what their priorities are, and reconsider these things which will clearly make life more difficult for Albertans, which will clearly not help us with jobs or the economy.

Moreover, one more thing that I want to mention is that when we became government, Alberta was the only province without a child tax benefit. I'm proud to be part of the government who brought forward that child tax benefit. Now what we are seeing here is that they are making changes to the base component that is paid to families. They lowered it to a net income of $41,000. Madam Chair, that will impact many families in your riding, in my riding, and all across this province. That child tax benefit change will impact 165,000 Albertans with this new threshold. There are 55,000 Albertans who will completely lose this. In the term of the previous government . . .

The Chair: Are there other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise this morning to speak to Bill 20, the Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019. I've spoken numerous times in the House about this omnibus bill that's being proposed and the many concerns that I'm hearing from industry and from my community, whether it's parents or community leaders, nonprofits. There are so many that have concerns about this piece of legislation that's coming through. There's just so much that's incorporated into this. It's hard to break it all down and talk about what the impacts are.

As the critic for culture I've been an advocate for industry, for encouraging government to listen to industry. I know that something that is of grave concern is that the minister of culture stood in the House and praised her colleague the minister of economic development and tourism, saying that now that the budget has been introduced, they will be starting consultation with industry. Well, Madam Chair, this is a little bit too late. We've heard loud and clear – our side has, for sure – the concerns that they have with this legislation and the budget that's been proposed, about going forward the way it is. We know that industry is pleased overall that it's moving to a tax credit, but we have continued to hear, prior to the budget being introduced and prior to this piece of legislation being introduced, that they have concern with there being a cap.

I know as the critic for culture that this is something I take very seriously. I've been meeting with industry all across the province to hear their concerns, and I'm being included in their correspondence to government and to the Premier with their suggestions. It's really unfortunate that I hear members opposite stand up in the House and make no reference to hearing these concerns. I know they're being brought forward because I'm being included in the letters and the e-mails.

I just am concerned that this isn't resonating with members of the government and that they're not listening to industry when they're saying very loud and clear that the way that this is proposed is definitely going to be damaging to their industry. It's taking away jobs, an incredible number of jobs, that are here in the province, good-paying jobs that we know are part of diversifying our province. We have a workforce that lives in the province, that works in the province, that wants to remain in the province of Alberta, and they have solutions on how that can happen. The government isn't listening to those suggestions.

There's considerable concern when we're hearing that projects are leaving the province. We hear from this government over and over about how they want to bring investment into the province. Madam Chair, we have it here right now. We have incredible talent in the province of Alberta when it comes to the film industry, and they're leaving because of the decisions that this government is making. They talk about bringing investment in, yet it doesn't seem to be a priority that they want to maintain what's already here.

We know that industry hires so many across the province in different fields, whether it's catering, whether it's truck driving, whether it's hair and makeup. There's so much that's diverse about the film industry that it just simply doesn't make sense to me why this government wouldn't efficiently fund it, wouldn't efficiently support it, and won't even sit down and talk to industry about how they can make those investments stay in the province. I know that when I hear from producers that they are leaving to go to provinces like B.C., that is a huge concern. Why the government doesn't see that this is an incredible opportunity to continue to invest in this strong industry in the province is mind-boggling to me, Madam Chair.

I would just like to share with the House some correspondence that I've received from numerous members of industry that have also reached out to the government. I haven't heard it yet come up in the House in any of this debate. I haven't heard members of the government make reference to any of the concerns or solutions that industry has brought forward. So as the culture critic it is my absolute pleasure to stand in the House and to give voice to the industry that has been pleading with the government to make changes, pleading with the government to hear them. It's not happening, and I'm just concerned that their voice isn't being shared, so I would like to be able to stand and share some of the experiences and some of the correspondence that I know the government is getting, but it isn't being talked about.

The first letter that I received as the critic says:

Dear hon. Premier and ministers,

The following post is from a gentleman who worked for many years in the Alberta film industry and has had to move to British Columbia to be able to continue to work. He has given me permission to pass on some of his posts. Please read this carefully and understand the urgency with which we ask you to change what you have set up for our industry. We ask you to remove the cap and open the doors to the film industry in Alberta, open the doors for business in Alberta.

I am one person in a large industry. In the past two days I have turned down shows from three media companies. One is the richest company in the world today. The other is the third richest. Both companies are tech companies that are new in creating broadcast content for entertainment. The companies will hire hundreds of Canadians to create that content at middle-class to upper-middle-class wages. The average age of the new workers they will be hiring will be mid-30s and a number of mid-20s, all the way up to us old veterans. As I hung up the phone with a producer from the world's richest company, my first thought was: where are they going to find crews? None of these shows are on any active rumour lists. Vancouver is at maximum capacity. I just happened to be contacted very early in their planning.

As I read about cutbacks in education, health, environment, et cetera, in Alberta, I think: what are they doing? You need to get your province working right away to add to your revenue stream, not lay them off waiting for the oil fairy to show up and give you another boom to [expletive] away. UCP, you are either open for business in your province or you are not. Either way, they better figure it out soon because this new media tech content boom, like all booms, will level out into a smarter, more streamlined model at some point.

All shows start with a person and a bank account set up where they choose to do business. People are hired; then the millions pour into the economy of the place they choose. If they like the place, they return over and over again. In the case of one Hollywood network, they produce most of their broadcast content in Vancouver. As for the current content boom, even Hollywood says that this cannot be maintained at this level, yet nobody knows when it will slow down. The main reason for a slowdown: there are not enough top crews available in the world to produce all the content on the books right now. Wow. An industry crying for more people to train and then pay well.

So, Alberta, you have a choice. Add to your provincial coffers by putting in a sustainable program to keep Alberta rolling. By doing that, you can get more people working, which means more taxes. More taxes means less cuts to services. Less cuts to services means happy services. How hard can that be?

Thank you for your time.

Joanne Jacobsen, Alberta film and television makeup artist.

Now, I don't recall any of that content being discussed in the House by the government. I think there are incredible points when it comes to the validity of the investment that the film industry makes here in the province of Alberta. Again another story shared of people leaving the province to go to B.C., where they're a supported industry in that province. We already have it here. Why not sustain it, help it grow? We know that productions are looking to come to the province. We know Netflix, Disney: they love Alberta. We have world-renowned crews with incredible, incredible experience and history right here in the province who want to stay in Alberta. They've shared over and over that they love living in Alberta and hate the fact that they're now forced to leave the province because of this budget.

When we look at what's been proposed in Bill 20, like I had mentioned, moving to a tax credit is absolutely something that the film industry has asked for, but they want the cap removed. They're saying that this is a barrier that is going to impact them, and it's not enough. It's being supportive of one part of it but then feeling like the other piece, that's so essential, isn't there. While government has taken a piece of what they've asked for, which is complementary, it's not actually going to be effective with what they've proposed. Industry is saying loud and clear that it's an opportunity right now when film is booming in the province of Alberta.

This is going to absolutely, catastrophically, impact for years to come. We know that when productions leave the province, crews leave the province, and they're not going to come back because they're going to be successful somewhere else. To me, it is an incredible shame that we're losing out on all of that knowledge, that talent, and those good-paying jobs that so many rely on here in the province.

We talk about being able to diversify our economy. Well, the film industry is a natural place to do that. I've made statements in the House from someone who had experience in oil and gas, who worked on a rig, and had an incredible comparison between life working in the oil and gas industry and working on a film crew. It was skills that he had learned in the oil and gas industry. He was no longer able to work in that field and is now thriving in an industry where his skill set is just transferable. It's something that absolutely makes sense to me, Madam Chair. When we hear that people are being laid off in oil and gas, where can they go? This is a natural fit for those jobs that are continuing to be lost in the province.

My son is 25, and he is a fifth-generation oil and gas worker. He is a journeyman insulator. He has seen the impact on the economy and what it means to work in the oil and gas field. He needs to diversify, and his skill set is something that can be easily transferred to this industry. He's got so many opportunities here, but why would you take a career that you have in oil and gas and take the time to invest in a new industry such as film when you know that it's not being funded and you know that the industry is saying: we're leaving the province. You've got all of these incredible opportunities for these young people, like I had mentioned, in their 20s and in their 30s and, as he has referred to himself to, an old veteran. They're able to take their skill set and work within the film industry, but they're leaving.

It just doesn't make sense to me why the government waited to talk to the film industry after the budget was introduced, after this piece of legislation was introduced. It just says to me that it's not something that's a priority, and it's potentially too little too late. That's something that is very frightening.

I know that government can make a difference. They can create an amendment and propose it. We saw them do that with the recent amendment to this specific section of the act that made applications possible for January 2020 as opposed to waiting until April 1, which is a positive first step. So we know that they've been listening somewhat to what industry is asking for, but we're still not seeing the commitments that they had made in their platform. They made promises to the film industry in their platform that are not reflected in the legislation that they're proposing, which, to me, is a promise made and a promise not kept, which is very concerning.

Now, I'm very appreciative that the minister is meeting with industry, or they are saying that that is going to happen, and we on this side of the House are paying attention because we can't trust what they're saying. The information that industry is providing to them isn't coming through in the decisions and the conversations that we're hearing from members of government. They're pleading. They're writing letters to their MLAs, they're writing letters to the Premier, to the ministers with their solutions, yet they're not talking about it, which is very concerning to me, because I'm receiving that correspondence in overwhelming amounts.

I know that it is a solution that makes sense. It's a solution that's going to continue to have industry thriving in the province, and it's going to keep them working here in our province, which I know every member in this Chamber wants to see. We want to see job creation. We want to see Alberta be successful, and we have an industry that's already here and is willing to continue and wants to continue to create that environment.

We know that in rural Alberta, when you have a production come in, that means that hotels are busy, that the local coffee shops are busy. Catering: we know that they're socializing; they're eating out for dinner. They're doing all of those things that are just creating an incredible economic impact in that small community, and it creates buzz in the community. When you know that there are actors like Bill Murray that are going to be at your local diner, it creates an excitement there, and it creates more people to come into that community to experience that with a chance of being part of a production, however that looks.

When you hear people in industry talk about their excitement and their passion, it's hard to not get excited about what they do for a living. It's something that I would say the majority of Albertans experience. We all enjoy at some point going and watching a movie or watching a documentary, and knowing that it was Alberta made, as an Albertan it makes me proud. When we hear about documentaries of experiences that Albertans have, I know that it's something that's very touching. Knowing that it came from Alberta, that it's about Alberta's history, whether it's about an organization or an individual, there's great pride in that, and it's something that we are world renowned for.

People from Hollywood look to Alberta. We have some of the most beautiful landscapes here in this province that I think the world should experience, and the way to do that is by investing in an industry that wants to help. They want to work with government. They want to continue to see this thrive in this economy, and they're just being told no. This piece of legislation does not do enough to support an industry that is telling the government that they are leaving.

When we're looking at ways to diversify, when we're looking at ways to create jobs, they have a plan to do that. It's concerning, Madam Chair, that the government isn't listening and isn't making those incredible decisions that so easily could alleviate that fear and alleviate the mass exodus out of our province.

I have another e-mail letter that I would like to share. It's to the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Dear Minister,

Prairie Dog Film & Television is an award-winning dramatic production company dedicated to scripted television series production. We have filmed 198 episodes of television, creating thousands of jobs for Albertans. We have impacted our local economy by injecting over $40 million into the Alberta community by hiring Alberta crews, cast, and businesses.

Our company provides the highest ratio of Alberta spend per project, meaning we hire Albertans to be the content creators and decision-makers. Our goal is to increase the above- and below-the-line positions in Alberta. To do this, we hire and train from within. We're the only Alberta organization that not only films its shows in Alberta but completes postproduction in the province, offering more jobs that spend money within Alberta.

In May 2019 our company moved its head office from Edmonton to Calgary to grow our business and develop a new crime series called Tribal, airing on APTN in February 2020. We proudly film the series in Calgary and are currently in postproduction in our new postproduction facility here in the city.

At this time the impact to our company is severe. The cost of investment to uproot the company and move to the production centre of Calgary, build a postproduction facility so we don't have to send the work to Toronto or Vancouver, and relocate our team members is significant. The longer the government continues to freeze our industry and reduce our incentives, the more impact it will have in the long term. Our talented crews will leave if they can't sustain full-time work, leaving us with unexperienced and limited amounts of crew to continue our craft.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 20 here this morning. I think that yesterday I was focusing on the bracket creep that we saw in this bill. The government is increasing personal income tax for every Albertan by a number of $600 million during the course of this action. Increasing personal income tax I think goes against almost everything that this government was running on in this last election and the general rhetoric that they seem to indulge in on a daily basis both inside and outside of this House. So I think that everyone in Alberta should know that this budget through Bill 20 is increasing everybody's personal income tax with this tool or this contrived process of bracket creep.

Today I'd like to talk about tax credits. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs did a great job just talking about the loss of support for the film industry, but this budget through Bill 20 also inflicts significant damage to business incentives that had been in place for a number of years and that businesspeople built their plans on. They might have moved or built new business interests here in the province of Alberta based on these tax credits.

You know, tax credits are a very effective way by which you can incent business development in any number of areas. I know that our government used them quite a lot in regard to building a value-added petrochemical industry here in the province with the incentives around polyethylene and polypropylene plants, that we see now being constructed in Alberta. Tax credits were the foundation for the success of those businesses being given incentives to build here in Alberta.

A number of tax credits that we saw here that were very successful as well included the equity capital tax credit for businesses doing research and development and the commercialization of new technology. This was part of the Alberta jobs plan, and – boom – suddenly it's gone. We know that, for example, tech industries such as the video game industry took a significant hit in regard to the choice that this government is making, as part of Bill 20, to take these credits out. We know that probably there have been a number of testimonials and people, tech companies voting with their feet, quite frankly, making their intentions known that they would leave the province based on the lack of support that they received from this government by cancelling these tax credits.

The community economic development corporation tax credit was also cancelled. Alberta-based investors in community economic development who are encouraging rural economic development or making a social impact in the community were eligible for this community economic development corporation tax credit. This was a way by which we could see investment in areas outside of the major cities. It's gone, much to the concern of those who were counting on this credit.

The capital investment tax credit: cancelled. Again, this was a nonrefundable tax credit that was valued at 10 per cent of a corporation's eligible capital expenditure, up to $5 million. The capital investment tax credit encouraged companies to make timely capital investments by returning a percentage of the company's costs, including the purchase of machinery, equipment, buildings, for projects related to manufacturing processes or tourism infrastructure – right? – again, a very, very focused, targeted investment that was very popular, that encouraged capital investment and encouraged small business to expand to meet their needs.

Now, I know that the government has words and rhetoric around the cancellation of credits like this, saying that, well, they're going to have a corporate tax reduction that's global and covers off anything that might be lost from these tax credits. But, you know, we heard loud and clear, from the very people that had the rug pulled out from under them in regard to these tax credits that they built a business model on, that, no, what most of these small businesses do, especially tech industries, is that they fold back their profit, fold back their capital and money into making further investments in their company, because they're growing. It's not this static thing that other, large corporate entities might be, that take a corporate tax reduction and just take it as profit-taking or take it as liquid capital and move it out of the province, as we saw with many companies choosing just to take the cheque and go, right? With tax credits, you know that you're targeting something that will be reinvested back into the Alberta economy.

In fact, we have demonstrable evidence that these tax credits were succeeding. In the absence of them, as the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs pointed out very clearly, they have to vote with their feet, right? The film industry is super competitive, and it's super mobile. We saw productions literally pack up in mid-season sometimes because they can shoot something like Fargo, the show, in Alberta or they can shoot it back in North Dakota, where Fargo actually exists, if they're giving them a better incentive to film there. This same scenario is playing out with tech industries and tourism investment as well.

Another tax credit is gone, the interactive digital media tax credit, a 25 per cent refundable tax credit for labour costs associated with interactive digital media activities, to support growth in the interactive media industry. This encouraged corporations to stay here in Alberta, talented entrepreneurs of the province. The program was available to corporations to create digital media, in particular gaming. Gone. Gone, Madam Chair. Left close behind in the wake would be those people making choices to invest elsewhere.

The scientific research and experimental development tax credit: cancelled. This was providing tax credits to corporations, partnerships, individuals to conduct scientific research and experimental development. This was a tax credit that was built in tandem with a federal program, which is still there, right? Often businesses or development institutions, universities and so forth, and scientific research look for grants and/or incentives that can be combined at different levels of government. They count on that partnership to build this development and experiment in scientific research, that often provides game-changing industrial development. We look at some of the work that's been done in artificial intelligence here in the province of Alberta.

Nanotechnology, biomedical research, and so forth: it's a long game, Madam Chair. It isn't something you just produce and give away like you cut a cheque for a corporate tax cut and then they get the money the next day and they take it off to put in the bank in Switzerland or wherever – right? – or invest in other states or provinces, because they got the money, and they run. Instead, scientific research tax incentives and tax credits allow long-term research that pays significant dividends by helping to diversify the economy. Making investment in biotechnology, in nanotechnology, in artificial intelligence, and so forth is a wise, long-term investment.

We must make decisions in this Legislative Assembly that don't just affect next week but affect the next decade, the next generation. Clearly, with Bill 20, this budget generally is an affront to that cause, to that idea that somehow we can clear the ledger from tax credits and so forth, that we can make these reductions – we reduce and cut cheques to large, profitable corporations, and we look good for the media cycle next month rather than the business environment and diversification over years and decades.

Shame on this government for doing something that I find absolutely stunning – this list goes on and on – the attack and the affront of increasing personal income tax, pulling the rug out from under a whole range of tax credits that were functioning very well, thank you very much. You know, you end up in a worse place. You might be able to show that your ledger is reduced for this next fiscal season . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, but we will now need to rise and report progress on Bill 20.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. van Dijken: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 20.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. Carried.
The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I got that kind of nod. With the fact that we're at about four minutes to noon here, I think it would make sense for us to adjourn the House until 1:30 p.m. today.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:55 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 27, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's my honour today to introduce a familiar face to the Chamber, former Member for Stony Plain Mr. Ken Lemke.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a couple of school groups visiting us this afternoon from the constituency of Edmonton-McClung as well as the constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. If our students would like to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

In the Speaker's gallery this afternoon is a very special guest of the Member for Livingstone-MacLeod. His daughter Elisabeth Reid is here to see her dad in action.

Hon. members, this afternoon in the galleries are guests of the Minister of Education: members of the research branch, evidence and labour relations sector, and system excellence division.

Also in the galleries are guests of the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. Please welcome members of Fertilizer Canada.

Guest of the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women: welcome acclaimed documentary filmmaker Ms Giselle Portenier.

Also – I don't see them, but they may be arriving a little bit later – visiting the Member for Central Peace-Notley: Michael Saiuw and Christina Cunningham from Vertex Pharmaceuticals, as well as members of the cystic fibrosis community in the new developments of CF drug treatment.

If you would like to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Female Genital Mutilation

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to bring attention to a practice that impacts the human rights of women and girls around the world. This year, as part of the 16 days of activism against gender-based violence we are also looking at how we can make an impact here at home, in Alberta, and beyond.

One of these areas is the practice of female genital mutilation or cutting. This despicable practice happens on every continent except Antarctica. Over 200 million women and girls around the world have been cut. The practice occurs because of myths and misinformation, but the facts are that this violent act has no benefits whatsoever. It does only harm. A girl who has undergone female genital mutilation or cutting can suffer from lifelong health complications, even death. Regardless of these facts, up to 4 million girls are at risk of being cut every year. That's one girl every 11 seconds. Girls are born perfect in every way, and this practice is a method of sexual control.

Mr. Speaker, female genital mutilation and cutting has been an indictable offence in the Criminal Code of Canada since 1997. Any parent who performs this procedure or gives permission for it to be performed on their child can be charged. I was shocked when I learned that, to date, there has not been a single prosecution. This is because the practice is surrounded by secrecy, and the prevalence of it in our province is unknown.

That is why tonight we are hosting a special screening of In the Name of Your Daughter at the Royal Alberta Museum with film director Giselle Portenier, who we have sitting in the gallery. Mr. Speaker, I invite all members of the Assembly and the public to attend. Giselle Portenier's film gives a voice to the girls who haven't had voices for thousands of years. This inspiring film, shot in northern Tanzania, is about girls' courage, standing up for their rights, and preventing and addressing female genital mutilation and cutting. This film is just the tip of the iceberg when it comes to the complexity of these issues. It is about Rhobi Samwelly, who risked her own life fighting this harmful practice of cutting the clitoris and protecting girls in her safe house. Following the film, we will be holding a panel discussion to talk about female genital mutilation and cutting and gender-based violence.

This practice is not based in one faith, culture, or religious text. It's not about politics, and it's not about party lines. The time is now, where we must all stand up together and end female genital mutilation and cutting. We must end violence against women and girls. This is our responsibility.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to respond on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almost 30 years ago activists at the inaugural women's global leadership institute started the 16 days of activism against gender-based violence, that runs from November 25 to December 10 every year, ending on Human Rights Day. Every year organizations around the world unite to call on governments and individuals to put an end to gender-based violence around the world.

It is important to note that when we talk about gender-based violence, we acknowledge that there are multiple genders. We know that trans, nonbinary individuals, and two-spirit people are at a higher risk of being targeted both here and globally. No matter where you live, women and gender-diverse people are not immune. They're disproportionately at risk.

Despite almost three decades of activism the statistics remain alarming. Up to 70 per cent of women have experienced physical and/or sexual violence from an intimate partner in their lifetime. One hundred and thirty-seven women across the world are killed by a member of their own family every day. Rape continues to be used as a weapon of oppression. At least 200 million women and girls have undergone female genital mutilation.

Indigenous women are physically and sexually assaulted almost three times more often than nonindigenous women here in Canada. Indigenous women also experience domestic violence at higher rates and are roughly seven times more likely to be killed by a serial killer.

Approximately 50 million adolescent girls world-wide have experienced forced sex at some point in their life.

Transgender women of colour are living in crisis, especially black transgender women. This year alone in the United States at least 22 transgender and gender-nonconforming people have been killed, and all but one were black.

School-related gender-based violence is a major obstacle to universal schooling and the right to education for girls. Women still report instances of sexual harassment in the workplace that far eclipse their male counterparts. Eighty-two per cent of women parliamentarians reported having experienced some form of psychological violence while serving their terms.

This is not an exhaustive list of the stats. We know that there's much, much more, including the victims we'll never hear about.

Mr. Speaker, we – community members, society, all members of this House – must continue to support all efforts to end gender-based violence. This means talking about it, and it also means action. It means making laws that support those efforts. It means ensuring that organizations have adequate funding to address these issues. And it also means supporting survivors both in our communities and abroad. We've got a long, long way to go, but I know that with concerted efforts from all of us, we can get there.

Thank you.

Culture Ministry Alcohol Purchase

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be a fiscal Conservative, and I'm proud to be part of a government that is leading by example when it comes to MLA wages and benefits. That's why I was so surprised to hear from the NDP that the minister of culture and tourism was purchasing enormous quantities of liquor. Was it for her own personal consumption? Worst of all, the NDP claimed that the liquor was being purchased from a UCP supporter. Cronyism, booze, fiscal mismanagement: the story was too good to be true.

Well, as is all too frequently the case when it comes to NDP allegations, the story was too good to be true. The liquor was actually purchased so that it could be sold to thirsty patrons of the Royal Alberta Museum. Strangely enough, the Royal Alberta Museum had been purchasing from the very same business when it was under NDP management. This just proves that when it comes to the NDP, there is one thing you can count on: misinformation, fear, and smears. This story is about as real as their promises to balance the budget.

The thing is that this isn't even the first time the NDP has been caught red-handed. Only a few months ago the NDP was forced to issue a public apology for spreading misinformation about a UCP nomination candidate. But they didn't learn then, and they keep inventing new ways to misinform Albertans, like their ongoing attempt with the price tag of the job-creation tax cut.

You see, Mr. Speaker, while our government and my colleagues here on this side of the aisle will continue to deal in facts and numbers, the NDP can continue to deal in fear and numerology. I'm proud to stand with this Premier and this government to continue delivering on our plan to create jobs, grow the economy, and build pipelines. That's what Albertans want, and that's what Albertans elected us to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

2017 UCP Leadership Contest Investigations

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, for the benefit of my friends on the government benches I'd just like to remind them of some of the many scandals the Election Commissioner they voted to fire was investigating. Since December of last year the commissioner was investigating irregular contributions to the Jeff Callaway campaign and, clearly, for good reason. It has been learned that Callaway's campaign was funded by a single $60,000 corporate donation, which was divided up between people who claimed to be donating their own money to Callaway.

Callaway's campaign, as you might recall, was created to help the Premier attack Brian Jean. The Premier's director of issues management would write speeches, debate talking points, create graphics and videos, and give strategic direction to Callaway's campaign. They even chose the date and wrote the speech where Callaway dropped out and endorsed the Premier. To sum it up, Mr. Speaker, fake donors for a fake campaign cooked up to attack an honest man in Brian Jean.

Now, the Premier, House leader, and Justice minister can stomp their feet and declare this fear and smear as much as they'd like, but let's look at the objective facts. The Election Commissioner, that this Premier fired, has issued 58 fines, totalling over $211,000, and fined 16 individuals and companies. The Election Commissioner and his team had been working hard to uncover the details of this deep scandal, and he was still working up until this Premier decided that he had had enough about accountability and that a transparent government wasn't worth a million dollars over five years.

Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are watching and waiting for answers on this scandal. Let's hope that this government and Premier are finally ready to give it to them. Frankly, though, I'm not holding my breath.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka is rising on a statement.

AgSafe Alberta Society

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently received a copy of a letter written by a constituent, Tom Kootstra. He's a dairy farmer located near Ponoka. He's also the chair of Alberta Milk. He writes for Alberta Milk:

We are writing you to express our strong support of the excellent work delivered by the AgSafe Alberta Society (ASAS). Alberta Milk represents and is solely funded by the 507 dairy farm families in the province. We are governed by an elected Board of Directors of dairy farmers.

As one of the ten founding members of ASAS, Alberta Milk and its farmer members are fully supportive of the mandate and programming deliverables of ASAS. The strong farmer awareness and educational approach of the ASAS has helped to raise the importance and profile of farm safety across our province. Farm families deserve support as they work to keep their farms and ranches safe and healthy for their family members and their staff. Dairy farmers, like all Alberta farmers wish for all ... to arrive home safely each evening.

AgSafe is an industry-led organization that delivers farm safety management tools, resources, and programs for Alberta farmers and ranchers. The NDP government's passing of the disastrous Bill 6 didn't improve farm safety. As Tom says: while you can't legislate ag safety, AgSafe seeks to create a culture of safety. AgSafe is a coalition of 29 agricultural producer groups representing 97 per cent of the ag industry across this province. With one voice they advocate on behalf of farmers and ranchers. AgSafe has done tremendous work in terms of advocating for farm safety across the province. They are an organization made by farmers for farmers.

I take my hat off to the Alberta farmers and their efforts to be organized for safe farm families. I want to acknowledge the excellent work provided by the society on behalf of Alberta farm families. Great work, Alberta Milk and all of the ag member groups of this coalition.

The Speaker: Hon. members, prior to moving to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I would like to take a brief moment and opportunity to remind you all that the alert-ready emergency system is scheduled to be tested in Alberta during the proceedings this afternoon. Please ensure that your electronic devices are turned off for approximately the next 30 minutes as I would hate for anyone to have to pay a fine for an electronic device going off.

Climate Change Policy and Job Creation

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, last week Albertans received concerning news on two fronts. The first front was jobs and the economy. The city of Calgary alone saw 1,000 jobs lost in just one week in both the private and public sector, lost because a $4.7 billion handout to corporations doesn't create jobs and because public-sector workers like teachers and postsecondary workers are paying for that handout with their own jobs. With three more years of government cutbacks in the future and with unstoppable structural change leading to permanent reductions in Alberta's workforce, the prospect of creating jobs has never looked more bleak.

The second front was on climate change. The United Nations reported that the world is on track to warm by more than three degrees Celsius if we don't drastically reduce carbon emissions. Albertans will pay the price with increased droughts, floods, fires, and disease.

But there's good news. We can tackle both of these problems at once with smart government policy, policies like investing in more renewable energy, like wind, solar, and geothermal power; policies like investing in energy efficiency in our homes and in our industries; policies like investing in more public transit, improving the existing systems in our cities and expanding public transit to more people living in rural Alberta. All of these investments would more than make up for the losses we've seen in the traditional energy economy and give thousands upon thousands of Albertans the ability to live and raise their families in prosperity and retire in dignity.

Albertans have been hurting for a long time, and we're all looking forward to the next economic boom, but we don't have to wait for the next boom. We can create one, a green boom. The best part of a green boom: this one won't go bust.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East has a statement.

Federal Energy Policies

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The results of the 2019 federal election were a crushing blow to many Albertans. Over the past four years our energy industry was crippled by the devastating policies enacted by the Trudeau government. Legislation such as the antipipeline Bill C-69 and antitanker Bill C-48 were direct attacks on our province. Bill C-69 pretty much guarantees that building future pipelines will be an immense struggle, even more so than the constantly changing wall of legal barriers that is required right now.

At the very least, the federal Liberal government put on a facade and pretended they were semi pro pipeline. That much cannot be said for the federal NDP. They are completely and avidly antipipeline, antienergy, and anti-Alberta. If Trudeau works with the federal NDP, it could spell the death of one of the nation's most important industries.

Our province's energy industry is the source of immense wealth, wealth that benefits not just our province but all Canadians. Our contributions to federal programs such as CPP and equalization far outweigh the benefits we receive. If the other provinces want to reap the benefits of our resources, they should also be willing to help ensure the success and prosperity of the industry.

Not only is it hypocritical of other provinces to demand the benefits of our energy sector while at the same time trying to stop it at every turn; it is divisive and unhealthy for our country. We must work together as Albertans and as Canadians to ensure national unity. Provinces must build each other up, not tear each other down.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Oil Transportation and Production Curtailment

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the first things this Premier and the UCP government did was rip up the oil-by-rail contracts. This meant we no longer have the capacity to ship 120,000 barrels per day. This further hurt our ability to get our resources to market, and it meant that the Premier had to extend curtailment.

This government doesn't have a plan for market access, and it's hurting jobs and investment. Drilling rights auctions are on track for a record low, and we have had one of the lowest number of active drilling rigs on record. For the next year, oil drilling is expected to be flat at best. Each working drilling rig supports 145 direct and indirect jobs. There are currently over 30 per cent fewer active rigs than last year. Assuming that the lifting of curtailment would return us to 2018 levels of drilling, that's 6,815 jobs we are missing out on due to the extension of curtailment. The curtailment extension is hurting investment in the province. The CEO of Imperial Oil says that the $2.6 billion Aspen oil sands project in northern Alberta, announced a year ago, will remain on the sidelines until the province completely ends its oil curtailment program.

The Premier claimed his $4.7 billion corporate handout would create jobs and investment in Alberta, but this hasn't happened here. Husky received $233 million and then turned around and laid off hundreds of employees. EnCana has moved its head office to the U.S. They are investing elsewhere. Since the corporate handout was implemented, there are fewer jobs in the natural resource sector, layoffs, and companies moving, precisely the kinds of things this handout was supposed to prevent. It proves they haven't created the market conditions to attract investment. It proves they got the economy completely wrong.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Farm Worker Wages

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, in democratic societies, when people work, their employers are required to pay them. It's kind of a post Industrial Revolution sort of thing, but now under this Premier's bill there's no guarantee that many farm workers in Alberta will get paid at all. This isn't reversing Bill 6, which I understand was in their platform; this is reversing hundreds of years of basic labour and human rights. To the Premier: why do you believe farm workers in Alberta should have to work for as little as $2 or $3 an hour or maybe nothing at all?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, we just heard right there the contempt that the NDP has for Alberta's farmers, the leader of the NDP suggesting that farmers are not going to pay the folks who work for them. You know what? It's our farmers who helped to build our society. It's our farmers who feed our society. It's our farmers who make enormous sacrifices, farmers right now who have gone through a terrible year, and the last thing they need is the Official Opposition casting aspersions on them as a bunch of folks who are trying to exploit labour. This government stands by and will defend our farmers.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this isn't about defending or not defending farmers. This is about making sure basic rights to be paid for your work are still in existence in Alberta. The vast majority of farmers, of course, as with any employer, pay their employees regardless of the law. But there still needs to be a law, because the bill opens the door to abuse by those who would hurt and exploit others. Some of these workers come here on temporary contracts from foreign countries. They need the fundamental protection of a right to be paid. Why do you think they don't need that fundamental right?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the line of questioning is ridiculous and contemptuous of our farmers, who are people who make enormous sacrifices. Every now and then our farmers need a bit of help, and of course they treat their workers well. The NDP distrusted our farmers so much – the NDP, so owned by their union special interests – that they created a law to unionize farm workers. Guess what? There wasn't a single workplace that got unionized, not one. What does that tell us? That our farm workers are happy with their relationship with their farm employers.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the Premier doesn't appear to understand what they are doing. Nowhere in North America can you be employed, have legal working hours, and not be paid at least some type of minimum wage. This Premier now has the honour of introducing the most exploitive labour regime on the continent. This is the Alberta disadvantage. This is not about supporting farmers or not. I support farmers, too. And farm workers work hard. Again to the Premier: why do you remove the right for those workers to be paid by right?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the only thing being removed here is the NDP's credibility as they make stuff up that is manifestly untrue, just like yesterday. They made up a $35,000 liquor purchase by the minister of culture when, in fact, it was purchased by a restaurant starting under the previous NDP government; just like they asserted yesterday that this budget eliminated the low-income transit pass when, in fact, it was renewed by the last budget; just like they make up this so-called $4.7 billion tax break when, in fact, this year it's $100 million. Would the NDP please just stop making stuff up?

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for her second set of questions.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I will keep doing is reading the documents that that government tables in this House. If they don't like them – I'm sorry – they're their documents.

Calgary Police Service Funding

Ms Notley: Now, the fight against a rise in deadly gun violence has become a daily activity for Calgary police. The Premier cut $13 million from those police just to pay for his $4.7 billion corporate handout on page 144. Now the chief is saying that if the city doesn't find new money to backfill it, 85 positions will be lost. Premier, this is your cut. What should Calgarians do, pay more tax or buy a gun and lock their doors?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the crime wave in this province began under the NDP, and it began under their friends in Ottawa, who began stripping away tough-on-crime laws. This government is acting to protect citizens from criminals and from both violent and nonviolent property crime. The Minister of Justice has already begun implementing our platform commitment to hire 50 additional prosecutors, to put more police on the roads. He'll be having an important announcement about that in the days to come. Unlike the NDP, this government stands to defend law-abiding Albertans.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the folks over there really need to stop misleading Albertans. They promised 500 more officers. Instead, we're getting eight new articling students, asking bylaw officers to do more dangerous work, telling rural municipalities to pay more for the few police they already have, creating delays in the court system, and slashing 85 positions from CPS alone. Why won't the Premier admit that the safety and security of Albertans will always come second to his $4.7 billion corporate handout?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the job-creation tax cut actually represents $100 million in forgone revenue this year. As projected by multiple highly regarded, independent economists, it will lead to the creation of up to 58,000 new full-time private-sector jobs. If we want to grow the resources available to fund public services, we need to restore investor confidence and get this economy moving. That's what the job-creation tax cut is about. They raised taxes on businesses and saw revenues from businesses decline. That was the job crisis they created. We're turning it around.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, they're turning it around for Newfoundland and Wisconsin.

Anyway, 78 shootings, five fatalities, 33 injuries: while this is going on, the Calgary police chief told council that if they decide to freeze taxes, it means a full $8.4 million hole in their budget. Last spring this Premier claimed that he was the law-and-order guy – indeed, today he did – but he's responsible for cutting 85 positions in his city during a rise in gun violence. To the Premier: your cuts have consequences on the lives of real people, including your neighbours; why are you breaking yet another promise to them?

Mr. Kenney: We'll do no such thing, Mr. Speaker. We're not reducing police funding. The municipalities are responsible for their budgets. They're accountable to their taxpayers. Dr. MacKinnon's panel confirmed that provincial grants to municipalities in Alberta are higher than in any other part of the country. That's why we are asking our municipal partners to be part of fiscal responsibility as we reduce overall government spending by 2.8 per cent, less than 3 pennies on the dollar. The NDP's alternative? I guess it's nothing but a sales tax.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Hundreds of students in Calgary walked out of their classes this week to protest the layoffs of 300 of their teachers. I'm deeply moved by this display of love and support that young people are showing towards their teachers, and it's a stark contrast to the blame game that this Premier is playing. We know that the Premier blames the local board, but blame won't teach these kids grade 11, Premier. Why won't the Premier take action to reverse the more than $30 million in cuts that he's passed on to the Calgary public board?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. CBE's fiscal record is one that all Albertans should be concerned about. They do receive a $1.2 billion operating budget to oversee 130,000 students. That is roughly a third of what the whole city of Calgary operates on in their operating budget. This board has previously made $9.1 million in accounting errors, signed a 20-year lease for which they are paying $6 million more in rent than the total valuation of the building, and often projects deficits and ends the year with significant surpluses.

Ms Hoffman: So she blames Calgary public, but last night Red Deer Catholic, where the minister was a trustee for 11 years, announced that they would have to cut an additional $2.75 million from this year's budget. That's on top of the $2.3 million that they already cut after their first look at the provincial budget, earlier this year. That's more than $5 million cut from a budget that this minister helped to write for more than a decade. This Premier keeps saying that he maintained funding for education. That's clearly not true. What does the Premier have to say to the people who voted for him on a promise that he has broken?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I respect the fact that Red Deer Catholic is looking at their budgets and becoming fiscally responsible. But going back to the CBE, the Calgary board of education, who chose to – the first line of defence was to go to 300 contracts, to end the contracts with 300 temporary teachers, disrupting the lives of those teachers and those students. That is unacceptable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to clarify, the minister just said that they weren't fiscally responsible when she was the board chair. You've got to be kidding me.

Also, last night the Edmonton public board began planning for their 2020 budget, and they are anticipating 8 to 10 per cent cuts based on the data from the minister. The board is going to use up their reserves and will be facing hundreds of layoffs. So the Premier can't say that he's surprised; boards have given him notice. What's happening in Calgary will happen in Edmonton. Is the Premier going to stick to his $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout at the cost of these teachers, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I, again, sympathize with the teachers, the students, the families, but this was a decision made by the Calgary board of education which was very rash. It ended the contracts of 300 temporary teachers. I have ordered an independent financial audit and a governance review because at the end of the day they have a $1.2 billion budget, and they are not meeting the needs of their students. Albertans overwhelmingly elected our government to live within our means and get our finances in order. As a public body the CBE has a responsibility to assist in this endeavour while still supporting their students . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning is rising with a question.

Election Commissioner's Office

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, last week this government raced to fire the Election Commissioner and stop his investigation in its tracks.

Presumably, the office of Lorne Gibson is full of sensitive files about alleged voter fraud and all of the nefarious actions taken to ensure this Premier won the UCP leadership race. Bill 22 was given royal assent on Friday. Can the Premier inform the House if the Election Commissioner's office is still open and functioning, and if not, can you please inform the House what happened to the sensitive material in the office?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Chief Electoral Officer, who is an independent officer of this Legislature, has already answered all of the hon. member's questions. I suggest that she refer to his press release, and if she has further questions, she can contact the Chief Electoral Officer. But this is another example of what the main point is: no one can trust what the NDP said. It's just like yesterday, when they accused the minister of culture of buying $35,000 worth of liquor for her office. That was ridiculous. It turned out that it was for a museum, and using the same supplier that was in place under the NDP government. Here's the reality: the NDP make things up. Albertans don't believe them.

Ms Sweet: Well, Mr. Speaker, last week I wrote to the CEO of Elections Alberta to ensure that the records in the commissioner's office are preserved properly. This is critical to ensuring that any investigation being conducted into the UCP leadership race is seen through and that justice is served. I asked for a report back to the Legislature on the process for storing and transferring those records, and I have yet to hear back. To the Premier: do you support my call for a report from Elections Alberta? Will you do everything in your power to ensure that it's provided to this House?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this side of the House supports the independent officer of the Legislature. The CEO of Elections Alberta has served this Chamber for a while and, in my experience, has done a good job and was reappointed actually by the NDP when they were in government. Again, back to my earlier point. Nobody can trust what the NDP is saying because they just make things up, just like yesterday standing in the House and, again, accusing the minister of culture of buying over $30,000 worth of liquor, when it turned out that it was associated with a restaurant and a regular purchase, and then defamed, in my opinion, a good, hard-working business in the province of Alberta who provides liquor to that establishment.

Ms Sweet: Our leader also stated that she will be filing further complaints about the vote on Bill 22 to the Ethics Commissioner. Those complaints are forthcoming. Let's remember that the commissioner did warn members of this House under investigation or linked to investigations to be very cautious. The Justice minister's response to her warning was to take to Twitter, with a Trump-like response: no conflict. People clearly loved that response. To the Premier: since the commissioner's warning have you been diligent and reached out to the Ethics Commissioner to determine if you are, in fact, in conflict?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we know that the Ethics Commissioner has actually called out that hon. member on several occasions for abusing the process when it comes to contacting the Ethics Commissioner.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, we are confident that we were within the Conflicts of Interest Act and that members who participated in the debate were within the Conflicts of Interest Act. Yes, as I said, our staff have talked to the Ethics Commissioner, and we think that we are within the Conflicts of Interest Act. We take that very, very seriously. We also take her time very, very seriously, and I suggest that that hon. member heed her advice and stop wasting that independent officer's time.

Educational Curriculum Content

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, I was sadly not shocked when I received a letter from a concerned Calgary parent about politics in her son's grade 10 social studies class. He brought home a test reflecting a deeply concerning anti oil and gas rhetoric with correct answers being: oil sands development means the destruction of tracts of forests, and oil sands development should have more restrictions on it. To the Minister of Education: why are anti-Alberta and anti oil and gas attacks passing as curriculum in our school system? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. I think the Minister of Education has the opportunity to answer the question before anyone else.

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, this is deeply troubling. Alberta has a great story to tell when it comes to our responsible energy industry and the tens of thousands of workers who make a living from oil and gas. Alberta's energy industry and the prosperity it creates builds schools not just in Alberta but right across Canada. To hear about this type of rhetoric emerging in our classrooms is troubling. Our educators have a duty to tell the truth about our responsible energy industry. We said that we were going to take politics out of the classroom, and that's exactly what we will be doing.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this test also contained attacks on capitalism, free trade, and globalization and given that another one of the correct answers on this test was: free trade is behind many of the ills of the modern world; it should be stopped, and given that this continues to highlight that radical left-wing ideology has made its way into our classrooms, what is the government going to do to ensure that we take politics out of the classroom and instead invest in a generation of critical learners? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. It's very difficult to hear.

Mr. Schmidt: You just can't criticize . . .

The Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar will come to order. It's very difficult to hear the question. I expect I might have a challenge hearing the answer, but I might be surprised. That would be lovely.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This type of ideology has no place in our schools. Teachers do have a wide array of approved course materials in line with the curriculum that are factual, based on evidence, and clear of bias. While some teachers choose to use those materials, others do have the latitude to find resources that are outside of the approved materials. It's frustrating to see that someone would choose to bring their own political ideology into the classroom. We will look into this as we develop a new curriculum. We will get politics out of our education system.

The Speaker: Now the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More shocking news that might shock the other side over there. Given that this parent also highlighted the recent federal student vote and given that part of the instructions for that vote was an explanation that if you vote Conservative, that means you support racism and don't care about the environment, but if you vote Liberal, NDP, or Green, that means you are not a racist and that you care about the environment, to the Minister: how and why is this type of blatant and biased political partisanship making its way into our classrooms in this great province? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, I'm not surprised to hear this. When you see radical activists like David Suzuki, who attacks our energy industry and compares our province to Mordor, actually get invited by the ATA to speak with their members, it's hardly surprising that educators would feel emboldened to bring those biases into the classroom. Parents are losing faith in our education system when they hear about stories like this, and we must act. While the NDP want our children to protest alongside them and their friends in the Extinction Rebellion, Alberta parents really want our curriculum and our schools to prepare our kids for real life. [interjections]

2:10

Photoradar Review

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, our government took many steps to eliminate improper use of photoradar, including banning it on multilane highways and in transition zones where posted speed limits change rapidly. We were also requiring, by March, all municipalities to demonstrate that they were only using photoradar for safety and not to bring in revenue. We were putting down the cash cow. To the minister: will municipalities still have to comply with the rules we put in place by March, or will you let the cash cow live on?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting that the hon. member is complaining about what their government didn't get done during their time in office. As we announced yesterday, we are going to work with the 27 municipalities that use photoradar, the 27 police services, to get good data collected. The report done during the NDP time said that the data wasn't available. We are going to ensure thereafter that photoradar is used for safety and not just as a cash register, as a cash cow, punishing people unreasonably.

Member Loyola: Well, given that many Albertans are worried that the announcement about another two-year study on photoradar is just this government pumping the brakes on taking real action and given that we had actually given Albertans a clear deadline for improper use of photoradar to end and given that we also know that this government has cut heavily into funding for municipalities to pay for its $4.7 billion giveaway to big corporations, to the minister: are you simply attempting to soften the blow of those cuts by boosting total fines for Alberta motorists?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member wants those fines to be upped, which indicates to me that he wants photoradar to be used as a cash cow. In his first question he said no. In his second question he said yes. I would challenge the hon. member with his third question to decide what side he's on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I know which side I'm on – I'm with Albertans – and given that this government is hiking costs to cover its $4.7 billion no-jobs giveaway and given that this government is also now taking a larger share of speeding fine revenue than they were previously, to the minister: is this the real reason you're allowing photoradar to live on, because you need to help to pay for your failed corporate handout experiment?

Mr. McIver: Well, I guess 2 out of 3 says that he's in favour of a cash cow photoradar, because that's what he's pushing for, Mr. Speaker, more money to municipalities through photoradar. We are advocating for more safety for municipalities through photoradar. I guess the hon. member has decided what camp he's in; he's with the cash cow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Job Creation

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This UCP government campaigned on creating jobs and investment in the province. They made all sorts of claims that all we had to do was give $4.7 billion to corporations, and jobs and investments would come flooding back to the province. However, we've actually seen the opposite. Their corporate handout hasn't created a single job to date. If anything, we've seen investment leave the province under this UCP government, including Husky and Imperial. To the minister: where are all the jobs and investments that you promised us?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it interesting that the members opposite expect our government to fix, in seven months, four years of gross incompetence. This was a former government that raised taxes on job creators and actually brought in less revenue. Even an elementary school student can understand that that doesn't work. October job numbers showed an increase in 20,000 private-sector jobs in this province, and we're confident that that will continue.

Mr. Bilous: Well, 2.8 per cent growth in 2018: you can't spin that.

Given that crude-by-rail contracts would have moved 120,000 barrels of oil per day and given this government ripped up these contracts, leading to an extension of curtailment, and given there are 11,300 fewer jobs in the natural resources sector since the $4.7 billion corporate handout was introduced and given that lifting curtailment would easily lead to an additional 6,800 jobs and given that companies are actually moving out of the province, will the minister finally admit they have not kept their promise to create jobs and investment in the energy sector?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy has risen.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. After spending 13 years in the private sector working for the oil and gas and pipelines, in my role in this job what I know and what I know clearly is that the main problem is the lack of pipeline capacity, and it's the lack of investor confidence and the lack of ability for investors to believe that Canada can get infrastructure projects built. Over the last four years, while that government was in power, every single pipeline project failed, was either cancelled, vetoed, or delayed, and their leader sat in Justin Trudeau's office the day he killed Northern Gateway pipeline.

Mr. Bilous: Millions of barrels of oil would have already moved.

Given that our government introduced a number of programs to diversify our economy and create jobs and given that these programs were successful in attracting investment and given that this government has now pulled the rug out from under many businesses by cancelling these programs in order to pay for their $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout and given that these cancellations will lead to a loss of $19.1 billion in investment and almost 18,000 jobs forgone, will the government finally admit they failed to create jobs and investment and, worst of all, they failed Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is creating the best broad-based macroeconomic conditions for businesses to thrive through our job-creation tax cut. Unlike the members opposite, we don't have an "or" mentality to the economy; we have an "and" mentality. We can support agriculture and energy and support innovation, diversification, and other sectors. With respect to the tax credit programs the member opposite is speaking of, just a few weeks ago one of the companies that was a benefit of that tax credit system is posting: we are hiring programmers, senior designers, accountants, concept artists. They're doing just fine and are completely sustainable.

Public Service Wages

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees is pushing the government for a 7.85 per cent wage increase. AUPE bosses are completely out of touch with the financial realities of our province. Albertans are facing unemployment, and the management at AUPE has the audacity to ask taxpayers for an outrageous increase in pay. It's not the teachers and it's not the nurses that are out of touch; it's the union bosses. To the minister: what message do you have for AUPE going into negotiations?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Listen, we're all in this together as Albertans. We all have to do our part to live within our means, and we cannot ask Alberta taxpayers for public-sector pay raises at a time when over the last few years we've seen so many Albertans lose their jobs and certainly, in some cases, take a cut in pay. Our MLAs have rolled back our pay by 5 per cent, our Premier by 10 per cent. I would ask union bosses to work with us at this time of restraint. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mrs. Pitt: Given that Albertans are paying higher on average for government services and given that AUPE management is demanding an increase in pay, knowing that it very well could lead to a reduction in employees, yet omitting this information from its members and given that members of the AUPE are starting to realize this union is out of touch and they're starting to hold them accountable for the millions they pay in dues, Minister, how will you ensure taxpayer dollars are being spent in the best way possible while maintaining high-quality government services?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Public-sector wages make up over 50 per cent of our budget, and our public-sector remuneration rates are higher than those of other provinces. We can no longer afford to be an outlier in this Confederation. Our government will be a responsible steward of this province's finances. We will make decisions that are in the best interests of Albertans. We will manage this province's finances responsibly.

Mrs. Pitt: Given that thousands of Albertans have lost their jobs over the past four years and further given that the demands of the unions in our province seem to be dominating the headlines and much of the government's time, not to mention the lies they are spewing to their members – I am happy to see that so many people are holding them accountable – Minister, how will your ministry balance the misguided demands of unions with the actual needs of everyday Albertans who just want to get back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me start by saying that we appreciate and recognize the contribution that the public sector makes in delivering high-quality services to Albertans every day. Our government is committed to ensuring that the public sector is sustainable, not only today but for the next generation, and our government will not allow union demands to outweigh the voices of so many Albertans that are still struggling with economic uncertainty. Let me be clear. There are no provisions for public-sector wage increases in this budget.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, this government's treatment of farmers and ranchers during this difficult harvest has alternated between lip service and neglect, but now we see that this government's lack of respect for farm workers has reached a new low. This government and the minister of agriculture are openly attacking the rights of farm and ranch workers. Can the minister of agriculture please explain why, at a time when farms and ranches need support and resources, he is stripping the rights of workers to organize on small farms or to be paid at all, contrary to our Canadian Constitution and the universal declaration of human rights?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are actually very close to repealing Bill 6, so I would say that we are actually on the side of farmers on this side of the Chamber. After extensive consultations it was found that there was no need for unions on farms. That was after 25 consultation stops across the province talking to farmers and farm workers from all different types of commodity backgrounds. It's interesting that over four years under the NDP government there was not one single certification of a union on an Alberta farm. We're proud that on this side of the House we actually listen to farmers.

Mr. Dach: Given that this minister has bragged about his 8,000-kilometre tour of rural Alberta but given that this minister's flagship piece of legislation allows farm and ranch workers to be denied WCB coverage if their employers decide not to subscribe to it and given that it's patently obvious that this minister of agriculture never spoke with paid farm and ranch workers during his heralded consultation tour, is the minister now trying to actually claim that farm and ranch workers told him they did not want WCB coverage?

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, the premise of that question is categorically not true. No one cares more about farm workers than farmers, and under Bill 26, Farm Freedom and Safety Act, occupational health and safety will still be the case in Alberta, but farmers would be allowed to develop their own best practices rather than having to go under the OH and S code. The NDP thought that they were in the best scenario to actually dictate what would actually happen on a specific farm. We're giving farms and farm workers the freedom to develop the best practices on the farms, which they do so well already.

Mr. Dach: Thank you. We're going backwards, back to the prelegislative days, when workers had no rights whatsoever.

Now, given that farmers who opt out of WCB coverage could be exposed to lawsuits over injuries or fatalities that have occurred to paid farm workers on their farm and given that these types of lawsuits can have a major negative impact on farms and ranches and in many cases may spell economic disaster and bankruptcy for the farm, did the minister of agriculture consider the high risk this legislation places upon Alberta farmers and ranchers who opt out of WCB coverage, and will he admit that he has left these farmers blowing in the wind?

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can see that the NDP is having quite the issue of opting in and out, whether it be union dues for political activities or opting in and out of insurance. Ultimately, we want to have choice in worker insurance because that's something that we heard directly from farmers. They could have a WCB choice in worker insurance, they could have private insurance, but under the previous NDP Bill 6 lots of farms were forced to have two insurances that they had to pay those premiums for. Ultimately, there was better private-sector worker insurance that even the workers preferred. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Anti-Racism Advisory Council

Ms Goehring: The Anti-Racism Advisory Council was established by our government earlier this year and designated to advise the government on the development of antiracism and antidiscrimination programs, but since taking office this UCP government appears to have ignored this council. The co-chairs of the advisory council said last week that they were introduced briefly to the minister in a phone conversation on May 24 but haven't heard from her since. Will the minister of multiculturalism tell us why she failed to engage with or even talk to the antiracism council, and what signal does this send about this government's priorities?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I'm looking very forward to continuing conversations. In fact, I think we have one set up here next week. This is the first time in 25 years that we've had a ministry of multiculturalism. It's very important to the government, also very important to the Premier. This is about going beyond the expectations of how it is that we take care of people in this province through culture and faith, making sure that there's security in places like churches and mosques and synagogues to make sure that people can pray in safety.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the silent treatment from the minister has council members feeling that their important work they do will be dissolved by this government, will the minister end her government's shameful treatment of the antiracism council and commit to calling them, every single member, by the end of business today, and will she commit to them that their work will continue?

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, I would think that after yesterday's fiasco the member might want to consider the words that she's using and the methodology by which she asks a question. I've already stated that I've spoken to the advisory panel and that we will continue to speak with the advisory panel and will continue on the path. The multiculturalism piece absorbed the antiracism council from Education into Multiculturalism. This is a process that is very important to this side. We're not going to rush it just because they ask us to.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Goehring: Thank you. It's been six months, Mr. Speaker.

Given that this government's refusal to communicate with or provide resources to the antiracism council means that they can't even hold a meeting and given that while they leave the antiracism council in limbo with zero support, this government and minister are happily handing out a $4.7 billion corporate handout that is being spent in places like Wisconsin, is the reason that the minister of culture is ignoring this council because she plans to fire them and end their vitally important work?

Mrs. Aheer: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, again let me reiterate the importance of making sure that multiculturalism, antiracism, and all of the pieces that are tied together with that are very important to this. Just to be clear, on that side they spent $20,000 on one meeting. The resources that they're asking to be spent for one meeting over one weekend – one meeting, one weekend, $20,000 – they haven't answered about to the taxpayers of Alberta. Just to be clear, that member, based on yesterday's misinformation, should very much take a clear look at the questions that she's asking to this side.

Opposition and Government Positions on Agriculture

Mrs. Allard: Alberta has a long and proud agricultural history. People came to our province from all over the world and for generations homesteaded here. Farmers, including many from the Grande Prairie area, helped to build this province. We should be proud of our farm families. Unfortunately, the members opposite on more than one occasion have displayed disdain and disrespect to Alberta farmers. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar once attacked our very own agriculture minister for being a "son of a rich farmer." To the minister of agriculture: could you tell us why it is important for every member of this House to respect our hard-working farmers and defend Alberta agriculture instead of attacking it?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of agriculture.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Farmers are job creators. They contribute to our economy and the social fabric of Alberta. But as you know, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was kicked out of this Chamber and couldn't even vote on his own piece of legislation last year. Also, it wasn't for disrespecting me; it was for disrespecting the traditions and rules of this very institution. Just recently we had another example of such disrespect as the Leader of the Official Opposition disrespected this House with a self-imposed strike. Farmers are tired of being disrespected, and that is why they voted for . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the NDP fought endlessly with Alberta farmers over their disastrous Bill 6 and given that again the NDP Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar just yesterday seemed to question the practices . . .

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mrs. Allard: . . . of Alberta farmers on fair pay for workers and farm safety standards, to the minister: can you tell us how our government will be taking a different approach in repealing and replacing Bill 6 and actually supporting our farmers instead of criticizing them?

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:30 by the Official Opposition House Leader.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry has the call.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that very important question. The true colours of the NDP came out yesterday. Again I'll quote the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, while we were debating Bill 26, when he said: "We cannot rely on every single farmer being a good employer. We cannot rely on every farmer who employs somebody to work on their farm to pay them a fair wage and ensure that they have safe working conditions." That perfectly explains the NDP's mindset towards farmers. No one cares more for farm workers than farmers. That is why we consulted broadly across Alberta, to get farmers' input on how we can repeal Bill 6.

Mrs. Allard: Mr. Speaker, given that just yesterday we had some hard-working Alberta sugar beet farmers here with us in the Legislature and given that once again the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar got up and bizarrely tried to conflate the responsible and ethical practices of Alberta farmers with the policies of Japanese internment . . .

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mrs. Allard: . . . by the federal Liberal government during the Second World War, can the minister tell this House about the great work that our farmers do and why it was offensive and wrong for the member to make this comparison?

The Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order is noted at 2:31 by the Official Opposition House Leader.

Right now the hon. minister of agriculture has the call.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week the Official Opposition reached prestige status in misrepresenting the facts to Albertans. Yesterday in this House they demonized an Edmonton small business, and then they demonized Alberta's entire ag sector while debating Bill 26. Yesterday the current Leader of the Official Opposition said, in debating Bill 26: "Wow. You must really hate these workers. It's really shocking to me . . ."

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mr. Dreeshen: ". . . how much you guys must dislike people who work for farmers," and I don't know why you hate them so much.

Mr. Speaker, no one cares more for farm workers than farmers.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order is noted at 2:32 by the Official Opposition House Leader.

We are at the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

School Head Covering Policies

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just yesterday the Edmonton Catholic school board meeting was adjourned early because of a peaceful, silent protest about an ongoing dispute about racial prejudice in school dress codes. The family of the boy at the centre of this dispute does not feel heard by the school or the board. Now, I thank the Minister of Education for having met with the family. She told them that she had received a report from Edmonton Catholic, a report that she's repeatedly promised that she would produce and table in the House. Will that minister table that report today, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I would like to reiterate something I've said time and time again. No one should ever feel discriminated against based on race. I have received a report from the Edmonton Catholic school division, and I have met with the family. I'm awaiting some follow-up information before I move forward with next steps. The Education Act mandates that all schools are created with safe and caring school spaces, and I'm confident that that's what we have in our school system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that this minister also told the family that she would consider a review of the headwear policies at Edmonton Catholic schools, particularly the wearing of do-rags, and given that the minister previously stated that she's in favour of board autonomy, was the minister's promise to this family sincere, and if so, can she clarify how she intends to work with the board, while respecting their autonomy, to address and change this discriminatory policy?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I do respect board autonomy. I was a trustee for 11 and a half years and wore many hats throughout that time period. What I did share with the family was that I would be reviewing whether Edmonton Catholic followed board policy. That's what I've committed to doing, and that's what I will continue to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for that clarity. Now, given that this minister came out strongly in October with a promise to resolve this issue but given that more than a month later the dispute is continuing and starting to interfere with the regular operation of a major school board and given that this government has shown that it's not shy about taking a direct hand in many aspects of the public service and given that all that's required to bring this to an end is a simple apology, Minister, what specific steps will you be taking to ensure that Edmonton Catholic comes to a resolution with this family?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Again, I have said that I have received a report from the Edmonton Catholic school board. I have met with the family. I'm awaiting further information as far as my next steps, but I continue to advocate that the school board and the family continue discussions so that they can resolve it without interference from government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has a question.

Seniors' Benefit Program Funding

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is cutting off supports for seniors while lecturing them about needing to live within their means. While the minister is admonishing seniors about how they're costing more than this government is willing to pay, seniors are watching them splurge on private planes, fancy London hotels, and a $4.7 billion giveaway, printed in black and white on page 144 of the UCP budget. Will the minister of seniors admit she was wrong to suggest that seniors are the ones who need a lesson in living within their means and apologize?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I want to mention that we do care about seniors, and in this budget we increased by $9 million the budget for Seniors and Housing. Just to refer to the question she asked, we do care. We continue to make a commitment to take care of our seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Except they stopped indexing the Alberta seniors' benefit, and they've cut thousands of people off the drug plan. Therefore, they are cutting seniors' programs.

Mr. Speaker, this government seems to be thinking of cutting tens of thousands of seniors off these plans, and given that they think it's disrespectful to suggest that the Premier's $200,000-a-year adviser stay in a hotel that doesn't have a vitamin C shower and a champagne bar, can the minister explain why she's trading away affordable medication for seniors so that the Premier's six-figure salary adviser can travel through London ...

The Speaker: Order. Order. I generally find that when members don't use a preamble, they have ample time to get in their question. I don't think that was the case in the previous one.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the member talks about cutting seniors' benefits, this absolutely is a misrepresentation of information. The benefit we just eliminated is for seniors who are under 65 years old. By the way, the indexing is a temporary measure that will be reviewed once we have Alberta's financial house in order. Seniors understand we have to go through thoughtful measures right now, and in the long term we will protect the public services ...

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that this government is trading the needs of Alberta's seniors for a $4.7 billion corporate giveaway and has created more investments in New Brunswick and Wisconsin than it has in Alberta, will the minister really look seniors in the eye and tell them that while this government isn't willing to pay for seniors' drug and income benefits, they're willing to subsidize Husky while it moves jobs and investments out of our province?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we will make no apology for our job-creation tax cut. It is a key policy plank that will attract investment, create jobs and opportunities. The members opposite increased corporate taxes by 20 per cent, sent investment out of this province by the billions of dollars, with it jobs and opportunities, and collected fewer corporate tax revenues the following three years. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod must ask a question.

Rural Police Service Funding

Mr. Reid: I must ask a question. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government committed to addressing the rural crime crisis we are currently facing in Alberta. I was glad to see the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General taking this so seriously and touring the province to ensure that my constituents and all rural Albertans are heard. However, the NDP, in attempting to fearmonger about our budget, stated that the budget included cutting funding for police, including in rural areas like mine where the crisis has visible and damaging effects. Can the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General please clarify the status of police funding in Alberta?

2:40

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our budget increased funding for policing. We're proud of that. I'm also proud of the fact that we've gone out and consulted with Albertans across rural Alberta to talk about rural crime. We've taken decisive action to make sure that we have the strongest property rights possible in the country. We're proud of what we brought forward in Bill 27.

When it comes to the future of policing, we're continuing to talk with rural municipalities about the future of policing. You can't talk about that without talking about rural crime. We're hopeful that we can get to a new partnership going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for his answer. Given that my riding of Livingstone-Macleod covers multiple towns, municipalities, and counties and given the wide variety of population-dependent funding models and given the reassurance that he just gave me that the police funding would not be cut, can the same minister explain the effects that a new funding model might have on municipalities of all of these different sizes and explain how this will better protect the victims of our rural crime crisis?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, if we proceeded with a new police funding model, every single dollar would go into more law enforcement across rural Alberta. But there also has to be accountability that comes with that. If you're asking somebody to contribute, you have to have accountability in governance. That means that rural municipalities have a seat at the table to help make sure that we set the priorities. Direction wouldn't come from Ottawa; it would come from the municipalities.

Mr. Reid: Thank you for that answer. Given that many smaller municipalities believe they need more protection than the service agreements they signed provide and given that these municipalities are often rural ones that cover vast expanses of our province and given that these areas are often the ones hardest hit by the rural crime crisis that we face, can the minister expand on what effect the budget and new police funding framework will have on these municipalities as they aim to address the large and growing issue that they face?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. If we proceeded with this, the feedback we heard from municipalities loud and clear is that it would need to be phased in over numerous years to make sure that we allow for the gradual ramp up and ability to resource the additional law enforcement. We heard that loud and clear from the people on the ground. We have to make sure that there's accountability that's brought with it, that we can get those additional boots on the ground. If we proceeded, it would be a historic new partnership, a new way to proceed with policing in rural Alberta. [interjection]

The Speaker: Order. In 30 seconds or less we will proceed to Members' Statements.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Free Economy

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Alberta has a long and strong history of being an economically free engine that powers our great country, a province that rewards the hard work of its citizens and celebrates the contributions of our agriculture and energy industries and the numerous businesses that innovate and invest in our communities and in our families. To quote the late Margaret Thatcher: "A man's right to work as he will to spend what he earns to own property to have the State as servant and not as master . . . they are the essence of a free economy. And on that freedom all our other freedoms depend."

The previous government did not understand that, Madam Speaker. They took us on a path of reckless power grabs and attempted to restrict the freedoms that are engraved into our way of life. They launched an assault on the freedoms of Albertans through reckless increases to deficits, debt, taxes, and red tape. That is not the Albertan way. It goes against the embedded values of freedom and fiscal responsibility that have resulted in the success and prosperity of this great province.

Albertans know what is best and that if they keep their money in their own pockets, they will be responsible and they will be generous. They will take care of their families, friends, and neighbours. They will invest in themselves and invest in their communities. In Medicine Hat you just need to look at entrepreneurs like Chris Hellman, who owns franchises in Mr. Lube and Moxie's, or Hillary Beck, who owns the retail stores Friday's Image and Kitchen Kaboodle, to see the great contributions that Albertans make in their communities. It is important that we protect our ability to make these choices for ourselves and make decisions freely, away from the influence of government.

I stand here incredibly proud to call myself an Albertan, to be part of a province that welcomes all with open arms, a province that believes in giving those struggling a hand up and not a handout, a province that is generous and kind. From Leduc No. 1 to expansive ranchlands and canola fields, some would say that our province is like a perfect cup of coffee, strong and free.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Family and Community Support Services Program

Member Ceci: Madam Speaker, since 1966 the government of Alberta has partnered with municipalities and Métis settlements to fund preventative social services through the family and community support services program. This week the Family and Community Support Services Association of Alberta is holding its annual conference at the Fantasyland Hotel in Edmonton. Their theme is Resilient People, Strong Communities, and the attendees will discuss issues ranging from poverty reduction to reconciliation to housing.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, throughout my career as a social worker, alderman, and MLA I have witnessed the extraordinary work done by FCSS. I've seen vulnerable children gain confidence by taking part in community art programs. I've seen people in crisis receive the support they need at the Distress Centre. I've seen hungry Calgarians served a warm meal at the Alex community centre. These are all programs that benefit from FCSS funding, filling gaps left by other provincial programs. Unfortunately, under this government those gaps are getting wider, and the job of FCSS is getting more difficult.

While the NDP were in government FCSS support rose nearly 40 per cent, but the present government has frozen that support. The NDP government indexed some income supports such as AISH and seniors' benefits to inflation, but this government has scrapped that. Our government funded a school nutrition program, but this Premier would rather send his advisers for champagne than send our kids to school with breakfast. The UCP government expects programs like FCSS to fill the gaps these cuts create, but that's just not credible. They don't get it.

Mr. Speaker, people from around the province are gathering today to spend a few nights in the Fantasyland Hotel, but on Friday they will leave fantasyland, go home, and deal with the hard realities on the ground. Unfortunately for them, this government lives in fantasyland all year-round.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Women in the Energy Industries

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In under a century women have made phenomenal progress. However, even after getting the right to vote, women had an uphill battle. Whether it was equal pay or fighting to be accepted into certain professions, women have strived to do more and to be recognized as equal. Up north the heavy equipment operators were only men at one time. Now not only do you see women driving those 400-tonne trucks, but they are the preferred operators because they are simply better drivers.

It isn't just the big trucks women drive but entire companies, too. Take Syncrude: their managing director is a brilliant woman by the name of Doreen Cole. She has been the top executive at Syncrude for almost two years now, and she has done an admirable job in a tough time. She didn't just break the glass ceiling, Mr. Speaker, she shattered it to become Syncrude's first female top executive. That is only her latest position. Previously she was a senior VP at both Suncor and EPCOR, and this year she won a business award for female leadership.

Suncor also has brilliant female leaders. Senior Vice-President Shelley Powell is the prime example. Having worked at Suncor since 1995, Shelley, armed with her bachelor's degree in chemical engineering and her two master's degrees, has excelled at Suncor as a leader. She has applied her skill set to driving continuous improvement in the administrative and operational performances of Suncor. Now she's responsible for providing safer, more reliable operations of the base plant as well as the in situ assets. She is knowledgeable, wise, and well educated. Most importantly, she is a kind, caring leader who gives back to our Fort McMurray community.

Doreen Cole and Shelley Powell are trailblazers. Following in their path are many female leaders that are working their way to the executive boardroom. That's why this government is investing in women. Women Building Futures is one way our government has committed to investing in equality in our society.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Bill 29

Municipal Government (Machinery and Equipment Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019

Mr. Madu: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise and introduce Bill 29, the Municipal Government (Machinery and Equipment Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019.

Bill 29 will continue the good work we did after implementing Bill 7, the Municipal Government (Property Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019. This legislation, Mr. Speaker, will expand the incentives included in that legislation to include machinery and equipment. If passed, this bill would give municipalities yet another tool in their tool box to attract investment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. In accordance with section 19(1)(a) of the Auditor General Act as chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I'm pleased to table the results report of the Auditor General of Alberta for the year ended March 31, 2019. Copies of this report will also be provided to all members.

Thank you very much, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, followed by Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just rise to table the requisite number of copies of an article titled Doctor Asks Terminally Ill Kids What Really Matters In Life – Here Are Their Answers, from June 17, 2019, by Dr. Alastair McAlpine. It's great levity and a little bit of a reminder about what's important in life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in this House today to table the requisite number of copies of nearly 4,800 signatures from concerned citizens asking for the immediate termination of support and operation of the supervised consumption site in Lethbridge, organized and gathered by the Lethbridge Citizens Alliance.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-City Centre has a tabling.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As referenced in my question to the Minister of Health yesterday, I have five copies of the nondisclosure agreement that was presented to Dr. Remo Panaccione in order for him to be able to speak with the minister about this government's intentions for requiring the use of biosimilars over drugs prescribed by the patients' physicians.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by St. Albert.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a document from the Calgary Herald on the topic of a sole-source contract of some $73,000 that was given to a firm with partisan ties to the governing party.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies from the Bulletin of Science, Technology & Society entitled Scientists Reach 100% Consensus on Anthropogenic Global Warming, a consensus among research scientists based on a review of over 11,000 peer-reviewed articles.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much., Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a constituent's communication with my office who is extremely upset about the current government in their move to move teachers' pensions. Very, very clear on this – I encourage all members to take a look at that – “keep your hands off my pension.”

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are points of order. At 2:30, 2:31, and 2:32 the hon. Official Opposition House Leader raised three points of order. I am guessing we might be able to speak to all three of them at the same time. I will provide you the opportunity to do so now.

Point of Order Improper Questions

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe the first two can be grouped together, and the third one is in regard to a different member.

I rise on 23(h), (i), (j), and that's during question period, obviously, when the Member for Grande Prairie rose to ask questions to the minister of agriculture. First of all, in her question, I mean, not only did she make allegations, her questions were completely designed to create disorder, to attack another member in this House. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that her question, you know, not only attacked a member but identified the member, and her questions absolutely had nothing to do with government policy.

Now, I know that there is extreme latitude in this place as far as where and how members can ask questions on different topics, but I know that you yourself, Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions have encouraged members to remain within the space of policy. Her questions had nothing to do with government policy and were used to conflate comments that may have been made yesterday but were dealt with.

The issue for me is really the fact that using question period in the way that she did completely goes against our standing orders, where it really was abusive, insulting language that was used to create disorder. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that for those reasons, I'm seeking that the member withdraw her comments.

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I do agree with the Official Opposition House Leader that the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar were offensive but not really relevant to a point of order with regard to question period. It's clearly a matter of debate in the context that the hon. member is referring to. Also, if the Official Opposition House Leader wants to indicate that talking about agriculture legislation or how farmers are consulted or impacted by agriculture legislation or are participating in agriculture legislation is somehow not government business, I do see why that party has no rural Alberta seats inside this Chamber, clearly, with those comments.

This is a matter of debate, and the agriculture policy around legislation associated with safety issues is certainly a matter of government business.

The Speaker: Thank you for both members' interventions. I would say that, certainly, in asking questions with respect to legislation that has passed with respect to Bill 6 or, in turn, Bill 26 there is, I think, some precedent to suggest that the questions were about government business.

Having said that – and I don't intend to find a point of order in this case – what I will do is provide some caution to the private member with respect to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 510. This particular section is on questions that are in order or are not in order, in this case, “make a charge by way of a preamble to a question.” In footnote 76

Speaker Scheer cautioned against the “growing trend” of oral questions preceded by preambles that “criticize the position, statements or actions of other parties, Members from other parties and, in some cases, even private citizens.”

Now, given the fact that the member was essentially quoting from Hansard with respect to the debate yesterday, I also believe that we have a matter of debate before us.

All of that is to say that I think it's important that all members remember that we are all responsible for the decorum of the Assembly and to consider such when crafting our questions. As such, the question was related to government business and is not a point of order at this time.

Hon. Official Opposition House Leader, on point of order 3. Would you like to withdraw point of order 3, or do you disagree?

Mr. Bilous: Correct. Withdraw.

The Speaker: Perhaps it is both, but that's neither here nor there.

Point of order 3 has been withdrawn. As such, I consider the matter concluded and dealt with.

We are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Firearms

41. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly recognize and support the ability of Albertans to lawfully and in a responsible manner own and possess firearms and to engage in permitted activities involving the use of firearms, including but not limited to hunting and sport shooting.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move Government Motion 41. I'm excited to move that motion on behalf of Albertans in this place but also in support of my friend and colleague the hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, who is a passionate advocate on this issue and, I know, will speak shortly on this important motion, as well as, of course, on behalf of the constituents of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Many of them are law-abiding firearms owners who use firearms in appropriate ways inside this province and are shocked to continue to see comments from the recently re-elected federal Liberal government as well as the Official Opposition's federal party, Mr. Speaker, which you, I know, are well aware is the same party as the provincial party – structurally and leadershipwise they are the exact same organization – who continue to make disparaging comments associated with firearms owners inside this province and also indicate that in some ways the federal government may take action against law-abiding firearms owners inside this province to take away their property or in any way to be able to stop them from utilizing their property in appropriate ways inside this province.

We saw the former federal Liberal government do that with things like the registry and other laws that they brought into place, Mr. Speaker. I know that we have been excited to have seen recent federal victories underneath the Stephen Harper Conservatives, but we want to make it clear that this Assembly, this elected body of Alberta representatives, will stand with law-abiding gun owners inside this province.

Further to that, we want to see if the provincial NDP is going to choose to stand with their federal party, their federal leader. We do know that when it came to things like pipeline policy and energy policy, they have chosen to stand with their federal leader as well as their close ally Justin Trudeau, who campaigned to stop the energy industry – catch that: campaigned to stop the energy industry – to shut down pipelines. That's who their leader, the Official Opposition House Leader admitted that – not the Official Opposition House Leader. He did not publicly admit that. I apologize. I misspoke there. The Leader of the Official Opposition: I don't know if she knows that her Official Opposition House Leader may be indicating that he maybe voted for Andrew Scheer. I certainly hope that's the case. We do know that the Leader of the Official Opposition admitted – admitted – in the newspaper that she voted for her federal leader, who is trying to shut down the oil sands and is directly attacking the people of this province.

The question then comes with this motion. We'll see during the debate and the ultimate vote in this place if the provincial NDP is going to listen to their federal leader of the same party, their ultimate overseer of their provincial party, or are they going to stand with Albertans? We know how they stood when it comes to energy policy. They sold out Albertans to Justin Trudeau and to the federal NDP leader. What are they going to do with firearm owners inside this province? I can tell you . . .

An Hon. Member: Great question.

Mr. Jason Nixon: We'll see what happens, Mr. Speaker.

But I suspect that the government caucus in this place is going to vote to stand with firearm owners inside this province, and I look forward to hearing a robust debate on this important issue this afternoon.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has moved Government Motion 41. Under Standing Order 18(1)(a) this is a debatable motion. Is there anyone that would like to join the debate this afternoon? The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgow: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Government House Leader for placing this on the Order Paper. It is so important that we stand with our law-abiding firearm owners in this province. I'm going to start with a personal story because I think those go over pretty well in this place.

I grew up in a family that loves guns. We have all sorts of calibres. We go out sport shooting. We hunt regularly. You know, my very first time shooting a gun was a .22 Hornet, actually. We shot gophers and all sorts of things out in the prairies and had such a good time. The very first thing that I had to learn when I was a young girl was safety. I think that before I could walk, I knew that you had to check the chamber of a gun before you could pick it up. I knew how to check to see if a gun was loaded before I could tie up my shoes. I know that under parental supervision, obviously, and a family's guidance and also just common sense, our law-abiding gun owners here in Alberta are safe and they're taking care. I just wanted to start with that.

The next gun that I was privileged to own was a .243 Remington. This is also known as Lucy in my family. Lucy is affectionately referred to as she has been the demise of many a deer. She's a good friend to me, old Lucy. My dad and I have taken many expeditions out in many ridings in this province, including the Member for Drumheller-Stettler's. We do a lot of sport shooting as well as taking care of business out there. We know that owning a legal firearm and using a legal firearm effectively can actually provide meat for the entire year. Not only does it provide you meat; it's delicious, Mr. Speaker.

The next gun that I got was something for Christmas. This is probably the best Christmas present ever, but I got a 7mm-08 Remington from my dad as well. This little beauty packs a punch, let me tell you. My 7mm-08, which is carefully locked, stored, and taken care of, has been another good friend of mine, in fact. It took down a moose and an elk in the past two years, provided meat for my family as well as provided some really good family bonding with me. Actually, it also provided some nutritious meat for the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat and his family, perks of being friends with me, I guess. That's what a good old-fashioned legal firearm owner will get you.

I know that many members in this House understand just how important it is to own legal firearms as well. We heard many reports about rural crime increasing in this province. We know that criminals are deterred when legal firearm owners are armed. We're not advocating for anyone to be out there willy-nilly, but we know that this deterrence is a major factor. The reality is, Mr. Speaker, that 29 per cent of Canadian homes possess one or more guns, with an average of three guns per home. There are 12.7 million legal firearms in Canada.

I say all of this because false gun rhetoric has been rampant. We saw this in the federal election. We've seen this dating back to before I was even thought of, I'm sure. You hear a lot of people saying: "You know, if we just took guns off the street, everything would be fine. If we just took guns out of the hands of everyone, we'd be fine." Not only is that demonstrably false; it attacks law-abiding citizens, and it attacks rural Albertans disproportionately.

You know, we see a lot of increased gang violence, but that's mainly in Toronto and Winnipeg, not to say that that's not important. We need to be cognizant of that, and we need to be curbing that. But these guns are not legally obtained, on average. These guns are taken normally from our border to the south of us, Mr. Speaker, and these guns are used to harm other people.

At the same time, when you're talking about a handgun ban – most of these incidents actually occur with rifles and shotguns. Now, by no means am I advocating for a ban of any kind of firearm, but to go after handguns and law-abiding handgun owners is totally not the right approach. These criminals want something that is easily concealable, so they'll saw off a shotgun or they'll saw off a rifle if they can't get their way. Of course, these tragic incidents with our neighbours from the south – and our hearts go out to them – are tragic. They deserve to be addressed. But once again, going after law-abiding gun owners like many of the members of this Chamber and their families is not the answer.

One thing that people often get misconstrued is that they say: it's so easy to get a gun; it's so easy to do all of these things. That couldn't be more far from the truth. Getting a gun in Canada isn't easy, in fact, and many who talk about this have never been further than walking through Bass Pro Shops on their way to the rest of the mall to obtain one. First, you have to take a firearm safety course. This covers the evolution of firearms and ammunition, operating the action, safe handling and caring procedures, how to load a magazine, the care of your firearm, responsibility of firearm users, safe storage, display, transportation, handling. Then you have to complete an exam, and you have to get over 80 per cent on that to pass the course. Also, if you want to obtain a handgun, you have to get a restricted PAL, so that's another test. There are many, many safeguards in place to make sure that people who should not be owning firearms do not own them. But once again, taking them away from the rancher who has to shoot the coyotes who are attacking his calves is not the answer.

There are robust rules around storing guns, including removing the bolt, storing it in a container that can't be broken into, and unloading restricted weapons. Obviously, Canadians are respecting these rules, and Albertans are respecting these rules, and we have an obligation, especially as the only party with rural members in this House, to be standing up for those law-abiding gun owners.

I mean, I'm sure the opposition is going to get up and talk about crime rates and how catastrophic it is. I mean, I heard them reference gun violence in their comments, which obviously is a very important issue. But let's talk about crime for a second. Criminals are not going to obtain a legal firearm. They are going to go somewhere else. They're going to saw off the end of a shotgun. They're going to find another way, south of the border, to find themselves a firearm and do with it what they want to do. Taking those guns away, like I said, from cattle ranchers, from people like my dad, from people who are providing for their families is not the answer.

A really good story I heard, actually, about our really awesome hunters and gamesmen was in Medicine Hat not too long ago. The executive director of the food bank was telling me that a young boy shot his very first doe, and he actually donated it back to the food bank. What a horrible firearm owner, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, Hansard doesn't always pick up on sarcasm, as another member has noted in the past couple of days, but obviously I'm being sarcastic. This guy is fantastic. This young man went out and harvested his very first animal and then donated it to people who need it. Like, I can't think of anything more Albertan than that.

Criminals also aren't taking safety courses. They're not doing any of this. They're not consenting to legal background checks. They're not doing anything that somebody like the members of this Assembly or the people in rural Alberta would do. They're doing things that they shouldn't be doing to begin with, so telling them to go through some bureaucratic process that takes forever as well as to go to a store and purchase a firearm legally: it's not going to happen, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, restricting the sale of those firearms is not the answer. We know that the vast majority of gun violence we see in Canada is committed with illegally obtained guns.

One thing you hear a lot of, and I think this is partially because our media – I mean, I saw it in the Toronto Star not long ago – was going after Bill C-71. Now, this whole motion is largely in response to that because the recent Liberal policies on guns are knee-jerk reactions to an issue that they really don't understand. I would be surprised if Justin Trudeau has ever picked up a firearm. I'd be surprised if he's ever been in Bass Pro Shops or Cabela's, to be completely honest with you. It's not on the fancy streets in Toronto, so I can't see him really frequenting that.

Bill C-71 was passed in the House of Commons in June of 2019, but the standing committee on public safety did not consult with Canadian gun owners, and they moved time allocation on the bill. They opened up the door to a long gun registry and potential confiscation of weapons from law-abiding gun owners. This cracks down on these gun owners' ability to transport guns even to a shooting range.

Now, Rachael Harder, the MP for Lethbridge, tabled a petition against this bill. This petition was started by a then 15-year-old Mr. Ryan Slingerland from Coalhurst, Alberta . . .

Mr. Schow: Hear, hear.

Ms Glasgo: The Member for Cardston-Siksika is pretty excited about that.

. . . and he got over 86,000 signatures in just three months. I'm told that this is one of the most signed petitions in the House of Commons' history, so that's pretty impressive. This just goes to show that there are Canadians that care about this issue. Specifically, there are Albertans that care about this issue.

I'll be really interested to see if the members opposite take a moment to even think about speaking to this motion, if they even take a motion to defend rural Albertans. I know they didn't in their last budgets. They didn't in their last four years. But, hey, here's an opportunity. I'll pass them the ball and see if they'll take it, but who knows?

Instead of something like C-71, efforts should be focused on deterring youth from joining gangs; creating opportunities for gainful employment, which is exactly what this government is doing; stopping robberies in rural communities, like you see with Bill 27; enhancing mental health supports, like you see with the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions. Our government is doing all of these things, Mr. Speaker. We are taking action on crime and criminal activity in this province, but what we're not doing – and I repeat: we are not doing – is going after law-abiding citizens. Now, I know the members opposite as well as their federal NDP counterparts would have you do that. They would have you go after Mark and Sally who own a ranch in Brooks. They would have you go after any member of this House who wishes to go sport shooting. But that's ridiculous, and it's not the answer.

Now, you know, in my time getting to know firearms and hanging out with my dad, I've learned a lot of things about firearms usage, and one of those things is that you have to be responsible. My family is nothing but responsible, and I know that members of this House are nothing but responsible when it comes to the care and ownership of their firearms. To blame these people, to blame law-abiding citizens for the actions of so few is preposterous.

We know that right now we are in a rural crime epidemic, Mr. Speaker. We heard yesterday from the Minister of Indigenous Relations about people coming on to his property. We've heard from other members of this House just how scary it is to have somebody pull into your driveway at 3 in the morning, not knowing who they are. Now, if you can deter that in any way, why not? Of course, nobody's advocating for any kind of harm to anyone, but you need to be cognizant of the fact that this is happening.

What's happening on the other side of the House is to push an ideology. You know, I'd be curious to know how many of them actually believe in it. Or do they just read their speaking notes off? I'd be curious to know if any of them have actually talked to rural Albertans about what they're facing. I do. I hear from people coming into my office talking about how frightening it is that they can't get a police officer to come to their home, or I hear from the Minister of Indigenous Relations, who gave an impassioned plea to the other side of the House to stand up for families like his, who are facing crisis. To me it's just sad.

You know, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the United Nations reports that Canada ranks third amongst developed western countries, behind the United States and Norway, in civilian ownership of firearms. These individuals are hunters, farmers, sport shooters. They're not violent criminals, and they shouldn't be treated as such. The federal government should treat the over 2.1 million Canadians who own firearms properly. They shouldn't be treating them as bad actors.

Justin Trudeau says that he cares about the interests of Albertans. You know what? I'm going to give him the benefit of the doubt. I hope that he does reach out to Albertans. I also hope that he knows that if C-71 is to be enforced and law-abiding gun owners are to be slandered in a way where they would be treated as criminals, Albertans won't take to that kindly. Our province rejected his party entirely. Something went on in Edmonton Strathcona, but I respect the results of that election. If Justin Trudeau really cares, he will listen to and respect the concerns of legal gun owners. I know that I respect them, I know that I hear them, I know that I am one, and I know that this side of the House will do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has risen.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very excited to speak to this motion. I have a few different elements that I want to speak to in the motion. First, though, I do want to just respond to some comments that the previous speaker made. You know, comments insinuating or inferring or making assumptions about how the other side may feel about a motion, I think, are dangerous to the extent that until members have risen to speak to it, we don't know how they feel.

I'll start off by saying that I will be supporting this motion, Mr. Speaker. I want to talk a little bit about the motion and where I stand, and then I want to talk about the fact that this motion doesn't bind the government to do anything. This isn't about legislation. This doesn't bind the federal government to take an action or not take an action. For those reasons, you know, we are using valuable time in the House to debate a motion that I know is important to rural Albertans. Absolutely. There are lots of city dwellers that are gun owners. In fact, my broader family all own firearms, responsibly of course.

I'll start off by saying that, you know, again, the reason I support this motion, Mr. Speaker, is that Albertans and, I would argue, Canadians that are lawful and that lawfully own firearms should have the right to own those firearms. I can tell you, and where I do agree with the previous speaker, that I think it is ridiculous for any government to try to bring in laws to make it more difficult for law-abiding citizens, claiming that that's going to deter criminals. I think that's naive. Criminals aren't buying their rifles from their local hardware store and then registering them and then going to commit crimes. I don't believe it makes our streets any safer nor does it help with that issue of violent crimes.

You know, I do believe that, again, the need or the desire for especially rural Albertans – the members spoke about coyotes and others attacking farm animals. They absolutely need to be able to take care of their animals, their wildlife, and obviously in remote parts of rural Alberta they're far from fish and wildlife or others that could assist them with unwanted predators. Again, I appreciate the desire, and in fact governments – any government – shouldn't be standing in their way, Mr. Speaker.

I do want to say that I myself and I know that several members of the NDP opposition caucus have gone to firing ranges. Last year I fired at clay pigeons for the first time. That was a hoot, I must say, Mr. Speaker. I have very good friends of mine that are hunters, including my in-laws. What I can tell you is that I was supposed to take my hunting course last fall, ran out of time, you know, because of the responsibilities in the House, but I will and plan to get my hunting licence – absolutely – and my firearms safety course as well. That's on the to-do list. I know that many members are responsible gun owners or hunters.

I'm not going to take up a ton of time. I know other members in the House want to speak. The element of this that I struggle with a bit, Mr. Speaker: I support the motion and understand where the government is coming from on this motion; I fail to see how this affects actual government policy or will effect change. I get that, you know, members may speak to the fact that this will send Ottawa a message. I'm not sure if a motion debated in this House that's nonbinding will send the government a message.

We know that we have other pieces of legislation that are in front of us that do require attention and debate. A motion like this is good for Albertans to see that we support them, members from all parties in this House, and support their rights to possess and own firearms. For that, I think now they see clearly that there are members from all sides of the House – in fact, I think I have a colleague or two that will also speak to this motion. I won't ruin the suspense of whether or not they're going to be supporting it. I'll let them speak for themselves.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I do support this motion. You know, we stand with all Albertans and Canadians who are gun owners, who want to possess and responsibly use their firearms. With that, I will take my seat.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Is anyone wishing to provide a brief question or comment?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Getson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To me, seeing this motion here today was like Christmas. You know, make your puns or your pardons or anything else. It's like redneck Christmas today. It's great to actually see this. Part of it is some of the stigmas that are around firearms ownership. The member opposite had mentioned that a number of firearms owners in the city actually have them. Absolutely. When you look at gun owner statistics, you're more likely to own a handgun if you're a white-collar worker. You're more likely to own a shotgun or a rifle if you're blue-collar or live in the country, and that's just how it goes. Then there's a bunch of others like us that have a little bit of each. My gosh, it's fantastic.

Growing up in rural Alberta, one of the first things that we learned was that equipment will hurt you. Machines can hurt you if used improperly. There are lots of tools on the farm that are kind of scary, and they can hurt you if they're not used properly. Firearms were top of the list. As a young lad that was the first thing you kind of learned right off the hop, so no different than the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat. You're taught that.

Now, my own personal story with that is that we had a few different firearms on the farm. You know, getting off the school bus at night, especially in the spring and the fall, one of my jobs was to go back and check cutlines. It was to go back and check fences, check on the cattle, and everything else. That little .22 that I was taught from a young age to use and respect and everything else, well, that was my travelling companion, that and the dog. I'll tell you that the time that we spent back in the bush going and checking on the animals and a couple of times firing a couple of shots near some coyotes that were going towards calves, that's kind of what we had growing up with it.

You know, as I progressed and got off the farm a little while later, you kind of look back at that. I was thinking of some of the significance when you have family heirlooms that are passed down. Well, some folks have tiaras. Some folks have coffee cups, other ones. There was this 1894 lever-action Winchester. My Grandpa Getson had passed away before I was born, but that old rifle: to think that my grandpa one year had been out there hunting a deer and he had actually used that rifle, and my father used that rifle. I had my chance to use that rifle when I was old enough. It's kind of one of those things that kind of stuck with us. There's also that side of it where folks potentially down in Ottawa and Toronto don't understand that connection. It's not just something that goes bang in the middle of the night.

The social media that I've seen over C-71, you know, after the Justin Trudeau government got back in place is already starting to ramp up, the fact that we're taking questions during heritage trust about individuals coming and asking if our group is supporting assault weapons. There's this misnomer that responsible firearms ownership lends itself to assault weapons. Again, if you're going to follow that train of thought, there's a bunch of misinformed folks out there that think modern sporting rifles and handguns, as an example, are considered assault weapons. Well, they're not. Those have been illegal in Canada since 1977. Any of these crimes that have been reported: there's never been one incident of an assault weapon that's been used in these crimes that has been obtained legally. Now, some of the grandfathered items or the museum pieces they have – so I kind of wanted to do away with that as well.

The concern that we're seeing here, and one of the reasons why, I think, the government brought this forward was to show that, yeah, we have a little bit of a different culture out west. Forty per cent of Canadians own firearms. You know, if you're looking at that – again, the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat has stated that we only rank third in the world. Actually, we're on par with the United States when it comes down to shotguns and rifles, but we don't have any of the crime that they have. I think it has to come down to how we utilize these things, how we're trained with them.

Now, I've got a small confession to make. I never played golf until I was in my 20s. I never got around to it. It was always something that was a little bit foreign. I actually had a mechanic from the work I was doing at the time, Aubro Services, Mike Bouchande. He took me under his wing, and he taught me how to play golf. The only reason why I learned how to play golf, Mr. Speaker, was that I was at that age when some of my friends were starting to get married off. It was at a stag event, I guess, if you would, that my friend was going to go golfing. Being the type of person I am, the last thing I wanted to do is show up there not knowing how to do something and cause potential harm or disarray to the nice golfers that I've seen on the television shows and all that. Just imagine me rolling up and hammering out balls in the wrong direction. That would be pretty bad. Mike took me under his wing, and he spent some time with me that night learning how to shoot the golf ball and doing that. He brought an old bag of clubs that he had, and we did that out in the parking lot one night after work. When I went to the golf course, I then didn't feel so foolish. I felt like I wasn't going to be a safety issue with anybody else and had a heck of a good time. I took that on, did something a little bit different, made some new friends.

My new friends from the city, well, they'd never fired a rifle, so quid pro quo in that case. We actually ended up going out to a gun range, and we took the time to do that. They then, too, developed an appreciation. No different than the member who's never shot skeet before, who took it up, and in his words he had a hoot. So it's breaking down some of those barriers.

The other thing that's really interesting with golf is that it takes a heck of a lot of time. Mr. Speaker, I don't know about you, but I can barely find enough time to make it home to see my wife and kids sometimes with this new job let alone try to book off a full day to go golfing. But I can with my kids, because I'm fortunate enough to have space on my own property, go down with my three girls and my son and take some time and actually go and shoot tin cans with a pellet gun or to go in the back. My daughter Cora developed an allergy to pumpkins. This little girl, who's nine years old now, for the last four years hasn't been able to carve a pumpkin. We've had to do that. But I'll tell you that taking and putting a couple of little marks on that pumpkin's face, and the smile on her face when I took the .22 out back and got her to carve that pumpkin remotely: priceless. I mean, those are going to be memories of carving pumpkins. It's a family tradition in our house now to carve pumpkins every year.

It's very interesting to see how, you know, the kids respect that. They're not out playing video games. They're not playing first-person shooter games. They don't even make things go bang, like some kids may have done. We've actually developed a respect for these tools, these firearms. That would be the last thing that these kids would ever do. They understand what can happen, the consequences of it. They're responsible for those actions. So there are some little things that we get to do out on the farm.

One of the other big events that I had was, you know, growing up and packing that .22 around and shooting cans. My uncle Joe Oleksiew asked my dad one day if I could go to a turkey shoot. Now, I'd never been to a turkey shoot before. I was actually thinking we were going there to shoot turkeys, Mr. Speaker. But as it turns out, what you're doing there when you get to that gun range, well, then, you're shooting paper targets. The person with the best score on there, well, you end up winning. I didn't win. I know you were waiting for that.

The technique of actually popping tin cans and moving down range and hitting moving targets was completely different. So then my Uncle Joe taught me about control. He taught me about breathing techniques. He also taught me how to watch out for those other people on the firing line because, again, when you're hunting or in the bush, it's different. Then you're learning about that.

Now, when I originally started buying my own firearms, it was literally because of the long gun registry. People can box things in a corner and hope that it never happens. Does everyone remember the story of was it Sleeping Beauty, Mr. Speaker, the spinning wheel? I would hate to get this one wrong. The whole premise of that is that you're going to lock away all these spinning wheels, and that little Sleeping Beauty is never going to prick her finger on the needle. Lo and behold – we all know what happens – she conks out and gets woken up by Prince Charming.

When I first had my son, I didn't have my own firearms. It was kind of that story that stuck in the back of my mind. I had grown up with them. Now I brought this new little person into the world, and I was going to be responsible for him. With my job I was always travelling and on the road. Some of the concerns I had were: what happens if my son Leif ends up over at a friend's place? What happens if his friends don't actually have the same control on firearms that I was brought up with? This is their friend's house, and they're used to playing with toy guns and all those things. What happens if? It was that breaking point and deciding: well, should I be responsible and teach them the right way to do it, or should I take the chance and have the folks down in Ottawa and Toronto make those decisions and potentially have something go wrong? Well, I chose the first way. It was to actually have those firearms and expose him to them.

Now, rolling the clock forward, I'd never really worked with pistols much, but I had worked with some folks that had. They had trained and served formally as well. So I ended up taking this firearms training course through Sierra riflecraft, Ben Klick. He had brought some friends in that also do some training. They do handguns and carbines and transition training as well. They were former Airborne. They're currently serving members of our police force. Now, at this course, a pretty small group of folks, there were also active duty snipers. When you're sitting and you're training with these folks, they teach you complete control. Safety, safety, safety, safety. They could take you and break down your own firearm. They could put you through the malfunctions and the procedures. They had me, you know, from the gun range guy who goes out and shoots a gun, a pistol maybe, once or twice every couple of years to being proficient at drawing and holstering and being on target in three rounds down range under a second. Complete control through jamming situations, your carbine transitions. You have to clear it and do everything else. Safety, safety, safety, and proficiency. So all of those skill sets.

I asked them at that time, you know, because it was all adults at this course, I said, "Do you allow kids here?" They said, "Well, how old?" And I said, "Well, my son is 14." They said, "Well, we don't, but under the condition of what you've shown us, and, you know, if he comes here and doesn't show those characteristics, he'll be bounced." And it was a $700 course, Mr. Speaker. It wasn't a cheap thing. So they allowed him in. My son picked up those proficiencies, those little skill sets that I taught him all along. He was using the AR-15s. He was using a .226 for a side arm as well for the pistols. And he was all through that.

Lo and behold, Mr. Speaker, when you transition to the end of your training course – and he met a lot of professionals out there as well; lots of doctors and lawyers and such – they do everything under a timer, under duress, under stress. So if anyone ever has to pull a firearm out, you know, heaven forbid, in the case of an emergency or they're going to go shoot that first deer, your heart rate is up, everything is elevated. What they do is that everything's under a stress environment, so they're timing you, and you're essentially firing against the person next to you at targets at different distances. You've got live targets, moving targets, stationary targets, different positions, everything else. Well, lo and behold, my 14-year-old son ended up winning that against serving police officers, against some former military people, and actually he beat me in it as well, which was a little humbling, but a very proud dad moment.

Now, my son, like the member opposite, was going to take his hunter's training course. Well, he ended up taking it in school. Coming back, my son was aghast at what was being taught in that school for the actual control and the way they managed those firearms. This is a teacher teaching the course who didn't have the same level of safety as the firearms owners or the firearms trainers that we went with.

Again, part of this is understanding who we are as Canadians, understanding who we are as Albertans. Rural crime: we've talked about that. One of the leading messages I had asked out in our area was how many folks in the audience, in an audience of 200 – and this probably won't be a surprise for your demographics either, Mr. Speaker – owned firearms. We look at the statistics across Canada: 40 per cent, basically, arguably. Eighty per cent of the people in that room put their hands up.

Now, again, coming back to what types of firearms, I was talking to a bunch of them. It's not just the old lever-action rifles that everyone sees or the old John Wayne big loop that you're seeing in the movies anymore. When we are talking about firearms, predominantly most of them are semiautomatic firearms now, and a large portion of them, at least 25 to 30 per cent, are modern sporting rifles. These are the evil black rifles that everyone's talking about. Myself, in my gun cabinet: I don't own a bolt gun. I have the old lever-action 30-30, and that's as close as I get. Everything else I have is of that stream, so it's a semiautomatic-type rifle.

Now, the reason why I picked those wasn't because of the movies. It wasn't because of some other silly thing. Honestly, it's because of engineering. These types of platforms have been out for at least 60 years. In the last 20 years their accuracy and their reliability have increased substantially. You've got a company like Alberta tactical firearms out of Calgary. The gentleman is a former police officer. He ends up changing his vocation. He ends up buying a machine shop, and in a number of years he's building trailers, those things. He develops some respiratory issues. He ends up transitioning over and building high-quality, Alberta-made firearms.

Now, if you're familiar with the AR-15 platform, those are considered restricted, verboten. You can only take them out and use them at gun ranges. The actual firing principles of them, being a direct impingement with a semiautomatic nature: there isn't any ruling on it. So what this gentleman designed was a different fit-up, so you're operating your lower receivers. Essentially, if you took it to the uninformed and didn't know the internal workings, threw 'em on the bench, you wouldn't know the difference between that and an AR-15. This gentleman with good old Alberta ingenuity came up with a way of having this thing legally owned as a nonrestricted firearm, Mr. Speaker. He has the modern hunter, which is in .308 calibre and up, so the big game stuff, and then a modern varmint: wonderful, finely accurate rifles. In fact, some of these rifles have been winning competitions against the bolt guns, so a really good product.

If you look at North Eastern Arms or Black Creek Labs, they're out of Ontario. They've done something similar. Diemaco, if you look at them: that's the Colt Canada version. These things are renowned all over the world.

Canadian shooting sports: you have Elcan, which provides some of the highest quality optics in the world. They're Canadian made. There's an entire industry out there that's devoted to this. Over $141 million a year goes into shooting paper targets.

Myself, when I go out hunting, I am the worst hunter ever. I'm usually rushed in the last couple of days of the year, but it's not about that. It's about me and my son going out, and it's like me going back and sharing some of those traditions and going back to some of the old farm properties and walking those old cutlines again. It's that rite of passage.

That's the thing that folks in Toronto and Ontario – they're making these well-intended gun laws – aren't understanding. It's not the people that go through all the courses, that go through all the training, that go through all the licensing to get their firearms and to use them and to control them responsibly that are the issue. The issue is the ones that aren't. Mr. Speaker, if you make it more and more difficult for the people who go through all this length of exercise and have it that every five years you're screened through the police and you have all the questions that are filled out by your spouse and those close to you, the only ones that are going to be left with these things are the criminals. To me, that's far more dangerous than anything else.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I might just ask for some discretion from the House. If you're interested in shooting clays and playing golf, you might just come down to the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and visit the Silver Willow for sporting clays. You can essentially do both.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

I see that no one has risen, so I will call upon the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by Central Peace-Notley.

Ms Phillips: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in support of this motion, Government Motion 41, a perfectly reasonable government motion on a matter of federal jurisdiction expressing a perfectly reasonable set of sentiments on the topic of firearms ownership, including but not limited to hunting and sport shooting. That is excellent.

I want to give a special shout out to Ted Feller over at Marksman Guns & Sports. It's on 13th Street N. I had the pleasure, I guess it would be about a year and a half ago, of doing an announcement in Ted's shop, surrounded by a lot of heads mounted on the walls, to reduce the fees for hunting licenses for senior citizens in the province. That was a really fun day because we also announced a mentorship program for seniors to mentor some of the young hunters that are taking their hunting certification through AHEIA, the Alberta hunter education folks. It was a really great opportunity to visit with constituents who would be paying less for their hunting licenses, folks over 65, just as they do for their fishing licenses.

That was one of my great memories as a minister. That was a fun day. I remember the federal government did something mildly ridiculous in that I had to answer questions on that day in the dead of summer, so the poor guys behind me, who were all over 65, had to stand there as I responded to the national media in both official languages under a banner of heads on a matter that had nothing to do with their discounted hunting license.

I grew up in rural Alberta. I remember the 1980s and being somewhat confused when gun ownership and gun laws began to become a matter of national debate, because I was essentially a farm kid. I remember being a little bit confused as to what the problem was here because I didn't know some of the axes of conflict that gun ownership was beginning to lay bare between urban and rural and lawful gun ownership and use of firearms for hunting or for sport shooting and some of the consequences of an illegal gun trade that was essentially popping up in our cities at that time and has persisted to this day.

I do remember over time, when I was a kid, responding to some of the changes for gun ownership. For example, different locked cabinets and all of those kinds of things came in over time. My dad, not being a details guy at all, relied on my mom to make sure that all of the permits were in order, all the cabinets were correct, and all of those sorts of things because – my dad has left us now, and I don't think even if here he would take offence – if it was left to him, I think we would have very quickly become non law-abiding firearms owners in my household if it wasn't for my mom making sure that all of the Is were dotted and the Ts were crossed.

Certainly, you know, when my dad was around, shooting tin cans in the backyard with the .22 – we certainly had more than enough space to do that – it was a thing that my sister and I did a lot, with my dad's quasi safety conscious supervision and my mom's more than safety conscious supervision to make up for it.

Over the last couple of years, when I was environment minister, I got to have a lot of interactions with the Alberta hunter education folks and other folks locally from the gun club as well. Some of the friendships that I made at the gun club in Kananaskis I really appreciated. They were having some issues related to some of their environmental permitting, and some things had changed with respect to their location in Kananaskis, wildlife corridors, and other pieces. They were having a hard time navigating all of that. You know, some of the concerns of the department I think were pretty fair enough, and some of them needed to be worked through, so I went out with the gun club in Kananaskis. Like I said, I had shot a .22 a lot when growing up, but I had never used other firearms, so I, too, got to learn how to shoot clay pigeons.

I went with Danielle Larivee, who is the former Member for Lesser Slave Lake, and she was much better at it than I was because they're loud and they're heavy, and when you're five foot two, the thing can really put you on your back foot if you're not quite ready for it. I got better over time with the folks from the Kananaskis Gun Club teaching me. One of the people was, of course, Cam Westhead, who was one of my helpers that day. He wasn't a full instructor, but he is also a member of the Kananaskis Gun Club. I'm pretty sure I can report to the House that over time the department did ensure that the Kananaskis Gun Club can stay where they are, which is fantastic, with a few modifications to their lease with the department. That was an excellent outcome of my visit there, certainly more excellent than my actual skeet shooting performance, which, I think it's fair to say, would be charitably described as fair to middling.

Obviously, I support this motion. I have no issue with it whatsoever. I believe that there are a number of lawful gun owners who also support this motion. Certainly, when we're looking at organized crime activity or other criminal activity, these are not folks that are stopping in at Marksman Guns & Sports on 13th Street North. There is a whole illegal gun trade that bubbles up from the United States that does need to be dealt with. That's got nothing to do with ordinary people who are simply pursuing hobbies of various kinds.

The final piece, though, that I will touch on in terms of my comments on this motion, Mr. Speaker, is that, you know, it's a pretty mild motion. It doesn't really even call on the federal government to do anything. I'm glad that it makes the government backbenchers feel like they are heard in the overall government agenda. I'm glad that they now feel that somehow the Premier's office and others heard them in terms of wanting to articulate some of the things that were important to them. That's really what this motion is about. It's about keeping the wheels on caucus and the backbench. It doesn't really contain anything that is even mildly controversial. It's not even really about calling on any other order of government to do something. You know, I do think it's unfortunate that we are using this time to essentially engage in, you know, caucus solidarity exercises rather than actually moving forward with bill debate or other things that are actually part of our work and our legislative agenda.

You know, be that as it may, there are all kinds of ways that premiers' offices and sort of the centre of politics keep the wheels on the bus with respect to caucus solidarity. They thought that this was a nice way to do it and engage the backbench. That's very nice for them, but I do think that in this House our time could be perhaps more productively used than this way.

Having said that, happy to support this motion, and happy to cede the floor to my colleagues who, I'm sure, will describe some of their views on the matter as well.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and talk about Government Motion 41:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly recognize and support the ability of Albertans to lawfully and in a responsible manner own and possess firearms and to engage in permitted activities involving the use of firearms, including but not limited to hunting and sport shooting.

Mr. Speaker, I think Albertans deserve and have a right to possess lawful property in a responsible manner. I think the left's answer to this situation, one of them, was the long gun registry that was imposed in 1993. When the long gun registry was brought in, it was supposed to be at a cost of $2 million, and we know that that ended up costing I think close to $2 billion. Of course, during that time period I believe that the stats suggested that probably 70 per cent of firearms were not registered, so it was obviously a dismal failure.

To that point, I'll just read this short quote from the Ontario police commissioner. I think this is from 2003, so after 10 years of the federal government's long gun registry. It says:

We have an ongoing gun crisis including firearms related homicides lately in Toronto, and a law registering firearms has neither deterred these crimes nor helped us solve any of them. None of the guns we know to have been used were registered, although we believe that more than half of them were smuggled into Canada from the United States. The firearms registry is long on philosophy and short on practical results considering the money could be more effectively used for security against terrorism as well as a host of other public safety initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, we've seen governments in the past fail in this regard when it comes to trying to restrict or take away the rights of Canadians when it comes to firearms.

I think we can all agree that safety should be number one, and that's, of course, you know, widely understood and widely respected. Safety is the key issue in dealing with firearms. I know that in my family, my home, and my community – and I'll include my business, too – the number one thing that we always consider is safety first when it comes to dealing with firearms.

Crime is a separate issue. Obviously, punishing law-abiding citizens that own firearms is not the answer to crime. We know that being tough on crime, especially gun crimes, is a far greater deterrent. People that commit crimes with guns should be severely punished for that crime. We know that just merely possessing a firearm is not a crime; nor should it be considered that.

Now, the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat talked about her favourite firearm, Lucy. I do have a favourite of my own, and it's called The Magic Magnum. It's a 7 mm Remington rifle with a Kevlar stock, a custom mountain rifle, that I've had for many years. It's looking a little worse for wear. It's been used by many people from all over the world, from all over Alberta, and from all over our community and by my family to take aim. It's known for, you know, the one-shot kill. That's The Magic Magnum. That's kind of my favourite firearm in my home.

Now, we know that hunters use firearms. Of course, I think it's widely accepted across Alberta that having hunters manage wildlife is the most accepted way to manage wildlife. Obviously, hunters could use bows, crossbows, or firearms, guns, but there are many areas and many species where it's not practical to use bows all the time. If we want to manage wildlife, we need to be able to harvest them effectively, efficiently, and in a humane manner, so that's why so many hunters use firearms in that sport.

We also have the target shooters, shooters that use firearms for recreation. You know, shotgun users will shoot sporting clays. We have a lot of target shooters in Alberta, and those are perfectly acceptable ways to use firearms and to enjoy them for recreation.

Now, many people in my constituency own and use firearms, and they use them respectfully and safely. Of course, we don't want to see government interfere with that right to enjoy our property legally and lawfully and safely. Just on the weekend, for instance, I was able to harvest a white-tailed deer, and I was able to bring in some of the meat yesterday and feed many of the MLAs on this side of the House. It was a great opportunity to enjoy the natural bounty that we have here in Alberta. Of course, that was taken with a firearm.

We need to stand up for Albertans. We know how Albertans feel overwhelmingly on this issue of firearms. Federally, we know that the Liberals don't see things quite the way we do when it comes to this. We also know that the federal NDP, which is of course the same party that the members opposite belong to – we know that, for instance, the federal NDP leader, Jagmeet Singh, is urging the Prime Minister to immediately give cities the leeway to ban handguns. So here we have the leader of the NDP urging the Prime Minister to encourage the banning of handguns in Canada. Of course, when we see things like that, we know how they feel, really, about firearms. They obviously voted for that party in this past federal election and a leader that has taken this position. When asked about Bill C-71, Leader Singh said: yes, right now our caucus is in support of this bill. That is a quote.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's good to hear that there is some support on the NDP bench for this motion. Maybe they feel they can support it because they feel that it has no teeth or it has no substance or for whatever reason, but I would love to see the members on the NDP side go to their federal leader and stand up to him and stand up to their federal party and support Albertans and support this motion on a federal level. That's when we will truly see how the members opposite feel about the lawful ownership of firearms by Albertans.

I'll leave it at that, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, I think this motion is a good one to send a message to Ottawa. Like I said, I would encourage the NDP opposite to take that to their federal leader and see if we can have a more positive conversation federally on this matter.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler has some comments to make.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yeah. It's an honour to rise here and give a few thoughts in support of Motion 41. I just want to get involved in this caucus solidarity exercise, if that's what this is. I think it's a great use of our time. I feel like I've had far, far more frivolous endeavours in this House. I think we all know that there's pressure on firearm owners from our federal government, and this is a great motion showing support for our law-abiding citizens and firearm owners. Most of my comments have been echoed by my caucus mates. You know, I think firearms are part of our culture. They're a useful tool for farms and ranches. Hunting and sporting clays: great, great pastimes. It's really part of our culture.

I was just going to share a little story. I remember being about 12. You know, growing up I had the Daisy BB gun, and that was kind of your pal. You'd head out, and you might get a gopher, shoot a pigeon, and learn how guns work and get better at the craft. I remember I had an uncle visit from Scotland. I'd never met the man before, and I could immediately tell he was a very strange, strange cat. He'd been everywhere in the world. He'd done everything. He'd been to Alaska, South America, all through Europe. He'd taken every tour. I remember just watching in sheer amazement as he crawled around on the hillside with an old lever action .22 of my dad's and was shooting gophers. I couldn't believe it. He was crawling and doing little rolls. It was the most bizarre thing I've ever seen, but the point is that when he got done, afterwards I remember him telling my dad: I've been everywhere, and that was absolutely the most fun I've ever had, shooting gophers at your place today. Then he did a really creepy thing. He piled up the gophers and asked that we take his picture. I thought that was a little bizarre. Still, you could see the joy it brought him.

I would also just like to touch on, you know, that I did quite a bit of hunting as a younger guy. I don't seem to have the time now, but I really enjoy having hunters come onto our land. I just got a text from a guy that said: thank you so much for letting my son come out and shoot his first deer. These were strangers before they called. They'll probably be back. They're friends now. This is part of our culture that brings people together.

I'd also like to say, you know, living in remote rural Alberta – we talked about the fear of rural crime, and I know the Member for Edmonton-McClung told a story yesterday about the fear he felt from those wind chimes that he thought were an intruder in his house. I can say that I've had that feeling, and I'm not making fun of the wind chimes. I've had a text message from an RCMP constable saying: there are people armed and dangerous; this is the truck they're driving; they're heading your way. Then you actually have to sit there with your wife, with your kids sleeping, and say: do you want to have a gun in the house? You actually have to go through that process in your head. Do you want to escalate something? And then there's that fear that you know you're the last line of defence to protect them. So I just wanted to say that that's a very real thing.

Also, as a rancher and a cattle producer there is nothing that hurts you worse than when maybe you're calving pretty hard and you go out in the morning and find that you're a little late. You've got calves on the ground, and their guts are spilled, their tails are eaten off, or maybe even worse, the cow can't get up, and you've watched a pack of coyotes work on her all night. It's not fun, as someone that cares about animal husbandry and livestock.

I remember when BSE hit in 2003. I'd just gotten out of college. Cattle were basically worthless. My grandfather had a fairly antique, as I would describe them, herd of cows at the time. Immediately the salvage market went out of cattle. You couldn't get rid of them. They were worth nothing. It cost you more to take them to town to get rid of them than you could sell them for. So between our province and Canada they came out with a pretty good plan, but it involved shooting the cows. I know that I had, you know, not the pleasure but the displeasure of having to shoot hundreds of cows between 2003 and 2005. I don't know how you would perform tasks like those without a useful gun that provides so much utility and safety for a rancher. I don't know what could replace that. I just wanted to add that.

I think this is a common-sense motion, and I'll enjoy supporting it. I'll cede my time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, I am prepared to recognize the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont if he's wishing to speak?

Is there anyone else? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, having already spoken to the motion, I'm not sure.

Mr. Bilous: Correct. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm requesting unanimous consent for one-minute bells for the duration of the afternoon.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: I'm prepared to call the question on Motion 41 unless there is anyone else wishing to speak. The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont. We've been down this road.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your recognizing me just for a couple of minutes. I just wanted to touch on why I support this motion, and I wanted to talk about my time in policing for 10 years. As a police officer I was never concerned about law-abiding gun owners; I was concerned about criminals.

I can tell you that in my time on patrol, in the latter half of it I came across guns more and more often, ones that were makeshift, ones that were put together from other parts, people who had them in their own vehicles and stolen cars. That was the concern. It was criminals having guns because they were willing to use them.

I wanted to share that for the federal government to try to ban handguns and move forward with that against law-abiding owners is the wrong way to go. What they need to do is strengthen the laws and the punishments for criminals who are using these firearms. If you're caught with a firearm, with the way the Charter of Rights is, you have done something else to get there. It's not that you can just search a person or search their home. You have to have committed a different crime, either displayed that gun, used it, or something else that gave power for a search to come across it. Why people would carry these in public, it's not necessary. Law-abiding gun owners should be respected.

One night I was coming down Gateway Boulevard, and a car came out of a motel. We got into a car chase. As it parked at a local apartment, I saw the guy take something off his chest. He gets out of the car and he's wearing a tactical vest with prohibited magazines fully loaded. He had a bandana. He had left a Kriss Vector assault rifle in the car. It was a close call for us. However, we managed the situation. But that person received a conditional sentence order, so no jail time, just a community order. Basically: don't do it again. This is the message that we're sending to people who are breaking these laws.

I think that what we need to focus on are punishments that are substantial enough to prevent those kinds of crimes from occurring. We shouldn't be going after law-abiding gun owners, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Is there anyone wishing to provide a brief question or comment?

Seeing none – I feel like we might have adamant agreement this afternoon – I'm prepared to call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 41 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:07 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 21 Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019

The Chair: Hon. members, upon reviewing the committee's records this morning, it was noted that amendment A2 was not disposed of last evening. Accordingly, the committee will return to debate on that amendment, and additional copies of amendment A2 will be distributed to all members.

While they're being distributed, I think it's appropriate to ask: will there be any speakers on Amendment A2? Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll read this into Hansard for the benefit of members who haven't received it yet. I'm moving this on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, that Bill 21, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019, be amended in section 13(2) by striking out "or government initiatives."

Really the purpose of this, Madam Chair, is quite simple. What this does is ensure that monies collected don't go into general revenues or some kind of slush fund but that it's used for initiatives, I believe, as the member was intending.

With that, I'll keep my comments short. I encourage members to support this amendment.

The Chair: All right. Just for clarity in Hansard, this amendment was moved on November 20 by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. Are there any other speakers wishing to speak to amendment A2?

If not, I will call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We are now back on the main bill. Are there any speakers wishing to speak? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have an amendment that I'd like to move. I'll just wait.

The Chair: Hon. members, this will be known as amendment A4. St. Albert, please proceed.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to speak to Bill 21, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019, and to move the amendment. I move that Bill 21, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019, be amended in section 4 by striking out subsections (2), (3), (5), (6), and (9) and in subsection (7) by striking out clauses (a), (b), (d) and (e).

I'd just like to say a couple of things before I get into some of the technical pieces about why this amendment is a good idea. First of all, as I had some time over the weekend to take some of the pieces of legislation that I hadn't had enough time to really go through carefully, I took them home and sat down and read them. As I was reading through the sections that apply to AISH – of course, it is quite complex because you have to compare the legislation and try to figure out what it actually means and what the potential of these changes are. I actually had to read it a few times to be sure that I was understanding what I was reading, and it turns out that indeed I was. That is the danger. I just want to highlight that that is the danger or, I guess, less danger – but that is the risk of an omnibus piece of legislation that addresses so many different moving pieces, that it is quite easy to bury it, to bury changes that have the ability to impact people's lives. I'm going to talk about some of those changes.

I would like to remind members that I know they like to talk about platform commitments and who did what and who didn't do what, but I would like to say that I remember distinctly promises made by the UCP before the election, promises to preserve AISH benefits and to support and respect people with disabilities. I believe that the changes that are being proposed in this piece of legislation do exactly the opposite. I do believe that this amendment will attempt to undo some of the potential damage, some of the risk also, that this legislation poses to Albertans.

Now, let's be clear. Assured income for the severely handicapped – and again, I really do hate the name of this particular piece of legislation. It's old. It's not incredibly respectful, but that's what it's called. This piece of legislation – and the key word here is "legislation"; that is the law – protects certain things about AISH, which are benefits that are paid to people who are eligible under the criteria of severe handicap. They were put into law, really, if you want to boil it right down, so that we couldn't mess around with it, so that the law was there, the rules were there, eligibility was there. You could not make significant changes to this legislation without debating it in this very place. That's what democracy is, right? You propose an amendment. You propose significant legislative changes. This is the place that you do it. You don't do it in a minister's office. You don't do it in a boardroom. You don't do it behind closed doors. You do it here, particularly when it impacts so many people.

Let's just go through what some of these things do, some of the things that have been put into this piece of legislation. Section 1 of the AISH Act, which the government proposes to change, is amended in clause (b) by striking out "section 3.2" and replacing it with "the regulations." Let me tell you what section 1 is. Section 1 is the section about definitions, so it defines a client, which is another old, dated word, as "a recipient of a benefit who is eligible under section 3.2." That defines who is eligible for benefits. Basically, what this is doing, what this is proposing to do is to take the legislated definition, "severe handicap," and move that from the AISH Act to regulation.

Once again, we've heard over and over and over from this government: "We're not doing anything. We didn't cut AISH. We're not changing anything. Nothing to see here. Move along." Well, I would agree that this legislation doesn't do it yet, but it does open the door for some changes that are very significant. Then I would think about a phrase that I often think about when I look at some of these things: it's really not what you say; it's what you do. If you are moving these pieces out of legislation into regulation, I would ask just one question: why? What are you doing? Why are you doing this?

Here are some other changes: section 1 of the AISH Act is also amended by repealing clause (i). This is the one, again, under definitions. Section 1 defines severe handicap. This move in this piece of legislation completely removes the definition.

Section 3(1) is also amended by striking out “section 3.2” and replacing it with, once again, “the regulations” wherever it occurs. Section 3(1) is all about the benefits, the AISH benefits. This removes the definition of eligibility for benefits that include living allowance, child benefit, personal benefit, health benefit and also include cohabitating partner and dependent children of the person receiving AISH. You can imagine that by moving all of the things that were previously in this section from legislation into regulation – I’m going to ask the same question: why? What is the purpose of this? I am quite certain that the UCP list of things to change, tackle, repeal, and remove is quite long. Why exactly is AISH in your target?

Section 3.2 is repealed and moved to regulation. Section 3.2 defined eligibility for benefits and previously included age and residency, severe handicap – once again, the definition – income and assets of cohabitating partner. This moves eligibility for benefits out of the act into regulation.

Here’s another one. Section 3.3 is repealed and not replaced. Section 3.3 is about exempt assets of the person and cohabitating partner and previously included assets in trust, Henson trusts, and time to invest assets. Previously legislation allowed for approximately a year for somebody, let’s say, receiving an inheritance to make decisions about where to direct that. This moves exempt assets out of the act into regulation. Why?

Section 12(1) is also amended – this is about the scope – and moves to regulation.

Schedule 1, of course, is amended. We’ve all heard about that. These are CPI adjustments. That is indexing. For those of you that were not in the Legislature when we passed this legislation a while ago, it was a really great day, actually. I think that altogether everybody in this place at the time supported this. This was more than $30 a month that people would get as an increase with, you know, tying it to inflation. This was about finally saying to the community, the disabled community, that you no longer have to beg for a raise every year. You no longer have to wait and hold your breath for a time the government of the day decides they’re doing well enough to give you a raise. This says: “You are respected. You are respected enough for us to commit these resources to invest in you and to invest in your family. We’ll do that every single year to lessen the poverty that you have to deal with just that little bit.”

You know, if you calculate, let’s say, a 40-hour work week for somebody on AISH, sadly, I think they’re earning under $10 an hour. This is not a healthy benefit. I’ve heard the minister stand up a number of times, and I think her rationale for deindexing or cutting AISH has been: well, other provinces pay less. I don’t know. That’s just wrong. When you calculate that these AISH benefits pay the person less than $10 an hour but your rationale is that other people in other provinces live in worse poverty, that’s wrong. That’s incredibly wrong.

Here’s another thing that really sort of worries me, schedule 2. Schedule 2 in the AISH Act is enormous. It’s massive. It really deals with a lot of the mechanics of benefits, how they’re determined, how they’re assigned. This omnibus bill, Bill 21 – and I think it’s a little bit weird, ensuring fiscal sustainability when you are cutting benefits for people with severe disabilities.

By repealing schedule 2 and not just amending – this legislation repeals it altogether. Schedule 2 is the determination of income, so basically this piece decides who gets AISH based on your income. This includes deductions from determinations: employment earnings, other earnings like child support – did you know that? – honoraria, death benefits. Death benefits used to be exempt from that calculation.

Money received for home repairs. We heard the Minister of Community and Social Services talk about investment in RAMP. It used to be called the residential access and modification program. I’m not entirely sure if it’s still called that. The acronym is RAMP. There was a bit more money put into the RAMP program so that people could invest in their homes, stay in their home, age in place, deal with a disability, whether it was, you know, adaptations to your washroom or a ramp or whatever it was. People get money to do those things. Schedule 2 is now repealed, so that money for home repairs gets calculated.

Scholarships, bursaries, seniors’ benefit of your spouse: that now is gone. All of these things were included in schedule 2, but this piece of omnibus legislation has blown that up and moved it to regulation. That means that what once was protected in law is now moved to regulation, and we will not know what’s happening. We will not know. It will not be debated, and you will not be counted in this place. We will not have a chance to speak to those fundamental changes to a program that are essential to the survival and well-being of people with disabilities in this province. I’m not okay with that. I don’t know how you feel. I’m not okay with that. Now, it’s one thing to say – and the partisan politics aside, I don’t care which government it was. I don’t care which party. I don’t care who was the Premier. I don’t care. I think that it is reckless and irresponsible to take something that was once enshrined in law and move it to regulation.

Let me give you an example of the kinds of things that can happen when something is not protected by law. I’ll give you an example of how AISH works. Let’s say that you apply for AISH. You get all your documents in, and really the very important documents are the medical documents, the medical reports from your physician, from, let’s say, your therapist, from somebody qualified to do an assessment. Once the application package and those documents are received and reviewed by more than just an AISH generalist – these are the titles of the people that work in AISH. Once they are reviewed and are determined to be satisfactorily applied for – I’m not sure of the phrasing that they use. Once they stamp that – they decide the date that that information was received and approved – the process begins.

Then you go through the process of approval, and I think one of the saving graces was that even if it took a few months, even if it took six months because things were really bad and too many staff had been laid off – hint, you know, you’re laying off 223 people in CSS; I don’t think it’s going to get better – at the very least you knew that when you finally got through that, your benefits would be retroactive to that day that it was stamped. Yes, we got all the documentation in; good to go. That’s gone. None of us knew about it because it wasn’t protected in the law.

Now, you can talk about sustainability all you like, that you are only cutting benefits for those that apply or that are on AISH because you’re trying to protect something for the future. Focus on right now. These are real people living in real poverty, trying to raise families, trying to buy food. Real people. These are real people. This is not about a story for somebody who isn’t born yet who will likely need benefits. Who knows what that will be? This is about real people. I would say that if you’re going to talk about savings, it’s about $10 million a year to index AISH benefits, and your war room is $120 million over four years. This is about choices. This is about choices. You are making deliberate choices.

Now, I am not saying that everything will be repealed, changed, squashed, and thrown out. I am not saying that at all, but I’m saying: what are you doing? Why are you doing this? Actually, you can say one thing, but I’m looking at what you’re doing, and you’re doing this.

You're taking it from the law – and it's protected – and you're moving it to a place where we can't see what's happening, where Albertans can't see what's happening. It's hard enough for us to follow this, because it's very complex. Can you imagine somebody with a developmental disability trying to follow this, trying to understand what's happening? You represent them, too . . .

An Hon. Member: Address the chair.

The Chair: Hon. members, everything through the chair.
Hon. member, proceed.

Ms Renaud: . . . all of us, the collective you, the royal you.

One of the things that we learned in budget estimates – that was long, and I certainly appreciated all of the things that the minister agreed to follow up on in terms of information when we asked questions. I get that that's a lot to try to cover and answer, and I'm looking forward to those responses. One of the things that became crystal clear for me, Madam Chair, during estimates was what was going to happen next. Once again, one of the things that the minister was very clear on was that she couldn't answer a lot of the questions that were posed to her because – I get it – she's new to the position and it's a lot to take in. I cannot even imagine. One of the answers that kept going again and again was that we have to review things. I think it's really important for Albertans to understand, especially Albertans with disabilities and their families and their allies, that she said that this would be reviewed internally.

Now, that is a complete one-eighty from the way that we believed consultation for things like AISH, for supports for people with disabilities needed to happen. There is no way that any one of us can possibly understand what it is like to live with a disability unless we, in fact, live with a disability. The only way to be able to capture the voices and the needs or maybe the wishes or the ideas, the suggestions of people with disabilities is to include them in the decision-making. I'll tell you that you don't include people in decision-making after you've made the decision or after you have decided to cut something. They can't be a rubber stamp; they have to be included in this process. I would say that this government is not doing a very good job so far.

In estimates I asked some key questions, Madam Chair. I asked about AISH indexing. I have heard the government's reasons. I have heard them say that this is about money. I really don't buy that, because I see what you're spending on the war room. I have heard that these changes were made because of money and because, you know, what people want is sustainability.

My question was: who did you consult with? Before you deindexed AISH, which is a cut – let's be clear: semantics aside, deindexing AISH is a cut – you didn't consult with the disability advocate. That's his role. You didn't consult with the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. That's their job. I don't believe you consulted with any self-advocates. I don't really know who the government consulted with, so it would be quite lovely to get a list. If I'm wrong, I'd be thrilled to be proved wrong about this. If the disability community said, "Yeah, we can manage this; this isn't a problem; we can do this; we understand the big picture," that would be great, but that's not what I'm hearing, not one bit.

Madam Chair, the reason that I'm proposing this amendment – I would ask the members that are in the Chamber or that will consider this amendment to think about it. I don't believe that this piece of legislation immediately axes anything. What I do believe is that it opens the door for changes that will not be debated in the light of day in this place.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. member from . . .

Ms Gray: Edmonton-Mill Woods.

The Chair: Thank you. The wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm sure you've driven past us. As you head towards the Legislature, just on the right, when you're going up Calgary Trail, you're going right past Mill Woods for a bit.

Thank you. I appreciate being recognized in this debate, especially on amendment A4. I really just wanted to rise in this place to share that I would encourage all members to support this important amendment, brought forward by my colleague. I think that the remarks she's been making in favour of this amendment have been compelling. I certainly hope that all members of this House are hearing what the Member for St. Albert has been saying because I think it's really important to this debate about Bill 21. Although it is an omnibus bill, we need to be looking at, particularly, these important pieces that impact people's lives.

I appreciate the moment to stand briefly to speak in support of amendment A4, that we are currently debating. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members on amendment A4?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A4 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:36 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the bill.

Mrs. Savage: Madam Chair, I move to adjourn debate on Bill 21.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 26
Farm Freedom and Safety Act, 2019

The Chair: Are there any speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for . . . Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just think Nellie. Think Nellie, and it will come to you: Nellie McClung. I know there was a school in my constituency, and that was the name.

But I certainly have matters of serious concern that even Nellie McClung might have advocated about this afternoon when we speak of the Farm Freedom and Safety Act legislation that's before us. I wish to offer a few comments and suggest a few concerns and offer up a few questions to the minister on the piece of legislation.

Of course, as we know, Bill 26 amends the Labour Relations Code to exclude farm and ranch employees from the definition of employee. That exclusion effectively precludes these workers from forming or joining a trade union. This exclusion is actually contrary to section 20 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which protects workers' freedoms to engage in associational activity. I have great concern about that and about excluding any class of workers from the protection of the rights that are guaranteed under international conventions such as the universal declaration of human rights and our own Constitution.

I'm wondering if the minister has done any analysis or looked at a risk analysis as to how this bill might comply even with trade agreements such as CETA, if indeed that's a consideration that his ministry undertook when looking at crafting this legislation, this bill.

Also, Madam Chair, under the comprehensive economic and trade agreement between the EU and Canada, article 23.3, the right to freedom of association and the effective recognition of the right to collective bargaining are guaranteed. I'm wondering if an effective analysis and a legal analysis of that was done. Is the minister confident that this bill would hold up to legal scrutiny under analysis of their contravention, perhaps, of CETA agreements, the comprehensive economic and trade agreement between the EU and Canada?

Concerns abound about the actual constitutionality and legitimacy of the denial of workers' rights to organize. One of the justifications, Madam Chair, that the minister has offered in this House as to why they indeed failed to enshrine or maintain this right to organize for paid farm workers is the suggestion that he made earlier in this House, that many people had the opportunity but failed to exercise this right to organize during the period of time when our Bill 6, which gave them that right, had been in force.

Yet, Madam Chair, many rights exist which may not necessarily be exercised. For example, of course, as we know, he says that it wasn't exercised, but many people also did not vote or exercise their right to vote in the last election. No one that I've heard, on this side of the House or the other, would be advocating for those people to lose the right to vote. Simply because a right is not exercised is no justification to strip individuals of those rights, in particular in this case, where the right to organize and form a labour organization and union to protect one's worker rights is not a right that should be stripped simply because it may not have been exercised under certain circumstances by a certain class of workers. There well may be and, I would argue, there certainly are impediments to classes of farm workers who would have been allowed this right under Bill 6, impediments which would make it difficult for them to exercise those rights. It may well be, going forward, that those impediments would have made it difficult under any circumstances to exercise those rights.

However, as we know, the government has made the decision to go ahead and introduce legislation that will repeal the right for farm workers to actually earn at least a minimum wage. There's a loophole in this legislation which excludes the farm workers from being subject to certain rules and regulations that they had enjoyed before. The government has indicated that farms will no longer be subject to the detailed safety rules set out in the occupational health and safety code but, rather, will be simply subject to the rudimentary safety rights set out in the Occupational Health and Safety Act, which would continue to apply.

At present, Madam Chair, farms and ranches with paid nonfamily employees must enrol their workers in the workers' compensation system, like virtually every other employer in every industry across Canada. Now, workers' compensation coverage provides wage loss, rehabilitation, and fatality benefits to workers. Workers' compensation also precludes workers from suing their employers if the worker is injured. Now, before 2015 such coverage was optional, and relatively few farms purchased it. Some farms purchased private injury insurance, and studies showed that those that did purchase such insurance found that relying on farmers to purchase private insurance left a significant number of farm workers uninsured or underinsured, and the private premiums were more expensive than workers' compensation premiums. Private insurance also left farmers open to civil suits where injuries or fatalities occurred.

So, Madam Chair, this isn't just simply reversing Bill 6; this is reversing hundreds of years of basic labour and human rights advances by removing core protection for workers.

We know that the vast majority of Alberta farmers care for their workers, particularly because we know that many of these workers who are on these farms, family farms, especially when we're talking about the small farm where there are five or fewer workers, are the community members, the neighbours, friends, sometimes even relatives of the farmer who employs them. Of course, we're not suggesting that there is no concern on the part of the farmers for the safety of their employees. However, that still doesn't mean that these workers don't have the basic right and shouldn't have the basic right to enjoy the protection of legal frameworks and legal minimum standards such as having a minimum wage standard of some kind. However, this legislation actually precludes that standard from being implemented because it effectively excludes them from the definition of employee and therefore doesn't give them the same protections they have enjoyed previously under the Labour Relations Code and employment standards regulations as well.

We're going backwards in a way that I don't even know if many farmers would really be in favour of, because they're looking at denying rights to people who they probably see in their community apart from their work on the farm. These, as I said, are their own community members and people who work in the area, perhaps not only for them but for other farmers. They're probably the last ones that farmers want to deny basic workers' rights to, yet this legislation does precisely that.

I think it's very, very disappointing to see that the government found it necessary to deny basic legal rights to paid farm workers in the province. It went much further than what they suggested they might do by simply repealing Bill 6. It goes even deeper into the well of taking away rights from workers. No other jurisdiction in North America exempts any class of workers from earning at least some type of minimum wage for their work. The Premier and his government are more than undoing Bill 6; he's taking Alberta back to preindustrial labour relations laws. We are very, very disappointed with the move by this Legislature, by the government, to go backwards and basically attack and single out paid farm workers rather harshly and unnecessarily.

There's another class of these workers, Madam Chair, who are itinerant farm workers or workers who are temporary workers from afar, the least able to defend themselves. The government is well aware that whether they are foreign workers here on temporary contracts or whether they are local workers who are coming to work on farms, the likelihood of these workers being able to mount a challenge to enforce their rights and oppose the government's restrictions on their right to organize is pretty limited. It's very difficult to understand why the government wanted to go to this length to try to stifle the opportunity of a class of workers in this country to exercise legal rights that every other class of worker in the country has. Alberta will be more than an outlier; it'll be unique in North America, never mind Canada, in repealing the right of farm workers to organize and at least have a basic minimum wage and the ability to enshrine a basic minimum wage and have that backed up by legislation.

I think that Albertans should take a close look at what this legislation is doing and wonder aloud: who's next? That's a question that many Albertans may have in their own mind when they see this government targeting a specific group of workers who are very, very unable to really fight against this type of legislation. This government is stripping away legal rights that are enshrined in our Constitution, enshrined in the universal declaration of human rights, that are enshrined, perhaps, in the comprehensive economic and trade agreement between the EU and Canada, trade agreements in CETA, yet the government sees fit to strip away these rights.

It's not something that I think even farmers expected them to approach as far as the repeal of Bill 6. I think that many farmers will be surprised and perhaps a little shocked to see what loopholes have been left here so that workers on their farms don't end up enjoying rights that are globally and universally accepted as basic labour rights, that all workers should enjoy in a democratic society at the very least.

The question that will be one that I think is legitimate to wonder about is: who's next? What class of worker does this government want to chip away at? Will it be another sector of farm workers? Or perhaps it'll be wage labour elsewhere, where they think: "Well, these people haven't been on strike lately. They haven't had any labour action. They haven't exercised their right to form a union. Maybe we'll just take that right away from them as well." The beat goes on.

I think this government may be using this as a bit of a testing ground as well to see what kind of reaction we get from the labour movement and from Albertans in general. Dare I say, Madam Chair, that the reaction will be loud and clear that Albertans don't stand for basic labour rights being taken away from individuals, where we turn ourselves into a preindustrial-era jurisdiction. We respect the rights of people to organize.

This is 2019, not 1919. The Winnipeg General Strike happened 100 years ago, and the right of workers to organize, no matter what category of worker they happen to be, has been enshrined in our laws and our Constitution and the universal declaration of human rights and in other international treaties for decades and generations. This government is seeing fit to turn that clock back. I find it disheartening, shameful. I would hope that the government will see fit to perhaps alter these pieces of legislation or the parts of it, at least, where these loopholes exist to show that they actually do respect the rights of working people and that we follow the pattern of respect that's shown internationally and enshrined in law in many other pieces of legislation and international treaties.

With that, Madam Chair, I'll close my remarks and, of course, let it be known that I certainly don't support this bill in any way, shape, or form.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 26? The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. The Member for Edmonton-McClung: I really appreciate his, I guess, view of how things happen on farms and his view of how a consultation process took place. I am from a farm community. I did grow up on a farm. I did actually attend a few of these consultation items that we took.

I guess, just to set a pretext for that, the old farm act, the one that they had, Bill 6, that we're obviously pulling off the table: it was a platform commitment. It was something that was poor legislation. There were tons of folks that protested against it. That's all in the past, and that's all the history. But as far as folks in my area, how much they were onboard with that act: nobody knew who I was when I ran for election, and not too many people outside my area know who I am now, but at any of the farming events or any of the items where I run into folks in that industry, all I have to do is say, "I'm the guy who beat the former ag minister," and I'm getting drinks bought for me. People are jumping up and down and shaking my hand because it was probably the least representative member for that industry. Unless I run into some of the loggers and the folks in the forestry sector – well, then, it's kind of a split between who's fighting for buying me rounds.

What happened in my area when we actually went up to Mayerthorpe and we consulted with the folks: they came to the meeting. They brought all their concerns, the items that we're looking at in talking about the farm freedom act. Now, you had people that were farm workers. You had people that were from the industry. You had farmers themselves. You had folks that were sitting there. Honestly, I expected it to be a little more one-sided, but it was a pretty fulsome discussion. When you actually have them talking about – and this is the group – putting up offers and suggestions of how to actually train people, how to run the farm safer, how to make sure they have pause for, you know, working hours, conditions, everything else along those lines, this is true consultation. Now, I don't think that Mayerthorpe was unique in this. I strongly believe that this is kind of a groundswell, if you would.

Talking about farming practices 100 years ago or going down some other path – I hate to say it. You don't necessarily have to have a hammer and sickle over somebody to make them do the right thing. We're well beyond that now in this day and age. People do things the right way because it's the right thing to do, although it might be scary for some folks to not have it written down to the infinitesimal detail and to hold those people to that type of extent. They're going to do the right thing. I saw that first-hand, Madam Chair. I saw that first-hand when they were talking about the care and custody of their workers.

I have folks that are in the bee industry in my area. It's not just the honey producers; it's the folks that actually produce the bees themselves. They're looking for relaxation of a bunch of other laws because they can't find people here to actually help grow the bees. They're actually predominantly in Mexico. I have folks that are on tree farms that bring in folks from Mexico, as an example, bring them over here and work all these hours, the time and the money that goes into that and the care and custody from these people, because they know that every dollar they earn here has an order of magnitude effect back in those villages. These are folks that aren't even Albertans.

They're not exploiting them. They're helping them, bringing them here to give them lots of work, pay them decently, give them great accommodations because they know that the money that they earn here goes back to their villages. They can buy a farm tractor, and next thing you know they're producing more revenue in those areas. These are the same folks that are being painted with that brush, that would take advantage of those types of folks that work for them or people that are from the area that work for them. Quite frankly, it's wrong.

But the consultation that did take place was genuine and true. It holds to one of our platform items, and it really speaks volumes to what we're trying to do here. I won't go on for hours. Honestly, I'm in favour of it.

Some of the information that's coming from the members opposite is very skewed. It's not representative of the facts out in rural communities, nor is it representative of that strong farming industry. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to stand and address this bill in Committee of the Whole because I have a number of concerns. I've spent a great deal of time working with the farming and ranching community, talking about these issues, and I've heard a lot of what I've heard from the community reflected back in the debate on this bill.

There are a great number of farming and ranching families, employers, the AgCoalition that became AgSafe: strong voices for health and safety, strong support for making sure, whether they be family or paid, whether they be part-time and temporary or full-time, that all workers come home safely. I certainly know that from my own experience working with these communities, and we've heard that through the debate.

I am not supportive of this piece of legislation because despite what the member who rose before me just said, that all employers want to have those reasonable basic minimums and want to protect and provide for their employees, what this bill actually does is remove all minimum employment standards for all workers. The members in this House have said that to introduce the idea that there might be a worker who is exploited or there might be a worker who is underinsured or uninsured is to insult all farmers. I do not believe that that is an accurate characterization. No one accuses oil and gas of being bad employers because they have to follow occupational health and safety and that if they were good employers, then we wouldn't have OH and S, and they would just naturally do it all. That doesn't make sense, Madam Chair.

We have minimum employment standards, we have minimum workplace protections for a very deliberate reason. In fact, these minimum employment standards and marketplace protections exist for farm workers across this country, except soon not in Alberta. Alberta will be the only place where minimum standards like statutory holiday pay, hours of work, and minimum wage will not apply to vast swaths of workers in this particular industry. That is unusual. That is something that is removing rights and protections from a group of workers that in many cases are considered to be vulnerable workers, and it's something that is happening not because – I'll pause my thought there, Madam Chair.

Employment standards and those minimum basic protections are something that we recognize for the majority of workers in Alberta. Here in this bill not only do we remove those minimum standards of protection from farm workers, but we actually expand the number of workers and industries where those minimum protections will not be than even before Bill 6 was originally introduced. That is of grave concern to me because we know that having those minimum employment standards there in many cases is required or is the minimum that many workers receive. That is my first comment around employment standards.

I would like to certainly commend the work that AgSafe and the producer groups are doing to raise awareness. I would say that in conversations with many of those producer groups I often had people talk to me about how we could expand the safety and the requirements to a larger number of workers in these industries.

We know that by exempting these workers from minimum employment standards, it puts Alberta out of line with other jurisdictions. Similarly, by removing that right, which is constitutionally protected, to be able to organize through the Labour Relations Code, that puts Alberta out of step not just with other jurisdictions but with the Constitution of Canada. That is something that has been argued and reaffirmed in a number of jurisdictions and in a number of ways, so putting us out of step. I would note that as the members have argued in their debate on this piece of legislation that no farms or ranches had used that constitutional right to collectively bargain since it was given to them, that very fact makes me question: then why are we taking it away? Why are we removing somebody's right when you've even reflected back that the workers have not been using it? There appears to me to be a bit of a logical disconnect there.

Now, on the topic of the WCB, the workers' compensation, we know from before Bill 6 that under the PC government there were a number of studies and reviews done that showed a great number of farm workers were either uninsured or underinsured and not being covered through private insurance.

With the requirement of WCB, we've seen that there have been a number of claims, lost-time claims and injury claims, over the past few years while WCB coverage has been in place: in 2018, 886 claims against WCB. When I see those numbers, when I see that there are 371 lost-time claims, the way I reflect on those numbers is that those are all people who received rehabilitation or compensation for a workplace injury. These are all workers and employers who were supported to make sure that when an incident happened, everyone was supported, given treatment if necessary, given physiotherapy if necessary, and then helped to get back to work.

This is not just about the workers. This is also about the employers because, of course, through WCB that coverage means that an employer cannot be sued. This is the important historical bargain of the workers' compensation system. We know through the review of the WCB system how highly valued WCB coverage is by both employers and employees. When the system works well, it works incredibly well. It's a system that continually needs to be updated. Of course, we had completed the first review of the WCB system in 15 years. It's a system that continually needs to be updated.

I would note, just talking about how long since reviews, that on the employment standards side our review and changes to employment standards to bring Alberta in line with the rest of Canada around things like making sure that there was protected leave when someone has a sick child and some of the other changes that were made was the first major review of employment standards in 30 years. So Alberta had employment standards that were significantly out of date.

What this bill does is essentially return to an employment standards regime of 30 years ago in some cases, if at all, because I've seen estimates that roughly 80 per cent of workers will not qualify for those minimum employment standards. I will repeat again that we know that the majority of employers are good employers. This is the case for all industries. We do not create employment legislation for the good actors; we do that to make sure that everyone has that same minimum standard of protection for farm workers or for other industries. That's why employment standards are applied so universally.

I would note that Alberta does have a number of exemptions to employment standards in other industries that should be reviewed. In fact, that work had begun under our government, and I hope that the minister of labour will continue to do the consultations that need to continue.

Now, when Bill 6 was originally introduced, absolutely huge concerns were raised. We then spent the next two years working very closely with farming and ranching communities, working with the AgCoalition, that then kind of turned into or helped to form AgSafe, listening very carefully and working with the farming and ranching community to try and find the right balance in implementation. I think everyone recognizes that this is an industry and a sector where there is a high level of risk. We know that agriculture and forestry continue to see the highest fatality rates among any major sector. In Alberta we have a lot of industrial sectors, but in agriculture and forestry is where we see the highest number of deaths and a high number of injuries.

One of the reasons why I think it's important that all workers have reasonable compensation and coverage is because not only does that impact them, but it impacts families. The impact on families, when there isn't adequate compensation and rehabilitation, can be quite devastating, particularly because asking injured workers to use the court system to get compensation becomes a very lengthy thing, and it becomes a barrier for many who don't have the financial means to implement that.

In my response to Bill 26 I really want to highlight that removing minimum employment standards, removing minimum hours of work, minimum wage, stat holiday pay, all of those factors, from employment standards for a huge swath of workers in this industry I think is a big step backwards. Having private insurance which will be defined by regulation: I think we are at risk that there could be workers who are underinsured. I'm concerned about the implementation of copayment when we know that there are now, potentially, no minimum wages set in this sector for a large number of the workers in this industry.

Those are some strong concerns that I have with this bill. Absolutely, it is a fact that repealing Bill 6 was part of the UCP platform, but I would note that Bill 26 does more than just repeal Bill 6. In fact, it includes even more exempted workers in new industries that were not previously there. One thing that we've been able to do since farming and ranching was brought in under WCB is improve the data tracking to know what the injury rates are looking like, the types of injuries, because that information can be used with good partner organizations like AgSafe to continue to improve safety standards and education and to improve getting the information out there. Of course, nobody wants injuries. Everybody wants to see workers come home safely at the end of the day. Sometimes to make sure that that happens, having good information is key, so continuing to do that is really important.

One thing Bill 26 doesn't do but was done in Budget 2019 is continue to fund AgSafe and continue to help those producers. I think it was 29 producer groups that created AgSafe. It's not part of this bill, but I would really hope to see this government continue to support the important work that is happening through that organization. It was originally started with grants from government to help the organization begin, and it continues to receive funding now. I would suggest that that needs to continue happening, and that's a major part of continuing to improve health and safety and get that programming out to all who are interested in it. I know a lot of farming and ranching families and employers have worked with AgSafe to improve practices, and I think that's really commendable.

I suppose to summarize my concerns with this bill, removing minimum employment standards, which at this point I have not heard the government address – it was raised in question period today, Madam Chair, but again I did not hear that addressed. Removing those minimum employment standards is a huge concern for me. I'll repeat that it's estimated that as high as 80 per cent of workers in the farming and ranching area could find themselves exempted from minimum employment standards. The Labour Relations Code changes essentially preventing a group of workers from a constitutionally protected right to collectively bargain: I'll note again that that right was not exercised in the past few years, so the reason for removing this I have to question. If I'm not mistaken, it wasn't even mentioned that this was being removed in the government press releases on this, so a change that's been put there.

The potential for people to be completely uninsured and the damaging impacts that injury or fatality can have when that is the case – even more of a risk is being underinsured. I think there is a very big difference between the WCB, which has been an organization set up specifically and redirected even recently to make sure that there is a workercentric focus, a real focus on supporting workers and employers and getting back to work, versus a private insurance company. Private insurance companies often have a focus on making sure that the claims costs are minimized where they can be versus the WCB, where there is an entire system set up to deal with rehabilitation.

So these are my concerns. Thank you, Madam Chair.

[Request to report Bill 26 carried]

Bill 28*Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act

The Chair: Are there any speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today in support of Bill 28, Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act. As many of the members in this House would know, the contents of this bill, which are essentially to allow for the government to seek, through legal action, recovery from opioid producers damages that have contributed, of course, significantly to the opioid crisis in Alberta. This notion of actually seeking legal action against opioid producers was actually part of the NDP's platform commitment. This was part of our campaign commitment and part of our election platform, so I do commend the government for seeing that great idea and implementing it because it does show that they are able to recognize some good ideas when they see them. I appreciate that they are bringing this forward as this is something that we, of course, strongly support.

I don't think there is an Albertan here who has not been somehow affected or knows somebody who has been affected by the opioid crisis in this province. I can tell you myself that I certainly know people in my life who have been affected and have loved ones who have been affected. As well, I did a significant amount of work in my previous life prior to being elected with school boards who are trying to do education with their students and their schools and trying to really get a handle on this even before – they seem to identify that crisis quite early on because we know that it disproportionately affects young people. We know that there have been so many lives that have been lost and that have been affected by this crisis. Certainly, we should be taking all measures we can to tackle this crisis on behalf of all Albertans.

I am disheartened by the government's lack of support for supervised consumption sites because we know how they absolutely, one hundred per cent save lives. We know also that supervised consumption sites are part of a strategy. It is certainly not that any government has ever suggested that it is the sole way to approach and to tackle this problem. It is one critical piece to saving the lives of those individuals and then working towards treatment and recovery and education, but certainly there are many facets to this crisis that need to be addressed, and I maintain and would like to put on the record, as I don't think I've had the opportunity to do so yet, that I strongly support supervised consumption sites as one of those key strategies to address this crisis.

Certainly, what is being brought forward today within Bill 28 is another measure that I support. Although we know that seeking legal action is not a certainty, we know that it is a costly and long-term strategy. We've seen it taken by governments against tobacco manufacturers, automobile manufacturers in the past. We know that specifically with respect to opioids we've seen that there has actually been some success in other jurisdictions. I'm thinking about legal actions that have been taken in the U.S. We know that a number of states have taken legal action against these producers because they should be held accountable. They should be held accountable for the product that they've produced and the damage that has been wreaked as a result of their product, and I certainly support taking those legal measures.

But it is not a certainty. It is an admirable measure. It should be part of, again, as I mentioned, a comprehensive strategy, but I think the other thing that we need to look at is that if we are going to be pursuing this bill, which I will be supporting, we do need to make sure that we are also thinking about, hopefully, the outcome if we are successful as a province in actually recovering some costs from the producers of opioids. In particular, I think what is of interest and should be of interest for all Albertans is that if we do recover these costs, any recovery should actually go back into our system to support mental health and addictions services.

To that end, Madam Chair, I am tabling a proposed amendment to this bill. I'll just wait a moment for the amendment to be received and distributed.

The Chair: Thank you very much.

Ms Pancholi: Madam Chair, would you like me to read the amendment?

The Chair: Hon. members, this will be known as amendment A1. Please proceed.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll take a moment. I know it's currently being distributed to the members. It is a bit of a lengthy amendment. I do want to read it into the record, however. It is important because it speaks to the objectives of the amendment, and it speaks specifically to the situation and circumstance in the event that the government of Alberta, on behalf of its citizens, is able to recover some costs from opioid producers as a result of legal action. It speaks to what Albertans believe should be done with those funds that are recovered.

To that end, amendment A1 moves – actually, I should indicate that I'm moving this amendment on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Manning. My apologies; I should have clarified that at the beginning. The amendment is to move that Bill 28, Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act, be amended as follows: (a) section 1(1) is amended by adding the following after clause (g):

(g.1) "Minister" means the Minister determined under section 16 of the Government Organization Act as the Minister responsible for this Act; and – this is the key clause – subsection (b) the following is added after section 14:

Review by committee of the Assembly

14.1(1) A special committee of the Legislative Assembly must, within 6 months after the day on which this Act comes into force and in accordance with subsection (3), begin a review of the matters set out in subsection (2).

(2) The special committee must consider each of the following for the purpose of the review under subsection (1):

- (a) whether the expenditure of monies recovered by the Crown in an action brought under section 2(1) should be restricted to specified purposes,
- (b) if the special committee determines that expenditures should be restricted, specifying the purposes for which expenditures should be permitted,
- (c) whether a separate fund should be established into which the money referred to in clause (a) must be deposited, and
- (d) any other matter that the special committee considers necessary and relevant to the matters set out in clauses (a) to (c).

(3) Subject to subsection (4), the special committee must, within 6 months of the day on which the special committee commenced its review in accordance with subsection (1), submit a report to the Legislative Assembly that sets out its recommendations in respect of the matters considered under subsection (2).

(4) If the Legislative Assembly is not sitting at the time of the completion of the special committee's report under subsection (3), the special committee must submit the report referred to in that subsection within 15 days after the day on which the Legislative Assembly commences its next sitting.

(5) Subject to subsection (6), the Minister must, within 30 days of the submission of the special committee's report under subsection (3) or (4), as the case may be, submit a report to the Legislative Assembly that specifies the recommendations set out in the special committee's report of which the Minister approves.

(6) If the Legislative Assembly is not sitting at the time of the completion of the Minister's report under subsection (5), the Minister must submit the report referred to in that subsection within 15 days after the day on which the Legislative Assembly commences its next sitting.

(7) The Minister must, on a quarterly calendar basis that commences on the day on which the Minister provided their report under subsection (5) or (6), as the case may be, provide a report to the Legislative Assembly in respect of all approved recommendations that have not been implemented.

My apologies; I appreciate that's a long amendment.

However, the point of this amendment is simply to state – it is not to delay the proclamation or passing of Bill 28 should it be passed by the Assembly – that within six months of proclamation of the act, the matter would be reviewed by a special committee to consider whether or not to set aside, to restrict any funds that are recovered to be specified for a specific purpose, basically saying that with any dollars that are recovered as a result of legal action, this special committee will consider and consult with Albertans about whether or not they want those funds to be dedicated to a specific purpose.

5:30

In particular – and I don't want to presuppose what this committee would find as a result of its consultations – we would expect, I believe, as the purpose of this is to recover funds related to the opioid crisis in this province, that those funds would be used specifically for, potentially, mental health and addiction services. Again, that would be a matter that would be under consideration by the special committee, to determine how the funds that are collected as a result of legal action would be used.

Again, part of the reason why we are seeking legal action is to recognize that there have been significant damages suffered by Albertans, specifically and individually by Albertans and Albertan families, but also as a society, as a community, as a government we have incurred significant costs to deal with the opioid crisis in this province. We're not unique to this; this is certainly a situation that's taken place in all provinces. But we have incurred a significant number of costs to provide treatment, to provide recovery, to provide supervised consumption sites, education, naloxone kits, all of those things that we've had to do. The strain on our health system as a result and the loss of lives, the loss of those individuals and those Albertans who are contributing to our society: in the crudest sense, it's actually dollars and cents, but more than that, of course, it's the damage that it's wreaked on our communities and our individuals and our families.

But there's actually been a cost associated with that as well. If we have incurred these costs and a court is to find, which we hope they would, that the opioid producers share some responsibility and liability for those costs, then that money should go back into paying for some of the services and investing in dealing with the crisis that they created. I think that that is actually something that the government should support, because I believe that that's the intent behind taking such action, in order to actually hold those responsible who should be held responsible for the costs that have been incurred and to invest those costs back into treating and supporting Albertans and supporting Alberta communities and families and individuals.

This is intended to say: look, we know why that money and those costs have been incurred, and let's make sure those funds are being put back into mental health and addiction services. We know that the government has repeatedly stood up and, of course, said that we are in a dire fiscal situation. Any money that is recovered should go to actually, then, supporting the treatment and addiction services and all of the important work that's required to get a handle on and to eradicate the opioid crisis in this province.

Hopefully, the government will see this as a friendly amendment. I've already indicated that I support this bill, and this is not intended in any way to delay or to avoid the proclamation or passage of this bill but only to say that once proclaimed, once passed, a special committee will be set up to have this discussion, to have the discussion with Albertans about how any funds recovered through legal action should be spent, where they believe is the best place and the best investment in these services, and to provide recommendations. That is simply what the objective of this amendment is. It's intended to really focus the proceeds that may come from any legal action towards real, beneficial effects on this issue and to let Albertans decide what they believe is the best use of those dollars.

Again, I highlight that I am hopeful that government members will see this as a positive and friendly amendment to simply improve upon what we believe is already a good and important bill and to really thoughtfully think about how Albertans should have input as they are the ones that have been so affected and have borne the costs and the weight of this crisis on this province.

I do hope that the government members will seriously consider supporting this amendment and see it as a way to simply make this bill that much better, but it is a bill that we already support. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Madam Chair. I don't want to speak too long, but I do just want to get on the record here. I very much appreciate some aspects of this bill, Bill 28, but I believe the amendment introduced by my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Whitemud on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Manning is an important one, and I say this from a place of seeing the opioid crisis on a daily basis. I don't know if I want to say that I have the honour, but I have three of the four safe consumption sites in Edmonton within my riding, and why I'm so proud to see them in action is because they have saved so many lives. Safe consumption sites have been an incredible addition to the neighbourhoods that I represent.

I just want to get on the record to talk about the fact that we know that the opioid crisis is so intimately connected to issues around mental health. One of the reasons why I think it's so important that we support this friendly amendment is that we know there is much more investment needed in combating both mental health and addictions. I think that if we can have the funds dedicated specifically to addressing that, we'll really be able to be using those monies in an appropriate way.

You know, we've talked about mental health in this Chamber multiple times. We know that there have been some members, including the Health minister, who've sort of rejected the idea that there is a mental health crisis in youth. There absolutely is, and the numbers prove that. I want the members opposite to really consider the importance of those investments. I know they've said that they've made some investments in Calgary, for instance, but we know that the CAMH centre here in Edmonton is delayed, and we know that serious investments are needed.

I want to point out that the evidence around harm reduction is clear. I was proud of the investments that our government made in addressing mental health and addictions as well. But I do worry that if this amendment is not accepted by the members opposite, we're losing a really important revenue stream that should absolutely be reinvested. Okay?

With that, like I said, I won't speak too long, but, you know, the evidence is clear. We've got an opportunity to use those funds in a way that will absolutely go back to those people who need the funds the most, right?

On training, it's interesting that the member talked about naloxone kits. I mean, again, I've seen the power of those first-hand. Actually, my staff and I took naloxone training not long ago. We talked to some of the front-line workers with Streetworks, who are there every day on the front lines reversing the effects of overdose. It's incredible how effective that is. Again, if we can be using the funds from these lawsuits directly into programs like theirs, the entire community, not just those within my neighbourhoods but the entire community, and the entire province will benefit. We should point out that while safe consumption sites are, you know, predominantly concentrated in the core parts of Edmonton – like I said, three within my riding – we know that there's a need elsewhere. We know that in suburban parts of the city, for instance, the opioid crisis is very much an issue.

Again, I just wanted to put that on the record. I urge the members opposite to think really carefully about this amendment and to think about accepting it, because, truly, it will benefit the entire province.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you, Madam Chair. I, too, want to get on the record to say that I support not only the amendment but the original motion, I think, that's before us. Alberta joining B.C. in regard to trying to sue for damages to Albertans is an important thing to do, not unlike car manufacturer and tobacco company suits that have been successful in other parts of North America and the world.

We, of course, have a crisis with regard to opioid use in this province. Indeed, all of Canada does, some places more drastically and tragic effects in other places. But I can tell you that in the home community that I come from, Calgary-Buffalo, there are issues that would be improved if there were recoveries from the companies that make opioids that have impacted people in Calgary-Buffalo.

I do want to also point out, you know, that with any monies that come as a result – and it would be years off, likely – dedicating these monies to this issue in particular would be the best thing that could happen for Albertans, not only addicted Albertans and those with addiction and mental health issues but Albertans who are related to or connected with or know people who are negatively impacted by opioid use.

Madam Chair, this goes back many years. I mentioned earlier that I was a social worker in my earlier career. I haven't thought about him in a long time, but I can remember one gentleman who had a horrible work accident in a vehicle he was driving. He had a brain injury as a result of it and was in constant pain. Of course, he went to many doctors to try and find pain relief and likely ended up breaking the law with numerous prescriptions for oxycodone hydrochloride and other drugs that would take away some of that pain that he was feeling as a result of the massive brain injury that he had suffered. He and his family suffered incredibly because of his inability to work, his inability to have relief from the pain he was in, and it affected them all.

I was just thinking that if in years to come there is a similar and a successful suit here with payments to people like that in Alberta who are so horribly impacted by the addiction to drugs they're on, they could perhaps find support and treatment that would be more successful than what he was doing. Of course, fast-forward from that to the present day, and I'm incredibly proud to be the MLA for Calgary-Buffalo. There is a supervised consumption site in the Sheldon M. Chumir health centre, the urgent care centre there. It does great work to ensure that people who go there under supervision and use injectable drugs are safe. It has not had any deaths on-site.

It's not the only thing that's going on in Calgary-Buffalo. There, of course, is counselling going on, there is residential care going on for people who have addictions. There's a whole range of treatment available to people in Calgary-Buffalo and throughout Calgary. Certainly, there needs to be more, and I've heard the associate minister talk about the spectrum of addictions and mental health services that need to be present. I could see that if there were funds received from this suit that we will be joining with B.C., those funds dedicated for filling out that spectrum of care would be a really important thing, starting from education, awareness, treatment, residential support, all the way through to medical support and supervised consumption support for those people who aren't quite ready to move into longer term relief of that addiction they're in in some other fashion.

I certainly think that if you read through the amendment, it makes a great deal of sense. Thank you to my colleague for bringing it forward. This kind of reserve, dedicating these funds for this purpose, is, I think, something all Albertans can get behind: seeing good money spent, in terms of a lawsuit, if it's dedicated to addressing the reason they're involved in the lawsuit. I, of course, just want to get on the record again that supervised consumption is an important part of the necessary spectrum of services, and I support that.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak?

The hon. Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's certainly a breath of fresh air in this House that we have the opposition joining the government in supporting our bill. I certainly prefer that kind of momentum, when we stand together for Albertans and fight with the ones that took advantage of our vulnerable citizens. Certainly, our voice will be stronger. So credit to you guys, and thank you for that.

Regarding this amendment let me tell you this. When the Minister of Health introduced the bill, he spoke very clearly that it is our intention to keep the money within the health care system when we get it. When I stood up to introduce second reading on this, I reinforced that message. We're doing this anyway, so in the spirit of red tape reduction we don't need another lengthy procedure, another committee to do this. Unfortunately, I wouldn't recommend we consider this amendment, but thank you for the spirit of supporting the bill. Let's get down to the bill and get it over with.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, November 28, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning, hon. members.

Let us pray. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. May Your kingdom come and Your name be hallowed. Amen.

Please be seated.

Third Reading

Bill 27

Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure today to move third reading of the Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019.

I've had the opportunity of travelling across Alberta for the last few months talking to people about rural crime, talking to people about property rights. This bill will give us the strongest property rights possible right now to make sure we send a clear signal that property rights are to be respected in the province of Alberta. It's going to protect our farmers. It's going to protect our homeowners across this province.

It's something that we heard directly from Albertans, that this was something that they were looking for. They wanted to make sure that people that wanted to trespass for their own agenda, for their own, you know, purposes, just have a clear signal that that will not be tolerated in the province of Alberta. There are going to be fines now through this legislation that will send a clear signal that you're not to be picking on law-abiding Albertans on their properties. It's a clear signal to the organizations out there that target the vulnerable in rural Alberta that no longer are they to be targets in the province of Alberta.

It's our absolute privilege to bring forward this legislation. I'm hoping that everybody in the Chamber supports this bill. Again, it's a real honour to be part of the team effort as well. I really want to say thank you to all of my colleagues from across Alberta that worked with us on this bill to help bring forward the ideas of their communities to get this done. I'm hopeful that we'll get support here for this bill. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there's a lot of chatter happening this morning. I ask that when we're in Assembly, we just keep the volume down so that all members in this Assembly can be heard when it's their turn to speak.

Right now I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Good morning, all. I am pleased to rise this morning to speak to Bill 27, Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019. As I've mentioned in this Legislature before, I too have at an earlier time been also a rural property owner and lived on an acreage property outside of Edmonton and have had incidents of concern late at night on my property when I thought somebody was breaking in, so I understand the concerns of rural property owners and of the government to want to make sure those fears are assuaged.

However, I think that this bill perhaps goes a bit too far as far as the proportionality of consequences is concerned. I know that there were some incidents where individuals went onto agricultural properties to express their opposition to certain practices by agricultural producers that they thought were incorrect, and they chose a method of occupying the agricultural property to protest those methods. Madam Speaker, there are laws already in place with respect to trespassing. I'm not sure if the extra penalties that are contemplated by this legislation are in any ways necessary as deterrents. Of course, the government members may disagree, but I think that they really are out of proportion to the trespasses that they are attempting to deter.

I was, in fact, a little shocked at the level of penalties that the legislation contemplates for trespassers. Certainly, there are concerns about individuals who trespass onto rural property and particularly those of agricultural processing operations where biosecurity is important. I visited turkey farms, and inside those buildings biosecurity is something that is of utmost importance. There is a procedure for entering those properties so that there is no contamination, and I followed those procedures when I did visit with some of my colleagues earlier, in the first term of office when we were in government. I'm certainly aware of the need to maintain biosecurity and of the costs that can be incurred if biosecurity is breached on those farms.

However, the legislation before us, Bill 27, has some pretty, pretty hefty penalties involved, and I don't know if they are warranted. I think the trespass act already has penalties in it that really did effectively cause deterrents. You're not going to stop everybody from choosing to protest in this way, but I think that the penalties that were already in place certainly would have allowed judges to exercise and render verdicts that indeed made individuals think twice about perhaps doing it again. However, I also did mention in my previous remarks about the seriousness of contemplating action as a landowner against somebody who may be on your property and apparently up to no good. Of course, the Criminal Code does cover this, and one would be exposed to the sanctions of the Criminal Code no matter what this Legislature decides to do with respect to this trespass statutes act.

I relayed an incident whereby I thought somebody was inside my rural acreage property and was prepared to exercise whatever force was necessary at that point in time, but circumstances may have prevailed where, indeed, if somebody actually had been killed in an incident or an incident where somebody is trespassing on another's rural property, those circumstances are always unique, and to take us down a path towards the stand your ground legislation that we see in the United States is not something that I wish to tread on. I know that Albertans consider trespassing as a very serious issue and that the risk to rural property owners is something that we understand because, of course, the response times are longer. There is a concern about individuals on rural properties being more exposed because of the fact that they don't have the rapid response time, but the UCP seems to be trying by the backdoor to get in some measures that otherwise wouldn't have been possible.

I just wonder, as I did when I thought back to the incident at my own property, you know, if somebody had actually been breaking into the house, I just wonder in a situation like that, Madam Speaker, if a trespasser is actually shot on someone's property, will there still be a criminal investigation as a result of this legislation? I would think that the Criminal Code would still apply, but this seems to be a law that tries to make things more complex than it really has to be. I'm wondering how people will be educated on the regulations and really the profound changes in this bill, particularly in regard to the duty of care.

There seems to be a prevailing attitude that is promoted by this government that, in fact, shoot first and ask questions later might be supportable, and I don't know if indeed that's exactly the message that the government wishes to convey with this legislation. That's not a situation, I think, that would be a healthy one for Albertans to get into, where you could end up with a lot of wrongful deaths and a lot of injuries to people who were just straying onto property perhaps as hunters. That happens, as the Government House Leader can attest. I know that individuals looking for help after a road accident will sometimes late at night go onto a property and bang on a door, and that could end up potentially in their death or injury if somebody feels threatened by that on a rural property in the middle of the night or during the day.

I'm not sure if indeed the government is planning to really do an education campaign to make it very, very clear what the person's rights and responsibilities are. Even in a very stressful situation where quick decisions have to be made, we expect our police officers, our peace officers, to make those decisions. Certainly, we have not given them the right to shoot first and ask questions later. They must make decisions in a split second that have protocol attached to them. I think the same needs to be expected of citizens when they are looking at exercising deadly force.

Government's plan under this legislation is also to train wildlife officers and others to use handguns and weaponry and to respond to such calls. Now, I'm hoping that the training that the government plans to do will assist these wildlife officers and others who may be asked to be called to these 911 calls, to keep the response time as low as possible, is going to really embed the protocol required of peace officers before they discharge their weapons in their roles as peace officers. It's a pretty consequential event when a police officer or peace officer discharges their weapon or uses deadly force or exercises any kind of force against another citizen. That's a decision that's guarded by and guided by protocol.

I think citizens need to understand that their rights to do that certainly have some limitations and that the consequences of exercising that kind of force may be dire for them. Ultimately, outside of any legal measures that they may face – just look at what we have today going on in the case of Constable Woodall, who lost his life in my riding four years ago. Today 80 officers who were involved in that case are meeting and attempting to finalize their thoughts and understanding of the whole process, knowing that it's something that's going to be with them for the rest of their lives. This type of issue affects police officers very, very deeply, so individuals who involve themselves in exercising force to protect their own property will have consequences in their own life because it'll be something that will be with them for the rest of their life. I know the incident in my own home is something I won't ever forget, and it involved nobody actually breaking in. Just the thought that somebody was was something that was a big enough concern.

I know that there is concern about biosecurity, as I mentioned, on the agricultural properties. That's something, of course, that no Albertan condones, somebody trespassing onto a farm or agricultural producer's property and causing them disruption as well as cost because of the biosecurity breaches that might take place, but my contention, Madam Speaker, is that trespass laws in place right now have significant consequences for trespassers. The egregious penalties that are in part of this legislation are, I think, higher than they should be. The penalties and the fines and jail time consequences there are shocking.

I'm concerned also about the additional exemptions for civil liability for injuries to trespassers. It's retroactive to January 2018. I don't know if this government realizes how risky it is to go back and legislate retroactively. It's not something that is done very commonly, and it's ground that government should tread upon with a very large sense of care and attention. I think that Albertans will be watching as to why exactly this retroactivity is being put in place and whether it's something that will end up being a legal issue, a concern for the government. It may be an element of this piece of legislation that the government should think twice about implementing because it's not something that I think is really part of the whole body and the intent of this bill. It's a small element to satisfy a subset of desires in the caucus to reach back into a particular situation, and it's treading on some pretty dangerous legal ground, I think, as a government. Any time you retroactively legislate, you do so at your own peril as a government from a legal standpoint.

Once again, the Criminal Code will apply to individuals, in my view, who are exercising force against trespassers, and those consequences are something that should always be considered, but whether or not this legislation will actually protect an individual landowner from a duty of care to trespassers is a question that I suppose will be learned over time as various incidents come to light and as things pass through the courts.

The act itself widens the definition of what a trespasser is. It adds specific references to people entering on properties on false pretenses.

It increases the penalties for trespassing to $10,000 for a first offence, $25,000 for a second, with repeat offenders facing prison for up to six months. Madam Speaker, as I indicated, these are pretty large penalties. Whether or not they're necessary is a matter of debate. I think that these are much higher than warranted for these first or second offences. I think the current penalties in place may have not thwarted recent incidents, but they certainly have in the past been deterrents, and judges have the opportunity to exercise those penalties right now. I think that $10,000 for the first offence, $25,000 for a second is more than egregious, and I wonder why the government thought to put them so high. Maximum fines for first and subsequent offences would increase from $2,000 and $5,000 to $10,000 and $25,000 respectively. One again, I think that the penalties are overly egregious in this legislation, and they are unnecessarily high.

Notwithstanding that, of course, we don't condone trespassing in any way, shape, or form, especially when it concerns people's lives and safety and their property and also, of course, when it is tantamount to a disruption to their operation and one that ends up costing them time and money and interrupts their freedom to operate and enjoy their property.

I also wanted to note that organizations or corporations that aid, counsel, or direct trespassing can be fined up to $200,000 under this piece of legislation, and that again is a sledgehammer. Once again, one wonders who the government intends to aim it at. Is it something that is put into this legislation in an effort to once again stifle dissent or perhaps an effort to disassociate organizations from certain causes for fear of reprisal, for fear of being fined in case one of the individuals that they represent perhaps does trespass and ends up being prosecuted? Would that capture them with this net and end up with them facing significant fines under this piece of legislation?

Madam Speaker, while I certainly respect the principle of this legislation, that individual property owners deserve to be able to enjoy their property free from trespassers, I believe that the existing legislation already has adequate deterrents in it and that disproportionality of the response in this legislation is an overreach and that landowners in this province should be cautioned that notwithstanding this legislation of protections it purports to contain, protecting them against liabilities in the event that they injure somebody or even kill somebody while protecting their property, there may be consequences that this legislation doesn't protect them from in the protection of their property. As a result, they may have a false sense of security in exercising what might be called "shoot first and ask questions later" type of response.

I think it's very much incumbent upon the government to very clearly lay out the actual rights and obligations of landowners as a result of this legislation, should it pass. If indeed individuals end up in situations where they have injured or harmed somebody on their property and then face consequences that they didn't expect and then look towards the government and say: "Hey, we had this legislation; how come I'm not protected?" they may have some answering to do to those individuals if indeed they haven't gone forward and made sure that a very serious education effort was made to explain exactly the rights and obligations of landowners as a result of implementation of this piece of legislation.

Those are my concerns. I know that rural property owners have legitimate concerns, agricultural producers as well, about trespassers. But legislation that does prevent or provide sanctions for trespassers should be proportional to the offence, and I think that this legislation goes well beyond that proportionality.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a huge honour for me to be able to rise today and speak about Bill 27, Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019. This is an act that many of my constituencies have been asking for, and I'm glad to see that the Justice minister has taken these concerns seriously.

Before I start, I just wanted to thank the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General for holding a town hall in Camrose on October 9. My constituents' concern about rural crime: they feel like they were neglected by the previous government. The approach that this government has is very personable, and they felt honoured to be able to have that chance to interact and engage and share what's happening in my community.

I have quite a few towns and municipalities in my constituency, from Tofield to Hardisty, Bashaw to Viking. There are also Ryley, Daysland, Killam, Sedgewick, Lougheed, Forestburg, Rosalind, Heisler, Alliance, and, of course, Camrose, and I could go on. But I think this provides a nice overview of my community. Madam Speaker, I've heard from each of these towns about the impact that the rural crime crisis is having on their communities. People are scared, and I don't think their fear is unfounded. Just a couple of weeks ago an elderly woman and her dog were shot and killed while going on a walk. This week alone, there have been multiple thefts in Forestburg, a town with a population of under 900 people, thefts from vehicles in Lougheed and Killam, towns with respective populations of 256 and 998 people, a break and enter in Daysland, 824 people, and yet another break and enter in Lougheed.

Madam Speaker, these are our small towns, and they're valued by those who live there for the sense of security they provide and the friendly atmosphere they breed. I think anyone who grew up in a small town, such as myself, can recall fond memories of having real relationships with everyone in their town. They're our friends and our neighbours. In a town like Lougheed, with only 256 people who call the place home, everyone knows everyone. It's a great town with a friendly atmosphere, and I'm proud to represent it.

But when a town as small as Lougheed is hit by both theft from a vehicle on Wednesday and a break and enter on Saturday, it tears at the fabric of the town. While Killam, which holds the local RCMP detachment, is not too far away from Lougheed, the Killam detachment isn't large and serves 11 towns, all undergoing the same crisis. Madam Speaker, people in these towns are legitimately afraid, and the province needs to find new solutions to address our rural crime crisis. It's why I was glad to see the minister stepping up and offering legislation in hopes that it deters criminals from even thinking about trespassing.

If I can, I'd like to address one other issue, that is legislation affecting my riding. The issue of biosecurity for organic farmers is a real issue in my riding. Being accredited as an organic farmer is incredibly difficult. As I think anyone who has ever worked on an organic farm can attest, cross-contamination is very easy to do, but even a small amount of it can lead to organic products no longer being able to be identified as such. This includes cross-contamination that can occur merely as a matter of walking from a nonorganic farm to an organic farm. Despite what the NDP and particularly the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar might think of our farmers as being rich . . .

Mr. Schmidt: Point of order.

Ms Lovely: . . . the loss incurred by food not being deemed organic . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, a point of order has been called.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Schmidt: Under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), the member is clearly using language to impute false motives and incite disorder. I ask that she withdraw the comment and apologize.

The Deputy Speaker: Would the government like to respond?

Mr. Schow: Madam Speaker, I don't see a point of order here. I believe this is really just a matter of debate. The member is simply repeating something that was said by the member who called this point of order, citing what that member believes. You know, our agriculture members in this House are citing things from their background. I do believe it's a matter of debate. We are speaking about agriculture, speaking about trespassing, protecting our agriculture producers, who are very important to this province and our prosperity. I don't see a point of order here but, rather, just a matter of debate. I encourage that we just proceed.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, it's very early to be having these types of conversations. However, I will caution the member to tread lightly in this area moving forward. I don't see a point of order, but there is room for caution.

Please proceed.

Ms Lovely: If I might just go back to the trend of thought, our farmers aren't rich, and the loss incurred by food not being deemed organic can be devastating. I hope that this legislation will help combat this issue as well. It is important that our farmers have as much stability as we can grant them, and protecting them from trespassers is incredibly important. While I hope to see more from our government on protecting biosecurity, I am glad for at least this first step.

Madam Speaker, I am proud to represent the largely rural riding of Camrose. Camrose is made up of a large number of towns, hamlets, and localities. It's important to me that the needs of the constituents are being addressed, and I'm glad to see that this bill is taking a strong step in that direction.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak to Bill 27, Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019. I haven't spoken to this bill yet, so I had a look through, and a couple of things stand out as, I think, concerns. I think there's no question that the House shares the goal of public safety, of public order, and shares a goal of reducing the incidence of rural crime. That is why we took the specific public policy responses that we did in our time in government with respect to investments in rural crime and empowering the RCMP with more resources to be able to address the problem.

The ADM for public safety reported to Public Accounts a couple of months ago in some detail the successes of those initial investments in specifically targeted initiatives to work with the RCMP to reduce rural crime. He went into some detail about how those programs are being successful and how those resources were deployed, and it was, I think, a very good presentation to the Public Accounts Committee, who had questions, rightfully so, on both sides of the committee's membership, about the investment of resources in crime prevention.

There's no question that in seeking a remedy, you have a number of different tools at your disposal as government. You certainly have the public policy remedy, not just through deployment of resources, but also you do have an ability to deploy other kinds of law enforcement professionals in order to address various aspects of keeping public order. For example, you can empower commercial vehicle officers to do more. You can have more integration between RCMP and bylaw officers. There are a number of different things that you can do.

I learned about this when I was the environment minister. I took a pretty law-and-order approach to some of the abuses that we were seeing serially on the landscape of our waterways, in particular, of our public lands, everything from the leaving of garbage and the dumping of garbage, which a lot of landowners know very, very well if they are on the edge of public land, to other disorderly activity, both motorized and nonmotorized. It was that sort of thing that we certainly invested in as well to restore some order on the landscape. It's part of the piece – right? – of people going out to rural areas, where there are fewer law enforcement eyes on the landscape, in order to undertake antisocial activities of various kinds. So there are definitely remedies in policy and in resourcing.

There are some legal tools available at the provincial level as well. There are not as many tools available at a provincial level of government given that the jurisdiction over the Criminal Code is federal, so whenever we're doing something that is outside of a public policy response – that is to say, more integration or deployment of resources – the province has to ensure that it is actually going to meet its goals. It can be much more difficult to meet those shared goals that I think we have in this Legislature. When it tries to do things that are outside of its jurisdiction, it can become problematic, and what ends up happening is that the goal of more public safety and public order is not reached because the measures that are undertaken by the provincial government can be found to not conform to proportionality. That is the first serious concern that I have here with respect to the level of fines and the level of response.

I remember that when we increased the fines for various kinds of activities on public land, things that none of us like to see, you know, like leaving your garbage and destroying waterways and things like that, it had to go to a committee that sort of oversees administrative penalties. It's a committee in Justice. I wanted those fines to be as high as possible. I wanted them to be just egregiously high, because I do believe that part of the problem in enforcement on public land is that people just sort of went: "Ah, 300 bucks for a ticket. Whatever." We increased those fines considerably. I just kept pushing the committee: "I want more. I want higher." I really firmly believe that there needs to be a punishment and that it needs to pinch – the shoes need to pinch – with these administrative penalties out there. Essentially, we got it to a place where the advice was: "Well, if you go any further than this, then you're going to be starting to interact with this concept of proportionality. What you don't want to risk is that some of this stuff gets thrown out and that you don't actually ultimately achieve your aims, your goals." Again, these were goals that I know that everyone in this House shared.

That's the first thing that I would caution on, what you don't want to do in your zeal to solve a problem using some of the administrative or legal tools at the provincial government's disposal. Ultimately, you don't achieve that goal because it gets caught up in the courts unnecessarily. That is the first piece that I would raise a caution on.

The other piece is around the retroactivity of the legislation. Again, this begins to then interact with our various Charter rights, our legal rights. I believe it's section 11 of the Charter where retroactivity becomes an issue. Again, what you don't want to do is pass a piece of legislation that then ultimately gets struck down by the courts, and you don't achieve your goals because you've gone a bridge too far.

The other piece that I would certainly caution around these exemptions for civil liability for injuries: it is not a good idea ever for a Legislature to pass laws that address only one case or that specifically target one person or group of people. In fact, one of the landmark Supreme Court decisions around the concept of rule of law in this country came when the Supreme Court struck down an action taken by a Quebec Premier, Duplessis, at the time – I think it was 1959-ish – when he revoked a liquor licence for a Jehovah's Witness. He didn't like Jehovah's Witnesses. That's fine. That was his personal opinion. He then abused his office to specifically target this one man's business, and the Supreme Court said: no; you're not allowed to do that.

I mean, of course, there were whole other laws in Quebec at that time that were struck down, that essentially made our religious freedom laws, so the Jehovah's Witnesses could live without persecution, as they were being in Quebec at that time. We all enjoy many of these religious freedom protections that even preceded the Charter, and we also enjoy protections from people passing laws directly to target one person or one group of people, which is an abuse of power, because of those decisions at that time. That is sort of the basis of a lot of our interpretation of our liberties in this country.

When you are passing a law in this retroactive sense to speak to one case or a set of a cases, you are then treading on very difficult legal terrain, and certainly this argument has been made. The Roncarelli decision is cited whenever governments attempt this, and I think that that might be a Supreme Court decision that the government may want to go back and reference and think about a little bit more deeply as they go forward with making new laws.

I think what we are looking at here is a piece of legislation that is designed to solve a problem, and certainly around the biosecurity and some of those trespassing issues for large livestock or other farming operations I agree that there should be a legal response. There are maybe some public policy responses, but I think that in those cases there should be some legal response, so I certainly have no quarrel with that part of this bill. What I worry about, though, is that ultimately the goal will not be achieved.

Another piece that I do worry about is that given that there are many complicated aspects, it sort of complicates and muddies trespassing law. The other idea that the government has, on the public policy response side of responding to rural crime, is a plan to train wildlife officers and others to respond to 911 calls. When we have trespassing rules that then become a little bit more legally unclear and you have people who are law enforcement but are not trained in the first instance in these kinds of issues, you may in fact be moving into areas that are quite difficult for wildlife officers and others to respond to. I know that I have spoken to many wildlife officers in the last couple of months around this plan to train them to respond to 911 calls and so on, and they're really nervous about it. Really nervous about it. This even complicates that set of issues more, and I think I would want to see a lot more training for those fish and wildlife officers if this is indeed going to be the case, because I know that many of them have expressed to me a number of concerns around this.

I think that ultimately what we're looking at here with this piece of legislation is a legal response when a public policy response is actually what is called for with respect to resourcing, with respect to ensuring that rural crime is addressed in a way that is substantive, that is reflected in data and evidence once those investments are made, and is certainly using the tools that we have out on the landscape already with some of this integration between RCMP and bylaw and other law enforcement officials. Investing in those things, I believe, will actually get us to our shared goal of safer communities, particularly in rural Alberta.

I will conclude my comments on that, Madam Speaker. I am worried about retroactivity. I'm worried about proportionality. These are real legal issues in drafting legislation, and they will, if used in a way that is somewhat careless or intemperate, lead to legislation being struck down and will lead, if challenged, to the government not addressing our shared goals of safer communities, and that's ultimately, I think, the most worrying thing about this. We need to address rural crime. We need to address issues of serious trespassing. We need to address some of the insecurity that both just ordinary homeowners and landowners feel but then also operators of large facilities like hog barns and, you know, large poultry operations of various kinds. I want to see us do that, but I want to see us do it in a way that is thoughtful, that will endure, and that will actually solve the problem that we have all collectively identified.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, I know that it's a difficult thing in opposition, having sat in opposition for four years, and sometimes your job is even more difficult when a piece of legislation is brought forward that actually deals with an issue, an issue that needs to be addressed by the society, and actually does so in a reasonable, balanced, and responsible fashion. How do you do your job as the opposition when you're faced with a bill like the one that we have before us today, Bill 27, the Trespass Statutes (Protecting Law-abiding Property Owners) Amendment Act, 2019? This is an eminently reasonable piece of legislation.

Having been with the Minister of Justice as he's toured over the province, as he's talked to the people in my constituency and to the people in the constituencies across this province – he's gathered the concerns and gathered the information from the people of Alberta, from the farmers, from the people that are facing problems with rural crime, and then come back with an eminently reasonable and effective and responsive piece of legislation, one that will actually meet the needs of Albertans. It must be a very hard day today to be in the opposition, when you're faced with a piece of legislation that is responsible and as reasonable as this one is here today. So I understand why they're having difficulty.

I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-McClung for standing up and speaking to this issue. However, I guess one of the tough things that you have to do when you're in opposition is that you have to try and be the opposition but not oppose for the sake of opposing, actually come up with reasonable suggestions for how you could make the bill better or come up with a rationale for why the piece of legislation misses the mark. I'm having a hard time hearing those kinds of arguments from the opposition today.

You know, I think it was perhaps a poor choice of words when the argument was brought up that this piece of legislation is encouraging people to – I believe it was: shoot first and ask questions later. I believe that's an irresponsible reading of this piece of legislation. When you actually read the legislation, you can see that that's not in there at all.

We can go to section 2(2) under the Occupiers' Liability Act.

(2) Where a trespasser is not a criminal trespasser, an occupier is not liable to the trespasser for damages for death of or injury to the trespasser unless the death or injury results from the occupier's wilful or reckless conduct.

(3) Where a trespasser is a criminal trespasser, no action lies against the occupier for damages for death of or injury to the trespasser unless the death or injury is caused by conduct of the occupier that

- (a) is wilful and grossly disproportionate in the circumstances, and
- (b) results in the occupier being convicted of an offence under the Criminal Code . . .

It's really hard, I understand, to be the opposition when a piece of legislation so clearly outlines the conduct that is expected out of people that are property owners in this province. This is not a blank cheque to do anything, and to suggest so, I believe, is stretching things beyond what we would consider to be a reasonable limit in this Legislature.

You know, it seems to me that the Member for Edmonton-McClung spent an awful lot of time talking about the trespasser's rights, forgetting entirely that this is about law-abiding citizens and the use of their property and their capacity to defend and protect their property. We should be far less concerned with the person that is actually breaking the law than with the people in this province that are trying to enjoy their property and to do so peacefully.

I understand and I was actually very appreciative of many of the arguments that the Member for Lethbridge-West brought forward in the House this morning, but I was a little bit mystified when she starts talking about civil liability and she says that this legislation targets one group of people. You're darn right it targets one group of people. They're called criminals. They're called people that break the law. To use a suggestion that this law targets some business, some person that's doing a law-abiding act or performing a service of business to the people of this province, and to equate that with a criminal act, I think, stretches the arguments.

I would just say that I'm glad that the opposition is performing their job today. I'm glad that the opposition is trying to come up with reasons for making this bill better.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll keep it brief, and I'll keep it on keel. You know, part of the issue with us in rural Alberta in dealing with this is that there are a lot of heated feelings because, quite frankly, we've been under siege for a number of years. Let me give you an example of how it used to be in rural Alberta.

Growing up, we were west of the city, probably about an hour, an hour and a half, right around there, out towards Chip Lake. We were heading to the city. We'd go to the city about once a month for a big shopping trip, those types of things, growing up. I was about 12 years old at the time, and it was the wintertime. I had to run back to the house and do something before we went on this family trip, and I went and locked the door.

Well, we got about – oh, shoot – 15 minutes down the road, and my father had asked me a question, and it came to pass that he said, "Let me get this right; you locked the door?" And I said, "Yeah, I locked the door on the way out." Then he said: "What in the heck are you doing? What happens if somebody breaks down on the side of the road out there? What happens if somebody hits the ditch and then they have to walk? The only place they're going to have that's warm is our house." He turned around, and we went back and unlocked that door. That was how it used to be. When somebody came up your driveway, you kind of waved at him. You didn't know if they were a friend or a stranger or otherwise, but that was the case.

Well, roll the clock forward. I bought a little hobby farm. It's about 40 acres. I'm on the road working construction and down on the east coast. I come back, and I'm spending some time with my wife in the sunroom at night, and there are these headlights parked out on the side of the road. I'm going: "Who's that? What's going on?" She says: "I don't know. They've been coming out here, and then other cars meet them on the side of the road in the night and everything else." Now, we're not that far. We're not an hour and a half away from town anymore. We're about 45 minutes away from town. The interesting part with that is that you've got main highways intersecting and you've got little crossroads, and quite frankly it's pretty tough to chase that many rabbits with one dog. That's what's happening. There are drug deals and drop-off points taking place.

She called me one time. I was a little bit concerned about it. There was a minivan that was stolen, obviously, and burnt on the side of the road of our place. This is not the same as when I was growing up, when we were 12 years old and being concerned about locking the doors.

Yesterday, no less, there was a gentleman that called me from my constituency. He's frustrated as all get-out. There is one person in that community that has been in and out of our legal system, back and forth, nonstop. They know who the person is, they know which drug house he's living in, but obviously we're not going after him because he's in the drug house and there's a bigger play from the police that want to get him. This one guy had $148,000 of his equipment stolen. He knows where it's at. They can't go touch it. They caught the guy for selling about $5,000 worth of stuff, and that was it. It's a petty crime, and he's out doing it again.

These are folks that are so darned frustrated. When we had our town hall – and I didn't see anyone from Edmonton-McClung, Edmonton-Gold Bar, anybody else that came out to see our area, and we're just in Calahoo, again, only 45 minutes away – 200 people showed up. We asked a question, Minister: you know, how many people have been affected by rural crime? I'm very much audience participation: a show of hands. Over 75 per cent of the people in that room put up their hands. That was powerful to me, 75 per cent of the room. Then I started going down the rabbit hole, Madam Speaker. Who's been hit more than once? Only a few hands dropped off. More than twice, three times? By the time I got to four times, there was still 30 per cent of that room that had their hands up.

People are concerned. They can't get insurance anymore. They can't call in the claims on the insurance. The criminals show up in the back of the yard, out in the shop, with what looks like a firearm. Maybe it's a broomstick handle; maybe it isn't. But coming back to the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, you're sitting there with your wife and kids. You've got the shop lights on. You're trying to do things. These people aren't going. They're discharging firearms first. And you're going to have us held hostage because we're worried about a trespass law? These people don't care about the $50 trespass law. Good fences make good neighbours, and guaranteed, Madam Speaker, we have fences all over the place.

It's not a problem of some kids lollygagging across – I don't know – Edmonton-McClung, trick-or-treating one night, who happen to go across someone's lawn. This is completely different. When I pick up that phone to call the RCMP, guaranteed they're not there for an hour. I have one hour of a home invasion, to put it in context for the members opposite. One hour. I don't know what those people are thinking. You've got either the crowd that falls within the Kumbaya days – everything is good, and they've got this entitlement that they can just walk onto people's land – or the more concerning part: you've got the drug crowd. You've got the crowd that is trying to feed a $10,000-a-week habit.

I'll put it in context. The first time that I came across that was out in Vancouver. I'm along the Burrard Inlet. We're installing fibre optics along the Burrard Inlet in Vancouver. I was interviewing security companies. I had worked all across Canada with the company I was with as a project manager. This was the first time I've heard – and this is going back a number of years now, 20 years ago – of a security company insisting they have attack dogs with them.

To me, that was a pretty big liability, so I'm going: "Okay. What gives? What's with the attack dogs?" The guy that I was interviewing for that contract puts it in context for me. He says: "Just imagine. Just put yourself in a circumstance where you have five minutes to live, and the only thing that's going to fix it is medicine. If you get something, you need it. You need that medicine, or you're going to die, and you've got five minutes. What would hold you back?" I mean, arguably, for anybody put that question: "Well, not much. There are five minutes. That's it." He says: "That's what the heroin addicts are like. We're not being held up with knives. We're not being held up with guns. We're being held up with needles." That was 20 years ago. Working along there, being around that culture, I got to see it. There is a problem out there.

At our town hall meeting – and here's a strong, strong message to support that. This is now. One of the participants from the audience stood up and wanted to tell their story. He is a constable. He didn't say where he was from, but I'll say it here. He was EPS. He is from the city of Edmonton. He lives in my area. He stands up and says: there is not a crime issue; there is a drug issue. All of the bad guys in Edmonton know there's lots of coverage. But you know where the bad guys in Edmonton go to make it easy? Well, they just take that nice 10-minute drive or 15- or 20-minute drive. They go out to the country. So that's what we're getting. We're getting all of your bad guys. You've got all the police. You've got all the coverage. We're getting your bad guys.

Member Irwin: There are no bad guys in my riding.

Mr. Getson: Well, you might have the best riding in town, then, if you haven't any crime, because they're all probably coming out to my neck of the woods. It proves my point. If there's no crime in that member's area, then guaranteed this is substantive. This is the Edmonton Police Service that is saying that. There is a drug issue.

There's another name I'm going to mention. I haven't talked about this before, and it really kind of struck me. I'm driving home – this is going back about five years ago – and I hear a name from my past. It was a person that I had played basketball with. It's a person that I had worked together with. You know, we had gone to the same parties and events. We chased after the same girls in high school, all that type of stuff. We were buddies, doing that through thick and thin, a lot of those reactions. Here comes the gentleman's name: Travis Vader, a hard-working young farm boy, all that kind of stuff, who fell into an element and went completely down a different path. So the wolves that are amongst us didn't necessarily start out on that path, but they're starting to be driven to this.

Rural crime is an issue. These trespass laws: fantastic. We've heard overwhelming support for that. If the folks from the NDP would like to come out to our areas and hear some more of these messages directly, they will understand it. It's not that we're all a bunch of gun-toting, hillbilly rednecks out there. Well, not all of us. I would say that I kind of fall within that ilk. I kind of take that with a badge of honour. But there's part of it.

So when people, members opposite are wondering what it would be like to do that: yeah; what would you do to protect your family? What would you do to protect your property? What would you do? Again, understanding that, if I put it in the same context, you have someone coming into your home, you have someone occupying your back garage, you go out in the middle of the night, and you try to ask them to leave. No one, none of your neighbours can get to you. No one's going to get to you within an hour, and this isn't the first time. It's the fourth or the fifth or the sixth time, and you know who it is. They're walking through it, and that's probably part of the biggest concern of all of this.

Again, Minister, I appreciate and applaud your efforts. When you had mentioned that you were not just going to throw the book at the perpetrators on those types of trespass crimes, that you were going to thicken it, that really resonated with the folks in rural Alberta. The drug issues that we have: there's a bigger, deep-seated issue that falls to it. These folks are not in their right mind. You have to put yourself, honestly, back in this concept. You are either one of three types of people: you're either the wolf being the predator that's preying on people, you're the sheep that does nothing about it, or you're the sheepdog that stands up and protects it.

In rural Alberta all of us have some dogs, and some of us are those sheepdogs, and that's, I think, why a lot of us are drawn to this. We're here to help protect and speak for the people that we represent, we're here to help to protect our families, and we're here to help give a voice. Hopefully, it resonates and people understand that it's real. It's real. This is the first step of making it right and making people feel like they're not the victims anymore so they're not so frustrated.

Obviously, I'm very much in support of it, Minister. Thank you for it. Keep up the great work. The folks in my area are behind you, too.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Any members?

Mr. Schweitzer: Question. Question. Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, I am the Speaker of this House, and I will call the question when I am ready to call the question.

Are there any more speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, I shall call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 29

Municipal Government (Machinery and Equipment Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 29, the Municipal Government (Machinery and Equipment Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019.

This legislation would empower municipalities to attract investment, create jobs, and help them realize their full economic potential. Municipalities deserve the freedom, the opportunity, and the flexibility to make the choices that fit their unique local economic circumstances whilst at the same time helping with our province's provincial priorities. This legislation that we are proposing is concise. In short, we are proposing to expand the powers of municipal councils to create proper incentive programs for a machinery and equipment assessment class. Municipalities know what is best for their residents. We are simply getting out of their way and letting them do it.

If passed, Madam Speaker, Bill 29 would allow municipalities to provide property tax incentives for up to 15 years for machinery and equipment. This would give Alberta a competitive advantage over jurisdictions across Canada and the United States. Other jurisdictions have programs like this in place. Saskatchewan and British Columbia as well as Texas and Arizona are some of the examples. If passed, we'll be helping municipalities provide one of the longest tax incentive timelines in North America.

Some individuals and groups may disagree with the proposed legislation, arguing, I would say, Madam Speaker, in error, that it may lead to increased competition between municipalities. Increased competition is exactly what we are looking for, but we can't keep thinking that competition is between each other. Alberta as a whole has become uncompetitive with other jurisdictions. This isn't a zero-sum game. We need to bring the Alberta advantage back to grow the power that we all share. We need to get investment back from neighbouring provinces, foreign countries, and particularly the United States.

We want to help grow our economy, not just manage it. If passed, Madam Speaker, I believe this legislation will bolster investment and economic development across our great province, particularly as we continue to restore our province as a destination of choice for investors.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Sure. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 29, Municipal Government (Machinery and Equipment Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019. I'll keep my comments relatively brief at this stage of the debate on this bill as we begin to have a look at it and provide just a few opening comments.

The first piece that I would flag is consistency, Madam Speaker. It would appear that the government ought to make up its mind if it is in favour of what they call boutique tax credits or not. We have an inconsistency here between other statements of the government and the province with respect to how fiscal policy is deployed in the province and this bill. This is, in fact, exactly that type of fiscal instrument. It is a specific type of tax break. The existence of this bill makes a number of their other arguments inconsistent or at least raises questions about their actual commitment to that line of argumentation.

I think that, as the minister indicated, there is a bit of a misalignment with other stated goals of this Legislature and of municipalities in particular for regions to be able to thoughtfully plan development over a long horizon period of time in a way that is both individually beneficial but also does not undercut one another or otherwise lead to friction between municipalities. There's certainly the risk of that with this particular measure that is proposed in this bill. I think that as we go through debate, perhaps we will begin to see some of those arguments being made by various municipalities as well. It's quite possible at this point.

I think the third piece that we have to ask is: what is going to be achieved through this bill? Certainly, we have a bill before this House, Bill 21, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act. That's obviously a goal shared by everyone on all sides of this House, but fiscal sustainability applies for municipalities as well, and what we're seeing right now is a great deal of fiscal instability for a number of municipalities, not just with respect to the future of MSI in the next fiscal year, not just with some of the other reductions that have been made, whether it's in flood mitigation, other forms of infrastructure, the capital plan more broadly, road maintenance, and so on. These are all reductions that municipalities will have to grapple with sometimes co-operatively and sometimes individually as municipalities.

There are also a number of consequences of some of the actions that have already been taken by this government with respect to revenues for municipalities. I'm thinking here particularly of the reduction for shallow gas operators then leading to sometimes other operators just simply not paying whatever has been assessed to them by the municipalities in which they are operating, to the point where we are now looking at, it has been reported, about $81 million worth of unpaid property taxes from oil and gas companies. That's according to the Rural Municipalities of Alberta.

There have been specific remedies for this proposed by rural municipalities that, to the best of my knowledge anyway, my most recent knowledge, have not been addressed by this government or by this minister specifically. That could be the case. Some of these specific asks that have come from the rural municipalities could have been addressed in this legislation because some of them are actual legislative tools that need to be deployed. Others are through directives with the Alberta Energy Regulator. Rural municipalities have asked through improved legislated tax recovery options. That could have been in this bill as well, but we do not see it. We don't see action from this minister on that topic.

Members of the RMA have recently endorsed a resolution calling for greater oversight and accountability from the oil and gas industry and the Alberta Energy Regulator. They have certainly asked for broadened tax recovery powers. They've asked for an early detection system that can identify if oil and gas operators are struggling before it gets to the point where there is no money to pay these taxes. That could have been addressed by the minister. Certainly, the RMA is the largest group, the umbrella group for rural municipalities, the largest by their sheer individual numbers given the number of smaller municipalities that we have in this province. That could have been included in this bill so that we could accomplish the, I think, shared goal with the rural municipalities of achieving strong, effective local government, which is their stated goal.

There are a number of issues with this piece of legislation. We will have a little more time in the coming day or two to review it, Madam Speaker, at which point we can provide more detailed analysis and propose amendments or otherwise query the intent of certain pieces of the act. Certainly, on the face of it, we have problems here with consistency, with alignment with other stated goals. We have problems, as it is, with resourcing in municipalities, and certainly this bill is silent on the actual pressing needs that municipalities have asked for, in particular the rurals.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I shall call the question.

Government Motions

Statutes Repeal

42. Mr. Schweitzer moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that pursuant to section 3 of the Statutes Repeal Act, SA 2013 cS-19.3, the Legislative Assembly resolves that the following statutes, appearing on the list of statutes to be repealed which was tabled in the Assembly by the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General on June 11, 2019, Sessional Paper 64/2019, not be repealed:
1. Black Creek Heritage Rangeland Trails Act (2004 cB-2.5);
  2. Forest Reserves Amendment Act, 2004 (2004 c9) s8;
  3. Health Professions Act (RSA 2000 cH-7) ss 155(1)(c), 156(n), (u), Sched. 1;
  4. Health Professions Amendment Act, 2008 (2008 c34) ss12, 13, 15;
  5. Pooled Registered Pension Plans Act (2013 cP-18.5);
  6. Tobacco Reduction Amendment Act, 2013 (2013 c24) ss3(c) to (e), 4(a), 6, 7, 8(a), 19(b), (c), (d) "(e.4)", (f) "(g.2)", 20, 22;
  7. Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act (RSA 2000 c34 (Supp)) s8 "8.1(3)".

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This motion is necessary in order to grant a one-year extension in the statutes listed in the motion as our government reviews the need for those statutes.

The Deputy Speaker: I did not think there were that many words on that page.

Are there any members wishing to speak to Government Motion 42?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Government Motion 42 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 28

Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General and keeper of the Great Seal.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We are making great progress this morning. I'm as excited to hear about this speech as anybody else is in this House because I'm really learning about it as we go, just as everybody else here.

Madam Speaker, it's a privilege to rise and move on behalf of the Minister of Health third reading of Bill 28, Opioid Damages and Health Care Costs Recovery Act.

I was pleased to see that Bill 28 passed second reading with the unanimous consent of this House. Alberta continues to see lasting effects from the overprescription of opioids. With an average of two Albertans who fatally overdose every day, the situation is far from resolved. This is largely in part because of the overprescription of highly addictive opioid medications. The opioid manufacturers' aggressive marketing efforts led to this overprescription. These efforts include spending hundreds of millions of dollars to educate doctors on the use of opioids for treating chronic pain over the long term and stating that the risk of addiction was less than 1 per cent. We pray for the families who have lost loved ones as a result of these actions, and we are working to strengthen a system of care that gives families avenues to access support and heal.

Madam Speaker, Alberta taxpayers have been on the hook for the health care costs that have been incurred as a result of opioid manufacturers' and wholesalers' unlawful actions. Bill 28 is the first step in our efforts to recover those costs. In 2014 the total cost of substance use to the Alberta economy was $5.5 billion. Of that, approximately $52 million was spent in that year on health care costs related to opioid use. This is according to the Canadian Centre on Substance Use and Addiction. We estimate that since then, opioid-related health care costs have increased significantly with the subsequent growth of the opioid epidemic.

Bill 28 enables Alberta to participate in British Columbia's proposed national class action against opioid manufacturers and wholesalers. This legislation will allow Alberta to recover health care costs and other damages caused by the defendants' unlawful actions, including their aggressive marketing efforts. This legislation would allow the use of statistical and population-based evidence to establish causation and quantify health care costs and other damages caused or contributed by an opioid-related wrong. Bill 28 will allow Alberta to recover costs on an aggregate basis rather than on an individual insured person basis regardless of when the damages occurred. If the directors and officers of the corporate defendants are implicated in opioid-related wrongs, this legislation would make them jointly and separately liable with their corporations.

Our priority is to reinvest any damages awarded back into our health care system. Madam Speaker, we are committed to holding opioid manufacturers and wholesalers to account for the opioid damages and health care costs that they have contributed to.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, and again thank you to every member in the House for their good work on this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 28. Again, I just wanted to reiterate that we are in support of this bill. This was something that was in the NDP platform during the election and something that we obviously support when it comes to trying to recover some of the costs that are associated with the opiate crisis and making sure that those individuals who are part of the creation of opiates and the distribution of opiates are doing so in an ethical and responsible manner.

In saying that, obviously, there was an amendment that was put forward yesterday on my behalf that, you know, I really wish had been passed. I appreciate the minister standing this morning and saying that the money that is reclaimed and received by the government will go towards health care costs and reimbursing the government for the expenses that come out of supporting individuals with addictions, specifically opiates. The amendment yesterday, however, spoke to ensuring that Albertans had some ability to have consultation around where that money went and to ensure that the minister was willing to put a financial bill forward in the future that required that money to go into health and specifically some of it to mental health and addictions supports. I feel that that's important.

As all members of this House understand and probably already know, any money that comes into the government, whether it be from court action or taxes, revenue of any kind, always goes into general revenue first, and once it's in general revenue, it is then decided where that money goes. The fact that there isn't a mechanism in place, that this bill doesn't speak to the fact that it's actually going to be allocated to Health, that it's actually going to be allocated to mental health and addictions, for me, is a concern. It's very easy to have a settlement come in and it go into general revenue and somehow not make it to where it needs to be.

We know that mental health and addictions is something that, when we look at the overall Health budget, is a small, small percentage of the overall Health budget. It would be nice to see that, with something that is as specific to addictions as the opiate crisis and the fact that we have lost Albertans because of the opiate crisis, a portion of any money that is returned to the government would go to mental health and addictions, because we recognize that this is the reason that we are getting involved in this action. I recognize – and again I will acknowledge that I've had conversations with the associate minister's office – that obviously not a hundred per cent of that money can go directly to treatment programs and/or specific mental health and addictions pieces because there are additional costs around emergency services and health services outside of just treatment and the spectrum of care. But in saying that, it would have been nice to see the government take the initiative and actually commit to the allocation and not allow it to go into general revenue.

Although we will support the bill, I will be open and transparent that as this action continues and if any money is reclaimed and returned to the government, I will be watching to make sure that some of it is actually going towards mental health and addictions treatment and that it doesn't somehow make it into general revenue and stay there. I believe that although the government has made commitments around funding for different things for mental health and addictions, we can always do better. It's obviously something that I am very passionate about, and I think that any opportunities for us to evaluate how we provide services within health care that strengthen services around mental health and addictions is important. I'll just keep auditing every once in a while and seeing, if any money comes back, where it goes.

Again, we will be supporting the bill, and I look forward to seeing what the outcome of the actions across the country are. I believe that in looking at what's happened in the United States, there is definitely potential for some form of recovery. I think that that will only benefit Albertans if used appropriately.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, I think our schoolchildren came on a great day to see this Assembly working together and pushing forward legislation, so welcome to the Alberta Legislative Assembly.

At this time I will ask if there are any other members wishing to speak. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to speak this morning to Bill 28. You know, over the last couple of days, as we've been debating a few bills, I've certainly been quite critical of the government for moving forward with a number of things which they did not mention in their elections platform, but this morning I rise to commend them for doing precisely that, for moving forward on a piece which was not included in their elections platform. In doing so, I will also thank them for incorporating a piece that was in ours. This was something that we had brought forward and committed to.

Now, of course, we had the benefit of having been in government and having had the opportunity to work with folks within the Ministry of Health and the many excellent public servants there, who had provided us with some advice and some insight. Indeed, we had learned a great deal about the challenges that government has faced as a result of the opioid crisis and the sources where that came from. I'm sure that informed part of why we decided to include that in our elections platform, that if we had the opportunity to form government, we would move forward with such a lawsuit. I am pleased that in this case the UCP government is choosing to take that advice as well.

Now, we know that this is something that has been looked at by a number of different jurisdictions, and very appropriately so. I recognize that this is a serious health issue. Around the world, certainly in the U.S. and in Canada, we are seeing that there are very serious impacts on population health. Indeed, here in the province of Alberta 733 people died of opioid overdoses, including fentanyl. We've seen that opioid-related deaths and injuries are a critical public health issue across Canada, with one Canadian dying every two hours due to opioid use.

We know where this epidemic traces back to, Madam Speaker. We know this goes back to the late '90s. We've seen revelations now, there have been documentaries, there's evidence that has come forward, there's been investigative journalism which shows that companies manufacturing these opioids were in fact engaging in dishonest practices, falsely assuring and falsely telling people in the medical community that these products were not addictive, and aggressively pushing doctors to prescribe these to their patients.

We know that opioids have a place and have a use. Indeed, I have received e-mails in my role as critic for Health for the Official Opposition from people within the chronic pain community who have been very clear about the value that opioids hold for some of them. We recognize it is an important part of treatment. For some, that is the only relief they have from chronic pain, and if managed correctly, it can be a beneficial thing. But what we also recognize is that there was this disingenuous campaign by these pharmaceutical companies to boost their profits, again, the sort of short-term thinking which we see sometimes in which one looks only at the bottom line and not at the larger effects of the decisions you're making and prioritizing only the personal good, and indeed that's what we saw these companies doing.

We have seen jurisdictions stepping forward, much as we saw with tobacco companies, where folks have stepped forward and sued tobacco companies for, again, a dishonest and disingenuous practice in the past, trying to hide the harm that their products were creating even though they were well aware of the fact that that harm existed and of the costs, then, to the health care system. Of course, we faced a similar thing with opioids, and now we're seeing similar cases go forward. In Oklahoma the courts recently ordered Johnson & Johnson to pay about $572 million for engaging in false and misleading marketing of their drugs and opioids in general. We see similar court cases proceeding now in the province of British Columbia. They're suing dozens of opioid manufacturers and even distributors. They're moving forward with that, and I think it makes sense that we here in Alberta would move on that front as well.

This is an opportunity for us to acknowledge the health costs that we have, and as my colleague from Edmonton-Manning noted, a good use of those funds, whatever we may be able to receive from these lawsuits, would be to fold that back into the health care system. As she said, I'm pleased to hear that that is in part the intent of this government. I'm pleased that my colleague will be keeping track of that to see how that is done. Certainly, while we are in agreement with this government on the need to move forward with this and that this is a good course of action to try to recoup some of those costs and get dollars that we can invest back into the system to address the issue of opioid use, we have had some disagreement across the aisle as to how those funds are best invested.

Now, to be clear, I think we all agree on the goal and the outcome that we want to see. We want to see a mitigation of the public harm, and indeed we've heard from members in this Assembly, in debate on Bill 27 earlier, about the effects it has when people are addicted and the problematic behaviour that comes from that, then, and how that is spread out. We recognize that while opioid use exists across the province, indeed there are problems with addiction across rural communities as well as urban communities that drives – we do see people even that are using, as was noted, in urban areas that are going out to rural areas. The effects ripple out. It's a broad-spectrum issue.

We also recognize the health care costs and the other things that are involved, but we recognize that there has to be a suite of services to address this issue. I have been troubled at times to hear some of the types of language that have been used by the Premier and other members of his government in regard to those who are substance users or in regard to how services are provided in the community. It's been unfortunate that at times I've seen that used, in my view, as a political wedge, in a very politically divisive way, when this is something on which we all want to move forward and achieve a greater good. To try to cast aspersions on areas such as harm reduction or to suggest that those are more problematic is, to me, concerning.

I can tell you that here in my constituency of Edmonton-City Centre the harm reduction practices such as the supervised consumption sites have led to, according to the data and according to reports from the police and others, a reduction around the sites where this is occurring, where those supports are being provided.

10:30

Now, indeed, I agree with this government that we should also be investing in recovery opportunities for those individuals who wish to pursue that and for whom that works. Indeed, we should encourage as many as possible to seek assistance, but we recognize that there are a range of ways that people are going to find that recovery. For some, that's going to be through an opioid antagonist program or an opioid replacement program. Indeed, that has been proven in many cases to be one of the most effective ways to get individuals back on their feet, stabilized, and in a position where they are not, in fact, then dependent on a habit that is going to force them to go out and try to find that $10,000 a week but instead are provided with a prescription, which they go and receive in a clean, sterile clinic from medical professionals who offer them follow-up and other life supports and allow those individuals to stabilize, to reacquire housing, to go back to reunite with loved ones and family, to get back into the workforce, and find stability. At some point some of those individuals may indeed be able to in fact leave that prescription behind, even, to work with medical professionals to wean themselves off that. Some may require it for longer.

I'm not myself a medical professional, but I've had the chance to speak with many who offer those programs here, and I can certainly speak to their passion and their commitment and the incredible value they see in the many stories they've told me of lives that have been changed. I think it's important that as we move forward with this, that as we look at that investment of how many dollars come in from this lawsuit, they're invested in the full range of services.

Indeed, I would encourage this government, as they take this positive step, I think – inasmuch as one can say, I guess, that proceeding with a lawsuit is a positive step – to use this in a way that's going to benefit and address the core issues that drive so many of the problems that we discuss here in this House and to perhaps set aside some of the political rhetoric and attempt to take advantage from, I think, understandably, the very real concerns that people bring forward about the chaotic effect that the promulgation, the proliferation of opioids throughout our system has on so many communities, recognize that at root these are social issues and even behind the fact that people become addicted to opioids, recognize that that is often driven by mental health issues, issues of poverty, issues of personal trauma and that this is not a question of moral failing but indeed a number of other elements on which, unfortunately, these particular pharmaceutical companies chose to prey and profit.

I'm thankful that we've reached a place now where there's a much better understanding of how this came about. It's a form of thinking I hope we can apply to many, many other areas, where we understand that perhaps pushing profit above community good can indeed create many unintended consequences, can provide incentives for businesses or others to behave in ways that, while it may do themselves some good in the short term, in fact does great harm to our community and causes great cost in the long term. Perhaps that's something we can consider as we also move on and continue to debate this government's budget.

That said, I appreciate that the minister has taken on this fight, that he's bringing forward the legislation to enable the province to recover these costs, and I will be supporting Bill 28.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I shall call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a third time]

Mr. Schweitzer: Madam Speaker, we've made a lot of progress here in an hour and 35 minutes this morning. I move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 p.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 28, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Mr. Jack William Ady

September 22, 1932, to November 26, 2019

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we begin this afternoon's proceedings, let us take a moment to pay tribute to a former member who passed away this week. Jack William Ady served three terms as a Progressive Conservative member, for Cardston from 1986 to 1993 and for Cardston-Chief Mountain from 1993 to 1997. He was also the father-in-law to Cindy Ady, Member for Calgary-Shaw from 2001 to 2012. Mr. Ady served as minister of advanced education and career development from 1992 to 1997. Mr. Ady passed away on November 26, 2019, at the age of 87. We will be paying further tribute to Mr. Ady in the spring sitting, when members of his family are able to join us.

In a moment of silent prayer or reflection I ask you to remember Mr. Ady as you may have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let the light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

Hon. members, for those of you who may be interested in attending the service, I believe that it is this Saturday. My office has further details with respect to the service for Mr. Ady. Feel free to reach out to the office for those details. [A cellphone rang]

It sounded distinctly like a cellphone tone over there in the back corner, perhaps from the hon. Member for Peace River. I'm not sure, but of course we want to ensure that all of our electronic devices are turned off.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have two school groups in the galleries this afternoon. From Edmonton-Glenora please welcome students from MAC Islamic School, and from Strathcona-Sherwood Park welcome Wye elementary school students. Thank you all for coming to the gallery. Joining us a little bit later on are students from Edwin Parr senior school. Hon. members, please welcome our students.

Members, in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon, please welcome guests of the Minister of Indigenous Relations and the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism, representatives from the Paul band First Nation, accompanied by board members from Good Energy. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Hon. members, visiting guests of the Minister of Advanced Education: representatives from Alberta Students' Executive Council.

Also in the gallery today are guests of the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: 4-H Hall of Fame inductees Sally Barkwell and Lee Carothers. As well, they have a number of guests joining them.

Also in the galleries – you may have noticed them in the lower rotunda this morning – we have some great folks visiting the Legislature as guests of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora: representatives of Alberta Policy Coalition for Chronic Disease Prevention.

Last but certainly not least are guests of the MLA for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland. Welcome the Elder family: Monique, Anne-Marie, and Philip.

Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

Time Allocation on Government Bills

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, back on June 19 of this year I rose and gave a member's statement cautioning this government against its use of time allocation. At that time I spoke about how it is the debate that happens in this place, not just the holding of elections, that allows us to call Alberta a democracy, so I urged the government to show restraint in the future use of time allocation, because constraining debate in this place damages the democratic principles that we have all sworn an oath to uphold and protect.

Given the events of last week and this government's determined abuse of time allocation rules to stifle almost all debate on Bill 22, it is clear that this UCP government will continue to ignore democratic norms as they lunge from scandal to scandal, and it's a deeply tragic shame, Mr. Speaker. Last week we witnessed an unprecedented act of political cowardice. A government conveniently lacking in leadership obstructed justice by ramming through a bill that fired the Election Commissioner, an investigator who was looking into the UCP's own corrupt leadership race. Every time this government uses time allocation, especially when used presumptively, as it was last week, they reveal themselves to be unfit caretakers of Alberta's democracy.

Albertans watch and care about the debate that goes on in this building, their building. Albertans are watching, and they have developed a taste for frequently changing governments of late, Mr. Speaker. If the UCP continue to abuse their power in this place for their own convenience and self-dealing, I think Albertans will be wanting to continue that new electoral tradition in just a few years' time.

Vulnerable Albertans and Budget 2019

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, after the budget address on October 24 I managed to get home in time to attend the Okotoks business awards gala. I would like to express my sincere congratulations to all of the incredible business nominees and award recipients.

Now, the highlight of the gala for me was the chance to meet Loree and her daughter Sydney. Sydney is an incredible young girl. She is a leukemia survivor, and she also has Down syndrome. Mr. Speaker, Loree told me about how her daughter overcame her fear of flying by writing a book to explain how fun the entire experience could be. From arriving at the terminal to boarding and the flight, they wrote a positive story that gave her the confidence to overcome her fear. This is an amazing story in itself, but to add to this, they have now published the story as a children's book illustrated by Karon Argue, an Alberta artist who is legally blind. I have to say that this story touched my heart in a profound way.

Our government has presented our first budget, a budget that ensures that we can continue to provide quality services to vulnerable Albertans like Sydney, a budget that establishes a prudent, thoughtful plan to stop the unsustainable increases to our debt.

Now, the opposition wants to criticize this budget by the misinformation of a $4.7 billion tax cut that is actually only $100 million, and that is a fact. Their hypocrisy is disappointing considering they are responsible for $2.2 billion every year of taxpayers' money going to service the debt that they created, $2.2 billion that no longer goes to help vulnerable Albertans, $2.2 billion that goes to banks and bondholders overseas. We owe it to Albertans to make sure they have the support they deserve, now and in the future.

Sydney is an amazing young girl, and through her story she has reminded me that even though the previous government left this place in a fiscal mess, this government can turn the page, overcome the fear, and write a new story, one of a positive future for Alberta.

The Speaker: I might remind all members of the House and, in particular today, the Government House Leader that it's the custom that we don't walk between the Speaker and the dais when entering the Chamber or exiting it.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain has a statement.

National Adoption Awareness Month

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to mark National Adoption Awareness Month and offer my warm greetings to all adoptive families in Alberta and raise awareness of the children in need of adoptive homes. We all know how important family connections can be and how loving, supportive families create bonds that can last a lifetime. I think we all understand what those bonds mean to children who are adopted, to the parents who adopt them, and to the birth families who maintain ongoing contact through open adoptions. Providing a child in need with a permanent home is a remarkable act of caring and an expression of hope and faith in the future.

National Adoption Awareness Month presents the opportunity to celebrate adoption and to raise awareness about the children in need of adoptive homes here in Alberta, whether through licensed private adoption agencies, direct placement adoptions, international adoptions, which is the route that my family took, or children in government care who cannot be reunited with their immediate or extended families. Our government is working hard to find permanent, loving homes for children, teens, and sibling groups who otherwise wouldn't have one.

Postadoption services lend assistance to adoptive families here in Alberta. The supports for permanency program provides financial assistance to families who adopt or obtain private guardianship of children under the age of 18 in permanent government care, and the postadoption registry provides information and services related to adoptions dating back to the 1920s.

Mr. Speaker, our government is working hard to cut through the red tape to make the adoption process more timely for children who are unable to be cared for by their birth families or by extended family. We want to ensure that we are finding the best possible fit for those waiting kids as quickly as possible.

This month of celebration is an important reminder that adoption is a wonderful option for any Albertan wishing to build a strong and loving family. On behalf of my colleagues in this House it is my great pleasure to recognize National Adoption Awareness Month and the many adoptive families in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I do appreciate your statement today. It particularly hits close to home for the Speaker.

Food Bank Use

Ms Renaud: In 1981 Edmonton's Food Bank, the first official food bank in Canada, was formed here in Alberta. Since that time, through boom times and bust, over 90 food banks have been created in communities across Alberta, proof that prosperity hasn't been for all.

Well before the election of Justin Trudeau in Ottawa, before the fall and complete collapse and assimilation of the PC dynasty in Alberta, food banks were seeing a growing recession at their doors in the increasing numbers of people in their communities needing food assistance. These numbers grew through the collapse in the value of oil, a global commodity, and appear to be growing again as this government acts less like a shock absorber and more like the one delivering the blows to employment, sustainable funding, and the daily cost of living for Albertans.

In early November the Calgary Food Bank reported a spike in demand for their services, saying: what's needed now is government action. In a CBC news article, Calgary Food Bank CEO James McAra called for stronger employment legislation, more affordable housing, and social programs that don't claw back benefits when people start earning money. Edmonton's Food Bank reported record demand for help in October as over 23,000 Edmontonians accessed their food hamper program. Food assistance is once again growing, with no end in sight. Food Banks Canada released their HungerCount 2019 Report. The recommendations include supporting the creation of affordable early learning and child care across the country and increased supports for single adults living with low incomes.

A 2018 survey of food bank clients in Edmonton showed that just a few hundred dollars per month would make the difference between being food secure or not. As the cost of insurance, education, transportation, and user fees rises and as fewer supports are available due to funding cuts and the cost-of-living increases for everyday Albertans, the trend swings rapidly towards becoming food insecure, and as we've seen, food bank numbers will continue to grow.

Thank you. [An electronic device sounded]

The Speaker: Oh, my, that sounded a lot like a second electronic device in the Chamber today.

The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Paul Band Energy Business Partnership

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the constituency of Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland we've had our challenges over the last four years. Between the federal Liberals and the previous NDP government it's been an uphill battle. Albertans spoke clearly this April. We took back our province. We're working together to get back to where we belong in this country, leading the charge for innovation and prosperity. The hardships we've faced together will make us stronger, and a common goal with a clear direction will unify us going forward.

However, the challenges we have faced over the last few years fall short of what the Paul band has been struggling with. Back in June I met their chief and council and discussed the challenges that they're having. On a tour I experienced first-hand some of the infrastructure challenges that they face every day, the main roads that require four-wheel drive for several days after a rain as an example. We also discussed crime, drug issues, and the need for reservation policing. We discussed the off-site low-income housing that they're trying to build to support their members living in Edmonton and how the new school under construction will help the next generation. We also spoke about the old arena, a building that was central to socializing in their community and the surrounding regions. Hockey is a common bond for all kids and parents, and unfortunately that arena has been in disrepair for the last 20 years due to lack of funds.

The leaders did not ask me once for money; they asked to be part of the solution, to help with the model of regional co-operation so that revenue could be generated to pay for their basic infrastructural needs. As their MLA I managed to connect a new company called Good Energy with their leadership. Together they will be purchasing and operating undervalued Albertan energy assets. The

Paul band will have seats on the board of the company and will have members of their community working on-site. In addition, the company will build a trades training centre on the reserve so that members can obtain and upgrade their skills as well. It's anticipated that there will $3 million per year generated for the band, plus wages for their members. This is the reason why the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation was created.

This UCP government has set the stage for true consultation and participation, and I look forward to all of the things that we can build together. Alberta is open for business. [some applause]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Public Engagement in Alberta Politics

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the privileges of this job is the opportunity to meet so many Albertans who are doing fantastic work in their communities, Albertans who volunteer or work as part of their community league, their school council, charitable groups, and nonprofits. I've been particularly moved by the stakeholders who spoke out to fight against the regressive and discriminatory Bill 207; compassionate, compelling, and articulate advocates.

Most recently I've been inspired by the individual Albertans who have written their MLAs and the Premier, called our offices, and rallied on the steps of the Legislature and throughout the province, Albertans who are outraged by how quickly this government broke its campaign promises with this budget, how it seized their pensions without consultation, how entitled and arrogantly it spends their money on their buddies and cronies, but most outrageously, how corruptly and self-servingly it undermined our democracy itself by firing the Election Commissioner. The Premier didn't even have the courage to stick around and do it himself.

There's very real frustration, fear, and anger in Alberta towards this government. We're hearing it everywhere we go, in articles, on social media, at community meetings, in the grocery store. This government has broken faith with Albertans, and at a record speed.

What we hear most is: "What can we do? How can we fight back against this corrupt government?" Let me provide Albertans with some suggestions. E-mail, call, and ask for meetings with your MLA, particularly if they are government MLAs. Copy opposition members so we can hold government MLAs accountable for what they're hearing. If you live in my riding or anywhere in Edmonton, contact the Minister of Municipal Affairs. He is Edmonton's voice in cabinet and must answer for why he is failing us. Talk to your friends and families. This is not just politics. This is our future. Albertans must energize, organize, and mobilize.

Most of all, my message to Albertans is: don't forget. This government is doing this in the first year of their only term because they're counting on the fact that Albertans will forget what they've done by the next time the election comes around. Don't forget, because I can assure you that the Official Opposition won't.

Fair Deal Panel Chair

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased to see our government taking decisive measures to assert Alberta's place in Confederation. Today the Premier announced Ms Oryssia Lennie as the chair of Alberta's Fair Deal Panel. Ms Lennie is the former Deputy Minister of Western Economic Diversification Canada and brings a wealth of knowledge about federal-provincial relations.

She'll be joining my colleagues, the hon. members for Banff-Kananaskis, Cypress-Medicine Hat, and Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, along with other prominent Albertans to fight for our province's interests in Ottawa. Ms Lennie's distinguished career as a devoted civil servant who has worked on complex constitutional and intergovernmental negotiations will serve her well in this important role. She brings a wealth of experience from her time in both the federal and provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker, there has perhaps never been a time in history where Albertans have felt so alienated from the rest of the country. Legislation targeting our biggest industry, a broken and unfair equalization system, and Laurentian elites in Quebec and Ontario who sneer at the very industry that heats their homes and fuels their cars: it's not hard to understand Albertans' frustration. I'm so pleased that this panel has been tasked with listening to Albertans around the province and examining measures like withdrawing from the Canadian pension plan, creating a provincial police force, and establishing a provincial constitution.

Chairing this panel is a tall order and one for which Ms Lennie is well suited. Along with her colleagues she will be conducting town halls in community centres and church halls around the province. Albertans can also submit their feedback online, and let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, I know more than a few people in my constituency who will most certainly be sharing their ideas with the panel.

On behalf of the United Conservative caucus I'm pleased to extend our best wishes to Ms Lennie, because, Mr. Speaker, it's time Alberta got a fair deal.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Holodomor Remembrance

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are shocked by the comments made by a University of Alberta instructor. In summary, this instructor believes that the Holodomor, the deliberate murder of millions of Ukrainians by starvation, is a myth. This instructor should be ashamed.

Everyone is entitled to their opinion, but facts are facts. Perhaps this part-time instructor could demonstrate some intellectual curiosity and learn the facts of Holodomor from the Holodomor research and education consortium at the Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies. He would not have to go far. It's at the University of Alberta.

According to the University of Alberta's directory the instructor is not just a misinformed historian and political theorist holding on to rejected conspiracy theories, the instructor is a lecturer in the Faculty of Education, specializing in elementary education. The fact of the matter is that the Holodomor is a recognized mass genocide on the scale of the Holocaust and the Rwandan genocide.

The U.S.S.R. deliberately targeted Ukrainians because they were farmers. They were stripped of their farms, food, possessions, and crops. Their village leaders were murdered. Millions of Ukrainians died as a result of the genocidal intentions of Stalin's Communist regime.

Mr. Speaker, the facts have to be stated over and over again because the Soviet Union tried to cover up the Holodomor. Only upon the fall of the Soviet Union did the facts become available, and the evil inflicted on Ukraine became more widely known. We cannot forget.

I am proud of my Ukrainian heritage. Ukrainians are here in Alberta and in Canada in part because of the genocidal war inflicted upon Ukraine. We have done so much to help build this province and country. The memories of millions that were lost should not be forgotten. We study tragedy of the past so it will not happen again. All I can say is: shame.

Oral Question Period

Justice Ministry Layoff of Civil Lawyers

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, today we've learned of this government's plans to fire 90 civil law lawyers from Alberta Justice as part of its continued run of cuts to the provincial budget. Some of these lawyers are tasked with child protection and make emergency applications to get kids out of dangerous situations. To the Premier: is keeping our kids safe no longer a priority as you scramble to pay off your failed $4.7 billion corporate handout?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we are going to be downsizing the legal services division in the province of Alberta. We're going to make sure that we focus the priorities of that division and make sure that we continue to service the needs of Albertans. We'll continue to provide services for Children's Services. That will continue. Why are we here? We're here because of the fiscal train wreck that we inherited from the other side. We will get our budget back on track; we will balance our budget. It's the responsible thing to do.

Ms Pancholi: Maybe the minister just hasn't taken the time to learn what these lawyers do. These civil lawyers are tasked with enforcing environmental protection laws. They take on employers when unsafe conditions lead to the death of workers. They take violations of the building codes forward when people's homes are unsafe. Frankly, they keep Albertans safe. To the Premier: what's your plan? Are you just going to stop enforcing laws? Is this what you call red tape reduction?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, from the other side over there what we have is simply an attitude of no lawyer left behind. We're going to focus the priorities of government and make sure that we focus the initiatives to make sure that the services of Albertans are met. We're here to make sure that those additional services, critical services, are met in a responsible way. The general public wants us to make sure we have prosecutors. I'm encouraging these civil lawyers, if they're interested to continue working for the province of Alberta, to apply for prosecutor jobs. We're hiring there.

Ms Pancholi: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think there's one lawyer that Albertans would like to leave behind.

Minister, you're putting people at risk, and that's not okay. These lawyers also advise the government when they're breaking their own laws. They help make sure the government complies with the rule of law and the Constitution. Frankly, we could use them now more than ever with this corrupt government in charge. To the Premier: are you firing these 90 civil lawyers because you're tired of having them tell you that you're breaking the law?

The Speaker: It would be unparliamentary to imply that a member of the House is breaking the law. I'm sure that's not what the member meant, because if it was, she would need to apologize and withdraw.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I think that that question speaks for itself. It's a ridiculous assertion. Here on this side of the House we are getting focused in the Justice department. We are downsizing, making sure we focus on the critical areas of government that Albertans elected us to focus on. That's what we're doing. We inherited a fiscal train wreck, sinking to over a hundred billion dollars in debt. My constituents sent me here to make sure we fight for them, fight for every tax dollar to make sure it's used wisely. That's what our department is going to continue to do. [interjections]

Mr. Ellis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 1:55.

The Member for Calgary-McCall has the next question.

Technology Industry Development

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oil and gas workers were stunned when the Energy minister told the media that she wasn't concerned that her $4.7 billion corporate handout had not created any jobs. Yesterday we also found out that the economic development minister is just as negligent with her file when she said the companies she took a crucial tax credit away from are, quote, doing fine. Premier, is the minister really that out of touch with the high-tech, IT, and interactive media industries?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, the NDP just don't get it. They fail to understand that the root problem of all of this is the failure to build pipelines over the last four years. Now, the Minister of Justice has told me that he still has his bus that he offered to the NDP for their rural legacy tour. I'd like to put them on that bus and give them a tour to Bruderheim. Bruderheim: yes, that's where the Gateway pipeline would have started. Perhaps if they would see that, maybe they would realize their role in this was the failure to build pipelines.

Mr. Sabir: The CEO of Beamdog said that he feels betrayed. He has to pass on the plan to double his workforce in Alberta, and he is now looking at other places to create jobs. The CEO of New World Interactive said, and I quote, our process of bringing the right people in and growing the ecosystem here has slowed down substantially if not completely halted. Is betrayal and frustration what the minister meant when she said that these companies were doing fine?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite wants to speak about betrayal. Well, Albertans demonstrated how they felt about their betrayal of the carbon tax introduced by the previous government by putting them on that side of the bench.

Mr. Speaker, we're creating the best economic conditions for businesses to thrive. Prominent economists have said that our job-creation tax cut will create 55,000 jobs as compared to the 170,000 jobs lost under that government.

Mr. Sabir: Sandi Gilbert, chair of the National Angel Capital Organization, said, and I quote, this government campaigned on the fact that they wanted to increase investor confidence, and with this uncertainty they're doing the exact opposite. Adrian Camara, CEO of software company Athennian said: it's going to be impossible to raise a seed round into a technology company in Calgary. To the minister: if you were actually listening to the job creators in Calgary, wouldn't you know that they are not doing fine?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite talks about investor confidence. It takes time to build investor confidence and build relationships. It takes time to do that when you're starting from a neutral position. It takes twice as much time to do that when you're starting from a mass deficit position in investor confidence, that the former government left us in, but rest assured, we're on path to fix their mess.

Bill 26 Insurance and Employment Standard Exemptions

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, this government has not released any estimates for how many Albertans will be excluded from employment standards and injury insurance if Bill 26 is implemented. Looking at the exclusions this government is bringing in, some experts estimate that workers on 80 per cent of farms could be stripped of their basic employment rights, rights other Alberta workers have and other farm workers have across Canada. To the Premier: how many Albertans won't have rights to vacations, vacation pay, termination pay, or a guaranteed minimum wage after Bill 26 passes?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to actually bring this conversation back down to reality. The NDP yesterday was talking about this going back a hundred years in employment standards, but in reality it goes back four years. This actually aligns us with Saskatchewan, Ontario, and New Brunswick for employment standards. So the over-the-top rhetoric coming from the NDP on Bill 26 is really insulting when it comes to how they treat farmers and how they're saying farmers would actually treat their workers, because at the end of the day nobody cares more about farm workers than farmers. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, does the minister know how many farm workers will not have employment standards or insurance coverage after Bill 26 passes?

While our government believed farm and ranch workers should have the right to basic rules around deduction of earnings, employment records, dispute resolution, this UCP government is moving to strip them away. Can the Premier explain to the hard-working farm and ranch employees on 80 per cent of farms in Alberta why their government doesn't feel they should be able to access these rights, rights that exist in other workplaces in Canada and on farms and ranches across Canada?

Mr. Dreeshen: Again, Mr. Speaker, Bill 26 puts us in line with other provinces. There are actually a lot of different workers here in the province of Alberta, whether it be real estate brokers, securities salespeople, insurance salespeople, students in work experience, students in off-campus education programs, extras in film or video production, counsellors or instructors at nonprofit educational or recreational camps for children, municipal police service members, and postsecondary academic staff, that are all exempt from certain aspects of employment standards here in the province. Again, the over-the-top rhetoric from the NDP is just ridiculous.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, the minister is talking about exemptions that hadn't been reviewed in decades, work that I hope the current minister of labour will continue, that we started. Under our government paid farm and ranch workers also had the right to things like unpaid, job-protected leave for things like maternity leave, compassionate care leave, bereavement leave, and long-term illness and injury leave, but this UCP government obviously does not believe that paid farm and ranch workers should be able to access those rights. To the Premier: why do you feel that someone who works on a farm in Alberta should not be entitled to job-protected leave to care for a child or mourn a loss?

Mr. Dreeshen: Again, Mr. Speaker, we spent the entire summer consulting with farmers. We had 25 different consultation stops across the province, talking to farmers and ranchers and farm workers. The NDP's romanticized socialist class warfare is prevalent in the Leap Manifesto. But Albertans know better. They see through all this over-the-top rhetoric. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Calgary LRT Green Line Funding Affordable Housing

Member Ceci: There's more and more concern about the critical green line LRT in Calgary, and it's all this government's fault. Now a city councillor is proposing pulling money from a new arena to put behind this project. I'm seeing mixed reaction to this proposal, but it was never on the table before this government shorted the funding for the green line. To the Premier. You love to say that you're the green line's biggest champion. Are you really going to let it die under your watch?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows or certainly ought to know, the funding that we promised in the campaign for the green line will be available for the city of Calgary. We reprofiled the funding by a couple of years, but we've worked with them. We've had people from Transportation go down to talk to the city officials already, talk about how they can do that. There's only one party that can cancel the green line, the city of Calgary, and we sincerely hope that they don't do that because our government would love to see it built. I mean, we are putting $1.53 billion behind that.

Member Ceci: Four years is not a couple of years, Mr. Speaker. That's how far they've pushed it out.

Mr. Speaker, the concern for the green line swirls around a clause in Bill 20 that allows the government to pull funding for the project within 90 days. While the Minister of Transportation has claimed that this clause is typical, neither the city of Calgary nor the Official Opposition has been able to find evidence of similar clauses in project agreements of this size. To the minister: will you provide a list of contracts with 90-day termination clauses, and if not, will you pull this clause out of your terrible piece of legislation?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said in this House before – and if the hon. member was listening, he would know – there's a termination clause in the federal funding for the very same green line project. I'd just ask the hon. member to be a little more informed the next time he gets on his feet.

Member Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, there's also ongoing concern about affordable housing in Calgary, and there is talk of moving some of the money from the arena to affordable housing projects, and since this government cut $44 million from rental assistance and another $17 million from housing management bodies and made those cuts to help pay for the $4.7 billion handout to big corporations, to the Premier. A housing crisis that you're making worse and no green line to get Calgarians to and from their jobs. I guess you have to be a CEO of a big company to get any traction from that side.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I spent nine years on Calgary city council with the hon. member asking the question, and the hon. member ought to know that when the province gives the city money, whether it's more or less, the city decides where that money goes. The hon. member didn't care about money then, he didn't care about money before he got fired as the Finance minister, and he hasn't taken the time to learn anything about how it all works up till today. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South has a question.

Infrastructure Project Prioritization and Management

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the election our Premier said that health care infrastructure priorities should be determined in a nonpolitical way based on local needs, the age of the hospital, and the pressure on that local hospital. The Premier is correct. The public interest is served when infrastructure priorities are determined in an objective, nonpolitical way based on merit and fairness. To the minister: how will our government's proposed infrastructure act support that priorities are based on merit and fairness?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, let me first thank the Member for Red Deer-South for asking that important question. The new infrastructure act, which I'm going to introduce next spring, will outline how the government will prioritize projects and report on capital spending. I hope to be consulting Albertans soon on the criteria that will be used to prioritize projects. The act will also mandate a 20-year strategic capital plan to help guide decision-making to keep politics out of infrastructure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in the election the Premier requested the NDP to stop campaigning with our tax dollars and given that the NDP tried to buy votes with billions of taxpayer dollars in unfunded capital promises and given that when the public interest is subordinated to political vote-buying, there is a great disservice to the public interest, to the minister: how will the infrastructure act support that the public interest is not subordinated to political vote-buying?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, let me assure the member that protecting the public interest is top of mind. That's why in the following months we will be going through stakeholder consultation to test the prioritization criteria and seek input on what else could be included in the act to provide transparency, predictability, and accountability. The act will set a fiscal framework, but the act would not set any budget targets.

Mr. Stephan: Given that government projects cost far more than private-sector comparables and given that projects such as the Sturgeon refinery, with an initial budget of $4 billion, is now several billions more and given that when government is an incompetent steward of taxpayer dollars, the capacity to fund other projects is undermined, to the minister: how will the infrastructure act not only support that the right capital projects are prioritized but that once prioritized, they are constructed in a responsible manner? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. [interjections] Order. The House will come to order.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the MacKinnon panel made recommendations around procurement, and I am commencing a review of that process. It is critical to select the right contractor for the right project each and every time to ensure projects are delivered on time and on budget and are constructed safely. Stay tuned. I'll be making an announcement soon on how we will be enabling the contractors to measure their own performance and how we will hold them to account.

Condominium Insurance Premiums

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Service Alberta made an announcement around changes his government is making to condo regulations, but he failed to address an issue that's impacting tens of thousands of Albertans. Insurance premiums for condominiums have been skyrocketing, with Global News reporting that some condo buildings are getting slammed with fee increases as high as 700 per cent. Why hasn't the Minister of Service Alberta acted to keep Albertans from being priced out of their own homes?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. We have heard these concerns from the condo residents who are impacted by these increased insurance rates. We're aware of the problem, and we're sympathetic to that problem. But, as the member opposite knows, the Condominium Property Act, which is what Service Alberta is responsible for, has provisions to say that condos do need insurance to cover the replacement cost of their properties. This is important because if they suffer a catastrophic event, they need to be able to rebuild their homes. The Condominium Property Act does not deal with affordability and accessibility. This is a Finance issue, and we're working with the Ministry of Finance to discuss . . .

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has claimed to support homeowners but these skyrocketing increases will trickle down to condo owners, who will be forced to pay more in condo fees as a result, and given that this government didn't bat an eye before supporting a $4.7 billion corporate handout while completely disregarding these Albertans who are going to lose their homes, what plans does the Minister of Service Alberta have to address the concerns of condo owners, or since he didn't bother discussing premiums at his announcement, are they even on his radar?

Mr. Glubish: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the cost burdens that condo owners face are something that's very front of mind for me, and that's why, when I announced the adjustments to the condo regulations yesterday, that will now come into force January 1, I was very clear about talking about how important it was over the last number of months to work with condo owners' associations as well as property managers and condo board members to make sure that in the pending regulations that were coming forward, we would get the governance improvements while being mindful of cost increases. We struck the right balance.

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, given that a lawyer specializing in condominium law stated his belief that the premium increases are a result of insurance companies trying to improve their bottom line and given that improving the bottom line of profitable corporations while leaving everyday Albertans to struggle with the consequences seems to be the mantra of this UCP government, will the Minister of Service Alberta stop with the empty talking points, get to work, and take action to reduce these outrageous insurance fees?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that we have done more to protect condo owners from unnecessary costs than the previous government did in four years. I am confident that because of the approach that we took on the condo regulations, this will prevent unnecessary costs from being layered upon condo owners, resulting in the prevention of future condo fee increases. This is something I'm very proud of. I have buy-in from property managers across the province, from condo owners' groups across the province as well as from condo board members across the province. This is something that they failed to do. These were groups that were complaining about their regulations. They are happy about ours.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Medical Diagnostic Test Wait Times

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The previous government, our government, took positive action by providing dedicated funding to help reduce wait times for life-saving diagnostic scans like CTs and MRIs. This minister chose to let that funding expire, and now all he's got left are excuses and finger pointing. I've been approached by many patients affected by this, and now even doctors are beginning to speak out. Why did this Minister of Health rush through his government's $4.7 billion handout this spring but fail to take any actual action on diagnostic delays?

Mr. Shandro: Well, Mr. Speaker, I understand that some physicians and patients say that they're waiting too long. I rely on AHS to ensure that patients are not put at risk. AHS needs to work with their clinicians. If there really are patients waiting too long, then they need to accommodate those patients. AHS has a $15 billion budget, and they are responsible for meeting priority needs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that AHS acknowledged that the wait times are growing due to a spike in demand and the end of that one-time surge funding and given that Dr. Ernie Schuster, president of the Edmonton Zone Medical Staff, says that those delays started six months ago, on this minister's watch, and given that this minister's inaction is pushing people into emergency rooms to get scans done, which is the most expensive possible way for that to happen, how much money is this minister's failure to act on diagnostic delays going to cost Alberta taxpayers?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, I'll remind the hon. member that we've actually increased funding for AHS by $100 million. I know that demand is growing by a couple of per cent a year, but we need AHS to find the money to meet those needs within the existing budget. This is why the review of AHS, which will be available to us at the end of the year and, I think, released to the public in January, is so important. We need to reduce costs and reinvest those savings to serve patients.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that Dr. Schuster also spoke to the media about situations, for example, where a patient has pancreatic cancer and has to wait up to 200 days for a scan – thanks to the lack of action here, the cancer will be more advanced, and that's clearly bad for the patient and all involved in the medical system – has the minister got anything to say to Albertans who are waiting for a cancer diagnosis other than the usual blame game and finger pointing?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, AHS's total cost per CT scan is up to 50 per cent higher than other provinces. We need to work with clinicians to reduce those costs and to reinvest the savings in doing more scans if they're needed, not throw more one-time dollars into the system, hidden through the population and public health budget, which the previous minister did. The prices we pay are just too high. They're out of line with what other provinces pay. AHS pays radiologists, for example, $188 to interpret CT scans while B.C., for example, pays $97.

Traffic Safety

Mr. Rowswell: Mr. Speaker, in August of this year there was a 10-vehicle pileup outside the town of Cereal, Alberta, which left three people dead and devastated their families. On September 15 a multivehicle collision took place outside of Innisfree, Alberta. The two vehicles had pulled over after the collision, but their vehicle was struck by a semi-trailer, taking the lives of both drivers. My question for the Minister of Transportation: what can be done to reduce the severity and likelihood of these devastating accidents, that wreak so much havoc on the lives of Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The worst news I get as Transportation minister is when I hear about deaths and injuries on the roads. Safety is our top priority, and I would like the hon. member to know that after every major event our staff goes out and reviews the situation and the facts around it to see if there are improvements that we need to make, whether it's the construction of the road or signage or other things. But there is no substitute for people driving carefully. In the meantime we are delivering MELT, a higher standard of training for truck drivers, and we are doing many other things.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta implemented changes to licensing and commercial driving regulations such as stricter safety compliance and more mandatory training earlier this year and given that semi-trailers are involved in 8.4 per cent of crashes despite making up only 1.6 per cent of vehicles on the road, can the Minister of Transportation tell the House how effective these changes have been in reducing automobile accidents involving semi-trailers and commercial vehicles?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll tell the member that it's too soon, it's too early to say since we're just delivering MELT, or mandatory entry-level training, a new, higher standard that originated in the United States and a requirement for Canadian class 1 and 2 drivers to cross the border as of February 2020. But I'd like the hon. member to know that we'll monitor this. We are busy talking to truck drivers, bus drivers, industry members from across the province about how they can make sure that this is done in a safe way and how it can be delivered more affordably so we get that top-level training to as many drivers as possible.

Mr. Rowswell: Given that Alberta has the third-highest traffic-related fatality rate amongst Canadian provinces and given that over half of all fatal accidents were in rural areas and given that our rural highways are subject to additional dangers such as snow and black ice in the winter months and given that Alberta has been devastated by dozens of major crashes on our rural highways this year – and the death toll keeps rising – what policies can be implemented in order to improve the safety of our rural highways and to protect the lives of my constituents as we head into the winter?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like the hon. member and all members of the House to know that our highway maintenance contractors are required to be winter ready by October 1 of every year. There are 600 snowplows contracted to cover the 31,000 kilometres of roads. They're all GPS monitored, so we know when they're out there. We know how fast they're going, whether the blades are up or down. They're all required to keep adequate stocks of salt and sand and to get out on the roads as soon as they can. But there is no substitute for Albertans caring about themselves and caring for their fellow Albertans who are on the roads, and I would encourage all Albertans to be cautious.

2:20 Persons with Developmental Disabilities Program

Ms Renaud: There are almost 13,000 disabled Albertans supported by the persons with developmental disabilities program, or PDD. Some receive funding for 24/7 care because of the complexity of the disability. During budget estimates I asked: how many people are currently on the waiting list for PDD supports and funding? The minister told me that there are 12 people on the waiting list and 2,200 people on a new level of waiting list that's in planning. To the minister: would you please clarify for this House and all Albertans what the new criteria are for disabled Albertans to move from the fake waiting list to the real one?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I do want to make it clear that the process that's in place right now is very much the same process that was in place with the previous government. In regard to the numbers on the wait-list, I don't have the exact number. In estimates I said that it was 12. But there is an in-service planning wait-list as well. Again I don't have the exact numbers, but they're in the range of about 2,100.

Ms Renaud: Given that in November of 2009 Betty Anne Gagnon, a woman with a developmental disability, died of a blunt head injury and her caregivers were charged with failure to provide the necessities of life and given that Ms Gagnon was killed while being supported by family members and those same family members had in fact attempted to secure PDD respite services via a service provider and given that the Hon. Judge M.M. Collinson issued numerous recommendations to that ministry following the fatality inquiry, can the minister please tell this House how her department will ensure that all disabled Albertans on both waiting lists will be kept safe?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, certainly, that is a very, very tragic case, and I'm aware of all the recommendations that came out of that situation. I had mentioned to the member opposite that I am undertaking a comprehensive review of all programs, including the PDD program. Yes, it will be partially an internal review as well, but I will be consulting with stakeholders and the disability community before undertaking any decisions.

Ms Renaud: Given that PDD caseloads remain extraordinarily high and given that the minister has stated that the Ministry of Community and Social Services will cut 223 positions in that ministry this year and given that we're hearing reports that successful intake now primarily focuses on very complex cases and that intake has slowed to a trickle, increasing the risk of abuse and injury, can the minister assure this House that her government will continue addressing the fatality inquiry recommendations and will not introduce service caps to the PDD program?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely true. Caseload pressure is unprecedented. We have growing caseloads, and that's why it's so important that we undertake these comprehensive reviews, to understand how we can ensure that these programs are going to be sustainable for the long run, because right now the situation is untenable and the safety of Albertans depends on making sure that we make improvements to these programs so that they indeed are sustainable.

Postsecondary Tuition and Residence Fees

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, despite the claims from this government about wanting to make postsecondary education more sustainable, this government is doing quite the opposite: increased tuition, increased student loan interest, fewer services. Now we learn that students at the University of Alberta are facing a 5 per cent hike to their residence fees. Can the Minister of Advanced Education explain how more expensive housing plus all of these other costs he's imposing on students would somehow make our postsecondary system better?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, what's really important for us is that we give our institutions the autonomy and flexibility to make the operational decisions that are most important to them. I know that under the former government what they tried to do is micromanage every aspect of an institution's operations, to the point that it was limiting innovation and limiting other research and other activities, tying up their time in producing needless reports and unnecessary information. We're going to remove those handcuffs and give our institutions an ability to look at their own operations and figure out what their immediate priorities are. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that the president of the University of Alberta Students' Union has said that this residence fee hike, combined with another tuition hike and other costs that this minister is championing, will actually price some students out of even being able to go to school and given that as a direct result of this minister's policies the University of Calgary has confirmed that they will be increasing their tuition dramatically, how many students is this minister willing to see priced right out of Alberta's postsecondary institutions before he reverses his devastating cuts?

Mr. Nicolaides: Mr. Speaker, it's quite interesting to hear the member opposite talk about numbers and enrolment figures. Under their watch they instituted a five-year tuition freeze, that they told Albertans and they told everyone would increase accessibility, but in fact it did the complete opposite. You know, look at the numbers. Look at the facts. You can see it. It's right there in front of you for everybody to see. Total enrolment in the province is down today from when the freeze began. So we're definitely not going to take any lessons from the members opposite when it comes to strengthening our postsecondary system. We will get it right.

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, given that students should be able to afford tuition as well as a place to live and given that ensuring postsecondary affordability was a priority of our government while this minister's approach seems to be to make students pay more so that profitable corporations can have their $4.7 billion gift, will this minister actually ensure that students can afford postsecondary education, or does he just not seem to care?

Mr. Nicolaides: Mr. Speaker, ensuring tuition remains affordable is a top priority of mine, which is precisely why we've made the tuition changes that we have. We've maintained the cap on tuition to ensure that tuition does not spiral out of control and that it remains consistent with the Canadian average. As well, we have provided a tuition policy and framework that give our students predictability. From the date of the budget students have four-year clarity, a four-year window as to what tuition will be, unlike with the members opposite. When they were in government, they decided tuition policy one year to the next to the next, deciding what they were going to do. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley has a question.

School Nutrition Program

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Education. Some parents in my riding have expressed their appreciation of the benefits that school nutrition programs provide their children. I recognize that good nutrition has an extremely positive impact on a child's learning, and some constituents in my riding were quite pleased that Budget 2019 maintained funding for the school nutrition program. Could the Minister of Education please explain to the House how the increased investment in this program will help more students benefit from the school nutrition program?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is absolutely right. Good nutrition has a very positive impact on student learning. That is why I was proud to announce this morning that we have increased funding to the school nutrition program by 20 per cent. Despite the NDP's rhetoric before Budget 2019, we have been clear that we value and appreciate this program. This new investment is $3 million more than the previous government budgeted and demonstrates our continued commitment to ensuring students receive nutritious meals while attending our schools.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Minister. Given that before the budget the NDP fearmongered about cuts to this program and given that Budget 2019 proved them absolutely wrong and given that this increased investment brings the total funding for this program to a higher level than the previous government funded it, can the minister please explain why the government chose to increase funding to the school nutrition program by 20 per cent?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and hon. member. During my province-wide tour I heard very loudly and clearly from school divisions that they want to engage their community partners in supporting their nutrition programs. That is why this 20 per cent increase will enable nonprofits to partner with school divisions on piloting innovative ways to reduce operating costs and administrative burdens on schools while ensuring that students continue to receive quality, nutritious meals. We value good nutrition for our children, and this increased investment of $3 million demonstrates that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. Given that multiple nonprofits supported this announcement and given that school boards across Alberta believe that increased community partnerships will help them support more students and given that positive nutrition is not solely an education issue – rather, it is a community and social services issue affecting all communities – can the minister please explain how she intends to help school divisions involve nonprofits in supporting positive nutrition for our students who need it?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again for the question, hon. member. I completely agree with the member. Nutrition is not just a school issue; rather, it is a community issue. This increased investment will come in the form of a new grant for nonprofits to pilot better delivery of the nutrition program in partnership with schools. My department will engage with school authorities and experienced nonprofits, and any nonprofit who is interested in applying can submit a proposal to Alberta Education. I'm excited to see how the pilot unfolds as our school divisions work with nonprofits to develop whole out-of-community solutions to student nutrition. This will be a win-win.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Education System and Financing

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year UCP delegates gathered at their AGM and voted for a resolution to strip LGBTQ2S-plus students of crucial legal protections. Then, sure enough, we got Bill Hate, which turned that transphobia and homophobia into law. This weekend the UCP will gather again, and this time members are calling for an education voucher system. Albertans deserve to know where this government stands. Will this UCP government bring in a voucher system? Yes or no?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be part of a government who is here to stand up for all Albertans. Our Premier has been clear about that during his campaigns all the way to the Premier's chair. That's why I've been proud to campaign with him along the way. I'm excited to go to the second convention of the United Conservative Party and celebrate the fact that since the last time that we met, we united the conservative movement and Albertans were able to fire the NDP six months ago. I look forward to hearing the debate when it comes to resolutions, but I assure you that we will continue to be in this House to stand up for all Albertans.

Ms Hoffman: Given that that answer is very different than the one the Education minister has been giving publicly to many organizations, Mr. Speaker – the Education minister has flat out said that there will not be a voucher system – which is it? Is it the Government House Leader and what he said here in this place, is it what the Education minister has been saying to stakeholders who are very concerned about a voucher system, or is it what the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka's riding association is putting forward? Which schools does he think are good schools and bad schools, and what is the truth? What's going to happen at this convention?

Speaker's Ruling Questions outside Government Responsibility

The Speaker: I struggle to find any form of government policy in the question. You did a very fine job on the first question in asking what the government policy might be coming out of that convention, but in this case you didn't ask anything about government policy. I will provide the government the opportunity to respond, but if they choose not to, we'll move to the next question.

Debate Continued

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to respond in regard to government policy and reiterate what I just said in the last answer, which is that this government will continue to stand up for all Albertans. The Education minister has already addressed that issue, as the hon. member just pointed out. She speaks on behalf of the education policy for this government, and she can continue to do that.

What I'm excited about is to be at the second United Conservative Party convention this weekend to celebrate the uniting of the conservative movement and the successful firing of that member's former government.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the same UCP resolution includes bizarre claims that "students are entering adulthood unemployable and increasingly radicalized by extremist ideologies" and given that this is both completely false and deeply insulting to hard-working teachers, educational assistants, and all Alberta students, will the minister condemn this UCP description of Alberta schools and commit to condemning it at the mic at her convention this weekend?

Speaker's Ruling Questions outside Government Responsibility

The Speaker: Hon. member, I provided you some cautionary notes on how the member might respond to a question about government policy. I might even provide a suggestion for you: is this going to be government policy in the future? That would be a question in order. However, the one that you asked was not in order, and unless the Government House Leader would like to respond, we'll be moving to the next set of questions.

Debate Continued

Mr. Jason Nixon: Happy to respond, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that you can't respond to a question like that from the hon. member because she's part of a party who continues to bring forth things here that, it turns out later, are not true, just like when she accused the hon. culture minister of spending $35,000 on liquor. I can't rise in this place and answer speculation on different things from the hon. members . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Jason Nixon: . . . across the way, Mr. Speaker, because we don't know when the NDP is actually presenting real facts inside this Chamber. But I can tell you this. I'm excited to be at the United Conservative Party convention this weekend.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: This morning Sturgeon public schools released a statement about the district budget that the board passed last night.

"The October 24 Provincial Budget included reductions to education." Overall Sturgeon is $3 million short of what the minister promised them in June. Everyone knows that the minister broke her promise to maintain school funding. Why did the UCP take money away from families to pay for a $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education has risen.

Member LaGrange: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. As we indicated through the budget, every student who walks through the door of one of our schools, whether they attend a public, a catholic, a francophone, a charter, a private, or are home-schooled, will continue to be funded at the exact same rate they were last year. Over 98 per cent of the Education budget flows to school authorities who deliver services to our students. By reallocating restrictive grant funding and eliminating reporting requirements, we reduced red tape, and what we did was provide the boards with the flexibility to meet their local priorities. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Greater St. Albert Catholic says they got $3.7 million less than the minister promised them and given that that means the board is dropping a surprise $313 busing fee onto parents retroactive to the beginning of the school year, does the minister have any idea what this does to a family budget right before Christmas? Why won't she take responsibility for what she's done in her budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. As I've said numerous times, over and over and over again, our budget for 2018-2019 for Education was $8.223 billion. The budget for 2019-2020 is $8.223 billion. We collect approximately $2.5 billion in educational tax dollars. We spend $8.223 billion. Enrolment has grown by 25 per cent, inflation by 33 per cent, but our operating has grown by 80 per cent. This is not sustainable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are massive teacher layoffs in Calgary and given that there are surprise new busing fees in Rocky View and St. Albert, given that districts across this province are exhausting their reserves, even the minister's home district of Red Deer Catholic, given that Sturgeon public is warning of, quote, further draconian cuts and fee increases to come next year, does the minister really believe that families impacted by her cuts are doing fine as well?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I've been in contact with school divisions, school boards, administrators, parents, and on and on and on. I have been very, very engaged in the process. In regard to the CBE, their choice to let go of 300 contracts of the most important people, those who teach our children – besides the children who are in our schools to learn, the teacher is the next important. What they did is reprehensible. They need to take account for the actions that they took. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Health Care System

Mr. Toor: Mr. Speaker, I noticed in the Auditor General's November 2019 report that Alberta taxpayers are no longer paying for health care costs associated with accidents that were due to wrongful acts by third parties. This is good news. However, from 2013 to 2017 the department did not manage to recover approximately $140 million in health care costs, an average of $28 million per year. Can the Minister of Health inform the Assembly what measures his ministry is taking so that large cost recovery gaps are avoided in the future?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct. Alberta taxpayers shouldn't be responsible for health care costs caused by the wrongful acts of others. That's why we have the Crown's Right of Recovery Act. The Auditor General pointed out that we were underestimating the revenues available. It was a problem, as the member points out. It got fixed. We'll recover $147 million from Alberta automobile insurers in 2020. This was supported by the insurance industry, and it will not impact insurance rates for individual Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's assurance on the Auditor General's report. Given that another major initiative to improve efficiency is the connect care information system and given that Alberta Health Services has said that it is essential to improve the functioning of the system but there have been some problems reported with it, I'm hoping the minister can give us an update on the status of the connect care implementation, especially the concerns about delays in reporting lab results.

2:40

Mr. Shandro: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize the staff and the department for the work that they've been doing. There are no new recommendations this year, and the Auditor General recognized the improvements in cost recovery, that I just referred to previously. We've implemented a number of other recommendations, including important steps to strengthen oversight in long-term care and improve conflict-of-interest processes. Work is under way on all the outstanding recommendations, including important actions to improve mental health services and modernizing our health care card.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that health care costs are nearly half of the provincial budget and given that health care costs continue to rise and that every option has to be examined when it comes to finding efficiencies, could the minister point out some of the proactive measures that would help our health care system address issues before they become serious and expensive problems?

Mr. Shandro: Well, I suppose I could mention, Mr. Speaker, connect care. Maybe the member wanted to ask about connect care. We can talk about connect care. It was just launched by AHS on November 3. Overall, the launch has gone well considering the skill and complexity of the change. Anyway, we need to make sure that – I thank the hon. member for his questions.

The Speaker: I, too, thank him for his question, but we are currently on Members' Statements and will be heading there directly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Freedom of Religion

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Societies evolve but not always for the better. It is historical fact that the United States evolved from freedom to indentured servitude to slavery one restrictive law at a time. The restrictions of these rights had the support both of wide segments of the society and their legislators. Surely this could not happen in Canada with our long tradition of democracy and respect for individual rights, yet I see troubling signs.

Quebec is creating a secular society and pursuing a legislative course of freedom from religion rather than freedom of religion, which will inevitably restrict people of faith from public service jobs. Recently, Catherine Ford's article in the Edmonton Journal addressing public religious expression concluded: "All this is personal and intimate. It has no place in the public sphere." It would appear she supports an increasingly popular belief that in a democratic society, religious and moral values are best kept private. While I support each individual's choice to pursue a faith or not, I'm an adamant defender of the constitutionally enshrined right for all Canadians to practise their chosen religion.

Surely we have learned what Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. so eloquently said: "There comes a time when one must take a position that is neither safe, nor politic, nor popular, but he must do it because Conscience tells him it is right." For many Canadians their conscience dictates that they abide by the doctrines of their faith, both privately and as their faith intersects with the wider public politic. We must defend our Charter rights for when we weaken individual rights, especially freedom of religion, one law and one judicial ruling at a time, history tells us that it rarely ends well.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have a notice of motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 34(3), I wish to advise the Assembly that on Monday, December 2, 2019, motions for returns 5, 7, and 8 will be accepted. Then motions for returns 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6 will be dealt with.

The Speaker: As a way of context for members, this is with respect to Motions for Returns or Written Questions which are private members' business. We'll be dealing with those on Monday.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. members for Drayton Valley-Devon and then Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table with the requisite number of copies a grade 10 social studies test which included deeply concerning anti-oil and gas rhetoric and is a prime example of the political bias that needs to be removed from our classrooms.

Further, I am endeavouring to secure a copy of the potentially offensive student vote instructions and welcome further examples of such egregious information that is happening in terms of events and incidents across our province in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the following documents, and I have the requisite number of copies. I received these from constituents that support conscience rights in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table five copies of Keith Gerein's article the NDP's Day of Blunders Giving the Official Opposition a Bad Name. I might suggest they change the name to the Tinfoil Hat Party.

The Speaker: I'm not sure that that's part of a tabling, but the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table the requisite copies of an e-mail from my constituent who works for ATRF with her opinion, a very wise opinion, about why this will not actually save money and that consultations should have been done.

I have one more tabling, Mr. Speaker, which is the requisite copies of a letter from the Ridge Community League, which is a community league within the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud, a letter to the Premier outlining the effect of the cuts to the CFEP program on their community league.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Morinville-St. Albert.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have an e-mail from a constituent, Anita Keefe, who describes her five-year-old son's life-threatening allergy to latex. This tragic allergy has affected every part of his daily life. I have the requisite five e-mails that describe the dire situation that this young boy finds himself in on a daily basis.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first one is published by Food Banks Canada, and I referred to it in my member's statement. It's called HungerCount 2019 Report. I have five copies of that.

I also have a briefing paper from the Climate Council dated November 12, 2019, and it's entitled 'This is Not Normal': Climate Change and Escalating Bushfire Risk.

The Speaker: Anyone else wishing to table a document or a return?

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of hon. Mr. Copping, Minister of Labour and Immigration, pursuant to the Government Organization Act, authorized radiation health administrative organization annual reports for the following: Alberta Association for Safety Partnerships, January 1 to December 31, 2018; Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors, July 1, 2018, to June 30, 2019; Alberta Dental Association and College, January 1 to December 31, 2018; Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, November 1, 2017, to October 31, 2018; College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta, January 1 to December 31, 2018; University of Calgary, April 1, 2018, to March 31, 2019; University of Alberta, April 1, 2018, to March 31, 2019.

On behalf of hon. Mr. Toews, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, responses to questions raised by Ms Phillips, hon. Member for Lethbridge-West; Ms Sweet, hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning; MLA Ceci, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo; and Mr. Dach, hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on October 31, 2019, Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance, 2019-20 main estimates debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. Now, I didn't receive a withdrawal from the hon. Member for Calgary-West, but perhaps that's what he's rising to do.

Mr. Ellis: Regarding the first point of order or the second point of order?

The Speaker: Whichever.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Ellis: Well, the first point of order, sir: I will be very brief because I've been communicating with my friend opposite here, and he's willing to withdraw and apologize in regard to the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Yes, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I believe that she had made a comment referring to an individual about being corrupt, and what she meant to say was that the government is being corrupt. For her misspeaking I do withdraw that comment.

The Speaker: Thank you. I consider it dealt with.

Mr. Ellis: The second one, Mr. Speaker, I believe that you efficiently dealt with, so I withdraw the second point of order during the exchange between the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and the government side. Thank you.

The Speaker: Teamwork has indeed made the dream work today. Are there any others?

Hon. members, we are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: I see the hon. Minister of Transportation has risen.

Mr. McIver: Focus, Mr. Speaker. Everybody has worked hard, and we made good progress this week, and in some parts of Alberta there is snow on the roads that'll make the trip home more dangerous than it ought to be. Based on the progress that we've made this week, I'd like to thank all members of the House for their participation in getting us to this point. At this point I would move the Assembly adjourn until Monday, December 2, at 1:30 p.m., and I wish all members from all sides of the House to get home safely and to return here safely at that time.

The Speaker: I second the comments made by the hon. Minister of Transportation with respect to travelling safely. Drive to arrive, and when in doubt, sleep it out. Please feel free to stay in the city here if you're driving into any dangerous conditions.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 2:51 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 1st Session (2019)

Activity to Thursday, November 28, 2019

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitzings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, December 2, 2019

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, children of all ages, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by the Brother Anthony choir. I would invite you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, this afternoon we have a number of guests joining us, a couple of school groups as well. From the constituency of Edmonton-South West, joining us from the School at the Legislature, welcome to St. John XXIII Catholic elementary.

Also in the galleries today are a group of dedicated public servants and employees of the Ministry of Infrastructure.

Actually, let's get those students to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

I'm also pleased to welcome our anthem singers this afternoon. With that stirring rendition you should be careful; you might get put on full-time. The Brother Anthony choir is a volunteer group, formed 23 years ago, from the Knights of Columbus Council 10014 in St. Albert. They lead the congregation monthly at Holy Family parish and provide holiday carolling at senior residences all around the region. Thank you so much for joining us today. You did a wonderful job.

Also visiting, guests of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford: please welcome 27 survivors of the '60s scoop. Thank you for joining us. Please rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

Visiting are guests of the Minister of Advanced Education. Welcome to the Medical Students' Association from the U of A and the University of Calgary.

Also in the galleries this afternoon are guests of the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. Welcome Nadine Cardon and Cathy Pearson.

Guests of the Member for Edmonton-McClung: please welcome members of Edmonton's Jewish community.

Also in the gallery today are a number of guests of the Member for Edmonton-City Centre, health care workers from a variety of organizations.

Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Protester Conduct outside UCP Convention

Mr. Schow: Mr. Speaker, this weekend Albertans saw first-hand what happens when irresponsible rhetoric and intentional distortion of facts from the opposition meets thuggish union activists. They attack people who disagree with them. Let's be clear. This isn't some hyperbolic hot take from folks on Twitter. This was real, it was targeted, and it was against a female journalist.

You see, Mr. Speaker, this weekend while nearly 1,700 UCP party members gathered to celebrate our historic win that sent our UCP government to Edmonton with a historic mandate with over a million votes, the NDP and their public union friends took to the streets with signs and uninspired chants, which is just fine. It's their democratic right to do that. But as the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and the NDP's acting leader marched outside, a man decided to attack a female reporter, bashing her with a sign. Now, there has been an effort to find this beta, this thug who hits women, but the union cronies who supported him refuse to identify this violent attacker.

It's shocking that the NDP have yet to condemn this attack on this female journalist, and the union leaders share that blame. What if it was someone from the Edmonton Journal or the Calgary Sun? Imagine the rightly justified outrage for such an attack on the free press. The silence from the opposition leaves Albertans to wonder. Why haven't the NDP disavowed this violence that occurred at an event some of their MLAs were a part of? It's not hard to say that violence has no place in our political discourse. Why is that so hard for them to say? Their lack of condemnation – it's just sad, Mr. Speaker.

A few short months ago Albertans fired the NDP for their complete and total failure. We know they're still mad at Albertans for firing them, but we surely can all come together and condemn violence. The fact that they have yet to condemn an act of violence against a female journalist is simply shameful.

Health Care Workforce

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I'll be putting forward a motion for emergency debate on this government's intention to terminate over 5,000 public front-line health care positions, including nurses, lab technologists, and many more. To explain why, I'd like to share some of what I've heard from these workers themselves in just the past two days.

From an RN:

I work in the busiest emergency department in western Canada, which is also one of two trauma centres in Edmonton. Today alone, I received 21 messages asking me to come in for overtime.

From a resident physician:

I am currently doing a rural rotation in Peace River Alberta – when I do overnight shifts in the [ER,] there are only 2 nurses . . . to assist with patients brought in from the periphery . . . If nursing jobs are cut province wide then rural hospitals who are most in need of extra nursing help will be impacted.

From another family physician:

[With] cutting nursing jobs, the UCP are also directly threatening not only primary care but also, I believe, medicare . . . I have no doubt [that they] will be effective in bringing forward a two-tiered system in our province.

I can't possibly work more hours or days without affecting my mental health, work-life balance, or patient care. I know many family physicians feel the same.

From another RN:

I work 12 hours, seven days a week, holidays, weekends, and nights. I work short-staffed. I work with sick babies, a very difficult and stressful job. Please invite the Premier to spend one 12-hour shift with a nurse before he decides to do anything with our wages.

From resident students I met with today and who sit here in this gallery, they told me that cuts to nurses and other allied professionals will only hamper the ability of rural physicians to provide effective patient care.

Mr. Speaker, this government needs to stop. It needs to back up. It needs to listen to the front-line workers, who provide the care that Albertans depend on, about the impacts that their reckless cuts to pay their $4.7 billion corporate giveaway to big corporations are going to have on patient care in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has the call.

Capitalism

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few short weeks ago the NDP joined an Extinction Rebellion protest outside of the Legislature. They stood alongside people shouting and screaming for the total shutdown of our economy. They lined up beside antipipeline, anti-oil, and anti-Alberta signs and nodded along as the crowd screamed that we must keep oil in the ground. The NDP then joined the virtue-signalling cheers as Greta Thunberg took the stage. Now, we know that Greta would fit right in with the anti-oil and gas rhetoric of the NDP and their Extinction Rebellion friends, but what we didn't know is that she would fit into the anticapitalist rhetoric of Alberta's left as well. The free-market system, that Extinction Rebellion, the NDP, and Ms Thunberg call colonial, racist, and patriarchal systems of oppression, is what built our modern world.

Alberta's indigenous communities are standing up for themselves, demanding to have their voices heard as they fight to lift their people from poverty to prosperity and build new opportunities for themselves. We are proud to help provide the support they need to tell their story to the eco colonialists who want to speak over the voices of our indigenous peoples.

In case the radical activists of the left have forgotten: global poverty is dropping and has been for decades. Why? Because of capitalism. Since the 1980s the expansion of free-market capitalism and free trade access across the world meant that two billion people who previously lived in extreme poverty no longer do so. Modern miracles are saving lives through the transformative innovation in health care. Why? Because of capitalism. Global hunger is declining, and new high-tech crops are being developed to combat hunger at its source. Why? Because of capitalism.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans know that the Leap Manifesto, Extinction Rebellion, leave it in the ground, antipipeline NDP and their friends have never supported the systems that built our modern world. But on this side of the House we are thankful for the prosperity, the progress, the modern miracles made possible through and because of innovation, ingenuity, and the creativity of capitalism.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Health Care Professionals

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend we learned of the 5,100 front-line health care workers, and counting, that this government is set to axe. Who are these folks? Well, we've all had personal experience with them, so I'll share some of mine.

They are the nurses and health care aides that came running when my friend who had just undergone cancer surgery pressed her call button 10 days ago at the Royal Alex. They are the people in medical device reprocessing who ensured that the scalpel and other medical tools used during that surgery were sterile and safe. They were the paramedics who picked my grandma literally up off the floor of her long-term care facility and safely assessed and transported her to the emergency department, where she later underwent emergency hip replacement surgery, following the traumatic fall that she had. They are the folks who worked in the kitchen of her long-term care facility, who cooked and modified the meals to ensure that she was nourished in her final years. They are the X-ray techs who diligently took X-rays of my broken wrist before and after surgery to ensure it was healing properly. They are the OTs and PTs who helped me regain strength and mobility while helping me learn to manage the pain. They are the allied health professionals who helped my mom fight cancer, like the social workers, psychologists, and radiation techs at the Cross Cancer Institute. They are the home-care teams, RNs, LPNs, HCAs who came to my parents' home to care for my dad and for us as we helped him die at home.

Let's be clear that the 5,100 positions don't count attacks on family physicians, these families' physicians who tell patients that their child has kidney disease or autism or mental illness. While we fight for these folks and work to do the right thing for families in this province, it's hard to stomach these cuts, Mr. Speaker, cuts that don't need to be like this, cuts that are precipitated by the $4.7 billion corporate giveaway to corporations. While this Premier, cabinet, and entire UCP caucus keep putting their friends and insiders first, giving away billions and asking ordinary families to pay the price for it, I don't want you to just think about the 5,100 people who received notice last week; I want you to also think about all the people they serve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Budget 2019 and Government Spending Reductions

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I was managing the Mustard Seed shelter, I was left with the daunting task of reducing our budget by 20 per cent. The downturn in the economy left us short, with 30 days to figure out how we could move forward with less. My team and I walked through our systems. We evaluated everything that we did. Our determination to not leave the people that we served out in the cold led us to what I would call transformational change. We refined our systems. We increased efficiencies. We got back to our core strategy of community mobilization, and we called on Calgarians to help.

Mr. Speaker, what happened next I would call nothing short of a miracle. Volunteers from the community took over our shelter floor. Many of our staff changed their focus from providing basic services to supporting those volunteers. Others were redirected towards advocacy, housing, aftercare. We saw hundreds of people moving out of our shelter. This was not an easy time, but we got through it, and it only helped us to become better at what we do.

Alberta is once again facing tough times, and like my team was asked back in 2008, we are asking government, school boards, municipalities, Albertans to help us get back on a path to balance with as little disruption to front-line services as possible. It will not be easy, but I know that with ingenuity and the passion of Albertans we can find those opportunities. If done right, we will revolutionize how we do government.

The good news is that despite all the fear rhetoric that we are hearing, we are not looking for deep, draconian cuts but looking for a mere 2.8 cents on the dollar. Cuts are never easy. Decisions around this budget were not made lightly, but I strongly believe that this exercise will also lead to increased government efficiency and the transformational change that will aid us in providing high-quality government services long into the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Election Commissioner

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, Friday certainly was a busy day for members of this Assembly and the government. While the UCP was gearing up for their AGM, members and the media were scrambling to keep up with the flurry of activities. It would have been easy for very important revelations to have been missed as health care and government workers learned about the devastating job losses on the way in this province. That revelation took place during the Legislative Offices meeting on Friday, during the much-anticipated presentation to the committee by the Chief Electoral Officer.

Just a week after the passing of Bill 22, that we were told would save taxpayer money and that terminated the Election Commissioner and rolled the responsibility for that office into the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, we, the members of the Assembly, the media, and the public learned what this would mean for democracy and the ongoing investigation of the Election Commissioner's office.

So what did we learn? We learned that, contrary to the government's assertion, this move would not save Albertans money. The Chief Electoral Officer confirmed that his budget for investigations was, in fact, $100,000 more and that that is without the salary of the Election Commissioner himself. Yes, you heard right. In comparing the budget that had been prepared by the Election Commissioner with the budget prepared by the Chief Electoral Officer, there's actually more money needed. We also learned that 76 complaints have not been investigated at all, complaints stemming from the spring 2019 election.

Mr. Speaker, this has given rise to a looming question for many Albertans. If the elimination of the Election Commissioner, Lorne Gibson, who has levied more than $200,000 in fines to people close to the Premier and his party, was not about saving money, what other possible rationale could there be? Sometimes you just have to call a spade a spade and ask yourself: what is the UCP hoping may be missed under the guise of cost savings? Our democratic institutions demand that we continue to dig until we find the answers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Northern Alberta Development Council

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Northern Alberta Development Council, known as NADC, was established in 1963. The NADC is a provincial government agency that investigates northern Alberta's social and economic development priorities, programs, and services to ensure supports meet the needs of northern residents. The council is tasked with producing quality regional development information, supporting education and skills enhancements, and building strategic partnerships. The NADC's vision is to create "a stronger Alberta through a stronger north."

In support of continued development of the north, the NADC has identified several priorities, including timely communication with government and northerners, the development of a skilled and educated local workforce, the continuation of a robust, diversified economy, and providing ongoing support for strong and vibrant northern communities. I am proud of my recent appointment as chair of the NADC and look forward to meeting with the council next week to get started in this new role.

Encompassing over 60 per cent of Alberta's total land mass, the NADC region accounts for approximately 9 per cent of Alberta's population and includes 18 municipal districts. The NADC is working hard on a number of initiatives that will bring economic prosperity and opportunities for communities across northern Alberta. Some recent initiatives of the NADC include research on broadband access in the north, particularly in rural and remote areas; geothermal energy development; and the potential for processing flax fibre. In addition, for over 40 years the NADC has offered bursary programs to help attract and retain skilled professionals in demand throughout the north. In 2018-19 the NADC distributed over $1.5 million in bursaries to recipients.

I am excited about the role that the NADC and the north can play in Alberta's economic recovery as we work hard to get Albertans back to work. This is another promise made, promise kept, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition has the call.

Nursing Workforce

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This UCP government ran on an explicit commitment to balance the budget "without cutting front-line services." It's right there on page 12 of their platform. Now we all know that that was intentionally designed to mislead Albertans. Alberta is going to lose more than a thousand RNs and LPNs in order to pay for this government's $4.7 billion corporate handout, and that's just the start. This Premier made a serious promise to Albertans in writing, and now he's breaking it. Why should Albertans ever – ever – trust a thing he says again?

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's ridiculous, and that's what you see from the Official Opposition and that hon. member in particular. That's the kind of leadership that you see, her party misleading Albertans, causing fear all across this province. It's absolutely ridiculous. What we want and I'm so proud to have is a Premier that is showing true leadership today in Toronto, who got a deal, unanimous consent of every province and territory, to fight against Bill C-69, the no more pipelines bill. When that hon. member was the Premier, it took her 200 days to even send an official down to Ottawa to defend our province.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are probably 30 or 40 nurses up there, and I can't believe how disrespectful that answer was to the question I just asked. Nurses are the very definition of front-line health care workers. When Albertans are sick or injured, they're the ones who are there to take care of them. In their letter, that was sent on Friday, in black and white AHS says, "We need to be more efficient and focused." To the Premier: what on earth does a health care system focus on if it's not the workers who are right at the patient's bedside? Why didn't he tell Albertans he was going to fire them by the thousands?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this government remains committed to defending front-line workers, to defending front-line services inside Alberta Health Services. What this NDP Official Opposition continues to do is fear and smear, misrepresent facts, mislead Albertans, and cause fear all across this province. That's not leadership. That's not leadership with that hon. member now, but she did not lead the way when she was the Premier of Alberta either. She's created the situation that we find ourselves in. This party, this Premier will lead the way. We'll keep our promises to Albertans, and we'll get this province back on track. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the stuff I am talking about is in black and white in letters from AHS. Even that House leader can't deny that. We warned that this government's $4.7 billion corporate handout would mean mass layoffs of critical front-line health care providers, and not surprisingly they said that it was fear and smear. Now we know what it actually was, the truth. Here's another warning: you can't dismiss thousands of health care workers without harming patient care and Albertans. Albertans did not vote for an attack on their health. Why won't this government reverse these dishonest and cruel cuts?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, as the Premier said Saturday, we respect our front-line health care workers. We want to work in partnership with them to get our province back on track. We will continue to call upon them as our partners to find ways to be able to help get our province back on track because that's true leadership from the Premier. Unlike that member when she was the Premier of Alberta, who took 200 days to even go to Ottawa to defend us on Bill C-69, you see true leadership now from the Premier in Toronto today, who has gotten a deal, unanimous consent of every leader of every province or territory inside this country, to defend our province. That's leadership.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition for her second set of questions.

Health Care Services

Ms Notley: Friday's letter from AHS, which is actually what we're talking about, also says that they're considering repurposing and relocation of services. The government likes to talk about its rural representation, so I sure hope rural members are listening to this, because Friday's letter means moving services out of rural hospitals into the cities. It means moving jobs out of rural communities. No surprise when this government takes its marching orders from a woman who closed 53 rural hospitals. Why is this government so quick to betray rural Alberta?

Mr. Jason Nixon: All rural MLAs on this side of the House will never be lectured by that member when it comes to defending rural Alberta. We have stood in this Chamber and defended our homes over and over from that member when she was Premier, who attacked our communities over and over. That's not leadership. We have a Premier and a party that are in charge now and that are focused on leading, getting our province back on track. The Premier showed it yet again in Toronto, a focus on leadership. They're focused on fear and smear, misleading Albertans, and causing fear all across the province. Mr. Speaker, through you, shame on them. [interjections]

The Speaker: If I could provide a bit of advice for the members of the opposition: if you're going to be heckling, it should probably be parliamentary.

The Leader of the Official Opposition has the call.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, AHS says that acute-care beds will close "as continuing care beds open" as well, so rural MLAs with a new continuing care facility in their riding should look forward to their hospitals being threatened with closure. Indeed, the House leader might remember that AHS tried to do this in Sundre, and the previous Minister of Health put a stop to it. So what will the House leader tell the people of Sundre when his government tries once again to close his hospital? And, please, can the member give me a heads-up when that press conference starts? I really want to be there for that one.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would like to come to Sundre or Rocky Mountain House or Rimbey, she can come any time. In fact, I tried to get her to do it several times when she was the Premier of Alberta, but she continued to ignore rural Alberta.

Here's what's happening. The opposition continues to mislead Albertans. That's what I tell the people of Sundre. It's disappointing to see their ridiculous behaviour. Shame on them. Mr. Speaker, through you to them, shame on them. I can assure Albertans that this government will keep its promises, will continue to defend front-line health care services, and will continue to lead the way, unlike what the NDP did, which was repeatedly sell out this province over and over and over.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I did was that I protected the Sundre hospital, and the member opposite is going to sit quiet while it's once again threatened.

Now, the AHS letter also specifically warns of "reducing or ceasing the provision of services." Now, this is just another in a long list of broken promises and misinformation provided by the UCP to Albertans during their campaign. Can the Premier please advise this House exactly which services will no longer be provided by this government, or, to put it plainly, which services will Albertans only access if they are super rich and have lots of cash in their pocket?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the people of Sundre know who will stand up for them. It's this side of the House and certainly not that hon. member, who went out of the way to make their lives so much worse when she was the Premier of Alberta.

Here are the facts. You see the way they approach this, which is to mislead Albertans, cause fear, cause smear, scare people by misleading them and misrepresenting facts. I can assure Albertans, through you, Mr. Speaker, that under the leadership of our Premier they will continue to see leadership, just like today in Ontario, where we will build bridges. They're going to destroy bridges. We will build bridges and defend this province each and every day.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition for her third set of questions.

Ms Notley: Actually, Mr. Speaker, it's reading letters in black and white from this government that causes fears for Albertans. On Friday, in doing that, they also learned that this government is considering a plan to close acute-care beds for every continuing care bed that is opened. The Health minister had previously said that this number is roughly 1,700. Now, many Albertans who should be in continuing care are currently in acute-care beds – we know that – and that's why we kept our election promise, something you guys should try sometime, and opened more than 2,000 new beds. However, we need acute-care beds to stay open in order to reduce surgical wait times. So has this Premier abandoned . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, that's all they can do. All they can do is misrepresent facts, fear and smear, make things up. It's so disappointing. I'm so glad that we have true leadership inside this province. Today the Premier also got a unanimous consent deal with all the Premiers, of every province and territory, when it comes to fighting for equalization rebates inside this province, bringing equalization back here to Alberta. That's leadership. That's leadership. We're proud of him for that. When you contrast that to this ridiculous behaviour, this fear and smear and making things up, I'm so grateful that we finally have real leadership in this province.

Ms Notley: So disrespectful.

You know, this government is also considering an American-style plan to privatize emergency medical services. Imagine an ambulance system that is designed to maximize shareholder value at the expense of Albertans' safety. Alberta's paramedics work incredibly hard, and they work through some of the most emotionally demanding circumstances. Why is this government punishing them and the people whose emergencies they respond to with threats to sell off the province's ambulance system?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, you can't believe anything that's coming from the opposition. They misrepresent facts. They cause fear. They make things up, the NDP, just like when they told the minister of culture that she had bought $35,000 worth of liquor. You can't believe them. That's not leadership. I'm proud that we have a government in charge right now that is willing to lead the way, that's going to keep its promises to Albertans and is going to get us back on track, all the while defending front-line public services, including health care, because that's important.

Ms Notley: This member is denying the black-and-white words and the letters that have been sent by this government to Albertans. I can't believe that he will not take responsibility for it, Mr. Speaker. It is so shameful.

Now, on Friday we learned that this government plans to fire more than 5,000 front-line health care workers, close health care facilities, close beds, and cease some services altogether. This is a complete abandonment of their promise to Albertans. Will they at the very least agree to an emergency debate so that Albertans can learn why this government decided to break so many promises to Albertans?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this government promised Albertans that they would defend front-line services, and we still continue to do that. We also promised Albertans that we would fix the fiscal mess that that one-term Premier created in this province. She failed this province. She created the worst fiscal situation in the history of this province. This side of the House promised that we would fix it while protecting front-line services. We will keep that promise to Albertans. That member should really stand in this House and apologize for what she did when she was Premier.

Election Commissioner

Ms Sweet: "It's going to save taxpayers' money": that was this Premier attempting to justify his government's corrupt Bill 22 just one week ago in this House. He hid in Texas while his government raced to fire the very man investigating his fraud-filled leadership campaign, but we learned Friday it will in fact spend $100,000 more to run the commissioner's office under Elections Alberta. To the Premier: will you admit this corrupt piece of legislation was never about saving taxpayers' money; it was only about saving yourself?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, yet another example of what I'm talking about. You can't trust the NDP. They mislead Albertans, and they make things up. The Chief Electoral Officer actually said that there would be a savings of approximately $390,000. Honestly, it's time for the Official Opposition to stop making things up . . .

Ms Notley: Why don't you stop lying?

Mr. Jason Nixon: . . . and start doing their job and representing Albertans. What they are doing is a complete disservice to this province.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, through you to them: shame on you; do your job.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order is noted at 2:03.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, the CEO of Elections Alberta actually said that he was asking $100,000 more than the Election Commissioner. The Premier deemed the Election Commissioner's office to be completely unnecessary and redundant, but it also surfaced during a Friday committee meeting that 76 investigations haven't been started. That's 76 cases where justice hasn't been served or maybe never will be served with this Premier calling the shots. To the Premier: will you admit that you want to slow down investigations into election fraud or cancel them altogether, and is it because you deceived Albertans in your bid to become a leader?

Mr. Hunter: Point of order.

The Speaker: I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning should be very, very cautious with the use of her words when she makes suggestions that an hon. member of the House would deceive.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, you can't even bother, in my opinion. I'm not even going to try to answer that question because they continue to make things up. As I said: the Chief Electoral Officer said that the costs will be reduced by $390,000. Yes, his overall budget is higher. Do you know why? Because of increased costs because of municipal elections, to be able to bring in and handle the regulations brought in by the former NDP government. That hon. member knows that but is continuing to create fear and smear across this province. It's all the NDP have. It's why Albertans fired them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to see that the House leader has finally admitted that it is higher.

We've kept our commitments to Albertans: that was this Premier once again attempting to downplay this government's corrupt Bill 22. It's not saving money. It's not cutting redundancies. In fact, Elections Alberta is going to rehire the commissioner's position, just likely not the guy that was investigating the Premier. It isn't certainly something this Premier ever mentioned on the campaign trail. To the Premier: if I'm wrong, tell me on which page your huge platform talks about firing the man investigating your fraudulent leadership?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, you see exactly why Albertans don't believe the NDP, and they shouldn't. That member yet again knows that the Chief Electoral Officer has said that there's a $390,000 saving from the redundancies of bringing the office together. Yes, there's an increase to be able to cover the costs associated with the municipal election changes, and that hon. members knows that. That's what you get from the NDP: misleading Albertans, fear and smear, going out of their way. That's why Albertans don't trust them, that's why they were fired in April, and that's why they're the only one-term government in the history of this province. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. We are a lively bunch today. [interjections] Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Holocaust Memorial on Legislature Grounds

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from members of the Jewish community about the current state of the Holocaust memorial here on the Legislature Grounds. When it comes to the Holocaust, we have a duty, a duty to remember. This memorial, erected by the Edmonton Jewish community in partnership with the government of Alberta, is part of the way we remember. It is part of the way we respect those who suffered and died in the Shoah. To the Minister of Infrastructure: are you aware of the concerns surrounding the memorial's state of disrepair, and will your department be taking action to resolve this issue?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the member for bringing this issue to the attention of the House. I have been made aware that the Jewish community has concerns about the state of the memorial, and I can tell the Assembly that I'm committed to working with the Edmonton Jewish community to ensure the condition of the memorial is restored. I know that all the members of this House agree with me that we have a duty of remembering, and learning the lessons of the Holocaust is an incredibly important one.

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is aware of the problem and committed to taking action to remedy it and given that, among other issues, it seems that discoloration of the memorial is a significant problem, can you expand on exactly what will be done to ensure that these problems are resolved?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I can report to the House that I have already met with the members of the Jewish community to discuss their concerns. One issue is the natural discoloration of the bronze material that the memorial is made of, and another issue, I'm told, is the natural settling and cracking of the concrete. I'll work with the Jewish community as per our 2003 agreement that is in place regarding the maintenance of the memorial.

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to hear the answers from the minister.

Given that this is an important matter to members of the Jewish community and the public at large, will the minister commit to keeping the Edmonton Jewish community updated and apprised of the restoration of the memorial going forward?

Mr. Panda: Of course, Mr. Speaker. As the member pointed out initially, this memorial was erected in a partnership between the government of Alberta and the Jewish community, and in that spirit of partnership we'll continue to work closely with the community and keep them fully apprised of the work that we'll be taking on in its restoration. We'll ensure that the memorial continues to stand as a symbol of memory and the commitment of our government and the people of Alberta to never forget the Holocaust and those who perished in that evil act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Energy Industry Layoffs

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we learned that Husky has cut its capital spending plan by $500 million over the next two years. This will cost further jobs, and it comes after Husky received a $233 million handout from this government. Husky already fired 370 Albertans. Albertans were promised jobs and investment. To the minister: will you admit that you have failed to do your job, or do you simply not care about hard-working Calgarians and Albertans?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that as a province Alberta has to be competitive with other jurisdictions. That was not the case over the last four years. That's why we have been relentless in bringing back jobs and bringing back investment. That's why we're creating the correct regulatory environment to attract investment. We're creating the right tax and fiscal environment. They failed over four years, and we're cleaning it up.

Mr. Sabir: Given that this government refused to honour oil-by-rail contracts that would have moved 120,000 barrels per day and given that ripping up oil-by-rail contracts has led to the extension of curtailment and given that the extension of curtailment has led to one of the worst drilling seasons on record and given that next year's drilling season is predicted to be just as bad, to the minister: you can only blame us for so long. Are you really trying to be the worst Finance, Energy minister that this province has ever seen?

Mrs. Savage: I won't take any lessons from them. Mr. Speaker, I sit in a caucus with members that I'm proud to sit in caucus with who work for the oil and gas industry, people like the Member for Calgary-North, the Infrastructure minister, the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, who literally worked building pipelines. While they were protesting pipelines, our members were building them. They failed, and we're cleaning it up. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sabir: I meant to say Energy but Finance, too.

Given that over 11,000 jobs have been lost in the natural resource sector since the government implemented its $4.7 billion handout and given that companies are choosing to invest in other jurisdictions instead of Alberta, to the entire government cabinet: how many more Albertans have to lose their jobs before you abandon your ridiculous and misguided $4.7 billion no-job corporate handout?

The Speaker: I'll provide a caution to the member on the use of preambles.

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, the NDP really do not get it. They fail to recognize that over the past four years, they in Alberta and their partner Justin Trudeau in Ottawa tortured the regulatory and the fiscal and the investment environments. Their members were signing the Leap Manifesto. [interjections] Justin Trudeau in Ottawa was talking about phasing out the oil sands. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. I've heard the question. I'll hear the answer.

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, they really do not get it. They failed for four years. We're cleaning up their mess. They didn't build pipelines. They didn't get a single additional barrel of oil to market.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Sixties Scoop Indigenous Society Funding

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 28, 2018, Rachel Notley apologized to the survivors of the '60s scoop. She said, "For the loss of families, of stability, of love, we are sorry." Unfortunately, while the UCP were present for these words, they do not appear to have any impact on this government. Eighteen months after hearing these words, members of the Sixties Scoop Indigenous Society have learned that their government funding has come to an end. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: when did you decide to abandon the '60s scoop survivors in favour of a $4.7 billion giveaway to your corporate friends?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to acknowledge all the members of the '60s scoop who are here with us today and thank you for bringing this important issue to the House. The '60s scoop, of course, had terrible lasting effects on generations of indigenous children here in Alberta, and I was honoured to attend the '60s scoop exhibit at the Royal Alberta Museum and in the Devon library this year to hear about their pain and suffering and to read about the loss of their culture, that deeply affected them. This government is committed to a path of reconciliation with indigenous people in Alberta, and the '60s scoop chapter must be a part of those efforts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You'll cry about it, but you won't give them any money.

Given that the apology went further, "For the loss of identity, of language and culture, we are sorry. For the loneliness, the anger, the confusion, and the frustration, we are sorry," and given that while the NDP government was truly committed to reconciliation and helped to establish the Sixties Scoop Indigenous Society, this government has decided to abandon those survivors just as they are building their new identities, to the minister: will you commit to returning the funding to SSISA for the next two years?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I just spent the last weekend with a good friend of mine who is a '60s scoop survivor, and we talked about this issue in depth. To the member I can say that this government will look at ongoing participation and support of the '60s scoop. However, we're still awaiting the final report from the society before we can move onto future programming initiatives. This government firmly believes that the '60s scoop survivors' stories and narratives must be heard and be a part of our reconciliation efforts moving forward.

Mr. Feehan: Minister, we're waiting for you to put your money where your mouth is for once.

Given that the '60s scoop . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, can we have another try here without a preamble?

Mr. Feehan: Given that the '60s scoop survivors have been travelling the province to teach both survivors and others about this devastating legacy and have now travelled here to the Legislature to condemn this antireconciliation, will the minister agree to meet with the survivors who are here in the gallery and myself immediately after question period?

The Speaker: Perfect.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate that question and the offer. The '60s scoop saw thousands of Alberta children losing touch with their families, communities, culture, and traditional language, and this caused lasting – lasting – negative issues with mental, spiritual, emotional, and physical health and well-being. Survivors and their families are still feeling the effects of the '60s scoop today, and Alberta will ensure that the telling of this dark period in our history will always be a part of our commitment to reconciliation. I'm always, of course, open to meeting with the people that are here. [interjections]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, order, because the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake has the call.

Drinking Water Quality in Indigenous Communities

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many indigenous communities across the province do not have access to clean drinking water. They are left with boil advisories and do not get the same luxuries and privileges that many of us in urban and rural communities do. Water safety is a serious issue and causes many serious health concerns. We see that many indigenous communities are left without clean drinking water and forced to face these serious health issues. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: how will this government get clean drinking water to the indigenous communities in Alberta that live without it today?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. Over the summer I did have the opportunity to travel to many parts of Alberta and meet with the First Nations and Métis communities. For example, right in my own area I met with the Ermineskin First Nation and the Samson First Nation on the Maskwacis waterline; as well, up in Frog Lake First Nation, on its proposed project. Our government will continue to work with First Nations across the province and ensure that they have access to safe and reliable drinking water. Of course, we'll be speaking with all of our partners to determine the future of this program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the federal government has failed indigenous communities in Alberta, leaving some without access to clean drinking water, and given that we live in a country with 20 per cent of the world's fresh water and given that we have the technological means to be able to get clean drinking water to these communities and given the importance to a community of a stable long-term source of fresh, clean water, to the same minister: when will these indigenous communities get access to clean drinking water?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We work closely, of course, with the Minister of Infrastructure, who has set aside money for these important projects. I'll be meeting very soon with our federal counterparts in the near future, and we'll be bringing up this important issue. Our government is committed to strengthening our relationship with the First Nations in Alberta. Of course, clean, safe water is a fundamental need in every community and should be there for them. We will continue to work with all of our government partners to improve access to water, and we work closely, of course, with our Minister of Transportation on these funding issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister.

Given that the main drinking water advisories are highly concentrated in indigenous communities and given that contaminants in drinking water such as E coli make those who drink it violently ill and given that the federal government's idea of a solution is to focus on changing long-term boil-water advisories to so-called short-term advisories that last for many years at a time, to the same minister: what is this government doing to solve the clean water issue that many indigenous communities continue to deal with?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, of course, for the question. Just this past weekend I met with several members of the Métis settlements, and we discussed these very important issues. The government believes in removing economic barriers to Alberta's indigenous communities and sharing prosperity. Again, we'll be speaking with all of our partners with respect to the future of these programs, including the federal government. Rest assured that safe water supply for Alberta's indigenous peoples is top of mind of this government.

2:20 Affordable Housing and Seniors' Programs

Ms Sigurdson: Along with firing thousands of public health care workers on Friday, this government also said that 2,500 government employees will be cut across multiple areas, including the Seniors and Housing ministry. This government has already ignored an affordable housing crisis in our province. They cut $44 million from rental assistance and another $17 million from housing management bodies. To the minister: are you going to cut even more from the housing budget?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question, Member. Affordable housing is quite critical for some Albertans, in particular those with low income and seniors on fixed income. Our government will ensure that more affordable housing is available for those who need it the most. We are committed to working closely with our private-sector partners to ensure that every dollar contributed by Alberta taxpayers to capital investment is fully leveraging.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that in a letter sent to AUPE on Friday, the government claims that it is embarking on a seniors' program review and is planning to cut housing programs and given that this minister has already told seniors to live within their means, even as she backs the Premier's $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout, to the minister: are you planning to hide from seniors and affordable housing providers for your entire term? Why won't you listen to seniors and Albertans involved in the affordable housing system?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Please stop misrepresenting my message. What I meant is that the seniors will teach of living beyond our means. It's not like the other party. They never, never understand that, and we are cleaning the mess right now.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that this government has already kicked 47,000 people off the seniors' drug plan and given that cutting thousands upon thousands of front-line public health care workers is going to lead to more suffering among seniors and given that plans to privatize ambulance services also leaves many seniors wondering if their 911 calls will be answered, to the minister. You haven't said one word to object to the gutting of health care by the Premier and the Health minister, and now you're plotting cuts of your own. When will you step up and serve vulnerable Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has risen.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think what we've heard today from the caucus opposite is a very artful construction of an alternate reality. We campaigned on maintaining or increasing health care spending, and that's exactly what we did. We are spending $200 million more on health care spending than that government ever did. The AHS disclosure – let's talk a little bit about the AHS disclosure, Mr. Speaker – to our unions was so that they can have the best information available to them so they can meet with us and then they can negotiate in good faith.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Family Medicine

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Minister of Health is here clean-shaven today, but he is not coming clean to Albertans. In order to pay for its $4.7 billion corporate handout, we just found out this past Friday that this government is planning deep cuts to family medicine. Family doctors keep Albertans healthy. They are the front line in care. They help detect problems early and keep people out of the emergency room, the most expensive place for them to be. Now this minister wants to limit the number of patients a doctor can see in a day and make each of those visits shorter. Why is the minister taking such a totally wrong-headed approach, putting patient care at risk?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, none of that is true. Look, we are in the middle of negotiations with the AMA. We have tabled a proposal with the AMA. We're happy to continue to have conversations with the AMA, the Alberta Medical Association. This is the organization that represents our physicians throughout the province and their compensation. We're happy to continue to be able to meet with the members and the negotiating team from the Alberta Medical Association so that we can come to a resolution in the best interest of patients as well as their members.

Mr. Shepherd: Given that Dr. Christine Molnar of the Alberta Medical Association wrote to her members that this minister's plans will have "a negative impact on care for thousands of patients" and given that she goes on to say, "The proposals would be devastating to rural family practice... a group that government in other venues purports to support," will this minister listen to the warning from Dr. Molnar and abandon this dangerous attack on family medicine?

Mr. Shandro: Once again, Mr. Speaker, this is a process; it's a negotiating process. There are ups, and there are downs. I look forward to the AMA, the Alberta Medical Association, continuing to meet with us in good faith, to have these conversations, to represent the concerns of their members so that at the end of the process we can have an agreement with the AMA that's in the best interests of their members and patients in Alberta.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that this government's dictatorial and condescending approach shows that they have no interest in collaboration and given that Dr. Kathryn Andrusky, president of the AMA section of family medicine, told her members:

The devastation these unilateral... impositions will wreak cannot be overstated. There is a significant danger that family doctors will become completely disengaged from the health system as a whole, team members will need to be laid off and some family [physicians]... will simply have to close their doors.

Given that this is an extraordinary warning from Alberta's family doctors, why will this minister not listen?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, we are listening. We're in the middle of negotiations with the Alberta Medical Association. We're listening to them. We're meeting with them. We started meeting with them on November 13. On November 14 we provided our proposal to them. We're looking forward to continuing to meet with them, continuing to get their counterproposal to us so that at the end of it we can have an agreement with the Alberta Medical Association that's in the best interests of patients in Alberta and their members.

Property Crime Prevention

Mr. Loewen: Constituents in my riding are concerned about crime in our smaller communities. In particular, I receive a great deal of correspondence about property crime: trespassing, breaking and entering, theft, and destruction of property. It is not uncommon for criminals to target tools and vehicles, the very things that people need to go to work and support their families. People deserve to feel safe in their own homes and not stressed about the security of their hard-earned property. Could the Minister of Justice let rural Albertans know what the government is currently doing to protect the rights of lawful Albertans and stop criminals in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to that member for the question. This party has brought forward Bill 27, which will create the strongest property rights possible, the strongest property rights in the entire country, to make sure that law-abiding Albertans know that we stand with them. We're going to make sure that the signal to criminals is that farmers are no longer to be targets on the property of Alberta. The strongest property rights possible: that's what this party believes in; that's what we've delivered for Albertans. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Minister.

Given that rural communities and families living in more remote places endure longer response times for police services as a result of larger areas to cover and greater distances and given that these communities are facing added pressures dealing with crime, oftentimes committed by those from outside the community looking to sell stolen goods elsewhere, is the Minister of Justice considering ways to increase the resources dedicated to enforcement and policing in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's why we announced the RAPID force, to enhance the authorities of 400 peace officers, sheriffs in the province of Alberta, to make sure that they're there to help respond to 911 emergencies, to help make sure that we can reduce the response times for Albertans in need, to make sure that they can feel safe. As well, we brought in the scrap dealer measure to make sure we go after all of the theft that's happening across rural Alberta, the copper wire theft, to make sure that we can hold scrap-metal dealers accountable, to make sure we don't have stolen property being sold through scrap-metal dealers. That's important.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. Given the great concern in my riding about substance abuse and the prevalence of illegal drugs in our communities and given the way that trafficking and the use of these illegal drugs bring with them other criminal behaviour, including property crime and theft, and given that illegal drug use can be so destructive to families and communities, what steps is this government taking not to just keep these harmful drugs out of our province but to help treat addictions and end these patterns of drug abuse and criminal activity?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so proud of this team. We've dedicated $50 million over four years for the Alberta law enforcement response teams. They're doing amazing work tackling organized crime, getting the drugs off the street, getting illegal guns off the street. They're doing amazing work. We also have to make sure our prosecution ranks have the proper complement to make sure that we can prosecute the cases of Albertans, to make sure we hold these criminals accountable. That's a promise made, promise kept by this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

2:30 Biologic and Biosimilar Drug Coverage

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I stood and spoke with 100 Albertans on these steps about how this government is forcing them to switch from their life-saving medications that keep them in remission from critical diseases like Crohn's and colitis. They want them to use cheaper, less well tested alternatives so that the province can save a few pennies, and this government has used NDAs to shut out medical experts from that decision, experts who have told this minister that drug companies have lowered the cost of their drugs to match the price of alternatives. To the minister: why is your government so determined to tell Albertans what level of care they should be happy with and what treatment they should be receiving?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, as Budget 2019 said, we are looking at ways to expand the biosimilars initiative in this province. As the hon. member knows, though, those decisions have not been made. I've said that before in this House and outside of this House. I hope those decisions are made by the end of the year. We will have an announcement by the end of the year. Before we do that, we're going to continue to speak to other provinces. On Friday I was happy to be able to speak to Minister Christine Elliott from Ontario, to speak a little bit about what they're doing, meeting with patient groups like the Arthritis Consumer Experts and, as well, physicians and pharmacists.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government's dictatorial and condescending approach gives patients no reason that they should trust this government and given that I've gotten numerous e-mails from Albertans who are worried about how this change would drastically impact their lives, like the 24-year-old oil and gas worker who told me, "My environment is working against me, my own body works against me. And now [my] government is working against me," to the minister: did you consult any actual IBD patients before you inserted yourself between them and their physicians to decide what medical treatment they should receive?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is using the past tense. I'm going to say it again for him: we're in the middle of consulting with patients. Have I met with any IBD patients? Yes, I have. I've had them in my office. I've met with them.

Ms Phillips: How many lobbyists?

Mr. Shandro: None.

Mr. Speaker, we continue to meet with these patient groups, we continue to be able to speak with physicians, we continue to meet with pharmacists, and we're going to continue to do that before we make our decisions by the end of the year so that it's going to be in the best interests of patients.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that I've also heard from a mother who's had three bowel resections due to Crohn's and a 17-year-old who had her colon removed due to colitis and given that she said that this switch would not only force her to change medications but will take her away from the treatment practitioners she's been with for 11 years and given that she wonders why this government has broken their promise of transparency and maintaining the province's quality of health care, to this minister: please assure us that you will not put the well-being of these chronically ill Albertans at risk as one of the corners you're willing to cut to pay for your government's $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate giveaway.

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, as we look at the expansion of the biosimilars initiative and what we're going to be doing as a province, my commitment to all Albertans is that whatever medication people use, if they're on a biologic or a biosimilar, whatever they get is going to be safe and appropriate. That's my commitment to Albertans. Thank you to the hon. member for his questions.

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, given that the Holocaust monument has provided a solemn place for Albertans to gather every May since 2003 to celebrate Yom ha-Shoah, or Holocaust Memorial Day, to honour victims of the Holocaust, six million of whom were Jewish, and given that it's been almost 20 years since the memorial sculpture was unveiled on the site just north of the Terrace Building on the Legislature Grounds and that no major maintenance or repairs have ever been done, will the Infrastructure minister commit today to maintaining an open dialogue with members of the Jewish community and myself to plan how to get the necessary repairs done before May 2020, this coming spring?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, as you'll remember, just a few minutes ago I answered the question from the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. I'll repeat that. Yes, I met with the Jewish community of Edmonton, and I assured them that I'll work with them as per the agreement we made in 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the initial project and contract work was approved by Alberta Infrastructure in 2003 and that estimates for the current required granite repairs, cleaning, and coating of the monument itself and site maintenance are estimated to be under $20,000 and given that this expenditure would mean a great deal to the Jewish community, to have the Holocaust monument, a provincial monument to Holocaust victims, respectfully maintained, and given that it took the advocacy of an opposition MLA to light a fire under this minister, will the minister commit today to funding the refurbishment of this meaningful provincial memorial so work can be completed before next May?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, Infrastructure has guidelines regarding construction and placement of monuments. When specific requests are received, maintenance requirements are specified. Usually the sculpture costs over $128,000 to erect. In 2003 that's what was spent on that monument. We are aware of the concerns, and we are looking into that.

Mr. Dach: Given that this government apparently prides itself on reducing red tape, I challenge the Infrastructure minister to use this project to demonstrate how fast a government apparently free of red tape can move when they put their mind to it and when an NDP opposition MLA advocates on behalf of his constituents. Will the minister commit today to the House and to the many members of the Jewish community who have joined us in the gallery as my guests today that he will do everything in his power to have the refurbishment of the Holocaust monument completed before we gather to celebrate Yom ha-Shoah once again in May 2020?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, as I assured the Jewish community of Edmonton, I will continue to work with them and look into the matter. Conservative parties around the world, including Narendra Modi of BJP in India, support the state of Israel and Jewish people and grieve the events of the Holocaust. I will meet with the member opposite and address these concerns as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Recycling Regulations

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Waste management is a real concern to Albertans and municipalities. RMA and AUMA have both asked for an extended producer responsibility regulation in Alberta. The Recycling Council of Alberta has been proposing a made-in-Alberta EPR program for paper and packaging for years. EPR is self-funding, costs government nothing, yet Alberta is the only province in Canada not to use it. To the minister of environment: will this government establish EPR in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the important question. He is correct. Both RMA and AUMA have asked us to look at EPR. We continue to consult with RMA, AUMA, and other stakeholders as well as taking time to look at other jurisdictions across this country and the world, to look at other ways that we can manage waste and recycling inside our province. We've heard the concerns from Albertans across the province. We'll continue to work to balance recycling with economic needs in the province going forward, and we'll find a solution that works for Alberta.

Mr. Orr: Thank you for that answer.

Mr. Speaker, given that agricultural plastics are a growing concern – a 2012 report found that 50 per cent of farmers either burn the plastic, creating pollution, or send it to landfills – and given that there have been multiple studies and pilot programs on how to better handle this growing challenge, including another three-year pilot currently running, and given that Saskatchewan currently has an agricultural plastics EPR regulation, to the minister: are you considering an agricultural plastic recycling regulation?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you again to the hon. member for an excellent question. Yes, we are looking at ag plastics. I've heard from my constituents loud and clear that that's something they want us to look at and that the agriculture industry has asked for for a long time. The minister of agriculture's department and my department are working together on a pilot project which goes till 2022. We're evaluating that in real time. As that progresses, we'll be looking at what has worked and what has not worked, ultimately, though, towards an agriculture plastic solution in this province because that's the direction that we promised Albertans that we would go.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, given that the Alberta Recycling Management Authority supervises the recycling of paint, tires, electronics, and oil and given that the Alberta Recycling Management Authority operates under provincial regulation and is funded by the fees that are charged on the sale of these products and given that the current regulation is outdated – some new electronics are not included; fees have not kept up with costs; some tires are not being collected in a timely manner – will the minister commit to a review of the Alberta Recycling Management Authority regulation?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, yes.

2:40 Investment in Alberta and Fiscal Policies

Mr. Singh: Last session we passed 13 bills which were designed to fulfill our platform commitment of getting Albertans back to work. Already we are seeing investor confidence up and small-business owners feeling relieved, although it takes time, as any good economist will tell you, for government economic policies to be felt, and there is still much work to be done to reverse the damage the NDP did. Can the Minister of Finance please update the House on our government's next steps to get our economy and our finances back on track?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. In recent years Alberta has faced some of its most challenging economic times since the global financial crisis, and in response to this challenge the previous government did the unthinkable. They imposed a carbon tax, they hiked taxes on businesses, and they borrowed unsustainably to fund government. Our approach is fundamentally different. By reducing business taxes, by repealing the carbon tax, by implementing the accelerated capital cost allowance provisions, we are attracting investment and opportunity for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister.

Given that under the previous government we saw investment decrease in almost every industry – a 61.3 per cent decrease in the mining, coring, oil and gas extraction sector; a 27 per cent decrease in the finance, insurance, and real estate sector; and a 21 per cent decrease in the construction sector – can the minister update us on the government's plan to bring investment back to Alberta?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, when the previous government hiked corporate taxes by 20 per cent, investment left the province by the billions and, with it, jobs and opportunities. Moreover, they collected $5.8 billion less in corporate revenue over the next three years. It was a failed experiment. Our government is taking a different direction. We are making the most competitive business environment possible to ensure that we attract investment, create jobs, opportunities, which will lead to increased government revenue in the long term.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister.

Given that over the past four years everyday Albertans were tightening their belts and paying more for the cost of living and given that the NDP's out-of-control spending put Alberta on the path to being $100 billion in debt by 2023-2024 and given that our government was elected to clean up this fiscal mismanagement, can the minister please update this House on the status of the government's effort to balance the budget?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, our province has had a long-time spending problem, and this fact was made abundantly clear by the MacKinnon panel. In Budget 2019 we laid out a credible plan to get Alberta back to balance. We're committed to finding efficiencies, reducing redundancies, and reducing operating expenditures by 2.8 per cent, which will lead this government and this province back to balance. We will deliver responsible financial management to the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will proceed to Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

Health Care System Layoffs

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, as we approach the end of the year, the bad news for Albertans just keeps coming from this UCP government. Albertans have had to watch levels of corruption and betrayal usually only seen on Game of Thrones, and while this government enjoys taxpayer-funded pancake parties and lavish trips to five-star London hotels with historic champagne bars, Albertans have to pay the price for their $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout.

On Friday Albertans learned more about how they will pay the price for this government's failed policies as the UCP cut over 5,100 public health care jobs in a single day. These cuts will have devastating impacts on Albertans, our health care system, and the families of health care workers. These losses will be felt everywhere in Alberta, not just this year but for years to come. The health care workers that the government fired put everything into taking care of our families. Over the last few days I have seen many touching stories of health care workers going above and beyond while having their good name smeared by this government. Just this spring the UCP told Albertans that they would never cut public health care, but now we see that it was just another fake promise told to Albertans to get elected and return to their Tory land gravy train.

Now that this UCP government shredded the last copy of its public health care guarantee, they are taking steps to implement their vision of American-style health care. Albertans do not want these changes, Mr. Speaker. American-style health care makes access much more difficult and expensive. It will lower the quality of care for Albertans and cause longer wait times. Albertans were never told that they would have to pay for this government's $4.7 billion corporate handout in health care. In fact, they were told it would have no impact on them at all, but on Friday we could see that this promise wasn't worth the paper it was written on.

This UCP government needs to stop attacking Albertans to pay for their failed policies. Albertans deserve much better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I also understand birthday wishes might be in order for the hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Small Business and the Christmas Season

Mrs. Pitt: People in Alberta are struggling, and for my constituents in Airdrie-East there is no exception. Airdrie is home to many small businesses, and it is no secret that under the leadership of the past government, they suffered immensely. Before our government, people were frustrated by having to navigate needless government red tape and pay additional taxes. Alberta's economy was in shambles.

Finally, we are starting to see a light at the end of that tunnel. I've heard from my constituents that they are relieved by our efforts to reduce red tape, increase investor confidence, and get our economy back on track. It will take time. Some are starting to get back to work and keep their businesses afloat. However, so many of them are not so lucky. They are still looking for work, and their businesses are at risk of going under.

Just a couple of weeks ago I attended an event that hosted workshops to help local entrepreneurs grow their businesses with social media. The room was filled with eager Albertans ready to learn how to reach new clients and promote their business. Albertans are hard working, innovative, and adaptive. They are ready to move forward, and so are we.

As many of you are aware, Christmas is just around the corner. All of us here will go home to our families, and when the celebrations are over, we will come back here to quite possibly one of the best jobs in the whole world. We as MLAs are privileged to be able to come to this Legislature, represent our constituents, and get this province back on track. Especially during Christmas, I will remember that there are Albertans that are struggling, from small-business owners to people in the trades. There are children who won't see any presents under the tree, and there are parents wondering how they will put food on the table and keep the lights on.

Let's remember them and support local organizations like the food bank, the Lioness Club, and the Mustard Seed, who will make Christmas a little more hopeful. Christmastime is the best time of year to practise what we read in 1 Peter 4:10, that says, "Each of you should use whatever gift you have received to serve others, as faithful stewards of God's grace in its various forms."

The Speaker: Hon. members, at some risk of being accused of being partisan, I understand that the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika is also due a birthday wish or two.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice of a motion under Standing Order 42 at the appropriate time.

The Speaker: If you can read us your motion, that would be appreciated. Maybe if the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre could pass it to the Member for Edmonton-Manning, then she could read it into the record.

Ms Sweet: On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-City Centre:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take immediate steps to protect the public health care system in Alberta by working with Alberta Health Services to cancel the recently announced layoffs of health care workers, including nurses, and any plans for the privatization of health care services which are contrary to the publicly stated goals of the government.

Speaker's Ruling Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Hon. members, at the appropriate time the hon. member will be able to move the motion under Standing Order 42. Just by way of procedure, it would be possible for the Member for Edmonton-Manning to move it on behalf of the member if he was perhaps at a meeting or some other function. I would hate to refer to the presence or the absence of a member, but in the future that would be the appropriate path forward. Having said that, we are able to proceed.

My apologies to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud if I missed you at Presenting Petitions. It will need to be done either when tabling reports or tomorrow.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: We have a number of them. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, followed by St. Albert, please.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did want to table this petition today as I do have a guest from my constituency in the gallery to hear about it. On behalf of my constituent from Edmonton-Whitemud I would like to table a copy of a petition signed by 232 Albertans which is urging the government to introduce legislation that a pet store operator and any vendor at a reptile, bird, and/or mammal exhibition shall not sell any live mammal, bird, reptile, or amphibian unless the mammal, bird, reptile, or amphibian was obtained from a public animal control agency or shelter, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, a Humane Society shelter, or rescue group that is in a co-operative agreement with at least one private or public shelter.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. As a way of formalizing that procedure – you're certainly welcome to table that document now. Apologies to your constituent. But if you will do me a favour, as petitions are managed slightly differently by the library, and also table it again tomorrow during Presenting Petitions, that will make sure that it's also dealt with appropriately.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table a number of documents. I have another 17 letters about class size, and I have a number of e-mails just to St. Albert from concerned constituents about their pensions.

I also have some e-mails directed to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Community and Social Services. They've not heard back, so they're sending them to me to table them.

Last but not least, I have five copies of an article. I believe that this was in Nature magazine. It's entitled Climate Tipping Points – Too Risky to Bet Against.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, and then we'll take you as you come.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a few letters here to table today. I'll just take a moment to highlight a couple of pieces on them as they were sent to government representatives, and the members wanted to ensure that they were on the record and that they got an adequate response. They feel that that hasn't been the case at this point. To the MLA for Calgary-Varsity a letter about the proposed voucher system, degradation of public education, and severe concerns about the direction of this government.

As well, another one . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're not going to be reading any of the letters.

Ms Hoffman: I'm not.

The Speaker: Okay. Let's make sure that that's the case.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The second one is around vouchers, budget cuts, and public education. Again, deep concerns to the local MLA, the MLA for Calgary-Varsity.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of several dozen letters sent to my constituency office from teachers that were concerned that this government has taken their pension without their permission.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. My first is a letter from constituent Cassandra Hodgetts. She's a 24-year-old RN who's worried about her future and has great concerns about cuts to our health care system.

The second is a letter from a constituent, Breanne Nicholson, who works as an occupational therapist and is also concerned about cuts to our health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Edmonton-Manning.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of an e-mail from a constituent, Sherry Langland, who is writing concerning the government's proposal to take control of the assets of the Alberta teachers' retirement fund.

I also have a number of e-mails from constituents regarding cuts to education as well as the voucher system, and I table them here for us today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview the requisite copies of a pension e-mail received by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview; also the requisite copies of e-mails that I have received as the Member for Edmonton-Manning; and the requisite copies of an article speaking to the firing of the Election Commissioner not being a cost saver.

The Speaker: Are there others? The Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today: two angry constituents, one talking about how the government has crossed the line by not consulting with teachers about their pension and another from a very angry teacher. They basically say that MLAs need to take their hands off their pensions.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My office continues to receive correspondence from teachers concerned about this government's move with pensions. I'm tabling the requisite copies of a number of those letters.

Mrs. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of the Northern Alberta Development Council 2018-19 annual report.

The Speaker: Are there others? The Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like my colleagues, I'd like to table five copies of e-mails from constituents outlining their concerns about this government's insistence on seizing control of the Alberta teachers' retirement fund.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Dreeshen, Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, pursuant to the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council annual report 2018-19.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. At 2:03 the first point of order was raised. I see the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: I don't have a point of order, but on procedure I'd like to notify the House that the Routine will go past 3 o'clock today. We have three minutes left.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika on the point of order.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to quickly set the stage here. The time was 2:03. The speaker was the hon. Government House Leader. While he was speaking, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, while looking at him, clearly said: stop lying. Now, we all know in this Chamber that to accuse someone of lying would be unparliamentary. I would ask that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona apologize, retract her remarks, and, of course, raise the bar.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West has risen.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, at 2:03 or 2:04 I think the leader did say that that's a lie in response to the Government House Leader's comments, and she would like to withdraw that comment. She meant to say that the government was misleading Albertans.

The Speaker: I consider the matter concluded and dealt with.

Hon. members, not that long after that there was an additional point of order that was raised at the time by the associate minister of red tape. I see the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika rising on the point.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If we flash forward just a few minutes to the time of 2:05, while the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning was speaking, she said clearly in her remarks: you're "corrupt." Now, I would like to ask that she apologize and retract that comment. That would be breaking Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), which is the reason why I'm rising on behalf of the hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction. Again, I ask that the member retract that comment and refrain from using that kind of language moving forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I indeed did hear what transpired. I don't believe that "corrupt" is a word that is unparliamentary. Indeed, I think it describes many of the actions of this government very appropriately, so I don't withdraw the comment at all.

3:00

The Speaker: Well, this is very interesting because it certainly wasn't anything close to what was said. I would agree, though, that if she had made a statement that said, "You are corrupt," that would be unparliamentary. If she made a statement like, "The government is corrupt," as much as I am concerned at the direction of decorum with language like this, I think that in the past I have said that that isn't a point of order. However, I have the benefit of the Blues, and the hon. member did say: "To the Premier: will you admit that you want to slow down investigations into election fraud or cancel them altogether, and is it because you deceived Albertans in your bid to become a leader?"

Now, at that point in time the hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction did raise a point of order. However, I did provide caution to the member and said that she needed to be very, very cautious with the use of her words when making a suggestion that an hon. member would deceive the House or deceive Albertans. In her subsequent question she did just that, chose much better words.

As such, I won't ask for an apology today but provide all members a cautionary note that each and every one of us has a responsibility to each other and to Albertans to raise the level of decorum. I have heard on many occasions today accusations, from both sides of the House, of the opposition misleading, the government misleading. While this certainly is within the rules, I would suggest that it is not adding to debate and adding to the decorum, so I encourage everyone to govern themselves accordingly.

As such, I consider these matters dealt with and concluded.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Health Care Services

Mr. Shepherd:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take immediate steps to protect the public health care system in Alberta by working with Alberta Health Services to cancel the recently announced layoffs of health care workers, including nurses, and any plans for the privatization of health care services which are contrary to the publicly stated goals of the government.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to ask for unanimous consent to move this motion because, like many Albertans this past Friday, a dark day for health care workers in the province of Alberta, I was devastated to see the numbers ticking upward indicating the impacts on health care as a result of the decisions of this government. As estimates currently stand, over 5,000 health care jobs, front-line public health care jobs, are being placed in jeopardy as a result of the choices being made by this government. That number is honestly expected to rise. That's over 5,000 individuals who will no longer be caring for our loved ones.

Mr. Speaker, the response from Albertans, to say the least, has been overwhelming. My office has received a number of phone calls, e-mails, Facebook messages, including from many individuals in the constituencies of government members. Just this past weekend over 1,000 people in Calgary protested outside the UCP AGM. I should mention that in our term not once did anyone protest one of our AGMs, but I digress.

At that meeting members of this government caucus debated and passed policy resolutions that will continue to have a negative impact on all Albertans, and indeed they voted against upholding the principles of the Canada Health Act, which flies in the face of the guarantee made by the now Premier of this province less than a year ago. What was that guarantee? It was to maintain or increase health spending and maintain a universally accessible publicly funded system. His members apparently didn't get the message.

They also said that they'd be working with front-line employees of AHS. Well, I for one would like to see some proof that in working with these front-line employees – how many of them said that their day-to-day life would be better if there would be fewer of them? I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in my travels across this province speaking with front-line health care workers, I have not once had any tell me: there are far too many nurses here.

That's why this is urgent. These decisions are about job losses and privatization of the health care system, and they're coming fast and furious. Every day that these decisions go unanswered, it puts more hard-working health care workers at risk. It is this government, Mr. Speaker, that is creating fear. At risk of losing their jobs, they are putting people at risk of degrading care levels for all Albertans. It also puts health care accessibility for all Albertans at risk. Privatization is not the answer. It is fundamentally contrary to a universally accessible system. Universally accessible means that no matter who you are, how much money you have, who you know, you will have access to the quality care that you need when you need it.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore ask that this House grant unanimous consent to debate this motion and ask the members opposite to stand up for the people of this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 42(1) “a motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 39.”

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Now we are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Motions for Concurrence in Committee Reports on Public Bills Other than Government Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to my hon. colleagues. I rise today to oppose the position of the report coming back on Bill 207. I put forward Bill 207 in order to protect, to elevate to law the standards of practice that we have in Alberta protecting conscience rights for medical professionals. It is deserved that it be in law as protection as those Albertans, like the rest of us, should know that they will not enter their workplace and be forced to act against their conscience on deeply held matters of conviction and morality.

I have that benefit here, as do my colleagues on both sides of the aisle. We are dealing with the important issues of government; these individuals are dealing with the important issues of life and death. Protecting conscience for these individuals is paramount not just for us, not just for the minority group that needs the protection, but for our society as a whole. That is why I am standing here today in defence.

If we look at a quote from Member of Parliament Garnett Genuis, she recently wrote:

Diversity isn't just about the colour of your skin or the symbols you wear. Respecting diversity means allowing people with substantively different views of life to express their opinions and to access professions. A society that does not understand this is not a free society. It is, therefore, vitally important to ensure that Charter protections for freedom of conscience are taken seriously.

There are a number of Albertans that have written to me, and I know that many members have received much correspondence on this issue. It affects individuals in a very deep and meaningful way, whether or not they know they have the protection of rule of law when they enter their place of work, where they're not being forced to choose between the most deeply held convictions on one hand and their job on the other.

A former ambassador of religious freedoms, Andrew Bennett, also wrote recently: “Doctors and other health care professionals cannot be uncritically bureaucratic in their work. They encounter a host of moral and ethical considerations daily, making moral judgements more often than most other professions.” I heard this time and time again, not from the majority of Albertans but from those select few that are in these professions, from those select few that do not have the same moral views as the wider society.

One palliative care nurse in Calgary wrote:

It is a real concern of mine that I would one day have to give up my calling [as a palliative care nurse] and so I feel strongly the need for the Conscience Rights Protection Act; so that my ability to nurse for those suffering and dying may not be jeopardized. That I may not have to tip-toe facility to facility in search of a job that would be “safe” for me to work.

These are real concerns for everyday Albertans. My goal is only to protect them in moving forward, because a society that protects conscience is a society that truly accepts plurality and diversity in Alberta.

One other letter I received was from a young girl who recently graduated high school and is in her first year of university. She was a Syrian refugee. She came to Canada just over three years ago. This was the same time that MAID became legal after the Carter decision. She wrote a long letter, and in that letter she mentioned a few things that I want to highlight to the Assembly today.

I never want to be told or forced to advise someone to [pursue] Euthanasia . . .

She's writing because, like many young Albertans, she wants to work in health care. She has plans to become a doctor. She wants to go to Oxford and serve.

3:10

I'll continue the quote.

In that case, the system would not be granting me freedom of conscience and belief. The system would be forcing me to do something I do not believe in and that is contradicting to what the Charter of Rights and Freedoms states. I was hungry to have the right of freedom and conscience rights and the idea of not having it is deeply [troubling to me].

She goes on to write that the happiest moment in her life was when she landed in this country, and she continues to say:

I fear that I might give up my future career and aspirations if I would be acting against my will and my conscience . . . I do not want to ever choose between my career and my moral convictions and neither do you.

I think that is particularly pointed, that she cares as much for your conscience rights, your freedoms that you have in this House and as a Canadian, as we should care for hers. She's not a doctor yet. She aspires to be one. That's why this sort of protection is so important.

I hear over and over again, not from the majority of physicians and surgeons, not from the majority of nurses – many or most of those have no problem with any of these procedures that are of deep social concern for the minority. But I ask ourselves: in a society where we know these procedures will continue on, in a society where we're committed to pluralism, to diversity – and that diversity, as Member of Parliament Genuis says, is not just a flaccid diversity, not just a diversity for show but a diversity of beliefs as well. My question to this Assembly is: how do we reconcile these? How do we reconcile these deeply held moral convictions with the fact that we will have a diverse society where there is a moral majority with a set of views, that they think services should be accessed?

I suggest that the solution is not being a bull in a china shop and running roughshod over the rights and freedoms of those individuals. I suggest the path forward, instead of turning doctors, physicians, and nurses into a question . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt; however, there is an issue that is important to the Assembly, and I'd just like to take a five-minute recess. If we can do that and if members of the Assembly want to pop into their respective lounges, I'll be happy to provide an update in moments.

[The Assembly adjourned from 3:13 p.m. to 3:22 p.m.]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the safety and the security of all members of the Legislature and staff I move that we adjourn until 7:30 tonight.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:22 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, December 2, 2019

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 20 Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered at this time? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has risen.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I want to begin by acknowledging the trauma that happened here today and recognizing all the people who've been impacted by it, including people in this building, the staff who responded, and the people at home. I know many are feeling triggered today by such a public and tragic loss of life. People who die of suicide don't chose to die; it's something that happens. I grieve for the person who died today.

Tonight we're considering the Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019, a bill brought forward by the Finance minister, a bill that is one of two significant omnibus bills that have sweeping changes that I think have, I would say, the vast majority of them, detrimental impacts on the people of this province.

I'm going to start by talking about the child and family tax benefit credit, something that I know made a significant difference in the lives of so many in the four years prior to this most recent election. There are many things that folks on the other side criticize that we did, but I haven't heard anyone criticize lifting half of the children who were living in poverty out of poverty by supporting those families through the child and family tax credit as one of those initiatives. Of course, there were many others, including initiatives to support women entering the workforce through things like piloting the $25-a-day child care plan, increasing opportunities for people fleeing domestic violence. The number of people that have talked about not being able to afford to leave a very unsafe situation is something that no one should ever have to feel, that they can't afford to leave an unsafe situation, that they can't afford to break a lease.

One of the things that I know made a significant impact, whether people knew it personally themselves or not – you don't always notice a tax credit, but you do notice if there's a little bit of extra money in the bottom of the bank account once you finish doing your taxes – is that new child and family benefit that was brought in, that benefited 165,000 Albertans for the better. Now we're seeing that 55,000 Albertans will lose the benefit entirely, and many will lose it partially.

The maximum benefit was $4,998 per family for both credits, and it's $5,120 per family under the new credit. But the income thresholds have been changed significantly. Under the old system it was paid to families with an annual net income below $43,295, a very precise number, I know. The reason why it's precise is because things like this need to be indexed and adjusted every year, with income being indexed, but of course we know that indexing isn't something that this government is choosing to continue with. So instead of $43,295, it's being changed to $41,000. It used to be $1,155, or $96.25 per month, for the first child; $577, or $48.08 per month, for the second; and the same numbers for the third and the fourth. Families with a net income between $26,769 and $43,295 could receive a partial benefit.

That's being changed significantly. As a result, many families will drop off the list completely: as we said, 55,000 completely removed from the list and about half removed partially. There are no details about the breakdown except that families with two children may receive $593 and up to four children may receive $889 per year. Families with a net income of between $24,467 and $41,000 may receive a partial benefit. These are things where I emphasize the word "may" because I think leaving these types of things up to consideration of "may" rather than "shall" certainly creates greater uncertainty for many families.

In terms of the Alberta family and employment tax credit, under the old system families were entitled to receive the following amounts: $801 per year, or $66.75 per month, for one child; $1,530, or $127.50 per month, for two children. There were further breakdowns for three and four, and they did escalate for those numbers of children. Instead, that's being changed to a net income of $27,060 to $41,000. The maximum working component will range from $681 per month – again, that's a decrease from the $801 – to a maximum of $1,795, and again that's a decrease from the $2,113 that it was previously. The credit starts to reduce at $41,000, and it's phased out completely at $61,000.

Again, not things that were campaigned for less than a year ago during what has been referred to as, you know, a massive mandate. There certainly were a number of things that a mandate was given on, but cutting income for low- and, I would say, below average income families certainly wasn't front and centre in the platform. I don't remember any campaign stops that emphasized that.

I'll touch base on the access to the future fund, too. It's pretty clear that the government has chosen not to prioritize postsecondary students or their families. The government went after the financial support for students by, of course, increasing tuition and increasing the student loan interest rate payments. That's another one. I talked to some recent graduates who said: "I was relieved when I graduated and tuition was frozen. Having those final years with a frozen tuition rate – not that tuition was particularly affordable, but at least it was frozen and predictable. But now having the interest rates upon graduation increase by a whole percentage: that's a significant adjustment."

Imagine, anyone in this House who has a mortgage, if your mortgage payments went up by 1 per cent with next to no notice and without the ability to shop around and get a better rate, because of course you don't have that when it's a student loan. It's a provincial loan in a province that's supposed to be investing in you and your future and instead unilaterally chooses to increase those payments by a per cent. That is a significant increase for many folks who are still transitioning to the world of work and are in beginning positions, and often the compensation isn't significant.

The purpose of the fund, the access to the future fund, was to support innovation and excellence and enhance and expand opportunities for Albertans to participate in accessible, affordable, and high-quality advanced education without restrictions. This is something that I think most of us would probably say. When people raise postsecondary with you when you're door-knocking, I doubt that they said: "You know, there are too many choices. It's too affordable. We need to reduce choice, and we need to make this more expensive." I imagine that you probably heard things to the contrary.

I know that when I grew up, in northern Alberta, there was AVC when I was a child, Alberta Vocational College, and then Northern Lakes later on. That was the only option, really, locally, and it was still a good drive, about half an hour either way, to either campus.

The opportunity of having to go away when I wanted to pursue an undergraduate degree: at least tuition wasn't as expensive as it is today, and it certainly wasn't as expensive as it will be tomorrow.

I worry when I look at the statistics. When I was studying education, I looked at the statistics about who is most likely to be able to participate in postsecondary, and who is most likely to become teachers was specifically the area that I was looking at because I was doing my education degree at the time, after my math degree and my religion degree. When I was doing education, it was very clear that it was middle- and upper middle-income families, that it was men more often than women at that time, that it was urban more likely than rural, and that it was people who had European ancestry more likely than people who were newcomers or who were indigenous to this land.

I remember thinking, "Well, at least I only had two of those sort of working against me, and at least my parents were in a position to be able to help me come to Edmonton and set up home here and make that transition." But many families aren't. For many students, particularly those who are from lower income families, the idea of taking on debt is already terrifying. The idea of taking on debt, not getting a tax credit for the tuition, and having your interest rates hiked up unilaterally is very scary.

When we're talking to students – and I imagine that probably all members of this House or at least the vast majority do spend time in schools and that students probably ask them about their career path, ask them about what it's like to be an MLA, ask them if they went to postsecondary – I would like to be able to say that we're working to make life better for Albertans. I've seen that on podiums in the past and seen it on podiums recent as well. I know that government likes to have those statements, and it's true. That should be our mandate. It should be our goal in life when we come to this place, to bring forward bills that will indeed make life better.

But what we are doing just in one small part of this bill, because this bill is so sweeping, just in this piece around access to the future, is that we are making decisions tonight that will make life more difficult, that will make life harder, and that is certainly not why I get up in the morning, and it's not why I door-knocked. I don't think it's why anybody in this place decided to run for office in the first place. I could be wrong. Certainly, they're welcome to tell me that they decided that they wanted to take away postsecondary funding and increase the rate of tuition and get rid of the tuition tax credit, that that was one of the big motivators for running for office. Feel free to tell me that. I would certainly be shocked, but, you know, if that's why you're in this place, then own it, I would say. The fund currently has $58 million in net assets, as we understand, but that will of course be depleted significantly.

I'm going to touch on the cancer prevention legacy fund because this is something I did mention in second reading of this bill, I believe. Here we are again today, and I still think that there are so many questions left unanswered about why it is that the government feels so focused on reducing something or eliminating something, rather, that is focused explicitly, that had a sole mandate, and that had a purpose of preventing cancer, I think, something that should be a focus of this Assembly. I think it should be a focus of all societies that have the ability to do research. I think research into something like preventing cancer and, of course, curing cancer as well should be a top focus.

This fund supports teams that do work around prevention. About 45 per cent of cancers in Alberta, we know, are caused by factors that can be changed, and about 6,700 cancer cases could be prevented every year. I know that this is something, I imagine – not unlike suicide, cancer impacts virtually every family in our province. Cancer is something that about half of us, at some point in our lives, will personally experience, and of course anything that could be done to prevent that, to prevent that hardship on the individual as well as on families, I think, should be a focus of government.

That's making the ethical argument. There's, of course, the fiscal argument, too, with regard to how much we spend on cancer treatments every year, and rightfully so. We need to do everything that I think is within the proven evidence of being effective in treating cancer. I think that that should be afforded to all Albertans. I don't think that I want to be in a place where some could get treatment and others could not. But, again, if we can prevent nearly 7,000 cases of cancer in our province every single year, that is something I think we should all strive for and work to make a priority.

And that's the thing. When you have these dedicated funds that are separate from general revenue, they have a dedicated mission. They have a dedicated focus, and their focus really has been very significant. I'd say that their legacy is one that I think deserved an opportunity to continue rather than be absorbed into general revenue and be at the whim of the government of the day, whether or not they would have that dedicated focus. I would certainly hope that this government would have that dedicated focus.

I also hoped that this government wouldn't be laying off nurses and teachers, just as was foreshadowed in the prior election. We were told that no such thing was going to happen, and then here we have it. In Calgary alone, 300 Calgary public teachers have received layoff notices. On the weekend, Friday, we learned that 5,100 – and counting – health care workers will receive layoff notices in the near future. It certainly isn't something that was campaigned on. In fact, when we asked about it during the election, we were told that we were fearing and smearing and that, of course, no such thing would happen.

Here I am, saying, "I have deep concerns about the cancer prevention legacy fund being disbanded and moved into general revenue," and I am told: "Oh, don't worry. We'll still fund that work. We're just not going to do it from a dedicated body." I find that really hard to swallow. You know, fool me once, shame on you; fool me twice, shame on me. I'd say: fool me over and over and over again, and no wonder I have no faith when I'm told that something is being taken away but don't worry; it'll just be absorbed and will be handled somewhere else. I sincerely wish I could believe that. I really do, because it's not my desire to see us live in a place where things like cancer prevention have to be considered budget cycle by budget cycle. I think that cancer prevention is something that we should all agree we are committed to, and as a government and an opposition, as an Assembly, we shouldn't be eliminating cancer prevention from an area of focus for this government.

I think it's something that every Albertan would expect their government to care about, preventing cancer and doing what they can in what are arguably the world's best research institutes. Here in the province we have two fantastic research institutes, between Calgary and Edmonton, doing cutting-edge work in this area, and that work needs to continue. We worked hard to attract these researchers who are here as well and the folks who do the work through Alberta Innovates in terms of the health side and, prior to that, the Alberta health futures initiative, I think it was called. I'm sorry; my brain is a little full today. This is something that has been happening for years. We've been attracting and properly funding research in these areas because we believe that Alberta should be a leader and that Alberta should be driving for positive change and the elimination and prevention of cancer. The fact that that is being dissolved, this cancer prevention legacy fund, through this bill, I think, is something that is deeply troubling to myself and, I imagine, to many Albertans, who expect their government will do more to support cancer prevention and research, not less.

Then, of course, there's the lottery fund. Something that I've had raised with me a number of times is around the community facility enhancement program, CFEP. These are grants that are being cut this year by 35 per cent, and that's approximately 100 projects that won't be funded this year. There are also cuts to the community initiatives program of at least 8 per cent, but we don't know exactly how much is going to be cut because when we've asked those questions, we haven't gotten clear answers. The minister wouldn't say how much that funding is now for grants that used to be offered for initiatives around antiracism and status of women initiatives.

These are all areas that concern me that relate directly to this bill. I understand that the minister has given verbal assurances that the funding from the lottery fund will continue to support community programs, but the numbers certainly are telling a different story when we go through those budget line items. So there is concern that this move in this bill will further the lack of transparency and the separation of talking points from reality.

Cutting the STEP grant. Many of us, I imagine, in this place – I worked as a STEP student. I worked for the Alberta Community Crime Prevention Association. It was probably one of the many pieces that set me on the path to where I am today, working with law enforcement, many city police as well as RCMP, working with community agencies, working with social justice organizations to make sure that we were focused on a crime prevention through social development model, one that was proven to be the most cost-effective as well as the least damaging to individuals or to communities. Something that I think relied heavily – that STEP grant not only turned into a job for that summer, but it turned into part-time employment for at least, I think, another two years while I was in university. It's hard to remember. The months kind of blend together sometimes. I'm proud of the work that we did in that organization and some of the legacy that continues today.

It also helped me learn more about the John Howard Society and the work that they did, particularly at that time, around the Youth Criminal Justice Act and the work... [Ms Hoffman's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members wishing to speak at this time? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has risen.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I, too, want to carry on where my colleague for Edmonton-Glenora left off. I think the first thing that I want to say is that this bill is regrettably taking many wrong turns in terms of what's necessary in our province. I know that there are many proposed cuts buried within the bill, and I think all Albertans as a result will feel the effect of this austerity over time.

I think the first thing that I want to talk about is the ripping up of the city charters fiscal framework. Of course, that was a great deal of effort and work that was put in place by the previous government, and as you know, Mr. Chair, it was signed on to by the two large cities. When the new government came in, it was summarily ripped up in terms of the presentation of this budget before us. I think the two large cities, rightly so, and probably other municipalities around the province are wondering what the sense is in signing contracts or signing agreements with this new provincial government as they don't keep to other contracts that are before them.

The city charters fiscal framework allowed the understanding that when the economy was doing well in Alberta, cities, those two cities in particular, would do better, and when the economy wasn't doing very well, as is the place now, where we're about half a per cent of GDP growth or less when we get to the end of the year under this new UCP government – they understood that they would go up with better years and down with not-so-good years. With the framework that is being worked on, the local governance fiscal framework, they will do worse with good years and even less well in bad years, Mr. Chair, as a result of not seeing $1 per $1 increase with regard to increases in the economy and increases in provincial revenues and seeing only 50 per cent of that come through.

Now, I know the explanation has been, "Well, you know, these are tough times, and everybody has to tighten their belt," but that doesn't really make sense in terms of where municipalities are at. They provide, I think they say, somewhere around 80 or 90 per cent of services within their municipality to citizens, and they receive about 10 cents on the tax dollar. The agreement we had in place with those two large cities was a fair one. They agreed to it, and they understood it, and it was a model that we were looking at for other municipalities around the province. But, as I say, it was summarily ripped up by this UCP government.

The next thing I want to focus on, Mr. Chair, as my colleague did, is around the lottery fund. Where we worked with a commission to oversee the investment of those funds, that is being changed now. The lottery fund is disestablished, and the money from the fund shall be paid into general revenue. Many people come up to me and say, you know: "What is happening? Will we see the same amount of funds? Will we see the same sort of process put in place?" They really don't know, and they're, like me, suspicious that the general revenue fund will see the monies and that there won't be the commitment that was there with the previous government, that had been there for a long time, in terms of how the lottery fund worked. I was on one of the first lottery fund boards, back in the year 2000 or so, for the city of Calgary, and we worked very hard to disburse those funds to all of the appropriate nonprofits that were eligible for those funds. That was how it operated many, many years ago, and I think that that was a better system than the current one that is being put in place by the UCP.

I want to go on to the Municipal Government Act, Mr. Chair. I want to talk about the changes that are proposed there. Of course, the changes, for the most part, are around funding. That will be a significant change for municipalities. They won't be able to anticipate, on a very big basis, the money coming from the local government fiscal framework, as I mentioned.

I do want to say that there are many other aspects of this bill that don't seem to be in the best interests of public transit, green infrastructure, municipalities around the province. One I want to focus on – and I'll shortly provide an amendment to it – is with regard to the green line in Calgary and the valley line in Edmonton. Mr. Chair, that's found from page 97 to page 102. We know that when this bill came out, there was a great deal of consternation and, frankly, surprise by the two cities, where they again felt they had an agreement in place. They did have an agreement in place with regard to funding, and that funding was summarily, again, ripped up. The agreements were changed, and they cannot count on the monies coming from the provincial government.

Frankly, they're scrambling to ensure that their projects can go forward in the future and doing all sorts of things at their own city councils to talk about: you know, if we can't anticipate when the monies are coming from the provincial government and they are far less than we anticipated, can we go back? In Calgary's case there was a motion brought forward to look at perhaps ripping up the contract with the Calgary Flames that was put before their council for discussion at their budget deliberations last week. Mr. Chair, that's the extent that councils not only in Calgary but around the province are subjected to as a result of the changes that this government has undertaken with regard to signed agreements that were put in place.

I'd like to put before this House an amendment with regard to the green line in particular, and I'd like to essentially go back to an agreement that was signed with the city of Calgary in particular.

You know, I've seen and heard different ministers talk about: we're not really doing anything that's untoward; we're providing clauses in the contract there that make sense or are buried in other contracts around the province with regard to large projects. Just before I read this out – I'll give it to the Clerk for her to read – I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that I am not aware of the clauses that are talked about by the Minister of Transportation and others as being normal clauses for projects of this size.

I'll give you a minute to read it, and then I'll read it into the record.

The Deputy Chair: If the member could just read it into the record now for everybody's benefit, and then please feel free to continue with your comments.

Member Ceci: Thank you. I will continue with my comments. The amendment is to Bill 20, and as I said, this starts on page 97, Mr. Chair. I move that Bill 20, Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019, be amended in schedule 3 as follows: part A, section 7 is struck out; part B, section 9 is amended by striking out subsections (3) and (4); and part C, section 16(1) is amended by striking out clause (c) and substituting the following so that it would read:

- (c) for the purpose of section 5(2), prescribing the funding that will be provided and disbursed to the City of Calgary;
- (d) for the purpose of section 5(3) and (4), respecting amendments to the grant agreement;
- (e) for the purpose of section 6, prescribing the funding that will be provided and disbursed to the City of Edmonton.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll continue.

As I said, it's very disturbing, and I'm speaking from kind of channelling the people at the councils in Edmonton and in Calgary, where they had agreements in place with regard to major infrastructure, the likes of which neither city has undertaken in the past and which they both called their biggest infrastructure throw of their history. In Calgary's case – and Edmonton might be somewhat similar – it was about 4 and a half billion dollars, with a "b," Mr. Chair.

As we know, what's before us here is essentially changing all aspects of that agreement, and it changes it by putting everything at the discretion of the minister and also with regard to the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Mr. Chair, we know that the Lieutenant Governor in Council is bound to work with orders in council from cabinet, so really what this is doing is putting the minister in a position to hold funding, change funding, and get out of funding entirely. That person would take recommendations to cabinet, and cabinet would deal with those recommendations and pass them on to the Lieutenant Governor in Council. I don't know how you can, as a major city in this province undertaking the biggest civic infrastructure construction work they have ever taken on, deal with a situation where really they can be subjected to 90-day clauses, where they can be given notice to terminate the grant agreement without cause. It's onerous, it's draconian, and it shouldn't be in this section 3. It should be struck from section 3, and that's what my amendment gets at.

If we want to see our cities develop, if we want to move people on a mass transit basis, if we want to construct these projects that will take, you know, five to 10 years to complete – no one would undertake this work with a 90-day clause built into it. They would be risking quite a bit and not being good fiduciary partners for their citizens, and they would be taking on the risk themselves. That's not how these agreements have been happening in the past. That's not how these major infrastructure projects take place. We don't put all the risk on one party and say: all the benefits go to the citizens in that community if you take on the risk. We want the city of Calgary, the city of Edmonton to undertake this work, to put people back to work. It would be 20,000 people, Mr. Chair, in Calgary's case, that would have the benefit of long-term employment if this were to go forward in the way that the agreement was proposed. As this agreement is proposed now, those jobs will not happen as a result of the tenuous agreement the province has made with the city of Calgary.

Really, Mr. Chair, the whole bill has some problematic pieces to it. Section 3, schedule 3 at the end is, in my estimation as a Calgarian, the most problematic and should be amended so that we can ensure the benefits of the jobs, the employment, the emissions reduction. I've heard estimates of a quarter of a million people per day being transported by a future green line when it is built. It starts out much lower because of the shorter amount of green line constructed in phase 1, and phase 2 they're looking at currently in terms of how it gets constructed. But those jobs, the emissions reduction: none of that happens if the city of Calgary does not feel confident with the money coming from the province of Alberta. That's why I'm recommending that these pieces be put in and the offending pieces be taken out.

Mr. Chair, Edmonton is a different matter. It's also mentioned in my amendment: "(e) for the purpose of section 6, prescribing the funding that will be provided and disbursed to the City of Edmonton." I know many people want to see the valley line built as well, with almost an equal number of employees being taken on from the private sector, the public sector. That, of course, is at great risk if we don't see changes to this as well.

Mr. Chair, there are a number of tax credits – I want to move on to those for just a second – that will be lost with this bill. As we know, ending those tax credits, seven of them, will have a great impact across this province. Just last week the Calgary Economic Development corporation mentioned that one of those tax credits being lost – I believe it was in the interactive digital media area – means that a thousand more jobs won't be coming to Calgary. Really, we're going backwards in terms of business attraction as a result of the provisions in this Bill 20.

I would just hope that members of this House see the reasons for addressing these changes that I've put forward in the amendment and know that by striking out the clauses that are offending, Calgary and Edmonton will both have greater certainty on when monies are coming, and they won't feel at risk on their own with regard to the province pulling out of this funding agreement in schedule 3 within 90 days. It's totally inadequate for a project of this size. It leaves them scrambling, and that would be far too onerous on a city that is trying to do the right thing by investing in public transit for their citizens and the province of Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Just for the benefit of the House, this amendment will be referred to as amendment A4.

Are there any hon. members wishing to speak? I see the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you so much, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 20, the Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, specifically with regard to the amendment that has been proposed by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Again, I am going to limit my contribution tonight to those amendments, the first of which is to strike section 7 from this act. The second is to amend section 9 by striking out subsections (3) and (4) of the act. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo has also proposed a substitution, as identified in part C of the notice of amendment that we all have, requiring that section 16(1) be amended by striking out clause (c) and substituting the following: (c), (d), and (e), that deal with section 5(2), sections 5(3) and 5(4), and section 6.

Let me say this, Mr. Chair. You know, part of the reason why we brought in the local government fiscal framework act is in order to make sure that we are funding our municipalities at a level comparable to the rest of the country.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo was the previous Finance minister that oversaw record debt and deficit like we have never seen before. If you will recall, Mr. Chair, in all of the four years that he put forward a budget, we ran billions and billions of dollars in deficit. The former government inherited about $1.3 billion in surplus and turned that into a minimum of $6.9 billion in deficit for each of the four years that they were in office, and they racked up debt like we have never seen before, a provincial government-wide debt in 2015 that was $12 billion, and they took it by March 31, 2019, to nearly $64 billion and, by all estimates, on a path to a hundred billion dollars.

That was the fiscal environment that this government inherited from the previous government. They embarked on reckless spending as if there was a pot somewhere or a tree from where we pluck money. That was the record of this member that has now put forward an amendment, you know, that would essentially make it impossible for us to fund our municipalities, to allow us to live within our means and fund them in a way that is comparable to the national average.

By the way, Mr. Chair, you know, there is no question, as the MacKinnon report concluded, that we spend 20 per cent more than the rest of the country, so it's irresponsible, I would submit, for the former Finance minister to be putting forward this type of amendment, that only goes to return us to the era that the people of this province rejected in record numbers on April 16.

As Minister of Municipal Affairs I am proud of the fact that we replaced the city charters fiscal framework with a local government fiscal framework act that works for each and every single municipality in this province. Mr. Chair, when I was travelling around this province this past summer, what I heard from those municipalities loud and clear was that they do not want us to pick winners and losers. They want us to be fair across the board. They expected, contrary to what the members opposite would like us to believe, that there was going to be a period of fiscal restraint in order to bring us back to balance and make sure that never again would we face the circumstances that we face now as a consequence of the members opposite's fiscal and financial recklessness. So on that basis alone, it's obvious that I will be opposing very strongly the recommendations contained in section 7 in the proposed amendment.

Now, he also proposed striking a clause that we had inserted, Mr. Chair, with respect to the funding for the various LRT projects, in schedule 3 of Bill 20, the public transit and green infrastructure project act, a clause that essentially, you know, puts on notice both cities to make sure that when you are embarking on that level of unprecedented investment, in the billions of dollars, in physical infrastructure that we have seen in this province, that we are prudent and diligent in making sure that the project timelines, the costing, and all of those things are on schedule.

We have been clear. We have committed $1.5 billion, you know, to these projects in Edmonton and in Calgary, and we have made it clear to our municipal partners that we are prepared to follow through with them, but at the same time we also expect them, our partners, to make sure that these projects proceed in a fiscally responsible manner. What the member opposite would like us to do is what they have done in the past four years, which is that wherever they can find money, just throw it without any strings attached. No wonder then, Mr. Chair, that we find ourselves in this awkward position, having to make sure that we live within our means, you know, something that previous Conservative leaders worked so hard for. There was a time in this province when we were debt free, and, you know, in just four years they ballooned that debt.

Mr. Chair, this amendment that the member has put forward, including, you know, a provision to allow the Lieutenant Governor in Council to be able to make bylaws, I mean, rules and regulations to make sure that the intent behind both the local government fiscal framework act and the public transit and green infrastructure project act remains. This is something that you would see in virtually every piece of legislation that grants the Lieutenant Governor in Council the power to make regulations, or in some instances a minister to provide a ministerial order. So for all of those reasons it's obvious that none of this amendment would work for me, and for that I will be opposing it.

But, Mr. Chair, I think it's very important, again, as I have said, to reflect on how we got here. At a time when we should be focused on rebuilding our economy, making sure that our focus is on jobs, the economy, and the pipeline, which has been what we campaigned on, the business for which we obtained a record mandate from the people of Alberta, that ought to be the focus of this Chamber. And I will implore all the members opposite to join us in that particular effort because when we succeed as a province economically, when we clean up our house, the two biggest cities of Edmonton and Calgary are going to be the biggest beneficiaries because those are the two places where we spend the bulk of our provincial resources. They are our two biggest cities, and they are important. Edmonton, after all, is our capital city. They are an important partner.

I have said privately and publicly that even in these difficult economic circumstances that we face because of the disastrous policies of the members opposite, we must continue to build. Bill 20, the Fiscal Measures and Taxation Act, 2019, with respect to those two items, specifically speaks to that. You know, in Budget 2019 we maintained MSI funding for 2019-2020 a hundred per cent, even given the current climate that we face. All we are asking for is a modest 9 per cent reduction by the time the local government fiscal framework act kicks in, two years from now. Two years from now, Mr. Chair, so that we can bring balance to our finances and begin to grow our economy and finally begin to pay down the record amount of debt that members opposite have bequeathed to this province.

Mr. Chair, once again, I think that it is irresponsible for the members opposite to be putting forward an amendment that seeks to undermine the hard work that we have put in on this side of the aisle to rein in the financial recklessness that we saw in the last four years. One of those is that the previous NDP government overprojected their revenue by $6 billion, and then you wonder why we had to make the tough decision to cancel the city charters fiscal framework, that was negotiated on the basis that we were going to have an additional $6 billion in revenue. That did not happen. That wasn't the case. So the question I have for the members opposite is: where do they expect us to get that extra $6 billion from?

Obviously, what they would prefer us to do is to continue to borrow and saddle the next generation with multibillion dollars in debt, a debt they did not ask for. You know, we are spending $2 billion in debt-servicing costs, $2 billion that I would prefer to spend in this city, in Calgary, but, Mr. Chair, it's something that we sent overseas to bond masters, who are not living in this country, because, again, of the policies pursued by the previous government.

So it is disappointing, Mr. Chair, to see this type of amendment. This is not the type of amendment I would expect from a former Finance minister who ought to be aware of the dire economic and financial circumstances that we face as a province. On that particular business I will implore all members of this particular House to vote against this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has risen.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak to the amendment. While I was listening to the remarks from the Minister of Municipal Affairs, it sounded like he completely missed what this amendment is doing. Anything and everything the minister said has nothing to do with the amendment at hand. I will read section 7, for instance. The amendment suggests that section 7 be struck out. Section 7 reads, "the Minister may amend any term, condition or provision of the grant agreement or a funding agreement by regulation." What this provision is doing is concentrating power in the hands of cabinet, in the hands of the minister. What we have seen from this government: when they got the power, they abused the power; they even fired the Election Commissioner who was investigating them. So they can't be trusted with these kinds of powers on an important project that is vital to the city of Calgary.

I will read a little bit about the project that's at hand. It's not just merely a transportation project. It's about the future of Calgary, it's about the future development of Calgary, and it affects thousands and thousands of people in Calgary. Stage 1, for instance, will have 20 kilometres of LRT track. It will have 14 stations, 18 bridges, one kilometre of elevated track between Inglewood/Ramsay and 26 Avenue stations, three park-and-ride facilities with a total of 1,800 to 1,900 stalls, three tunnels, four kilometres of city tunnel from 20 Avenue N. to Macleod Trail, one light rail vehicle maintenance and storage facility, approximately 40 to 45 low-floor vehicles, each 40 metres long. The worth of the total project: $4.6 billion. On the opening day the benefit listed for this project: it will carry 60,000 to 65,000 Calgarians – that's a huge number – serve all Calgarians by connecting to major activity, employment, and industrial centres outside the downtown core of Calgary; connect over 2,300 existing affordable housing units; support businesses, employees' travel choices for 191,000 existing jobs. So it's a vital project for the city of Calgary.

What I heard from the minister has nothing to do with what we asked to be amended. He said that the former Finance minister had a deficit. What the former Finance minister projected was $6 billion. What your minister is projecting is $8 billion, $2 billion more than what we projected.

An Hon. Member: UCP math.

Mr. Sabir: That's your math.

Otherwise, everybody else will agree that your deficit is higher in this budget than what we had projected. You have completely failed to understand why this project is vital to the city of Calgary, and I would suggest that instead of hurling insults at the city council, calling them spending freaks, go sit down with them, talk to them, understand why it's important and why this . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but I'm sensing that this has turned from a third-party conversation through the chair to a direct conversation across the aisle, so I would ask the hon. member to just speak through the chair. Thank you.

Mr. Sabir: Through you, Chair, I want to say that it's an important project for Calgary. It's an important project for the city's future development. As an MLA for Calgary I think it's my responsibility to speak about the importance of this project.

What I was saying, through you, Chair: the reason that I heard for rejection of this amendment has nothing to do with the amendment itself. What the amendment was trying to do was take, I think, these kinds of arbitrary powers away from the minister and leave it where it was before.

I think the right way to do it, Chair, will be that the city of Calgary, the city of Edmonton have some certainty. If they have planned for this project for years, it shouldn't be the case that this government can take everything away just on a 90-day notice. That's way too arbitrary. That puts the future of this $4.65 billion project at risk. That puts the future of this important project at risk which will help carry over 60,000 to 65,000 Calgarians every day. It's creating jobs, and once it's complete, it will help us connect those who are working in the downtown core with a job. It will help people who are living in affordable housing units. It will provide them with an affordable form of transportation. Also, it will help us reduce greenhouse gases by 30,000 tonnes, and that's equal to 6,000 vehicles being taken off the road on the opening day of this project. So it is clearly an important project.

Through this piece of legislation, where they have done many other things, the things they are doing with this project are that they are concentrating arbitrary powers in their hands, that will put the future of this project in jeopardy. That creates uncertainty for the city of Calgary. That creates uncertainty for Calgarians. That's why this amendment, brought forward by my colleague the MLA for Calgary-Buffalo, is an important one. It seeks to amend and make changes that are needed to create that certainty, to assure the city of Calgary that they will get the funds needed to complete this project. That's why I'm speaking in favour of this amendment.

8:30

Through you, Chair, the minister also mentioned that when they campaigned, they campaigned on jobs, the economy, and pipelines. I don't think that anywhere in their big, huge platform it was mentioned that they will put this kind of project at risk by cancelling the charter framework, city charters, by putting in arbitrary powers like that, that they can cancel this project on a 90-day notice, whether it's in Calgary or Edmonton. They didn't campaign on it. That was not the promise that they made. That's not what Calgarians expect from them.

Calgary is already hurting. We are seeing each and every day that we are losing jobs in Calgary. Even today we learned that 370 people were laid off at Husky last week or so, in a couple of weeks. These are the projects – not only are they creating jobs during the construction phase; many future jobs depend on these projects. So far what we have seen from this government is that they brought forward a $4.7 billion corporate handout, and what are we getting in return? Energy companies like Husky are getting $233 million from their handout, and they are laying off Albertans here in Calgary. They are investing in Wisconsin, they are investing in Saskatchewan, and they are investing in the U.S. We are already losing jobs, and putting that kind of uncertainty in the legislation respecting this project will not send a good signal for the job market in Calgary, for future jobs in Calgary.

What we are seeing here because of their policies: companies like EnCana, who benefited from their handout, from their policy, are moving their investment down south. So far whatever policies they have brought forward have not created any jobs. They have not attracted any investment. What we have going in Calgary through these kinds of measures, through this kind of concentration of power in the hands of cabinet and ministers: they're putting the future of this province at risk as well. It's creating huge uncertainty. Ask Calgary city council; ask Calgary's mayor. They are also elected representatives of the people of Calgary. They won't agree with this government's policy to do so. What so far we have seen from this government, from this minister, through you, Chair, is that they have been hurling insults at them that they're spending freaks – they're this; they're that – but this is not something that anybody in Calgary would want to see.

They're talking about modest reductions of 9 per cent. Sometimes 9 per cent reductions are huge. Ask somebody who is living on AISH. I am just, I guess, digressing a little bit. We added an increase equivalent to CPI. That's less than even a 2 per cent increase sometimes, but it's $30 a month and almost $370 a year. Sometimes these increases are huge, and cutting, like, 9 per cent: we are already seeing the impact in Calgary. It's already projected that property taxes are going high. It's already projected that services will be impacted.

That's why I will be supporting this amendment. It's an important amendment. It restores certainty for this project. The government, if someday they don't like what's going on in Calgary, won't be able to cancel it on a 90-day notice. It's an important project for Calgarians: many jobs depend on it right now and, in the future, how the city shapes, how jobs will be created, how people will be able to connect jobs with recreation, with their loved ones, with each other. Having these kinds of amendments – the minister will be able to amend the funding formula; the minister will be able to cancel it on 90 days' notice – is absolutely not acceptable. It creates uncertainty.

I will urge that all members of this House, especially those who are from Calgary, should stand for this amendment. It will bring certainty, and that's exactly what the city wants. The city wants this project to go forward. It's an important project for, I think, many different reasons, that I talked about as well: the creation of jobs, future job creation; how our city shapes; reducing congestion in our downtown core; reducing greenhouse gases, taking 6,000 vehicles, on opening day and per day, kind of from the streets. It's an important project. The government should take this amendment seriously, and the government should take Calgary seriously, which is already hurting, and should not put the future of this project in jeopardy.

That's why I'm speaking in favour of this amendment, and I urge all members of this House to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has risen to speak.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I mean, let's be clear. What the hon. member opposite just said, in summary, is, you know, again, for us to be able to provide funding without any oversight whatsoever as to how that money is spent. Section 7, that the member referred to, that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo asked us to strike, is an amendment to a grant agreement or funding agreement. "The Minister may amend any term, condition or provision of the grant agreement or a funding agreement by regulation." This is something that the members opposite used all the time in the various legislation that they passed. [interjections] It is a standard practice to grant the Lieutenant Governor in Council . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, there will be ample opportunity, given how debate follows in Committee of the Whole, for any member to speak on this amendment, so I would just ask that the hon. minister continue and that the House afford him that opportunity.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You know, we are making an investment of a record $1.5 billion, and the members opposite would not want us to make sure that that money is used prudently. That in itself is the rationale behind their request to strike section 7 from Bill 20.

Mr. Chair, you know, they also ask us to strike sections 9(3) and (4). Section 9(3) reads:

Any proposed changes and related information submitted to the Minister under subsection (2) must be approved by the Minister prior to the City proceeding with the changes to the project.

This is particularly important given the fact that in recent months we've heard that the proposed costs for that particular project were growing by the billions. We are in this province struggling with . . .

Member Ceci: The money is only one part of it.

Mr. Madu: One point five. The money is just 1.5: that's what I heard. The Member for Calgary-Buffalo just said – $1.5 billion is nothing to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: I didn't say that.

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, please. There is one hon. member currently with the floor, and that's the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I invite an exceptional debate between both sides of this House, and in order to do that and in order to do that effectively, then I would say that other members will of course have the opportunity to stand when that opportunity arises at the appropriate time, my guess is possibly once this member is done. Then we will move on to the next member. That would probably be the best way to carry forward.

If the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs could please continue.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You can tell that this has been my experience in this House, where there is heckling after heckling. Members on this particular side will always give them the deference to allow them to speak and debate issues on the floor of the House. Then it is always difficult for us to be able to hear the responses to their questions.

Mr. Madu: Mr. Chair, back to section 9(3), that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo is, again, asking us to strike. These are large-scale projects, and what section 9(3) is seeking to do is to give the minister that oversight responsibility to review changes, if any, to the proposed project. Again, that is what they are asking us to strike. No oversight whatsoever: no wonder we found ourselves on this fiscal cliff, because they have no idea what oversight means.

Mr. Chair, they are also asking us to strike subsection (4) from section 9. I read subsection (4):

The Minister may modify or impose additional terms and conditions prior to approving the proposed changes to the project.

This is in relation to subsection (3). If the minister looks at the particular project, he may then make a recommendation to the city to require them to make changes so that the project can proceed in an orderly fashion and in accordance with the intent behind the project. Again, it speaks to oversight and making sure that issues of costing, timelines, and relevance are maintained in a large-scale project of this nature.

The member also proposed changes to section 16(1) with respect to striking clause (c) and substituting the following. Again, if you go back to section 5(2), that the member is urging us to amend, section 5(2) says:

Notwithstanding Schedule E of the grant agreement, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may by regulation prescribe the funding that will be provided and disbursed to the City of Calgary.

You know what the member is urging us to do, Mr. Chair? "Prescribing the funding that will be provided and disbursed to the City of Calgary." So if there is reason, you know, for the minister, by regulation, in accordance with subsection (2), to prescribe the particular funding, he is seeking to remove completely that responsibility. That is not how a responsible government functions.

Mr. Chair, the member is proposing changes to section 5(3) and section 5(4). Subsection (3) reads:

Notwithstanding Schedules D and F of the grant agreement, the Minister may by regulation amend the auditing and financial reporting requirements that must be met by the City of Calgary.

Again, it speaks to sound financial and auditing principles. Again the Member for Calgary-Buffalo is asking us, you know, not to have anything to do with whether or not this, arguably one of the biggest investments that we will make in this particular sector, is carried out in a way that protects hard-earned tax dollars. A requirement to amend the audit and financial reporting: got it; it is not required. Again, no wonder we found ourselves $64 billion in debt, a record deficit.

Second to last, Mr. Chair, subsection (4) says:

Notwithstanding Schedule A of the grant agreement, the Minister may by regulation amend the eligible and ineligible expenditures.

Again, sound business practice when it comes to large-scale projects, to make sure that the confines of this particular project remain as tabled.

Finally, Mr. Chair, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo's last amendment has to do with section 6 of the public transit and green infrastructure project. Section 6 reads:

Notwithstanding any term or condition in a funding agreement that sets out how funding will be provided and disbursed to the City of Edmonton, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may by regulation prescribe the funding that will be provided and disbursed to the City of Edmonton.

Again, seeking to gut any oversight over this large-scale project. That, I will submit, Mr. Chair, would be irresponsible in a time that we are seeking to rein in the recklessness of the previous government and show that we are providing value for hard-earned tax dollars and making sure that we do not saddle ourselves with multibillion dollars in debt, that we are not trying to dig ourselves out.

For the members opposite, you know, to provide this type of amendment is disappointing. On that basis, Mr. Chair, this amendment has no business making it to this Bill 20. I will urge all of my colleagues to vote against the amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday has risen to speak.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to rise to speak to this amendment to Bill 20. I'm sure I'll have the opportunity to speak to my concerns around Bill 20 as a whole, but of course we have this amendment before us. I appreciate the Member for Calgary-Buffalo bringing it forward.

I also just want to point out the fact that the minister just spoke twice to this amendment, and I always appreciate it when ministers are willing to speak, but the fact is that the second time the minister rose, he didn't say anything different than he did the first time. He didn't answer any of the questions that were brought forward when the amendment was brought forward. If the government is going to take part in this debate with us, which I do appreciate, I would appreciate it more if they actually brought something new to the table when we bring up our concerns.

Just a few things that I want to point out as this debate continues. December 15, as my city councillor pointed out, will be the 10-year reunion, I suppose, since the valley line LRT route was approved. Here we are 10 years later, much too late, I would argue, for this to be moving forward. But, thankfully, under our government I had the opportunity to stand with an NDP government, with the Minister of Transportation, and the federal Minister of Transport as well and commit the funding for this very important piece of infrastructure in our city, in regard to the valley line LRT, which is affected by this amendment as well.

When I see this government bringing forward clauses within their legislation saying that they are able to cancel – and my biggest concern here is not necessarily the 90 days. As the Minister of Transportation continues to say, that is a normal thing, yet he has not been willing to bring any examples of that forward. But my bigger concern is the without-cause clause in there. Now, I have repeatedly questioned the Minister of Transportation in this House, and unfortunately that minister has continued, from what I can tell, to bring forward facts that do not align with reality. The minister said that in the federal legislation – now, I would appreciate it if the minister wants to correct me if I'm wrong here, but from what I could tell, there is no without-cause cancellation clause in that legislation. The 90 days is in there. The without-cause piece is not. That becomes a concern when we look at the ability of this government to create relationships.

I mean, when this government ripped up the city charter fiscal framework, their first attack on our municipalities, and then, further to that, when the city mayors were concerned that this government was not going to hold up their end of the bargain, that first of all they supported when we were in government, when we brought forward the legislation to commit this funding to the municipalities – then, again, during the election they said that they were going to still keep that campaign commitment and keep that funding commitment – well, you can only imagine that the big-city mayors were very concerned. The mayor of Calgary ripped that piece of paper up and threw it in the garbage because that agreement, that this government committed to, was not worth the paper that it was written on.

Once again, how are these municipalities and these big-city mayors supposed to support this idea when, first of all, they bring their concerns forward and what happens? The Minister of Justice attacks the mayor of Calgary, calling him a liberal mayor, calling them, you know, fiscally irresponsible and whatever else they decided to call them that day, and then they came back to this House and said: "The municipalities should trust us. You know, we have their best interests at heart." Well, unfortunately, I don't see how the municipalities and the mayors specifically could trust anything this government has to say, especially when the conversation has not even been had in the first place. This was thrown at the mayors and thrown at city councils.

Another concern I have is that, once again, the Minister of Transportation in question period in response to my questions answered, saying that he has not heard from any city councillors that they are concerned about the without-cause clause in Bill 20. I find that very hard to believe, Mr. Chair. It makes me question whether this minister has even had a conversation with any of these councillors, because the people that I've talked to have been very concerned about that 90 days but more specifically about that "without cause." Once again, the minister continues to say things that I don't necessarily believe, and I'm not sure that the city councillors do either, yet this government wants to consolidate power within their ministry.

Once again, they say that they should be in charge of the fiscal accountability of the cities in this instance, that they should have the final say on whether they get the funding from the province or not. It is absurd, Mr. Chair, because on one hand we have a government that's saying, "You should trust us with your money, and we should tell you if you're allowed to spend it on this," but on the other hand you see mounting levels of debt. The Minister of Municipal Affairs just stood up talking at length about the amount of debt that we took on, not recognizing the amazing movement that we saw in infrastructure debt reduction. But this government is now moving forward with a $4.7 billion handout to the largest corporations. Just yesterday we saw that Husky is pulling $500 million out of their capital spending, but we're supposed to and the city is supposed to believe that this government is going to make the right decision for them. Well, I don't think that's the case at all.

Now, once again, it's been 10 years since the valley line west LRT route was first approved. It is time – and I have heard from my constituents that it is time – to move forward on this. Unfortunately, what this government is doing is downloading their debt onto municipalities. The government is saying that they are not going to commit to the first couple of years of funding, as was promised, which only means that the city, the municipality, is going to have to pick up that debt-servicing cost, which is actually going to cost them even more to pay for because cities cannot get that money at the same rate as the provincial government.

Once again, I fully support this Bill 20 amendment. I think that the 90 days without-cause cancellation clause is absolutely ridiculous. Maybe the Minister of Transportation wants to clarify that, the without-cause pieces, in the federal legislation, and then I would apologize for my mistake, but I would be interested to hear from him. Thank you to the member for bringing this forward.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has risen to speak on this amendment.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise in this House most evenings, not so much this evening. But I will speak to the amendment to Bill 20 because, of course, this LRT project also runs through my riding of Edmonton-McClung, and it means a great deal to my constituents as well. It's passing strange, perhaps not so much, but I'm very curious about the government members' positions with respect to how things must be with a long-term project, one which is supported by government, perhaps government money, whether that be in the public sector versus the private sector. If it's a long-term project such as maybe an oil sands project, which is, of course, over the course of many years, from initial investment to oil being produced and then shipped and exported or produced and refined, if it's a long-term project like that, then the government members are all for stability and guarantees and making sure that the security is there for these large-industry members and investors to proceed with the project without delay, without uncertainty, knowing for sure that from point A to point B that project is going to be supported and that they have the backing of the government's support without question.

That goes as well for other infrastructure projects, Mr. Chair; for example, pipeline projects. We've heard often from members opposite, on the government side, about how important it is to provide security, certainty, long-term stability for major infrastructure projects like pipeline projects, for example, yet those pipeline projects are something that usually will enjoy the government's support. Knowing that, of course, for commitments of many years and major, major infrastructure dollars and government guarantees, it is very important for the security and completion of those projects that the security be there.

The same thing goes, Mr. Chair, for other private infrastructure projects like refineries, for example. They're usually a significant number of years from initial planning to financing to engineering to design and eventual construction and the bringing into commission of refineries. That type of project is something that government members also suggest requires stability, long-term support, unwavering commitment. Uncertainty is not something that can prevail during these types of long-term commitments according to government members when they are in support or speaking in support of major private-sector infrastructure projects.

However, Mr. Chair, I find it more than contradictory when government members, on that side, in speaking to this amendment, will talk about their 90-day clause without cause, the escape clause which they are now trying to implement, which this amendment hopes to reverse, as something that is somehow necessary for the stability of the government's position and their budget. Well, it certainly creates a whole lot of uncertainty, a whole lot of damage to the long-term projects that are the green line in Calgary and the LRT expansions in Edmonton.

These projects are no more dispensable than some of the major infrastructure projects that have been undertaken privately, Mr. Chair, yet the distinction that we see between them, even though they may be comparable – and sometimes the public infrastructure projects have more impact in terms of creating jobs and employment and investment and public good and social good over a long period of time. Even with those projects where we now will see the government hoping to maintain a 90-day clause without cause to retract those projects, we find that the certainty and security for those projects is something that the government values less because they're public infrastructure. Somehow they seem to be dispensable projects.

It's in opposition to what they consider essential for private-sector projects, whether they be oil sands, whether they be pipelines, whether they be refineries or other major infrastructure projects that quite often get put on hold or delayed for years until they end up being way more expensive than they otherwise would have been had they been implemented, put in place, constructed on time, rather than being put on hold.

9:00

This amendment, by which we seek to reverse the 90-day clause-without-cause proposal in the government's bill, is something that would go a long way to maintaining the sanctity of the need for long-term certainty in major infrastructure projects, whether they be public or private. It's not something that is totally switchable when you're building a public versus a private infrastructure project. There is a question of public dollars in play quite often with the private infrastructure projects: the major infrastructure projects are reliant upon government support, subsidy, long-term financing, financial backing, yet those private-sector projects rarely get interfered with or stopped in the middle of a major project, because for some reason they seem to be sacrosanct and untouchable, and the government is very much the first one to come to the defence of maintaining certainty of investment in infrastructure projects that are private sector based.

However, in this instance, Mr. Chair, we see public infrastructure at risk, projects that are being put on hold, where the government has adopted the word "pause" to make it more palatable to the public. But pausing or putting them on hold or invoking a 90-day clause is something that the public is painfully, increasingly aware of in this province. There's a long, long, and growing list of infrastructure projects that this government has put on hold, indefinitely paused, put into the black hole of never-never land and probably never going to happen land. What's happening in this province is that people are asking: "What's next? Who's next? Who's the next target?" People see their neighbours being targeted. They see their neighbouring cities being targeted, where infrastructure projects are being put on hold, delayed, are probably never going to see the light of day, are possibly up for targeting in the next budget cycle.

In this particular budget cycle, Mr. Chair, we see the Premier indicating: oh, it's not so bad; it's just a certain percentage level. Well, multiply that percentage level by four, and you've got a pretty significant amount of infrastructure being delayed, obstructed, or taken, perhaps, right off the table.

It's not something that this government, I think, really has felt the wrath of Albertans about, but I'm sure they are prepared for an earful because indeed that is something that they're going to get. When an infrastructure project so important to the public as the green line in Calgary is as well as the LRT in Edmonton – the LRT goes through my constituency of Edmonton-McClung as well as that of my colleague from Edmonton-West Henday and that of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora as well and has been waited for for 10 years. It affects the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, pretty much everybody from Edmonton centre to the west end, following the line. And then the valley line as well.

All those major infrastructure projects having to do with the LRT are now put under question because the government wishes to maintain their 90-day clause without cause, creating uncertainty and also creating an environment where future investors, future bidders on projects like these may very well have second thoughts about going ahead and bidding on large public infrastructure projects in this province because of the uncertainty the government has created in their strategy of maintaining for themselves a 90-day clause without cause. If indeed a project may end up getting put on the back burner or halted after so much has been invested already, after 10 years of painstaking public consultation, after deciding upon the routes, if that project is then potentially going to be, at the stroke of a pen, put on hold or potentially never ever going to get built, investors and even engineering companies, contractors are going to be wanting perhaps not even to bid. If they do bid, they're going to be wanting to build in an insurance clause to protect themselves in the event that the project gets put on hold.

So this government, which prides itself on being so much the proud builder of infrastructure and the entrepreneurial wizards of the long term and the only ones in the province that are capable of governing with a mind to the bottom line, is in fact creating a situation where long-term infrastructure projects of a public infrastructure nature in particular are being put at risk of escalating costs because of their practice now of retaining unto the cabinet a 90-day clause without cause, a kill-the-project clause.

I wish the government would be consistent in its application of their ideology towards their supports for long-term infrastructure projects in terms of how much they see the need to be giving certainty and security for these projects over the long term. What this amendment to the bill proposes to do is to return us to a situation of that security, where this 90-day clause without cause is rescinded, where the government accepts that public infrastructure is as indispensable as private infrastructure and that it requires and deserves the protection of that long-term certainty that governments should be giving to public infrastructure projects in a similar way as to private infrastructure projects by not giving themselves the right to yank the carpet out from underneath those who would be investing in these public infrastructure projects as well as the taxpayer, whose public money is at risk and whose wait for the social good and public benefit of these projects has been, in this case, over 10 years.

It is very insensitive, in fact, uneconomic, and poor governance on the part of the current government of Alberta to put in such a clause, to create such uncertainty, add a high level of cost, and damage the long-term viability of many future public infrastructure projects by creating a climate in the province of uncertainty and lack of trust of the government's willingness to proceed from point A to point B to get a project actually built. It's not a situation that one would have expected from a so-called free-enterprise government but perhaps one that's not too surprising to see from a government that does seem to have public infrastructure and public servants in their gunsights as a target for their cutting of budgets. It's a system of imbalanced priorities.

It begs the question, as I asked before: what's next, and who's next? In my particular riding of Edmonton-McClung there is the Misericordia hospital, and there's an emergency ward that this government has said that they would build. They would complete the project that we announced when we were in government, a $65 million addition, a new emergency department at the Misericordia hospital. I'll tell you what, Mr. Chair, I've got a sneaking suspicion that that's the next one on the chopping block. We'll be seeing what happens in the next budget cycle.

Be warned, Albertans. There are projects that you have planned for, that you have spent numbers of years hoping for and campaigning for. They've been approved, they've been announced, yet they might be yanked. The Misericordia hospital emergency ward is one that I fear this government has targeted next for chopping. Be warned that this might be happening. I for one as well as other members of my caucus will be certainly ready to mobilize those individuals who want to support the continuation of this important infrastructure project to make sure that the government follows through on the commitments that we made and that they said they would honour.

Mr. Chair, with that, I conclude my remarks with fair warning to the government that public infrastructure projects deserve to be treated with the same respect and capacity to reach their fruition as private infrastructure projects. This requires the certainty of a long-term commitment and certainly is threatened by the inclusion of a 90-day clause-without-cause part of a piece of legislation, that threatens to crater these projects in midstream and threatens the long-term viability of public infrastructure projects, that deserve the certainty of those that are found in the private sector.

I'll conclude my remarks and invite all members to support this important amendment to revert to a situation where 90-day, pull-the-rug-out clauses without cause are not part of the legislation.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

On amendment A4 I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West has risen to speak.

9:10

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in regard to this amendment to Bill

20, and I appreciate the Member for Calgary-Buffalo bringing it forward. You know, it's interesting. I've spoken a number of times on Bill 20. I guess there's sort of a common theme that runs through it, although I struggled for weeks to try to figure out what it was, because you have your film and tax credits, you have the tax credits for the high-tech industries, you have these changes to the municipal governance and so forth, advanced education and so forth. It seemed quite disparate, but when you start to put it together, the common theme I'm starting to see is that this current UCP government is bent on consolidating authority and power over so many areas in our economy.

You know, Mr. Chair, this could be quite a dangerous exercise, especially, let's say, with the green line or the valley line in Calgary and Edmonton, respectively. These are very significant projects that are key to the economic development in each city moving forward for the next 20 years or more. We know that there is for both an appetite for building each of these projects, and you have, very carefully and over a long period of time, a joining together of three levels of government to fund them. So for this UCP government now to come forward and to put any question as to their sincerity around moving forward on these lines undermines the whole thing. When you have three levels of government putting forward such a significant amount of money, it's not easy to do. If one-third of the partnership is suddenly demonstrating less than a rock-solid commitment to building these lines, then it calls into question the viability of being able to do that in the future, moving forwards.

You know, I found it interesting that the Minister of Municipal Affairs – and he did it twice, because he did the same speech twice, so I got the message, for sure – seems to say: well, since there's such a great fiscal instability, we're not sure what to do. The message that I get pretty loud and clear from this minister is that he's not committed to these projects and that he says: well, we have to balance the budget. Well, you have to build the things that you're responsible to build as well, right?

We know that the green line in Calgary, say, for example, is a major investment in how the future of the city is going to look like economically – right? – transportationwise, housingwise, for development. I mean, there are literally things being built, all planned along the line. I know that in the Ministry of Education we had met together with the city to try to align new schools along the green line so that, you know, kids could use the green line to go to school. Just building infrastructure around nodes: this is how big cities grow and develop over time. You see successful 30-year plans or more. I think this is part of a 30-year transportation and development plan that integrates housing, retail, schools, hospitals – you name it – with the LRT line as sort of the trunk of the whole thing.

Don't play with these sorts of things when they're already in motion, right? Don't just say for the sake of consolidation of power that, you know, without any particular reason you would somehow have a 90-day withdrawal on these important projects. I mean, that is irresponsible governance, Mr. Chair, quite frankly. I'm really proud of the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo bringing forward this sensible amendment, that I encourage everyone to support.

We know that here in Edmonton, for example, any degree of interference that we saw with the current leg of the valley line really slowed things down, right? If you haven't driven along the length of the valley line, it goes from downtown Edmonton, across the river and then up Connors Hill to the Bonnie Doon area, down Argyll Road and so forth down south. I haven't gone very much further south than that. I'm a north-side guy. It has been delayed significantly, and some of those delays were to do with interference by levels of government in the project. The federal government stuck their nose in and, you know, demanded that it be a P3 project.

That slowed the thing down by a long shot, right? The fallacy of either saving money or efficiency or anything by building it as a P3 – we learned very well from the P3 disaster of building schools here in the province of Alberta that it's a dead-end road.

Again, by making sure that projects are organic and that they are being managed by the experts on the ground to ensure the efficiency and what's needed in a city, that's the way to be a responsible manager at a provincial level, not sticking your fingers in, changing the rules in the middle of the game – right? – and expecting anything but uncertainty and consternation as to whether, you know, the project is a go. Is it a go in a timely manner? Are we going to have delays that will just end up costing the project an awful lot more money over time?

I think that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has got a good amendment here. I'm certainly behind it, and I hope that others in the House will follow as well.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has risen to speak on amendment A4.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just want to address a few things I heard coming from the Minister of Municipal Affairs a little while ago, particularly the city councils in both Edmonton and Calgary: I get the impression that he believes that they're junior legislators in this province and that they don't have the skills and abilities that he does with his seven months of sitting in this Legislature. You know, I just need to remind him that there are people on Calgary city council that have been there for 26 years. The mayor has been there for nine years, since 2010. That city is the largest urban centre in this province and the source, along with the area around it, the census metropolitan district, driving the major part of economic leadership in this province. They know what they're doing. They have built over time the west line LRT, the northeast line LRT, the south line LRT, and of course they want to add to it with regard to the green line. The other significant projects that I can think of that they've built and delivered on time, on budget are things, like the downtown convention centre, major interchanges throughout the city, costing hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. Chair, you know, this amendment is not one that's saying that more money needs to be given to the city of Calgary or the city of Edmonton for their major LRT projects. It's not saying that any less money needs to be given to them, the province's money which we committed to both Edmonton and Calgary. In Calgary's case it was $1.5 billion. I'm not recommending that more needs to be given. I'm recommending that what needs to be given needs to be assured to them that it's coming. We know that with this budget it's been pushed off four years. A dribble of money is going to be happening in the next four years, and then after four years the balance, leading out for several years, will be delivered. That, of course, puts significant challenges in front of the city of Calgary. This amendment seeks to correct the onerous parts of Bill 20 that no one counted on in the city of Calgary. They were surprised when this bill came out and objected to it, of course.

You know, I think what I object most to is the Minister of Municipal Affairs – and I'm taking from what he's saying, but it's like he treats them like a junior order of government, that they're less legitimate than this order of government, the provincial government, or indeed the federal government. Well, that party doesn't think the federal order of government really knows what they're doing. That's unfortunate as well, that they believe that.

I just want to correct some other things. When we were in government, Mr. Chair, we targeted operational spending, operational investments at population growth plus inflation growth. We tried and stuck to that effort to bring that spending down to that level, that combined level of population growth plus inflation. Those were tough years, 2015 and '16. As you know, they were recessionary years in this province.

But '17 and '18 were growth years, and they were growth years to our GDP as a result of our work to make sure that people kept working as well as the fact that David Dodge, the former Bank of Canada governor – you know, you have your expert who guided you on the blue-ribbon panel; we had our expert, David Dodge, former Bank of Canada governor – said very early on that the recession will be tough on this province and billions will be leaving because private investment won't be coming to spend that money here because of the recessionary years. He said: because those private investment dollars are not going to be here, use your public dollars to keep this province going. As a result of our investment of those monies, which this minister says was irresponsible because it racked up debt, Mr. Chair, I can tell you that in 2017 the GDP in this province grew 4.6 per cent.

Where did it go in 2019 after the policies of the UCP have come in? It's .5 per cent. It's flat or it's going to be in recession as a result of these policies brought forward by Janice MacKinnon and others in the blue-ribbon panel. In 2018 the GDP grew just around 3 per cent. Again, that's a number that won't be seen by the UCP in their management of the budgets and the GDP in this province in 2019. It won't happen.

Lastly, Mr. Chair, I note that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has been speaking to Calgary media and talking about how the Calgary council, you know, is spending way too much money and being critical of Calgary council. I just saw a newspaper report, and the mayor is firing back on all of that stuff. He is saying that maybe this government is trying to distract from their destructive budget, that's having an impact on the city of Calgary right now with a 33 per cent cut on police funding, with a reduction in MSI that's going to be a problem for the city of Calgary going forward, with changes that they're bringing forward that weren't discussed, weren't talked about, weren't negotiated, were just as a matter of course brought forward and that said to the city of Calgary: "Here. Now deal with this." Deal with it they will, but it's not because they have a good partner on the other side. It's because they have a draconian UCP government who, out of all costs, is saying: you're going to have to tighten your belt, and we don't care if it results in higher taxes. It's going to result in higher taxes. That's clear.

I just wanted to correct the record on all those things, that we're not talking about more money going to the LRT green line. We're talking about treating the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton as legitimate partners in the development of infrastructure in those cities, something they have been doing for decades, Mr. Chair, and they'll do for decades after this one-term government is gone.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Minister of Transportation has risen.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll just make a couple of brief comments here. The hon. members across seem to be wilfully short of memory, and that's okay. Sometimes I'm short of memory, too. I just hope it's not quite so wilful as what I think I detect here. We've had some of these discussions in question period and made it clear that the members opposite are complaining about a cancellation clause in the provincial side of the funding, but on the federal funding for the very same LRT line there's a cancellation clause, and somehow the members opposite don't seem at all troubled by that, nor do they seem to understand the inconsistency in being troubled by one and not at all by the other. In fact, they seem to think that one doesn't exist and the other one does, but in fact both of them exist.

The funding was promised in our campaign. The hon. members are fond of referring to the section of the legislation that talks about the cancellation clause – and I'll remind them again that there's a section for cancellation in the federal funding – but they're ignoring the section that I think the city would be interested in, and it says that the full $1.53 billion for Calgary and $1.47 billion for Edmonton is payable, which means promise made, promise kept where I come from.

I know that they have to say these things because they're trying to distract from the disastrous record that they had when they were in government and the fact that they didn't get these things completed. I guess you could hardly blame them because after being the only one-term government fired in the history of Alberta and having racked up debt at a record rate, which was the accumulation of deficits at a record rate, and having created unemployment in Alberta at a record rate, they've got a lot of records.

Actually, you know what? They've got gold medals in all the wrong sports. They have left 170,000-odd Albertans out of work. They have taxed Albertans with their carbon tax in the most destructive way, which made everything more expensive for the least vulnerable Albertans, including municipalities, by the way, who also complain constantly about the NDP's carbon tax, and which also made it more expensive for seniors, people on low income, charities, nongovernment organizations, churches, community associations. The folks across the aisle were severely . . . [interjections] You know, Mr. Chair, I can hardly hear myself talk.

Chair's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I feel compelled to still hesitate to interrupt. However, I would say that the crosstalk in the House isn't helpful for me to be able to hear the individual with the call at the current time. As I've stated a few times in today's evening session, there will be ample opportunity for members to speak after the individual with the call. I think that there have been some repeated comments from the other side of the House which I would welcome in the course of debate. However, at this time it is the Minister of Transportation who has the floor.

Please continue.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm happy to do this, and I'll note that while the Member for Calgary-McCall was speaking, we sat quietly and listened regardless of how little sense his comments made. When the Member for Calgary-Buffer spoke, we sat and listened regardless of how little sense that made. I'm just here correcting some of the nonsense that we heard earlier. [interjections] See? They still can't be quiet.

You know what? The fact is that the city of Calgary was not well served by the member opposite. The fact is that I don't think I voted ever for a budget there because the tax increases were always too high, and I'm not sure whether the member opposite ever voted against one of those. But you see, Mr. Chair, therein lies the problem. At some point somebody has to think about what things cost, they have to think about the value of things that they're buying, and they actually have to think about the poor people that have to pay the bill. See, there's a place where there's a big difference across the aisle from where we are, because we actually do think about the value of things, we think about the cost of things, and we actually think about the poor people that have to pay the bill.

Ms Hoffman: Then why is your deficit bigger?

Chair's Ruling Interrupting a Member

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I have to call order at this point. I have, in the last 40 minutes, probably made the same interruption four or five times, so I would just ask that – at the present time the individual with the call is the Minister of Transportation. Do not worry, for if there is a member from your caucus speaking, then I will afford the same opportunity for that member to speak on this amendment. So if the hon. member could please continue, then after he is done, there will be, like I said, ample opportunity for debate on this amendment.

Please continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and I'll try to hear my own thoughts, if I can, over the din.

Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before the folks on the other side were heckling as they could, the big difference between our side of the aisle and the other one is that we actually have to take the time to consider who has to pay the bill, because there is no such thing as government money. Whether it's a city government or a provincial government or a federal government, it's only people's money. It's the taxpayers' money. None of it's our money. We just are hired through the election process to be stewards of that money, and we all have – I try to remind myself of this every day, so I'll say it out loud for everybody's benefit – temp jobs here. We only temporarily steward the money that belongs to the citizens, but while we're doing that, on this side of the aisle we actually think about those poor citizens when they have to pay back the debt that's accumulated by their government, where the folks on the other side seem to think that it comes from a money tree or some other place, and they never consider that the money has to be paid back.

Therein lies a great deal of the difference, Mr. Chair, and therein lies the fact that while the other side wants to spend $3 billion without any control over how the money is spent, we actually think it's . . . [interjection] Again, I can hardly hear myself for the former Minister of Finance that got fired after one term, Mr. Chair. It's unbelievable that, although I listened quietly the whole time he was talking and never said a word, the hon member just can't seem to stop yapping during the time when someone else is speaking.

However, Mr. Chair, I will say that the other side seems to not actually concern themselves with who has to pay the bills for their bad habits, which is why the other side was fired after one term, which is why the worst Finance minister in the history of Alberta was fired after one term along with all of his teammates, which is an indication that he never learned anything during the time on city council, during the time as Finance minister and in the last few months in opposition hasn't really put that together. That's why I'm saying these things, to help the hon. member so that he might be more successful in the future.

Mr. Chair, this is important. It's important because the cities want their LRT. It's important because our government wants to help them pay for the LRT. It's important because in the legislation there's a section where we've said that we have set aside $3 billion so they can build their LRT. But then we go to the difference between our side of the aisle and the other side of the aisle. Our side of the aisle simply wants to make sure that the money is spent on what the city said it was, which I think is a reasonable way to steward the money that is not ours. The folks on the other side want to hand over $3 billion with no strings: no checks, no balances, no belts, no braces, no way to control and make sure the money is spent on what it is intended for.

Now, Mr. Chair, we trust the cities, but to quote Ronald Reagan, the phrase "Trust, but verify" is a good one. All we're saying is that we do want to give them this money, we do want them to build their LRTs, we do want them to be a success, and we want those LRTs to serve the good people of Edmonton and Calgary. We just think it's our duty as stewards of the taxpayers' dollars to have some mechanism to make sure the money is spent on what we said it was going to be spent on, which again takes me back to the difference between this side of the aisle and the other side. We care very much about accountability with how the money gets spent. The other side seems not to care a whit.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has risen to speak and has the call now, please. [interjections]
Order.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and talk about the amendment from my hon. colleague from Calgary-Buffalo. It's an amendment to this omnibus bill, Bill 20, and we certainly need to reflect on what actually is in this bill. You know, on a day like today, when we've had a significant tragedy on the steps of this Legislature, I am pleased to stand up and speak about how important it is to support Albertans. Unfortunately, there are some changes that are happening here in our province that are hurting Albertans. Certainly, if we can improve this bill, which I believe this amendment does, then we can absolutely improve the conditions for Albertans.

First of all, on section 7, it says at the beginning of this amendment to strike out section 7. I just want to refer to that. "The Minister may amend any term, condition or provision of the grant agreement or a funding agreement by regulation": that's pretty carte blanche, Mr. Chair. It is, like: pretty much do whatever the heck you want to. Is that good legislation? And it's by regulation, so it doesn't have to be an order in council. I mean, for sure this bill would be much more fair – we know that in a good government there are checks and balances. This sort of removes them. It is quite audacious that the government would put this kind of clause in here.

Also, other aspects of this bill talk about specifically Calgary, and many of my colleagues have talked about Calgary. In section 5(2) it says: "Notwithstanding Schedule E of the grant agreement, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may by regulation prescribe the funding that will be provided and disbursed to the City of Calgary." Of course, that's about the green line. That also is a significant heavy hand. It's taking away the authority of Calgary, which did have a plan, and saying that they can delay it, which seems to be what this budget indicates. What havoc that creates for our largest municipality. Is the government realizing what they're saying? You know, in a very heavy-handed way they're taking away the authority of our major municipality to make some choices and decisions.

I am just going to refer to a CBC article about this. This is what Mayor Nenshi said. Regional infrastructure has taken a hit of $50 million, and the green line is now a big problem, Nenshi says. The city was supposed to receive $555 million for the planned LRT over the next four years, but it's now down to $75 million. According to the mayor it's 20,000 construction jobs that are now in the balance. He says, and I'm quoting: I don't know how you complete the green line on time, and we certainly don't have the debt capacity; I don't think it's too much to say that the project itself is in jeopardy. So by this legislation they are creating a lot of, tremendous difficulty for the city of Calgary. This amendment would improve that and make it not just sort of a unilateral decision by this government, that actually would be respecting the city of Calgary, not what this government is doing.

Secondly, in another clause we're referring to the city of Edmonton. They are delaying, actually, the funding for that. You know, these are millions of dollars in delay, which causes, of course, some more jeopardy for a project. As with many of my colleagues on this side of the House, that expansion does go through my riding, sort of Stony Plain Road over to Meadowlark mall. It goes through my riding. I'm concerned about that because that does give people in Edmonton-Riverview much better access to the downtown core, to the west. It is a very important investment by this government. Really, the government broke an agreement with those large cities about that. This amendment, brought forward by my hon. colleague, certainly would go a long way to support that project to go ahead.

You know, all of us come to this work with different backgrounds, and I come to it from social work. One of the things we always ask about any kind of policy is: "Who benefits? Who doesn't?" So who's benefiting from this? I'm very concerned that the cities are really hurting by this and also regular Albertans who need access to transit. We know how fundamental and important transit is. We also know that seniors often don't want to drive when they're older, so having access to efficient, affordable transit is so key. This is who the government is hurting. They're not supporting them. This project was committed to, well on its way, and it's just very tragic that by this omnibus bill they're rolling back supports for many people who would be taking advantage of that transit system, for sure.

If we ask ourselves more about who benefits from what's in this bill, I just want to say another aspect. You know, the hon. member who was speaking just previous to me seemed to tell us what we thought. I don't know, but it kind of irritates me when people tell me what I think or why I'm doing something. I think it's disrespectful. It's actually very important that we care enough to let other people express themselves, but all sorts of ideas about why we did what we did: I just really take a lot of exception to that because one of the things we did was we really committed to making sure that average Albertans were supported. This bill is rolling that back.

One of the things they're doing is that the Alberta child benefit and the Alberta family employment tax credit are being rolled into one in this bill. In so doing, that's changing the threshold, so fewer families actually are eligible for that; 165,000 families will receive less, and 55,000 families will no longer be eligible. I'm concerned about that. Those are average Albertans that aren't going to have those supports. That's what I care about. I care about people being supported. You know what else that the Alberta tax child benefit did? It reduced child poverty by 50 per cent in this province. That is something I stand here so proud of, and I would do it again.

I would not give a $4.7 billion corporate giveaway. I would give money to people who are on a low income, for children living in poverty, and I would increase the minimum wage. I would do the things our government did, and you know what? It wasn't crazy spending. It was actually redistributing the wealth because we know that in Alberta we have the highest inequality of any province in Canada, and that's nothing that I'm proud of. I'm distressed by that. The top 1 per cent – I have the stats here – earned 46 times that of the poorest 10 per cent, the largest gap of all the provinces in Canada. So what the heck are we doing? Continuing to give all sorts of money to the elite, $4.7 billion to corporations: why are we doing that? Why are we deindexing AISH and the Alberta seniors' benefit? We're pushing people down. We're just supporting another elite group. That's not responsible government. Actually, that's the role of government, to develop a more robust middle class, so we as a government lifted the floor by increasing minimum wage, supporting all sorts of programs for people. What this government is doing is the complete opposite, and we have increased inequality.

We know that income inequality is particularly striking in urban areas, with the major Alberta cities, Edmonton and Calgary, coming in second and third place after Toronto for the largest income gaps between the top 1 per cent and the bottom 10 per cent. That's really nothing that I'm proud of, and that's actually one of the things that motivated me to get into politics. It's because I wanted to create more equality in this province, and that means supporting people with important programs. But of course this bill isn't doing that. This bill is continuing to erode programs for Albertans. Certainly that's not a good move, and we know that by this amendment that actually helps it. It takes away so much power in the hands of the minister, which seems outrageous to me. We really have checks and balances in politics, and the minister shouldn't be able to just by regulation decide what contract is signed, what clause goes in. You know, these are multimillion dollar projects, sometimes billion dollar, so it just seems ridiculous that this would be going on. I just want to speak very clearly that I am in support of this amendment.

I also just want to talk again about who benefits and who doesn't. This omnibus bill also talks about, you know, many tax credits. They're taking away some tax credits. In my riding there's the film and video association. It's called FAVA. FAVA is, of course, an umbrella organization advocating for film and video. I met with a young woman. Her name is Katrina Beatty, and she's a film producer. Because of the delay, of not continuing to accept applications for the screen-based production grant – this year I know that the minister did make some amendments, and now apparently it's . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you. However, I think that at the present time we're dealing with amendment A4, and I would say that we should make efforts to be relevant to that. The only reason I've chosen to do this at this time is because the premise of your statement, after you stated that you were done talking on amendment A4, was to then say that you were going to start discussing the bill proper. I would say that there will be ample time for you to do that. I'm not trying to stifle your debate on the bill. All I'm saying is that at this present time I think that it would be a more effective use of discussion in the House on this amendment to stick to the amendment. When this amendment does end up being accepted or defeated, then we will move to the bill proper. If you could please continue with that in mind.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, I just want to refer again to the amendment, then, put forward by Calgary-Buffalo. Again, I just think it's, you know, extraordinary to think that a minister has this omnipotent power. Striking out section 7 would be very important. You know what I think? It's a bad habit that this government has. It thinks that it can do things sort of unilaterally, without involving the big cities.

The hon. member who spoke before me talked about the bad habits of our government. Well, I just want to talk about their bad habits. One of the things that they're doing is firing teachers and nurses. They seem to care more about – and he was part of this government – sky palaces and private planes and going to London and five-star hotels. This government has some bad habits, very unlike our government, which did not have any of those scandals because – you know what we did? – we invested very much in supporting people and caring about people, regular Albertans, not elite people.

I absolutely want to support this amendment. I know that for the cities, both of them, it would improve their contract. I think that they've broken good faith with the large cities. Both mayors, you know, were shocked that these huge changes were made. These amendments would talk specifically about how to make it better and not delay funding, not reduce funding.

This is all very important to fairness and justice, which I really encourage the government to understand, the people on the other side. You know, caring about all Albertans is their job. It's not just about the elite. It's not just about corporations. It's also about regular people who need to take transit. It's also about regular people who are involved and need some help with public programs, kids in schools, all of those people. It's not just about that top 1 per cent, which this government seems to think are the most important. They're busy creating more inequality, which is not what is fair or just.

I think that I've made myself clear on this point. With that, I'll sit down.

9:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. I would just ask the hon. member to table the CBC article at the appropriate time.

Are there any other hon. members looking to speak to amendment A4?

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Moving to the bill proper, Bill 20, I see the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 20.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 29

Municipal Government (Machinery and Equipment Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered at this time? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has risen to speak.

Member Ceci: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I'll start with comments first and later put forward an amendment. The things I want to say with regard to Bill 29 – of course, it builds on the bad Bill 7, which we dealt with in the spring. That bill I think you could probably call picking the pockets of municipalities around the province. It certainly doesn't do a whole lot for municipalities, who want stable and predictable funding from their local tax base, from the province in this case, maybe even from the federal government. They want stable and predictable funds. Bill 29 does none of that. As we heard with Bill 7, the concern of many municipalities was that it puts them in a race to the bottom with other municipalities around the province trying to attract businesses, that then would be, you know, tax exempt or tax deferred for a period of up to 15 years. That is not stable. That's not predictable in terms of those tenants, which they believe are really important for them to address their needs going forward as municipalities.

The only – only – good thing about both bills 7 and 29 that I can envision is that they are enabling legislation, which means that municipalities have the ability to use them or not. Mr. Chair, I think we're finding out every day that municipalities are not using this enabling legislation, bills 7 and 29, when it gets royal assent. You know, partially or fully exempting taxes for nonresidential properties as in Bill 7 and now for machinery and equipment, which can be in place for up to 15 years, is not something that grows a municipality. In fact, it's something that puts it at risk of being not sustainable in the future.

The other thing I wanted to remind members of this Legislature about is that it doesn't really give new authority to municipalities. They can already do things like cancel, reduce, refund, or defer taxes under section 347 of the MGA. We know that that has been used by the city of Calgary. It has been used by Chestermere. It has been used by Lethbridge. That enabling legislation is already in place. Just as the previous reaction to Bill 7 from various mayors around the province, including notably Iveson and Nenshi – they were worried that it would create a race to the bottom, and it doesn't address the property tax problems that those cities, particularly in Calgary's case, are trying to address.

Mr. Chair, there's another thing that Bill 29 won't do. The machinery and equipment already is in place in many municipalities, not all. You know, will it attract new business to this province? That's suspect. It may attract a feeding frenzy amongst municipalities who try and eat each other's lunch with regard to new businesses by offering them up to 15 years of tax referral or exemptions.

Mr. Chair, the other thing that I wanted to bring out, of course, is that this bill distracts from what municipalities really need, which is a solid framework that will replace MSI. What we know with regard to the local government fiscal framework is that it will not replace MSI in the same way as the MSI agreement or the city charters agreement that we had put in place had addressed, that if revenues grow at the provincial level, they would grow at the same rate at the municipal level. That's not happening, so stable and predictable funds aren't guaranteed as we had put in place. This bill does nothing that municipalities can't already do for themselves if they chose to. They have that power under section 347. What we see with this is nothing that gives them anything more than they already have.

I'm going to put forward an amendment soon, Mr. Chair, but I just wanted to say that, you know, I don't believe this is what municipalities were asking for. I think it's a missed opportunity. This bill and the previous Bill 7 are not something that municipalities, as I understand, as I can remember, were clamoring for. They weren't asking to be given an opportunity to give up 15 years of taxes for businesses in their area. In fact, with M and E that's not something that the city of Calgary and the city of Edmonton can use. I don't think they have the infrastructure in place, that asset class in place in their municipalities to take advantage, if they chose to, under this enabling legislation. It really treats municipalities differently in that regard.

The numerous cuts to municipalities on top of this potential cut, if they use this, I just want to remind members of the Legislature, include things like cuts to the Alberta community transit fund, cuts to police officer funding throughout the province, infrastructure funding cuts, MSI cuts. There's a clawback of the fine revenues, we know, to municipalities in this province that the province is undertaking. As I talked about with the local government fiscal framework, we know that the revenue will grow slower in both of those areas as a result of the changes.

It seems like, you know, a better approach would have been to stay with what our previous government put in place, and that's tax credits that were being utilized across this province. But the giving up of funds in this Bill 29 and Bill 7 are very much like the failed policies that were put in place by the UCP government in terms of the $4.5 billion they're giving away to wealthy corporations as a result of giving taxes away in terms of the handout to those corporations. This is more of that, Mr. Chair, more of that in Bill 29, which is the same as Bill 7. I think that we're seeing that approach as not being successful because we're not seeing the reinvestment of monies in the province from those corporations that received those monies, $4.7 billion. We're not seeing jobs return as was promised by this UCP government in their platform promises of pipelines, jobs, and the economy.

10:00

What we are seeing, Mr. Chair, is concern and worry from municipalities, who believe that, you know, their stable, predictable funds are getting more unstable and less predictable as a result of this enabling legislation, which they probably won't use. Why would you when you can't count on the province following through with its promises? Why would you work to give up money at the local level that you are counting on to invest in your community?

With that said, Mr. Chair, I want to bring forward an amendment, and I'll wait till it gets handed over to you with regard to speaking to it. The original is on the top.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could please read this amendment, which we'll be referring to as amendment A1 for debate. If you could read it into the record and then, just in the interests of time, continue with your remarks.

Member Ceci: Thank you. I will. I move that Bill 29, Municipal Government (Machinery and Equipment Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019, be amended in section 2 by adding the following after clause (d):

- (e) by adding the following after subsection (9):
  - (10) Within 6 months of the coming into force of the Municipal Government (Machinery and Equipment Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019, and every 4 years after that, a committee of the Legislative Assembly must commence a review of the amendments made by that Act and submit to the Assembly, within 6 months after beginning the review, a report that includes any amendments recommended by the committee.

That, Mr. Chair, is endeavouring to address the fact that I believe – and I haven't heard anything to the contrary – that municipalities may not be utilizing this act, just as they're not utilizing Bill 7. I've not heard any anecdotal information. I've heard the minister stand up and say, you know, that this county or this MD is using Bill 7. I think what we need to do is get some actual evidence that the bills brought forward are having a positive impact on the communities that the minister wants to see use them.

Without any evidence, Mr. Chair, what we really are getting is, like, trophy legislation to match or mirror the kinds of things that the UCP government has done with regard to their taxation policies for corporations, which, unless somebody can point to where it's had a positive effect, haven't had an effect of growing jobs or increasing investment in this province.

What this amendment really does is provide an opportunity for a committee of the Legislature to hear information and evidence. Perhaps they want to talk to municipalities who have tried to use this or will use this or did use this about what impact it's had in their municipal districts around the kinds of goals or aspirations the minister talked about with regard to Bill 7 or with regard to Bill 29, which is fixing Bill 7, which doesn't really do anything at all either, in my view.

Mr. Chair, what we hear from municipalities, you know, is that they'll look at it, that they'll try and figure out if there's some positive impact it has. But multiple-year tax exemptions, both full or partial, and deferrals of taxes to attract investments very much seems to them like putting them in a less stable, more unpredictable place for collecting taxes from businesses that enjoy everything going on in municipalities.

Mr. Chair, the previous item that the Minister of Transportation talked about, how I was on councils and that he was voting against tax increases and that I was supporting reasonable tax increases: I just want to remind that member that Calgary has been judged – and you don't get this way by racing to the bottom in taxes and taking away the ability of your councils to invest in public infrastructure, a public realm, that makes a difference in people's lives – even as recently as this year as the fifth-best place to live in the world. In Canada it's usually up there in terms of the third- or the second-best place in Canada to live.

You don't get that way by racing to the bottom in taxes, as I was saying. You do that both by investing in and addressing the public realm, the services people rely on, and keeping that within a reasonable level for the people who are your citizens. We did that in Calgary, and I'm proud to be a member of council that stood up to make that happen. While some people voted against every expenditure of dollars in our city, I believe it's the right thing to do, and it's been evident to others looking at Calgary and saying: that's a pretty great place to live. I'm proud of that. I'm not so proud of Bill 29 and Bill 7 because, as I said, they create a situation that will result in less predictability and stability for municipalities, MDs, and counties around the province with regard to their collection of taxes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Premier has risen to speak on this amendment.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to rise in debate, just having arrived back from Toronto and the Council of the Federation. I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for his participation in this debate, his amendments, and his constructive engagement in an important part of our strategy to get Alberta back to work by restoring investor confidence. Given the questions and skepticism raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, I thought that I would offer some context for the bill before the House and indeed Bill 7, which preceded it in the spring session, both introduced by the hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

In I believe October of last year, I was on a visit to India renewing acquaintances and friendships that I have amongst the senior political and business leadership of the world's largest democracy. During our meetings, both in New Delhi and Mumbai, I encountered at least two major global energy companies with large future investment budgets for petrochemical projects around the world. Both of them expressed an interest to me directly in prospectively investing billions of dollars in new capital spending here in Alberta, projects that would create potentially thousands of jobs and also provide a local market for our stranded Alberta natural gas to help that industry. However, they both raised with me very bluntly the competitive disadvantage that we were at in some respects, and one of those was property taxation. They raised with me the fact that they were looking at prospective petrochem investments on the U.S. Gulf coast, in Texas and Louisiana, and in other jurisdictions, all of which were offering lower property taxes, all of which offer very strong incentives to attract major job-creating capital investment of that scale and nature.

These CEOs of major global companies were very blunt with me in India last year, saying that if Alberta really wanted to be competitive in attracting these kinds of investments, we had to show – I remember one CEO saying it – quote, at least as much flexibility on issues like property taxes as the U.S. Gulf states do, unquote.

Now, the U.S. Gulf states, by the way, Mr. Chair, have benefited from approximately $200 billion in new capital investment in petrochemical projects in the past five years alone. Two hundred billion dollars. That has created tens and tens of thousands of good, high-paying jobs, very often in blue-collar trades and operating jobs for good union workers down in the U.S. Those jobs should have been created here. Our share of the global petrochemical industry has been shrinking. I understand – I'd have to verify the exact, precise numbers – that we've gone from about 3 per cent to about 1.5 per cent of the global petrochemical market over the past decade or so because of all of that new investment elsewhere.

I got a very clear message in India that we needed to get in the game, partly through greater flexibility in local property taxes. I came back here, and then a few weeks later I visited the Industrial Heartland and was greeted by Her Worship the mayor of Fort Saskatchewan and the mayor of Strathcona county and other local officials. They were very clear with me that one of their top policy proposals, Mr. Chairman, was to give municipalities greater statutory flexibility under the Municipal Government Act to offer property tax incentives to attract major new capital investment like petrochemical plants. There I had the demand being expressed by prospective investors, the request being expressed by municipal governments here.

I consulted informally with other municipal governments that are keen on attracting new capital investment, and the ones I consulted thought this was a good idea. Now, I know that that is not a unanimous view amongst our municipalities; I grant that. Some have told us that they don't want to have to compete. Well, I say to them – and I've said this to the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association – with respect, that the whole economic ethos of Alberta is one of competition, and that principle of competition should not be limited to the private sector. In fact, the whole idea of our federation is partly the idea of having a competitive environment, and we have created that. That's the Alberta advantage. Municipalities that want to create their own municipal advantage I don't think should be restricted from doing so.

Really, the NDP's position on this, Mr. Chairman, is that the government of Alberta, through this Legislature, should dictate to them what their local property tax regime is. All we're doing is giving them the option to act freely to incentivize job-creating investment. If there are some municipalities where, instead, their local voters choose to elect councillors who are focused on higher taxes rather than more jobs, bully for them. That's the democratic choice they can make now and, under this legislation, in the future.

Let me also point out, Mr. Chair, that since this government came to office in the spring, we have been involved in a number of intensive conversations with major prospective investors, including in the petrochemical industry. In fact, as you may know, I was in Texas for three days on an investment promotion trip two weeks ago, and almost half of my time in Texas was spent with major global petrochemical companies, getting into really serious conversations about investing prospectively, in each instance, more than $10 billion in petrochem projects in the Edmonton region. We are entertaining expressions of interest from at least four companies in that industry. If they all went ahead with positive final investment decisions, those decisions would represent cumulatively over $30 billion of incremental capital expenditure, primarily in the Edmonton region.

I can tell you that, to be illustrative, just one of those, a prospective $10 billion capital expenditure on a petrochemical project, would be projected to at its peak employ 10,000 workers. That's in the construction phase. Then in the operating phase I believe it would be closer to 1,500. In both instances, whether in the construction trades or the professional services, architectural and engineering, or the great blue-collar jobs to follow in the operational jobs, you're talking about really good-paying jobs here. A lot of those, I would remind the NDP, would likely be unionized private-sector jobs as well.

This is a good news story, but I've got to tell you, Mr. Chairman, these petrochem companies were very clear with me that they're looking at other jurisdictions. They're looking at the U.S. Gulf coast. Some of them are looking at the Middle East. Some of them are looking at Argentina. Who knew? Argentina has a huge emerging oil and gas sector. There's cheap natural gas feedstock like we've got, lower labour costs, and lower property taxes. What happened was that after we passed Bill 7, we heard from more of these companies saying: look; we appreciate your gesture there, which opened up some flexibility for nonresidential property tax incentives for up to 15 years in Bill 7, but the real value for us and in terms of the competitive decision we have to make with the U.S. Gulf coast and other jurisdictions, the real difference would be if this applied to machinery and equipment. That is why we've come forward with Bill 29.

I can understand that the opposition may be skeptical about this, but I just do want to convey to the members of the opposition and to our partners in municipal government that what's motivating this, Mr. Chairman, is actual, real-live input from these prospective major investors that could create tens of thousands of jobs in Alberta. One of the reasons we brought this forward – I will admit this one was not mentioned in our throne speech. Frankly, when we started the fall session, we did not expect to bring forward this bill. This bill was a result of the input I received in Texas from these companies. We wanted to send a very clear message that we are hungry for that investment and those jobs, that we will move quickly. We wanted with this bill to demonstrate just how quickly Alberta is prepared to move not just to meet but to beat our competitors for thousands and thousands of good blue-collar, high-paying jobs. That's the point of this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Are there any other hon. members looking to speak to Bill 29?

Seeing none, I am prepared and ready for the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Moving back now to Bill 29 proper, are there any hon. members wishing to speak on this?

Seeing none, I am prepared for the question. Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 29 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Any opposed? That is also carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

10:20

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that we rise and report progress on Bill 20 and rise and report Bill 29.

[Motion carried]

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 29. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 20. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Speaker: All those in favour of the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. The motion is carried and so ordered.

The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Good evening, Mr. Speaker. I ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 39 in order to proceed to Government Motion 43.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader has the call.

Amendments to Standing Orders

43. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

A. Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, effective October 8, 2019, be amended as follows:

1. Standing Order 7 is amended
  - (a) in suborder (1) by adding “Deferred Divisions (Thursdays)” after “Tablings to the Clerk”;
  - (b) by adding the following after suborder (3):

(3.1) Each of the following Members may, immediately after a Ministerial Statement is made, make a statement in response to it:

    - (a) a member of the Official Opposition for a period of no longer than 3 minutes;
    - (b) if requested by a Member other than the Member referred to in clause (a), and on the Assembly’s granting of the request by unanimous consent, that Member for a period of no longer than 2 minutes.
  - (c) in suborder (7) by adding “except in respect of Deferred Divisions” after “items in the ordinary daily routine”.
2. Standing Order 8(1.1) is struck out and the following is substituted:

(1.1) Notwithstanding suborder (1), on a Monday afternoon

  - (a) if no items of business under suborder (1) other than Motions other than Government Motions remain on the Order Paper for consideration prior to 5:00 p.m., the Assembly shall proceed to Motions other than Government Motions, and
  - (b) if no items of business under suborder (1) stand on the Order Paper for consideration, the Assembly shall proceed to consideration of any items of Government business under suborder (2).

- (1.2) Notwithstanding suborder (1.1) and (5), on a Monday afternoon following the conclusion of business for consideration of the Assembly under suborder (1), the Assembly may grant unanimous consent to proceed to an additional Motion other than a Government Motion or to any other item of business that is not yet due for consideration by the Assembly.
3. Standing Order 13 is amended by adding the following after suborder (6):

(7) Subject to Standing Order 16 and 32(4)(b), after the Speaker’s calling of Orders of the Day a Member may occupy another Member’s unoccupied seat during the proceedings but must immediately relinquish the seat on the request of

  - (a) the other Member, or
  - (b) the Speaker.
4. Standing Order 32 is amended by striking out suborder (4) and substituting the following:

(4) When Members have been called in for a division

  - (a) there shall be no further debate, and
  - (b) despite Standing Order 13(7), a Member must remain at the Member’s seat during the division.
5. The following is added after Standing Order 32:

Divisions at third reading may be deferred

32.1(1) A division on the vote on a motion for third reading of a Bill shall be deferred upon either of the following Members providing notice to the Assembly:

  - (a) in the case of a Government Bill, the Government House Leader or a member of the Executive Council acting on the Government House Leader’s behalf;
  - (b) in the case of a public Bill other than a Government Bill, the sponsor of the Bill.

(2) A notice that a division shall be deferred under suborder (1) must be provided prior to the sounding of the division bells for the division.

(3) If a division has been deferred, the Clerk shall conduct the division

  - (a) on the Thursday immediately following the day on which notice was provided under suborder (1), and
  - (b) during the daily routine under “Deferred Divisions”.

(4) Despite Standing Order 32, if more than one division is to be conducted during the daily routine under “Deferred Divisions”, the Clerk shall

  - (a) sound the division bells only before the first deferred division, and
  - (b) limit the interval between the sounding of the division bells to one minute.
6. Standing Order 41 is amended
  - (a) in suborder (4) by striking out “amend the motion” and substituting “amend the motion or replace it in its entirety”;
  - (b) in suborder (5) by striking out “amended motion” and substituting “amended or replaced motion”; and
  - (c) by adding the following after suborder (5):

(5.1) A Member may not make a request to the Speaker under suborder (4) with respect to a motion other than a Government motion that has previously been amended or replaced on the Order Paper.

7. The following is added after Standing Order 52.04:

Motions in committees

52.041(1) The Chair of a standing or special committee may establish deadlines by which a Member who wishes for the committee to consider a proposed substantive motion or proposed amendment to a substantive motion is required to file the proposed substantive motion or proposed amendment with the Committee Clerk.

(2) On receiving a proposed motion or amendment in accordance with suborder (1), the Committee Clerk shall distribute a copy to each Member of the committee.

(3) A Member may not, without the approval of the committee, move a substantive motion or an amendment that was not filed in accordance with suborder (1).

(4) The Chair of a standing or special committee may take all reasonable steps as the Chair considers necessary to facilitate the committee's consideration and disposition of multiple proposed substantive motions or proposed amendments that are before the committee for its consideration.

B. And be it further resolved that the amendments in this motion shall come into force on passage.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have the copy of Government Motion 43. Of course, it's on the Order Paper. It's quite lengthy. I seek your instructions if you need me to read it into the record or if it's satisfactory moving it in the context of it being on the Order Paper. I will summarize what is in it either way, but I await your instructions.

The Speaker: I appreciate that, hon. Government House Leader. I just seek the guidance of the House to ensure that everyone has a copy of the Order Paper as well as the motion. That being the case, you can proceed with your summary.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you for that, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate that. This is a fairly lengthy but simple amendment to the standing orders. First off, it will codify practices for ministerial statements. As you do know, we operate under several Speaker's rulings in regard to ministerial statements. This will now put those Speaker's rulings into the standing orders the same way that they've been called in this Chamber for a long time and codify that practice within our standing orders.

The second thing it will do is clarify that government business can be done on Monday afternoons when there is no available private members' business. If there is available private members' business, that will take precedence. Certainly, we have found a few times in the 30th Legislature already, particularly at the beginning of a sitting, that there was no private members' business available yet, and it makes sense to be able to then use the time in the Legislature to our full capacity. Mr. Speaker, I know that you know that time in the Legislature is valuable, and that allows this to happen.

The third thing it does is allow MLAs to sit in other members' seats after Orders of the Day have been called. Members will still have to be in their own seat to speak. They'll have to be in their own seats during the daily Routine, question period, and to vote, Mr.

Speaker. This basically means now that during second reading and third reading it will be the same as it is in Committee of the Whole; members will be able to freely move around the Chamber and interact and do other work with their colleagues.

It will also now allow for divisions at third reading to be deferred to Thursday afternoons, Mr. Speaker, by the government. I should note that there's an error in the version that members are looking at as we speak, a minor clerical error, that adds a second 15-minute bell to the same process. I'm sure everybody agrees that we don't want two 15-minute bells during that process. I do anticipate that one of my colleagues will rise shortly to move an amendment to change that error.

The other thing it does is that it makes changes to Motions Other than Government Motions to allow private members to replace entirely the wording of their motion. This would allow them to make one change per motion for private members' motions. We've seen situations where private members of both parties have sought to make changes to their private members' motions, and we want to be able to provide them an opportunity to do that. We think that by doing it once, that allows for any mistakes to be fixed but does not allow for it to be abused.

Lastly, it amends the Standing Orders to empower committee chairs to set deadlines on motions or amendments to those motions, and this should lead to less drafting of motions on the fly in committee meetings.

Those are the changes to the standing orders that we are proposing. I do hope that it enjoys the support of the majority of members in the Chamber, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to hearing the debate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this Government Motion 43, which is changes to the standing orders. I mean, it's sort of a mixed bag, quite frankly. I appreciate the intention of many of these changes. Some of them, I think, our side here as the Official Opposition have a problem with.

Just to go very briefly through each of the seven sections that are described here, as the Government House Leader just did, number 1, which is the codification of the ministerial statements, I think that that's fine. I mean, you know, it's sort of a long-standing practice that we've done and it kind of just puts that to paper, and I think that we don't have a problem with that.

The second one around Monday afternoon, you know, this idea of moving to government business if there's no private members' business available, in itself, I mean, that is practical, but it speaks to a larger problem that we're starting to see emerge here in the Legislature, which is that sending private member's bills to that committee first is turning into quite a logjam. I think that the government side and opposition side both have experienced problems with this, so I would respectfully suggest that we take a look at that over time – right? – because what we've seen now with a number of bills going to committee straightaway is that somehow they get lost. I think that we've experienced frustration around that, and so have private members on your side, too. Maybe if we can try to fix that – this standing order I think is a symptom, perhaps, of a larger problem that exists in regard to the changes to private members' business.

The seating thing, well, you know, I think it's okay – right? – being able to move around a bit. I think that people have started to realize, the new members, that you can do that during committee, and it's kind of refreshing to move into different places. I'd ask hon. members, if they're sitting in my chair, to not touch my stuff, but I think otherwise we don't have a big problem with that. I was joking, of course. You can touch my stuff as much as you like. It's okay.

In regard to the bell thing, I think the government members spotted the same problem that I saw, right? We're going to fix that, I believe, Mr. Speaker, with an amendment so that you don't have two bells going on there. I think that that is reasonable.

Being able to amend the motion by the person who's brought it forward: I've seen that a couple of times in the years that I've been here, so I guess that's a small thing that could be used. I mean, if you want to do that on the fly during the course of debate, I think that might add some liveliness to the dynamic interaction around when we're debating motions and so forth.

The last one, motions in committees: I have a problem with this, right? You know, again, the flow of committee and making motions from the floor, I think I've seen that over the years to be a really productive way by which you can move committee business to a more productive end. Having to submit motions ahead of time to committee I think is getting in the way of both the traditions and the function of parliamentary democracy and how committees function, and I don't think that is really the best thing moving forward.

Yeah, it's kind of a mixed bag. I mean, I would suggest that, you know, based on number 7 and perhaps number 2 and so forth, it makes it a problem for us to be able to vote for this motion in its entirety. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others wishing to join in the debate? The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'd like to just take a few moments with Motion 43. Obviously, this is a motion that will help kind of streamline things with the business that happens in this House, make things just a little easier and a little more friendly to get things done in an orderly fashion.

Saying that, I would like to move an amendment at this time. Would you like me to read it out now or wait for it to be distributed?

The Speaker: Hon. member, if you could just wait until the table has a copy of the amendment, and then I will allow you to proceed as they're distributed. We'll just wait for the table.

Mr. Loewen: Okay.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will refer to the amendment as amendment A1.

Please proceed.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that Government Motion 43 be amended in part A in section 5 in the proposed Standing Order 32.1(4) by striking out "if more than one division is to be conducted" and substituting "if one or more divisions are to be conducted."

Mr. Speaker, it's a small adjustment in words, of course, but we all know in this House how words matter and how small changes in words can make a big difference. Obviously, the intent is to include all divisions that would happen, so the terminology "one or more" versus the previous wording, which was "if more than one," which would mean that the first one wouldn't be subject to this amendment. I hope that's fairly clear as far as what we're looking for here, which is that "if one or more divisions are to be conducted" is the main phrase that we would like to substitute in.

I'll leave that with this House right now. I'm free to hear any other discussion on this matter. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone else wishing to provide questions or comments with respect to amendment A1 under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, is there anyone else wishing to comment?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Speaker: We are back on Government Motion 43. I see the hon. Government House Leader is rising again. I would assume that it's not to speak to the government motion given that he's already done so.

Is there anyone else wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question on Government Motion 43.

[Government Motion 43 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to all members of the House I thank them for all their hard work this evening, lots of progress. I'm trying to find the date tomorrow; I believe tomorrow is December 3. As such, I would move to adjourn the House to December 3 at 10 a.m.

Statement by the Speaker

Death on Legislature Steps

The Speaker: Hon. members, prior to adjourning this evening, I would like to just make a very brief comment about this afternoon. We do not know what the circumstances of this person's situation was, and I don't think that it's for us to speculate about. I do know that we've all been affected by this afternoon's incident. I personally have been affected by suicide before today, and today's tragedy has also affected me. It has also affected our first responders, whom we thank for their service and efforts today, as it has affected others in the building.

What we do know tonight is that every life lost is a gutting, heartbreaking tragedy. On behalf of all members of the Assembly I wish to offer my sincerest condolences to the family and loved ones who are feeling the pain this evening of this terrible loss.

I also know that we all can and should do better as we continue to try to support one another, that we can reach out to someone struggling, that we can be more compassionate and more patient and more empathetic towards our families, our friends, our neighbours, our co-workers, and indeed to our fellow Albertans. A moment like this demands not only our reflection but also our commitment not only to do good but to be good to one another.

For any members or staff who are needing additional supports I encourage you to reach out to the 24-hour employee assistance line. That number can be found in the earlier e-mail correspondence from today. As well, there will be counsellors on-site tomorrow here in the Legislature Building as well as in the Federal Building for any staff or members who so require.

Having said that, I hope that you all have a restful and safe evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:37 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, December 3, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Morning, hon. members.

Let us pray. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. So may Your kingdom come and Your name be hallowed. Amen.

Hon. members, please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 29

Municipal Government (Machinery and Equipment Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise and move third reading on Bill 29, the Municipal Government (Machinery and Equipment Tax Incentives) Amendment Act, 2019.

Madam Speaker, this legislation would help municipalities compete internationally to attract investment, create jobs, build the economy, and realize their full economic potential. Our government believes that municipalities should be empowered to make decisions that work in their region. The legislation that we are proposing is concise. Bill 29 would expand the powers of municipal councils to create property tax incentive programs similar to Bill 7, passed in the spring, but for machinery and equipment assessment class.

Municipalities know what their local opportunities and barriers are. We know competition is tough for large industrial projects. Too often they have been heading south of the border. This gives one more tool to local governments to attract big job creators. If passed, Madam Speaker, Bill 29 would allow municipalities to provide property tax incentives for up to 15 years for machinery and equipment. This would give our province a competitive advantage over jurisdictions across Canada and the United States. Other jurisdictions have programs like this in place. Saskatchewan and British Columbia as well as Texas and Louisiana are some of the examples. If passed, we would be helping municipalities with the flexibility to offer, if they wish, one of the longest tax incentive timelines in North America.

Some individuals and groups may disagree with the proposed legislation, thinking that it may lead to increased competition between municipalities, but Madam Speaker, I have been clear that increased competition is exactly what we are looking for. Alberta has been losing these competitions, and we need to turn that around. We have seen investments, for example, in petrochemicals moving south of the border to the tune of nearly $200 billion. We need to position our province to make sure that it is attracting some of those investments. I am proud to introduce this as one more way that our government is restoring the Alberta advantage.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. With that, I formally move third reading on Bill 29.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 29. I appreciate that the minister got up and spoke, and I do want to speak to a number of the points that he raised, number one being that this is going to make municipalities more competitive. What it's going to do is encourage municipalities in a race to the bottom. I can tell you that the petrochemicals – the minister is correct that there's about $200 billion worth of investment around – actually it's higher than that. Internationally and within North America there has been about $200 billion worth of investment. Companies are eager to invest, but I promise you that reducing machinery and equipment is not going to attract them to Alberta.

What has – and this minister knows this and the gas minister knows this – is the petrochemical diversification program, a program that I'm very proud we introduced under our government, that has seen two projects well under way, Inter Pipeline and Canada Kuwait, both building facilities to the tune of somewhere between 3 and a half billion to $5 billion, resulting in thousands of jobs and, of course, adding value to our resources, which is something that Albertans have been talking about. I remember sitting around the kitchen table when I was a kid, my parents talking about: why don't we diversify and upgrade more of our resources here in the province?

Those two programs have been very successful. I am happy to see that this government has removed ideology on this decision and has continued the program because it is successful and it's those types of programs that will attract these billions of dollars of investment. It is not getting municipalities to reduce or forgo collecting machinery and equipment.

Again, I've met with dozens of these companies around the globe, and they've talked about levelling the playing field, and a program like royalty credits did just that, Madam Speaker. So I do encourage the government to continue to look at programs like that. In fact, I'm anticipating that there should be a beautiful $10 billion announcement right around the corner with a company that we had lined up that never got it out the door. I won't spoil it for Albertans as far as which company I believe that'll be, but I look forward to those types of announcements.

The challenge with this, Madam Speaker – and it's quite possible that there are some municipalities who asked for this, but I can tell the Minister of Municipal Affairs that with the councillors and communities that I've been meeting with, you've already seen a complete shift in their approach in how they are working with the other municipalities. It is now cutthroat. I think there are 342 municipalities in the province of Alberta, unless a few have been amalgamated and that number is a little bit lower. You have 342 little fiefdoms, all competing with each other. Well, the problem with this is that when you go international – and the ministers that have travelled will know this – we have to work together to put Alberta on the map, let alone a little community here or there that is trying to compete internationally on the world stage.

What's disappointing to see is the work that we did to encourage municipalities to collaborate in order to compete, to look at how regionally they can work together in order to attract these big investments. You know, my concern, Madam Speaker, is that the tools that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has introduced have flipped that on its head. So municipalities are working together a lot less. They've loosened the rules on intermunicipal IDPs, on intermunicipal collaboration agreements, and it's unfortunate.

The other thing that we've seen this government do – and they may praise this ability that they've given municipalities, but I think many municipalities are feeling frustrated that this government is downloading services on to municipalities, so, again, cuts to police funding. And I get that the Minister of Justice loves to say that we're not cutting it. I'm sorry; it's in black in white. Yes, you are. So municipalities have less to work with, and then saying to them, "Now you need to drop your tax rate to be more competitive," even though that's the only tool they have to pay for things like roads and bridges and infrastructure and policing. I mean, for the smaller municipalities, obviously, it's the province that picks up that tab.

It's challenging, Madam Speaker. I mean, municipalities collect less than 10 cents on the dollar from taxes, yet deliver the majority of services, and this government continues to point to municipalities and say: well, lower your tax rate; continue to drop them. Those are the same taxes that municipalities use to provide services. You know, I'm sure municipalities are thinking: well, then, fund us; sure, we'll drop the machinery and equipment tax rate, we'll drop our property tax rate, but make sure that we have the dollars to deliver services that Albertans count on.

The other thing, you know, Madam Speaker, is that if you gut all of the infrastructure, trade corridors, and what companies rely on, you could have the lowest tax rate in the world, but if you don't have ways and means for companies to get their products and services to market, they're not coming here. You know, I encourage the government to talk to companies, especially down in the U.S., that we're trying to attract, and listen to their top three priorities. I can tell you that quality of life is in the top three for most companies. What is that? That's things like having an incredible health care system: affordable, publicly delivered, publicly funded health care. I can tell you that companies spend significant dollars down in the U.S. paying their employees' share of health care, so they look to Canada with envy. I can tell you that for most companies talent is in their top three as well, Madam Speaker.

10:10

Now, I know in our energy sector, obviously, natural resources – you know, they need to go where the natural resources are. I'd like to see this government work with municipalities to help support them to make Alberta more competitive. Again, I've talked to the Minister of Energy a couple of times on the fact that they are working with the Alberta Energy Regulator to expedite approvals of projects. That gets a check mark. Way to go. That is positive. We need to do that. We know that that will help to attract companies. We know that business moves at the speed of light and government is a turtle, and that's probably even being generous to government, how slow government moves. But those are the types of levers or signals, I think, that industry is looking for and will approve.

I mean, we are definitely in challenging times. You see that Husky just made an announcement where Albertans, 370 of them, are losing their jobs. You know, I hope this makes the government stop and reflect on the fact that what they believed would be a silver bullet for the industry, by dropping the corporate tax rate, has not had the outcomes that they've expected. Anybody over there who says: "No. It's doing exactly what we said it would do." Well, point to the jobs, because I only see job losses. Now, I appreciate that others may say, including the Premier: "Well, wait a couple of years. We've got to wait until this thing ramps up." Okay. So in the meantime we just sit, twiddle our thumbs, and watch layoff after layoff occur?

I'll tell you what tool would have helped attract more investment, especially in oil and gas: the capital investment tax credit. That's something that this government blindly cut. I believe it was an ideological cut, again, you know, the government has access to the numbers, Madam Speaker. We know that $200 million leveraged $2.2 billion worth of investment. That's a fantastic return on investment. For me, what's tough is that that was a tool that would have helped do what the minister is trying to accomplish through allowing municipalities to lower their machinery and equipment, what they collect.

There are tools that the government had, and I encourage the government to look at the capital investment tax credit and consider bringing back some iteration of it. I mean, I understand that the government will want its brand on the program. I can tell you that business doesn't care who introduces it as long as there are those types of program, just like the PDP. I'm sure, you know, companies in Japan and elsewhere aren't saying: "Oh, okay. It's a different program because there's a different government in place." They don't care. They just want to see that these types of programs are there to level the playing field.

I mean, this is exactly it, although it is interesting when you hear the government, for certain programs, talk about how that's picking winners and losers, yet for other programs, that doesn't really count, right? I mean, the minister of economic development and trade criticized the investor tax credit, the capital investment tax credit, and the interactive digital media tax credit, calling them all boutique tax credits, yet the film tax credit: "No. That's not a boutique one. That doesn't count." It's a double standard.

Now, I'm in favour of all of them. Again, I've said this to the minister, that I agree and applaud the government's decision to look at a film tax credit. I know that they've met with a lot of industry members to tweak it, because with their first iteration they don't have it right. But, again, you know what? I'll give them a chance to improve it. I can speak from experience that when we first rolled out the investor tax credit, it had some challenges. We went back to the investment community and talked to them, and they said: you know, we need to iron out some wrinkles, and we did. I was quite proud of the fact that, again, we continued to listen to industry to ensure that we got it right. So I hope, with all sincerity, Madam Speaker, that they will do the same for the film tax credit. I think there's incredible potential for Alberta to compete with jurisdictions like British Columbia and Quebec and Ontario. Again, I hope for and encourage this government to review a capital investment tax credit.

Now, something the government did – and I'll give credit to the Minister of Finance – was accelerate the capital cost allowance. We know that that is a tool that has worked in the past. We have a track record across Canada when that occurs. I know the federal government did it, but I am happy to see that the province is also doing that in order to encourage companies to invest now.

But, again, you know, the silver bullet of reducing the corporate tax rate has not produced the results, and I think it's fair to say that it has not produced the results that the government is anticipating. Again, Husky took their roughly $250 million that they got in tax savings or in the forgone taxes they didn't have to pay and then invested it elsewhere. Meanwhile in Alberta, the very province that gave them this gift, they say, "Yeah, we're actually going to cut our investments by about $500 million, and that's going to result in about 270 job losses," which is unfortunate. I appreciate the fact that nobody in this House wants to hear of a single job loss. We all understand the implications of that. I hope what it does is cause the government to reflect on putting all of their eggs in one basket versus looking at: what are some other ways to improve?

Now, I know the minister of red tape will get up and say: we've done all this red tape reduction. As we've spoken about, Madam Speaker, half the bill that he brought forward isn't about red tape.

You know, eliminating a board off the books which hasn't met for 10-plus years is not red tape. I don't know whose red tape you're cutting or for whom. I do think, as I've pointed out, that working with the AER, working with Environment and Parks to look at expediting approvals: that's reducing red tape. That's making it easier and faster for companies to pull the trigger. Again, we've all heard of examples of companies that have had to wait far too long for approvals, and we know that capital doesn't wait. It'll go to jurisdictions that are eager to have those investments.

This is why I encourage the other side to also look at something that we did that I'm quite proud of, working with three different municipalities up in northwestern Alberta, the trimunicipal partnership between the MD of Greenview, the county of Grande Prairie, and the city of Grande Prairie. They came to the government and said, "We'd like to basically form an industrial zone and look at getting some of those initial approvals out of the way so that we can go to industry, so that we can go on international trade missions and say to companies: we have a plug-and-play model, so we can bring you in and get you up and running in a much shorter time frame than if you had to start from scratch; then you'd have to deal with multiple municipalities." We gave them some funding through the CARES program, which, again, is another program this government cut, which was having a real impact on communities all over Alberta. In fact, you know who got hit the hardest? The rural communities that were accessing the CARES funding.

Regardless, the fact is that we worked with those municipalities to help get them up and going when it comes to creating a regional economic zone. I encourage the Minister of Energy, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and the Minister of Environment and Parks, which is what we did – it took three of us to get together; actually, it was four of us – to look at helping to make this happen. I said it when I was Minister of Municipal Affairs: I hope to see that replicated throughout the province.

You know, the ministers will know that there's a great example of municipal collaboration, regional collaboration, with the Industrial Heartland. They came with me on every single trade mission that I led and helped advertise and support the petrochemicals diversification program. Of course, the heartland has attracted billions of dollars of investment, including through the PDP program. Now, theirs is a little different model because that was private land, not Crown land, that they came together on, but I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that it's still – and I've said to the AIHA – a shining example of what can be accomplished when municipalities work together.

The challenge I have with this current bill – and I appreciate the intention of this bill and what the minister is trying to do – is that it will encourage a continued race to the bottom, a race for municipalities to undercut each other in order to try to attract investment. I'm a big fan of, again, "Let's collaborate to compete; let's work together as Team Alberta to compete on the international stage," not "Let's argue with each other and try to fight with each other to attract investment." That's not going to do it, Madam Speaker.

When we look at the best examples of where investments have come, you look down south, near Lethbridge, to the Cavendish investment, the largest of its kind in southern Alberta. That took six of our ministers working together, working with the company, but the company also worked with the city of Lethbridge and the county of Lethbridge because they recognized that a rising tide lifts all boats and that by working together, attracting that kind of investment will benefit residents in both municipalities. I mean, the reality is that most people don't identify themselves according to the invisible municipal boundaries, right? They identify themselves through their communities, so that type of investment of Cavendish, which was hundreds of millions of dollars, benefits the whole southwest region of the province.

With that, Madam Speaker, I just wanted to get on the record. Again, I'm happy to give credit where credit is due, but I'm also happy to point out, when there are and were successful programs, that if it ain't broke, don't fix it, you know, as that applies to the capital investment tax credit and some other tools that, unfortunately, the government has taken away.

With that, I will take my seat. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, you've already spoken to this bill. I'm looking for other speakers to the bill.

The hon. minister for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Not minister, but thank you for the promotion, Madam Speaker. Given the communications back and forth, I don't know if I'd want that chair, quite honestly.

There was an old saying in my area: if you lay with dogs, it's going to give you fleas. Well, that holds true in a lot of this. We've heard about some of the things in setting up the economy. Folks are kind of wondering why we have investment leaving the country, and actually, honestly, I think the NDP should stand up and take a bow. You don't poison the well of investment, you don't send these mixed messages, again with the partners down in Ottawa, and then wonder why people are leaving. If there's any question or wondering why it was after October 21 that a lot of these big companies decided to leave, it was literally that the Trudeau government got in place. Again, I stood up here on the 17th talking about some of those inconsistencies and some of the concerns about unifying our country. Well, this is proof. You have long-standing Canadian companies that are hesitant about keeping their headquarters here.

As far as talking on, you know, Bill 29, consultation is ongoing. There are going to be a few bumps and bruises along the way, but the intent of this is fantastic. I heard the member opposite just talking about collaboration, or lack thereof, of some municipalities. Here's something that I got from folks, actually, in the economic trade and development office. Again, the other member opposite had actually been in charge of that group. I brought two county mayors together and an investment group over from Asia. Their name is XCMG, and they're the number 5 equipment manufacturer in the world. I brought all of them to the table. I also had our Member of Parliament, Dane Lloyd, there as well. These people from economic and trade development asked me at the end of the meeting: how did this happen? How did this happen, Madam Speaker? Well, it happened because one MLA took the initiative to talk to people in his area, to get to know these mayors, to have them collaboratively come together. There was no animosity amongst them because everyone is looking collaboratively now towards regional development.

One of the councillors from Sturgeon was actually over on a trade mission under Sturgeon county's flag themselves and ended up over at XCMG's headquarters and started promoting Nisku, started promoting all the good things that we can do down in Nisku, from the oil field to helping manufacture this equipment.

We also had meetings with the other mayors. We had Leduc county onboard; we had Sturgeon county; we had Strathcona county; we had Parkland county. These are all folks that are working together in this regional development anyway with the heartland development. Mayor Hnatiw is absolutely on the tip of the spear on this, leading this. We have the Villeneuve landing network. We're talking about building up Villeneuve for industrial space. We're talking about corridors that actually tie in with highway 60, that goes all the way down to highway 2 and takes all of that trade into consideration.

Again, are these folks going to race to the bottom and cut each other's throats? Not from what I've seen, Madam Speaker, and not from some of these departments. These folks span elections, and they're coming back and asking me, a humble new MLA to the area, "How is this happening?" I said, "Because we invited them to work regionally."

Perhaps under different leadership the group worked differently, but all I know is that right now things are actually starting to come together. Minister, thank you very much for your efforts in this. The folks in my area appreciate it. Honestly, consultation is going to be ongoing while we get through this, but it's all with the right intent.

Again, with me coming from that other industry, yeah, I know why everyone is hesitant. We've been sending mixed messages. But the leadership right now is coming across at the provincial level. We've seen that in spades with the Premier's announcement yesterday of his meeting with his cohorts. Thank you very much for the ability to stand up on this, Minister. The folks in our area are behind you. Keep doing what you're doing. We need to get the investment back.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, would you like to close debate?

Mr. Madu: Yes, Madam Speaker. Thank you so much. You know, we have gone through a period of economic stagnation in the last four years, a period where we saw a record lack of investor confidence in our province, especially with respect to our vital economic interests, as a consequence of policies that were pursued by the previous NDP government.

Madam Speaker, there is a reason why in the last four years what we saw was companies leaving our province. Rather than attracting investment, investors and businesspeople were telling us that unless we make a fundamental shift, it will be hard and difficult for them to bet their hard-earned dollars on an economy and especially a government that was pursuing antibusiness policies. Businesses are very much interested in an economic system that isn't layer upon layer of red tape. The ease with which they do business is one of the things that they are looking for. In this type of environment in which we find ourselves, we are faced with the harsh reality that more than $200 billion in investment has gone to the south in petrochemicals, an investment, or at least a good chunk of it, that ought to have come to this particular province given the blessings of our huge natural resources in both fossil fuel and natural gas.

Madam Speaker, with policies like bills C-48, C-69, and the previous government's support for a federal NDP leader that was sworn to the destruction of our fossil fuel industry and who was adamant that they would not support the construction of any new pipeline, it's no wonder, then, that those investments were not prepared to come to our province. We saw a record six credit downgrades. So there is a lot that we have to do, and this is just one part of our effort to make sure that we restore investor confidence and assure the business community that our province is once again open for business.

Madam Speaker, with that, I will seek the permission of this House to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 21 Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019

The Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I will call on – the hon. Member for St. Albert would like to speak to the bill?

Ms Renaud: We had a little mix-up with the order, Madam Chair, but I'm happy to speak to Bill 21, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019.

I don't know if other members in the Chamber know that today is the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. The United Nations has been marking this day since the early 1990s. It's been a while, and I do think that we've made quite a bit of progress internationally, certainly in Canada.

Before I get into this bill I do want to recognize, although members opposite like to slam the Trudeau government – I certainly have done my fair share of that as well, but I would like to give credit where credit is due – that the federal government did see fit to pass federal legislation around accessibility for people with disabilities, and that was a long time coming. I think, you know, it's not often that I would say that the United States is so far ahead of us in this regard, but they are. They actually have had the Americans with Disabilities Act for quite some time. Although the federal legislation certainly didn't go as far as I would have liked, it is a beginning. I did want to mention that.

Today is International Day of Persons with Disabilities, and I think that again we're reminded that the goal of this celebration, the United Nations calling attention to this, is that it looks at the leadership and empowerment and inclusion of persons with disabilities, particularly here as disabled Albertans, but it looks at the empowerment and inclusion of people with disabilities around the world.

Of course, one of the largest barriers, challenges, that faces this particular group of people is poverty. I know that I talk about this frequently, that grinding poverty is actually, sadly, the norm for far too many Albertans who have severe disabilities, people that have qualified for AISH but not just AISH. As we know, there are income supports also available to people for whom, for whatever reason, the barrier is too significant for them to sustain employment and then sustain themselves going forward. They qualify for income support when they're not able to qualify for AISH.

I'm going back to this again. One of the things that we did before the 30th Legislature, one of the things we all did in this place, and I do believe we all voted on together, was to make changes to the AISH Act that would allow those benefits as well as income support benefits and benefits for seniors to be indexed to inflation. Although it's not a great deal of money every single year – it's probably between $30 and $35 given, you know, the situation – it is a game changer. More than that, the act of actually legislating that benefits are indexed to inflation is a message to the community of people with disabilities, to their families, and to their allies that it's about respect.

It's about taking the onus off this community of having to advocate all the time for a raise. It's sort of like, you know, that job maybe that you had when you were younger where there wasn't a lot of structure in place in terms of wage grids going up or performance evaluations that would set targets, and then you would evaluate those and determine your increase based on that information. You had to go in and sort of beg for a raise: "Hey, I'm doing a really good job. I really need a raise." This is very similar.

This was us saying to this community: "We value you enough. We understand that the cost of living pressures go up every single year, and this is why we're doing it. We're legislating that you will no longer have to advocate or beg or wait for government to determine at what point we say that, yes, our economy is successful and strong enough that we can do this." Because I'll tell you that that changes year to year. People's plans change, government's sort of desire for different outcomes change, but what never changes is the poverty, the grinding poverty that people with disabilities live with. For us, this was a way to legislate that respect and mandate that every government respect this community enough to ensure that they had these cost of living increases every single year.

But we took it even further than that, which was outstanding, Madam Chair. For those of us that were here prior to the recent election, I think we all remember the lengthy debate that we had around trusts for people with disabilities. We refer to them as Henson trusts, as they've been called in other jurisdictions. These are discretionary and nondiscretionary trusts that are set up. This was one more way of ensuring that people with disabilities, once their loved ones – their guardians, their families, whoever it was – were gone, would still have sort of that backstop or that cushion or that safety net. That would be there for them and would not have been eroded through eligibility requirements or different levels. That would have been safe. It would not have been used to calculate whether or not they were eligible for AISH benefits. It would just be there. You know, I said this the last time I spoke to this bill, Madam Chair. Before we did that in Alberta, I believe we were the only jurisdiction in this country that didn't have provisions for this kind of safety for people with disabilities.

The reason I'm highlighting these things again is that one of the things that was most shocking to me about Bill 21 was that not only was this a massive piece of legislation that shoved in every kind of thing you can imagine – I think that about 19 or 20 different pieces of legislation are amended or changed – but that these really important decisions that were made by the last Legislature would not be given this really sober second thought about: what does this mean for people? Really, what does it mean? Well, $30 to $35 for you and me: with the income that we have, we likely won't see that; we likely won't feel the difference. But for somebody living on just over $1,600 a month or, even worse, for someone on income support with barriers living on less than $900 a month, losing $30 to $35 is a big deal. For families losing the guarantee, the assurance, that these trust accounts will not be used, that they will not be suctioned away, that they will not be used for eligibility – now that's gone.

I'm incredibly sad that throughout this debate so far I've not heard a government member stand up and address these questions. I ask again: if you don't intend to harm the integrity of the progress made for AISH recipients, why are you moving these provisions and these protections from legislation, which is law, into regulation? It's sort of the same story with: why would you cut AISH? "Well, we didn't cut AISH." Well, you did cut AISH; you just are using different language to describe it. You can call it deindex, whatever you like. The reality is that going forward, you have reduced the support that the government of Alberta is providing to disabled Albertans right across the province. That's a fact. I'm incredibly sad that not one government member has answered any specific questions about this. I've asked about deindexing. I've asked about Henson trusts. I have asked about all of these things. We know that the disability community and the advocates have said: this is not good; don't do this.

I believe that there's a great deal of respect for a provincial organization called Inclusion Alberta. This group, actually, by the way, was the group that advocated for many years to get this done. This group has publicly said that if the government does what they are able to do by moving this protection into regulation, they will go forward with legal action. That leads me to believe that there is a concern. I also believe that there was a post from a law firm – I think it's a Calgary law firm – that also addressed the Henson trusts and the inherent danger of moving these protections and provisions from legislation into regulation.

Still, not one government member has stood up and explained why on earth they would take these protections and provisions from the law, from the AISH Act, and move them into regulations. Why? What is the plan? If there's nothing to worry about, if there's nothing to see here, why on earth would you do that? I can't imagine that the government is looking for more work for no reason. I'm quite sure that you have enough to repeal, undo, and take backwards. Like, why would you do this?

You know, some of the other things that are also incredibly alarming to me – again, I have heard from government members the same information: no, no; don't worry; it'll be fine. Okay. I would really like to be reassured that everything will be fine, but I don't understand why you would take these things from the act and move them into regulation if you have no intention whatsoever of addressing (a) the definition of severe handicap and (b) eligibility, the eligibility of spouses or cohabiting partners. All of the benefits that are taken into consideration when eligibility for AISH is determined, things I mentioned the last time I spoke to this bill, things like death benefits, things like scholarships and bursaries: all of these things are critically important to eradicating poverty, which is, sadly, still in this day and age one of the biggest challenges that disabled Albertans face right across this province.

You know, there were a lot of things that we invested in for people with disabilities to start to chip away at this poverty that has been built up, secured, almost institutionalized over the last I don't know how many decades. What we're seeing is a systematic draw backwards. Whereas we finally got protection in the AISH Act – finally – now it's gone. Why? Why does no person from the government benches have the ability, the authority, the moral compass to stand up and explain this? Not just to me, because I'm actually not on AISH. I don't have a family member on AISH. Explain it to Albertans.

I know that every single one of the people that have been elected to serve in this place represents disabled Albertans – I know every single one of you do – and their families and their allies. You owe them an explanation. You don't owe me an explanation, clearly, but you owe them an explanation as to why you would systematically remove the progress and the protections that we installed in the AISH Act and move them to regulation when you didn't have to. You really didn't. You could have actually taken us in the other direction and made it even stronger. There are other things in play around employment that relate to AISH. There are other things in play around income supports that would do really unique things for people with disabilities to move them forward instead of squarely planting them in the poverty that is their reality today.

In one piece of omnibus legislation you've managed to take us backwards in, I don't know, 20 different areas, one of which, of huge concern to Albertans, is related to AISH. Can you imagine for people, for disabled Albertans, to think: okay; well, the government is not cutting AISH this year. We saw their budget. We saw their projections for the next few years, and what we have established – and this is fact, right? These are not speaking points. This is fact based on your own documents. AISH increases to the overall AISH program will not increase in the out-years.

Yes, you did cover everything you needed to cover, the growth and all of that this year, which is great, and I've said that before, but in the out-years the per cent of growth that is required because AISH intake – people move to Alberta; people turn 18. They become eligible for AISH benefits. That intake, that growth, does not match your budget in the next few years. Clearly, there is something in play. There is something being planned to address that shortfall. The government has been fairly clear about not reducing the actual AISH benefit amounts, which is great. I'll take them at their word. But what else is planned? You've removed provisions within the AISH Act around eligibility, around protection in terms of discretionary and nondiscretionary trusts. You've actually removed the ability to define what is a severe handicap right from the act.

As you know, maybe for new members that aren't quite aware, when something is in the act, it is enforced and monitored, and there is oversight in a very different way than when something is in regulation. When something is in regulation, although, yes, there are some steps that have to be taken – if you are vigilant and watching, you'll be able to see what happens – we don't debate it in this place. We were all sent here to represent people. This place is where we have robust debate about what is being planned and what has been introduced, but you've now removed the ability to do that.

Madam Chair, once again I'm incredibly disappointed. I'm disappointed, number one, in the enormity of the changes being proposed and, well, the unwillingness of government to actually just say it. If that's what you're doing, own it, just stand up and say: "Yeah, that's what we're doing. Yeah, that's what we're planning. Could be we might be cutting this. We might be changing how you qualify for AISH. We might be changing how you define 'severe disability.' Yes, we're doing all of these things, and that's why we've moved this stuff out of legislation into regulation."

I've heard nothing, just crickets. So we are left to wonder: what is going on? You don't owe me an explanation, but you sure as heck owe your constituents an explanation. If you choose to continue to ignore them, you will get the blowback. I have no doubt about that.

With that, Madam Chair, I am going to end my comments and pass it on to my colleagues. Thanks.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's always an honour to get up in the House and speak to bills and specifically Bill 21, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019. I've gotten up several times in this House to speak about the differences in perspective that we all have. I appreciate that our colleagues from across the way and over here to our right have a specific way of looking at the world and what they deem to be the most appropriate way for moving forward. I have no doubt that they honestly believe that they are making the economy better. But where we begin to differ is: who actually has to pay for making those changes moving into the future? What we see with Bill 21, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, is that so many of the costs are passed on to Albertans, not only just Albertans in general but also in some cases the most vulnerable Albertans.

I've gotten up in this House several times to speak about my constituents and the makeup of my constituents. A lot of them are young families. Also, a lot of them are new Canadians, that have come here to Canada to establish themselves so that they can provide a better future for themselves and for their children, many of them with the hopes that their children will be able to go to university and receive a much better education than perhaps they would have back in their country of origin.

So they're happy to be here, to immigrate to Canada, to now call Alberta their home and set up and establish their roots here, just like many other Canadians have done. They come here as immigrants, establish themselves, start businesses, contribute to the economy and to society as a whole, and really make sure that they're contributing because they want to be able to live here in a successful way, live up to a certain standard of living. What we see with Bill 21 is that it's eroding that standard of living for people who are working two, three jobs.

Now, I identify so much with these immigrant families because, of course, as I've shared before in the House but I'll share again, my parents came here fleeing violence in South America. For 17 years they worked two jobs. You know, for me, this is what bothers me, I'll say, Madam Chair, that so many people on the right side of the political spectrum will criticize people on the left as being lazy or that we don't want to work hard enough or that we don't know what real hard work is when nothing can be further from the truth.

My parents came here. They had their day jobs, which they worked for eight, eight and a half hours a day, sometimes nine. They would come home, they'd make dinner quickly, and then they were back out the door once again. My mother and father worked for 17 years doing janitorial service just so that they could make ends meet, so that they could pay the mortgage, make sure that we had enough to go to school, make sure that we would never have to go without.

These are the kinds of Albertans that call Alberta home, new Canadians that are here working hard each and every day. You know, so many times we hear from other Albertans that these new Canadians are just coming here to live off the system. I'm sure that there are some bad apples out there – I'm sure – but the grand majority of all these new Canadians that are coming here are coming here to contribute and give over and above to make sure that this economy continues to function.

So it's at their service that we as a government should be inside this House making sure that we are helping them out as they continue to forge forward in building a better life for themselves and for their children. Of course, with Bill 21, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, again – I repeat – it's affecting in some cases the most vulnerable of Albertans. As my colleague from St. Albert discussed at length, with the deindexing of AISH it's going to affect people who are the most marginalized. The most marginalized.

But in terms of university students – well, first, let me say this. I get where the perspective of the colleagues on the other side is coming from. They expected that their $4.7 billion corporate handout was going to create jobs. The reality of the fact, though, is that not one job has been created through this whole process, and instead – hey, you know, what I just find unfathomable is the fact that we continue to have members from the UCP get up inside this House and continue to criticize us and blame us for so many of these companies that are leaving this jurisdiction when they've already given money out to some of these corporations to give them the incentive to stay here.

Instead, what do we see? They're taking that money, and they're investing it in other jurisdictions across Canada and North America, and they're actually leaving. Under your government they're leaving. Under your government they are leaving Alberta. So what do you say to that? Your incentives don't seem to be working. I mean, you can be like: oh; okay; well, you guys were in government for the last four years, so you created the conditions. Well, now you're in the driver's seat, guys. You're in the driver's seat, and your corporate handout hasn't produced one new job yet.

In fact, there are so many people being laid off in the private sector. Not only that, we have people in the public sector now being laid off. Universities are laying off sessional professors. We've got teachers' assistants being laid off in the education system, teachers themselves. Classrooms are growing. All to pay for this $4.7 billion no-jobs corporate handout, and now Albertans are going to have to pay through Bill 21, what you've called the Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act.

I get it. We've got to live according to our means. I get it, but at the same time: who are you asking to make the sacrifices? Now, there are people in our society, in our province who can afford to pay just a little bit more. I remember being on the doorstep and talking to some of these people, doctors in my community who were like: "You know what? I don't mind. I don't mind having to pay a little bit more under a progressive taxation system. I don't mind doing that because I do have the means to give a little bit more so that we can continue building and moving Alberta forward." But under Bill 21 we're asking the most vulnerable people to sacrifice.

Now, I don't know what it's like to live on AISH. I have no idea. I'm sure that there are a lot of people out there on AISH who would love to let everybody in this House know what that reality is like. I've had a few constituents come and see me over the years to tell me about what their reality is like, having to live on AISH, how tough it is, and having to make decisions between paying rent or paying electricity bills and buying food at the supermarket. I'd hate to be in that kind of a position. I'd really, really hate to be in that kind of a position, yet this is the reality that so many people are going through.

When we ask the most vulnerable to make the sacrifices, what does that say about us? What does it say about us, the members in this House? Why can't we find other ways? Why aren't we making other priorities and making sure that we can pay off this debt and deficit as we continue moving forward? Why are the most vulnerable people here in the province of Alberta being asked to sacrifice when we see our own Premier taking jets with his friends from a pancake breakfast?

We see employees of the Premier going to London, you know, staying in hotels with champagne baths. I don't even know what that is. I've never even heard of that before in my life. [interjections] These are the kinds of hotels that these guys are staying at, people that are under your watch. People that are under your watch. [interjections] Yeah. Chirp, chirp, chirp, eh? Chirp, chirp, chirp. Yeah, you can't stand it, right? When you're asking the most vulnerable people in Alberta...

An Hon. Member: Vitamin C showers.

Member Loyola: Vitamin C showers. There you go. That's what it was.

An Hon. Member: Champagne baths.

Member Loyola: Oh, champagne baths, I wouldn't put it past them. [interjections] Champagne bars? Is that what it was? Champagne bars? There you go. That's what it was, see?

I've never even heard of those things, never even had the experience before. Never had the opportunity to stay in such a luxurious place as that before in my life. That's not the kind of Albertan I am. Obviously, the government has people under its watch going to London, staying at these luxurious hotels, and the taxpayer is having to pay for it. Yet this government has no problem asking the most vulnerable Albertans to sacrifice so that we can ensure fiscal sustainability as we move forward.

11:00

What I would really like to ask the members from the other side to think about is: why are you asking the most vulnerable to sacrifice? People living on AISH shouldn't be the ones that have to help us make sure to balance this budget moving forward. People that are living paycheque to paycheque shouldn't be the ones that have to bear the brunt of making sure to balance this budget. Children in classrooms shouldn't be the ones that have to bear the brunt of making sure that this budget is balanced. University students shouldn't have to bear the brunt. Right? We need to find other ways in order to make sure that we are fiscally sustainable moving forward. There are other ways to do it. All I'm asking is for the members from the other side of the House to really contemplate what it is that they're asking Albertans to do.

You know, the government has tabled 107 pages of legislation, that cover a vast array of topics. I understand. They're wide ranging and complex. Some of the members on the other side, when they were on this side, criticized this whole omnibus approach. They were, like, "Oh, you can't do that," yet here they are now, in government, doing the exact same thing. Doing the exact same thing. What's most disappointing is that the government is using this omnibus approach and hiding so many of these things, as was well described by the Member for St. Albert, when it comes to the indexing of AISH and, of course, the Henson trust. There are so many other aspects within this omnibus approach where the true intentions are being hidden from Albertans, Madam Chair. It's really important that the members from the UCP get up and speak about this as well.

Of course, these intentions that are being hidden within this omnibus approach are going to be impacting people in your constituencies as well. I'm sure that every constituency across this province has people who live on AISH, has average Albertans that are trying to send their children to university, has children that are in the school system that perhaps now are having to deal with 35 children in a classroom. And then those constituents will be asking each and every one of you: why is it that we have to make the sacrifices when we see your government doing these other things like taking jet planes and having employees that stay at luxurious hotels, with vitamin C baths, showers? Right? It's okay. Don't worry. Don't worry. If you like taking vitamin C showers, it's okay. Don't worry.

The other thing that I haven't had the chance to talk about as well is the deindexing of the seniors' programs, seniors who have given so much to this province over their lifetime. This government said that they were going to make life better for seniors, yet here again in this omnibus legislation we see the intention being hidden. Instead, they're taking money out of the pockets of seniors to pay for this $4.7 billion, again, corporate no-jobs handout. They're taking benefits from seniors and their dependants, especially those who live on a fixed income, and that's wrong. It's just plain wrong.

There are cuts to lodge funding, the deindexing of benefits, kicking dependants of seniors off their drug plans, the seniors' drug plan. Although these things may seem small, to people who live on a fixed income, just the same as for those who live on AISH, to these seniors, who also live on a fixed income, even a little bit of money goes a long way, and they'll have to decide whether they pay for the drug that they need or whether they're going to be paying for groceries. I just can't understand why the most vulnerable in our society are being asked to make these sacrifices when we're supposed to be here defending their interests.

Again, I'm just going to appeal to the members of the UCP. You all have seniors that live in your ridings. You all have people who live on AISH. You have young families who have their kids going to school, families that are trying to send their children to university. What are you going to say to them when they show up at your door asking why they have to make the sacrifices?

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 21, Ensuring Fiscal Sustainability Act, 2019. It's not doing what the title suggests; rather, it takes money away from Albertans from everywhere to pay for the UCP's $4.7 billion corporate no-jobs handout.

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

Before I talk about the bill, I do also want to recognize that today is the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. Today we recognize the contributions they make to our communities, to our society, recognize the struggles that they face for their full inclusion, and also recommit ourselves to making sure that they're included in the cultural, economic, political, and social life of our province.

When I think about it, I think there are many things in this piece of legislation that are attacking the services that Albertans with disabilities receive.

When we were government, we made a lot of improvements. For instance, we were able to set up Alberta's first disability advocate to represent their viewpoint and to have their voice at the decision-making tables. We proclaimed October as Disability Employment Awareness Month, recognizing that their participation in our job market, their participation in the economic life of the province is way lower than other Albertans. We didn't just proclaim it; we also put money where our mouth was. We added funding to their employment programs. We created almost 20 internship opportunities within the Ministry of Community and Social Services. We indexed AISH. We increased it. We indexed it so that the benefit level won't erode with the cost of living. This piece of legislation is taking that away.

Mr. Chair, you will remember that during the campaign I said that they will reduce these benefits, that they will cut these benefits, and the Premier himself took to Facebook with a video that it's just over-the-top rhetoric and that we are creating fear and smear. What we are seeing in this piece of legislation is that this government is taking back that $30 increase that they were supposed to get with CPI. At a time when they can pay for a $4.7 billion handout, they think it's too onerous for the province to provide them with a $30 cost of living. For those individuals who are on AISH that are living with disabilities, they are living on a limited income, and on top of that, they have disabilities. They think it's onerous to pay a $30 cost-of-living increase for them. That piece of legislation is taking that increase away.

When we were in government, we also improved and increased income exemption for individuals with disabilities. What this legislation is doing is taking those exemptions and putting everything in regulation, that won't be debated in the House. Instead, a minister of cabinet will be able to decide what they think is acceptable for them to set these exemptions at. We also increased AISH child benefits, making it $200 for the first child and $100 for every subsequent child. Again, those benefits have now been taken from the act and put into regulation. That leaves it for the government and for the minister in cabinet to change those benefits without bringing them here or providing all of us with an opportunity to debate about those things.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

We simplified AISH application forms. We also made changes to the Henson trust. For people who have some inheritance or some money, if they want to give it to their loved one, give it to an individual, give it to their children, that money won't be counted in their eligibility for this program. It won't impact their benefits. Again, that was also a piece of legislation that was supported by the then opposition. It was passed unanimously in this House. What they are doing is removing that as well. Alberta was pretty much the only province that didn't exempt Henson trust, but they are bringing us backwards here as well.

When we were in government, there was a scale called the support intensity scale. The entire disability community was of the view that it was humiliating for individuals to go through that scale. They had been asking previous governments to remove that, and they never did. We worked with the community and also removed that support intensity scale. We repealed PDD safety standards that were imposed on them without any consultation by the previous PC government. We created a province-wide phone line to report abuse with respect to individuals with disabilities. We reversed previous government cuts to PUF, program unit funding, for schoolchildren.

There were many things that we worked on. We improved these programs, but certainly there is more work to be done. But instead of making any progress, instead of making improvements, what this piece of legislation is doing is taking us backwards. It's taking away from Albertans with disabilities. It's taking away from cost-of-living increases on their programs. It's repealing, almost, Henson trust, and it's taking all their benefits into the regulation, where they can be changed through order in council. These changes will hurt Albertans with disabilities, and I urge all members of this House to think about these changes. They all were elected to represent their constituents, and every one of us has individuals with disabilities in our constituencies, in our friend circles, in our families. These changes are eroding those benefits for those individuals, and it's not fair to those individuals. It's not something that a fair society will do to its most vulnerable.

Similarly, this piece of legislation is also pausing indexing for seniors' benefits. It's taking seniors off drug plans. It's changing the income for seniors' lodge programs, residual income. Before the budget the Minister of Seniors and Housing was saying that seniors will get whatever they need. Instead, what they are getting is that whatever they had before this is being taken away from them. Clearly, I guess, promise made, promise broken. These changes will make life harder for our seniors. I guess we, again, all have seniors in our homes, in our ridings, in our communities, and they deserve way better than this.
