2016, copy, that should have come into full force at that time. But due to the election and a new government, who chose not to bring it into force when boards were continuously asking for it, asking "When will that Education Act be fully in force so that we can use the natural person powers and some of the other very, very good pieces that are in this piece of legislation?" – I'm happy to say that we will be able to bring it into force and that the amendment act that we brought forward further aligns with what is the current reality and some of the things that we needed to address in terms of the kindergarten age of access and transportation issues, et cetera, et cetera.

Going back to what was just stated by the hon. member on the amendments that were brought forward, how was an amendment helpful that started with the words "that everything after the word 'that' should be eliminated"? That was not a helpful amendment.

On the other amendment that was brought forward, where we were able to show that it was already in the body of our amendment act and, not only that, that our amendment act went further to ensure that private schools will adhere to the law, we were able to show that, and they were able to then say of their amendment: oh, yes; it is in there.

I believe that we have given very thoughtful consideration to the amendments. I continue to hear that GSAs, QSAs will not be allowed, that we're putting children in danger. That is absolutely, categorically false. We've said it time and time again. It's in the act, it's in the amendment act, and I just don't know what else to say other than that I just wanted to put that on the record.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for a brief question and comment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: I just want to tease apart some of the things the minister just said. The act originally was passed in 2012. It wasn't proclaimed in 2012 or 2013 or 2014 or even the beginning of 2015 because there were significant issues with the act. It wasn't because there was an election called in 2015 that it didn't get proclaimed. It was because there were significant issues.

Then the minister went on to say: well, it should have been passed in 2016. But then the minister herself brought forward an amendment act because the bill wasn't good, Mr. Speaker. The act that was passed had significant issues. She admits that because she brought forward an amending act. The amendment act took most of the things that we did as a government to make education better, like capping school fees, bringing in leadership quality standards, making sure that the bands for superintendent compensation were brought over that we brought in. Most of the things that we did got brought over.

The thing that didn't get brought over was: have immediacy, have confidentiality, and have the name of the group for GSAs be transferred over. That's because the minister, in her own words when she was seeking the nomination for the party, said that she didn't support those bills. She thought that they were pushing a different agenda.

Well, Mr. Speaker, our agenda is keeping kids safe. That's why we brought forward those amendments. If the minister wanted to keep kids safe, she could have either not brought forward the amending act, she could have not pushed to proclaim the Education Act, or she could have just left things the way they were. The courts upheld the decision twice, because things did improve safety for students, and there's still more to be done. Even after those changes, the most recent data from government of Alberta surveys shows that 53 per cent of queer youth in schools don't feel safe.

What this government is doing is growing that gap, growing opportunities for inequality, Mr. Speaker. I wish that the words that are coming out of their mouths reflected reality, but the truth is that they are pushing this bill forward, which moves things backwards, not forwards. The truth is that they are intentionally doing this to move back in time, which is what the Premier said he would do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone else wishing to speak to third reading of Bill 8? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

11:00 a.m.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I do just want to take only a brief moment here to put my final thoughts on the record. I think that my opinion on this bill, Bill 8, has been stated quite clearly through the debate that's taken place over the last few weeks. I do just want to first of all thank the members of the opposition that took the opportunity to share stories from their constituents, share stories about how this issue affects them personally, specifically the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood once again, being the only openly LGBTQ member of this Assembly. I think that we should pause and take her words quite seriously. I do, of course, also want to thank the members of the government, the few of them that took the opportunity to stand and speak briefly. I do appreciate their comments on the record, and I thank them for that. Of course, I also would like to thank my own community for sharing their stories with myself and other members of the House.

Of course, I am, well, very profoundly frustrated, frustrated with the fact that this government doesn't seem to be changing their opinion on the fact that this bill does not strengthen GSAs or QSAs in our province. It pushes to weaken them. They will of course not admit that fact, but that's the truth, and people in the LGBTQ community and the students and the teachers and the education system as a whole can see that.

My final point would just be that I would plead with this government to change their opinion of this bill. Do not support it. Private members, other than the front bench, please consider the implications of this legislation. You know, the ministers and members of the government talk about being allies, but today we are not seeing that. Over the next four years or however long they are members of the government, they could raise as many pride flags as they would like and say as many nice words about the LGBTQ community as they like, but the fact is that if they move forward with weakening the ability of students and schools to form GSAs, as is laid out in this Bill 8 legislation, they are in fact turning their backs on the LGBTQ community in our province, and that is profoundly disappointing, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for a brief question or comment.

Seeing none, are there others wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I talked about earlier, it's been truly an honour to have had the stories of so many shared with me and with my colleagues and to have been able to present so many of those stories here in the House, stories from teachers, from students, from parents, people young and old, from rural and urban settings, queer folks, and allies. I wish that I could share all the stories that I've received because it means so much to have people reach out to us and to make themselves vulnerable in the hopes of bringing about change in our province.

Perhaps for the last time I want to share one of those stories. This one resonated with me as a teacher and as a member of the LGBTQ community. I cannot share her name, but, please, I ask you to hear her words.

I am a 27-year-old woman and I am a lesbian . . .

For the past five years, I have been a full-time teacher in rural central Alberta. I do my best to provide a safe and caring learning environment for all my students, which is the duty of all teachers and therefore the duty of the government that directs us. This means a safe and caring learning environment for children with learning disabilities, children who come from broken homes, children who are from minority backgrounds or religions, and children who are LGBTQ. It has become increasingly difficult to establish a safe and caring learning environment when I personally do not feel safe or cared for by the governing party in this province.

I have to hide a very large part of my identity on a daily basis. I worry about homophobic harassment and I worry about repercussions on my career. I live in a constant state of anxiety where I worry that someone from my school might see me out with my partner and ask questions. I don't worry about the students judging me, but I do worry about parents. What if they no longer want me teaching their child? What if they make a complaint? Am I going to lose my job? The fact that I even have to consider this is ridiculous, but the current legislation in Bill 8 makes it very clear to me that I am not worthy of the same protection against discrimination as my heterosexual colleagues.

Coming to terms with being queer is enough of a struggle without the fear of being outed, judged, or punished. Children deserve to come to school in a province that supports all of them equally, no matter the label. Without the amendments proposed by the NDP, children will suffer. I know this, because I've lived it. It was my childhood. In my small town, I could not come out due to severe bullying and the threat of being thrown out of my parents' house. My father once told me he thought they should "round up all the gays and hang them". My mother blamed their divorce on the fact that I was gay and they could not cope with it. My teachers in high school were the only adults I felt comfortable confiding in, and I truly believe their acceptance was the only thing that helped me [to] survive.

As a teacher, I've heard parents complain about discussing LGBTQ issues in the classroom because "it's wrong for them to be mentioned" . . . I've had parents make disparaging homophobic comments in front of me, and I could do nothing. I felt powerless, and I am an adult. Imagine how it must feel for a child who has nobody to turn to. A GSA might be the only safe space for these vulnerable youth . . . Being queer is not offensive or wrong, and our students deserve to know that.

Thank you to that teacher.

I urge you for one last time to heed her words and the words of all the other folks that we've shared in this House. To all those who've shared their stories with me and with my NDP colleagues: thank you. We see you, we value you, we love you, and no matter the outcome of this vote we will continue to stand with you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if someone would like to make a brief question or comment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to, briefly, very much stand in solidarity with the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who's led this caucus together with great strength and wisdom on this issue. I think that, following the remarks of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, I'd like to make it be known to all members of the LGBTQ2S-plus community that notwithstanding what happens with Bill 8, there is a safe place in this province that they can go to, no matter where in this province you live. It is in the office of your NDP opposition MLA. Please always know that you can contact us, communicate your experiences with us. We want to know about your GSA applications. We respect your views. We have your backs. We always will.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone would like to make an additional brief question or comment.

Seeing none, are there others wishing to speak?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Education to close debate, should she choose.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe we've had ample time to debate this amendment. I believe what I've said all along, that it is a very good amendment, that we look forward to the Education Act coming into full force with the amendment in place. I would encourage all the members to vote in favour of it. I close debate.

Thank you.

Bill 13 Alberta Senate Election Act

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at Bill 13. The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move the third reading of Bill 13, the Alberta Senate Election Act.

It seems like there's a little bit more of a jump in our steps here, so I'm going to be pretty brief in my remarks regarding Bill 13. I also just want to acknowledge all the hard-working people that have been up in the gallery here, all the work that they've done, all the staff, all the people here that make this happen. Mr. Speaker, to you and your team as well: we commend you for all the hard work that you've done here this spring. I appreciate all that hard work.

Albertans should be proud of the leadership role that Alberta has played in Senate reform here in Canada. We've been a leader on this front going back to 1987, when first legislation was passed to bring in Senate elections here in Alberta. Five out of 10 of the Senators that were nominated by this province went on to be appointed to the Senate. Some of those individuals have been probably the best Senators in Alberta history. We're proud of the work that they've done. This was just illustrated recently, Mr. Speaker, with the controversial bills C-69 and C-48, that just recently passed in Ottawa. The elected Senators Scott Tannas, Doug Black led the charge on behalf of Alberta against these bills, acting on Albertans' behalf, acting in their best interests.

That is why it is so critical at this point in time in our juncture that we bring back Senate elections, that we make sure that Albertans have their voice heard in Ottawa in the Senate. That is why we're making sure that we bring forward this legislation now. It's timely. We need to have this done. There's a Senate vacancy coming up in 2021. Going forward, we need to make sure that Albertans' voices are heard and that Albertans make sure that their priorities are there in Ottawa.

I had a few more notes here, Mr. Speaker, that I could go into, but I want to be a little bit brief here today. This speech was drafted a few days ago, and probably a little bit more timely thought may go into this, but I want to make sure that I thank everyone here in this House. We've had a vigorous debate. I believe that this bill is critical for the future of democratic reform in this province. I'm looking forward to those elections being held in our province. I want to thank everybody for their hard work on this.

I'm going to sit down and see if anybody else has anything to say.

The Speaker: Thank you to the hon. member. Given that it's still Wednesday here in the Assembly, I imagine that the speech was actually prepared today.

Are there others wishing to speak to third reading of Bill 13? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to the third and final reading of Bill 13, the act looking at senatorial elections here in the province of Alberta, the Alberta Senate Election Act. I'd like to echo the comments from the Minister of Justice. Indeed, we appreciate the support we've received from all of the fine legislative staff who've been here with us throughout the longest Wednesday in Alberta history. I imagine we're all thankful it was a Wednesday as opposed to a Monday. Generally, even Garfield didn't like Mondays. I apologize. My quality of humour declines with the length of the day, as much as we may all attempt.

With that in mind, I'd like to put a few brief thoughts on the record regarding this bill before we have the opportunity – we shall see, I guess – to see what the will is of the House. I recognize where the government is coming from with this bill. You know, certainly, we've had some robust discussion as a country about the value of the Canadian Senate, how it should be approached. We've had promises from some federal parties, and certainly all parties have had some policy of some sort around Senate reform. We saw attempts to move towards an elected Senate. We've seen the changes that have been brought forward under the current federal government. We've had other parties that have called for the utter abolishment of the Senate altogether.

But ultimately what we have here in choosing to return to this elected process here in the province of Alberta: it's still buying into a flawed system, buying into a system that is undemocratic in the sense that it is putting up people with appointments for life. There is that lack of accountability there. Even if an individual is elected to that position, there is no accountability once they are there. We are dependent on them, I guess, to make those decisions, and they are there until they should choose to step down, until they reach the age of 75, whichever comes first.

We recognize that Alberta continues to have an incredibly disproportionately low number of Senators compared to other jurisdictions in Canada given that we have only six Senators. Then, by comparison, Prince Edward Island has four. While we have a population of approximately 714,356 Albertans per Senator as of 2017, Prince Edward Island, then, had 38,005.

Again, it is still a flawed system that we are buying into, that we are choosing to give our endorsement, and, in the process of doing that, spending taxpayer money for that exercise. Generally I can understand that the government feels that this is an important gesture, that they feel this is something that improves this process. In my view, I'm not really sure that it adds any additional value to the situation.

I did want to observe, though, that I do appreciate the work that Alberta Senators have done. Certainly, I've seen some great thoughts that have come from Senator Doug Black. I've seen some great thoughts that have come from others. In particular, I just wanted to note one of the recent Senators that was appointed to the Senate. I've deeply appreciated the work of Senator Paula Simons. She has done an amazing job of engaging with Albertans, engaging with Canadians, indeed, through social media has thoughtfully laid out all of her steps, all of her process by which she has come to her decisions, the reasons that she has made them.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that that is an improvement on our democratic process. She has engaged thoughtfully and critically. She hasn't resorted to stale talking points. She hasn't bought into cheap narratives. At times she has been attacked and misrepresented, but I just wanted to state on the record that whether or not we agree with decisions that she may have made, I think that she demonstrates what a thoughtful legislator is intended to do, and that is to engage with constituents. I want to recognize also that she took the step of ensuring that Alberta had a voice on the committee in the Senate which deals with energy and natural resources. Alberta had no voice at that committee. When Senator Simons was appointed, she fought to get on that committee to ensure that Alberta's voice would be heard.

As much as we may be frustrated with the decisions that the majority of Senators make, I think we can take pride that we have Alberta Senators who are working to ensure that we have the best representation we can and that as this government continues to stand up for Alberta and we as an opposition continue to do the same, we can work with those folks that are there in the Senate to make sure that we continue to advance things as best we can for our province.

With that, I conclude my remarks on this bill.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone else wishing to speak to Bill 13 at third reading? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I appreciate the opportunity to rise on third reading, Mr. Speaker, and provide a few brief remarks. It's been a long Wednesday, and I'm looking forward to getting on with Friday. Somehow along the way we lost Thursday. I don't know what happened there, but that's the way the Legislature works.

I do want to provide a couple quick comments. First off, I'd like to respond to the hon. member from the opposition's arguments and presentation in this Chamber on Senate elections. To spend his portion of time in third reading trying to defend Senator Simons actions as an unelected Senator inside the Senate, I think, is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. It also points out the problem that we face as a province, and I do appreciate that the Minister of Justice is attempting to at least provide us some sort of say in that process. I know Senator Simons, and I get along with her. I have had many a nice conversation with her, but the reality is that she stood inside the Senate just a few short weeks ago and voted against the province of Alberta, voted against Albertans, and voted against our energy industry.

While some of her intentions along the way may have been right, to vote against the people of her own province is completely ridiculous and what Albertans have rejected and is why we propose to go back to electing Senators in this province and trying to have the Prime Minister appoint them to the Senate, because the reality is that, as the Minister of Justice pointed out, our two elected Senators inside the Senate right now: that's who stood up for the province of Alberta from day one. They stood up for the province of Alberta the entire way, and they stood up when it really mattered, Mr. Speaker, when they stood up and they voted for Alberta. They stood and they voted for Alberta, which is what we expect when it comes to our Senators, so I thank the Minister of Justice for bringing this forward.

I think it's also important to point out that as we come near to what I think is probably the end of session – we'll see what the Chamber decides shortly – the reality is, though, that this is another promise made and another promise kept. We have talked along the last eight weeks inside this Chamber, well into the night, about the fact that the United Conservative Party was elected on a historical mandate, the largest mandate in the history of this province, to come and to implement the largest platform that was ever run on in the history of this province, a clear platform. I know you've read it, Mr. Speaker. I know you've read it back and forth many times while you were campaigning in your own constituency.

One of the promises in there was to renew the Senatorial Selection Act, to hold elections for senatorial nominees by 2021. Today, Mr. Speaker, if the Chamber votes to get third reading passed, that will be another promise made and another promise kept by the hon. Premier and his government. That's what this is about. The reality of why we are still here on a Wednesday, well into 48 hours on a Wednesday inside this Chamber: at its core, this started with the opposition filibustering senatorial elections, and it's ended there. Hopefully, that's over, the actions that they have taken to ultimately filibuster this legislation. Hopefully, we're able to pass what Albertans voted for and get past that, because that's what Albertans expect.

For the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre to rise on his last comments on this issue and try to defend an unelected Senator who voted against this province shows exactly what the problem is with the Senate at the moment but also what the problem is with the NDP in general. They continue to side with anybody but Albertans. They continue along the way to side with their close ally Prime Minister Justin Trudeau. He certainly does not want to see elected Senators because Senator Tannas and Senator Black were his worst nightmare during bills C-69 and C-48, and we want to send some more people up there that will defend this province.

Mr. Speaker, I will close with this, and hopefully we can test the room to see if they're ready to let the Legislature decide what is going on with Bill 13 and make a decision. [interjection] Sorry. I thought the Opposition House Leader was talking to me, but he's clearly talking about something else, which is totally fine. But we'll let them make a decision on what is taking place inside this Chamber going forward.

I want to close by reminding everybody that this session started with bills like Bill 13, that were promised to the people of Alberta, who voted for it in overwhelming numbers on April 16. This government caucus, under the leadership of the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, the hon. Premier of this province, is following through on those promises, and I want to assure Albertans, through you, that we will continue to when we come back to this place. When we make promises, we're going to keep them even if that side of the House wants to filibuster and try to prevent things like senatorial elections.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader might have a request of the Assembly, perhaps?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I sense that you're asking that I may want to seek the unanimous consent of this Chamber for one-minute bells for this division.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Is there anyone else wishing to speak?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to close debate should he choose.

11:40 a.m.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I move to close debate.

The Speaker: Well said.

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a notice that I would like to provide the House, but first of all, just briefly, I'd like to thank you and all your deputies for your hard work over the last few days; the Clerk and her team; the teams, of course, at Hansard; all the LAO staff; our pages, who have been incredible through some of the longest days inside this Chamber; the Sergeant-at-Arms' office as well as all caucus staff on all sides of the aisle and the government staff who have participated in this process. Lastly, I'd like to close off by thanking members in all parties inside the Chamber. It's been a long road, and I know we have disagreed lots along the way, but certainly it's been tough work, and we've been able to get that progress done. I wish you safe travels. Anybody who has not slept well, please take the time before they hit the road today.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise you and all members that pursuant to Government Motion 26 the business for the 2019 spring sitting is concluded.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I thank the hon. Government House Leader, and prior to the proclamation of the session concluding, I too would like to echo some of the comments that the Government House Leader has made. On July 3 at 1:29 p.m., Wednesday began. That was approximately 46 hours and 20 minutes ago. This is the longest Wednesday or the longest single sitting day in Alberta's history.

I'd like to very briefly thank the staff of both caucuses. I'd also like to thank particularly the staff in the Speaker's office, who have also put in some additional hours. At no point in time in Alberta's history has committee sat as long as it has in duration in one sitting as it did over the past three days. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Airdrie-East as well as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie for their particularly lengthy and dedicated service to the Assembly. I'd also like to thank the broadcast services. If we are here, there are members at the control tower that are tending to the needs of our Assembly. Sheriffs, pages, legislative security staff, the table have done an absolutely incredible job. As you know, the table staff is not that large, and they have put in some very, very, very lengthy hours. While the opposition may have had shifts of six and the government may have shifts in the 25s or 30s, there were only six members of the table, so they have done an incredible job.

I'd also like to echo the comments that were made by the Government House Leader. Please, please, please, please, I know that you all have a very busy weekend scheduled, but there is nothing that's more important than you arriving safely, so please drive to arrive and ensure that you take whatever necessary steps to make sure you get to your next meeting and we have no concerns.

Lastly, I would like to invite all of the new members to join us at the front of the building for the time-honoured end-of-session traditions that I'm sure you've all been made very well aware of.

Having said that, pursuant to Government Motion 26 on July 2, 2019, the House now stands adjourned until October 2019.

[The Assembly adjourned at 11:50 a.m. on Friday pursuant to Government Motion 26]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 1st Session (2019)

Activity to Wednesday, July 3, 2019

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

10 a.m.

Tuesday, October 8, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Law Clerk Teri Cherkewich

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed to Orders of the Day, I would like to take a moment to introduce a new table officer to the Assembly, the new Law Clerk, Teri Cherkewich. Teri joins the Alberta table with over 16 years of legal experience in the Yukon government, nine of those most recent years as Legislative Counsel in Yukon's Legislative Counsel office. Teri holds a bachelor of law from the University of Saskatchewan, and her professional experience includes extensive involvement in professional associations, notably the Canadian Study of Parliament Group and the Uniform Law Commission of Canada. Please join me in welcoming Teri to our province and to the table this morning.

Ordres du jour.

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has the call.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you to all members of the House, welcome back to the House.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to start off by moving Government Motion 29, which is on the Order Paper. We'll be moving two government motions this morning. I'll seek your direction if you would like me to read it off the Order Paper or if you're fine with me just moving it as Government Motion 29.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Government House Leader. I think that in this instance reading Government Motion 29 would be reasonable. I can imagine that the Speaker may have some leniency with respect to additional government motions this morning.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With that said, then, I propose the following motion.

Committee Membership Changes

29. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:
Be it resolved that the membership of the Assembly's committees be replaced as follows:
- A. on the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund that Mr. Orr replace Mr. Gotfried as chair, Mr. Getson replace Mr. Orr as deputy chair,

- Member Loyola replace Member Irwin, and Mr. Singh replace Mr. Gotfried;
- B. on the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills that Ms Glasgo replace Mr. Gotfried;
- C. on the Standing Committee on Public Accounts that Mr. Jeremy Nixon replace Mr. Amery;
- D. on the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services that Mr. Neudorf replace Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk;
- E. on the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future that Member Irwin replace Mr. Dach;
- F. on the Standing Committee on Families and Communities that Mr. Shepherd replace Member Irwin;
- G. on the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship that Mr. Dach replace Member Loyola and Mr. Loewen replace Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 18(1)(h) this is a debatable motion. Anyone wishing to add to the debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At the onset I'd like to request a separate vote for Government Motion 29 part A, with the following motions to be voted on as a block but that first motion to be separate, and with your indulgence I will speak to why I'm making this request.

Mr. Speaker, I have great concerns with the appointment of the Member for Calgary-East to Heritage Savings Trust Fund. The committee approves the annual report and quarterly reports on the fund, including public meetings with Albertans on its investments, investment activities, and performance. Now, my concerns: last we heard, the Election Commissioner was investigating the MLA for Calgary-East, and we've yet to hear if these investigations have been concluded. Further, his business was raided by the RCMP. We've yet to hear the conclusion of that. As well, for a member who is being investigated for allegations of fraud, forgery, and bribery to be put on a committee for overseeing Alberta's future is a slap in the face to Albertans. We believe another member should be put on this committee instead or the existing Member for Calgary-Fish Creek should remain on that committee. That's up to the government. We're calling on the UCP government to take these allegations seriously and abstain from rewarding members who are the focus of very serious allegations.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in this instance this motion can be divided for multiple votes, recorded or not, so I'll be happy to proceed in such a manner, where part A will be voted on separately from the additional portions of the motion.

Having said that, are there any other members wishing to add to the debate this morning with respect to Government Motion 29? Seeing none.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 29 part A carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:06 a.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has the call.

Amendments to Standing Orders

30. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

- A. Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta effective May 30, 2019, be amended as follows:
  1. Standing Order 3(4) is amended by striking out “Unless otherwise ordered” and substituting “Unless otherwise ordered or varied under suborder (5), (5.1), (8) or (9)”.
  2. Standing Order 7(4) is amended by striking out “6 Members” and substituting “9 Members”.
  3. Standing Order 8(7)(c) is amended by striking out “8 sitting days” wherever it occurs and substituting “4 sitting days”.
  4. Standing Order 41(1) is struck out and the following is substituted:

41(1) The sequence of motions other than Government motions shall be determined by a random draw of the names of all Members except for

    - (a) the Speaker,
    - (b) members of the Executive Council, and
    - (c) any Member who has submitted written notice to the Clerk no later than 3 days prior to the date of the draw of the Member’s intention to be excluded from the draw.
  5. Standing Order 56(2.4) is struck out and the following is substituted:

(2.4) A temporary substitution may be terminated at any time by the original Member of the committee and shall not be in effect during any portion of a committee meeting that the original Member attends.
  6. The following is added after Standing Order 61:

Voting – interim and supplementary estimates

61.1(1) At the end of consideration of interim or supplementary estimates there shall be one vote in Committee of Supply on the estimates of the Legislative Assembly and the officers of the Legislature followed by one vote on the estimates of the Government unless

- (a) additional votes are required on amendments pursuant to suborder (3) prior to calling the vote on the interim or supplementary estimates, or
  - (b) on at least one day’s notice a Member has provided written notification to the Chair and the Clerk of the Member’s desire that the estimates of a particular ministry be voted upon separately, in which case that ministry’s estimates shall be voted separately and the final vote for the interim or supplementary estimates shall consist of the estimates of any ministries not yet voted upon.
- (2) The votes under suborder (1) shall be taken without debate or amendment except as provided in suborder (3).
- (3) When an amendment to the interim or supplementary estimates is moved in Committee of Supply, the vote on the amendment stands deferred until the end of consideration of the interim or supplementary estimates.
7. Standing Order 65(1)(b) is amended by striking out “in committees of the whole Assembly” and substituting “subject to Standing Order 29(3)(b) and (c), in committees of the whole Assembly”.
  8. Standing Order 72(1) is struck out and the following is substituted:

72(1) The sequence of Public Bills and Orders other than Government Bills and Orders shall be determined by a random draw of the names of all Members except for

    - (a) the Speaker,
    - (b) members of the Executive Council, and
    - (c) any Member who has submitted written notice to Parliamentary Counsel no later than 3 days prior to the date of the draw of the Member’s intention to be excluded from the draw.
  9. Standing Order 108 is struck out and the following is substituted:

Duties of Clerk Assistant

108 The Clerk Assistant of the Assembly shall

- (a) assist the Clerk of the Assembly in fulfilling the Clerk’s duties in the Assembly, in divisions, and in the general administration of the Legislative Assembly, and
- (b) in the absence of the Clerk, substitute for the Clerk and exercise the authority and discharge the responsibilities normally vested in the Clerk subject to such orders that may be received from the Speaker or the Clerk.

Duties of Clerk of Committees

108.1 The Clerk of Committees

- (a) is responsible for administrative support to all committees of the Assembly and the

- safekeeping of all committee papers and records, and
- (b) in the absence of the Clerk and the Clerk Assistant, substitute for the Clerk and exercise the authority and discharge the responsibilities normally vested in the Clerk subject to such orders that may be received from the Speaker or the Clerk.
10. The heading to Standing Order 109 is amended by striking out “Parliamentary Counsel” and substituting “the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel”.
11. Standing Order 109 is amended
- (a) by renumbering Standing Order 109 as Standing Order 109(1),
- (b) in suborder (1)(c) by striking out “Clerk and the Clerk Assistant” and substituting “Clerk, Clerk Assistant, and Clerk of Committees”, and
- (c) by adding the following after suborder (1):
- (2) The Law Clerk shall serve as head of the office of Parliamentary Counsel.
- B. And be it further resolved that the amendments in this motion shall come into force on passage.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of these standing order changes are housekeeping and help to standardize current practice. One of the changes I’m very pleased to propose is an increase in the number of members’ statements from six to nine. These additional statements were something I committed to deliver in the spring in order to increase the opportunities for private members, including the opposition, to highlight topics of concern for their constituents. It’s my hope to pass this before lunch so that we can give members that opportunity today during question period. As such, I ask for support from the Chamber for that motion, and I will seek your direction if you would like me to read it. It’s rather lengthy.

The Speaker: Hon. members, given that I am always in support of an effective and smooth-running Legislative Assembly – I know that all of you have had the opportunity to review the Order Paper that has been circulated. I also notice that it may have been tweeted this morning as well to provide Albertans the opportunity to review the Order Paper. As such, I think we will allow the Government House Leader the opportunity to not read the lengthy change to the standing orders.

This is a debatable motion, and any member wishing to add to the debate would be welcome to do so now. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has risen.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, appreciate finding ways to be a little more efficient with our time, so I won’t take up too, too much time. Just a few comments on this. I mean, first of all, I do want to thank the government in their efforts to work with the opposition to identify some standing order changes that we feel are acceptable. I’ll say at the onset that I will be supporting this change or suite of changes to our standing orders. But just a few comments for Albertans to know specifically what’s in here and what it does mean for members of the Assembly.

We know that Standing Order 3(4) really codifies how the government has the right to change the different sitting dates and the different tools that they have at their disposal. We recognize that these were always available to government. This is nothing new but just putting it into the standing orders.

I’m going to jump over 7(4).

As far as 8(7)(c), this is referring to reducing the sitting days from eight to four. It’s a curious one, to which we still haven’t receive an adequate response from the government as to why they’re making this change. Currently the government can bring private members’ bills back from second reading to committee within four days. I mean, it currently reads: within eight days. Four days is within eight days, so they have the same ability. What it does is to reduce the time that they could take, so they’re losing an additional four days. Now, if the reason for this is to be a little more expeditious with private members’ bills, to try to bring them back to the Assembly quicker, then that is something that I and we can get behind. We know that private members have limited time for debate. Our Monday afternoons are the only day of the week that are devoted to private members. We know that there are a significant number of members on both sides of the House. Obviously, this applies to government private members as well. If it is with the intention to expedite bills, bring them back for quicker turnarounds for debate, then that is something that we can support.

My favourite standing order change in this package, Mr. Speaker, is Standing Order 41(1), and that is where all private members are automatically – their names are placed in for draws on bills and motions. It’d be interesting to look at the history of this place as to why it was an opt-in instead of an opt-out, which is challenging, I think, for members that have to, you know, get it in before a certain date. I’m happy to see that now all private members will be in the draws unless they choose to opt out. That one gets a gold star, in our opinion, our humble opinion.

The next one, I think, is also a very sensible one, Standing Order 56(2.4), that allows members, if you have committee meetings, if a member is unavailable for a portion of the meeting and lines up a substitute, if they are available to come in halfway through the meeting, to in fact take their chair and take over voting. I think that absolutely makes sense. That, in fact, encourages members, if they only have to miss a portion of a meeting, to get to a committee meeting, which makes absolute sense. Very happy with that change, Mr. Speaker.

I do want to talk a little bit about the change to Standing Order 61.1(1). This is talking about votes for interim and sup supply. In the past, Mr. Speaker, every line item for every ministry was pulled out and voted on separately. Now, I appreciate that this can be a little tedious, it can be lengthy, but we know that it’s important for Albertans to see exactly what the budgeted amounts for interim and sup supply are. So I think this was a great example of a compromise between the government and the opposition in that we will have the ability to identify which ministries we’d like voted on separately. Those that we are okay with voting on as a block will be voted on as a block. A great example of finding a system that enhances efficiency but gives us the ability at the same time to highlight certain ministries and their spending.

The next one is Standing Order 65(1)(b), and that is really codifying how much time members would agree to during Committee of the Whole debate for private members’ bills. We’re codifying this for 10 minutes per member. Really, the reason behind this – this always was worked out through House leaders’ agreements – is because, again, there is limited time to debate private members’ bills. Members of all the parties would agree that they would shorten their time so that more people could get up and speak. Now we are codifying this, and now it’ll be up to 10 minutes. That’s good, too.

The only other one that I jumped over and I’ll come back to is Standing Order 7(4). This is increasing the number of members’ statements per day. Now, at the onset, of course, I’m in favour of members having more opportunities and of more members to get up and give a two-minute address to the Assembly to talk about issues and topics and subjects that are important to them as members, important to their constituents and constituencies. But for me, Mr. Speaker, the sore spot on this one is the fact that the reason we have so much more time at the start of our Routine at 1:30 is because the government decided to eliminate introductions. I think that was wrong. I think that decision was wrong. The opportunity for Albertans to come to this place, to be recognized, to have their names written in Hansard, to be in Alberta's history books forever is now an opportunity that has been taken away from them. I think that there was a middle-of-the-road solution.

I appreciate conversations that we had with the government. Some introductions went on at length, and that interfered with other members being able to do their introductions or members' statements. I appreciate that. We were open to negotiating a limit on how long introductions could be to ensure we expedite the process. Instead, this government is deciding to, really, pull the carpet out from under not just Albertans but, you know, the tradition of introductions in this building that has gone on for many, many, many years. For me, Ottawa doesn't do everything better, and I appreciate that in the House of Commons they don't have introductions. I think that's sad. I think they've missed out on an opportunity for Canadians or visitors to be introduced in this place.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I've had the privilege and honour of being a member since 2012, and there's still not a single day that I've walked through these doors and I'm not feeling humbled and in awe of being a member, being elected to this Chamber, and how special it is. There are, I believe, fewer than a thousand Albertans in the history of this province who have been a member. It is an extreme honour, and I know that I have constituents, as do my colleagues, who are disappointed that they can't come into the Legislature: many, many seniors who loved to come here to be introduced. It develops a personal connection.

If you look especially at young people coming in – we want them to get interested. We want them to be future candidates and members representing our great province. Although I support the fact that we now have more members' statements to make good use of our time in this place, I can't help but be reminded how disappointing it is that introductions are now taken away.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the sound of your voice and know that you do introductions on behalf of the school groups, but I do think that what's lacking and what's missing now is the connection between members and their own guests to give a little bit of backstory. The other thing, quite frankly, that I've enjoyed over the last seven years is learning more about the members in this Assembly when they come and introduce their families, when they introduce friends of theirs, when they introduce their constituents. This is how we get to know each other.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

Point of Order Repetition Items Previously Decided

The Speaker: A point of order has been called. I'll recognize the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everybody is on 23(c): persistent and "needless repetition or raises matters that have been decided during the current session." This has absolutely nothing to do with the standing order package that we're debating. The hon.

Opposition House Leader has admitted that in his own remarks and should get back to the task that is at hand.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader, if he chooses to add to this very important point of order.

Mr. Bilous: Oh, I'm always happy to.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a point of order. I've made it very clear how my point relates back to why we have additional members' statements. In this place past Speakers have given members the swath and ability to be able to express their point. I think what the Government House Leader is attempting to do – and we've seen this before – is to try to stifle debate and limit what members can say when they are talking to express their point. Quite frankly, my point applies to every member in this House. This is not a point of order. I appreciate that the Government House Leader is already tired of hearing my voice after 15 minutes, but, again, this is not a point of order. I'd love to continue to talk.

The Speaker: Thank you for your interjections. I would tend to agree with the Opposition House Leader that this isn't, in fact, a point of order, and we will continue with his remarks.

Debate Continued

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was kind of hoping that maybe we'd get by one day without a point of order, but that's okay. My hopes are dashed.

Ms Phillips: Your presence is a point of order.

Mr. Bilous: Okay. Well, that was witty. I need to say that for Hansard. The Member for Lethbridge-West said that my presence creates points of order.

I will wrap up my comments. This package – I will say, Mr. Speaker, that we know that there are more changes to the standing orders that the government is proposing, and I'll hold my comments for those changes at that time. This suite of changes, again, codifies a number of different practices that we already have in place.

As well, the one that I didn't talk about but that I appreciate is very much a housekeeping item is that the positions for the table officers are codified along with their responsibilities. I appreciate all of the work that they do, and now it'll be codified forever in the standing orders.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think I made my point. In fact, thank you to the Government House Leader for jumping up on a point of order. That means that I have made my point on the additional members' statements.

With this, I will be supporting these standing order changes. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we all know that we all have a favourite standing order, so I appreciate you sharing yours.

Are there others wishing to speak to Government Motion 30? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. Is that right? It's my first day.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I suspect you will have it memorized again very quickly.

I want to thank the Opposition House Leader for highlighting some important points, and I appreciate what the Government House Leader added to the debate as well. I do want to say that the question of introductions is absolutely connected to a decision that was made in the last session to rush through other standing order changes, and while I think that these probably, by and large, are improvements to today's standing orders, I think the reason why we have to consider them is because the government rushed so quickly last session to bring forward standing order changes that seriously stifled the ability of private members on both sides of the House to engage fully in the business of this place. This place is, of course, one that deals with a significant amount of government business, but it also is a place that is intended to deal with private members' business.

I do want to touch on one piece that relates to something that the Opposition House Leader mentioned previously, and that was when he was talking about introductions. I remember the day that you, Mr. Speaker, introduced your grandmother in this place. I think it was a moment that touched many of us and helped us get to know you on a slightly deeper level and see your grandmother's pride in having you say her name in this place. I remember the day that I introduced a constituent, Vera Saunders, who at the time was 105 – now she's 107 – sitting in this place. You know, she worked to help me get here, and seeing me say her name was something that she helped accomplish. That was one of her successes beyond her 100 years, that she was still able to contribute to having somebody elected and having that elected person be in their place speaking about something that mattered to her, her 105th birthday. What a nice thing to be able to have, a moment to honour with her and her family.

I think that when we rush things through this place instead of taking the time to go through the proper processes and procedures, like sending them to a committee that actually has the mandate to develop standing orders, we end up having to play catch-up.

I know that there were some members of the then Wildrose caucus who used to say that there are unintended consequences when you don't take things through full and appropriate process. One of the unintended consequences – or maybe it was intended; maybe people love hearing the opposition speak in the mornings in the House to things like standing orders. But by rushing things through in the last session, we were left in a situation where, now, here we are debating further standing order amendments. Again, don't love the process, don't love that it didn't go to the committee to be worked on that actually has a mandate to address this.

If the government front bench is going to make decisions about what is actually the mandate of a committee, I wonder what the role is of private members on those committees. I wonder if it's just to rubber-stamp something that's being sent through folks, through Executive Council. I don't think that that is the best way to show respect to private members on either side of the House, and I don't think it's the best way to show respect to Albertans who democratically elect all of us to come to this place and do our job.

I think that the bulk of these amendments are fine, but I am, again, deeply concerned about how much power and control seems to be consolidated on the front bench and how much the rest of us are left to react. I appreciate that the Order Paper was tweeted out. I appreciate that, you know, we got some notice in the morning. That's lovely. I definitely watch Twitter. I guess I have to watch it even more to find out what government business will be in coming days. I think that's not the intended role of this place, nor the intended role of Twitter, but I guess we adapt in ways that we must. But I do want to, again, restate that there are committees. There is one that specifically has a mandate of examining standing orders. And there are ways that we can show respect to the people of Alberta and to one another by actually allowing those committees to do their jobs.

Again, that being said, in large part I think that these are fine today, but what about other standing orders that might be coming in the future? What about other bills that might be coming forward in the future? What about the work of other committees that should be done in a democratic way that enables all private members to have their voices heard, Mr. Speaker? These are the questions that I'm left to grapple with this morning.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone has a brief question or comment.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak to this motion. I just wanted to actually thank my colleagues the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and especially the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview because what we saw this morning was really that – I, as well, like the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, do watch Twitter, but I did not see the Order Paper tweeted out. I don't look to Twitter for my indication of what the government is going to be doing and presenting in the House.

I note that because the Government House Leader did not have to rise and even actually read out the motion before us today, we actually had absolutely no explanation from this government – Albertans had no explanation from this government – about what the purpose of this motion is. In fact, that clarity and that detail came from the members of the opposition, in particular the Opposition House Leader.

So I'd just like to thank my colleagues for standing up and explaining the government's own motion to Albertans. I think it's a shame that nobody on the government side had to even read out what it says in the motion. I have no particular concerns other than those expressed by my colleagues with respect to the content, but I do think that if the government is going to be introducing motions and legislation, they should be accountable for speaking to Albertans about what the content of that motion or that bill is and explaining the purpose behind it. We're happy to do that job for the government, but I really think that that is their role. I'm a little disappointed that this is how we started, that we're now doing the government's job to explain their own motion to Albertans, but we'll be happy to continue to do it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone has a brief question or a comment for the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. I see the hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction has risen on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say that our Government House Leader did say that he would be willing to read it out, but you said that it would be not necessary. So I think that the member needs to realize that this was actually a Speaker's decision. It was not a decision that was made by the government side.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks for that clarity. That's really helpful.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else? Sounds like the Member for Edmonton-Glenora might like to add to 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, for clarity's sake just for all members, I know that many of you are new here. With respect to the Order Paper, the Order Paper is actually posted online in advance of the session. In this case it was an early Order Paper, so it was posted yesterday and was available for all members to peruse.

The regular process that takes place – the Speaker has chosen to try to engage more Albertans in our process here by tweeting it, but it certainly isn't a requirement of the Speaker or any member to inform themselves of where the Order Paper can be found.

With that said, is there anyone else that would like to engage in this very important matter around standing orders?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call the question. The Deputy Government House Leader could close debate if he would like to do so on behalf of the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I move to close debate on this and call the vote.

[Government Motion 30 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General and the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Schweitzer: I've got a few titles, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. We've made some immense progress here this morning. It feels like June all over again in some contexts, but I'm looking forward to engaging further. I move that we adjourn debate until 1:30 this afternoon.

The Speaker: I'll clarify from the Deputy Government House Leader that he's adjourning the House until 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:47 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, October 8, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Ms Ivy Mills. We would invite all members of the Assembly to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, it is my absolute honour and pleasure to introduce to all of you this fine afternoon – from the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods please welcome l'école Frère Antoine Catholic school.

Hon. members, I know that many of you will be aware that from time to time I mention the hundreds and hundreds of people following along at home. Today it's my absolute pleasure to introduce to you virtually the staff and grade 6 students, some 500 of them, joining us live online from the C.W. Perry middle school in Airdrie. Thank you very much for tuning in.

Hon. members, as many of you are aware, over this past summer I put out a call to Albertans to contact my office if they would be willing to lead the Assembly in the singing of our national anthem. This afternoon I was so pleased to welcome our very first anthem singer this sitting, a 13-year-old from Morinville public school – she's a student there – Ms Ivy Mills. She is accompanied by her parents, Kimberley and Warrant Officer Nathaniel Mills. Singing is a huge part of Ivy's life. She has a keen interest in politics. It will only be a few years now until she has my job. Having served as the school president, she has sung at various talent shows, school assemblies, events, Remembrance Day ceremonies. Hon. members, please join me in thanking Ivy for singing for us today.

Also in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon: it's my absolute honour and pleasure to introduce the wife of the Minister of Indigenous Relations, Rose Wilson; their daughter June Boyda; and granddaughters Ariana and Megan Boyda. Welcome.

Also, guests of the Minister of Indigenous Relations: they will be joining us as they arrive here this afternoon, but I wanted to take the opportunity and welcome Grand Chief Arthur Noskey, Chief William Morin, Stephen Buffalo, Calvin Helin, and Herb Lehr to the Assembly as they arrive a little bit later.

Also, it's my pleasure to introduce to all members of the Assembly guests of the Minister of Advanced Education: Jon Mastel, Jon Bilodeau, and Emmanuel Barker.

Statement by the Speaker

Members' Statements Rotation

The Speaker: Hon. members, before Members' Statements begins, I would like to remind all members that the amendments to the standing orders that were approved by the Assembly with the passage of Government Motion 30 this morning include an amendment regarding members' statements. As members are aware, there will now be the opportunity to make an additional three members' statements each sitting day for a total of nine members' statements each day. The duration of each statement continues to be a maximum of two minutes.

My office will provide you all with a document from the House leaders confirming the agreement on the new Members' Statements rotation to reflect this change, which I will table later today at the appropriate time in the daily Routine. An updated projected sitting days calendar will be e-mailed to all members later today, which includes the new Members' Statements rotation. For members' information, this afternoon private members of the government caucus will be entitled to six members' statements, and members of the Official Opposition will be entitled to three members' statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has a statement to make.

Health Care System

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last three months I've had the opportunity to speak with health care workers across Alberta, and wherever I go – Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, Red Deer, Calgary, or Lethbridge – I've heard the same thing: resources are stretched thin, and workers are afraid.

What are they afraid of? This government and their plans for our health care system. Nurses, paramedics, lab technicians, ER doctors, health care aides: they're all deeply concerned about how the UCP's plan to introduce more American-style health care while cutting funding for key supports is going to affect their ability to do their jobs and provide quality patient care. Workers have told me how their departments and facilities are already reducing staff on shift and leaving positions unfilled as they anticipate cuts because when demand is rising and funding remains the same, that is a cut. They've told me how when staff call in sick, their shifts go uncovered, how they're burning out and morale is dropping as they're forced to make painful decisions about which patient's care is most urgent from one moment to the next.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the legacy of years of Conservative tinkering with and underinvestment in health services. Our government reversed plans for further cuts and maintained stable, predictable funding while keeping a reasonable cap on growth. As a result, as columnist Keith Gerein noted, "Alberta's health system... enjoyed one of its most uninterrupted periods of stability." We were starting to turn the corner after years of ideologically driven chaos, uncertainty, and roller coaster funding from Conservatives. The UCP seems intent on driving us right back, suggesting front-line workers are lazy, entitled, and overpaid while breaking their contracts and threatening to roll back their salaries, making short-sighted cuts to funding for preventative supports and cancelling badly needed infrastructure without consultation.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve better than simply resurrecting tired plans for American-style health care that have been rejected time and again, and all of my colleagues with the Alberta NDP are committed to standing by workers in our health care system to fight for that better.

Yom Kippur

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to have the opportunity to rise before you to speak on one of the holiest days of the Jewish faith, Yom Kippur. Yom Kippur is certainly one of the most culturally significant holidays of the Jewish faith. Many secular Jewish people attend synagogue on Yom Kippur, even those who do not observe other religious holidays.

Despite being a day of rest, Yom Kippur is equally a day of atonement and sacrifice. Although this is one of the holiest days in the Jewish religion, it is not a time for celebration but a time for restraint and repentance. Yom Kippur imposes necessary restrictions on practitioners which include refraining from eating or drinking, refusing to wear leather shoes, avoiding bathing or washing oneself, not anointing self with one's fragrances or perfumes, and abstaining from marital relations. In fact, when the Hebrew name Yom Kippur is translated into English, it reveals the true purpose of this observance as a day of atonement.

Yom Kippur marks the conclusion of the 10 High Holy Days of Judaism, which commence with the observance of Rosh Hashanah. According to tradition God inscribes each person's fate for the coming year in a book titled the Book of Life, on Rosh Hashanah. However, this verdict is not finally sealed until the advent of Yom Kippur. Throughout the High Holy Days between, members of the Jewish faithful are given the chance to repent and to amend their divine or mortal wrongdoings, to seek redemption in the eyes of God. These High Holy Days are the only time of the year that many secular Jewish people will choose to attend synagogue, which is a testament to their importance.

For Jewish people within Alberta and across the world today is a time for rest, prayer, fasting, and atonement. In honour of this holy day our administration would like to extend our best wishes to everyone observing Yom Kippur. [Remarks in Hebrew]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie would like to make a statement.

Women in Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Women make up just over 50 per cent of the population, and they currently represent the highest enrolment in Canadian universities. However, women are underrepresented in the fields of science, technology, engineering, and mathematics, also known as STEM. One way to increase female enrolment in STEM studies is to encourage the women who are currently employed in the field to mentor and inspire young women like my daughter Isabelle to follow in their footsteps. Scholarships for women in these areas have also been proven to be effective in increasing interest in enrolment, but representation for women in engineering and computer science remains very low.

While low enrolment for women in STEM is a concern, so is the career path after graduation as only one-third of STEM graduates employed currently are women. To our government those numbers are unacceptable. The issue of female graduates not getting hired into the STEM workforce, although qualified for these roles, perpetuates the cycle of low engagement for women in STEM. This leaves women that have STEM degrees to pursue careers in jobs which they are often overqualified for. These women work in jobs irrelevant to their specialty and many times lower paying.

Mr. Speaker, October is Women's History Month in Canada, and historically women have been underrepresented in STEM-related fields. It is time to change that. I am proud to say that our government, along with the Ontario provincial government, in July committed to enhance opportunities for women in STEM. Together we can encourage women to excel in STEM careers and get women working in the fields for which they have been previously overlooked.

Our government continues to work to grow Alberta's economy. As our economy expands, we have an opportunity to provide rewarding STEM career paths to more women. We will continue encouraging more women and girls to be involved in STEM fields and give them the support they need to be successful and secure meaningful employment within the areas of science, technology, engineering, and mathematics.

This month I encourage all members to support women and girls in STEM and to support our government's initiative to encourage women in these critical areas of study. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Queue-jumping, backroom deals, pay-to-play: these terms evoke a visceral reaction because Albertans hate unfairness. We believe in level playing fields. The UCP is trying to tell us that everyone is in the same position, having to wait for the budget, but that isn't the case. First graders who need supports wait, police trying to maintain service levels wait, and diversification has to wait. These are the Albertans the UCP has told to wait. "Just wait," they say. They haven't decided yet if these Albertans are worth investing in.

Meanwhile they had $4.5 billion to give away to profitable corporations immediately. The Walmarts of the world didn't have to wait. They didn't need to get in line with everyone else. The UCP got them their money right away, and they sent it straight out of the country. What's worse, not one job was created. So while rich friends and insiders already got their 4 and a half billion dollar gift months ago, everyone else has to wait. Schoolchildren have to wait, first responders have wait, and diversification has to wait. We wait to see who is deemed unworthy, which Albertans will pay the price for the UCP's gift to already profitable corporations.

But it didn't have to be this way. This is a result of a deliberate choice, a choice by the UCP to put the Walmarts of the world ahead of everyone else. If corporations were made to wait, the UCP would have been forced to explain their choices. So they got to go first while Albertans continue to wait. That doesn't sound like a level playing field to me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Federal Energy Policies

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is under siege. Radical interest groups continue to work against Alberta's hard-working families in an effort to land-lock our resources. Environmentalists, funded with millions of dollars by foreign interest groups, continue to protest and block pipeline development with allies in the NDP government in British Columbia. But it doesn't end there. The federal Liberal government, under Justin Trudeau, has done nothing but aid in this assault.

To put this into perspective, I would like to quote the MP for Lakeland, Shannon Stubbs, in her response to Justin Trudeau's comments at a town hall: when Justin Trudeau "said that he wants to phase out the oil sands . . . Canadians should believe him." I couldn't agree more. Liberal governments have always targeted our energy industry and used that money to buy votes in eastern Canada. This election is no different. Regardless of all of this, Alberta continues to contribute greatly to our Confederation. We continue to support other provinces because we believe that all Canadians should prosper. The east continues to take billions of dollars from our province while supporting a government that has worked against us.

We need strong leadership in Ottawa that will fight for Alberta's interests, for our prosperity because a strong Alberta makes a strong Canada. We need a federal government that doesn't impose harmful policies like the tanker ban and a government that fights to expand access to markets so we can get fair value for our resources, the resources that all Canadians benefit from. We need a federal government that doesn't collapse under the pressure of radical interest groups and fake outrage culture, a government that is working for all Canadians, not just the ones that will vote for them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has a statement.

Indigenous Relations

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Welcome back to the Legislature, everyone. I want you to acknowledge the chiefs and leaders of the Métis community who have joined us here today and also my niece Isabel Feehan, who is with her class from l'école Frère Antoine. I begin by acknowledging that we're here on Treaty 6 land and the home of the Métis people.

Recently, while reviewing the Ministry of Indigenous Relations website, I discovered that the document Alberta's path to reconciliation, dated February 2019, has been removed. Given that this government has previously abandoned treaty land acknowledgements as a consistent practice and that this government abandoned funding for the indigenous climate leadership program, which had been accessed by all 48 First Nations and all eight Métis settlements, I was concerned that this government was intent on abandoning reconciliation as well.

I'd like to take a minute to highlight some of the programs that were identified in the removed document so that I can encourage the government not to abandon them. One removed section was the piece about including indigenous perspectives and concerns in government policy and practices. This includes reflecting indigenous contributions and history, including residential schools and the '60s scoop. I encourage the government not to abandon this. This section also included monies for clean water on First Nations, and I encourage the government not to abandon this.

Other sections include funding for women's shelters on reserves, funding for native friendship centres, framework agreements for treaties 7 and 8 and with the Métis Nation of Alberta, co-operative management agreements for new protected areas in Alberta such as the Castle parks, the establishment of an Indigenous Wisdom Advisory Panel, the creation of Indigenous Tourism Alberta, the inclusion of ceremonial spaces in courthouses in Red Earth Creek and Fort Vermilion, a program for the indigenous-owned and -operated housing in urban centres, and the training of 27,000 public service employees in indigenous history, traditions, and knowledge.

These are, of course, only a small sample of the hundreds of improved programs and services for indigenous people put in place by the NDP government, and I encourage this government not to abandon these programs and the indigenous people of this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we get to your favourite part of the day, I'd just like to take a very brief moment and acknowledge that we have eight new pages joining us here in the Assembly today. You may see a few additional pages as they'll take the next couple of days to mentor some of the new pages, so I trust that you will invite them to the Assembly and treat them with the respect that each and every one of them deserves.

With that said, we are at Oral Question Period.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Corporate Taxes and the Provincial Fiscal Position

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and welcome back, everybody.

The Premier claimed that his $4.5 billion gift to big corporations would create jobs. Turns out that was all talk. Last month ATB Financial cut its GDP growth projections by half: construction down, consumer spending down, capital investment down. To the Premier: won't you just admit that your plan is not about creating jobs; it is about starving the budget and making regular Albertans pay for it?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, our plan is the one that was endorsed by the largest number of voters in Alberta history. That plan was the one rejected as the first and only one-term government in Alberta history. According to Professor Leach, a former adviser to the Premier, the job-creation tax cut is "good economic policy." According to Professor Dahlby cutting the tax "is a smart move that will prove highly beneficial to Alberta's economy, including employment prospects, over the next decade." We're not even one-quarter of the way towards delivering that job-creating tax cut. We're going to keep our word with Albertans.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ATB also reports that there is actually one thing that is up in Alberta under the Premier's big corporate handout: unemployment. Thirteen thousand jobs had been lost at the very time this Premier was promising Albertans to create new ones. Albertans were promised jobs by this Premier now, not 10 years from now. They shouldn't have to wait. When will the Premier admit that his plan was only ever about lining the pockets of wealthy shareholders?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that with antibusiness, class-warfare, socialist rhetoric like that the NDP drove tens of billions of dollars of business investment out of this province and with it created a jobs crisis unprecedented since the 1930s? The reality is this: it's going to take us a long time to undo the damage of the NDP. But there's good news happening. Two weeks ago the largest investment announcement in Alberta history, $16 billion from Telus that will create 5,000 jobs, a billion and a half dollar cogen facility from Suncor that will create hundreds of jobs, and many more such announcements on the . . .

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the Premier knows that Telus actually made that announcement about 12 months earlier as well, but nonetheless the Premier does need to stop pretending. Manufacturing is down. Building permits are down. Small business confidence, down. ATB Financial says the economy is, I quote, stuck. To the Premier. Your plan to take things from regular Albertans and give buckets of money to big corporations just isn't working. Why won't you stop picking on Albertans, go back to the drawing board, and come up with a real plan to create the jobs that are needed today not a decade from now?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Leader of the Opposition knows perfectly well that she continues to mislead Albertans about the revenue . . .

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mr. Kenney: . . . implications of the job-creation tax cut. It's not even a quarter of what she is suggesting, all of it embedded in our platform of commitments. Mr. Speaker, here's the reality. The NDP raised taxes on employers, and revenues went down from the business tax. Why? Because they scared billions of dollars of investment out of this province. They drove us into the jobs crisis. It'll take us some time to undo the damage imposed on our economy by the failure of socialist economics.

The Speaker: Point of order is noted.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for her second set of questions.

Energy Policies and Job Creation

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Energy minister said she was, quote, disappointed that this Premier's corporate handout wasn't creating jobs in oil and gas. It's clear these companies aren't using a single dollar of that gift to invest in Alberta or, more importantly, to hire more Albertans. Like the Energy minister, I too am disappointed. Unlike her, I'm not at all surprised. To the Premier. While your minister is moping, 13,000 people have lost their jobs in oil and gas. Why won't you scrap this failed experiment?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, as the opposition leader knows and as was confirmed for me by major global investors in New York three weeks ago, one of the primary reasons for a continued lack of investment in this province is the lack of pipelines, driven by her friend and ally Justin Trudeau and her NDP partners in Ottawa. October 21 will be very important for the economic future of Alberta, so let me ask the leader of the NDP: who is she voting for in that election, her antipipeline ally Justin Trudeau or her antipipeline leader Jagmeet Singh?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm focused on Alberta, and I suggest the Premier ought to be, too.

Now, the Energy minister aptly described the Premier's corporate handout as a windfall for these companies, and then she went on to say that she's not concerned that oil and gas companies still aren't creating jobs or investing. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned, and Albertans are concerned. As the minister sits on her hands, 13,000 people have lost their jobs in the last two months in the oil and gas sector. So to the Premier: does your minister's indifference to creating jobs cause you concern, and if not, why not?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the single greatest barrier to future economic and job growth in this province is federal policies that land-lock our energy, pin down and eventually kill our energy industry, both of which are the policies of the federal Liberal Party and the federal NDP. So when the opposition leader says she's standing up for Albertans, why doesn't she rise in her place and stand up for Albertans by denouncing the plans of the Liberals and the NDP to land-lock and kill Alberta's energy industry?

Ms Notley: The other thing we've learned, Mr. Speaker, from the Premier is that yelling a lot clearly doesn't create jobs. We've actually lost jobs. Things are absolutely no better in the oil field. Oil drilling is down by over a third. Companies like Cenovus are scaling back investment, and RBC securities projects a cut to rig activity and well counts this year and next year. In short, there is certainly no corporate windfall for the actual workers in the oil patch. Job after job is being lost. To the Premier: when will you admit that you have a job, not somebody else who is not doing a job but you, and then do it?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we have been acting at lightning speed to recreate investor confidence in this province with the boldest moves on the job-creation tax cut, the red tape reduction action plan, and so much more. Fundamentally, to bring investment and jobs back to the energy sector requires market access, pipelines, energy corridors, which is why we need a change of government on October 21. Now, when asked who she's supporting on that day, she said that she wouldn't support the NDP because they've thrown workers under the bus, and then she corrected herself, saying that that wasn't quite right. So is it true, then, that she'll be supporting the Leap Manifesto, the keep-it-in-the-ground, the shut-down-Alberta strategy of the NDP?

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Corporate Taxes and the Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier is working at lightning speed to distract from his failure to do a job. Let's recap: no GDP boost, no jobs, no new investment in oil and gas. Meanwhile Albertans are bracing for big cuts to services that they rely on while they pay more: more in insurance, more in tuition, more in school fees, and now more in child care. Premier, why won't you admit that your gift to your wealthy friends is only going to hurt regular Albertans?

Mr. Kenney: We continue to hear, Mr. Speaker, the politics of resentment, the class-warfare, soak-the-job-creators rhetoric from the NDP that helped to drive this province into an unprecedented recession, from which we are still fighting to recover. Does the NDP leader really believe that the recipe for job and economic growth is to continue raising taxes on businesses? Tax hikes actually reduced revenues. Will she ever have the honesty to stand up and admit that her tax hike on employers reduced government revenues?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will do is say that the Premier's handout to corporations is hurting Albertans, including seniors, in the quality of their care. Just yesterday one of those great job creators, which I'm sure – I'm sure – benefited from the corporate tax cut, turned around and handed out 50 pink slips to nurses. They told them they could then have their jobs back if they took an $8-an-hour pay cut. Our parents and our loved ones are cared for by these 50 women. How does the Premier explain to them that they should be grateful for a corporate tax cut to the bosses who just fired them?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in terms of the fiscal situation of the province, we're contending with what Dr. Janice MacKinnon, former NDP finance minister, characterized as a fiscal crisis. The NDP drove this province into a sea of red ink, of debt, from $13 billion to $60 billion of debt. They left us on track for over $100 billion in debt. [interjection] Oh, I hear the most unsuccessful, the most failed finance minister in Alberta history heckling, Mr. Speaker. There's a reason he's heckling. Albertans fired him and his government for driving us toward $100 billion in debt, from which we must recover.

Ms Notley: The crisis, Mr. Speaker, has been created by the $4.5 billion tax gift to big corporations. Do you know who's paying for it? Do you know who's paying for it? It's kids: classrooms with over 40 students, kids learning in the hallway, support staff already kicked to the curb, parents fundraising for lunch programs, and of course a curriculum from the 1980s. I can see why the Premier is ashamed to call our school system public. To the Premier: why is this government more interested in boosting foreign shareholder dividends than protecting the education of our kids?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the reason why this government has been left with the challenging task of bringing balance back to our finances is because the NDP was the most irresponsible government in handling our province's finances in our history. They left us on track to spending $4 billion a year in interest payments on the debt to enrich bankers and bondholders instead of supporting schools, hospitals, and public services. We will not allow the NDP deficit and debt to jeopardize the future of public services in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre is rising with a question.

Vegreville Century Park Supportive Living Facility

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, last year the previous Minister of Health directed AHS to withhold consent for major staffing changes at the Optima Living Century Park facility in Vegreville until such time as the operator had corrected several serious issues in their standard of care. I and many other Albertans were shocked to learn this week that more than 50 employees working at that facility have now been laid off. Can the current Minister of Health tell this House if this facility is delivering care to his satisfaction and why the staff who endured through those terrible working conditions now find themselves out of work?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health is rising.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I share the concern that residents get the care that they need. That's my priority. I'm watching the situation closely, and I'm assured that there will be no interruption in care. Unlike the NDP, I don't believe in manipulating contracts for political purposes. Continuing care for decades has been publicly funded but delivered through a mix of public, not-for-profit, and, yes, private partners. The NDP just can't accept that because they can't handle the fact that there is any private partner in the system. I believe in making decisions which are based on the best interests of patients, not ideology.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has the call.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This minister does believe in legislating to void contracts with workers.

Now, given that Optima Living has laid off these staff in Vegreville in order to replace them with out-of-province workers and the company has said that this heartless move, quote, offers the prospect of greater return to our shareholders, end quote, and as our leader has already established, this government cares more, apparently, about those shareholders and protecting corporate interests than hard-working Albertans, to the minister: will you admit that you have no intention of sticking up for Alberta health care workers in Vegreville or, apparently, anywhere else in the province?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, there is a report that staff are being replaced with people from out of province, and it's simply false. It's sad that it's being perpetuated by the hon. member in this House. I understand from AHS that the new operator intends to hire most of the current staff. I also understand from AHS that there are vacancies in Vegreville and area, so there should be jobs for most or all of the staff. I'm not going to take lectures from the NDP about continuing care. They left us with a system where 16 per cent of our hospital beds are occupied by patients waiting for continuing care, and now we as a government have to fix it.

Mr. Shepherd: Now, Mr. Speaker, given that the layoff of these Vegreville staff is raising concerns of further American-style health care in this province and given that while Optima says that the staff that have been laid off can reapply, it is expected that they will be asked to take a pay cut of up to $10 an hour – this is not right, but it is more of what we've seen from this government – to this minister: would you admit that, much like with your 4-and-a-half-billion-dollar giveaway to big corporations, you're prioritizing corporate profits over protecting workers and over the quality of patient care?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, AHS and my department are monitoring the transition closely to ensure that all residents are given the care that they need. That's my priority, not grandstanding about private providers in the system. The NDP ignored the real issues in the system for four years. They imposed their bias against private providers from one area to the other, from continuing care to labs to laundry. Our government has campaigned on the real issues in health care, starting with improving access to the system, including continuing care. That's my priority as minister.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock is rising with a question.

Animal Rights Activist Protests at Farms

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, September 2, a group of protestors invaded the privacy and interrupted the operations of a turkey farm near Fort Macleod in southern Alberta. The protestors would not leave and demanded a tour of the facility. In the end the farmer was forced to co-operate with the protestors, even to the point of giving them five turkeys. To the Minister of Justice: what is this government doing to protect farm families from these interruptions on their private property?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for this question. It was my honour last week, with the Premier and the minister of agriculture, to announce that we're going to be cracking down on illegal protestors that trespass on our farmers. This party on the government side here clearly stands with our farmers. We're not giving away five turkeys; we're sending a clear signal to environmental extremists that you do not trespass on farm property in Alberta. Our farmers are off limits. The NDP have been silent on this. We want to know: do they stand with farmers in Alberta?

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, given that this turkey farm situation is not an isolated incident, with the Excelsior hog farm in B.C. having over 200 protestors interrupt operations on April 28 and hog farms in Ontario broken into and stolen from in March 2018, and these actions constitute crimes such as break and enter, criminal mischief, and theft, to name a few, to the same minister: how will this government be handling these offenders, and will this government consider imposing stricter punishments for these acts of eco-terrorism to protect our farmers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. Yes, we will. Individuals that trespass on property will be facing up to $25,000 in fines with the bill that we're going to be bringing forward this session. In addition to that, the organizations that help facilitate these crimes will face fines of up to $200,000. Individuals also will face up to six months in jail. Our side of the Legislature is clear. We're standing with our farming communities. We're standing up for property rights. Why is the NDP so silent on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the safety and well-being of our farmers, farms, and livestock should be a top priority of this government and given that these offences not only harm the farmers but they also compromise the integrity of the affected livestock, to the minister of agriculture: what is the government doing to look out for the safety and well-being of our farms, farmers, and livestock?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we are committed to amending the Animal Health Act and introducing fines of up to $15,000 for a first offence, $30,000 for a second offence, and actually a year of jail time. The announcement that we were referencing earlier was a great announcement that happened outside of Lethbridge. Actually, it was the same day that we had a seven-years-in-the-making Cavendish announcement: hundreds of millions of dollars, hundreds of jobs that are actually coming to the Lethbridge area. It was actually great to be joined by the MLA for Lethbridge-East. It was unfortunate and noticed that the Member for Lethbridge-West was not there, but I'm assuming she was on her leadership tour. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, order.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, students have been back to school for over a month now, many in overcrowded classrooms without enough support. Still, the UCP government won't make kids a priority. What is their priority? A $4.5 billion giveaway to highly profitable corporations. That's right. The Premier, the Finance minister, and even the Education minister couldn't rush fast enough to push out a massive payday to their big business friends, and now kids are paying the price. How can the minister come back to this place without a budget and say that she's doing her job?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education has risen.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Our government remains committed to providing a world-class, high-quality education for all Alberta students. We owe it to parents and to children to get better outcomes for the money that is being spent on education. As we make funding decisions, we will be looking through the lens of what is best for our children and what will actually improve student learning.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Well, while this minister waits, Mr. Speaker, there are 45 kids in a grade 5 French immersion class in a Calgary Catholic school. Given that the UCP government has chosen to hand out $4.5 billion to already highly profitable corporations, what does the minister have to say to students, teachers, parents dealing with this overcrowding throughout Alberta schools because this minister chooses to wear a pin that says one thing but her actions clearly say that corporations come first?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Given that the previous . . .

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Member LaGrange: Given that the previous government brought their budget in on October 22 when they were elected, as we await our budget, which will come forward in a very few short weeks, school divisions are in the best position to comment on their individual budgets. This is just another example of the NDP's fear tactics. They were wrong on enrolment growth, they were wrong on nutrition, and they're wrong again. We're going to bring in a great budget.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the point of order is noted at approximately 2:13.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, giving random talking points and telling people to wait until Christmas before they actually find out how much money they get from their government is wrong. Given that the UCP blew a $4.5 billion hole in their budget with corporate giveaways and given that this experiment hasn't resulted in a single new job but it has resulted in overcrowded classrooms, teachers getting laid off, longer bus rides, and kids with special needs having to pay the price for this minister's backwards priorities, why is the minister continuing to choose to put corporations over kids?

The Speaker: Hon. members, I might just caution all members that the use of preambles after question 4 isn't allowed.

The hon. Minister of Education has the call.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Again, we owe it to parents of children to get better outcomes for the money that we're spending. Alberta spends more on its education system than most provinces, but the results just aren't there. Again, I say this is just another example of your smear and fear. We are continuing to put children first. I am continuing to put children first and doing what's important and making things right for education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has risen with a question.

Municipal Funding

Member Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the recent AUMA convention the Minister of Municipal Affairs warned local leaders of deep cuts to MSI and other provincial grants for local government in the budget. As one councillor put it, quote, it's not going to be pretty. End quote. That's what our municipalities get, but big corporations get a $4.5 billion gift from this Premier. To the minister: just how much money are you cutting from municipalities?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I just had to rise in response to remark on the phenomenal chutzpah of that member having the temerity to ask a question about spending restraint, all of it required to clean up the huge fiscal mess, the enormous hole that he dug this province into, racking up the biggest per capita deficit in the country, moving Alberta's debt from $13 billion to $60 billion, headed to $100 billion. Every single dime of spending restraint by this government is ultimately the responsibility of that member and his gross fiscal irresponsibility.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My parents told me to stand up to bullies, and I will.

Given that recommendation 15 in the Premier's blue-ribbon panel report calls for the provincial government to "require municipalities to share more in the costs of major projects" and given that I don't see corporations paying their share for anything and instead are getting a handout from this Premier, to the minister: how high will municipal taxes have to be hiked to complete badly needed infrastructure projects?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the record of that member on corporate taxes was to drive down by billions of dollars the corporate tax revenues that were collected. How did he do it? He did it by raising the tax rates, by . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will have order. We heard the question; we'll hear the answer.

Mr. Kenney: He did it, Mr. Speaker, by giving effect to exactly the kind of antibusiness, job-killing rhetoric that he has just articulated all over again.

Mr. Speaker, I've met with mayors all across the province. They understand that we're all in this together. We are Team Alberta. Together we need to clean up the fiscal mess left behind by that member and his failed socialist policies.

Member Ceci: You know, corporations aren't all in this together. They're getting a $4.5 billion gift from that Premier over there, Mr. Speaker.

Given that municipalities were close to signing a long-term financial deal with us when we were in government, Mr. Speaker, and given that this Premier rushed out to cut a deal with big corporations, to the minister: have you now cancelled discussions on a long-term financial deal with municipalities because of your corporate handout?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, they were close to signing an agreement. After four years they were just that close.

But you know why they didn't get a chance to keep running the clock? Because Albertans fired them. They fired them in part because they recognized that the record of that member was the record of the worst Finance minister in Alberta history. He drove down business tax revenues. His policies, his tax hikes killed tens of thousands of jobs. I can tell you that I've met with our mayors and many of our councillors, Mr. Speaker. They understand it. They understand that we cannot keep kicking the can down the road, that we have to pay our bills. We can't live off our credit card. We've got to make up for the NDP fiscal mess.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East has a question.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The heritage savings trust fund was meant to save for the future, to strengthen or diversify the economy, and to improve the quality of life of Albertans. Returns from this fund are intended to fund valuable programs and services, including health care, education, and research. Unfortunately, lack of contributions and consistent withdrawals have stifled the growth of the fund. To the Minister of Finance: is there a plan to resume investing in this fund so we can be proud of what we are passing on to future Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The best thing we can do for the next generation is to deliver a debt-free province. This government will be rolling out a budget that will have a clear fiscal path to balance the budget within our first term, and that is the best thing we can do for the next generation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that we now have a large amount of debt that must be dealt with, which was recklessly accumulated by the previous NDP government, and given that it is prudent to invest only so long as the return on your investment exceeds the cost of your debt, can the minister please inform the Assembly on the performance of the heritage trust fund in recent years and also comment on the cost of carrying our current debt?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The heritage fund is contributing positively to our province's future and last year earned an 8 per cent return. Our debt at the end of last year, however, was $60 billion, caused by the excessive spending of the members opposite. Last year Alberta spent $1.9 billion in debt-service costs. That's $5 million a day. Continuing down this path is unsustainable. Our government will chart a new course, a course of sound, responsible fiscal management.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again, Minister. Given that Alberta is a province and part of the federation of Canada and that Norway has a different capacity as it is a country and given that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund is approximately $18 billion while Norway's oil fund now has over a trillion dollars in assets, can the minister explain for the benefit of Albertans why it is that Alberta is unable to save at the same rate as Norway despite our natural resources and the fact that we are a larger country? [interjection]

The Speaker: Order.
The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and, again, thank you to the member for the question. The key difference between Alberta and Norway is that Albertans contribute to a larger federation. In fact, Alberta's net contribution to the federal treasury in the last decade was $210 billion. Now, we're proud to be the economic engine of the nation, but our federal government absolutely has to get their act together to improve energy market access for this province and the nation if we're going to continue to generate the wealth and make the contributions that we have to the federation as well as to the next generation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Rural Crime Prevention and Policing

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've recently seen documents showing that this UCP government is considering cuts to rural police funding of up to 70 per cent. This is pretty hypocritical from a government that campaigned on being tough on rural crime. But now it seems that priorities have changed. Big corporations get a massive handout, and the communities are left to fend for themselves. To the Minister of Justice: can you please explain when exactly your government decided that fighting crime was no longer a priority?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, let me be clear. We are dedicated to more funding for police officers. I've had the opportunity over the last month to meet with over 1,000 Albertans, all the way up from Fairview to Drayton Valley, all the way down to Coaldale and Cheadle. We have been very, very clear. We are going to fully implement our campaign commitments to address rural crime. Also, I'd like to ask the other member over here: why are they against 500 new police officers for rural Alberta? Why are they against 500 police officers? We need a clear answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that it seems this government will download the cost of rural policing onto taxpayers at a cost of up to $400 a year and given that we know that their $4.5 billion giveaway has not created jobs for hard-working Albertans, to the minister: how exactly are Albertans living in rural communities supposed to be able to afford to pay for the police he was supposed to give to make their rural communities safe?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we have been crystal clear in our commitment to have more policing. We committed to having a discussion, in consultation with rural municipalities, around police costing. I'd like to share with the hon. member what justice right now is like in rural Alberta. I had an individual. He'd been broken into four times in the last three months, stopped reporting the incidents. I've met in every single town hall that I go to people that have stopped reporting the crimes. We're in a crisis mode right now in rural Alberta. We don't need more politics. We need support for 500 more police officers.

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, rural Albertans want action, not talk. Given that our government invested $10 million to combat rural crime and that the RCMP credited this investment with an average 9 per cent drop in rural crime and given that the UCP voted against this strategy, to the minister: can you please explain to Albertans why there's plenty of cash for big corporations but not a single dollar to keep our communities safe?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we said: more for policing. We're going to be investing more to address rural crime. The one thing that I'd like to highlight for this hon. member is that in going to every single one of these communities, that she did not visit, they said clearly in every single town hall that after calling for four years, asking for justice in Alberta, asking for their issues to be taken seriously, they finally have a Justice minister that's come out to talk to them. We're taking their ideas forward. Jumbo Valley didn't happen by chance. It happened because this government is listening. More to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has a question.

Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls Inquiry Final Report

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been 18 weeks since the release of the final report from the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls. More than 2,380 people participated in the inquiry, with more than 270 survivors and family members sharing their stories in sessions, and hundreds more provided written or artistic statements to the inquiry. Has the Minister of Indigenous Relations read this report, and what is his reaction?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that question. This is a very important issue to me, and I have read the report in its entirety, along with our minister of culture. We're working together on this. It was an honour to represent the province at the closing ceremony of the final report into the missing and murdered indigenous women and girls. I can tell you that I have reviewed that report, and we're working on developing calls to justice. Our government is committed to moving towards true reconciliation. True reconciliation . . .

An Hon. Member: What does that mean?

Mr. Wilson: You'll see.

It will empower indigenous Albertans to take charge of their own destiny. We have and we will continue to engage with indigenous communities and leaders across Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the inquiry's report does include 231 calls for justice – and many of these are directed specifically at government or government agencies such as health care, education, and police – which of these calls for justice will the minister be prioritizing, and when will he present the plan for this House to implement?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, thank you for that question because this is such an important issue. I had the privilege of attending the Sisters in Spirit day and accepting a red dress from the Awo Taan Healing Lodge. It's an important first step in working with key, on-the-ground services that help indigenous women. There are many practical calls to justice, and I'll be starting with the ones in section 15. It's the part that can be done immediately such as developing a knowledge and a base, speaking out against violence, and I encourage all Albertans to do their part in combating violence against all women.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the inquiry's report made prominent use of the word "genocide" to describe how colonial structures lead directly to increased rates of violence, death, and suicide in indigenous populations, does the minister support the use of the word “genocide”? Minister, this is simply a yes or no question.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was grateful and honoured by the families and communities and organizations that participated during the inquiry. I met and I connected with several of the families who presented in Ottawa. I sat down with a woman who had lost her family, and she asked me what I would do. I told her that I would work on this, and I have started working on this. You’ve probably seen some of the events I’ve been attending along with a lot of our members here. We take this matter very seriously, and we’re going to continue to work on this. Myself and the minister of culture and status of women are working on it right now.

Choice in Education

Mr. Toor: Mr. Speaker, in my riding of Calgary-Falconridge parents are especially concerned about children’s education. Charter schools have proven a very successful model for improving student achievement and catering to individual students’ needs. Because there are none nearby, parents in my riding are willing to send their kids across town to gain access to charter schools. To the Minister of Education: can you please explain to this House how our government intends to protect choice in education, including the ability to access charter school education in Alberta?

Member LaGrange: Thank you, hon. member, for that question. Alberta has a very long and successful tradition of supporting school choice, and our government is committed to preserving and protecting educational choice. Our government is committed to introducing the choice in education act, which will affirm that parents have the primary responsibility for the education of their children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for her comments. Given that charter schools provide customized options to children with specific needs and learning styles and given that most parents in my riding cannot afford private options, especially when their children may have special needs, can the minister commit to allowing more charter schools in Calgary specifically to address the desires of parents in northeast Calgary?

Member LaGrange: Thank you again for that question. Charter schools play an important role in Alberta’s educational system by offering more choice to students and to their parents. When it was brought into force, the Education Act lifted the cap on the number of charter schools allowed in this province. Charter school applications will continue to be assessed using the same criteria. Need must be demonstrated by the community for a charter school to be considered, and we are looking at that for you.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that our government committed to restoring choice in education and given that our government maintains that parents are a child’s first teachers, not the government bureaucrats, can the minister please explain how our government is allowing parents to be involved in their children’s education?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker and to the MLA for that question. When introduced, the choice in education act will propose that the preamble of the Education Act include recognition of section 26(3) of the universal declaration of human rights, which states that “parents have a prior right to choose the kind of education that shall be given to their children.” Our government values the role parents play as the primary educator of their children and intends to protect that relationship. I heard it loud throughout the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has a question.

Member for Calgary-East’s Committee Appointment

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta heritage savings trust fund manages more than $18 billion worth of assets on behalf of Albertans. AIMCo provides the day-to-day management, and final responsibility for the fund sits with the Minister of Finance. The standing committee of the Legislature also provides oversight for the management of this money on behalf of Albertans. This House was asked to approve the Member for Calgary-East as a member of this committee. Does the Minister of Finance believe that this member is qualified for this role, and if so, why?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it is outrageous to see that the NDP still has not learned the lesson that Albertans taught them back in April in that they do not accept the fear-and-smear politics that this opposition continues to do in this Chamber. The hon. member they refer to is a member in good standing in this Chamber and has every right to sit on a standing committee. It’s unfortunate that the opposition wants to use this in their time in question period, which is valuable, rather than focusing on issues that are important to Albertans. It’s ridiculous behaviour, and let me be clear: we will not be bullied by the NDP.

Ms Sweet: Given that the MLA for Calgary-East had his office raided by the RCMP just days before the spring election and given that the MLA has been linked to an ongoing voter fraud scandal involving the UCP leadership campaign of this current Premier, to the minister: are you aware that the Member for Calgary-East is currently facing an Election Commissioner investigation for bribery and forgery and a separate criminal investigation for fraud? If you are aware, why do you see it fit to put him in charge of the province’s trust fund?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, when that party was in power just a short while ago, some of the members, who may even sit in the benches right now – I don’t know – were accused of serious sexual allegations. Their leader at the time hid that from Albertans and protected those individuals rather than coming clean and making it clear to Albertans where those individuals stood. In fact, they hid it from them even during the election so that people could not make a decision inside their constituencies.

In regard to the Member for Calgary-East, his constituents spoke loud and clear. That makes him qualified to sit in this place, and he will sit on the standing committee as per the fact that they sent him here to serve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Government House Leader just said a few minutes ago that he thought this was below the decorum, it's amazing that he decided to bring that up.

Anyway, given that the investigation into fraud during the UCP leadership campaign is far from over and given that the Member for Calgary-East has refused to talk to the media or come clean about his role in this scandal, will the minister please commit today to keeping the MLA for Calgary-East away from the province's coffers, or does the corruption run so deep in the UCP that there's simply no one else that can sit on this committee?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, will the members across the way, will the leader of the NDP stand up and tell us which one of her members that are currently inside this House has been accused of serious sexual misconduct? Will she stand up and explain that once and for all instead of trying to play this game inside this Chamber? The opposition wants to make accusations about other people there but don't like it when it's thrown back at them. That's the point. It's disappointing to see the way that they act in their capacity as the Official Opposition. It's unbecoming of the Official Opposition. So stand up and tell us which one of you guys has been accused of sexual misconduct.

Tax Credit Programs

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, this summer Alberta businesses learned that the government had, without notice, frozen funding for the Alberta investor tax credit and the interactive digital media tax credit. This freeze came as a shock to many in the industry because they were helping Alberta businesses grow and create jobs here in Alberta. Now the government has pulled the rug out from under many businesses in the tech sector just as they were starting to gain momentum. To the minister of economic development and trade: are these programs being cut to help pay for your government's massive $4.5 billion corporate giveaway? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development and trade.

Ms Fir: Thank you for the question. You know, Mr. Speaker, prior to the NDP bringing in these tax credits, Alberta competed. In fact, we didn't just compete; we thrived. But then the NDP increased taxes on business, they brought in the carbon tax, they drove investment out of Alberta, and then they had to bring in these tax credits. All tax credits are under review as we're going to be heading into a challenging budget. We are reviewing the Alberta investor tax credit along with all tax credits to ensure they align with our bold vision for renewing Alberta's economy.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that this minister is supposed to be responsible for supporting Alberta job creators and given that the tax credit programs introduced by our government were generating an economic return for our province, helping companies grow in scale and compete, and given that other provinces have similar tax credits, which have helped them diversify their economies, to the minister: will you apologize to the tech companies for leaving them in the lurch and forcing them out of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development and trade.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We take no lessons in growing the economy from the party that increased taxes on job creators and, again, drove investment out of our province, all the while putting us on track for $100 billion in debt. The previous government was fiscally irresponsible and left tens of billions of dollars for future generations to pay back. Our government will not leave a bill for our children and grandchildren. We will create the best microeconomic conditions for businesses to thrive.

Mr. Bilous: Given that your microeconomic conditions have created zero jobs, given that I met with the minister of economic development and trade and urged her to reinstate these programs but she didn't budge, and given that all signs of economic growth in this province have completely stalled, to the minister: We need these tax credit programs to help spur investment and put Albertans to work. Don't take my word for it; take the businesses'. Will you stand up today in this House and commit to reinstating these tax credits, and if not, why not?

Ms Fir: Mr. Speaker, our government's first priority is getting Albertans back to work and renewing Alberta's economy. We have already taken measures to ensure that Alberta is the best place in Canada to invest or start a business with our introduction of the job-creation tax cut, which gives Alberta the lowest tax rate on job creators in Canada and will eventually give Alberta a lower corporate tax rate than 44 U.S. states. [interjections] I understand that the members opposite are still bitter that Albertans fired them, but trying to drown out what we have to say with their jeers and heckling is not going to work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont has risen with a question.

Natural Gas Industry Competitiveness

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Leduc-Beaumont has a very young and fast-growing population that relies on our oil and gas sector for employment and opportunity as much as anywhere else in the province. A number of natural gas companies have been doing business in my constituency for years through boom-and-bust cycles of the energy economy and through the highs and lows of volatile pricing. To the minister: how do you plan to address the volatile prices in Alberta in order to create certainty for investors and producers?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Natural Gas.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has been working collaboratively with the industry to find solutions that will address the systematic issues facing our natural gas sector. Unlike the previous government, that ignored this important sector, our government is going to stand up and represent natural gas producers. This fall the Canada Energy Regulator approved TC Energy to revise its natural gas storage protocol, which is going to allow more gas into storage, will help with balance in the system, and deal with volatile prices on AECO.

Mr. Rutherford: Natural gas royalties can be one of the largest sources of royalty revenue for the government of Alberta, but given that in order for this to be a source of wealth and prosperity for our province, we need to get a fair value and given that Alberta continues to practically give away our natural resources, with the lack of market access as one of the main contributors to low prices, how does the minister plan on expanding the number of markets we have access to so that we can continue to sustainably invest in the services that both the constituents of Leduc-Beaumont and Albertans need?

Mr. Nally: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, Alberta is blessed to have an abundance of natural gas, and our government is working on an actionable plan that is going to unblock natural gas shipments and support LNG exports. Over the summer my office has met with international stakeholders in Houston, and next month we're going to be meeting with more international investors so we can discuss how we can get Alberta's natural gas to international markets.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has seen investments in our energy sector plummet over the last four years due to low prices and poor policy decisions. Given that the Natural Gas Advisory Panel report outlined 48 recommendations aimed at reducing the challenges facing the natural gas sector and given that these recommendations could greatly improve the viability and competitiveness of our natural gas sector, to the minister: when will we be getting an update on the status of these recommendations, and when will the natural gas sector begin seeing the positive impacts of its implementation?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, I view myself as Alberta's natural gas salesman. Our government was elected on an overwhelming mandate to stand up and represent all Albertans, and that includes the natural gas producers. That's exactly what we intend to do. This government has made tremendous efforts over the last several months to take action that is already making a difference to our natural gas producers. We've implemented recommendation 7 of the Natural Gas Advisory Panel report, that's going to work on balance on the pipeline and improve the volatility of the AECO. We will continue to update the House as we make progress.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will return to Members' Statements. If you have other meetings or appointments, I encourage you to exit the Chamber expeditiously.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland has a statement to make.

Teachers

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As another school year is upon us, it's my privilege to rise today and recognize our teachers here in our great province of Alberta. The teachers in our schools are more than just educators. They pass along their knowledge and wisdom, becoming mentors to our kids and young people as they grow and develop.

While I believe that families are key to a child's upbringing, it does, after all, take a village to raise a child. Teachers often become friends to the students they teach and role models for them to look up to. I'm sure that we all can look back and think of several teachers that made a positive and memorable impact on our lives. Personally, I had Mr. Thompson, Mr. Murray, Mr. Myslicki, and Ms McLellen. They taught, coached, and took time out of their personal days to help me out along the way.

Many parents get exhausted in organizing a kid's birthday party with even just eight to 12 kids for a few hours. From what I'm told, it's kind of like being a teacher except that they do it for around 30 kids in their classrooms seven hours a day, five days a week, and throughout the school year.

And, of course, life as a teacher does not end with the bell at the end of the day. Many of our teachers find themselves at home in the evenings marking school work and preparing for upcoming classes. In addition to their positions as educators, our teachers take time to act as liaisons in extracurricular activities and supervisors for those types of clubs. These things enhance a student's experience at school and make schools a more enjoyable place for many.

It's my privilege to stand and recognize these great educators for their hard work and their dedication to the learning of future generations. To those that taught me, who teach students now, and who dedicated their lives to teaching, a heartfelt thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane is rising.

Federal Carbon Tax

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're in the middle of a federal election, and this is one of the most important elections for Alberta and western Canada in recent memory. I want to remind you why I believe it's prudent we continue to fight the federal government's attempt to implement the disastrous carbon tax system on Albertans, which is devastating to Alberta's economy.

Proponents of a carbon tax suggest the purpose is to change behaviours to reduce dependence on GHG-emitting fossil fuel sources. Well, this is not even close to the truth. The carbon tax is not about the environment. It is merely a way for the federal Liberals to mask their incompetence and fiscal mismanagement. If you disagree with the Liberal view of the carbon tax, you're dismissed, deemed uneducated, a lesser person, or a denier. The carbon tax was created to fill the gaping budget hole they created by refusing to bring their own fiscal house in order, a fiscal problem that would have been avoided if they hadn't ruined western Canada's prosperity with their energy-killing policies. Thirty dollars per tonne of CO<sub>2</sub> is only the beginning; $50, $100, $200, and beyond is on the horizon.

The carbon tax does nothing but hurt society without offering any concrete solutions for real emissions reductions. The UCP government of Alberta will implement our TIER plan, which is focused on technology and measurable emissions reductions in industrial sectors. It is a plan that will actually help the environment rather than tax everyday working people, that simply encourages more fiscal mismanagement by the Liberals.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

We will not be pushed around by disconnected elites who can afford to buy carbon credits for their planes while average citizens struggle to afford basic needs. We will stand up for Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

National Catholic Health Care Week

Mr. Williams: Madam Speaker, today I rise to recognize Catholic health week. Catholic health care's origins in North America date back four centuries, with the arrival of the nuns and sisters to the New World. For many decades the church was the only health care provider tending to the sick and needy. One hundred and fifty-six years ago, in November 1863, the Sisters of Charity, also known as the Grey Nuns, for whom the hospital in Edmonton is named, cared for the first patients in St. Albert, many of whom were First Nation peoples. Today is marked by the start of Catholic health week in Alberta, back in 1863, and that's a full 42 years before we became a province.

[The Speaker in the chair]

In our province Catholic health care continues to flourish today, and there's no debate that Catholic women of faith laid the foundation of a modern health care system. Catholic health care starts with a spiritual purpose, a calling to serve each and every person with the afforded dignity that they have, being created in the image and likeness of God.

This year we are celebrating the first-ever National Catholic Health Care Week with 124 national health care providers across Canada, October 6 to 12. In Alberta we are recognizing and celebrating the value and impact of Catholic health care as well as the legacy and the visionary courage of the founding sisters who cared for the most destitute among us for many years. Today over 15,000 Covenant Health care staff, physicians, and nurses, together with volunteers and other Catholic health care providers across the province, are privileged to carry on this legacy as key partners in our health system, serving people of all different backgrounds, faiths, and circumstances.

I pray humbly that all members of this House will join me in recognizing the tremendous contributions of the church to our modern health care system and recognize Catholic health care's legacy for all Albertans. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with section 5(5) of the Property Rights Advocate Act it is my honour as the chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future to table the appropriate number of copies of the committee's report on the 2017 annual report of the Alberta Property Rights Advocate. Copies of the report are available through the committee office and online.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Bill 14 Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act.

It's truly an honour to present this bill before the guests we have in the gallery here today, and I want to say in their presence that our government understands that for far too long the first peoples of this province have been pushed to the margins of Alberta's economic prosperity. By enabling the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation as a steward of the Crown, we are announcing our intent to remedy this wrong.

With that, I move first reading of Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has a tabling.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite copies of the tabling of a document from the RCMP of Alberta. "The Alberta RCMP are continuing to investigate in relation to the 2017 UCP leadership campaign, specifically as it relates to identity fraud," as of August 15, 2019.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members with tablings? The Member for St. Albert has risen with a tabling.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two. The first one is from Chatelaine, and it's entitled What You Need to Know about the New Canadian Climate Change Report: In Short, There's Never Been a More Crucial Time to Take Action.

The second one is a Globe and Mail editorial entitled Jason Kenney Has a Climate Plan – It Just Isn't a Very Good One.

The Speaker: Hon. members will all be aware that no matter what the context is, we are not to use the names of other members inside the Assembly.

Are there other tablings today?

Well, the good news is that I have a number of tablings to make. Pursuant to the Child and Youth Advocate Act I am tabling six copies of the Mandatory Reviews into Child Deaths report for the period of October 1, 2018, to March 31, 2019.

I am also tabling six copies of the House leaders' agreement regarding members' statements rotation, dated October 7, 2019.

In my capacity as the committee chair, pursuant to section 39(3) of the Legislative Assembly Act, I would like to table with the Assembly six copies of the following orders approved at the August 6, 2019, meeting of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services: one, Members' Allowances Amendment Order 35, being Order MSC 04/19; Executive Council Salaries and Members' Services Committee Amendment Order 1, being Order MSC 05/19; Members Committee Allowances Amendment Order 14, being MSC 06/19; Transportation Amendment Order 15, being Order MSC 07/19. Copies of all the orders were distributed to members on August 9, 2019.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of Hon. Mr. Toews, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, responses to questions raised by Ms Renaud, hon. Member for St. Albert; Ms Hoffman, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora; Mr. Eggen, hon. Member for Edmonton-North West; Ms Phillips, hon. Member for Lethbridge-West; and Ms Pancholi, hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, on June 18, 2019, Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance 2019-20 interim supply estimates debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and the Opposition House Leader has risen.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(h), (i), (j). I'd like to read the standing order into Hansard: "(h) makes allegations against another Member; (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member; (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." At approximately 1:56 today the Premier, in his response to the Leader of the Official Opposition, accused the Leader of the Official Opposition of misleading Albertans.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you will recall – and if not, I have pulled a ruling from June 12, 2019, where at that time: "What we saw today was the Leader of the Official Opposition very clearly imply that the Government House Leader was saying untrue things, which, in fact, is unparliamentary.” You then, Mr. Speaker, went on to ensure that – and I believe it was myself that apologized on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition. Interestingly, not five minutes later the Government House Leader behaved in a manner not becoming of a member when he specifically used the word we all know is unparliamentary and wasn’t just skirting the rules but, in fact, broke the rules when he said, “That member, who lied about the biggest tax increase.”

The Premier did not refer to the opposition as misleading the House. Your rulings over the last six months have been very, very clear that that word, although, I’m sure, not a preferred choice in your mind, Mr. Speaker, is not ruled unparliamentary and passes the smell test, but when a member accuses another member of misleading the House, it is, in fact, unparliamentary. The Premier did refer to the Leader of the Official Opposition as misleading Albertans, and for that reason, I’m requesting that the Premier or the Government House Leader apologize and withdraw that comment.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I do so without reservation. As a way of explanation but not excuse, I had 20 years of practice in a different Legislature, where the use of that phrase was accepted, so I must unlearn 20 years of that practice and will do so. I withdraw.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Hon. members, we consider the point of order dealt with and concluded.

Members, we are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader is rising, perhaps for a request for unanimous consent.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to request unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 77(1) in order to proceed to second reading of Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations has risen.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to move second reading of Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act.

It’s a great honour to begin the fall season of this Legislature with this bill to create a new organization that will help indigenous communities own and invest in major natural resource development projects.

I’m grateful for the hard work and thoughtfulness that has brought us from a campaign commitment to legislation in just a few short months. To the nearly 200 indigenous small, medium-, and large-sized businesses and financial leaders who met with me this summer to discuss the direction the AIOC should take, please know: I heard you, and I thank you. Thank you also to those experts across government who have come together to form the AIOC secretariat. It would have been impossible to be here today without your input. It has been a true collaboration and a pleasure to work with you all. Your knowledge has helped to define what the initial idea of an indigenous opportunity corporation could be. It has also been my pleasure to hear the visions of groups from all over Alberta for this one-of-a-kind initiative. Finally, I’m thankful for my government colleagues and staff, who’ve offered sound advice along the way.

Our collective effort has a critical purpose. Together we are realizing a long-needed commitment to make life better for indigenous peoples of Alberta. Throughout the summer I visited indigenous communities all across the province. This is familiar ground for me, Mr. Speaker, having lived most of my life near the First Nations of Maskwacis. I grew up alongside indigenous friends, played with them, sometimes fought alongside of them, and I came to realize that people saw us differently and expected different things of us.

Now, summer, as you know, is the powwow season, which brings together families, friends, and communities in celebration. Mr. Speaker, it was such a privilege to join communities during their celebrations, to see the joy of people reuniting, expressing their cultures and language. I also learned that powwow is a time for healing. Song and dance help people to alleviate sorrows and deal with grief, and they’re also meant to send healing to people throughout the world.

It’s hard to believe there was a time when the powwow, this act of companionship and generosity, was outlawed in Canada, but there is a long legacy in this country of disenfranchising indigenous people from their identities and from opportunities to benefit, just as the rest of Alberta has. I wish I could say that this is a thing of the past and that systems and policies and practices are fair. We can only get there deliberately.

Mr. Speaker, our government believes that there is a better future for indigenous people, and that future depends on us choosing to take real action. Real action started early in this mandate. We have made it clear from the very start that we would abandon symbolic gestures and get right to the practical solutions of indigenous peoples, from the First Nations summit Premier Kenney hosted in June, the first meeting of provincial and First Nations seniors and leaders in years; to my Calgary Stampede as Indigenous Relations minister, where I visited some of the legacy families who had been part of the Indian village for over 80 years; to my visit to Paddle Prairie, a Métis settlement recovering after the wildfires this summer; and finally, a little more than two weeks ago, signing the protocol agreement with the Blackfoot Confederacy at the incredible Blackfoot Crossing historic park.

We have been present, Mr. Speaker. We have listened, and we do things differently. We commit to be partners in prosperity. Being partners is a balance, or an equation. If you think about a scale, you can imagine each side being level with the other. The reality is that too many indigenous communities are just not there yet. They are dealing with more obstacles than a lot of Canadians face. I’ll get to that in a moment. I want you to think again for a moment about that image of the scale. This time, imagine that one side has all the weight stacked on it and even has some extras on the table. My point is that we have more options for a balance available to us than we are currently using in our government-to-government relationships. It’s up to us, that side with the extra weights, to think differently about what fairness looks like so people realize the potential of indigenous peoples. We need to listen, and we need to act. We need to be willing to help remove some of those obstacles that indigenous communities face.

Our outreach is only part of the equation. In every community, in every meeting I have heard the will and the desire for progress. Some communities have benefited from the resources around them. Those communities are on their way. They have what they need to succeed. Others fare less well. Mr. Speaker, the tour of 23 communities and numerous engagements I have participated in this summer showed me that economic disparity is way too real. Every year communities face funding threats that put them at serious risk. Too often government solutions have been about pumping money into communities instead of working with them to develop capacity in business, business acumen, and to remove the obstacles that put them at risk in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, communities have young, talented workforces. What they need is the capital to get started. I would like to give an example. I've been lucky enough to be able to pursue major business interests throughout my career, taking on opportunities that I couldn't have imagined, and I fared well. I've been able to apply for loans and enter into partnerships that allowed me to create opportunities for other people through employment or training. When I travel down the highways to get home to my family, a family of people who are thriving and able to pursue their dreams with ease, I can trust that the government will act when I let them know that something needs to be better. As a citizen of an exceptional country like this, I expect nothing less.

Yet the first people to call this land home live in a different reality. Unfortunately, many struggle to find safe ways to get home from their lands. We travelled on First Nations roads this year. There were washouts this spring. I saw crumbling schools, fire halls with decades-old equipment, and in some cases First Nations with zero social support and infrastructure. What I heard over and over is that if First Nations could generate local revenue, they would begin to return those dollars into social infrastructure for the descendants of the First Peoples, who settled this area eons ago. To this day they struggle through the layers of government to get the basics they need, let alone major business opportunities. In some cases social infrastructure like access to health care and quality education is held together by layers of red tape.

It is here, in substandard expectations for indigenous people, that one of the most glaring faults in our treatment of indigenous populations is most exposed. Mr. Speaker, it's too common and too easy to think of the challenges many indigenous communities face as someone else's problem. We have a moral obligation to do better, to use the resources and abilities we have at hand to remove the barriers that have kept indigenous communities from achieving better outcomes. We can balance that equation. We need to start by righting some wrongs because that legacy of mistreatment I talked about earlier is still alive and well.

Mr. Speaker, indigenous communities don't own the land they live on, and because they lack ownership, they're not able to put up collateral for major loans. Policies like that keep communities dependent on government money instead of exercising their entrepreneurial spirit and their will to thrive. Indeed, these communities were made up of Alberta's first entrepreneurs, who built strong communities within which to guide future generations, and we want to reignite that spirit. We want to see what comes with people having the means to act on their own aspirations. Sure, you'll see financing options for small loans for small business available across the country, but you will not see options for indigenous communities to gain the capital they need to buy into major projects.

What we are proposing in Alberta is a first-of-its-kind solution in Canada. The AIOC will backstop up to $1 billion in loan guarantees, and if passed, this will allow the AIOC to work with other financial tools like equity loans. This is a game changer, Mr.

Speaker. With options like these, more indigenous communities will be able to invest in projects that can create a new revenue stream. It's fundamental for communities to be able to set up the projects, the programs, and the services they need without having to depend on federal dollars to do it.

I was talking about evening out the sides so we can become partners in prosperity. Indigenous communities bring a light to another factor that matters a lot in Alberta, land use. Now, let's be sure to give industry players in Alberta their due. They have stepped up to encourage, support, and employ world-leading technologies and practices that reduce the effects of drilling on Alberta's landscape. This is the land we share and all the air we breathe. When we talk about natural resource development, we talk about being responsible stewards of those resources, and when industry talks with indigenous communities about projects, they will also discuss traditional uses of the land. By increasing indigenous ownership of natural resource projects or supporting equity investments in natural resource projects, we are vouching for an even better, cleaner, safer future for more people and a future that allows people to practise their traditional uses on the land.

Mr. Speaker, I've talked about the access to capital as being a singularly challenging barrier for indigenous communities. It is far from the only threat to community well-being. The reality is that indigenous communities often face multiple social and economic issues, and they are complex issues. We all know that complex issues need to be addressed at many levels, and there is no magic to this. There is no single solution. The complexity of problems some indigenous communities experience is tied to a variety of issues, and many of them are generational, but to ignore something as fundamental as access to revenue is to turn a blind eye to a problem that we can address in a respectful way.

There is another thing I learned. Indigenous communities are deeply interested in responsibly developing the resources around them, and we need to start somewhere. They want to build businesses and technical capacity around them, and because unemployment is at a staggering rate, on some First Nations up to 99 per cent, employment is critical to building stronger communities.

Let me just share a story with you from this summer. I was up at Whitefish (Goodfish) Lake First Nation, and if you want an example of business acumen, entrepreneurship, and local employability, look no further. Their industrial dry cleaning business is the largest in North America. In fact, the only one that's even close to it is by the Disney corporation. The First Nation also operates a very impressive safety coverall manufacturing facility. It was so busy. I was there on a Sunday, and they were busy working away. Some of these people have worked there from the very start of this operation. It was just a joy, and they were all so proud of what they were doing. This is just one of the many opportunities recognized by indigenous communities.

To those who say that indigenous people don't want oil and gas extract operations on their lands, I ask them to talk to the First Nations of the Blackfoot Confederacy, which have been involved in the oil patch for seven decades, or to talk to Suncor Energy, whose businesses deal with the Fort McKay First Nation and the Mikisew Cree First Nation. It's a study in indigenous collaboration. By forging these partnerships, Fort McKay and Mikisew have more stable revenue to support community needs, and they are thriving.

I do not need to talk about the incredible success of the Enoch Cree Nation. Just drive a few minutes west of Edmonton to see the business hub that is popping up there. Chief Morin and his council are to be commended for an amazing vision. The Frog Lake First Nation has its own oil producing company, the Frog Lake Energy Resources Corporation, a heavy oil producer that sees thousands of barrels produced every day. The Primco Dene group of companies is a wholly owned company of the Cold Lake First Nation with 16 companies under its umbrella, employing 700 employees in the region, a stunning 80 per cent indigenous employment rate.

Those are just a few examples of some of the success cases that can be found amongst indigenous communities in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, as you can understand, they want to enjoy a higher standard of living than they have been largely able to do. They want future generations to enjoy the bounty this land brings and the option to make good decisions on how to manage it. Most of all, they want dignity.

We have benefited from their stewardship and will continue to honour the past by working together. The AIOC is part of the solution, that balanced equation that will bring the provincial and indigenous governments together as partners in prosperity. Another part of that solution is business and investors here in Alberta and elsewhere. I urge them to look to indigenous communities as partners as well. By working together, I'm confident of the mutual benefits that come of learning from each other and of finding in indigenous communities people with skills, talent, and motivation to work hard to invest in their futures.

This is an untapped market. Let me illustrate. In 2013 indigenous businesses accessed .2 per cent of the total available capital in Canada. The national aboriginal economic development board estimates that if indigenous business accessed capital at the same rate as other Canadian businesses, their share would stand at 10 per cent of the total available capital. Unless we do something to work around arcane legislation, this situation will not change, and indigenous communities will continue to live on the sidelines of prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, that's not good enough. Our government was elected to get Alberta working again, and we mean all of Alberta. As Minister of Indigenous Relations I commit every single day to work to secure adequate supports and pursue opportunity with indigenous people. That is why this government has already set up a $10 million indigenous litigation fund so indigenous voices fighting for their right to responsibly develop resources will be heard in courts when others are trying to stop them, and that's why we've been meeting government to government to foster and formalize our relationships going forward. Signing the protocol agreement with the Blackfoot Confederacy was a step to guarantee regular meetings together about concerns of interest and to give those First Nations governments the kind of attention the rest of us expect. That reduces yet another barrier. Enabling the AIOC in legislation is our next step in partnership to address the long-standing economic gaps between communities in Alberta.

It's time, Mr. Speaker, to do the right thing, to show indigenous communities respect instead of patronizing their path to prosperity. In that spirit of reconciliation we can and we will achieve a lot together.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for this time to address the House about the AIOC. I look forward to unanimous agreement to enact the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister, for your words. I would just like to check. You are moving Bill 14 for second reading, correct?

Mr. Wilson: Yes.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much.

Are there any other members looking to speak to Bill 14? I see that the hon. Member for Peace River has risen.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. I'm so honoured today to rise and speak on this very important piece of legislation, which I've read cover to cover. I'm very impressed with it in many ways, not least of which – to echo the minister's statement: this isn't fluff; this isn't just symbolic. We're getting right to it. You won't find one statement in there – it begins with definitions, and it ends in regulations – of fluff or symbolic gesture. It really is trying to lift up the First Nation peoples and Métis and the indigenous of Alberta. I'm so pleased to speak to it for exactly that reason: our government's commitment to the economy, particularly addressing why too often in our province's history indigenous Albertans have not always been a full partner sharing in our prosperity as a province and a country.

Just this morning I was speaking to Chief Trevor Mercredi of the Beaver First Nation, and he put it very well. He told me that when the First Nations of Alberta prosper, all of Alberta prospers. I think this simple message gets right to the heart of what this legislation seeks to achieve: getting First Nations, Métis, and all of Alberta's indigenous working up from that 95 to 99 per cent, as we heard from the minister, unemployment rate and giving them the dignity of work. Dignity is found in work, and giving them the opportunity to provide for themselves and their families and their communities is why we want to partner with these communities like we haven't seen before with this groundbreaking legislation, a first-in-Canada solution.

This must be a top priority of any government, and it's certainly a top priority of the United Conservative government, giving people everywhere a hand up. Yesterday I was chatting with the Beaver First Nation, my constituents, along with the Minister of Agriculture, and I've met with every other chief and council in my riding. We met with these communities. We speak to them, and we look to them for their leadership. They provide leadership to us in government on these issues, looking to expand the forestry industry in our constituency and on their territory, looking to expand agriculture, which they had been invested in for hundreds of years in the province in the far north – and I'll speak more to that later – and looking, of course, to expand Alberta's proud tradition of developing our natural gas resources. They want to be full partners in this development.

They face a number of challenges, though, that many Albertans may not. They don't enjoy the same property rights in the reserves that other Canadians take for granted. They often end up in many situations fighting against a very thick bureaucracy, both provincially and federally, and for this they have my heart. I am with them. I want to cut the red tape that stops these communities from thriving and prospering in our province. Too often this leaves them dependent on programs and settling for lower standards of living conditions layered on with more bureaucracy rather than being a part of this economic development that we see in the province and we see in Alberta like we've seen nowhere else in the world. The culture of dependency has to end, and the First Nations Albertans must be the first ones to harness creativity, and we want to work with them to that end and embrace the entrepreneurial spirit. As the minister and the Premier say often, they were the first entrepreneurs of this province and on this land. We want them to be able to chart their own destinies of where they want to go in developing these resources, of which they have a share.

It will not happen just when any government says so. It will happen when we work in partnership with indigenous Albertans and ask them, as we are doing in this government – and that is what this legislation is a product of – how they most want to participate in the shared economy, ensuring that indigenous Albertans have access to capital to finance their projects and ensuring that First Nations are full partners in projects that profoundly impact their livelihoods and territories and, most importantly, ensuring that every First Nation and Métis family has jobs to put food on the table and a roof overhead. That is what this bill is about.

I want to speak briefly now to some of the First Nation communities that I deal with on a first-hand basis in my constituency to give you context for why this bill matters to them directly. Now, every one of these groups not only have I met with, but so has the minister, and I want to first thank the minister deeply for coming to my constituency, to the most northern reaches of this province, to Meander River. The only place farther than that is a place called Indian Cabins, inhabited by two people, right on the border. There has never been a minister attending anything in this community before. The smiles on the faces of these men and women could not have been larger. The pride that they had in their communities as they showed it to the minister and myself could not have been bigger.

I want to speak a bit about those First Nations and what they have. The Dene Tha' First Nation is actually not Cree. They are from a very different cultural and ethnic and linguistic group from the north, and they have a very unique and driven culture, largely driven by the love of their land. They have a very deep love of the faith that was first brought to them by the Oblate Fathers that came to visit them, and they were very proud to have shown us this when they came up. In fact, it occupied much of the time of what they were showing.

The territory that they sit on is vast and might seem desperate and empty to many, but to the Dene Tha', they found it bountiful, and they love it very, very deeply. They want to be partners with us in how they find the resources in that land, in forestry and agriculture, and open it up to be prosperous. They saw that this is what happened for many of the earlier generations of Alberta, and they see no reason why they cannot today also take part in the development of these resources in a responsible way for their prosperity as well.

I mentioned that the Beaver First Nation, which is a very proud group, came to visit the minister of agriculture and myself just yesterday. They have a mixed heritage between Dene and Cree, and they have roots across the largest geographic area I've ever seen, going all the way down to southern Alberta, and have settled right on the bounds of the Boyer River. Between the Boyer and the Child Lake reserve is what makes up their territory. They have actually been farming the land in northern Alberta hundreds of years before any others thought it was actually in any way viable, long predating the settlers that came north. They today still want to continue opening up this land, and they want to, as we learned yesterday with the minister of agriculture, be a part of any kind of land opening up that this government would do, because they find it is an important part of their economy and an important part of their heritage. Something that is often missed when they talk about First Nation communities is that they have a deep love of agriculture and a ranching tradition.

I want to speak also about the Tallcree First Nation. Chief Rupert Meneen also settles in the far north and also visited with the minister and myself. They have so many entrepreneurial means of moving ahead. They have taken so many efforts, a very sophisticated group, where they want to take part in the forestry, agriculture, and particularly the oil and gas industry, much of which they couldn't even tell us about because of the works that they were currently working on. They can't wait to take part in this Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation because they saw right from the start the opportunities that they are opened to when they have that kind of capital backing them. They are not a group that is waiting for a handout; they want a hand up, and they are taking it even before this opportunity. This will only strengthen them and embolden them to go further.

They also have a deep, deep love of the land on which they live, and it's very heartwarming to see the way that they care for and look for a balance in how they develop their natural resources and how they continue to make sure that they put back into the land what they feel they get out of it. They're working very well with multiple different groups in the area, including Mackenzie county, the MD of Opportunity, and the federal government. They're opening up a new school, which I hope the minister can help me open up this fall. It's a beautiful community set right on the Wabasca River between the Tallcree north and south reserves.

I also want to speak about Little Red. Chief Conroy is probably one of the most enigmatic gentlemen I have ever met. He's a character, and he has the kind of mind that you want to enter into business with because he will find a way to make a dollar for you and himself and everyone who is working with him. He has a shrewd sense of business and a deep love of his people. He is the most engaged chief, I'm told, that that community has had in a very long time. Fox Lake, which is a fly-in, fly-out community, probably, I would say, the most remote community that I know of in the province: he has a deep love for it along with John D'Or and Garden River. These areas have some of the largest populations of First Nations in my constituency, and they're highly independent. They're fly-in, fly-out, and they have found all sorts of ways – through manufacturing, through opening up oil and gas at times, buying into projects across the province – to support their communities, and they're looking for more. In our meeting with them they made sure they let us know the priorities that they had. They want to make sure that they have transport in and out of the communities so that they're not just fly-in, fly-out, and they want to make sure that they're taking part in this new, growing economy that Alberta is about to go through with the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation.

I also want to speak to the Paddle Prairie Métis community. As the minister mentioned: heartfelt. What happened there broke the province's heart, with 16 homes burning down. They struggled deeply in the time of the fire, but they have come back together in a very big way, and they are stronger for having gone through that. They have a deep love of their land. The Métis people, along with the First Nations, aren't unlike many Albertans, where we aren't people who just like Alberta as an abstract idea. It's the land under our feet. It's the land we plow, that our cattle graze, the streets that we drive, the homes in which we live. It is the physical territory that matters to them. It's a true patriotism and love of that land that they have. It's deeply connected to them, and we saw that in Paddle Prairie as the men and women during that fire fought, many of which were risking life and limb, along with many volunteer firefighters from across the province and High Level to protect homes. Sixteen burned, but innumerable were saved because of the work of those men and women.

They are incredibly excited. I believe that certain members of that community even put their name forward to be on this board, and I highly recommend that the minister does choose some of these men and women because they have a deep sense of economic insight. They have been working nonstop since their entire creation. As a people mixed of both western and indigenous heritage, they see how to straddle both sides of that and work both cultures in a way where they can find the best way forward culturally, economically in being prosperous. They want to work with Alberta. They want to work with their neighbours to find prosperity in Paddle Prairie.

I guess I should also mention – let's see – Beaver, Tallcree, Dene Tha', Little Red, and Paddle Prairie. These are the major Métis settlements and reserves in my constituency. There are many First Nations living in Fort Vermilion and across the constituency which also are related to these First Nation communities, and they will benefit as well through this increased economic opportunity that will be created.

It is so important that we as a province make it a priority, and I want to make sure that this investment by the government truly is seen as a vibrant stimulation of our northern communities. We have nearly 3,000 Métis individuals living in my constituency and over 8,000 First Nation peoples in my riding. That is the diversity of my constituency. Between the French, the English, the German of the Mennonites, the Dene, and the Tallcree, we have a true Wild West in the north. We love working together despite rubbing up against each other at times. We find it is an opportunity for us to work with each other when the economy is growing, and that's why I am thrilled this bill will improve the lives of all of my constituents and not just the First Nations.

On that, I want to thank the Premier for his initiative deeply. I want to, Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity, but more than that, I want to thank, truly, the Minister of Indigenous Relations for the leadership he has shown and for the work he has done.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has risen to speak to this matter.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I very much appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 14, the first introduced in our present sitting. I'd like to thank the Minister of Indigenous Relations for introducing this bill. It's nice to start the session off with a bill where I think we can get wide support in this House for what I think is a positive initiative and one which I hope, as the time goes on in our discussions here in the House, we have an opportunity to debate from a perspective of both believing in the ultimate intent of the bill and debating more about how we work together to achieve a really positive outcome for the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people in this province as opposed to the other kinds of fights we sometimes have in this House. So it is with real pleasure that I stand up on behalf of the Official Opposition in this House and talk about the fact that we have intention to support this bill as we understand it at this particular time and that we look forward for an opportunity to learn a bit more.

I'll take a few minutes just to talk about some of the experiences I've had with the indigenous communities in this province and then speak a little bit more directly to the bill, just as the previous speaker did. I will take an opportunity to do the same because, of course, every single one of the communities mentioned both by the minister in his speech and the Member for Peace River in his speech I have been at, including Meander River, by the way. I am very pleased to have been the first and, in fact, only Minister of Indigenous Relations to have visited all 48 of the First Nations in this province and, of course, all eight of the Métis settlements, where I had an opportunity to sit down and have those really important discussions that happen when you sit down face to face and say to people: I am here to listen, and I really want to know what it is that's very important to you.

All of those chiefs and Métis settlement leaders that have been previously mentioned here are people that I have sat down with on multiple occasions. In fact, all of the reserves mentioned such as the Dene Tha' and Little Red and Tallcree and Beaver and Cold Lake, Whitefish (Goodfish): all of those communities I've been to not only once but on multiple occasions and visited with them here in the city of Edmonton, at the Legislature typically, to have these kinds of discussions, so I know that this is a community that is very interested in working with the government for the benefit of all peoples in the indigenous community. You know, when you sit down and have conversations with them, they tell you about the needs, and it is very clear that the needs in the indigenous communities right now are very high. The reason why they're very high, we know, is because there have been a significant number of structural barriers that prevented indigenous communities from being successful in the past.

When I do speak to people who, you know, haven't had as much of an opportunity as I have to speak with members of the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people in this province about the difficulties – the lack of employment, the lack of housing, and so on – in many of these communities, they often ask me: why? Why is it that they have not been part of the success of this fabulous province of Alberta? I have to remind them that there are very many reasons why that is true, but one of the things we have to be really clear about is that the reasons do not lie with the indigenous communities primarily but, rather, lie with us; that is, the government of Alberta and the people who have constructed the social dynamics under which they have had to live for the last hundred-plus years in this province.

When we take a look at things such as residential schools, the '60s scoop, we have to understand that we have done things in this province that have caused those desperate circumstances in those indigenous communities, and we need to take responsibility for all of those things. In fact, when reserves were first created here in this province and the First Nations people were taken off the land which they had been using quite effectively for thousands of years and multiple generations, many hundreds, thousands of generations, we created a circumstance where they were unable to participate in the economic well-being of this province by virtue of being physically excluded from participation, put into a place where they were not able to engage in the things that were happening in this province.

On top of that, we made all kinds of rules that prevented them from even beginning to participate such as being forced to not leave the reserve lands unless they had the written consent of the Indian agent. Now, of course, subsequently it was demonstrated that that was an illegal law or rule that was put in in this province, that they had no right to restrict them to the First Nations communities, the reserve lands. But we did it anyways, even against our own national laws. Then we made it illegal for these First Nations to even be able to have a lawyer to challenge the federal government on these kinds of issues. So when we ask, "Why are indigenous people not participating in the economy?" it's because we told them they could not, and we put in significant barriers to prevent them from participating. It's, you know, important for all of us now to take responsibility for that fact.

I see the bill put forward by the Minister of Indigenous Relations as having the possibility of opening up a door that has not been opened up before, and that is why I'm standing to support it. That's why I'm happy to be here and say that anything we can do to take our foot off the backs of indigenous people so they can become full participants in the economic viability of this province I am absolutely thrilled to support.

We know, as Chief Trevor Mercredi at Beaver First Nation said, that when First Nations do well, all people do well. We know that not only will we see a benefit on the reserves when economic development begins to grow and expand, but we will see all the communities around those reserves begin to benefit because, of course, they will be able to have more shops to go to. They will be able to have more people coming to their shops to buy things because there will be more money available in the communities. So I am very happy that this is happening.

In fact, I was very concerned, when this government first came in, that they were taking actions which I thought were exactly contrary to the intent of this bill. I was very concerned that while in Bill 14 they are seeking to enhance economic opportunities for indigenous people, when they first came in, they started to do things to remove economic opportunities from indigenous people.

For example, we had the best climate leadership plan in North America at the time that this government came into power, and one of the very first things they did was that they eliminated that plan. Now, they eliminated it for whatever ideological reasons they had, but one of the things that they need to take responsibility for is the fact that a significant part of that climate leadership plan involved the participation of First Nations from across this province.

In fact, I'm very proud to say that in the development of our indigenous climate leadership plan, we invited all 48 First Nations and all eight Métis settlements plus the Métis Settlements General Council plus the Métis Nation of Alberta to come together to help develop the indigenous climate leadership plan. They told me at that meeting that that was the first time that the Métis and the First Nations people sat at the same table since the late '60s, early '70s, when they sat at a table together fighting the White Paper in order to protect the rights of indigenous people. It had been over 40 years since all of those people had gathered together to have a conversation together to help create a better world in the province of Alberta, and I'm very proud that our NDP government created the circumstance under which that had happened after many years of void.

I am very concerned as well that there have been economic opportunities that have been taken out of the indigenous community because they killed that plan, because they killed the indigenous climate leadership plan. I just want to comment on many of the communities that have been mentioned by the two previous speakers. For example, we talked about Little Red, where I went up to help cut the ribbon for the opening of the massive set of solar panels they put up on all their public buildings. I was very pleased to have been there to do that.

I was very pleased to hear Tallcree being spoken about, because when Tallcree designed the school that they're hoping to attend the opening of sometime later this fall, I sat down with them and said, "What kind of environmental program and structures have you put into the design of the school?" They said, "Well, we haven't had a chance to do that." I said, "Well, let's use the indigenous climate leadership program to do that very thing." We provided $3 million for them to build the school in such a way that they will have less cost in running that school for the life of that school. Not just for the benefit today but for the life of that school, they will be doing two things at the same time. They'll be taking care of the environment, and they will be teaching their kids at a lower cost. That's the kind of positive development that was possible under the indigenous climate leadership plan, and I'm very sorry that the government has decided to take that kind of money out of indigenous communities.

I also, of course, want to talk about the fact that the minister mentioned going up to Whitefish (Goodfish), where I also had an opportunity to visit and visit the laundry facilities as well. I also want to note that in our government we provided $100 million to bring water to reserves. Lo and behold, one of the primary programs was the program to bring water to Whitefish (Goodfish) so that they can continue that laundry facility. Yet this government has not promised any new money for water to reserves, so I've just been very concerned about what's happening with Bill 14.

I'm very pleased that this government is continuing many of the programs. I'm very pleased that the Blackfoot Confederacy protocol agreement, that we established through lots of significant hard work and close relationships with the Blackfoot community, was resigned recently by this government. So I'm very happy to know that you're continuing some of the good work that the NDP government did. I'm very happy to know that the work that we have been doing to enhance the lives of indigenous people may continue under this government, and I will be holding them to account on all of those other things.

I do have a few questions about Bill 14 because when we went to the prebrief, they were unable to answer a lot of the questions. For example, you'll notice that in Bill 14 there's no mention about how much money is being set aside – the bill itself does not identify the number of dollars – to actually build this particular program nor how much money will be available to people in the indigenous community afterwards. So we have some questions. We need to know what's happening.

The bill also doesn't identify how many indigenous people will actually be on the board that is running this corporation, so again we have some questions. I'm glad it's there, but they haven't identified that. The bill has good intent, but it seems a little bit hollow, so we are really, actually, looking forward to the opportunity to answer some of these specific questions.

One of the big questions that I have is: why is it that when they are creating economic opportunities for indigenous people, they are telling indigenous people what their economic opportunities have to be? Why is it that they have determined on their own, without consultation with indigenous people, what they're allowed to borrow money toward? That's very problematic.

I heard from the minister a number of statements about how important it was to talk to indigenous people and not to impose policy on them, and then immediately I see a bill that says: you may only borrow this money for resource development. I find that a little confusing, and I really look forward to the chance in further debate to ask some further questions about: why is it that indigenous people are okay to be economically successful in the resource sector but that in other areas of economic development the government has no interest in being supportive? I just have some confusion and have some concerns. For example, under the previous NDP government we were able to help create the Alberta indigenous tourism association. I don't see the possibility for the tourism association to create new indigenous jobs and a new indigenous economy through this particular bill. Why not?

I know that the Beaver people were mentioned, and so were the Little Red people and all of their communities, and I see that there is opportunity for them to be involved in forestry and oil and gas development but not other things.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has risen.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was very much enjoying hearing my colleague's comments regarding Bill 14, Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. I just wondered if the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford would be able to continue.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much. I appreciate the opportunity to just say a little bit more. While I am very much looking forward to supporting this bill and intend, absolutely, at this point to vote in favour and encourage all of my colleagues to vote in favour of this bill, we simply have a number of questions that we would like to ask.

The questions that we do want to ask are ones about: why is it limited in the way that it's limited? Why is it only okay for indigenous people to reinforce a particular initiative on the part of the provincial government as opposed to providing them the ability to make choices for themselves about that? I mean, there are a number of ways that they could have done this. We have, for example, the aboriginal business investment fund, the aboriginal economic partnership program, and, of course, the First Nations development fund, which comes from casino revenues. Monies could have been provided through all of those programs in order to provide opportunities for businesses other than resource extraction. It could be retail. They could be businesses in terms of manufacturing. There could be businesses in terms of tourism. Yet none of these are being supported by this bill, so I am just curious.

I have lots of questions, so what I'll do is that I'll actually make a suggestion here. We were very happy on this side of the House to support the government in the unanimous decision to go immediately, on the same day as the bill was introduced, into second reading. We were very pleased to be able to do that because I think it was very important. We had guests from the indigenous community. We want them to know their government really does care for them, whether it's the government, the official side of the House, or on the opposition side of the House. That makes me very proud.

I would suggest now that we should go immediately into voting on second reading at this particular time to solidify that demonstration of our support. As I sit down, I would make a request to the House that we move immediately to a vote on Bill 14 so that we can then proceed to the opportunity to ask questions later on in committee.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, are there any other members looking to speak on this matter? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has risen.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to rise and speak today in support of Bill 14, Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. With the horrors of residential schools and through the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, all of Canada has been called to walk the path of reconciliation with the indigenous people, on whose land we have built this federation. Specifically, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission called on Canadians to "ensure that [indigenous] peoples have equitable access to jobs, training, and education opportunities in the corporate sector, and that [indigenous] communities gain long-term sustainable benefits from economic development projects." This is a challenge to Canadians to ensure that indigenous communities are partners in the prosperity of our federation. Our Conservative government has accepted that challenge. Our Conservative government has committed to walk the path of reconciliation side by side with our indigenous peoples as partners, partners in prosperity.

With this bill our government responds to that call to action by ensuring that indigenous communities have the opportunity to participate in economic development projects across our province. This bill, through the creation of the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation, will facilitate indigenous participation in the development of our natural resources. With the creation of this corporation we are reserving $1 billion for indigenous communities to become full partners in prosperity. This $1 billion will be allocated to loan guarantees and other mechanisms to support indigenous ownership in major resource development projects. This ownership is important because it ties our economic fate together, so when these large resource developments are built, we prosper together. That is the same way we will reconcile the past: together. And together we will walk forward to provide a higher standard of living.

Mr. Speaker, the indigenous communities that I've spoken to want to provide a higher standard of living. Indigenous communities in our province want to achieve this with wealth generated from our natural resources, because these communities realize the vast wealth that comes from their land that their ancestors walked for generations. Indigenous peoples have the desire, workforce, and motivation to become partners in our resource prosperity.

Moreover, indigenous communities have the desire to move forward to a better and brighter future. I've seen it first-hand, Mr. Speaker. I've lived my entire life within a 15-minute walk of the Tsuut'ina Nation, and I've seen first-hand that they're a nation of rich culture, tradition, with a proud history of community leadership, successful commerce, and entrepreneurial spirit. The Tsuut'ina have shown their commitment to partnering in resource development, and this was exemplified by their hosting of the 2019 indigenous resource council energy summit. This energy summit was a massive step toward First Nation ownership in energy projects and included discussion of models of First Nation ownership in pipelines like the Trans Mountain pipeline.

The Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation provides the opportunity for further partnership and the opportunity for economic reconciliation. It links our prosperity together so that when indigenous people thrive, all Alberta thrives.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to act on reconciliation, not just talk about it. It's time to uphold our commitments on reconciliation. In fact, this morning at the announcement one of the chiefs spoke of reconciliation. That is what this represents to me: reconciliation. Today, by supporting this bill for the establishment of the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation, I uphold one of my earliest commitments as a Member of the Legislative Assembly. Earlier this year, on May 29, I rose in the Assembly, and in my maiden speech I said:

I am committed to meet the moral obligation that we have to empower First Nations to be full partners in the development of the resources that lie below their lands, which their ancestors first inhabited, and to become full partners in prosperity.

I am still committed to that ideal, to reconciliation. My commitment to reconciliation so that indigenous partners can partner in a new wave of Alberta natural resource prosperity is the basis for my support of this bill.

This bill will bridge the gap for indigenous groups to secure adequate capital from financial institutions to increase their capacity to become true owners in resource development. This bill will make us national leaders in action on economic reconciliation, and I want to personally thank the minister for his leadership on this.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that members of this Assembly commit themselves to walking the path of reconciliation by forging a relationship, a partnership in prosperity, by giving their support for this bill and supporting the development of the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available, and the individual who caught my eye was the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for that speech. I'm interested in the contrast between your speech and the member previous, from Edmonton-Rutherford. There was a line that you repeated over and over again about how First Nations, Métis, indigenous Albertans: when they thrive, Alberta thrives. It's in stark contrast to the language used by the member opposite as he said that it is our fault, some sense of self-blame in some way for the reason that we have gotten to this place and why First Nation communities have struggled. The difference is, from where I'm sitting in the United Conservative caucus and where I sit in northern Alberta with my First Nations and Métis friends and neighbours, that they tell me they're not victims, and I agree. I think that difference in attitude is seen very large. Where I come from, the First Nation and Métis people don't want identity politics to be played anymore. They don't know what it is. They don't have time for it. What they want is a part in prosperity, to work towards a balanced economy where both they thrive, the environment thrives, the economy thrives, and therefore the province thrives.

I also heard the member earlier, in contrast to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, say that we took money out of the hands of indigenous communities. What took money out of the hands of indigenous communities – and I'm sure the Member for Calgary-Glenmore would agree – was, yes, exactly that, the climate leadership plan with the carbon tax. It was all economic pain, no environmental gain, and it did nothing but tax the poor residents of northern Alberta, indigenous or not, because of the geography of where we live. This is true for so many of our First Nation peoples.

I would just like your comment on the difference between the tack that you've taken and the tack that we've seen members opposite take.

Ms Issik: Thank you to the Member for Peace River. I will speak of my neighbours next to my riding, the Tsuut'ina Nation. You know, our history is sad. Our history is sad, and there is a reason that we must reconcile, but we must work on that together. We must have a positive view for the future. I have seen the Tsuut'ina Nation, who throughout my lifetime have been amazing business people. They have done incredible works on their land. They have created great prosperity for their people, but there is so much more that can be done. Currently they are working on an amazing development along the ring road.

I can tell you that when we look at development and we look at resource development, the gap that is being addressed by the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation is one that is vast. This access to large capital for these nations to be able to fully develop the resources below their land or to develop a downstream or a midstream operation has never ever been available, and now it will be with the backstop of the Crown. I think that presents enormous opportunity and great prosperity in partnership.

I think partnership and working through reconciliation together is important. Doing this together is important. All of Alberta will thrive as our indigenous people thrive. I want people to recognize how important reconciliation is as we move forward and truly think about reconciliation of the past and how we can move towards the future together.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, there are still a few seconds left on 29(2)(a) should anybody be looking to speak to that. Do I see any other members? I see the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain has risen to speak.

Mr. Turton: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise today in this House to speak to this incredibly important piece of legislation. Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act, is an integral component of our government's mandate. It is an important step in our journey towards reconciliation with the indigenous peoples of Alberta and will keep us on the path towards prosperity for all Albertans. By helping indigenous groups to proceed with ownership of natural resources and resource-related infrastructure and investment in resource projects like pipelines, they will be empowered to pursue financial security and economic prosperity for their communities now and for future generations.

Mr. Speaker, across Canada governments at every level as well as everyday Canadians from all walks of life are recognizing and reaffirming the need to pursue reconciliation with indigenous peoples. As a province and as a country we have set off on this journey on the road towards reconciliation, but you can't build a road without a solid foundation. In my encounters with indigenous Albertans over the years – and I hope the hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations and my colleagues from both parties will agree with me when I say this – I keep hearing that one of the foundational components of reconciliation is partnership. It sounds pretty simple when you first hear it. We all have some understanding of what partnership means because partnership exists in many forms. There are partners in sport. There are business partners and life partners, all of which are important in their own unique way. But in hearing just how much emphasis was placed on the importance of partnership and reconciliation, I felt the need to revisit and reflect upon what makes Alberta's partnership with indigenous peoples so unique.

Mr. Speaker, when Europeans first arrived here, they were greeted by indigenous peoples who helped the settlers arrive. Eventually partnerships were formed in the form of trading relationships and even military alliances, and these relationships were based on mutual respect and co-operation. Generations later, after Confederation, the government embarked on a journey to forge new partnerships through the numbered treaties. As you know, Alberta is home to three of the numbered treaties, treaties 6, 7, and 8. These treaties are not significant to just indigenous communities; they're significant to all Albertans.

As a non-indigenous person it's very easy to feel removed from these treaties, but that is simply not the case. Even if you don't live on a reserve, Mr. Speaker, you still live on treaty land. I have the greatest privilege of representing the riding of Spruce Grove-Stony Plain, which is situated on Treaty 6 land, the traditional territory of the Plains and Wood Cree and, in particular, the Enoch Cree peoples. I have a duty not only as a member of this Assembly but as an Albertan and as a Canadian to respect these treaties and acknowledge their significance.

You know, I'm not a historian, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the events leading up to the treaties and those that followed their signing are numerous and complex, but it's commonly accepted that the treaties were signed with the purpose of a renewed partnership, one that would ensure peace and prosperity for all parties involved. We now acknowledge, however, that the spirit of these treaties was not always upheld. Commitments have not always been honoured by previous governments, and certain policies had harmful effects that are still felt to this day. We see this in the outlawing of traditional practices and ceremonies, residential schools, the '60s scoop, and the forced sterilization of certain indigenous peoples, particularly indigenous women and the mentally ill or disabled. We acknowledge that this damage sustained over generations has eroded the trust that was central to the partnerships that the treaties were meant to uphold. Acknowledging these historical wrongs and telling the truth about them is the first step towards reconciliation.

The next steps are about commitment to action, commitment to do better. The Premier and the Minister of Indigenous Relations often speak of working with indigenous Albertans in the spirit of the treaties. To me, this means creating a renewed partnership between indigenous peoples and their communities and the provincial government, a partnership that embodies what the treaties, signed well over a century ago, originally sought to accomplish: peace, mutual respect, and a shared prosperity.

That kind of meaningful partnership, Mr. Speaker, is the kind that this bill seeks to renew and revitalize. Bill 14 builds upon this partnership by making meaningful contributions that will assist indigenous communities in pursuing prosperity for their communities. The Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation will allocate $1 billion in loan guarantees, which will help support indigenous groups in their pursuit of co-ownership and financial participation in natural resource development. I believe that this bill demonstrates our commitment to partnership with indigenous peoples by offering support. This bill will help indigenous communities realize projects that they previously didn't have the financial capacity for.

Mr. Speaker, we are blessed with a beautiful province that is rich in natural resources like oil and gas, and while we commonly think of these resources as being fuel for modern technology like our cars and home heating, their uses go back over a millennium. In 1788 explorer Alexander Mackenzie noted that the indigenous groups in the Athabasca region used bitumen mixed with gum from spruce trees to seal their canoes. So while opponents of Alberta oil and gas often claim that fossil fuels have never been used by indigenous peoples, we know that's simply not true.

Albertans care deeply for our province's environment, and this is especially true for indigenous peoples, who have been stewards of this land for well over a millennium. They understand how to take care of the land. They understand the necessity of taking care of the land. So when I hear the leaders and members of First Nations across this province supporting responsible resource development, I mean, it's invigorating to see. On the land that their ancestors once lived on, on the land that they share a deep connection with, and on the land they dutifully care for, they care about natural resource development.

Mr. Speaker, there have already been countless examples of successful ventures in natural resources that we have seen right here in Alberta. One example is the Frog Lake Energy Resources Corporation in Treaty 6. Frog Lake First Nation is a small Cree community of roughly about 1,200 people. The band desperately wanted to reduce poverty in their community, so they looked to the resources beneath their land and launched their own oil and gas exploration company, the first of its kind. Struggling to secure Canadian capital, it was Chinese investors who backed their exploration project. Today Frog Lake Energy Resources Corporation extracts over 3,000 barrels of oil every single day and has over $30 million in cash flow. This is money that has gone to improving infrastructure, reducing poverty, and improving the overall quality of life for members of the community and their families. It's gone to helping indigenous children and let them have a shot at a better future.

Joe Dion, the chair of the board, has said, quote: together we have to make reconciliation a priority given the economic risks and gridlock that continue to impede the resource sector nationally and Alberta's energy sector in particular; I believe that reconciliation can be realized right here in Alberta's energy sector; it's time to take bold action; Alberta is not at the crossroads; it's in the ditch.

Mr. Speaker, indigenous groups should not have to look across the ocean to find those willing to help finance their projects. Our government believes in the resourcefulness, resiliency, and tenacity of indigenous peoples, and that is why this bill will help allocate the financial resources necessary to help indigenous peoples across our province pursue ownership of natural resource projects. There are already so many indigenous leaders looking to buy into these projects, like the Trans Mountain pipeline and the Eagle Spirit pipeline, which, if built, will bring prosperity to those communities for generations to come.

Mr. Speaker, reconciliation doesn't have a finish line. The work to repair these relationships will be ongoing for years to come. Nothing can erase the historical wrongs and tragedies that indigenous people in this province and this country as a whole have endured. Nothing can replace lost cultural connections, a lost childhood, or even lost loved ones. There's no magic bullet to a solution, but we can try to stop the cycle of poverty and desperation that has been born out of these traumas.

Mr. Speaker, most Albertans and most Canadians, for that matter, have seen their quality of life improve over the course of many decades as we have increased our production and exports of natural resources, yet many indigenous communities continually have been left behind. It is clear that they haven't historically benefited from our natural resources and historical economic growth in ways that they should. That's why we keep seeing calls for change, calls from indigenous leaders to be included in these projects so that they, too, can reap the benefits for their communities, so that First Nations can enjoy the social and economic infrastructure that is needed for indigenous Albertans to succeed.

I hope that by honouring the fundamental principles of our treaties, by maintaining a strong and meaningful partnership between the provincial government and First Nations, and by empowering indigenous communities to take control of their economic futures, Alberta will set an example for the rest of Canada and the rest of the world, for that matter, of what reconciliation looks like in action.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a). I see the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika has risen.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for acknowledging me and for this opportunity to rise under 29(2)(a). We've heard and will continue to hear, I'm certain, from everyone in this Chamber, or at least those who are going to speak on this bill, of their experience with regard to their interactions with indigenous communities, and it's heartening to me given that I have two large indigenous communities in my constituency. What is a bit discouraging is what appears to be the level of interest in this piece of legislation from the members opposite, given their attendance. I guess I can't say that word, can I?

You know, I would like to hear a little more from the member who just spoke about the education he's received and the interactions he's had with members of the indigenous communities through the campaign, through his time as an elected official now, and how enriching that has been for him as a representative.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for asking that question. While my current provincial riding of Spruce Grove-Stony Plain does not have a First Nations community located within the riding – the two closest would be Paul band First Nation, which is located in the riding of Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, and Enoch Cree Nation, which is actually located in the riding of Drayton Valley-Devon – I've had extensive dealings with indigenous peoples over the years. One of the clearest examples of relationships and actually how some previous legislation by the members opposite when they were in government affected Paul band First Nation was my experience working at K3 power plant. When the expansion happened in 2007 and 2006, this was one of the largest construction projects at that time. TransAlta was actually one of the largest employers of indigenous people from Paul band First Nation, and they looked upon Sundance power plant and Keephills power plant in Wabamun to provide stable economic and employment opportunities for many members of that First Nation.

It's unfortunate, however, just with my experience, that the accelerated coal phase-out, which was really caused by the members opposite in the last government, has affected well over a thousand people in my area, and it affected numerous people from Paul band First Nation that looked upon future construction projects with coal generation at the Keephills power plant and Sundance power plant as a way to provide for their families. I mean, there isn't a lot of economic opportunity when you're looking that far west of Edmonton. You know, TransAlta and Capital Power are seen as key economic drivers. There were many families that I talked to, that I worked with in the trenches on the construction sites, that were devastated to know that the future economic opportunities that they had were now drying up, and they didn't know where else to turn.

In my previous capacity as a city councillor in the city of Spruce Grove, I had an extensive number of meetings at Paul band First Nation looking at ways to be able to increase integration and within a spirit of co-operation find ways that Paul band First Nation can interact with the city of Spruce Grove to help provide transit opportunities, to be able to provide community services. You know, the chief at the time said that I was actually the very first city councillor from the city of Spruce Grove in the history of Paul band First Nation that actually took the time to visit the Paul band to have that conversation on their land. I was very lucky and privileged to have been given that opportunity.

You know, over the years, like I said, friends and family have interacted with First Nations both at Enoch and Paul band, and I look forward to seeing the opportunities that this bill is really going to give First Nations communities west of Edmonton for a chance for economic prosperity.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members to finish off under 29(2)(a)? There's about a minute left on that.

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West has risen.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin by first thanking the Minister of Indigenous Relations for providing me an opportunity to rise and the first chance to speak in the House in this fall session, to speak to something that I really do support. I want to thank him for his hard work on it, and I want to thank, through him, his officials and all of the folks who handled, I'm sure, what were important consultations, conversations over the summer.

I think this is a good bill. I'm going to provide some suggestions to the minister, and I'm hoping that the minister will take it in the spirit in which it is intended, which is that I'm going to ask some specific clarification questions, those kinds of things. We'll probably do this at the amendment stage as well, just to give him a heads-up. When I raise these things, I think it's worth while to actually have an answer. Oftentimes we actually do make things better in this House. That's the point of the legislative branch. Not everything is run through Executive Council, nor ought it be.

I want to begin by saying that, obviously, access to both capital but also equity participation of various kinds is a laudable goal and an important goal given the history of access to capital for indigenous peoples across the province. I'm not just talking here about First Nations on-reserve with specific territory, but I'm also talking about Métis settlements and the Métis Nation of Alberta and other associated, so-called "indigenous groups," as they are referred to in the act.

We have a number of urban indigenous members as well. I know that between 10 and 15 per cent of my own riding is folks who are members of one of the Blackfoot Nations, be it Kainai, Piikani, or Siksika. Folks come into town for all kinds of reasons, even if they are coming from Stand Off or out at Brocket or whatever the case may be. In fact, a large part of our restaurant, hospitality, and service sector in Lethbridge is supported by those many rural and outlying communities, and it's important not to forget the economic development from adjacent First Nations communities that comes into Lethbridge and keeps businesses moving.

One of those communities is the Blood Tribe, of course, the largest reserve by land base in the country, who were one of the recipients during the competitive auctions of the renewal energy program of the ability to have equity participation within a project. What we learned through that process was – you know, at first, when we were designing the process, I remember we said: oh, should it be 10 per cent equity participation or more? I remember the larger nations like Blood Tribe saying to us: oh, no; we can handle 25. They were really gung-ho to get in there, a pretty business-friendly chief and council there. They did outcompete a number. In fact, they outcompeted the no indigenous equity participation. That's how excited they were about pulling together equity participation for energy projects. Right? It's a renewable energy project, but it's an energy project, and we're an energy province in every sense of that word.

Another one of the recipients for the Stirling project that partnered with Potentia was Paul band, in fact. Paul band was just chatted about. Paul band also had a number of other projects around the province.

We saw that every First Nation in some way, shape, or form participated in indigenous climate leadership initiatives, whether that was through investments in training, which is a really key, important part, not just sort of trades training, although that's important too, but accounting, legal training, all of those sorts of things so that people can actually participate meaningfully in projects. Energy efficiency and clean tech programs, retrofitting programs, and so on: those are also energy projects.

I think that through the course of this debate what we should be doing is making it clear to the nations the future of those programs, in addition to the aboriginal business investment fund, the aboriginal economic partnerships programs, and the First Nations development fund, just so that we're really clear with the nations. Like I said, we have so much enthusiasm for these projects, and there are going to be a lot of folks now looking at this bill, looking at what it means, looking at the reg-making process. They're going to want to know how this fits into their overall business development strategy. I think that's the first thing. That piece of clarity from the minister's office would be helpful.

Another piece of clarity that would be good is that we had $400 million worth of loan guarantee programs around clean tech, that had to do with Emissions Reduction Alberta, our clean tech fund. They weren't, obviously, just for indigenous resource companies or other indigenous initiatives, but they were participating in some of that. What is the overlap there? What is the future of those programs, and how does it interact or articulate with what's being proposed in this bill? I think it's an important question to answer. I mean, answering it back to me is fine, but the more important audience here, obviously, is all of the indigenous communities that are really excited about this bill. They just want to know how it kind of interacts with all of the other things they've got going on.

I think another piece that we can probably clear up when it comes time to amend things is around section 2(12)(a) and (b). In (12) it says that the minister may make regs

- (a) respecting the natural resource projects and related infrastructure...

Fine. We understand that. And then:

- (b) expanding the mandate of the Corporation to facilitate investment by indigenous groups in other types of projects.

We know that renewable energy is defined within the act. It's defined within the renewable energy act, that was passed a couple of years back. It's a pretty simple definition. In this section we could amend this act to allow for other kinds, not just natural resource projects. You may even find that definitionally you have some issue because the sun is also a natural resource. But renewables are in fact defined – right? – so you have captured within that the various forms of wind, solar, biomass, and hydro, basically.

The reason I raise this is that, one, we've got a lot of sort of big solar projects moving forward out there on the landscape, and I know of First Nations who are interested in taking equity or are in active conversations. This might help them bring some of those projects over the line. I know that there were some First Nations that were really disappointed that they just didn't make it into the REP auctions, so this might allow them to move forward with some of those projects that have already gone through a development or permitting stage.

Finally, there are a number of interesting projects out there around hydro, and there have been, at least to my awareness, preliminary conversations, probably in some places more than preliminary, that I may not have ever been made aware of, but there's a tremendous opportunity there, too. We should make sure that First Nations and Métis have access to those opportunities as well. It would be a shame to miss them simply because it's either not captured by the original act or because the reg-making process takes a little longer than it otherwise might. You never know with reg-making processes. At least, some of the people on this side know that sometimes that can take a while.

The other piece, on page 3, section 3(1) – sorry. That previous section that I made reference to, Minister and Mr. Speaker, was under Establishment of Corporation, section 2(12). In section 3, in understanding what is meant by indigenous groups, we have section 3(1)(c), where it says: "Metis groups as defined by the regulations." In this piece I would simply ask a question, which is: do we have places where Métis groups are defined by the regulations? I think we do, either through the Métis harvesting agreement or other associated hunting regulations or other spaces. I'm thinking here that through Indigenous Relations, for the purposes of other programs we may have that already defined, in which case I would just want to know that the MNA or others had been spoken to – probably the majority of the stakeholder group under 3(1)(c) here would be the MNA because the Métis settlements are defined – so that we're not going offside of any established jurisprudence around Métis membership. It would seem to me that we already have that, so why not put it in the act? It might be an easy thing for this act to be amended in such a way.

The final piece that I will flag for the minister that I believe might be problematic – and here's me, you know, trying to be helpful, Mr. Speaker – is that under the regulation-making authority under 14(b) we have that the regs may be made at the cabinet table "respecting appointments to the board, including the number of board members, eligibility and qualifications for appointment." This is pretty standard in establishing government agencies. However, it may be that the government may want to consider indigenous representation being explicitly enumerated within the act.

We have done this in other contexts. Certainly, you may also have an advisory council in some way. The minister may want to consider that as input. We have an Indigenous Wisdom Advisory Panel, enumerated in statute in the oil sands monitoring act, that must be appointed by the minister and may report to the public. That is one way that you can make sure that you have indigenous input into how your organization is being run.

That's just an example, Minister, but we have other areas where we see that we've specifically enumerated in the act that there will be indigenous representation on that board and that it won't just be a bunch of – I don't know – bankers from Bay Street although I am noticing that the head office has to be in Alberta, so that's helpful. But I would want to see people on that board who are in there and that are indigenous Albertans from the ground up, because that piece of perspective and relevance to the community is going to mean that this organization is overall successful and is overall relevant to people's lives and is overall relevant to making people's lives better.

Those are the things that just jumped out at me in a sort of first read of this bill. I think I just want to flag for the minister a couple of other points. I think that when I bring up this idea of expanding the type of projects that might be supported by such a financing mechanism, I'm saying it because, in my experience, we will be stuck in old ways if we are making choices through this act, if the opportunities corporation is making choices for indigenous peoples in terms of economic development and so enumerating the kinds of projects.

I mean, obviously, when you're giving out loan guarantees, there needs to be a certain amount of commercial viability. There needs to be a certain amount of due diligence and all of those things that go into the folks around the board table and ultimately the CEO and the executive leadership team of this organism, and those pieces are obvious. But what we don't want to do is cut off certain avenues of economic development for First Nations whose elders want them to invest in renewable energy, whose young members are saying: hey, there are all those opportunities here. We don't want people to not be able to pursue those opportunities. First Nations, indigenous communities, and our Métis communities are democracies, too, and their young people are asking for all kinds of different economic opportunities, and I wouldn't want us to miss those opportunities.

I think that ultimately what we need to understand is that this is a piece of community development that particularly, I think, can be helpful on-reserve and in rural and remote areas and can feed into a better education system, where the province is doing its part where the federal government has failed, where the province is upholding its responsibilities on delivery of health care, where the province is upholding its responsibilities around the justice system and access to justice.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the Member for Lethbridge-West for her comments and, particularly, tying in the very positive aspects of Bill 14 with some of the experiences through the indigenous climate leadership program. The member was also speaking about the REP program and the very high levels of participation. I'd be interested to hear maybe even just a little bit more about how many communities had participated and submitted proposals through that program and additional thoughts along those lines.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think some of the lessons that we learned through the renewable energy program are really going to be instructive for how we move forward with the Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. It can well be that this mechanism allows for that type of equity participation in further development, obviously not around a competitive procurement process for renewables into the grid, because that's not a thing that we're doing anymore, but in other ways. There are other renewables projects that are now out there on the landscape. We had, you know – what? – 7,000 megawatts in the regulatory queue. Many of these projects are being developed either with First Nations equity participation already, or there is some, or folks are looking at their opportunities on the actual indigenous land base. We know that those things are happening as well.

I mean, what the REPs did was that they performed a really valuable price discovery function for the electricity market generally in terms of the affordability of renewables and their low cost and their ability to compete in the long term and in the long term outcompete, you know, thermal coal and other forms of generation. What they also did was that they proved that when you have indigenous participation in a project, it doesn't get more expensive, right? That part was a really important function. It proved (a) the interest and (b) the fact that First Nations were ready for this.

That's another reason why I commend this bill, because it's clear that so many – you know, you always get the chatter of: "Oh, how many bids will there be? Will it be competitive?" All of the chatter was wrong, and the REP procurement on the indigenous round was at a lower cost than the one that was just price only. So it does show that when you combine government initiatives with what's already going on in the private sector with an appetite for economic development by First Nations, a lot of the old rules are not at all relevant, and you can achieve something that is really meaningful for communities.

In the Paul band they will now have a steady stream of income, you know, for the next 20 years or so. The same goes for the Blood Tribe. The same goes for – there was a third one. I want to say that it was Saddle – I will ask Hansard to correct my record because it's slipped out of my mind now. That's why I think this indigenous opportunities corporation really does build on that work, because the proof of concept is sort of already there in many ways.

But – here comes the big but; it can't be all Kumbaya; that's not on-brand for me – ultimately, if you don't have education, health care, water, justice, early learning and child care, an emergency opioid response strategy, all of those other pieces, if the roads get washed out every single time there's a rain storm, if all of those things aren't happening, then we are not actually doing our job for the kids, that are so cute, that we run into at powwows or that I run into in the Opokaa'sin early learning centre. I always think of them whenever we have these conversations, right? I think about the world that – it is our responsibility as what I call the little Crown to make sure that we are upholding our level of responsibility. Certainly, if we were waiting for the federal government, we'd be waiting a long time in some instances. We have so much responsibility as a provincial government to deliver that, and if we're not doing all of those other things, this will be nice, but it will only be a part of it.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I see the hon. Member for West Yellowhead has risen to speak.

Mr. Long: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Sweet: Point of order. Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Ms Gray: Oh, there was.

The Acting Speaker: There was, yeah.

Ms Sweet: My apologies, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Please continue.

Mr. Long: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today to speak on behalf of Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. The UCP government is working hard for all Albertans because that is what Albertans elected us to do. We are working to provide opportunities for Albertans, for the indigenous people that occupy the land and their communities, and Bill 14 is a strong act by the government to partner with indigenous communities. I'm proud of the work done with indigenous leaders and communities and of all our members who've consulted with indigenous members.

Alberta is a province that takes pride in its indigenous roots and continues to promote indigenous culture provincially and across Canada. We consult with leaders, we engage with communities, and we listen to the concerns of all Albertans. Indigenous communities have been at various times in our past voiceless and ignored. History proves that we cannot leave our indigenous communities behind. It is time that our government stands up and works together with indigenous leaders.

Bill 14 is a bridge to connect government and indigenous leaders to build stronger economic and social well-being. We know indigenous communities benefit from responsible government, and we believe strong partnerships are better than neglect. Bill 14 introduces a new organization, the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation, the AIOC, that will position Alberta to be a leader and steward of financial support for indigenous communities so they can seek more investments in natural resource projects. The indigenous are stewards of the land. They have fought for their land, for their right to keep their land, and for the cultural connection they have with the land. They learned to live with the land, to protect the land and its natural resources, and to prosper from it. From medicine, food, and clothing, indigenous peoples have shown us how valuable the land is, and this government will continue to give them the opportunities to continue to prosper.

The AIOC gives indigenous communities in Alberta security of their resources and their financial assets to find more opportunities to invest in resource projects that help many indigenous communities. It is a positive step in engaging the indigenous people and creating economic prosperity for Alberta. I think we can agree that we want the best for all Albertans. We come to work every day, like all working-class Albertans, to move an agenda to get things done. Mr. Speaker, this UCP government is doing just that. We continue to work with individuals, consult with community leaders, and listen to those who want to make Alberta stronger for a better future for all. It starts with Bill 14 and the work we have done in the short time we have been in government. We are creating a voice for indigenous peoples. We are encouraging communities to be stewards of the great land, and we are supporting all indigenous peoples so they have the foundation for a strong and stable future.

Mr. Speaker, I've said how many of my colleagues, myself included, have met with members of the multiple indigenous nations found in Alberta. Alberta is situated in three treaty designations: treaties 6, 7, and 8. My constituency of West Yellowhead is situated on Treaty 6. That's the land of Alexis First Nation. I also have the opportunity to serve the Aseniwuche Winewak Nation, who are an amazing nation with incredible heart and unmatched passion. We have invited community leaders, business leaders, and industry representatives to engage in these discussions with us.

We know that Alberta has a strong natural resource industry, primarily in the oil and gas sector. We are committing through the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation $1 billion in loan guarantees to support indigenous communities to invest in our economy and support Alberta's economic future. Alberta's indigenous community wants a government that will stand up for them and stand with them, and that is exactly what we are doing with Bill 14. We are working alongside to ensure our indigenous leaders and community members are heard, are represented, and are informed. We are engaging in their culture and promoting the spirit of their ancestors and the sacred heritage they are so proud of. There's no way to turn back time and correct the wrongdoings in our history, but we can move forward, and we can move forward together. We can create a new path towards a strong partnership with our indigenous communities to further economic growth and prosperity and empower indigenous communities to become stronger business partners in investment.

We were elected to get things done. We were trusted to strengthen these partnerships and listen to all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, this government is doing exactly that. A hundred and ninety people attended engagement sessions with this government. That is 190 indigenous community members that wanted to engage with this government and hear how the government is working hard to represent them. We have listened to indigenous leaders, to community members, to industry representatives from Alberta's largest economic contributors, to businessmen and -women. We have listened to Albertans, and we will not stop listening to Albertans because at the end of the day, I want my constituents to know that I am standing up for them every day.

Alberta is full of growth, of prosperity, of valuable resources that push our economic agenda and get our province back on track to being a leader in economic growth. Now indigenous communities want to be involved. You see through this bill that we are promoting that indigenous community investment. Alberta's indigenous communities need a voice. This government is giving them that voice to contribute to Alberta's economy so our province continues to grow economically and their communities benefit from the resources that are found on lands that their ancestors found thousands of years ago.

I am proud to stand here on behalf of Bill 14 and support this bill. I'm proud to be a member of this government that works for improving the lives of all Albertans and cares about our economic future. I believe Bill 14 sets a tone for our interaction with indigenous communities and strengthens the partnership between indigenous communities and government more than it has in previous governments. I hope that you will all join me in supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Prior to affording members with 29(2)(a), I'll just clear up for the record that there was a point of order called at approximately 4:30, and I am ruling that there was no point of order as there was 29(2)(a) afforded during the last speaker.

Going forward, are there any other members looking for the opportunity under 29(2)(a) for questions and comments? I see the hon. Member for Grande Prairie has risen to speak on 29(2)(a).

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I found it very interesting to hear the hon. member's comments with respect to the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation, and I would love to hear how he feels it will impact his community and the communities surrounding his constituency.

Mr. Long: I think that it has the potential to impact in such a major way. I had a recent opportunity, actually, to be at a round dance in Grande Cache with the Aseniwuche Winewak Nation, and they are ecstatic to have a government that looks at them as equal partners, as people that we want to see succeed, and to see that look of anticipation, that in and of itself is going to impact that community in a major way. I think that's where we're coming to. We're letting all communities, all people in our communities just see that we want everyone to succeed and play a part in that success. So yeah, I see it benefiting our communities in a major, major way.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, three and a half minutes left on 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? I see the hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you have to remember where I'm at, you can always reach to your left hand, because we usually sit pretty close over here.

I'm very pleased that our government will be starting the session with Bill 14, a bill that will do wonders for the economic hardships found in the indigenous communities. I think every member of this Assembly would agree that the government of Alberta should be doing more to help with opportunities of the indigenous peoples. Personally, myself as a budding politician or new to this, when I heard about the potential for this bill, I was absolutely ecstatic. Being a former person from the energy sector and dealing with consultation both in Canada and the U.S. across different provinces, this one was going to be a game-changer, and I couldn't wait to share that message with the folks in our communities.

According to a recent study by the Assembly of First Nations, the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, indigenous children face the highest rate of poverty in the country, with almost 1 in every 2 First Nations children living in households with low income. That statistic is undeniably abhorrent, and while examining indigenous poverty in Canada as a whole, our province has nothing to brag about. While most Canadians have seen improvement in their quality of life in the last few decades, the same can't be said for the indigenous communities. Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, that's unacceptable. As the Premier has said, the most significant step that we can take to improve this economic disparity is to extend the same opportunities to the indigenous communities. This bill allocates $1 billion, as we heard, in loan guarantees supporting indigenous communities in their efforts to participate financially in our natural resources by pursuing co-owner development, which has made Alberta so prosperous.

The government was consulting with indigenous businesses and financial leaders throughout the summer, meeting with over nearly 200 people, as we've heard. These consultations are essential to making this an effective piece of legislation and will be an important step in building strong partnerships. I hope that these consultations will continue and that the government will continue to heed the suggestions that came from them.

Poverty is an extremely complex issue, and no one piece of legislation will come close to addressing all the causes. The stats, however, don't lie, and poverty is commonplace on many reserves. It is true that different communities do not necessarily face the same challenges. By investing in indigenous business leaders, the hope is that jobs can be created across whatever industry is most viable in a particular community. This bill is a direct investment to the indigenous communities that empower those who wish to participate.

Access to credit and loans is a major issue facing indigenous peoples living on-reserve. Individuals living in indigenous communities do not own the lands they live on. Because of this lack of ownership they're not able to put up collateral for major loans. This creates a major impediment to entrepreneurship and small business in general. Indigenous businesses represent only a tiny fraction of Canadian capital investment, and this must be rectified. We are a government that champions the spirit of small business that allows Albertans to thrive, and this bill will help cut unnecessary red tape. It is essential that we help indigenous communities to empower themselves by listening and proposing solutions.

Mr. Speaker, indigenous communities are deeply interested in their own development and well-being. They deserve the ability to responsibly develop for themselves and to have the mechanisms in place to do so. Unemployment on some reserves has reached staggering levels, as we've heard from some of the members in this Legislature. Employment is essential for the building of one's skills as well as a sense of self-worth. Having known many people who at some point of their lives were unemployed, I know that these people are not content being unemployed; they simply have not found the opportunity or been given the chance. It's time that we provide the ability to build strong communities rather than accepting that the unemployment rate on-reserve is significantly higher for indigenous people than off-reserve. That is simply because there are not the same jobs present.

I can already hear the opposition. They're talking about that we're not really caring that much for the communities, and we have this slant towards favouring the oil companies. This couldn't be further from the truth. The legislation empowers indigenous communities to promote industry in whatever way they see fit. It empowers them to become partners in resource development, where historically they have had little leverage. To those that do not support this bill, I would remind them that as a citizen of Canada and one of the most prosperous provinces, one should not be unable to find work. I think we owe our indigenous brothers and sisters better. A balance of building economic prosperity at home is the best way to do so. Indigenous groups should have the ability to develop for themselves. They want future generations to enjoy the bounty of the land and also want the ability to make their own choices. It makes sense that they would want to enjoy a higher standard of living than they do today.

This legislation seeks to break down barriers that indigenous businesses have faced for years and, hopefully, to help spread the spirit of prosperity that we have enjoyed, at least to some of the least well off Albertans. With that there has been dialogue about some of the bands and reservations within the area, and a lot of us are bordering jurisdictions. Within my constituency I have the Paul band, the Alexis, and also the Alexander. I've met with the chiefs and I've met with the councils, and the unanimous consent on this: it isn't asking for help or a hand up or any of those types of things; it's simply asking to be fellow participating Albertans. One former chief had put it to me. He says: you know, if you were here 20 years ago, I'd probably have the war paint on, you'd be in a business suit, and we'd be fighting out in the hallway. But those aren't the days that we're facing today. We're looking toward these partnerships, and we're looking to be active participants. We're also looking at budding energy companies that are looking to actually partner and do the right thing to have those opportunities to build it.

I had those opportunities before in the pipeline industry of sitting at those tables with those individuals, and in my new role as a politician I'm able to join a couple of these like-minded folks together. The Paul band, for example: it's going to be a great release. We'll have a really good story on it. I'm so pleased to say that a new budding company called good energy and Paul band managed to get together, and I was so proud. I couldn't have been more proud if I was the actual matchmaker because in essence, Mr. Speaker, I kind of was who brought these folks together in that community. They came up, and they saw what the issues and challenges were. The new company wanted to have unfettered access to resources, having good, skilled tradespeople to be there so that in the next wave we're not having to seek outside of our provincial borders for that. The Paul band themselves had a bunch of folks that have skilled trades, but with the rapid phase-out of the coal-fired plants out at Keephills, they're no longer doing the shutdowns. They're no longer working on the capital projects, so they were in some need and distress of having that as well.

The conditions of the roads in the First Nations are substandard. I've seen a lot of bush roads when we were punching in leases that have actually been better than that. As I'm riding in the truck with one of the councillors, Faron Bull, and one of his advisers and former chief, I'm asking him, "What's going on with your roads?" "Well we don't have the money to maintain the roads. We have over 55 kilometres and $150,000 a year to do it." We started talking about rural crime and some of the issues taking place. They said that a judge had actually paid attention to that, too, because 30 per cent of his caseload is coming from that one reservation. When I ask the councillors very openly: "What is the issue? What's the problem?" "Well, we used to have good roads. We used to have better access for ambulances. We used to have a constable here on the reserve, and he helped keep the bad guys out. They helped deal with the crime."

They know they have issues. So what good energy and the Paul band managed to do was to come up with a model where Paul band owns 5 per cent of this new company. Good energy is going to put a new trade resource centre right on that facility, right taking place, so they'll have unfettered access to train these people up, and they have part ownership. They should have an opportunity to see an income flux of about $3 million to $4 million dollars per year within the first year. That will pay for the roads. That will pay for some of the services. That will help fight the crime, and it will keep those bright-eyed, bushy-tailed little kids that are coming out of that schooling system – they're so hopeful and wanting for life. They're going to have an opportunity. They're going to have that pride of ownership that it's going to be their company, something that they've done. This isn't about thinking that they're ready for it and giving out little programs. This is about genuine consultation, genuine partnerships, and setting aside all of those bad legislative items that have been put in the past to keep us at odds. As that one former chief said: with him with the warpaint on and me with the business suit fighting in the hallway.

Bill 14 does that. Minister, thank you so much for your initiative, for your folks for doing that. I know that it's going to help the other communities out there in the province. I know that the Alexis band, for example, has done wonderful things with that business-minded community. The chief there is very forward thinking. Backwoods Energy is a fine, shining example of how they can be involved and engaged in industry and bring those benefits back to the community. This is going to give them that next step, and it's going to help industry be able to have fruitful consultation and to not have impediments in the project. From the bottom of my heart and our constituents', sir, thank you so much.

Our government was elected on the promises that we would get all Albertans working again, and we mean all Albertans. When we're sitting there and we're having these conversations about Treaty 6 – in my neck of the woods Treaty 6, the emblem on that has two people shaking hands. That's what we have with this bill. That's going back to basics, back to where we started, a genuine handshake. It means a hell of a – a heck of a lot to me. Sorry; I was almost unparliamentary. It means a heck of a lot to me, and I know it means the same for those folks. We can make this handshake, we can make these deals work, and everyone gets with it.

Thank you, sir.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Seeing the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain standing.

Mr. Turton: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland for giving such a heartfelt speech about the impact that, you know, Bill 14 can have, especially in the three indigenous nations that currently exist in his riding: Alexander, Alexis, and Paul band. I know the member has extensive experience managing large industrial construction projects, and he has a widespread amount of experience that really took him all over Canada, looking at different environments. I was hoping, perhaps, that he could elaborate a little bit about, based upon his experience, what he thinks Bill 14 can do when it comes to making an impact on indigenous communities right across Canada and specifically on the three groups that are located within his riding, specifically Paul band First Nation which was, obviously, as everyone knows in this House, drastically affected by the accelerated coal phase-out.

Mr. Getson: Thank you for your question on that. Yeah. I do have that experience of sitting there. One of the fundamental changes here is that normally when we're doing consultations, it's within a given traditional territory. What happens is, essentially, you put people on a leash. You can only go so far around your proximities or your circles, and you can only stay within your given areas or traditional lands. What this bill does: it unshackles that. It essentially allows, from my understanding of it, and through, you know, the dialogues with these other groups, that they can do any work within the province.

For the Paul band, for example, they're not waiting or they're not stuck in their own backyard just for that job at Keephills. They literally are going to be part owners, and under this program they might be one of the first few that get through the hopper to be able to partake in this. They can actually go up to Fort McMurray or they can have some other joint-venture partners with other First Nations in those areas. They can actively participate with one or more different companies. It actually gives them the chance that we've all had. It gives them that financial backstop and wherewithal to be taken seriously. As industry we're going to gobble this up. This is wonderful because before we had been boxed in as well.

There's always the true consultation that you need within those territories, and that will never go away. The known traditional lands, that will not go away. But the ability to facilitate business, the ability to have revenue generated off your traditional lands, the ability to work collaboratively with other groups off your lands: this is huge. This is absolutely huge. Once you get that buy-in and that understanding, you can basically tailor-make each one of these little projects, if you would, and you can look at what the needs are within that one community. As an example for Paul band, then, good energy is going to look at their emergent needs because that's how they're going to facilitate this one model. By the same token, they could have another company off to the side, another silo, if you would, with another one of the First Nations groups. Dependent on what their needs are, you can tailor-make that project again, have them participating, and the company they come up with, that they form, is subtly different. Again, we're allowing that flexibility, like we said, to allow them the opportunities and have that ingenuity to come up with the new models.

This is huge, and that's why I was so ecstatic about it before, Member Turton, because this literally gives the opportunity for all those folks to have that unbridled freedom, that entrepreneurship to get ahead. It's not a hand up. This is definitely levelling the playing field like we've talked about. This is an opportunity for all Albertans, and this is our chance to make it right. That's why I'm so excited about it.

Thank you for that question.

The Acting Speaker: I'll just remind members to ensure that they do not use the specific names of members in their comments.

There are still about 60 seconds left on this 29(2)(a) if anybody would like to speak to that.

Seeing none, are there any other members looking to speak to the bill proper?

Mr. Toor: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform the House of an incredibly important piece of legislation that is currently before us. Bill 14 is an integral part of our agenda.

Since this government was elected, we have been busy fulfilling our commitment to Albertans of getting this province back on track to economic recovery. We want to see as many people as possible in this province with a good job that allows them to support their families and give back to their communities. Part of this commitment is to improve the lives of indigenous people in Alberta. Our indigenous brothers and sisters have suffered in the past and continue to see intergenerational struggles as a result of this today. We do not stray away from the difficult conversations about the mistreatment that has previously occurred, and we believe as a province that we have a moral obligation to do better as we strive for reconciliation.

Unemployment among some First Nations is at a high rate. The natural resource industry has provided rewarding and consistent work for many people in this province. We believe that there is a more significant role that indigenous people in Alberta can play in the development of natural resources, with a benefit that will last for generations. The indigenous people of Alberta have been stewards of the land for millennia. They learned to live with, protect, and use this province's abundant natural resources to ensure that their communities would prosper, from food to clothing to medicine. We believe that this knowledge should be utilized. That is why we set out to listen to indigenous Albertans about how they could be partnered with and supported in profiting from our natural resources. Our government has consulted with indigenous groups and business leaders far and wide across the province. We hosted eight engagement sessions with about 200 participants that helped craft this legislation. I want to thank those who took part in the meetings which informed the development of this bill.

Previous governments have taken an approach to indigenous Albertans. We're thinking differently. We want to put some of that power back into their hands. Today we are welcoming indigenous Albertans to the table as stakeholders in future natural resource exploration and development.

Bill 14 proposes the creation of an Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation, which is called AIOC. The AIOC will bridge the gap between indigenous groups wanting to be commercial partners in the natural resource sector. This will include up to $1 billion in loan guarantees. It will also allow the AIOC to leverage other financial tools such as equity loans. This is so important because First Nation people living on reserves do not have property rights like other Canadians. For far too long they have been unable to accumulate capital or mortgage their properties to start up new businesses.

It is time to harness the entrepreneurial spirit of Alberta's First Peoples and ensure that they have the means to put food on their tables and a roof over their heads. We do not just want to gain the money needed to buy into significant projects. We always hear in consultation with indigenous communities that they wish to be more self-sufficient. What we are proposing through the AIOC is a partnership that will allow communities to find new revenue streams which can enable them to be independent and to not have to rely on federal money.

Mr. Speaker, this government believes in moving past symbolic gestures. They do have their place, but the time for action is now. During the last election Chief Billy Morin alongside Premier Kenney said that the plan for the Alberta aboriginal opportunities corporation was a step in the right direction and that nobody has ever stepped up to the plate and put their money where their mouth is. Today we are committing to putting our money where our mouth is. What you see before you is a demonstration of a government that keeps its promise. This proposal is the first of its kind in Canada and further establishes our province as a leader in this country when it comes to natural resource development. I am proud to say that I believe when indigenous people benefit, all Albertans benefit.

Bill 14 sets the standard and tone for this government's interaction with indigenous communities. This is a tone of consultation and respect which recognizes the rich cultural practices and traditions which are practised to this day while looking forward with a commitment to creating a more positive future. As a government we talk about reducing red tape, and we champion the importance of small business and entrepreneurship. This bill puts indigenous Albertans and their hopes and aspirations at the forefront of our economic agenda. Our proposal is neither left nor right wing. It is about doing the right thing where in the past there has been wrong.

Our province has a very bright future ahead. In the spirit of equity we wish to see all Albertans benefit. This means indigenous Albertans. I share the excitement of many Albertans and indigenous communities in supporting this bill. I understand that from time to time we will have disagreement in this House on how we achieve what we believe is best for this province. Today I hope that my colleagues across this Chamber will see this opportunity that we have before us in Bill 14 and will also share their support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:00

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak on this bill? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has the floor.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have worked hard recently in this House to get Alberta back on track to economic recovery. That is the goal of everyone in this House, I believe. We've made sure that this country and the world know that we are proudly open for business. As remarkable as the strides we have made since forming government are, what is even more remarkable are the opportunities inherent in better fiscal stewardship and ongoing economic development, full and broadly spoken. These opportunities need to be available to every Albertan. Every Albertan.

As much as we want to be able to say that one approach works for all or that one policy or one decision can solve the majority of difficulties we face in getting this province back on track and Albertans back to work, we also know that this isn't the reality that everyone unilaterally experiences. We know that there are different barriers, considerations, practices, and perspectives that we need to consider when we talk about economic development and economic advancement. Our economic strategy, as a government that believes in the value of everyone who calls Alberta home, must consider the broad range of experiences that make us all who we are. Though we are bound together by grit, sweat, and a whole lot of get 'er done spirit, we cannot regret to ask about or advance the important qualities that make us unique and different or place us on different paths on our journeys to success in this great province.

More importantly, we cannot ignore discussions regarding individual or group participation and involvement in our energy industry, specifically, that may be difficult to face or address such as reconciling with indigenous individuals and groups across Alberta. It would be easy to say that everyone has had access to the same doors of economic opportunity in this province and in this province's energy sector. However, what's easy to say isn't often the truth, and it certainly isn't when we consider our past relationships with indigenous groups and the ongoing work of reconciliation that is necessary in, amongst, and as a part of our developing relationships between indigenous and nonindigenous Albertans.

This is why I believe the necessity of Bill 14, proudly brought forward by our Minister of Indigenous Relations, and the establishment of the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation are so essential. I cannot think of another bill that would be as important or as significant to the beginning of this session and the beginning of another chapter in this government's history and, of course, the future of our province. We are setting the tone of how we see Alberta and how we value the indigenous participation and partnerships through making this bill our top priority in this session and in this sitting. Indigenous peoples across this province deserve a government – their government – that will work to make reconciliation more than a buzzword repeated through government documents. I know that certainly this government will be one that keeps our promises and our word to our indigenous partners. Promises made and promises kept apply to all in this great province.

This bill does not focus on what divides us, but it acknowledges the incredible opportunity and incredibly important cultural, traditional, and intergenerational factors that our indigenous communities carry with them when we discuss economic opportunities in our natural resource sector. We are no longer paying lip service to the importance of indigenous involvement in Alberta's outstanding natural resources sector, Mr. Speaker. This is important to all of us, and this bill gives us a concrete road map to furthering indigenous involvement and bolstering indigenous interests in our natural resource economy. That is the goal of this bill.

We are not only opening the door to natural resource development for indigenous groups in this province but giving concrete reasons and paths and supports as to why they should take a chance and walk with us on a path back to the Alberta advantage. The value of engaging indigenous Albertans in our natural resource sector cannot be understated. As stewards and partners in developing our natural resource, we owe it to them to consider how they may have been unable to access economic development opportunities in the past. This bill addresses some of those challenges. We do so in order to better provide opportunities for them to build a brighter future for all.

Mr. Speaker, empowerment doesn't begin at success, nor does success come without failure. We've all tested it, we've all tasted it, and we will undoubtedly face it in the future, but that is not a reason to not pursue it. In the past we may have failed to fully consider and anticipate the needs of our indigenous partners. We may have failed to bolster an environment where inclusion is just as important as development success, and we may have failed to make it known to interested indigenous groups that their investment and participation are both wanted and sincerely valued. As difficult as this past might be for some of us to recall, we cannot hide our history out of shame. We must face the challenges of the past and change the future.

There have been many times when indigenous groups wanting to participate in our booming resource sector have been shut out or excluded from the table. That is not good enough. The only way we can rectify these past misdeeds and mismanagement, this past oversight is to address it in the open and take positive steps together to rectify this relationship and develop it further for the future. Mr. Speaker, I thank our minister for taking these steps for us. Today we are boldly declaring that we are welcoming indigenous partners to the table and further establishing Alberta as a leader in cultivating investments from indigenous groups in our natural resource sector. This is the shared economy which we envision.

I would like to thank those that took part in the various engagement sessions, as have been referenced by some of my colleagues, regarding the establishment of the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation. It was a busy summer, I know, for our minister. Without hearing the very real and lived experiences of aspiring indigenous energy sector partners and entrepreneurs, this bill would not have been able to come to fruition, and the establishment of this revolutionary and, dare I say, evolutionary initiative wouldn't be possible.

It's difficult to accept that indigenous partners have in some cases been left in the dark for so long regarding their capacities and capabilities and eagerness to contribute to the sustainable and innovative development of our energy sector, but this bill provides a clear path forward and a clear method by which we can engage our indigenous partners to the greatest extent of their involvement. It gives them the tools to participate. We have an obligation and a duty to the indigenous peoples who have called this land home for hundreds of years before many of us arrived, the so-called pioneers in this province. Well, let me tell you that those pioneers were here already.

We have a responsibility as legislators to ensure that we're giving each and every individual and group in this province the greatest opportunity and the greatest opportunity available to succeed, Mr. Speaker. We have said that we will help everybody to reach their full potential. This bill empowers indigenous communities to reach their full potential as a committed partner in this venture, not just as a committed partner but with a commitment from our government to make this something that is important to all Albertans. Through decisively supporting indigenous co-ownership and codevelopment of natural resource development projects, we are fulfilling our obligation to collaborate with and assist those who came here before us. We are also developing capacities for intergenerational success, to change the conversation going forward. This is unmistakable and will have an impact on generations to come.

Mr. Speaker, when every single person in our province is able to succeed, to reach that full potential, we will have a stronger and more vibrant province for all. This includes righting past wrongs and ensuring that Albertans, including the many indigenous peoples who've called this land home, are able to fully participate and enjoy the economic advantages – yes, that Alberta advantage, which we are rebuilding – that we can offer them as part of this vision.

Mr. Speaker, I had the great opportunity over the last couple of years – and I know that he stood with the minister today – to spend some time with Calvin Helin and to learn more about the Eagle Spirit energy corridor, which I believe is a great opportunity for us finally to break the logjam and to get our products, our resources to market. It's no longer good enough for us to have corporations develop ideas and plans and projects and investments and then consult with the First Nations people, the indigenous peoples of this land. What impressed me the most with the vision that I saw from Calvin was that they wanted a true partnership. They wanted to be co-proponents – with Canadians, with Albertans, with people in British Columbia – of developing a plan and a vision for economic prosperity.

I truly believe that that co-propoundment, that partnership, is the only way that we can actually get these projects done. We've tried and we've tried, and we've been stymied by various levels of government and environmental groups, but to stand shoulder to shoulder with the indigenous peoples of this country and not just the Eagle Spirit energy corridor but the national energy corridor, which we also hear conversations about, which is essential – to me, the pipelines that will be part of this initiative are the railway of the new millennium. Where would Canada be if we did not have that railway? Well, I'd say that 100 years from now they will be saying: where would Canada be if we did not get these pipelines built and the other projects attached to the Alberta indigenous opportunities company? Mr. Speaker, make no mistake; this is not about doing something for someone. It's about doing something with someone, with the indigenous peoples of this great province, and we will get it done.

This bill has been a long time coming, Mr. Speaker. I encourage everyone in this House unanimously to be part of history through supporting this groundbreaking piece of legislation, supporting our minister in his hard work, supporting our government and the people of this Legislature in actually making this happen, passing this bill quickly, and getting to work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley has risen.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was just enjoying this discussion here on Bill 14. I guess I just wanted to encourage the member to maybe continue on a little bit along the vein of the opportunity and how this bill creates so much more opportunity for the First Nations in this province. He talked also about the minister and how much work he's put in and how many miles he's put on, consulting on this and making sure that this is what First Nations people want and what Albertans want and what the industry wants in Alberta. He talked also about the partnership that this makes with the people of Alberta and the First Nations.

You know, our commitment in the last election had a lot to do with jobs, economy, and getting investment back in Alberta. I guess he could also maybe comment on that, too, how this bill fulfills that vision and our commitment to Albertans that we brought forward in our campaign. I think this opportunity is again – I guess that's what it's all about. This is an opportunity for growth and an opportunity for jobs and employment and bringing people up in their standard of living. I'd just like to hear the member's comments along those veins.

Thanks.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question, the opportunity to speak a bit more on this great opportunity. There are a few things that I'd like to share. Number one, I think, is that, again – and I think it was mentioned by some of the other hon. members in the House – this is not about a handout; this is about a hand up. This is about working together to ensure that we provide the resources and the supports, sometimes in a world that is not always balanced, not always equitable, not always equal or fair, but we can create that opportunity. That opportunity is only that: it's an opportunity to run with this and to be full participants in rebuilding the Alberta advantage. I know that everybody in this House actually is focused on that opportunity, to bring back the Alberta advantage.

I often say that the Alberta advantage means something different. It means something to most Albertans I speak to, almost every Albertan I speak to. When you say the words "Alberta advantage," something is conjured up in their mind, in their memory, or just in their emotions about what that means. It might be the health care that they were assisted in. It might be the education they received. It might be the opportunities, the entrepreneurial opportunities, that were presented to them. It might be something that happened to their family where there were supports in place because of the resources that were generated through the economy that we were so proud to have built in this province and which we are driving forward on.

When we embrace our indigenous people through the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation and provide that pathway – that's all it is; it's a pathway, a path which can be chosen – we open up the opportunity for that path to be addressed, to be taken. That path has not existed in the way it should have, and today we have an opportunity – and the sooner we can pass this bill, I would say, the better – to move that, to create that path ahead of us with this as the green light at the end of that path, the way that they can walk that path strongly, bravely, with an opportunity and with a vision not just for the future of this province but for themselves, for their families, and for generations to come.

Again, thank you to the member for the opportunity to speak to this. I think that this bill is more than what it appears to be on the surface. It is an Alberta indigenous opportunities company, but it is a vision for inclusion, a vision for participation, a vision for us to work together as Team Alberta as we move forward, all of us in this room and beyond this room, those that we represent in the 87 constituencies across this great province. This is a pathway for Team Alberta to fire on all cylinders as we move forward and to bring everybody into an opportunity. This is not the end of it. This is the beginning of it. Let's hope this is the beginning of this great path which opens far and wide and re-creates and renews the Alberta advantage.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Thirty seconds left on 29(2)(a).

Seeing no one, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? I see the hon. Member for Grande Prairie has the floor.

Mrs. Allard: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour to rise and speak today in support of Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission has called all Canadians to action. We have, each and every one of us, been called to walk the path of reconciliation with all the indigenous peoples in our great country. Specifically, Canadians are called to fulfill our moral obligation to walk the path of economic reconciliation and to ensure that indigenous peoples have access to jobs, training, and educational opportunities and that indigenous communities participate in the prosperity derived from economic development projects.

Too often our indigenous people have been disenfranchised and left out of the prosperity pie. That must change. It is a challenge to fulfill our moral obligations to ensure that indigenous communities are partners in the prosperity of our federation. But, as the saying goes, if it was easy, everyone would do it. It is easy for governments to pay lip service to their moral duties. It requires a concerted effort to reconcile the past and move forward as partners with indigenous peoples. Bill 14 is one tangible step in that direction. I am proud to say that that is the action our government has introduced, and no other government, not territorial, not provincial, nor federal, has matched our government's commitment to real reconciliation.

Our Conservative government has accepted this responsibility. We have accepted the challenge to move beyond symbolic gestures and into real action towards reconciliation and change for the future. As we promised during the election, our Conservative government has put forward a plan towards economic reconciliation. This plan does not involve government stepping in to achieve reconciliation because reconciliation cannot be achieved by government alone. It cannot be achieved with a partnership of just the government and indigenous peoples. Reconciliation requires indigenous peoples, Canadians, and government to come together and partner in moving forward.

This bill before us today cements an economic partnership with government and with the indigenous peoples of our province so that each of us and each indigenous person and community can become full partners in prosperity, truly realizing the Alberta advantage. As partners in the prosperity of our province and our federation indigenous peoples will have the support they need to develop their local economies and their local communities.

We will ensure that our indigenous communities have the opportunity to participate in the natural resource development all across our province. Alberta has vast natural resources, from the oil sands in Fort McMurray and the Montney formation near my constituency of Grande Prairie to the vast forests which stretch across the north of our province. We in Alberta have an abundance of natural resources. Natural resource development affords our communities the ability to thrive even with the higher cost of living, and it is time we extend this opportunity and encourage indigenous partnership in our natural resource development.

Through the creation of the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation we will facilitate indigenous participation in the development of our natural resources going forward. With this corporation we are reserving $1 billion for indigenous communities to become partners in prosperity, a support that opens the door to capital projects and prosperity that would never have been feasible without this backstop.

Many indigenous communities experience interruptions in the most basic of services and sometimes lack those basic services altogether. Most Albertans, like myself, take these basic services like reliable electricity and safe drinking water for granted. Indigenous communities in our province must enjoy the same standards as the rest of the province, and the development that will be facilitated through this corporation will provide a baseline level of economic activity for our indigenous communities to develop the services other areas take for granted. These communities will be able to participate in the development of the vast wealth that comes from the land their ancestors walked for generations.

The indigenous peoples of Alberta have the desire, the workforce, and the motivation to become partners in our resource prosperity, and the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation provides the opportunity to realize that partnership and provides a chance at economic reconciliation. It links our prosperity together so that when Alberta wins, we all win together. Indeed, the indigenous peoples were Alberta's first entrepreneurs and built strong communities that guided future generations. That spirit lingers still within the indigenous people of Alberta, and if we give them the opportunity, they will manifest it again.

Many indigenous communities are already beginning to take that spirit and apply it to resource development. That is why we have already acted to help bridge the gap and provide an opportunity to reignite that entrepreneurial spirit. Our government has set up $10 million in an indigenous litigation fund so that the voices of indigenous people fighting for their right to develop and profit from natural resources will be heard in court when others are trying to shut them down.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to act on reconciliation, not just to talk about it. It is time to uphold our moral duty to move toward reconciliation fully. Today, by supporting this bill for the establishment of the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation, I support our platform commitment to truly make life better for all Albertans. I wanted to thank the minister now for his leadership on this important initiative and for leading the way for our caucus to reach out and really, truly consult with the indigenous peoples of our province. Now I ask the members of this Assembly to commit themselves to walking the path of economic reconciliation by cementing a partnership in prosperity with our province's indigenous peoples by voting in support of this bill and supporting the development of this corporation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I see under 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has risen.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for her heartfelt statement. I'm really interested, you know, as I talk to my colleagues from both sides of the House, across this province. It always amazes me: their own personal connections with the indigenous communities across this province, the personal stories that they have to tell, some of the opportunities they've had to live and work in the communities with the indigenous populations of their area, to work with them in partnership, to work with them in fun and adventure and education, all the different things. When I hear these stories, it really, to me, brings an opportunity to learn about this province. As I hear the stories from the minister with respect to the number of meetings he held in the summer, which I'm jealous about – I wish I was there to join him for those meetings and the opportunities to learn and to share culture and history and the joy of living in this great province.

When I see that opportunity, I'm always reminded to ask the questions and to find out more, so I'd like to ask the member if she has any personal stories, some anecdotal stories about some opportunities she's had in her community to really feel that sense of partnership, which maybe had been stymied but where she can see that that might be an opportunity as we move forward for the Alberta indigenous opportunities company to create those kinds of opportunities right in her own community.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I do have multiple personal stories. I grew up in Whitehorse, Yukon, adjacent to a number of indigenous communities, but I think the story that I'll focus on today is a business-related story from our early days in the franchise system that my husband and I worked in. One of our first employees was a member of an indigenous community – we lived on the west coast of British Columbia – and he rose quickly through the ranks. He was our star baker, and then he became our manager and our senior leader outside of my husband and myself within our small organization at that time. He showed such incredible skill and desire to move up in the world. He had so many aspirations.

I would say that the one thing that held him back was his lack of opportunity, his lack of capacity to go back to school, his lack of funding to invest in something. But he had truly an entrepreneurial spirit, and he was exactly the kind of person that would have been perfect to invest in the business that we were participating in. I believe that if he'd had access to something like this opportunity corporation, he would be his own entrepreneur today. Unfortunately, that opportunity was not available to him at the time, but I believe that with this opportunity, going forward there'll be many people, as you said before and as many others have said in this House, that will get a hand up instead of a handout. It will really and truly change the trajectory for generations to come, not only in Alberta but in Canada. I'm very, very excited about it.

Thank you for the question.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we have a little over a minute and a half left on 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill proper? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and pleasure to speak here on Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. This government is proud to be working with indigenous leaders on the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation, and it is about time that the Alberta government took concrete steps to improve the well-being of indigenous Albertans and to consult with indigenous Albertans on a regular basis. Unlike the previous government, who did nothing to integrate Alberta's oil and gas prosperity with indigenous communities, this government will work hand in hand with indigenous groups to restore dignity and opportunity to indigenous Albertans and the thousands of communities they live in. Our government is dedicated to partnering with Alberta indigenous communities and building economic and social well-being.

The Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation allocates a billion dollars in loan guarantees to support aboriginal coal operation and financial participation in major resource development because it is a moral obligation to help our First Nations benefit from the resources that lie below the ground that their ancestors inhabited thousands of years ago.

While we're looking forward to this partnership, the previous NDP government took every step it could to undercut and destroy this province's oil and gas sector. We are a resource-based economy, and the previous government did not embrace that fact. You know, there are a lot of questions about the previous government. Why did they kick puppies? Why do they hate children? Why do they snatch walking canes away from old people? So many questions, but we can only just talk about ourselves, and we know that things like the job-killing carbon tax was a reckless ideological policy that set this province on track for $100 billion in debt. Fortunately, Albertans chose right. They chose the United Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker, putting this province in debt only hurts the communities that the previous government claimed to support. Let me assure this Chamber and all Albertans that cleaning up our balance sheet while partnering with indigenous groups will be a huge step in the right direction for Alberta and our essential oil and gas industry.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I come from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. If we go strictly by my constituency lines, I truly have all the major players in the oil sands industry, and not only that, with your Syncrudes and your Suncors and your CNRLs, Teck is looking at a huge operation up there as well as all of their expansions. I also have within my region the Fort McKay First Nation, the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation. I have the Mikisew Cree First Nation. I also have the Fort McKay Métis, the Fort Chipewyan Métis, and the Fort McMurray Métis.

Let me tell you something about these indigenous groups in my region. They all have a fairly good life right now. They have a decent amount of prosperity. In my previous life working in emergency services, I worked in places like Ponoka and Peace River, where I was exposed to indigenous communities that weren't so fortunate, that didn't have that involvement with industry, that by all means of assessing a community would be considered quite poverty stricken. When I look at the communities in my region, they are quite prosperous, quite frankly, and it's because they work with our oil industry. They have the ability to talk and get support in education and skills, trades and are able to work and run businesses in conjunction with these oil companies.

You know, for a group like, say, Fort McKay First Nation, it all started out with Syncrude needing some transportation like a taxi service on their sites. They worked with the Fort McKay First Nation to actually own that and take that over and manage it. That was a first step, the foot in the door for Fort McKay First Nation to really be embraced by the oil companies, and that prosperity led to the people in that community having more financial stability so that they could send their children to universities and colleges and schools as well as build a proper house with all the amenities.

You know, Mr. Speaker, when I was working in Ponoka and I had to go to Maskwacis, the houses that I went into, quite honestly, were torn up, okay? They tore out the floorboards, they would tear off their oak cupboards, and they were burning those in the fireplace so that they would have heat, okay? I don't see any of that up north. I don't see that desperation in them. They have adequate access to all sorts of good things that we have, that we love in our first-world nation that most of us are lucky enough to have.

These groups are really enjoying the fact that we have a new government in place, a government that is looking at them and taking them seriously. I've been fortunate. I've had some ministers – the Minister of Indigenous Relations, the Minister of Education, and the Minister of Transportation – that were all kind enough to go all the way up to Fort Chipewyan. Let me tell you about those groups up there. They were so pleased to see these individuals. They recognized the great work that they were doing, that they're willing to work with them, and that the future was going to be bright. I want to thank those three individuals for coming up and engaging them and embracing them, and we all look forward to that engagement. It's going to be excellent.

They said as much to me, and they're very, very proud. To that, they also started bragging to me afterwards about some of their potential investments that they have available to them with new groups like Teck Resources coming with their new mine and some expansions that are going on with CNRL and others. When we were talking about this Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act, they were very ecstatic and very enthusiastic. They saw this as another opportunity to leverage their know-how and their skills and share that with not only other First Nations across the province but also to help themselves as well continue to get that hand up. Again, it's a hand up and not a handout.

These are the things that this government is trying to do, that this government is trying to accomplish, that by teaching people how to fish, we don't have to just give them the fish anymore, that they can do these things on their own. When you talk to the individuals, that is very much what they want. I've had people over the years come to me, friends who live in town, who are quite proud that they are working at the oil companies and not getting a federal grant for a house. There's pride in that and pride in refusing federal money for such things as a home because they had the ability to build their own home and manage that home, and they had the ability, because they're working at these oil companies, to send their children to universities and colleges and get that other education so that they don't have to go back to lower, more manual labour, if you will. They're trying to escape that cycle of poverty that we sometimes see in indigenous communities.

The communities in my region are excelling. They're aggressive. They want to grow more, they want to become more independent, and this government – and they recognize this – is the government that can do it for them. Don't even ask me about what they think of the previous government. Major disappointment there, but that's a whole other story. I digress.

As I was saying, Albertans did elect us to fix the previous government's mess one policy at a time. Again, this government, our government, was pleased to host eight engagement sessions between July 10 and August 8 this year, which engaged almost 200 participants. Developing this plan is just the first step in rebuilding a damaged relationship between the government of Alberta and indigenous groups that, again, the previous government just perpetuated and worsened.

The ability of indigenous groups to provide adequate security to financial lenders is a significant barrier in their ability to access capital and the capacity to develop or invest in major resource projects, and it really does vary widely across all the indigenous communities. Again, the communities in my region are very fortunate in that they were at the beginning of all this, and many First Nations I think see the benefits of working with industry, of working with the government, and we have the right people in place, with these great ministers, to push that forward. For that, I thank them again so much.

This government will work out the challenges between the energy sector and the indigenous stakeholders, again, to ensure that everyone benefits from our energy potential. All stakeholders, including our indigenous groups, are being given an opportunity to voice their opinions, their concerns, and questions. Again, that was epitomized by the fact that I had three fantastic ministers show up in Fort Chipewyan and embrace and talk and engage with these community leaders.

Again, participants are going to be far and wide. They all want to join in and work with our indigenous groups. Syncrude, Suncor, ATCO, and EPCOR also have been joining these engagement sessions. All industry wants to work with our indigenous groups because we all have the same thing as goal: we want Canada to prosper and for that prosperity to be for everyone, not just certain left-wing elitists, certainly.

Alberta is the land of opportunity for everyone, and this government is looking forward to fulfilling that promise and building an Alberta for everyone. That, again, includes our indigenous communities. We're excited to be working with coalitions: representatives from Eagle Spirit Energy, the First Nations Major Projects Coalition, Project Reconciliation, the Iron Coalition, the Western Indigenous Pipeline Group, and the Fort McKay Mikisew Cree tank farm project. Mr. Speaker, I want you to know that there are many, many more projects on the horizon, but that said, this fall's election here federally will really impact a lot of that, what goes on here. But, again, that's another discussion.

These groups have all offered extremely valuable insight during our engagement sessions and will continue to be valuable partners with this government in the coming years. We will not stand idly by and let these Albertans fall through the cracks. We have the responsibility as legislators to advance the prospects of all Albertans. We were elected with a huge mandate to get Albertans back to work. Working with our indigenous communities is a part of this mandate. And righting the wrongs of the previous government: well, we're trying to do that for everything, really, so it's a step at a time, and this is just one file in so many.

Mr. Speaker, it is about developing a safer future for indigenous communities as well, because when these communities prosper, when they all have money, when they can afford the basics like in Maslow's hierarchy of shelter, food, and then getting the basics of education and everything else, it just brings them all up and enables them not to get into certain situations where they find themselves getting dragged down, back into poverty. Again, this benefits everyone. This really benefits a group who have not been able to necessarily benefit from such resources, but by working with this government, we can certainly do so.

There are a lot of things that we have to develop in these communities, Mr. Speaker, and they've been doing it on their own. As an example, again, in my community the First Nations work with the oil sands companies to build things like – believe it or not – facilities for their seniors. They have a brand new facility that they built in conjunction with oil companies so that they can have their seniors stay in Fort McKay and not have to travel all the way to Fort McMurray. Having those elders in their community teaching their young ones is a fantastic thing. The knowledge gets passed on. These are great things. These are the things that we want to see in our indigenous communities. We want to see that embracing of our youth with our seniors. It's fantastic to see how they've taken these challenges and work with the oil companies and get the amenities that we all really, truly desire.

We do recognize that there are structural challenges that many communities face, and again we're going to help them with this indigenous opportunities corporation. This will provide some great supports for our indigenous people. This is about teaching people how to fish and not just giving them the fish. It is about a hand up and not a handout, and it is a reflection of what a good government is all about, a good government that creates the policies and the environment that promotes and encourages business and the citizens to work together for the benefit of all. It's not about imposing rules and regulations on people, making them follow them to the T, and "Oh, this rule and regulation impairs this, so let's add more rules and regulations." That's why we have the minister of red tape, to reduce these kinds of things.

Again, there's still so much work to be done, and I believe that we have the right people in charge to get this working. We have 63 amazing people on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, that are all working hard and all strongly believe in this. I believe that if there's any government that can do this and work with our indigenous people, it is this government that can do it. [Mr. Yao's speaking time expired] Oh, perfect.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland has risen.

Mr. Getson: Thank you for that, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to tell us what the future holds. Again, part of it is the contrast that you can see with some of the communities that haven't been able to participate such as the Fort McKay groups. I've had the ability to be up there, interact with those folks, have the time to see how far they've progressed on those. One example was a gentleman who was actually developing drone technology for flying out and looking at the surveillance in Syncrude and Suncor. Those are some of the stories that I think other folks might want to hear about, to see how far they can go once they have that opportunity, and that are inspiring, quite frankly, for the folks in my community. If you could, please.

Mr. Yao: My good friend, that is a very good question, and unfortunately I don't have enough time to go into real detail as to these things that you asked about. Certainly, things like this will help us, hopefully, to get things like pipelines built and allow more of our indigenous communities to the south to also be engaged in these processes and get this needed infrastructure built so that we have a local source of energy and not import products from Iraq and Iran and the Middle East and Venezuela and, heaven forbid, the United States. Again, these are all opportunities that our indigenous communities will gladly, I think, embrace. I think they see the light. I think they have the understanding. Again, all they have to do is look up north to the amazing constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and just see the prosperity there.

Again, so many things that you asked there truly depend on this next election, this federal election that's coming up in two weeks. I should probably not say too many details of what my friends up north have told me. Certainly, whoever gets into government will create enough confidence for companies to invest and build and progress in a lot of these expansions and new plants, but if the wrong government gets in, I'm very, very afraid when I see oil executives prepared to sell their homes in my community. It's a precarious line that we face right now. I hope that Canadians across our nation are going to recognize the benefits and the fact that we are a resource-based economy and that we have to use these things so that we can get everyone out of poverty and help lead the world in prosperity.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, two more minutes under 29(2)(a).

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill proper? I see the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to be back in the House. Welcome back to everybody. You know, this bill, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act, is one of those times when I'm really glad that we're back in the House. There is much good that we can do in this House, and sometimes there's much that we can do that just seems like we're spinning our wheels and maybe in the process not always getting along with each other. But I am very pleased to be back and to be able to stand here and speak to this bill, the very first bill of this session, and I want to thank the minister for bringing it forward.

When I first ran and was elected to the Alberta Legislature, in 2015, like I believe just about everybody in this House, all the MLAs in this House, I ran because I wanted a Legislature that would listen and would act in what I perceived to be the best interests of just your average, everyday Albertan. It was my privilege to be elected to this Assembly. Over the past five years that I've been here as a part of this institution, it's been my privilege to be a voice for my constituents and to address each of the bills that have been brought before this House and to help fashion a way forward for the people of Alberta through this Legislature.

Hopefully, we've done that. We've been able to go back to our constituents, and we've been able to seek out their vision for the kind of Alberta that they would like to have and been able to act on that. Now, as a Christian – in the Bible, in Proverbs 29:18, it says, “Where there is no vision, the people [will] perish.” I believe that it’s one of the primary jobs of leadership, one of the primary jobs of our Premier, one of the primary jobs of our cabinet and for ourselves as Members of this Legislative Assembly to provide vision and leadership for the people of Alberta.

I remember the first time that I heard about this idea. It was just an idea then, this idea that would eventually become Bill 14. It was one of those rare times in my life when the suggested idea, the vision that’s expressed in Bill 14 for moving forward, just clicked, and I just went: “Oh, yeah. That’s right. That’s how we do it. That’s how we go forward.”

I could instantly see where the idea of creating an indigenous opportunity fund would answer so many of the problems and questions that I believe that we as Albertans were struggling with. How do we ensure that Alberta’s First Nations were actually full partners in this Alberta that we want to share and live together in? How could we provide a hand up for people that have too often struggled to overcome the many historical obstacles that have been placed in their path? How do we ensure that we as a wider Alberta society are partners in prosperity with all of the diversity of the people that make up this great province? How do we ensure that Alberta’s First Nations people are active participants and choice-makers in the decisions that are going to affect them as they move forward into the future of this province? How do we get past the rhetoric and the symbolic gestures to meaningfully impact the very real problems that the First Nations Albertans in my constituency and across this province face on a daily basis?

In addressing these very real needs and the needs of this province, how do we make sure that we have access, for instance, to tidewater for our oil and gas? How do we bring First Nations onboard so that they are fully supportive and the beneficiaries of these important resources in Alberta? How do we as a group of legislators provide the meaningful, well-paying jobs for all Albertans, upon which family stability and housing and health and government programs all depend? When I first heard about this idea, all of those things just went boom, boom, boom, boom, boom, and I could see how this could be of benefit to all Albertans but especially to First Nations Albertans.

When Premier Kenney and the Minister of Indigenous Relations went into my constituency today to the Canadian Energy Museum, which commemorates the growth of Alberta’s energy industry on the site – we met on the very site where Leduc No. 1 was first drilled – my conviction that Bill 14 would help move us forward in answering many of these questions was absolutely confirmed. I listened to both the Premier and to Minister Wilson but especially to the many chiefs that were present this morning as they testified to the soundness of the vision of Bill 14.

Bill 14 gets it right. Bill 14 will create the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation. Bill 14 envisions an Alberta where our indigenous First Nations will have the capacity to access the capital that is necessary for them to be able to invest in our natural resources projects. This Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation will be able to directly or indirectly make a loan or acquire an existing loan. It can issue a loan guarantee or purchase shares or other forms of equity, or it can enter into a joint venture or a partnership.

I heard First Nation leaders today state clearly that Bill 14 is a historic bill, that it will have a meaningful impact on the lives of their people. I can’t think of anything better that we could be doing in this Legislature than providing a meaningful impact that will help the people of this province. That’s our job. That’s what we were elected to do, and I am so proud of the fact that we can stand here today and talk about Bill 14 and how it’s going to improve the lives of the people of this province.

I heard that never have these communities had an opportunity like this, to access $1 billion in loan guarantees to support aboriginal co-ownership and financial participation in the major resource development projects of this province. Never before. As a matter of fact, some were saying that never in any other place in the world has this been done. This is indeed a historic piece of legislation that deserves the support of every one of the people in this Legislature.

Bill 14 will create a Crown corporation with a board of directors to manage and supervise the management of the AIOC’s business and affairs, but this board of directors will have meaningful First Nations representation. While the AIOC is at an arm’s-length distance from the government, the government will maintain an appropriate level of oversight. We do have a responsibility to all of the citizens of this province and to the taxpayer dollars that they entrust to us, so it is a right thing, a good thing, to create a corporation that has a board of directors with meaningful First Nations input and participation that will have the oversight of this government to ensure that these dollars are spent in the best interests of all Albertans. We know that a deputy minister will have observer status on the board of directors and that the Minister of Indigenous Relations will have the authority to issue directives to the AIOC, and this is a wise check and balance.

The vision of Bill 14 to create a pathway to prosperity for Alberta’s First Nations will create a provincial economy that works for all Albertans. In my constituency I have the privilege to represent the Enoch First Nation band in the Legislature. This morning Chief Billy Morin of the Enoch reserve spoke to Bill 14 at the Canadian Energy Museum. In that speech he talked about his grandfather’s vision in the 1960s for how the oil and gas industry could help address the many obstacles that blocked the way forward for his people. It is the hope of our government and, I believe, this Legislature that Bill 14 will help to make Chief Morin’s grandfather’s vision a reality.

I know that many of Alberta’s First Nations people have overcome the obstacles of history and have prospered in spite of the government of the day and the law of the day. It is with great satisfaction that I stand here today and speak in support of a bill that will not only help my First Nations constituents access the Alberta economy, but it will help move all Alberta citizens to have access to a prosperous future where all of our citizens have the capacity to benefit from our resource-based projects.

Bill 14 ends the economic model of a culture of dependency, and it replaces it with a vision of individual freedom and capacity-building, which will allow indigenous Albertans to participate as a full partner in this civil society that we call Alberta. Reconciliation can and must take many forms. Economic reconciliation through Bill 14 is just one step forward, but it is an important step forward, and I am proud that it is our government that in partnership with Alberta’s original citizens has taken this step towards a more prosperous future for all Albertans.

Thank you, Minister.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill proper?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations to close debate should he so choose.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Yes. As deputy House leader, Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn until tomorrow, October 9, at 9 a.m.

The Acting Speaker: Just to clarify, your intention is to adjourn debate – correct? – not the House.

Mrs. Savage: Yes. My intention is to adjourn debate.

The Acting Speaker: Adjourn debate. Okay.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mrs. Savage: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn until tomorrow, October 9, at 9 a.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m.]

9 a.m.

Wednesday, October 9, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning, everyone.

Let us pray. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideals but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. May Your kingdom come, and Your name be hallowed. Amen.

Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act

[Adjourned debate October 8: Mrs. Savage]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 14? The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Why, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to speak in favour of Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act.

Before I get into my remarks, I would like to first take this opportunity to thank you, Madam Speaker, your office, and this entire Legislature, from whom a beautiful arrangement of flowers was delivered to my house after my son Ulysses was born, on July 30. Thank you. Now, if you all knew me well, you would have pitched in and bought me a sports car, but my wife and I were genuinely touched by this gesture. Two months later, my son continues to grow at a frightening pace. He is his daddy's boy.

But back to Bill 14. A boiling pit: many of you may not know what this is. By name it may sound fairly self-explanatory, but in the Blackfoot culture it was a means of survival. A boiling pit was a way of cooking where a round hole was dug into the earth. Once the hole was complete, a piece of rawhide was placed into the hole and then filled with water. A fire was then lit nearby, and a number of stones were placed in the fire until they became red hot. When the stones were hot enough, they were placed in the water, which would then raise the temperature to a boiling point, suitable for cooking. In some cases a skin bag filled with meat and vegetables was placed into the boiling pit to make a rich, delicious soup. Madam Speaker, if you think about this for a moment in modern terms, it doesn't seem all that impressive. You grab a shovel, you dig a hole, lay a tarp in it, grab a lighter and some wood, make a fire, throw some rocks in there, and Bob's your uncle. But before contact, boiling pits were a means of survival and took all day to execute.

This was one of the many things I learned while I visited the Blackfoot Crossing historical park in Siksika on September 23 with the Premier, the minister, chiefs from the Blackfoot Confederacy, and a gaggle of other ministers and MLAs for the historic signing of the protocol agreement between Alberta and the Blackfoot Confederacy.

Now, the boiling pit was nothing short of inventive, Madam Speaker, historical proof of the industrious and creative culture that has existed among the first inhabitants of this very land for generations. When the Europeans first began to trade in North America, their goods made their way through the Plains to other tribes, most notably guns, ammunition, knives, tools, household utensils, and, of course, pots, which rendered the boiling pits almost obsolete. Although boiling pits became a thing of the past, the same innovative spirit remains ever present today though predominantly dormant from lack of opportunity, something this government intends to change with this piece of legislation, Bill 14.

Since the start of the term our government has made consultations and partnerships with indigenous groups across Alberta a priority. We listened to nearly 200 leaders, stakeholders, and community members talk about what issues they face. This was done over the course of eight sessions, and we will continue to make an effort to improve their lives by giving them agency in economic development. This bill is a crucial step towards reconciliation with indigenous communities in our province, communities that have been mistreated and overlooked for far too long, Madam Speaker.

Unfortunately, a lot of the issues facing Alberta's indigenous communities are within federal jurisdiction, and we must ensure that we do not duplicate the work being done by our federal partners. But we must also make sure that we are working collaboratively with them. This bill is not without precedent. As a prime example, we'll look at the federal government's increase in the number of opportunities available to indigenous people in our province.

For example, the Indian Act was intended to protect indigenous holders. However, the act also placed ownership of the land with the Crown, which placed limitations on residents' obtaining financing. According to the Indian Act, section 89(1), reserve lands may not be seized legally, nor is the personal property of the band or band member living on reserve "subject to charge, pledge, mortgage, attachment, levy, seizure, distress or execution in favour or at the instance of any person other than an Indian or a band." Such provisions created a barrier for on-reserve projects such as home development, construction, or renovation. In response, programs and loans for residents on-reserve were guaranteed by the federal government to help assist in such projects.

Furthermore, southern Alberta is a vast landscape of rolling plains, a large part of which is grazing leases. These leases are parcels of Crown land, owned by the government, that are rented to cow-calf producers at a reduced rate so new ranchers can afford to buy and raise cattle as they build their legacy and secure their place in one of Alberta's most vital industries, agriculture.

Similar to on-reserve home renovations, the limitations placed on indigenous groups limit their ability to realize their economic potential in today's competitive resource market. Bill 14 aims to knock down some of these barriers and commits our government to being a partner in building economic and social well-being and provides the tools needed for indigenous communities to invest in our natural resource sector. With these investments they can achieve a stable revenue stream for their communities that can be used to invest in vital infrastructure such as education and health care.

My constituency of Cardston-Siksika is home to two of the largest landmass reserves in Canada. Both face social challenges, yet they work hard to make an effort to improve their communities. The Siksika Nation administers locally run health and wellness facilities and is considered a leader for First Nations in Alberta for services, partnerships, and working directly with the federal government. Social programs aim to improve and promote Siksika quality of life through accountable and efficient delivery that is community based and caters to the needs of Siksika Nation members.

The Old Sun Community College is also accredited and in 2018 had its first graduating class for the indigenous business administration management diploma. The world-renowned Blackfoot Crossing historical park, which we visited not so long ago, was built for the promotion and preservation of the Siksika Nation's people, language, culture, traditions and is host to thousands of tourists each year and employs numerous members.

Siksika Resource Developments and group of companies are committed to establishing long-term prosperity for Siksika Nation by maximizing revenues generated from the management and development of renewable and nonrenewable resources and by providing Siksika Nation shareholders with a viable return on future investments.

Siksika Nation is also a 50-50 ownership partner of world-class hotels and a conference centre within the city of Calgary and right here in Edmonton. Their $54 million investment gave them the opportunity to own the Westin Calgary Airport, Element Edmonton West by Westin, and Four Points by Sheraton Edmonton West.

Many Siksika Nation members thrive in various capacities. There are cow-calf operations, farmers, truckers, and members who operate small businesses on the reserve. By way of example, Darryl McDonald and Mona Royal are the owners and operators of Boy Chief Trading Post, a one hundred per cent First Nation owned business that has been situated in the southwest corner of the Siksika First Nation since it opened, in December 2002. As their business grows, so does the opportunity it has given to them and their family. They now design and produce woolen mill blankets that are of high quality and affordable compared to their competitors. With over 30 years of business experience, Darryl and Mona give back to Siksika. They share their business administration, financial, and management expertise with youth, inspiring the next generation of Siksika entrepreneurs.

The Blood Tribe is also giving youth the opportunity to explore careers in entrepreneurship and giving them the tools and an early start to learn some tricks of the trade. Blood Tribe economic development partners offer business plan review and revising for those who apply for small-business grants. They take the time to give their members a fighting chance, Madam Speaker, when it comes to operating their own businesses, something that is missed for those pursuing entrepreneurship off-reserve. From the financial management boot camps to presentations on emerging technologies, they believe they hold the power to change their circumstances in the wake of hardships that come with living on-reserve.

Our government made sure that Siksika, the Blood Tribe along with other indigenous groups in Alberta were full partners in prosperity. The indigenous opportunities corporation also gives our indigenous Albertans access to sustainable development while staying true to their values as protectors of the land. It will give them a seat at the table to invest in TMX and other oil and gas ventures as well as to explore their own interests in unique resource development projects.

The wind and solar resources over the Blood Tribe are similarly attractive to the renewable energy industry, and it's time they participated actively in their own development. The Blood Tribe partnered with the EDF Renewables on a 200-megawatt Cypress wind project and is based in Cypress county in southern Alberta. They look to double the project by pursuing another wind farm with roughly the same size.

But not all indigenous communities have been able to secure the capital needed for these investments. There are significant barriers for some indigenous communities, but with the help of the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation, or AIOC, indigenous communities will have access to $1 billion in loan guarantees. These loans support indigenous co-ownership and financial participation in major resource development. For years indigenous communities have said that they want to be at the table, and the formation of the AIOC will finally give them a seat that they deserve.

We are going to abandon symbolic gestures and develop real strategies to lift our indigenous brothers and sisters to new heights of prosperity. They will be able to invest in the natural resource sector that has provided and will continue to provide for all Albertans. It will allow our indigenous communities to invest in protecting their language and culture while also giving them opportunities to invest in serving their communities as needed. To the indigenous communities around the province: you asked for this. It is my hope that Bill 14 is proof that we heard you and we continue to hear you now.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I guess I enjoyed some of the background information that the member presented about First Nations and their history and how they operated, you know, hundreds and thousands of years ago in this area. I was just wondering if he could maybe expand on that a little bit as far as how that relates to how things are going present day and, of course, how this bill itself will represent some of the ambitions and dreams that First Nations people have in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I have always been amazed, as I have developed relationships with the two indigenous communities in my constituency, the Kainai and the Siksika reserves, by how industrious they are and the ideas that they have. When I first met with the Siksika chief and council during the campaign, they talked to me about opportunities that they have in mind that they would like to see the government help them partner with. They also spoke, as I mentioned in my speech, about some of the investments the community has already made in terms of hotels and conference centres. It's that spirit. It's that entrepreneurial spirit that has been a part of their culture since time immemorial. It's something that I've learned as I build these relationships, and I'm excited to continue to work with these communities and learn about their culture and their history.

As we visited the Blackfoot Crossing historical park, I was just amazed by this site. I really do encourage everyone, if you have time, to go down there. It's a little off the beaten path, but this place is just chock full of historical artifacts and information about the Blackfoot people and their history. There's so much to learn from them and realize that long before contact there were people in Alberta who were thriving and had a wonderful way of living. They certainly made the most of the circumstances that they had. I think the boiling pit was just one example of that, and that spirit continues to live on with them and their culture. It's one I love to learn more about and will continue to learn about. I thank the member for asking that question.

To the members of the indigenous communities in Cardston-Siksika I do want to say thank you for all that they've taught me to this point, and I'm excited to keep working with them moving forward.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 14? The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, Bill 14 is such an important piece of legislation. I'm so proud that our government has brought it forward, but I'm also very proud of the minister that brought this forward. He has made a sincere and concerted effort for reconciliation here in Alberta, and I think it's really obvious just how he has shown that through his actions in attending various events and hosting events and having meetings with indigenous people, just showing them that they are partners in prosperity. I just wanted to start off today by acknowledging just how important this work is that the minister is doing and how it touches me as a new member to see members in our Executive Council making such an effort to work with these people.

As we know, Bill 14 maintains critical election promises that we made during this election to bring back jobs, revitalize the economy, and get our natural resource projects built. It also aligns with our government's commitment to reconciliation with indigenous peoples here in Alberta. Our Premier and my government colleagues have acknowledged the shortcomings and wrongs that indigenous peoples have faced for generations. We realize that we need to work hard to build a trusting, lasting relationship between indigenous communities and our government, but reconciliation requires action, action like bringing forward this important piece of legislation. Bill 14 will fulfill our platform commitments through creating the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation. This corporation will allocate $1 billion of loan guarantees to indigenous groups looking to partake in natural resource development projects.

In 2016 there were over 120,000 First Nations people and over 97,000 Métis people living in Alberta. In 2016 the median age of indigenous people in Alberta was 25 compared to Alberta's median age of 42. That discrepancy is due to a multitude of factors: the mental health crisis, addiction, suicide, lack of education, poor outcomes and health, all of which are exacerbated by poverty.

Thirteen per cent of Canada's total indigenous population live right here in Alberta, and there are 48 First Nations. Now, can you imagine the potential that we could unlock, the prosperity that could be generated if we empowered those communities to develop their resources and pursue ownership stakes in various resource projects? It could be a game changer.

Throughout history indigenous communities, particularly First Nations, have received compensation for allowing resource developments or a pipeline to go through their lands. It's usually a lump sum that is paid out over a set number of years. But after the money has been allocated and spent, then what do these communities do?

Now, we know that Justin Trudeau bought the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion, and there's no doubt about that, but many indigenous groups are now saying that they want an equity stake in that pipeline. Before the pipeline was bought out, there were 43 mutual benefit agreements signed with First Nations totalling roughly $400 million. On average that's less than $10 million per community. When you're trying to address systemic issues and make life better for an entire community, that money can only go so far. Equity and ownership would give these communities the opportunity to reap benefits for years and generations to come.

That's why the indigenous-backed project reconciliation has submitted a bid to purchase the Trans Mountain pipeline. It's why over 35 First Nations have stepped up to propose the indigenous-owned Eagle Spirit pipeline. It's why the Fort McKay and Mikisew Cree bands have invested over $545 million to buy almost half the shares in one of Suncor's storage facilities. The benefits that will result from indigenous ownership of natural resources won't just be felt in their communities but will have positive effects across Alberta.

Look. I'm from an oil and gas family. My dad has helped and maintains pipelines all across this province. But with tough economic conditions, that have been exacerbated by federal policies as well as the former provincial government, I've seen the impact of these policies in my community. Restaurants, hotels, and other small businesses have had to cut staff or close down completely. This has implications for workers in my riding and across the province, including the thousands of indigenous people who work in Alberta's energy sector.

I started by talking about reconciliation. This weekend I was honoured to go to an event on behalf of the minister of status of women and multiculturalism. It was an event for the Girl Guides of Canada. You're probably saying: how the heck does this relate to Bill 14? I'll get there. They started off the event with a land acknowledgement, but it wasn't just a couple of words and some well-meaning politician saying something. It was a real reconciliation action, I thought, that was taken. This young woman, a librarian in Calgary, came up and gave this land acknowledgement. She and her daughter actually gave two different kinds. They gave a children's version and they gave an adult version, I guess. The children's version had actions. It was heartfelt. It was beautiful. There was almost like a little song that went with it. I wish I knew it because it was fantastic.

The woman who was giving the presentation gave an explanation of why land acknowledgments are so important and why reconciliation is so important to her and her community. At the end of the day the biggest takeaway from that was that she said that there needs to be action. There needs to be something motivating those words that you're saying when you begin a speech or an announcement, and I think that this Bill 14 is a step towards real reconciliation and real partners in prosperity for our indigenous people.

In closing, I think that this is a meaningful, forward-thinking piece of legislation that will not only bring prosperity to indigenous communities across this province, but it will set an example for the rest of Canada of what economic reconciliation looks like.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the chance to speak today.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat for that lovely speech. One thing that the member said really took my attention. You mentioned different projects, talking about Trans Mountain, particularly Eagle Spirit. Eagle Spirit as a project is one of the most forward-thinking that we have seen in this province for a long time. The way that it uses private dollars coming from First Nation communities and individuals and interests so that they can move forward their interests as a community is fascinating.

I was speaking to the director and CEO just yesterday at an event that was held at the Legislature before the bill was read aloud yesterday and introduced. He spoke particularly of the need for us to make sure that we have access to markets outside of America for our oil and gas because it will benefit the First Nation communities of northern and all across Alberta more than any other project could. It was hands-down the single most important. This isn't just something being asked by average Albertans in southern Alberta or folks in office towers in Calgary who work in the industry.

This is every single community in the province, every single demographic, particularly those very proud First Nation communities that work on that land, have lived off the land, and found that balance between a growing economy and a sheltered ecology at the same time. They are the ones that have the best experience in threading that needle and walking that line to make sure that we have a province that is prosperous and one that is protected, with the highest standards of environmental labour and human rights. This is why I'm so excited about what the member said when speaking about Eagle Spirit. It is a fascinating project.

If we look at the other projects around, even in my own constituency we can see First Nation communities partnering with mills, looking for equity shares in the mills themselves in the forestry industry. They understand that a healthy forest, one that is harvested regularly, actually stores more carbon than if you let it grow to old age and is more susceptible to bugs, infestation, more susceptible to forest fires, as we saw in my constituency to a devastating effect.

It is the care of the forest that drives these First Nation communities to these projects, first and foremost, and they're the ones urging the industry along to have it done responsibly. There's actually an economic and environmental interest in having First Nation communities partner with us because they're often the ones with the most insight and the most interest and the most experience and knowledge in making sure that these projects are done in an environmental manner. Rather than trying to force it down Albertans' throats in ways where it's all economic pain and no environmental gain, as we saw in the previous government, what we'll have instead is a partnership with First Nations, who care deeply for the land, and that partnership will drive economic and environmental protection in a way that is not done in some forced or fabricated way but is organic and is done from the grassroots up, from those constituents that live there most, with the First Nation peoples.

That's why this is such an important piece of legislation. Its effects are not just economic. This is what you're going to see as a theme through all of these different speeches, and we saw it today with the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat. This is a social policy. It is an uplifting policy, not just economically. It's uplifting to our environment. It's uplifting to our entire province as a whole. It's for that reason that I'm so very proud to be standing with the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat in support of this bill. We are not the only ones doing it. What we stand for here, we have thousands, tens of thousands, hundreds of thousands of Albertans standing behind us all the time when we make these arguments in this House. It's for that reason that we must be so forceful in defending this kind of legislation when it comes up and touting all of its benefits and all of its different facets of how it benefits Alberta. We cannot stay restrained to just that narrow scope of economics. When we end up doing that, we end up failing Albertans. We are here to serve them and our First Nation communities.

That is why I was so proud to stand with the chiefs yesterday when this was announced. Speaking to Grand Chief Arthur Noskey of Treaty 8, which is where most of my constituency lies and where much of Eagle Spirit goes through, he also is a big fan of the project.

He sees it as something that his constituents, the people that he represents as grand chief, benefit from not just abstractly but directly with jobs in that industry.

I couldn't be more proud to stand with these First Nation chiefs, to stand here with the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, with the Minister of Indigenous Relations, with the Premier, and all of our colleagues. We see that there are multifaceted benefits for all of Alberta because, like my good friend the chief from Beaver Nation said to me, when First Nations are strong and prosper, the province is strong and prosperous. That's the heart of what this is about.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: There are five seconds left under 29(2)(a), so I think it's safe to ask for the next speaker. Is anyone wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 14? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Good. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise in this Chamber and speak on a bill that I'm very proud to support, Bill 14. As the members of this Chamber know, this bill will create the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation. This bill will ensure that First Nations groups have access to $1 billion in loans and loan guarantees over the next four years in order to start their own resource projects.

This corporation is the first of its kind and a landmark in this government's commitment to empower indigenous and Métis groups to help meet their goals. Not only is this initiative the first of its kind in Alberta, but it is the only organization of its kind in all of Canada. The United Conservative Party, the UCP, recognizes that it is beyond time to move past shallow gestures and empty words in order to help our First Nations communities. This government knows that our indigenous communities can benefit from developing our natural resources in a responsible manner, and when our indigenous communities prosper, all Albertans prosper.

This initiative bridges the gap in historical investor disinterest in indigenous communities by allowing our First Nations people to directly access funds, to be proactive in making their lives and the lives of their communities better. This will allow our indigenous communities to attain a sense of control and value. This is a crucial aspect in helping our First Nations people to a better economic future. It is not only our fiscal responsibility to help indigenous Albertans, but it's also our moral duty to help them towards self-determination.

I reflect on my previous four years as MLA and the opportunity I had to serve the community of Morinville. The chamber of commerce there has partnered with the Alexander First Nation group in their business awards – and it's an excellent partnership – to help identify the indigenous entrepreneurs within the Alexander First Nation and to give them recognition for their work as individuals and as groups, to help them understand and get a sense of pride in the work that they do.

I'm reading from the St. Albert Gazette, where it identified the three awards and the three recipients of the awards that were at the Morinville chamber of commerce gala. The first award was given to Gutta Muzik. He's an entertainer, Lawrence Paul.

When... [he] heard his name announced for the Artisans Recognition award, he said he was in "disbelief."

"I didn't see this coming at all," he said.

"I know that there are many businesses in the Morinville area that are outstanding – for us to win, I felt really proud of our accomplishments."

This is the first time Paul has been nominated for the chamber award. Gutta Muzik began in 2008 when the musician decided to get into the hip-hop scene. He said that at the time a few of his friends at Alexander First Nation decided to join the music group.

When he announced the news to his band mates, he said they were proud.

This is part of the recognition of the work that individuals can do and how it can give them a sense of individual pride and self-respect. We need to help and partner with them to encourage them and find ways that they can further along in their entrepreneurial achievements.

There were two other awards given that night – and these awards were given to a couple of young men – the spirit of business awards: Astikasa Metal Works and Pism Contracting. Both of these individuals, fairly young men relative to me, I guess, you know, in their 30s, 40s, have their own metal-working businesses. In conversations with them and with the leadership of the Alexander First Nation it became very evident to me that they exist in a world with a few extra challenges that many of us don't experience, where their access to financing was definitely inhibited and a hurdle that needs to be addressed so that they can find the opportunities that the rest of us in Alberta are able to find also. It's those two things, the ownership of business and the pride that that brings for these individuals and to overcome hurdles, that Bill 14 is hoping to address.

This Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation was formed after careful deliberation with 190 different people and groups, including indigenous leaders and business leaders – a few of these groups include ATCO, EPCOR, Syncrude, Suncor, Eagle Spirit Energy, Project Reconciliation, Western Indigenous Pipeline Group, and the First Nations Major Projects Coalition; of course, this is a small snapshot of the total participation to form this revolutionary organization – and positions Alberta to be a major leader in providing support and financial stability for indigenous groups in Canada.

The Fort McKay Nation is an excellent example of the potential benefit a project like this could have for indigenous communities across this province. Today, Madam Speaker, the Fort McKay Nation is heavily involved in oil development, but this was not always the case. Over many years the people of the Fort McKay Nation have worked at their resource development and are now no longer dependent upon the federal government for support. In fact, the Fort McKay Nation has done so well that only 5 per cent of their revenues have come from federal transfers, and its residents' average after-tax income is even higher than that of other Albertans. To put this in perspective for you, the average after-tax income for Fort McKay residents was $73,571 compared to the average in Alberta, which was at $50,683, and the average in Canada, at $38,977. This is an outstanding accomplishment for the Fort McKay Nation.

The end result is an indigenous community that is full of pride and extremely economically successful after acquiring, partnered with another nation, majority ownership of oil infrastructure on its territory, which is worth around half a billion dollars. All of Fort McKay's success was the result of their own hard work beginning in 1983. But imagine if they'd had access to the funding proposed by Bill 14. They could have potentially jump-started their progress, and they could have been even further ahead than they are now. This initiative has the potential to benefit a vast number of Albertan indigenous communities by giving them back the power they need to develop their own lands and reach for their own economic success and all the freedoms that come with that success. Just as Fort McKay has done, we must address and seek to right the wrongs and failures of previous governments, to recognize that our indigenous and Métis communities are more than capable of developing and monetizing their own resources for their own benefit.

It is a shame that the previous NDP government did not see the same potential in our indigenous peoples that this UCP government does. In 2016 Eriel Deranger, communications manager of the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation, said this regarding the desire for comanagement of resource development: comanagement is not asking for everything; it's asking to be partners; our ancestors signed our treaty agreements believing that we were signing nation-to-nation agreements to be given equal say in the development of our lands and territories. She also went on to say, about the previous NDP government, that there has been no public indication that conversations of this nature are on the radar.

To contrast Ms Deranger's statements, this year Herb Lehr, president of the Metis Settlements General Council, said that settlements want to develop oil and resources but lack funds and that this new proposed bill is, and I quote: perfect for us. Those are the words of Herb Lehr, president of the Metis Settlements General Council. Well, Madam Speaker, I'm pleased to announce that Bill 14 evidently seems to be a step in the right direction for indigenous resource development relationships and just one more way that this UCP government is addressing the failures of the previous government.

Government has the potential to be a messy, bureaucratic nightmare, Madam Speaker, and the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation has the potential to come through for our First Nation communities where past governments have failed. By giving control back to our indigenous citizens, we can empower them to realize the changes they want to see in their communities without relying on governments that have failed them in the past. Indigenous communities are tired of talk. They want action, and this bill provides exactly that.

Madam Speaker, I sincerely hope that all of my colleagues here in this Chamber can recognize the value of Bill 14 and the value that it can provide to our indigenous communities. It has the potential to shape their future for the better and the potential to shape all First Nations peoples to allow them to regain some control over their resources and their future. I plan to fully support this bill and mark it down as yet another promise made, promise kept.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you. While I appreciate the member's comments and I appreciated the story – he talked about some of the folks who are very much thriving in his riding – I'm quite disturbed by his comments about our government's record. While I was not a member elected in our previous government, I'm so proud of the work that our government did to build relationships with indigenous folks and to really move towards reconciliation.

I'm so proud of our former Minister of Indigenous Relations. I have the honour of having a significant urban indigenous population in my riding of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, so I've been at many, many events over the years, including the stolen sisters, sisters in spirit marches and vigils that have happened for the last number of years. I was just at it on Friday. In fact, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was there as well, and you could see the relationships that he's formed with so many members from the community. Again, I'm just appalled by that because I've seen the relationship-building that he's done, that our members have put in, and it's something we can be quite proud of. You know, we also developed a climate leadership plan that included indigenous communities as partners, and I just think there's a lot to be proud of there, so let's not rewrite history.

And I just want to make a note, because this is something that a lot of folks from the various indigenous communities have pointed out. You know, this government is talking about giving control back and talking about making – some of the language that's been used today is “independence” and whatnot. One way we can move towards that is to stop using paternalistic language. So I would just like to point out to some of the members who have already spoken to try to avoid saying “our indigenous peoples,” “our indigenous communities,” and even “Canada's indigenous communities.” Those aren't my words; those are the words of a number of indigenous folks. Avoiding “indigenous Canadians”: you can talk about indigenous peoples in Canada, but that possessive, that ownership, is paternalistic, colonial language, and I would urge the members to step away from that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to address the comments made by the previous member. She's appalled by the comments made, but the comments made in my speech were directly from members of the indigenous community. I repeat. Eriel Deranger, communications manager of Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation: comanagement is not asking for everything; it's asking to be partners. The indigenous communities are looking to be partners in the ability for self-determination as they move forward in developing their communities, bringing themselves into a position of pride in their community, in the work that they are doing. She also calls “appalling” the comments from Herb Lehr, president of the Metis Settlements General Council, who said, and I quote from Herb Lehr: this is perfect for us; Bill 14 is perfect for us.

These are the types of things that the indigenous groups have come to us with, concerns from previous governments that seem to be speaking words without following up with actions that help them to move from a place of dependence to a place of self-determination and a future, that they can recognize themselves, that brings them a sense of pride in their abilities to fulfill their dreams.

The opportunities that this bill has and will have for the indigenous communities are huge, and I believe it's just a start. It's a small start in a direction that will help us, working in a spirit of reconciliation, to have the ability to become partners together in future development of natural resources and in future development of these communities.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 14? The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley. Have you not already spoken to this in second reading?

Mr. Loewen: No.

The Deputy Speaker: No? Okay. Please proceed.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Yes. I'm honoured to speak today on Bill 14, this very important bill. I think that when I look at Bill 14 and I see what it does, I see the effects that Bill 14 will have for not only this generation but coming generations. I think what we see is this continued commitment that we have as a government and a commitment that we made to Albertans in our campaign to the economy, to jobs, and to bringing back investment to Alberta and growing our economy. I think, when we look at these things, that these are so important to the overall well-being of Albertans and, of course, the services that the government provides to Albertans. Again, when I look at Bill 14, I just see so much future and so much opportunity for not only First Nations but for Albertans in general.

Now, the minister in charge here of indigenous affairs has worked so hard to date. He's been travelling Alberta. He's been visiting with First Nations. I understand he's visited, I think, over two-thirds of the First Nations in Alberta, and I think that's a great credit to him and to his work and what he has been doing with not only Bill 14 but building relations between government and First Nations in Alberta. Of course, he's even spent time in Sturgeon Lake Cree Nation, which is the closest First Nation to where I live, so they're my neighbours, my friends, the people I see regularly. It was great to have him in that community showing his concern and listening to their concerns.

Now, of course, myself and Central Peace-Notley have a few First Nations groups. I've met with them. Just to kind of go through it a little bit, Duncan's First Nation, which is in the Fairview area: when I met with them, I know a lot of their concerns were over economic activity and trying to grow economic activity in their community. Obviously, they want to see things improve for their people.

Again, Sturgeon Lake Cree Nation, which, like I mentioned, is the closest to me – I live just outside of Valleyview, and they live on the west side of Valleyview there. Obviously, I've spent some time with Chief Goodswimmer and many of the council members over the last six months and actually over the last four years, really. When I talked to them and when I listened to them, I know they're looking to improve the well-being of their band members, too, and to improve things in their band and their band land and, of course, within their band members and the economy within their community.

With Sturgeon Lake, of course, I attend their powwow every year, and it's a great event. It's great to see the pride they have in their traditional activities. I attend their round dances, too, when I have a chance. It's always great to be there for them, too, and to see the community get together, young and old alike, with the round dances. In fact, at one round dance I actually won a hand drum. That's one of my prized possessions. It sits prominently in my home, and I love to see that in my home, too. I think it's great, that tradition that is being continued to this day.

The other First Nation in my constituency is Alexander First Nation. They have some land just south of Fox Creek. Just recently they brought many business and industry leaders together because they want to do a development there. They want to develop that land, they want to bring business in there, and they want to have an opportunity to grow the economic benefit of that land. That land sits right on highway 43. Of course, it's a main traffic corridor to northwestern Alberta and to the Peace Country. They want to develop there. They want to be able to lease property to different companies. There's a lot of oil field activity and gas, of course, in that area. They want to develop that land, maybe put up a gas station and maybe even have some residences there and then have opportunity for businesses to set up on that land. They also brought elected leaders in the community together at that same time. They had a great presentation there and had it well set up and well organized.

I did want to mention, too, that the Minister of Infrastructure was there and spoke at that gathering, and they allowed me to speak, too. It was great to have that opportunity and see First Nations that want to develop industry and develop companies within their areas and have that opportunity to grow the economy. Of course, that kind of growth is not only good for the First Nations, but it's also good for all Albertans.

I think the most important part of this bill – and often I think that when we see bills that have been brought forward in the past by previous governments, we look at the names, and sometimes the names don't represent what the bill actually does, but I think this one is absolutely perfect. It has the word "opportunities" in it, and that's what this is all about. This is about opportunity for First Nations, and it's an opportunity for First Nations to be involved in the economy, be involved in developing the natural resources on their lands. This will help develop those opportunities and help them have that growth that they would like. I think that's what is required. We need to give opportunity to First Nations to grow. Of course, we want to give opportunities to all Albertans, but this bill focuses on our First Nations.

It's about creating jobs and economic benefit. When we look at the First Nations, like I mentioned, when I meet with them, they talk about how they can improve their communities, how they can improve the lives of their members, and this is one of the best ways that we can do that, by giving them this opportunity to have that kind of economic benefit and economic growth.

Of course, First Nations people can't, you know, take a mortgage on their home or anything like that to start a business. They don't have opportunities like that that others do. That's in legislation. I mean, that's the way it is at this point. They can't do that, so we need to have other ways for them to take advantage of the opportunities that others have because they deserve to be able to provide for their families like anyone else. By having these opportunities to develop businesses and companies and develop their natural resources, that's what will help them provide for their families and continue to grow.

Now, of course, First Nations have a lot of natural resources on their lands and on their traditional lands. When we see all these resources that are there for them, I guess you could kind of see that they're within their reach, but they just need that opportunity to be able to reach out and fully benefit from those resources that they have right at their fingertips. This will give that opportunity for them to benefit from these resources that are right there.

Now, you know, we all know how hard it could be to negotiate the bureaucracy and the red tape and the different things that are involved in getting businesses going and to develop resources. Of course, that's one thing our government is focused on, trying to reduce these restrictions, these barriers to developing natural resources and to progressing as a society as we try to go forward and get things done. These barriers are just as hard for First Nations to overcome as they are for the rest of us and maybe even more so. Again, that's one of the things that we are focused on, trying to remove barriers, trying to allow opportunity, allow these things to grow, allow communities to grow.

We have the same challenges, and they have those challenges, too, and we need to be able to work together to bring down those barriers and make sure we have the opportunity we have to grow the economy in Alberta, get investment here. We need that investment to create the jobs. In the past four years we've seen tens of billions of dollars of lost investment opportunity in Alberta, and that's been because of poor government policies. That's why we need to change these government policies. We need to do things like bring in Bill 14, which provides the opportunities for our First Nations people to grow and to continue with their lives.

Now, this is a historic bill. This is the first of its kind not only in Alberta but in Canada, maybe even across the world, where a government has decided: "Okay. Instead of just giving lip service to First Nations people, we need to do something substantial. We need to do something that'll be a game changer, that'll bring these communities forward and give them the opportunities that they deserve." It's all about giving indigenous people a higher quality of life and giving them the opportunity to grow in their own communities.

Now, we know that the consultation has been far and wide. We know that our minister has travelled across Alberta visiting First Nations from north to south, east to west. He's covered a lot of ground. We know he's consulted with nearly 200 business and indigenous leaders in regard to Bill 14 and how it's going to be implemented and what its effects could be. I think that's a great credit to this government and to the minister as far as being able to work with these people across Alberta, the industry leaders and First Nations, and being able to bring them together and to come up with this Bill 14 to create this opportunity.

Again, this will allow more communities to be able to own and invest in natural resource development. I think that when we look across Alberta, we know that for many of our smaller communities, in particular across rural Alberta, most of their economic opportunities are with natural resources. Of course, by increasing the number of communities that can benefit from these natural resources, that only helps all Albertans and all of Alberta in our growth and our desire to grow our economy, to, you know, balance the budget and get our economy back on track, get the jobs going so that people can have those jobs that they use to support their families.

I think indigenous leaders – I mean, I think what they want is to become true commercial partners in the energy industry and not just view it from the outside and maybe take some periphery jobs or some periphery economic benefit. I think they want to be true partners. They want to have that opportunity that others have to be involved with the resources and the energy industry that happen right there on their lands and on their traditional lands.

I think we've been poor at selling our responsible resource development here in Alberta. I think that's changing, but something that we need to continue to change is to change the narrative on our resource development. We know that we are the most responsible developer of our resources in the world. There's no doubt about that. We know that the best thing we can do for the environment is to produce more of our resources right here in Alberta because we know we have the highest standards right here.

Another thing we know is that our First Nations people, as they develop resources, will do it with equal or more environmental concern than has been done. We know we've been doing great. We know we can improve and we will improve, but I think it's important to know that we are the best now. We'll continue to be better, and we know that as First Nations become involved, that responsible development will only grow and become better. I think that's something that, hopefully, the world can take note of and actually understand how responsible we are in the development of our resources here in Alberta. Like I say, I think having First Nations involved will only help that position that we have as the most responsible developer of natural resources in the world.

Now, these loan guarantees that Bill 14 talks about: they've never been available before. These are new opportunities that First Nations will be able to have going forward.

I think what is important to realize is this government's actions on this file and other files within government: first of all, we consult, we listen, and then we act. Those are, I think, the most important things that we can do as a government: consult, and not just ask people their opinion and then go and do what we want to do anyways; have meaningful consultation, which means that you listen and you take into consideration what people are saying; and then, of course, follow it with action. Consult, listen, action: I think that's an important take for this government's actions as we've gone forward. We have to remember we're only just a few months into the ...

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is applicable. The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would just like to ask the Member for Central Peace-Notley to expand on something that really touched me, his deep love of his constituency, of his First Nation communities – I've had some interaction with Duncan's First Nation, for example, in his constituency – and your shared love, if I may go personal here, your shared love of hunting. If there's one way to get a smile off a First Nation person, it's to ask him how hunting is going this year. Every time: crack the biggest grin you're ever going to see. They love the land. If there's any similarity between the member just speaking and First Nation people that is stronger than any other, it's that same response. When you ask him about hunting, you see a big smile happen, and he could talk for hours.

I know that under 29(2)(a) he's only going to have about four minutes and 20 seconds left, but I'm going to ask him to confine his remarks to their shared love of the land and the animals that they hunt on it. If he could expand on that a little bit, I think it's a great opportunity for his constituents to hear that and see that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Well, thank you very much. I appreciate the comments. Of course, yes, I have a great love for the outdoors, and that's something that's shared with the First Nations people in my area. When we get together, we can always talk about moose hunting and elk hunting and being out on the land.

You know, I talked about the environment and how responsible resource development is important for the environment. When I look at the environment, of course, I look at the quality of the landscape, the quality of the water. I look at the abundance of wildlife and the diversity of wildlife. In the Peace Country I think we're extra blessed there with having so many species of wildlife and that kind of diversity. I know that the First Nations rely on that wildlife for subsistence, and I know in my travels in the woods and in the backroads and everything I run into them quite often. We're after the same thing. Of course, we'd like to fill the freezer and have that opportunity to eat some good Alberta wild game.

Again, I just think it's so important to think about that responsible development and how that affects the landscape. You know, we really want to see those opportunities continue for First Nations not only on the development end of things – of course, that's what this bill focuses on – but also on the environment and protecting the environment and protecting that opportunity that we both have to go out on the landscape and hunt and trap and fish as we do.

Now, we expect that the effects of this bill could be seen as early as spring 2020, and I think we'll be looking forward to that. I know First Nations will be looking forward to that, too. You know, I think that one of the things we need to realize is that with these opportunities for investment and these opportunities that'll come from these projects, the revenue can be used to reinvest in the community, to priorities within the community. When I visit with the First Nations in my community, they all have things they would like to see, and I think that the revenues from these projects could be reinvested to make their priorities possible. We look at things like, say, the Eagle Spirit project and how important that would be to get our resources to market. When we get our resources to market, Albertans' resources to market, that obviously will include the First Nations resources. That's why it's so important and why it's so frustrating to see people opposing things like pipelines. This isn't just that, you know, they could say: well, we don't care about Alberta. But when they're saying that, they don't care about First Nations people and their ability to get their products to market, too.

I think that's what's shameful about the people that are opposing pipelines. We know pipelines are the safest, the most economic way to transport our oil to market. I think that, again, we want to give First Nations the opportunity to be true partners in resource development, we want to make sure that people understand how important it is to have responsible development and the opportunity for First Nations to improve their communities, and we know that this will help all Albertans. Again, as we look forward down the road, when we see these barriers coming up with pipeline protests, we hope that this will stop and that people will realize that there are benefits to all Albertans with this.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to second reading on Bill 14? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 14, Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. I think I want to start by saying that we will be supporting this bill and any effort towards reconciliation. In fact, as my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said, we should avoid using that kind of language, that we are giving them opportunities. In fact, indigenous people have a right to be part of the economic, social, and cultural life of the province. They were here before any of us. We do know that for a number of reasons they were left behind, and we can, I guess, see that from their economic participation. We can see that from their high school completion rates, their school graduation rates. We can see that from the number of children, you know, in our system. We can see that in their overrepresentation in our justice system. We can see that from the living conditions, housing conditions on the reserve, the water situation on the reserve and, in general, in their participation in the economic, social, cultural, and political life of this province.

Certainly, it's a step in the right direction, but there is a lot more work that needs to be done. I think we will speak to the bill and its provisions in detail in Committee of the Whole, but generally speaking, when I was looking at it, it wasn't clear whether this bill will do anything other than just letting them borrow or facilitating their borrowing and, when I was looking at the board composition, whether a majority of these members will be from indigenous communities. I think it was indicated that cash was coming from cancelling of oil-by-rail contracts.

I think I can speak to quite a bit of that because prior to becoming a Member of the Legislative Assembly, I was also practising with an indigenous boutique law firm, which was focusing on Indian residential schools, treaty land claims, indigenous rights. I do not want to go into the history of all that, but I will suggest this much, that based on my own experience, based on my interactions with my different clients, various bands, I know that whatever we do, we need to do it in consultation with the indigenous communities and in a respectful manner. People are better judges of their problems, and just having a corporation set up may not address many of the issues that our indigenous communities are facing.

I heard earlier from the member opposite that they were attacking the record of the previous government. One, I think reconciliation shouldn't be a partisan issue. When we were in government, we took a number of steps to further that reconciliation, to further that process. Yes, we haven't fixed everything, but we did things that were meaningful to the indigenous communities. For instance, we were the first government who took steps to implement the UN declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. We signed framework agreements with many treaty organizations, many First Nations. In fact, the former minister and my colleague, the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford, was the first minister this province ever had who visited all 48 First Nations. That goes to show that we were putting in time and effort to work with these communities.

Also, we were the first government who took steps towards creating a meaningful apology for '60s scoop survivors, and we worked with indigenous communities and organizations advocating for that apology for a long time. We were the government who took steps to implement Jordan's principle, which First Nations have been calling for for decades. We were the government who took steps to facilitate training of 27,000 public service employees about the indigenous people. As my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford yesterday mentioned, on the indigenous ministry's website there was a document called Alberta's Path to Reconciliation that disappeared over the summer, which actually reflected all these initiatives that we were doing to recognize the history and contribution of indigenous communities, including the history of residential schools and the '60s scoop. I think we took steps in providing them with or making sure that indigenous communities have clean water, and we made historical investment in that area. Also, we were funding women's shelters. We were funding native friendship shelters. We were working with them on issues that mattered to them.

Last week, I believe, I was in a town hall in Calgary where a large number of Calgarians came to share their views about the upcoming budget and their issues and concerns in general. There was one young indigenous woman lawyer who was there, and she spoke about a couple of things. She first spoke about the missing and murdered women inquiry. The report has been out for a while now. She indicated that Alberta is the only province which has not done anything in that regard. In fact, when asked in question period yesterday of the Minister of Indigenous Relations whether he supports those recommendations, he didn't commit one way or the other whether he supports those recommendations. That was the case when he was asked prior whether he supported the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, and he wasn't sure that he supports those. In fact, when asked whether recognizing treaty lands is necessary for public officials, he commented that that was just a choice, and they, in fact, have abandoned treaty recognition in public speaking and public places. These are the things that do not promote, do not help us with reconciliation, and we need to do better on these fronts as well.

I think, as I was saying, that when the indigenous communities are consulted with, when we work with them, we have seen many communities who have successfully created partnerships and invested large scale in our resource sector as well. For example, Mikisew Cree First Nation and Fort McKay First Nation invested almost half a billion dollars in 2017 for a share in Suncor oil storage out of Fort Mac. Almost 35 per cent, 34 per cent, is owned by Fort McKay and 15 per cent by Mikisew Cree First Nations.

It's my sincere hope that through this corporation we will open up economic opportunities for indigenous people and will facilitate their participation. That has not been the case for a while. We will also work with them on other issues that matter to them.

I think that in this case, sure, it's a good step, but under the indigenous climate leadership plan there was almost $90 million in investment in various projects all across this province that they were benefiting from. Now I think that with the cancellation of the climate leadership plan they have been stripped of all of those opportunities, and I guess they are given hope that this corporation will create opportunities. It's my sincere hope that this corporation will.

With that, I think I will be supporting this bill, and we will have further discussion and comments at the committee stage of this bill. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is applicable. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the support and opportunity for input from the hon. member preceding me. I would like to give the member an opportunity to elaborate a little bit on how he believes this Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation has an opportunity to uplift the dignity of the individuals with new work in those communities. For example, in my constituency the Dene Tha', between Meander and Chateh and Bushe reserves, have a very high level of unemployment, and it's been a chronic problem, as you outlined, as many others have in their speeches on the other side of the Chamber. I was wondering if you could elaborate on how your hope and, in my understanding, your support of this bill will bring employment to these individuals. The unemployment is as high as 90 per cent in some of these communities, and if you remove the work that is offered by the band itself, it goes even higher. Any way that you could articulate the way that your hope that this legislation, that you support, will bring work to these communities and bring dignity to those individuals: I'd be very interested in hearing that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Let's take this opportunity to remind all members to speak through the chair.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think, as I mentioned, that there are quite a few details that we still need to learn about and hear from the government side, and I would rather hear from the government how they think this indigenous opportunities corporation will facilitate their objectives, how it will help address unemployment. Certainly, I think that whenever indigenous communities are given opportunities, they have successfully created business ventures, partnerships, and made investment where they have created employment for their community. For instance, employment may not be as high as in Mikisew or Fort McKay First Nations, where they have partnered with Suncor and created wealth and opportunities for their members.

What I can tell you is that that is the case across the province for the most part, that unemployment is way higher than Alberta's average in our indigenous communities, and that was the reason that we were working with indigenous communities on many different issues. For instance, I referenced the indigenous climate leadership plan. Under the climate leadership plan they were provided with the funds, they were provided with the opportunities and almost $90 million in interest-free grants so that they can work on issues that matter to them. They can work on things that will help them with economic development, that will help them in creating jobs and addressing issues that are facing their communities. For instance, when we were in government, we invested in clean water on-reserve. With that investment, not only comes clean water but comes economic opportunity, comes employment and all those benefits.

I think that with this corporation there are a number of details that we still need to hear, whether this will be just a loan guarantee kind of corporation or whether government will be actively investing in it, that still needs to be seen, but one thing I can for sure tell you is that instead of giving $4.5 billion to the wealthiest corporations, had we invested that $4.5 billion in this corporation, this indigenous opportunities corporation, we would have fixed many things. We would have addressed graduation rates. We would have addressed unemployment issues. We would have addressed clean water. We would have addressed issues they're facing with respect to the justice system. I think that investment, that handout that was given earlier, the $4.5 billion handout to the wealthiest corporations: we could have given that to this corporation. I'm sure that this corporation would have thrived, created opportunities, would have solved unemployment issues in Dene Tha' and the reserves you were referring to and many other reserves across this province, and Alberta at large would have benefited from that investment.

The Deputy Speaker: We are on second reading of Bill 14. Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation, or AIOC, is an example to me of real partnership and real action. Our government committed to partnering with Alberta's indigenous communities in building economic and social well-being. The AIOC allocates $1 billion in loan guarantees to support aboriginal co-ownership and financial participation in major resource development. First Nations and indeed all Albertans should fully benefit from the vast resources that lie beneath us.

Before I was elected, I worked in finance as an investment banker. For about 10 years I helped companies and entrepreneurs raise capital for growth or expansion or acquisitions. I think people assume that good projects naturally attract capital, that if a project makes sense on a spreadsheet, someone will fund it, but that simply isn't the case. There are millions of positive net present value projects that are never funded or brought to fruition.

But why does this happen? In general the demand for capital exceeds the supply of capital. Capital providers often review hundreds of opportunities before shortlisting a group for due diligence. After conducting due diligence, very few of these opportunities are funded, sometimes none, yet each of these opportunities can and often does have merit. The perceived difficulty of executing an investment can also turn off investors, or they may lack the in-house expertise required to execute it.

In Alberta, nowhere is the difficulty to access capital more evident to me than with our First Nations. The ability of indigenous groups to provide adequate security to financial lenders has and continues to be a significant barrier in their ability to access capital. The capacity to develop or invest in major resource projects varies widely across indigenous communities.

Alberta finally has a government that understands that when indigenous communities benefit from the responsible development of our natural resources, the entire province benefits. The AIOC will bridge the gap between indigenous groups wanting to be commercial partners in the natural resource sector and will position Alberta as a leader in providing financial capacity and building support for indigenous groups seeking to invest in natural resource development projects. This backstop is important because it will enable and facilitate economic development, which is desperately needed in our province and will prosper our First Nations and, once again, all Albertans.

I also think the AIOC will signal to industry that Alberta is open for business, that Alberta is seeking to develop its resources responsibly, and that our First Nations are partnering with our government and, hopefully, investors and industry to get it done. I don't know about you, but that would encourage me to invest.

To get from our platform to this bill and the proposed AIOC, our government hosted eight engagement sessions from July to August of this year. Nearly 200 people participated in these sessions, providing their input, their concerns, their suggestions, and we listened. Participants included indigenous and business leaders. Corporate participants included industry leaders like Syncrude, Suncor, ATCO, EPCOR. Industry associations and coalition representatives from Eagle Spirit Energy, First Nations Major Projects Coalition, and the Western Indigenous Pipeline Group also attended.

I can tell you that while I believe each of our ministers is fully dedicated and invested in their ministries, nowhere are emotional investment and sincerity more apparent than with the Minister of Indigenous Relations. I think that's important because when you genuinely care about something or someone, you will act in their best interests. I emphasize the word "act" because I believe our First Nations have suffered from inaction, not from a lack of words. Words and acknowledgements, while important, do not feed families. They do not build homes or roads or schools or other required infrastructure. They do not clean water.

I'm looking forward to supporting this bill and the action that will follow it, and I would encourage everyone in this Chamber to do so as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to second reading on Bill 14? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Madam Speaker. For far too long reconciliation with Alberta's and Canada's aboriginal communities has been put off and ignored. We have seen politicians at all levels of government pretend to care about the issue but, when push comes to shove, lots of talk and little action. Reconciliation is defined as the act of restoring to friendship or harmony, and that takes time, effort, and will. I am proud of our Premier, our cabinet, and our Minister of Indigenous Relations for the example in leadership they have shown in these efforts. I know first-hand, both from door-knocking in my constituency and meeting with stakeholders in my capacity as MLA for Lethbridge-East, that Alberta's indigenous population wants to see our resources developed. Out of more than 600 First Nations bands in this country, many are strong supporters of this kind of development.

I want to thank the Minister of Indigenous Relations for coming to Lethbridge to meet with the First Nations leaders during the Friendship Society's AGM. His compassion, clearly evident during his presentation yesterday, was on clear display that day as well. The fact that he has travelled all over this province, not just on some obligatory trip but truly building relationships with First Nations peoples, is a testament to his compassion and care. Thank you to that minister.

The indigenous community in Alberta has been stewards of this land for centuries, and our government understands the necessity of responsible resource development. The bill before the House today allows our valued indigenous communities to be equal partners in resource development so that all Albertans can take advantage of the abundance of resources that this province is so blessed to have. This bill by no means is a government handout. It provides an opportunity for the First Nations groups in this province to help themselves. It incorporates innovation, captivating new policy that will be utilized across Canada.

While I understand the necessity of responsible development, I also believe it is crucial that we consult and engage with our stakeholders, especially when projects overlap with traditional indigenous territory. This is something that former governments refused to do, instead wanting to lecture, fearmonger communities, whether indigenous or not, on the need to reduce their alleged oversized carbon footprint. Madam Speaker, this country produces well under 2 per cent of global greenhouse gas emissions, and for the GHGs that we do produce, they are the most environmentally and ethically sourced fossil fuels in the world.

Madam Speaker, the fact of the matter is that this issue surpasses economic concerns. This is humanitarian – humanitarian – this resource development and opportunity for indigenous partners, benefiting them, especially when these are some of the most vulnerable communities in the province.

The fact of the matter is that the world will continue to produce oil and gas throughout this century. Most projections show global demand for fossil fuels continuing to grow until at least 2050. The federal Liberals have been holding back the potential of this province in developing our resources, all to the detriment of Albertans and only to the benefit of dictatorships and others who have no regard for human rights or the environment.

I am proud to stand here today in this House to discuss this vital issue. It is of crucial importance that we continue to develop the abundance of resources that all Albertans are fortunate to take ownership of. While those that attempt to land-lock our resources and support foreign-funded campaigns with misinformation and deception – our provincial government will always be standing up for hard-working Albertans that produce our resources and the countless Canadians that benefit from our industry.

At the end of the day, the intent of this bill, I believe, is to promote responsible development and environmental stewardship in a way that gives our economy a much-needed boost. I think it is incredibly admirable that the Premier and the Minister of Indigenous Relations have worked on this bill with the aim of bringing our indigenous partners into the fold.

In my own constituency this summer I was invited to attend a teepee camp organized and put forward by a local First Nations police officer, Les Vonkman. This was an incredible experience, where we were invited to stand a teepee – set up the poles, wrap it with a canvas – understanding the cultural respect for the land, the forest, the river, and even the poles themselves as they represented life to the people and the nature that we are a part of. We heard from elders and knowledge keepers. We took a hike through the natural resources and the natural land along the river to see the history of their people on the land.

We also participated in a sweat lodge. We heard their prayers. We listened to their songs. We felt the heat of the time in that sweat lodge. It was a spiritual experience for them and for myself as we reached a confluence of not just the Catholic history and their people but also their spiritual beliefs as First Nations people.

This government is standing up for those kinds of communities, for those people and those traditions, and for all Albertans, giving them the support to help them grow, sustain economic prosperity, utilize their natural resources ethically, and, hopefully, set the stage with a policy set forth in Bill 14 for the rest of Canada.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Lethbridge-East for his wonderful remarks.

As I've learned and grown from the indigenous communities in this province, there have been a lot of ideas coming to mind, and one of them is respect for the environment, respect for the lands. There is just tremendous respect for the lands that we live on, and I've learned so much from them. Something that I love about this specific bill, Bill 14, the AIOC, is how it actually hopes to give a hand up to indigenous communities in this province. But also I believe this ensures that as they penetrate the natural resource market, we will also see continued respect for the environment, something that some people in this province and this country may think that this government doesn't care about, but I can tell you that we care deeply about it. We do believe that we can grow the economy and protect the environment at the same time.

As I walked through the climate rally that took place in front of this building a couple of days ago with my Support Energy shirt on, insults were hurled at me, but like this government, I remain steadfast in supporting our energy sector and supporting this government in the direction we're taking, particularly with this Bill 14.

I'm hoping that the Member for Lethbridge-East can maybe talk a little bit about his experience working with First Nations, particularly as they respect the environment, some of the lessons he's learned, and also maybe he could talk about how he believes Bill 14 will both ensure that we develop our resources in a responsible way but also protect the environment.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you. Thank you for the question from the Member for Cardston-Siksika.

That experience with the teepee camp really did help teach me about the First Nations connection to the land. It was amazing to leave the rush of the city. Lethbridge being the third-largest city, it's still fairly small. It only took a few minutes to get past rush hour, but even there there's an energy and a busyness that as soon as we got into the reserve and onto the private land of this individual that shared his land with us, you could feel the peace begin to settle.

We parked our cars, we took the time to sit down, and we didn't just rush to work as we settlers often do. They sat down. They did introductions. We took time to learn each other's names, our backgrounds, and hear our stories, where we came from, what we were hoping to learn and engage in, all in the setting of a canopy of trees and wildlife and nature around us with the sound of the river in the background. It was only after that time was taken to be in touch with one another and to be in touch with nature that we began to find the site for setting up a teepee.

Then they took the time – again, they didn't just rush into the work – to explain the significance of the poles, which poles did what, how they stood them up, and that you weren't to walk over the poles because the poles came from trees and they have their own spirit. To step over them was actually a disrespect to the spirit within the poles themselves. So once you set that teepee up, it became like a living place for them, and that's part of their culture. To take that time to learn their perspective, to learn their beliefs, to listen to how they interact with nature and the environment: it becomes far more evident why being environmentally conscious, like Bill 14 would set forward, is so important as we invite the First Nations into those business ventures with us.

It takes time to do that building. It takes time to build those friendships. This didn't happen over the course of an hour or two. We took most of the day as we set up that teepee and learned all about the culture: the smoke flaps at the top, the skirting inside the teepee, how the wind would come from the outside and not go right into the teepee but up the outside and take the smoke out. Then you build the firepit in the middle so that they can sit there and visit. Many times through that day we sat down again, and they brought in elders to come and speak to us.

I learned that part of our challenge as government, even though the First Nations have chiefs and council, is that their people often are more connected to their elders and their knowledge keepers in their societies. They already see two levels of government within their own peoples and nations. We need to understand that if we're going to work with them in respect, work with them in the development of resources, and work with them to protect their environment, part of getting to know them and work with them is acknowledging the hurts of the past because you cannot change or heal what you don't acknowledge. Taking that time to do that with them and then having the firepits . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 14? The hon. Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's been a real privilege to sit in here and listen to some of the incredible stories. I know that a humongous amount of what we learn, even just being an elected official, is actually being able to travel around and speak with people and have really significant and incredible conversations with people of various cultures and backgrounds. Some of the really amazing opportunities that we have when you get invited into those spaces. To the point of the Member for Lethbridge-East: it's just such a privilege, isn't it?

Madam Speaker, I just wanted to speak a little bit about some of the experiences that I've had and why this bill is so important. I was recently invited to participate in a sharing circle at an event commemorating the 142nd anniversary of the Treaty 7. It was overwhelming for a lot of different reasons but partially because of the vista where we were, if you can imagine an incredibly beautiful flat space where some of the very first Europeans actually came over the mountains and where the Stoney Nakoda actually met them and brought them over the mountains and settled in this area together because the Stoney Nakoda had such a great ability to raise buffalo. It was actually a relationship that started some of the very first ranches in the province.

Just absolutely incredible vistas are there, but more than that, as you looked out, it dropped down to this turquoise water that was right behind. As you walked up, there are remains of the McDougall family which was the first family that settled out there along with the Stoney Nakoda. There are also all sorts of acknowledgements to teepee circles and various other things that were there because of the relationships that were built building that land and farming that land and living together. When you heard the stories of the settlers and the stories of the First Nations, the First Peoples that were there, and how they collaborated together and worked together and traded together, it was overwhelming the spirit of generosity and the way that things had worked at that time.

There was a fellow there; his name is Tony Snow. He's a descendant of the Treaty 7 signatories, and he's actually studying his father. Snow Sr. was the first ordained indigenous minister of the United church of Alberta. Tony has gone on to bring together that ministry as well as indigenous history and spirit to be able to work alongside his people in reconciliation to help bring folks together but also to be able to work within the church to bring those folks together. He spoke at this site about how it is that we need to work together, and really it's a matter of listening. Respect comes from sitting back and listening, breathing in a person's words, listening to what they actually mean, and then you break down how it is that we work on that together. That does take time, an immense amount of time, but it's privileged time, especially at a time right now where we're all looking at how it is that we move beyond symbolic gestures.

They're good starting points. I think all of us acknowledge that that's a very important place to start. But there's a difference between a gesture, and then you go to building the relationship, and then we go to figuring out that we work together to make sure that all of us not only live together but understand each other, have compassion and great respect for each other's cultures. But how do we become prosperous and make sure that those folks have access to everything that we all believe is such a great gift in this province, being our natural resources? We have the best, the very best, resources in the world. Not only that, our stewardship is amongst the best in the world. A lot of that is because, if you look historically at a lot of the larger groups and corporations, they have worked collaboratively with indigenous peoples to understand how it is that we move through those lands.

The interesting thing is that as this piece came together, and speaking very closely with my very dear friend the Minister of Indigenous Relations, we started to find out, and he started to understand as he was going through this process, the amount of respect and really great friendships that had already been built amongst a lot of the groups and with our indigenous peoples. This piece of legislation elevates that. It takes it to the next level, where we actually acknowledge our moral obligation to an incredible group of people who have every right to benefit the same way that the rest of us do. That collaboration, that acknowledgement of that, is way beyond a symbol. It's way beyond a gesture.

This is something that from my perspective is, like I said, one of the biggest privileges that we have being here, that you get to meet people that you would never meet. I often say this. I speak at a lot of schools. Who gets to do this? Not only are you invited to come and meet with people, but you're invited into their homes and their spaces and to take a meal and sometimes to pray or sometimes to acknowledge spirit or the Creator, whatever that is, whatever is important to that person. We are invited into that inner circle to participate. Why? Not because it's symbolic to people but because it's meaningful because they want to share. We want to share. This takes us to a whole other level of acknowledging the need for prosperity.

One of the members in opposition had mentioned that about issues around water and poverty. These have been chronic issues that we have faced. We've heard these cries from our indigenous peoples for such a long, long time, and all governments have failed immensely in being able to make sure that we take care of all of our people in this beautiful country. This is a legitimate act, a step to move forward, to making sure that we don't continue on allowing these things to happen.

In order to change fundamentally how it is that First Nation peoples have money and prosperity from this, we've already seen it. We've talked about Eagle Spirit. We've talked about many, many different nations that are very prosperous and have done phenomenal work on their own because these are self-determining nations. However, there are places where we need to make sure that that prosperity is also elevated so that they can take care of their own people. This is a nation-to-nation discussion, which is significantly different. This is an acknowledgement of the self-determining people and what the needs are of those people because we listen to them and understand what our part is. How do we do this? How do we consult?

When I was reading through the consultations that the minister had done, that he had met with 98 members of various First Nations and First Peoples across the province, that's in itself a very, very interesting thing to understand and know. But if you know anything about this minister, you'll understand that each one of those meetings had a meaningful, loving, and very, very compassionate discussion behind it that not only started the building of a relationship but went further to discuss how it is that we work together in collaboration to create prosperity. That's what this bill is about. An opportunity is something that we fling open the doors and we say: here's what we're going to do to help.

It's wonderful that in the past the governments have given grants and other opportunities and things like that to grow and acknowledge First Peoples and First Nations. Again, we're stepping beyond that. We're looking past helping to build pieces of infrastructure and things like that that are, again, our obligation as a government. This is actually a partnership, a partnership where all of us prosper together. That shows a significant shift in a discussion. This has been needed for such a long time, but beyond that, it incorporates all of the important things about how it is that a self-determining nation can create equity on that nation.

This is another piece of the puzzle. As nice as other things are, it didn't help to create equity and an ability for people to grow their own money, sustainability, and ability to take care of their own people. This is what this bill does. It goes beyond where we have been. We all have major gratitude in this House for what has happened in the past, but we go beyond that a step to understand: what is our responsibility and our obligation towards each other, nation to nation, to create that prosperity so that their children – and the other thing is, too, that if we look at this, that is what we talk about in reconciliation. How do we bridge those gaps? How do we look at using oil and gas or whatever resources we have available to us to bridge the gap in reconciliation? We build relationships. We understand the need for prosperity, for taking care of our children, for our future, how it is that we look at each other, the partnerships that we create, how we evolve, where we've been, and where we're going to.

This bill has the opportunity to say: "This is where we are. This is where we're going. Here is the opportunity, and how can we help you to create that prosperity?" Every single person in this House knows and understands the importance of what it means to look forward and say: well, what's going to happen to my grandchildren? We talk about that all the time, how increased debt and the issues that we have with debt and deficit are mortgaging our children's future. This is about looking at that issue and that problem and solving it collaboratively with an incredible group of people who are unbelievably resilient.

All of us, I think, have had the pleasure of sitting in a First Nations gathering. There were many of us at the spirit sisters gathering in Calgary. What I think most touched me – there was so many things, but what was very profound for me was the ability of these people to stand up and tell their story, as painful as it was, of everything that they had gone through, but we were looking for that path forward. There was a physical sense of understanding where we had failed, what had gone on, but what was the path forward? This has been that cry. This bill is an answer to that. How do we move forward?

There are so many things that I could share with you about the incredible opportunities I've had with our First Nations and First Peoples. The one thing I want to be very clear about is that in our relationship we have to talk about things that are mutually beneficial for all people. That's largely in part what those discussions and what happened when the minister went around the province to travel and to talk with leaders of nations and various people were about, that mutual benefit and that relationship, but we also wanted to make sure that the bill sets out clear expectations. Again, it's okay to pat yourself on the back for doing some nice things for people. It's a wonderful part of what we all get to do in here. But when you look at mutual benefit and you look at the relationship and clear expectations that are laid out in this bill, we can actually see that path forward.

When we talk about engagement with First Peoples, that's not just sitting down and having the relationship. We need to move beyond that and understand, listen to, and find solutions for how it is that we – what's the next step? Next steps are a very serious piece of what this bill does. It takes fundamental issues of poverty, social issues, isolation, many, many other things and makes sure that not only are we looking at that social piece but that we understand that prosperity and building within those nations will help solve so many of the other problems that all of us have within our nation and within their nation.

Quite often we hear within those social perspectives about how it is that we enter into that with a competency of understanding that nation. You can't talk about one nation on all nations. This is one point that I wanted to make very clear, too. These are thumbprints. These are unique, individual human beings and different nations, all with different perspectives and politics of their own. To make the assumption – especially with land acknowledgements, I have found in my short time here that it's my responsibility to find an elder at one of these events and actually ask them what they would prefer. Not all elders like to have land acknowledgements and the treaties because the treaties were painful for them. Not all people that are at these events want to be acknowledged in a particular way, so I always ask. Isn't that what we're supposed to do? We're supposed to ask. They are self-determining, independent nations.

You can have all the land acknowledgements that you want – and I firmly believe that that's an important part of what we do – but why don't we ask, especially if an elder is there? That's the elder's prerogative to do that land acknowledgement, not mine, and if they do that, then I will acknowledge based on having spoken to that elder and finding out how they would like me to acknowledge their people because I'm on their land.

This is a shared opportunity. We share the land, we share relationships, we build families together right across this beautiful province and across the nation, and we can build prosperity together.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the minister for your comments on Bill 14. It's great to see the ministers up and speaking to the bill. I have a couple of questions for clarity, and you may not be able to answer them now, maybe during Committee of the Whole or as we move forward through the debate. I was just looking at the definition of indigenous groups in the act. For those following along, page 3, section 3, subsection (1), under the definition it says:

3(1) For greater certainty, for the purposes of this Act, "indigenous groups" means and then it goes

- (a) Indian bands as defined by the Indian Act . . .
- (b) Metis settlements established by the Metis Settlements Act,
- (c) Metis groups as defined by the regulations, and then under (d) it says:

- other entities approved by the Minister by order as falling within the mandate of the Corporation, and
- (e) entities that are fully owned by the entities identified in clause ...

I guess my question is that when we're looking at definitions of indigenous groups, that this act is defining, if we could get clarity from the government as to how you would then say that there are other abilities of identifying indigenous groups outside of what would typically be in the Indian Act and the Metis Settlements Act, therefore outside of First Nations communities and Métis people. When I see "other entities," I get a little concerned about how you're starting to define "other entities" and how that goes outside of the typical definition of a First Nations person and a Métis person. My understanding is that this is about supporting indigenous communities, First Nations and Métis people, to be able to have opportunities within corporations. So to have an opportunity for the minister to redefine the definition of what a First Nations person is and what a Métis person is for the guise of falling under a mandate of a corporation – I guess I'm just a little concerned that this is creating maybe a potential loophole to not necessarily have indigenous people represented in these corporations.

Again, I recognize that may not be something you can answer right now. In Committee of the Whole I have no problem bringing it up again. But if you have the opportunity to respond, that would be great.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I will answer it a little bit more fully later, but, just to give you some examples, not all bands are recognized. There's nonstatus as well, especially if we are looking at some – there are quite a few people that have lost their status and may be trying to work back into these corporations. We just want to make sure that all of those opportunities – we don't want to miss out on people, especially for women. We have a lot of nonstatus women that have lost humongous opportunities as a result of many issues. We are trying to open those doors as much as possible. That's part of the answer, but we'll get more for you.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members on 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just to elaborate on the minister's comments, there are also provisions there so that we can make sure that the groups that are currently doing the business within the First Nation communities that are owned by those communities in part or in whole can participate. My understanding, when I read this act, is that there is no intention to redefine indigenous groups wholly. It is really for the purposes of this act so it can fulfill its mandate and make sure that those guarantees of funds and backing – that's its purpose – can be used by the business groups of the First Nation communities that are owned by those communities. If we didn't have this provision, we'd have a real tough time making sure that they do business because it's through these business corporations that they participate in our economy. So it's of utmost importance, the way that I read it, that we keep these clauses in there and we allow flexibility so that the minister and the board can make what they need happen so that those loan guarantees can be used fruitfully.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes. I just wanted to add that in order to gain and garner securities and to leverage those dollars, to the point of that, we have to make sure that the bands who are actually already in businesses with other corporations that may not be First Nations businesses can leverage dollars with securities. That's been a huge barrier to them being able to get equity. That's part of the reason that that's in there.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Anyone else under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to Bill 14 in second reading? The hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This UCP government is proud to be working with indigenous leaders on the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation. It's about time that the Alberta government takes concrete steps to improve the well-being of indigenous Albertans and consult with indigenous people on a regular basis. This UCP government will work hand in hand with indigenous groups to restore equity and opportunity to the indigenous Albertans and the thousands of communities they live in. Our UCP government is dedicated to partnering with Alberta's indigenous communities in building economic and social well-being.

The Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation allocates $1 billion in loan guarantees to support aboriginal co-ownership and financial participation in major resource development because it is a moral obligation to help our First Nations benefit from the resources that lie beneath the ground that their ancestors inhabited thousands of years ago. We as a government are looking forward to this partnership. Madam Speaker, let me assure this Chamber and all Albertans that clearing up our balance sheet and partnering with indigenous groups will be a huge step in the right direction for Alberta and essential to the oil and gas industry.

This UCP government was pleased to host eight engagement sessions between July 10 and August 8, with engagement from almost 200 participants. Developing this plan is just the first step in rebuilding a relationship between the government of Alberta and indigenous groups throughout the province. The ability of indigenous groups to provide adequate security to financial lenders is a significant barrier in their ability to access capital and the capacity to develop or invest in major resource projects. It varies widely, greatly across indigenous communities. The Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation will bridge the gap between indigenous groups wanting to be commercial partners in the natural resource sector. This UCP government will work out the challenges between Alberta's energy sector and indigenous stakeholders to ensure everyone benefits from Alberta's energy potential. All stakeholders are being given an equal opportunity to voice their opinions, concerns, and questions. In addition to almost 200 indigenous, business, and financial leaders, corporate participants from major energy groups such as Syncrude, Suncor, ATCO, and EPCOR also joined the engagement sessions.

Alberta is a land of opportunity. This UCP government is looking forward to fulfilling that promise and building an Alberta for everyone, including indigenous communities. We are excited to be working with coalition representatives from Eagle Spirit Energy, First Nations Major Projects Coalition, Project Reconciliation, Iron Coalition, Western Indigenous Pipeline Group, and Fort McKay Mikisew Cree tank farm project. All of these groups have offered extremely valuable insight during our engagement sessions and will continue to be valued partners in the coming years.

Generating economic growth for indigenous communities gives more opportunity to buy into energy projects that can provide thousands of new, well-paying jobs to indigenous workers. Madam Speaker, this is about developing a safer future for indigenous communities. Engaging indigenous Albertans into our future while limiting intrusive laws and rules and regulations is important to this government.

All Albertans deserve to be a part of shaping the future of this province and sharing in its prosperity. We recognize the structural challenges that many indigenous communities face, and this UCP government is committed to help alleviate some of the challenges with the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation. Madam Speaker, while there is still a lot more work to be done, I am happy to stand with all members of this Chamber to help bring indigenous people into this province's economic engine and continue working together with them for years to come.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for his comments. One of the lines he used early on that struck me was about the moral obligation we have, and I was wondering if I could ask the member to expand a bit with some context on that moral obligation and the moral case that we have for this bill, for the dignity of work in these First Nation communities. It's really important for individuals to have work. It's through work that many people find so much purpose and direction in their lives.

I'm going to quote from Laborem Exercens by Pope John Paul II to expand on this point. It's applicable to everyone, and many of the First Nation communities I spoke with often brought up the dignity of work and their desire for it. It goes as follows:

And yet, in spite of all this toil – perhaps, in a sense, because of it – work is a good thing for man. Even though it bears the mark of a bonum arduum [or difficult joy], in the terminology of Saint Thomas, this does not take away the fact that, as such, it is a good thing for man. It is not only good in the sense that it is useful or something to enjoy; it is also good as being something worthy, that is to say, something that corresponds to man's dignity, that expresses this dignity and increases it. If one wishes to define more clearly the ethical meaning of work, it is this truth that one must particularly keep in mind. Work is a good thing for man – a good thing for his humanity – because through work man not only transforms nature, adapting it to his own needs, but he also achieves fulfilment as a human being and indeed, in a sense, becomes “more [of] a human being.”

This quote identifies for me and I think is very informative for this Chamber how the work that is lacking in these communities and the moral obligation we have to participate in providing that gives direction to an individual and also to a family. It ties an individual and family to a community, to a plot of land, the land that these First Nation communities are so proud to defend as being the first inhabitants and having that territorial responsibility of sustainably developing it, as the member mentioned.

I could also go on, quoting Martin Luther King and others to the same effect, on how all labour uplifts humanity and has dignity and is important and thus should be undertaken with painstaking excellence. I find this theme being repeated over and over again by all members, on both sides of the House: the importance of work and the importance of bringing dignity to individuals. I could just as easily quote from many of our friends on the opposite side of the aisle, who support socialist mantras, who see the importance of work.

From our perspective on this bill, could the member comment on how work brings dignity to these communities so that they can be uplifted and how work gives them a hand up instead of a handout?

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Guthrie: Well, I think you've actually said it all there. You answered the question pretty much right after, which, you know, I certainly do appreciate. One of the things maybe to speak to is that from the capital side I think there are so many opportunities out there for indigenous people, and there are great ideas. There's so much work that goes into starting a business. Just from taking the idea, you move that along, you come up with your business plan, and you do the pro forma. This doesn't just take months of planning; this can take years of planning. Then it comes to having and obtaining the capital to get into business and to finding investors and securing loans. That's probably one of the biggest hurdles in getting into business, and I think that it can be very discouraging when people have these ideas and they're unable to move them forward.

I know, for myself, I got a tremendous amount of satisfaction from being in business, farming and ranching as well as owning a franchise business, and I know the work that goes into both of those jobs. I know farming and ranching. I was in east-central Alberta riding around in my four-wheeler and moving cattle, and there were tent rings and firepits out in the hills. When I was moving cattle and I was using this four-wheeler, I often thought about the people that used to come to this area. This was a hunting . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to second reading of Bill 14? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 14. Just to clarify, I will be supporting this bill. I do think that any economic opportunities are definitely beneficial. I think that as I start, though, I should recognize and self-identify that I am a Métis person. I think it would be a little bit disingenuous for me not to stand to speak in support of the indigenous communities and the potential for this and talk in response to some of the stories.

Of course, growing up, coming from or living in the Crownsnest Pass and then on Vancouver Island for a while, our family didn't really talk about our history. I only recently found out, well, in my early twenties, that I was actually Métis and that I have Mohawk in my family heritage. I think part of that is because of the fact that on my father's side, when he was growing up, it was easier to not identify as Métis, to not recognize our history because, as with many Métis people, visually I can go through life looking very Caucasian, my father as well, so it was much easier for him to live in a world where he looked more Caucasian than First Nations.

In saying that, it wasn't a conversation. My heritage and my background and my experiences growing up were not in the traditional sense of learning about my heritage and my Mohawk history. It wasn't until I became a social worker and understood that it was important to me and started working at Métis Child and Family Services and working within Children's Services with First Nations groups, specifically Bigstone Cree Nation and a couple of different First Nations communities, that I really became confident in wanting to get to know my family history better.

In saying that, I appreciate all the conversations that I'm hearing from both sides of the House in regard to: how are we supporting and working with our brothers and sisters in our First Nations and Métis communities? There are struggles, and I think, you know, we all acknowledge that historically we could have done better. I believe that from my own personal experience, trying to identify myself and learn about who I am as an individual based on my family history. I recognize the struggle that many people within the First Nations and Métis community have around identifying who they are because of the lack of culture and the loss of our history. I think that any opportunities that governments can do and have around recognizing that there have been failures in the past and how we can move forward to work together are extremely important.

In saying that, what I would like to talk about a little bit, when you're looking at the development of these corporations and these boards, is recognizing that if we're going to be truthful and we're going to work on reconciliation and we're going to move forward and ensure that this is truly about indigenous opportunities and that this is about indigenous opportunities and corporations, then the people that are going to be sitting on this board, that are going to be working with the minister actually represent First Nations and Métis people, that the representation on those boards is by Métis and First Nation individuals.

I recognize again: I self-identify. I am not a registered Métis person because of the fact that we don't have the ability to do the history and do the genogram that I need to do to be able to be registered. So that may be a question that comes up as well around representation on boards and how that works. But, in saying that, if this is truly about making sure that indigenous communities have opportunities, then it makes sense that people that sit on those boards are indigenous people. You know, again, as we talk about symbolism, it can't just be a symbol to say that we've created this board to work with the minister to create these opportunities. Our First Nations people need to be on it.

What I also want to talk about is that I've heard a lot about the struggles within the First Nations and Métis community. Again, coming from Children's Services, I recognize many of the dynamics that the culture and the community experience, but I also want to recognize that the indigenous community is extremely strong. They are entrepreneurs in their own way, and there have been many, many positive things come within the First Nations and Métis community, and it's not just about the culture. The culture is amazing. I mean, I feel at home the most when I'm with people within the Métis community, for sure. But I also want to talk about the fact that there have been investment funds created in the past to provide capital to indigenous communities that specifically work with the forestry industry, that specifically work with the service industry, with the financial sectors, with the agricultural industry. We have people who work in the trapping industry and the hunting industry. We have opportunities with people that are business owners, that are working in nonprofit organizations, that are leaders within the community.

I believe that as we talk about community and we talk about the First Nations community, the indigenous community, the Métis community, we also recognize that there are self-drivers, that there are many people who have done and are doing amazing things within the economic world, within the First Nations communities. You know, Bigstone Cree Nation is a very, very well-established community that does amazing things with their community supports, their social supports, and their economic benefits. We see that within Siksika. There are many other First Nations communities in Alberta that are extremely successful and are also addressing the socioeconomic impact issues within their community.

I just wanted to say that, again, I am a strong believer in any opportunities that we can look at. Working with the community is a benefit. Anything that we can do to strengthen the economy of Alberta is a benefit, so I will be supporting this bill, but I just wanted to make sure that it was acknowledged that I think I am the only Métis person in the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: It will be an interesting research project for the Speaker later.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to be able to stand and speak to Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act, the creation of that corporation. Partners in prosperity is the way that we've tried to look at this. As I thought about that phrase, "partners in prosperity," I had to go back to understand and think about my experiences with my indigenous friends.

My first experience that I'd like to tell you about was decades ago. When I first started out in my career, I actually started out as a teacher. The first teaching opportunity and position I received was from a school called Little Pony Private Institute. This was in Fort Macleod. My teaching responsibility was to teach all of the subjects in grades 9, 10, and 11, so bright-eyed and bushy-tailed I got at this teaching assignment. Who we were teaching were the kids that were either kicked off the reserve, the Blood reserve, or the kids that there was just no place for within the system. So there were a lot of challenges. I remember one time being completely overwhelmed by the amount of preparation I had to do for all of the different subjects in all the different grades and going to my principal and talking to him. He was the kind of person that really got it. He really understood what we were trying to accomplish in this school. As he spoke to me, he said: "Look, it doesn't matter who you blame. It matters where you're going. It matters where these kids are going to go. Whose fault is it that they got kicked off the reserve or out of the schools? Whose fault is it that they don't have a good family life? It doesn't matter. What matters is where we're going with this."

When we talk about partners in prosperity, I think about that experience and that conversation with him. But I also think about another experience when I was teaching. It was springtime, and a lot of the kids had decided that they weren't going to start coming to school. This was my first year teaching, and the principal said to me: you need to go out there and you need to round up the kids. So we got on the bus. We went out, and we found the first one, and as soon as we found the first one, they'd tattle on the other ones, and we'd be able to find the rest. There was one final guy that I needed to find, and they told me where he was. So I went and knocked on the door of the house, and the mom came and said: "Yup. Absolutely. You need to get that guy to school." She told me where his room was. I went back and I thought: you know, I'm going to scare this guy so he's serious about coming back to school. I knocked not too hard but pretty hard on that door, and the door fell in. This guy jumps up and he says: "Okay. You got me. I will come back to school." From that time on, they said that if you don't come to school, I'm going to actually come out and knock down the doors.

I experienced first-hand the living conditions that some of these First Nations have to live in. It was a real eye-opener for me as a young teacher, to see that they lived in one of the most prosperous countries in this world, yet they were still not partners in that prosperity. This was something that really concerned me at a young age, and I just thought: well, what is the solution to this?

Now, one of the things that I've been impressed with is that the last government took a lot of effort to be able to try to figure this out. But one thing that I wasn't impressed with was that they were not willing to finish the equation. If you cannot provide a vehicle or a tool for our First Nations brothers and sisters to be able to be partners in that prosperity, then you haven't finished the equation. We can talk about reconciliation. We can try to understand it. We can try to be able to move forward from the '60s scoop. But unless we provide them with a tool to be able to have a bright future, which is what we thought Alberta and Canada were all about, then we haven't finished the equation.

This is why I have to congratulate my friend and colleague the Minister of Indigenous Relations for the work that he has done on this bill and on this vehicle to be able to help create this partners-in-prosperity approach. As I sat down and talked with him and understood where he's trying to go with this, I really got on board. I really started to realize that, you know, this could actually be the finishing of that equation, that decades ago I questioned about: where is that equation going? I actually want to congratulate him on bringing this bill forward.

Now, another conversation I had, Madam Speaker, was with a friend of mine. I've lived in Cardston for 13 years. It used to actually be Cardston-Taber-Warner, and then, unfortunately, the boundaries got split and I lost that section or that portion of my riding, and it's now Cardston-Siksika. But for the four years prior to this, the Blood reserve, which is the largest reserve in Canada, was part of my riding.

I had a neighbour who was First Nations, and we had some fairly good conversations, usually over a barbecue and a steak, and we would sit down and chat. One of the things that he told me was a real barrier for him – he was very entrepreneurial, but one of the biggest barriers that he said he had struggled with growing up was that he had no property rights on the reserve. He had no ability to do what many of us do who start up small businesses, which is to take your property and use that as equity against a business. He had no ability to do that. He said that unfortunately this actually tied his hands behind his back to be able to start a business.

He actually did find an ability to do that, but his ability to start a business was going and working in a regular job and then trying to save up as much as he could. Finally, after a long time he was able to put a down payment on a business and buy a business. You know, I took my hat off to this guy. He was actually able to get over something that a lot of people on the reserve aren't. This issue of not being able to own property is a real barrier to our First Nations that are business oriented, that want to be able to get ahead through that vehicle.

This is a solution to that problem. Obviously, I am going to support this bill. I'm very much in support of this bill because it addresses one of the major problems that the people on First Nations reserves are facing, which is that they don't have their own property. The ability to have property, to be able to leverage that property in order to be able to start a business is something that many people on this side of the House have done. I know I've done it.

This is something that I am actually extremely excited about, being able to provide that opportunity. Not to own property, because this is something that is not on the table for our First Nations brothers and sisters, but what it does do is it provides them an opportunity to be able to share in that prosperity and be partners in it with a different kind of vehicle. We haven't solved the problem yet of private property ownership. I hope we do, because I think that that will actually provide more opportunities for them, but that isn't on the table. What is on the table is the ability to have this Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation, and I think that there are going to be some fantastic things that will come from that.

Now, one of the things that I was also very happy to see, Madam Speaker, was the consultation that took place. Because of what I've seen in the last four years in terms of consultation, I was pleased to see that the minister was willing to go out and not just talk to corporations but also talk to indigenous and Métis organizations and groups so that they could give him the kind of information that he needs to be able to make a really good bill and a good opportunity and vehicle.

He's been able to talk with Eagle Spirit energy, the First Nations Major Projects Coalition, Project Reconciliation, Iron Coalition, Western Indigenous Pipeline Group, and many, many more. He also was able to speak with Syncrude, Suncor, ATCO, EPCOR. In speaking with these organizations, they have been able to tap into lots of employment opportunities for First Nations in those areas. They are some of the largest employers of First Nations up in those areas, so it was actually a natural fit for them to talk to these companies.

I wanted to finish up what I started on, and that is the importance of finishing the equation. If we are going to help and make sure that there are opportunities for all people in this province, then we have got to provide those tools. We've got to provide those vehicles that will allow that prosperity for all sectors. Whoever you are, wherever you come from, whatever your past has been, we need to be able to provide them with those opportunities. This is a brilliant representation of being able to provide that type of a vehicle for a people that have really struggled. I've seen it first-hand. I've lived in Cardston, as I said, for 13 years, and I've watched some of the very difficult scenarios for many families on the Blood reserve.

So this is exciting. I look forward to being able to see how this rolls out. I look forward to seeing not just the corporation – “corporation” is a cold term – but the individual stories that are going to come from this, where this actually does help individuals and individual families to be able to reach those goals that they have.

With that, Madam Speaker, again, I am in support and hope that all members of the House will be in support of this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, any more speakers to the bill? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. We made some excellent progress here today. I've also just been quite moved, actually, by people from both sides of the aisle speaking in favour of this bill. I really do appreciate the steps that have been taken here and the really thoughtful commentary.

On behalf of the Minister of Indigenous Relations I'd like to close debate. I do believe that we have general consensus that will be in favour. I don't believe that a division will be required, but we'll see what happens here. Hopefully, everyone is in favour.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I would never guess what members of this Assembly would do.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: You did it.

Mr. Schweitzer: Madam Deputy Speaker, I think we've made some excellent progress here. I'd move to adjourn until 1:30 p.m.

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, October 9, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, this morning I had the absolute honour and pleasure to represent all members of the Assembly at a citizenship ceremony in the Federal Building just a couple of hours ago. Her Honour Lois Mitchell, the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, presided over the Canadian citizenship ceremony. It was my pleasure to welcome some of Edmonton's newest, in fact, some of Canada's newest citizens, and 31 of them have joined us in the gallery this afternoon. I invite you to rise and receive the welcome to your new life as Canadian citizens.

Thank you, hon. members.

Also visiting us today, guests of the Minister of Service Alberta: D'Arcy Donald, David Brown, Brad Mitchell, and Heather Coleman.

Guests of the Minister of Health here for Catholic health week are Cliff Enfield, Conny Avila, Eleanor Stewart, Glenda Coleman-Miller, Leah Janzen, MaryAnn Beer, Shelly Decker, and Candice Keddie. Welcome. Hon. members, please welcome them to the Assembly.

Before we continue with the rest of the Routine today, I just would like to point out that all members received copies of amendments to the standing orders that were approved by the Assembly yesterday, October 8, 2019. They can be found on green printed paper, placed on the members' desks for ease. We will be printing new and refreshed standing orders at a later date, when you will receive the entire package.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein is rising to make a statement.

Addiction Treatment

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's yet to be a jurisdiction in Canada that has succeeded in developing a reliable addiction recovery continuum. Imagine making the decision to enter recovery, reaching out for help, and having nobody there to help you. The detox mats are full, the local treatment centres have a three-month waiting list, and there are no treatment beds for teens nor supports for family.

In his book The Selfish Brain psychiatrist Dr. Robert L. DuPont states that there are five steps to recovery: identification, intervention, treatment, aftercare, and then a life of recovery. We must pursue a path forward that connects all of these steps in a seamless way so that we make sure that nobody falls through the cracks.

So many of us have been touched by addiction. Too many times I've heard stories from families who have lost loved ones because treatment and recovery options just weren't available. I want to be part of a government that's going to fix this so that I can hear from families celebrating getting their loved ones back because of recovery.

Addiction is a disease like no other, and when someone is struggling with a disease, there is a moral obligation to help them seek treatment. I am proud that our Premier and this government are committed to making recovery more accessible across this province. We have an obligation as legislators and as human beings to look out for our most vulnerable and to support them in their times of struggle. I fully intend on continuing to support this government in its efforts to address the pressing issue of addiction, and I encourage all of my colleagues to do the same. Recovery works; recovery is possible. I have seen it, and I'm so glad our government will be there for those who need it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows would like to make a statement.

Yom Kippur

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night at sunset Jewish Albertans began their observance of Yom Kippur, the holiest day in the Jewish calendar and the conclusion of the High Holy Days. Yom Kippur, or the Day of Atonement, is a solemn time for reflection on one's own life over the past year, examination of personal shortcomings, and the seeking of forgiveness. According to tradition this is the time when God will seal the inscription of each person's fate for the coming year in the Book of Life. Many of our Jewish friends, neighbours, colleagues, and relatives will observe Yom Kippur through fasting and refraining from work and worldly tasks. Many will spend much of today in synagogue and participate in intensive prayer.

On behalf of the NDP Official Opposition I wish all Jewish people in Alberta and around the world an easy and meaningful fast. [Remarks in Hebrew]. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Thanksgiving and Alberta Agriculture

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 14 Canadians in Alberta and across the country will celebrate Thanksgiving. This holiday is so much more than simply eating excessive amounts of great food with family and friends. Thanksgiving is about being thankful for all the blessings one has received throughout the year, whether those blessings are having a healthy family, a job, economic prosperity, another wedding anniversary. There are so many things to be thankful for.

One of the more important and often forgotten aspects of Thanksgiving is that we give thanks for a bountiful harvest and all the farmers that help produce it. From grain farmers to ranchers, all Alberta farmers play a crucially important role in providing meals for people through Canada and the world, not only for Thanksgiving but for everyday life as well.

Alberta has approximately 70,000 farmers that are actively farming 21 million hectares of land, which equates to approximately 31 per cent of Canada's total farmland. Alberta wheat farmers produced 10 million tonnes of wheat in 2018. This wheat found its way into the bread, turkey stuffing, and desserts shared by millions of Albertan and Canadian families. In addition to wheat, Alberta farmers produced 5.9 million tonnes of canola. While wheat and canola may be our primary grain products, Alberta is also responsible for producing large amounts of barley, oats, and corn. Alberta cattle ranchers were responsible for 41 per cent of Canada's total beef production, and Alberta hog farmers are responsible for 10 per cent of Canada's total pork production. In addition to beef and pork, Alberta is responsible for a significant portion of the chicken, turkey, sheep, and bison market.

Thanksgiving is a remarkable opportunity to catch up with family and friends and to take a break from politics to enjoy a meal in good spirits. So this year when you are gathered with your loved ones, sharing potatoes, gravy, turkey, ham, stuffing, and pie, remember to be thankful to all the Alberta farmers who made your Thanksgiving feast possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Technology Industry Programs

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Diversifying the economy needs commitment and a broad-based effort. Our government did that. That's why we created 3,000 tech spaces across Alberta in our 2018 budget. The data shows that that was the right thing to do. The University of Calgary established new programs in computer engineering as part of our effort. Already, 80 per cent of students in this brand new program have found work, and the graduates are highly desired in Calgary's digital sector. That is why it's a shame that this UCP government is looking at making cuts to postsecondary education, making tuition more expensive. Making it harder for Albertans to get the education they need will neither help Alberta's technology companies nor Albertans looking to find jobs in this sector.

But it seems like the UCP government doesn't want Albertans to work in the tech sector nor to grow this sector here in Alberta. In the summer this UCP government cancelled our artificial intelligence program and froze the investor tax credit and digital media tax credit without warning, which caused great uncertainty and made it harder for Alberta companies to attract investment. The government is quick to point to its 4 and a half billion dollar corporate giveaway, but the corporate tax does nothing, not one thing, for start-ups or companies looking to scale. The Premier is either wilfully ignorant or simply doesn't care. Thanks to this short-sighted decision by this UCP government, technology companies are now struggling to find the capital they need to grow, and investors are now looking elsewhere.

I'm calling on this government to unfreeze these tax credits immediately because that is what the business community is asking for and these tax credits are actually creating jobs and diversifying the economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Fire Prevention Week

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Starting Sunday and continuing until Saturday, Canada marks Fire Prevention Week. Fire kills eight people each week in Canada, with 73 per cent of those deaths coming from residential fires. Now, this is the 23rd year Canada will mark Fire Prevention Week, and this year's campaign is Not Every Hero Wears a Cape; Plan and Practice Your Escape!

The national fire prevention association hopes that this week will educate everyone about the small but important actions that they can do to help keep those around them safe. These include making sure every child can recognize two exits from each room, knowing how to open windows, and remembering to keep low to the ground if there's smoke in the air. In a typical home fire you may have as little as one to two minutes to escape your house, so I want to encourage all Albertans to take steps to make sure your whole family is prepared in the event of a worst-case scenario. At the very least, please remember to test your smoke alarms and carbon monoxide detector. The national fire prevention association has a number of resources available on its website to assist families who want to prepare their kids for a house fire situation. In addition, the government of Alberta's website provides a number of tips on how to prevent house fires and how to make sure your alarms are functional.

I also want to take this time to specifically thank Spruce Grove fire services and the Stony Plain fire department as well as the rest of our firefighters around the province for their daily acts of bravery and heroism.

I hope that this week is a great success and that the initiatives and ideas put forward by either the government of Alberta or local fire departments help Albertans to make their homes safer. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Decore would like to make a statement.

Friends of St. Michael's Society of Edmonton

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On October 1 I had the opportunity to attend the 2019 minister's seniors' service awards presentation at Government House, where I had the privilege of copresenting an award to the Friends of St. Michael's Society of Edmonton. These awards recognize the dedication and contributions of seniors who work to improve the lives of the people in their communities.

The Friends of St. Michael's Society of Edmonton is a charitable organization operating in Edmonton-Decore that primarily supports the work of St. Michael's Health Group, a long-term seniors' care organization. Members of the society volunteer in a variety of capacities. Many individuals spend time in long-term care facilities serving meals, assisting with transportation, and spending quality time with the residents. The energy and enthusiasm of the volunteers helps to build relationships and a sense of community for the residents, which is so important to their quality of life.

In addition to facilitating volunteer work at the long-term care centres, the Friends of St. Michael's Society also works tirelessly to fundraise through bingo nights and charitable casino events in order to purchase necessary items for long-term care residents. Equipment like ceiling lifts and slings is not always covered by social assistance programs, so they are provided to residents who need them at no charge, thanks to the work of the society. Additionally, funds raised by the Friends of St. Michael's are used to cover the costs of all community access and recreation activities for long-term care residents.

It has been my privilege to work and represent the incredible volunteers of the Friends of St. Michael's Society in my capacity as MLA for Edmonton-Decore, and I want to truly congratulate every individual member on a well-deserved award. Your work has touched the lives of so many seniors and their families, and it inspires others to become involved in their community. Thank you to all of them and, once again, congratulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Animal Rights Activists' Turkey Farm Protest

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm from cattle country, so it was a little startling to have our phones blow up over turkeys. Now, I realize that many in this House may not be particularly interested in turkeys, until this upcoming weekend anyway, and frankly the same can be said for most of the constituents that have been contacting my office. What they are interested in is farming, property rights, and the ability for law-abiding farmers to work in peace.

On Monday, September 2 approximately 60 protesters took it upon themselves to trespass onto a turkey farm near Fort Macleod with the express intention of disrupting work. These protesters trespassed onto the property and set up their demonstration in the barn which housed many of the birds. These protesters, when asked to leave, put forward three demands: one, release some of the turkeys to a sanctuary; two, media coverage of the barn's interior; and three, to walk away without charges.

This unlucky farmer called the police, and the trespassers called also, allegedly to keep the peace. In order to get the protesters to move on, the farmer allowed Global News into the barn as asked, gave five turkeys to the group, and allowed them to walk away in peace. The headline for this should be Ideological Extremists Occupy Rural Business and Hold Farmer Hostage until Demands Were Met, if you ask me.

My constituents have made it very clear in the past weeks that they feel this farmer was treated unfairly. They worry what they would do if put in a similar situation. They know they are not breaking any agricultural laws, but they are concerned that their particular livestock may be the target of these criminals' next attack.

It's high time that these trespassers face the full extent of the law. This farmer was singled out, besmirched, and humiliated despite the fact that Global News did not film one instance of animal cruelty as the protesters alleged. Since when do we allow groups to extort individuals in their own homes?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Community Foundation of Lethbridge Vital Signs Report

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the agriculture minister lobbed a personal insult at me during question period. He said that it was bad that I didn't attend a ribbon cutting for the new Cavendish potato processing facility, and it's true. At the same time, the Lethbridge community foundation launched their Vital Signs report, a series of indicators about economic, social, and environmental well-being. Given that I already knew about the hundreds of new jobs that were coming to Lethbridge because I was at the table when we funded and supported the city of Lethbridge to attract the Cavendish investment, I chose to support the staff and board of the community foundation by learning more about the annual Vital Signs report.

The Member for Lethbridge-East was not at the Vital Signs launch. Let me share what he didn't learn. He didn't learn that 27,000 people in southwest Alberta have access to public transportation now for the first time due to the highway 3 connector or that 58 people a week attend our Parkrun at Henderson Lake, organized by Jim and Ellen Carter, or that 68 people per day on average are served at the homeless shelter and hundreds more facts and figures that describe our region. The Member for Lethbridge-East didn't get to recognize executive director Charleen Davidson or Rob Dowell, the superhero data nerd behind Vital Signs, or board member Ronda Reach and the Vital Signs steering committee. He didn't get to talk to his own Lethbridge-East constituents on the board, like Renee Richards.

Mr. Speaker, when the minister of agriculture lobs personal attacks at me for the apparent crime of learning more about Lethbridge, it says more about him than it does about me. The Member for Lethbridge-East may want to ask his colleagues to lay off. I know that he actually wants to focus on common priorities, and I also know that he, too, like me, can't be everywhere either.

People in Lethbridge have been confused when UCP members and the Premier himself have come to town to hurl insults at the city, the police chief, progressive voters, the university, and me personally. It's just not how we do things, and it's not how we will continue to improve Lethbridge's vital signs.

Canadian Finals Rodeo

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, this October the annual Canadian Finals Rodeo, most commonly known as the CFR, will be held in Red Deer, Alberta. It is widely acknowledged as one of the world's most prestigious rodeos, showcasing the very best in the sport that the world has to offer. From barrel racing and bull riding to steer wrestling and saddle bronc, the competition is sure to be tough this year. The CFR brings with it the end of the Canadian rodeo season, determining this year's Canadian champions in each of the rodeo sports.

Thousands of people from across Canada will attend to watch this year's competition, with the most important viewers being the young kids who watch with wide eyes and big dreams, hoping one day that they could be representing their small town in the arena. At every small-town rodeo, I see children growing up surrounded by the culture of community spirit and strong work ethic that embodies what it means to be an Albertan. As these children age, they move on from mutton busting to high school rodeo, becoming involved in an environment that fosters more than just rodeo but exemplary conduct and sportsmanship. Opportunities for scholarships emerge as dedication and skill are proved.

This year we had many young Albertans head down to Wyoming in July for the 2019 National High School Finals Rodeo, a defining milestone in one's rodeo career. A huge congratulations to all of those who made our province so proud while representing us on an international stage.

The next step in a rodeo career is to make it onto a college rodeo team and then to pro rodeo. Each year a select handful of Albertans qualify for the CFR after years of hard work and dedication. To our local cowboys and cowgirls who will represent us at the CFR in Red Deer: my colleagues and I want to wish you all the very best of luck.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that the Premier's $4.5 billion corporate handout is not growing the economy, and it's not growing jobs. But it has blown a massive hole in the budget, and now the Premier is breaking countless promises. Today we're going to talk about a whopper. The Premier promised to get tough on rural crime, but instead he's forcing rural Albertans to either pay new taxes or accept cuts to policing. Why is the Premier breaking his promises just to fund money to wealthy corporations?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know we're on the right track when the NDP has to resort to the old tactics of deception, of fear and smear. First of all, there is no $4.5 billion corporate tax cut. This year the revenue offset will be $100 million. But there was a $2.3 billion loss in revenue from businesses after the NDP raised those taxes. On the question of rural crime, this government will be investing more, not less, in rural crime to fight the wave of property crime that began under NDP mismanagement.

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, the Premier knows full well that the budget numbers were the same before the election as they were after, but what has changed are the lines he is feeding to Albertans. He ran on cutting taxes for Albertans, but what he's actually doing is forcing municipalities to raise taxes for him. He's robbing Peter to pay Paul's shareholders. Why do only CEOs and shareholders get the payoff while the rest of Albertans have to pay for the Premier's broken promises?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, now we can see on full display the gross fiscal incompetence of the NDP. When she says that the budget numbers were the same before and after the election: complete rubbish. In fact, as will become evident in the budget presented two weeks from now, the NDP tried to deceive the Alberta public by presenting completely fake budget numbers, which was the basis of their platform. In fact, revenues are dramatically down. Why? Because of the NDP recession, driven in part by their higher taxes on everything.

Ms Notley: Well, I'm disappointed that the Premier is actually throwing public officials who worked on the annual report that was released on a Friday – I do appreciate that the Premier didn't want to have Albertans see it. It was put together by public officials and very much confirmed everything that Albertans were presented by us before the budget, unlike the Premier, who has simply broken promises. He is now asking municipalities to download taxes onto the very people he promised to cut taxes for. Why, Mr. Speaker? Why?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, within days of the last election I sat down for my first transition briefing with senior public servants, including those from Treasury Board and Finance. They presented to me, in cold hard numbers, how far off the NDP had been in its irresponsible and misleading fiscal projections. They also, interestingly, presented to me the fact that their projected revenue shortfall from the job-creation tax cut was actually less than what we had estimated in our platform. In other words, we were erring on the side of caution. The NDP was trying to wish its way out of the deficit.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for her second set of questions.

Ms Notley: Well, I will simply refer the Premier to the fiscal annual report that was released while they were in government, on a Friday at the end of a day deep in June, that actually confirms the numbers we used.

Municipal Funding Rural Police Service Funding

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier also tried to claim that all municipalities were onside and they were all part of Team Alberta. The fact is that there are two teams: your corporate friends and everyone else. Wetaskiwin, Barrhead, Sundre, Foothills county all say that what your government is doing is forcing them to raise taxes. Why won't you tell the truth and admit that they're not onside because you're breaking the very promises you made in the election?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, public servants presented me with an objective analysis of the state of the province's finances within days of the last election, and they demonstrated that the province's fiscal situation had deteriorated by some $6 billion over the fourth year of this mandate from what the NDP ran on, what they presented to Albertans in their third-quarter update. A $6 billion gap: that's 15 per cent of the provincial budget.

On the question of taxes, it's the NDP that raised taxes on incomes, on everything, on energy, on businesses. It's the NDP that took money out of Albertans' pockets. We're putting . . .

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, let's talk about the election. During the election the Premier promised rural Albertans that he would fix rural crime, but when he had the chance, his number one action wasn't more police in communities. No. It was a $4.5 billion handout to rich corporations. The county of Wetaskiwin has said that they have immense concern that policing will no longer be guaranteed and that costs to residents will go up significantly in taxes. Why did this Premier put corporate handouts ahead of funding for rural police?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, first of all, $4.5 billion: not true. Secondly, support for rural police will be going up, not down. Thirdly, the leader of the NDP mentions the last election. I recall that was an election in which they accused our party and even the Minister of Municipal Affairs of associating with white supremacists. Now we have her friend and ally Justin Trudeau having been demonstrated to have a penchant for racial mockery through the practice of blackface, and she has yet to condemn the racial insensitivity of the Prime Minister, which Liberal MPs now say is embraced by the black community. I challenge her to denounce it today.

Ms Notley: Well, I'm going to focus on Wetaskiwin, Mr. Speaker. The county of Wetaskiwin took leadership when they hired an enhanced RCMP officer, a crime analyst, and three more peace officers, all of whom increased public safety in that part of rural Alberta. Now they're warning that the crime-fighting plan they had in place will almost certainly be diminished – their words – and overall policing will significantly decrease under the UCP plan, which is in writing, which they have given, which they have shared with people and the Premier will not acknowledge. Why is the Premier breaking promises to rural Albertans?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we know who broke promises to rural Albertans: the NDP, that hammered rural Alberta, which is why they lost every single rural seat in this province. We will be enhancing, not reducing, support for criminal justice in rural Alberta. But why did she evade that essential question? Why did she attack the Minister of Municipal Affairs for being a white supremacist in the last campaign? Her candidate did that, and now we've got her ally Justin Trudeau, who has insulted the office of Prime Minister, in blackface. Why can't she stand up and denounce the racial mockery of her ally Justin Trudeau?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Notley: I have one more question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: I had one more question, the second supplemental.

The Speaker: No. You've already asked six questions total.

Ms Notley: My apologies if that's the case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Rural Police Service Funding

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting to note that one of the things the UCP campaigned on is that they would introduce no new taxes, but that's essentially what they're doing. That's not me speaking but, rather, the CAO of Barrhead county in reference to the Minister of Justice planning to download policing costs onto rural municipalities, a decision that will cost the county nearly $800,000 annually. To the minister: why won't you stand in this House and admit that you're cutting police funding for places like Barrhead county?

Mr. Schweitzer: Because we're not, Mr. Speaker. It's pretty simple. We are not cutting funding for rural policing. We are not. Can I say this one more time in this Legislature? We are increasing funding for policing. We are making sure that we consult with rural municipalities about police costing. We committed to doing that in the last campaign. We've also clearly stated, going back to the AUMA, a crowd of 1,000 people, to make sure that any additional dollars generated through police costing would go right back into more boots on the ground. Why is the NDP against 500 police officers?

Ms Ganley: The CAO of Barrhead county went further and agreed with what we've been saying for weeks. She said, quote, here we would be putting money in with no value add. That's right. Taxes go up, and police services don't improve. What is improving in this province? The bank accounts of big corporations benefiting from the Premier's $4.5 billion giveaway. To the minister: is Barrhead county lying, or will you just admit that you've handcuffed Barrhead county and are forcing them to hike taxes?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I have travelled up to Fairview, I've been to Drayton Valley, I've been to Athabasca, and we have a rural crime crisis on our hands right now in the province of Alberta. The previous minister was absent from rural Alberta. She had to be just dragged to actually respond to rural crime. This Legislature was full of people time after time after time bringing forward their concerns. Right now in Alberta people have stopped calling. NDP justice: no justice for rural Alberta.

Ms Ganley: The question was whether the counties are lying or the minister is.

The CAO of Barrhead county told her council that the minister's planned cuts to rural policing would increase rural crime response times, and it should be noted that this minister and his UCP colleagues already voted against our government's rural crime strategy not once but twice. Now, as big corporations count the dollars they've been handed by this government, I really have to ask the minister: shouldn't you be more concerned about the safety of the very people that put you in that office?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I've met with over 1,000 Albertans in the last month talking about this exact issue of rural crime. We received over 3,000 submissions to our online survey and paper surveys at these town halls. This is the number one priority of my office, to make sure all Albertans feel safe, in particular rural Albertans right now, who do not feel safe. That's the legacy of the NDP. The legacy of that member as Justice minister is rural Alberta not feeling safe. We're doing everything we can to implement our strategy to tackle rural crime. We're going to make sure we get that done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is rising with a question.

Municipal Funding

Member Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Municipal leaders that attended the AUMA convention are back in their local communities and reporting that the government intends to cut municipal funding by 15 per cent or more. The mayors of both Carstairs and Didsbury have confirmed these cuts in their local papers just this week. In Didsbury they said that the cuts will come to funding for FCSS, the capital budget, even library funding. To the Premier: can you at least spare FCSS from bearing the brunt of covering your $4.5 billion in corporate handouts?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has risen.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government will be very proud to deliver a budget on October 24 that will set the record straight, that will clean the mess up that we've inherited from the previous government, and that will respect taxpayers' dollars in this province. The previous government left a fiscal mess. They left us on track for a hundred billion dollars of accumulated debt. That's unacceptable to Albertans, and it's unacceptable to this government.

Member Ceci: You know, the Finance minister forgets that our fiscal management led to the Alberta child tax benefit, which dropped child poverty in this province 50 per cent, or by 40,000. You talk to those 40,000 children.

Now, these municipalities are concerned about the reduction in funding, and it seems all but certain that many will turn to property taxes to maintain services. To the Premier. You promised you wouldn't raise taxes. Why won't you admit here today that you're forcing municipal leaders to do your dirty work?

Mr. Kenney: We just heard the worst Finance minister in Alberta history tell us what his fiscal plan did. I'll tell you what his fiscal plan did. It raised taxes on everything. It raised taxes on energy through the carbon tax, on employers, on incomes, on everything. It quadrupled the province's debt. It had us on track for a hundred billion dollars in debt. It went through five credit downgrades, and it drove us into the longest and deepest recession in modern Alberta history and a jobs crisis. Mr. Speaker, he'll never be able to get away from that record.

Member Ceci: You know, my record includes funding major capital projects like the green line, increasing affordable child care in this province, and supporting municipalities.

This Premier is already shorting municipalities. The town of Bashaw has abandoned plans for a new wheelchair area in their local rink and is considering cuts due to their MSI reduction. One councillor said that he really wished that the province had told him about the cuts earlier. To the Premier: is this the type of partnership you crowed so much about yesterday?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, you know, it's curious to hear the failed Finance minister talking about property tax increases given that he voted for every single property tax increase that came before Calgary city council when he was a councillor. This member has never met a tax hike he doesn't love.

Energy War Room

Mr. Neudorf: For over a decade our energy industry has been targeted by organizations who are trying to land-lock Alberta's natural resources. They continue to campaign against our world-class energy sector and the men and women who are proud of the work they do in this industry. These Albertans, whose livelihoods are the subject of smears like the tar sands campaign or labelled that they work for dirty oil, are tired of these baseless attacks, and so am I. We need a way to ensure that mistruths are countered by facts and that the real stories of a responsible industry are told and promoted.

To the Minister of Energy: can she tell us how this will be accomplished?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy is rising.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we have taken the important first steps of launching and creating the Canadian energy centre, a corporation with the mandate to fight for our energy sector and to fulfill our commitment to Albertans to set up an energy war room and to take a much more assertive approach to defending our energy sector and protecting the value of our natural resources. I'm looking forward to the official launch of the Canadian energy centre as it gets up and running. The economic future of our province depends upon it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's and Canada's future and economic prosperity are at stake and given that Albertans want and need a voice that will separate fact from fiction to tell the truth about Alberta's energy industry, to the minister: can she tell us what the core function of the Canadian energy centre will be?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian energy centre will defend our energy sector. It will collaborate with industry, academics, indigenous peoples, and others and will be a leading and authoritative voice on Alberta's energy resources. It will focus on improving the perceptions about our oil and gas industry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta has a world-class reputation when it comes to environmental, labour, and human rights standards and that we are immensely proud of our industry and workers, how can the minister reassure Albertans that the government will succeed in highlighting these important facts, that are consistently being misrepresented?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian energy centre has employed Tom Olsen, a long-time Alberta journalist and former legislative bureau chief, as its managing director. There will be three units. A rapid response unit will be responsible for issuing swift responses to misinformation. An energy literacy unit will create original content and elevate the general understanding of our energy sector. Finally, a data and research unit will be in charge of centralizing and analyzing data to reinforce this story for investors, researchers, and policy-makers.

Commercial Driver Training and Testing Standards

Member Loyola: In April 2018 an inexperienced driver drove a truck through a stop sign and struck the bus carrying the Humboldt Broncos hockey team, killing 16 people and injuring 13 more. The previous Alberta government took steps to ensure that all truck drivers have enough training to operate safely. It's outrageous that this government has now removed these safety standards and allowed undertrained rookie truck drivers back on Alberta's highways. How does the Minister of Transportation sleep at night knowing he has put so many Albertans at risk?

Mr. McIver: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, let me express my condolences to the victims of the Humboldt tragedy and then correct the record. The hon. member is wrong in what he just said. They didn't take steps. They planned to put a driver testing change in place, and then they crippled the government's ability to actually deliver it by having the number of driver examiners available to do that cut in half on March 1. The same day that they announced that, they crippled the government's ability to deliver that new standard. We're busy cleaning up the mess.

Member Loyola: It sounds like the minister is not listening, but perhaps he'll listen to Shelby Hunter of St. Albert, who lost her brother Logan in the crash. She said: it breaks my heart to know how many people's lives are at risk on these roads. Or to Tom Straschnitzki of Airdrie, whose son Ryan was seriously injured. He wrote, quote, come visit all 29 of us and explain why you would do this; hope it never happens to any of their kids or spouses or relatives. Minister, will you meet with these grieving Albertans, look them in the eye, and explain why you're willing to risk another tragedy like the one that they've already endured?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I spoke to Mr. Boulet from Lethbridge and had a nice chat with him, and I would talk to any other family members that wanted to. What I would tell them is that we are going to keep and raise the standards on driving. What the NDP government claims they did, they actually didn't do. They said that they would do it, and then on March 1 they cut the number of driver examiners available in half so that the new standards that they are bragging about couldn't be delivered. We will deliver those standards as soon as we clean up the mess that makes it impossible, left behind by the previous NDP government.

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, I want to try this again out of respect for the families. Given that Toby Boulet of Lethbridge, whose son Logan died in the crash, said that the minister's decision is wrong and that, quote, economics have gotten in the way of lives, to the minister: is that really what's going on here? Is your government so in the pocket of big corporations that you're willing to risk another Humboldt tragedy?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the families involved with the Humboldt tragedy: our government's record will be better than the previous government's. It won't be hard to do, but we're going to work hard at it. The new, tougher MELT standards will be put in place. We have been busy hiring the trainers and the examiners so that we can do that. They left us in a heck of a hole, but we're going to dig out, and out of respect for all Albertans but especially for the victims of the Humboldt tragedy, whether they're from Alberta or another place, we will get it done. The previous government did not, full stop.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Vegreville Century Park Supportive Living Facility

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Health minister was asked if he's okay with 50 female employees being fired from their jobs at a long-term care facility in Vegreville. His response was that these women could reapply for their jobs, providing they take a pay cut of up to $10 an hour. To the minister responsible for the status of women. One of your key responsibilities is to narrow the gender pay gap. Are you okay with these hard-working women being paid less?

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much for the question. I would have to respond in this way. The importance right now in this province in terms of getting women back to work, if that's the question you're actually asking me, is going to be fulfilled by many different things. I actually want to highlight the Minister of Advanced Education, who is looking right now to the trades, where there is a humongous amount of opportunity. Did you know that we have 20,000 folks that are going to be retiring in the next little while? What a massive opportunity for women to really break into this field and be at the table. We're really excited about that. Thank you to him and also to the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for leading . . .

Member Irwin: Given that these women were caring for our seniors in less than ideal working conditions and given that they were awaiting the outcome of negotiations on a new contract before being suddenly kicked to the curb and given that this government handed over a $4.5 billion gift to corporations, to the minister: do you really value corporate CEOs over hard-working front-line female health care workers?

Mrs. Aheer: Well, this is a great question, and I'll tell you what I do value. I value the fact that we have an immense opportunity to make sure that women are in the workforce in high-paying jobs. One of the things that we won't do is cut 180,000 jobs from the province because we attack the sector where 24 per cent of the people who work in that sector are women. In fact, many of those high-paying jobs are now not in existence as a result of the previous government's policies on oil and gas.

Member Irwin: Given that the MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, a woman, has been silent in this House about 53 of her constituents being fired and given that while this government's corporate handout isn't creating jobs and now in Vegreville jobs for those female front-line workers are actually being lost, to the minister of status of women: did you not bring this up at cabinet, or did none of these dudes listen to you?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'd like to reiterate that I find it rich coming from a government, a previous government that attacked an industry where a massive number of incredible women were at the cutting edge of high-paying jobs, contributing to their families, and making sure that they were able to participate in such a meaningful way. On top of that, our government has already brought forward policies to make sure that those women are brought into industries where those high-end jobs will be available to them again. We are obsessed with job creation. We will continue to be obsessed with job creation. I'm very honoured to be part of a government who sees that as a top priority.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont has risen with a question.

Canadian Armed Forces Health Care Funding

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Trudeau Liberals have unilaterally cut funding for health care provided by Alberta's health system to members of the Canadian Armed Forces. This will leave the system with a significant shortfall to provide for their care, and I find this hard to believe. To the Minister of Health: can you please clarify if this is really the case, and what will the impact be on the women and men serving in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, this is indeed the case. I'm dismayed by the decision of the Justin Trudeau government and Justin Trudeau's attempts to defend it. It's disrespectful to the provinces. It's hypocritical given Trudeau's recent campaign commitments to expand medicare when the reality is that his government cut health care funding. Most of all, it's disrespectful towards the forces' personnel, Mr. Speaker. I want to say directly to every CAF member in Alberta: our government honours your service, and this decision will make no difference in your access to health care in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm reassured by the minister's answer on Alberta's support for Canadian Forces members. Given how Albertans are concerned about this decision by the Liberals and given that it's incomprehensible how a decision like this could be made, to the Minister of Health: what input did our UCP government have in this change?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the answer is none. I was simply informed by DND that they had unilaterally amended their policy. In fact, officials from several provinces have contacted the federal government and been told that DND will not even share their rationale for these new rates. DND is a separate payer for forces' personnel, outside the Canada Health Act, so they have the authority to make the change, but we are incredibly dismayed by the way that they did it and by the way that Mr. Trudeau has stood by that decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that I speak for all members in saying that I agree with the minister that this is disappointing and a disrespectful decision. To the minister: will he call on Justin Trudeau's Liberal government to reverse it?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer is yes. In fact, I announced earlier today that I am doing just that. On behalf of our government I'm calling on the Trudeau government to reverse this decision. I will be following up later today with a letter to the minister of defence to that effect. Our officials in the Health ministry have been in touch with their counterparts in other provinces as well, and I understand that some of the provinces are planning to follow up on their own, as we are, and that there is work under way for a joint response as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Education Budget 2019-2020

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Education minister said that the government is funding enrolment growth, but two days ago we heard the Finance minister say that Education funding might be the same as last year. That's not the same thing. Albertans still don't know the future of funding supports for classroom complexity in the form of educational assistants, counsellors, and others. To the Finance minister: will you commit to funding needed classroom supports and resources to support our students, or are they on the chopping block to pay for your corporate tax giveaway?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, I want to suggest this. In fact, I want to state this. Our job-creation tax cut is a measure that will attract investment, create job opportunities, and eventually lead to increased government revenues.

Mr. Speaker, we ran a campaign and Albertans elected this government to create jobs and opportunities for all Albertans and to turn the economy around, an economy that was in stagnation because of the policies of the previous government.

Ms Phillips: To the Finance minister: why can't the Finance minister do what every other government in the history of the province has done and tell boards in the fall what their budgets are? If the Finance minister is going to back-seat drive the Education file, why doesn't he just take the wheel and give the board some clarity?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During our campaign and in our platform we were abundantly clear on education and health care that we would commit to maintain funding and/or increase funding. We're committed to fund enrolment growth. We're committed to deliver more efficiently, remove redundancies, and deliver based on 21st-century delivery models. We will deliver better and save taxpayers of this province their dollars, having full respect for the taxpayers' dollars in this province.

Ms Phillips: Given that the 45 kids in a grade 5 class are going to be surprised to learn that they are redundant, Mr. Speaker, and given that we heard at our budget town halls that the Calgary board of education has never before not had a budget from the province by September, will the Finance minister just continue to do the Education minister's job for her and tell the boards whether they can expect classroom improvement funds, transportation grants, or other supports, or has he already done away with them to pay for his $4.5 billion giveaway to already profitable corporations?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, when the NDP took office, they actually rolled a budget out three days later than we will, so the reality is that we're delivering before they delivered during their first term. Secondly, when the NDP government raised corporate taxes by 20 per cent, they actually collected $2.3 billion less revenue in the following three years. They were an example of fiscal irresponsibility on behalf of Albertans. We're committed to delivering a budget that will return responsibility to Alberta's finances.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Corporate Taxation and Job Creation

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Cenovus announced it had "excellent financial performance," a "25% dividend increase," and plans for even more dividend growth and plans for share repurchases. All good. There was one thing missing: jobs. Not a single new job. To the Minister of Energy: won't you admit that your $4.5 billion corporate handout does nothing for regular Albertans who are looking for jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What disappoints me most is that the former NDP government did nothing in four years to defend the energy sector. Where were they when Justin Trudeau spoke about phasing out the oil sands? Where were they when Justin Trudeau vetoed the Northern Gateway pipeline? Because of their actions it's led to pipeline capacity constraints, widening of differentials, curtailments, and the senseless NDP government crude-by-rail program. That's what I'm most disappointed in.

Mr. Sabir: Not a single new job.

Given that Suncor reports that "strong cash flow generation and our commitment to capital discipline allowed us to return value to our shareholders through $658 million in dividends and $552 million in share repurchases" – but again there is one thing missing, not a single new job – to the minister: why are billions of dollars going to corporations while the rest of us are told to brace for cuts to services?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government inherited an oil and gas sector that was in a crisis. They were in a crisis because of the actions of a socialist government, that was thrown out in the last election. For far too long we saw a government that was not willing to defend our energy sector. We're doing just that. We've taken a lot of steps to defend our energy sector. We've launched the Canadian energy centre, we've launched a public inquiry into the foreign sources of funding, we've brought in the royalty tax guarantee. We are working for our energy sector. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. We have heard questions; we'll hear answers. You might not like them, but we'll hear them.

Mr. Sabir: Given that we have lost 13,000 jobs in the resource sector alone in the last two months and given that there is no end in sight to the economic pain that has only been made worse by this Premier and this government in their massive gifts to big corporations, to the minister: will you commit today to scrapping this $4.5 billion failed experiment and do something to actually create jobs and not kill them?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, I will take absolutely no lessons from the members opposite on what the industry needs to be successful. They spectacularly failed our oil and gas sector and created a jobs crisis of over 200,000 Albertans out of work. We were elected to clean up their messes, and that's exactly what we are doing. Their policies caused damage to this province. We are cleaning it up, and we will get Albertans back to work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Rural Police Service and Crime Prevention

Mr. Rowsell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The residents of my area continually hear about rural break-ins and thefts. These issues are arising due to a multitude of factors, including inadequate police coverage, poor economic conditions, and issues of addiction. Many of the crimes are being committed by repeat offenders. To the Minister of Justice: what steps are being taken to improve the communication, efficiency, and coverage of police departments to stop this epidemic?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural crime is a top priority of my office right now to make sure that we stem the growth of rural crime across our province. I'm meeting regularly with the chiefs of police from across Alberta to make sure that we have clear lines of communication to track individuals that are repeat offenders in our communities. A quote that was driven home to me from our Grande Prairie town hall: my biggest concern of repeat offenders is escalating with very little consequence; I personally feel unsafe knowing that these people are easily released and living down the street, offending and reoffending. We're taking all the steps that we can to make sure that we crack down on rural crime.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that western provinces see the highest rural crime per capita in all of Canada and given that numerous rural property owners have had so many thefts that they now are being denied theft insurance and given that the crime rate has been continually trending upwards over the last few years, to the Minister of Justice: what steps are being made to help these residents who are now unable to get coverage for continued theft and break-ins?

Mr. Schweitzer: One of the most eye-opening things in the town halls that we've held across Alberta is the number of people that have stopped reporting crimes over the last four years. They're simply tired of reporting. One of the things that was brought up to me in Airdrie: nonreporting is common; if I have a theft of less than $10,000, it's not worth reporting because my deductible is $5,000 and I'll lose my status.

Mr. Speaker, we have a real crime issue in our province. We're tackling this head-on. We're looking at solutions to also cut off the monetization of stolen property. Look for more details from us soon.

Mr. Rowswell: Given that the province of Alberta has seen an increase in rural crime under the NDP and given that I've heard many concerns from local residents about inadequate training for law enforcement professionals and given that Albertans want and deserve to feel safe and secure in their homes, to the minister: what is the government's plan to ensure that our local, front-line service workers have the proper training in order to keep the province safe and prosperous?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, one of the highlights of my recent tour of the province was meeting with Alberta Citizens on Patrol and Rural Crime Watch members from across our province. These people are the heart and soul of rural Alberta, and they are coming up with really innovative ways to support our police in tackling crime. They've got apps; they've got technology. They have wide networks that are helping us solve crime across Alberta. We're making sure that we work collaboratively with them and with the RCMP on establishing best practices and making sure as well that as these apps are developed, they're spread across Alberta.

2:30 Family and Community Support Services Funding

Ms Renaud: A city councillor from my St. Albert constituency asked the Minister of Community and Social Services at the AUMA convention to deny rumours she'd been hearing that the family and community support services program, also known as FCSS, would be cut by 50 per cent. Instead of confirming that she wouldn't cut this critical program in half, the minister only said that she was, quote, fighting tooth and nail, unquote, with her cabinet colleagues. To the minister. Here's another chance. Is your government really considering cutting FCSS in half?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, Albertans know the state of our government's finances and that we are in the process of developing our budget. We value the important role of the FCSS program in the fact that it does create strong communities. We're working very diligently at this time to review all the programs and services within the ministry to ensure that we're supporting the most vulnerable and those who are most in need.

Ms Renaud: Given that at AUMA this minister was reminded that any cuts to FCSS would have a negative effect on efforts to combat homelessness, domestic violence, and many other issues and given that while programs funded by FCSS are left in limbo and fearing the worst, yet this government took no time to cut a $4.5 billion cheque to big corporations, to the minister: is it hard to represent programs that your government clearly doesn't prioritize?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, I've had the opportunity to speak with many stakeholders, councillors, and reeves across the province, and I understand the importance of this program. We've had discussions on how important this program is, and I'm comforted by the fact that we're mutually aligned in the understanding that we need to take care of the most vulnerable in our province. Our goal is to ensure that hard-earned taxpayer dollars are going to those who need it the most.

Ms Renaud: It's not what you say; it's what you do.

Given that the minister claimed at AUMA to understand the benefit FCSS has on Alberta communities, to the minister: will you stand in this House and actually fight tooth and nail for FCSS, which you have had no problem doing for the Premier's $4.5 billion gift to corporations?

Mrs. Sawhney: Again, Mr. Speaker, the FCSS program impacts over 300 municipalities across the province, and we are cognizant of the importance of this program. Again, I'll reiterate that we're evaluating all programs and services while we prepare for the next budget, but what's core to our approach is that the vulnerable are indeed supported. A strong economy, a balanced budget: these will all ensure that programs such as FCSS can remain successful and sustainable in the long term. That's what we're fighting for.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, in late September thousands upon thousands of Albertans gathered in front of this Legislature to drive home the message that it's urgent for our province to take action on climate change. They left their schools, their universities, their jobs and businesses to come and deliver that message to this government. Will the minister of environment pursue action on climate change with the same enthusiasm that he pursued a $4.5 billion giveaway to big corporations?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we are pursuing action on climate change. We're excited to unveil the TIER program in a few weeks. We'll have more to say about that at the time, but what I can tell you is that our approach in this government when it comes to climate change will be very different than that hon. member's approach when he was part of the government formerly. We will not focus on taxing hard-working hockey moms, hockey dads, and Albertans with no results, admitted to by their own leader. The NDP leader admitted that their program had no impact on climate change. We'll focus on the TIER program, technology and innovation, and working hand in hand with the great innovators across our entire province to actually tackle this problem.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, the member opposite of course knows what it's like to give away $4.5 billion and achieve no results.

Given that the only response from this government to this large gathering of Albertans was a display of some signs in office windows intended to troll the protestors and given that the role of government is to lead and listen to Albertans, to the minister of the environment: was this a government-sanctioned message, or was it just the work of some juvenile staffers?

The Speaker: I might just remind all members of the Assembly that after question 4 there is no requirement for preambles.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we're proud to be part of a government that supports our oil and gas industry. I know that the hon. member is part of a party that does not, but we do. What I would really like to ask the hon. member is why he was part of a government that brought in the carbon tax and then sat on his hands while it hurt everyday Albertans. Right in my own constituency a place you know well, the West Country seniors' centre, almost had to shut while these hon. members sat inside this Legislature. Every time that we brought it up in opposition, they would laugh. They didn't care. They would continue with the job-killing carbon tax. Let me be clear. That's not our approach. We're looking forward to bringing in TIER, and we will work to actually tackle this problem.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that many of the people who gathered outside the Legislature were schoolchildren, university students, and other young Albertans and given that we know that this government makes plenty of time to break bread with big corporations benefiting from their corporate handout but couldn't bother to send a single representative outside to the steps of the Legislature to meet with the people who wanted action on climate change, to the minister: how can these young people get your attention? Should they incorporate themselves?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the rally he's talking about that he and others attended was organized by Emma Jackson, who was involved in the illegal blockade of tankers transporting energy out of the port of Vancouver. The rally he's referring to had hammer and sickle flags. I would never attend a rally with a hammer and sickle flag any more than a swastika. The real question is: why was the NDP there?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In early September the MacKinnon panel showed that our province had a spending problem. Our province would have $10.4 billion more if we matched the average spending of Canada's three largest provinces. In the last four years, since the previous NDP socialist government got elected in 2015, Alberta's debt kept soaring from $13 billion to an astonishing $60 billion. To the Minister of Finance: how is our government going to reduce the overspending problem our province has, caused by the previous NDP socialist government? [interjections]

The Speaker: We will have order.
The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We did inherit an out-of-control spending regime when we took office on this side of the House. We will chart a new course. We will introduce a budget that restrains spending. We will introduce a budget that brings us to balance within our first term. We will stop wasting taxpayers' dollars, and we will continue to deliver high-quality services.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the previous government got our province deeply into debt and given that Albertans still want good-quality services such as education and health care and given that our government needs to find ways to change the way we spend, to the same minister: how will you prioritize the budget to give Albertans good-quality services while still managing the previous government's spending problem?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that good question. We were clear in our platform that we're committed to delivering high-quality services for Albertans. The MacKinnon panel report conclusion that this province spends $10.4 billion more than the other three large provinces in this nation was a compelling statistic. That tells me that we have room to find efficiencies, remove redundancies, and find new ways to deliver better to Albertans, at the same time bringing fiscal responsibility to the budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the MacKinnon panel said that our provincial outcomes from our spending are worse than the outcomes of other provinces and given that they also said that raising taxes is not the answer to controlling the previous government's overspending problem and given that they also advised us to act quickly and decisively to reduce our spending, to the same minister: how will your ministry act quickly and decisively to reduce spending while improving outcomes for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has the call.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The MacKinnon panel was very clear: we need to get our spending under control. The fact that we're spending $10.4 billion more annually than the other provinces is actually a compelling statistic. Dr. Janice MacKinnon, the chair of the blue-ribbon panel, was very clear. Dr. MacKinnon's advice to me was this: you as a province have options right now to make some very clear decisions on your path forward; make those decisions today and do not delay because within four years, if you delay, you will have very few options. We will deliver.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross has risen.

Registry Services

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Part of the summer tour by the Minister of Service Alberta was focused on the Alberta registry system and the issues facing Alberta registry agents. I have heard the minister say that almost all Albertans deal with registries, whether it's to register a birth or death, apply for a driver's licence, register a business, or obtain some other important service. My constituency, like many in the province, contains registry offices. Can the minister tell us what assurance he has provided to the registry agents concerning their issues?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and new father.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you that my wife did all the hard work, but I'm very happy to welcome my son on September 5.

I just want to say thank you to the member for bringing this up. I want to just say that what I told on my tour, what I told the registry offices is that we appreciate the hard work that they provide delivering very vital government services to Albertans all across this province and that this government will work collaboratively with them and not in competition with them, unlike the members on the other side of this aisle. Instead of taking services away from them and competing with them, we will work with them on a path forward to delivering vital services to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mr. Amery: Thank you once again, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Congratulations on all the hard work.

Given that I have heard a lot of chatter around modernizing services that registries provide and given that in many cases both Albertans and registry agents alike have been waiting to see some modernization of those services, can the Minister of Service Alberta tell us what type of modernization registry agents and Albertans can expect in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleague for the question. One of the things that surprised me the most when I inherited this file earlier this year was to learn that Alberta is last in the country in terms of online service delivery and modern service delivery for registry services. That is unacceptable, and it is a failing of the members on the other side of this aisle for how they handled the registry file and how they competed with private registries and took services away from them, thereby turning those registries into an unviable business model so they would not invest in modernizing their services. That stops now. We will work in collaboration with registries.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that rural registries and urban registries provide the same services but play very different roles in their communities and given that Albertans are looking for more ways to get things done online as opposed to waiting in endless lineups and given that rural communities rely far more heavily on the registry offices as opposed to their urban counterparts, how can the minister be sure that modernizing registry services won't result in the closure of rural offices?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. I can assure you that on my tour I visited 36 communities in nine days, driving over 4,000 kilometres to meet with folks in their home communities to talk about these issues and to listen to their challenges and concerns and to discuss opportunities on how we can move forward on ensuring that Albertans get the best services possible from their registry network. I want to assure those rural registries that we value their services, and we certainly will work in collaboration with them as we work to modernize service delivery models, and that their bricks and mortar locations will not disappear as a result of our actions on the modernization file.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed to the presenting of petitions, I just beg your indulgence for one brief moment, and please accept my apologies. Earlier I missed an introduction of the Jakeway family, who are guests of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. My apologies, and thank you for your indulgence.

In 30 seconds or less we will move on with the rest of the daily Routine.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to provide oral notice of Government Motion 33.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly denounce the federal government's decision to reduce the rates at which it reimburses the costs of providing health care services to the Canadian Armed Forces members, call on the federal government to immediately reverse this decision and provide the highest level of treatment for these members, and recognize the contribution of these members, who bravely and willingly risk their lives for our country.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta has risen.

Real Estate Amendment Act, 2019

Mr. Glubish: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce Bill 15, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2019.

The Real Estate Council of Alberta has failed to provide effective governance and oversight of the real estate industry. This bill includes amendments to dismiss the current members of council and enable the appointment of an administrator to govern RECA on an interim basis. Our focus with this bill is to protect the overall operations of the council and its critically important role and to restore Albertans' trust in the real estate regulator.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of Pope John Paul II's encyclical Laborem Exercens, which I quoted earlier today in the discussion on Bill 14.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert has risen.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of an article from the Independent, Climate Crisis: CO<sub>2</sub> Levels Rise to Highest Point Since Evolution of Humans.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a document entitled "How Dare You?" Read Greta Thunberg's Emotional Climate Change Speech to UN and World Leaders.

The Speaker: Are there any other tablings today?

Hon. members, there are no points of order today, which I'm sure is a shame for all of you. As such, we are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has caught my eye.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 39(1) in order to proceed immediately to debate on Government Motion 33.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call Committee of the Whole to order

2:50

Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Chair. Today I rise in support of Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. This UCP government knows that the indigenous people of Alberta and across Canada are important and have played a critical role in Canadian history. While we cannot change the wrongdoings of our past, we can embark upon a path of reconciliation with indigenous communities through opportunities and partnership.

This UCP government set a mandate that we intend to follow through on, and, Madam Chair, I think that we have done a good job since Albertans elected us a short five months ago. We were tasked with creating opportunities for the men and women in our industry sectors, proving that Alberta is open for business, and welcoming new stakeholders to the table to invest in our great province.

This bill underscores the absolute need to include indigenous communities in that development. For too long our indigenous leaders and communities have been neglected. Madam Chair, this UCP government says that enough is enough. We want to empower indigenous groups to engage in our industry sectors, to invest in our resources, and to partner with this government. Alberta creates opportunity for so many through jobs and innovation. Bill 14 helps to ensure that those same opportunities are extended to indigenous groups, who simply want and deserve to be given the same opportunities as everyone else. The Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation will give indigenous communities more power over the resources found on their land.

This government wants to partner with indigenous communities to build on their economic and social well-being. It is clear that indigenous leaders in Alberta are ready for responsible government and partnership, and the UCP government is committing to partnering with our First Nations through this bill. We have learned from our past. We know that history should never repeat itself, and the indigenous people of Alberta need a voice. Bill 14 is that voice.

Alberta is a trailblazer with this piece of legislation, and by ensuring that indigenous communities are equal partners at the table when we talk about our economy and our industry sectors, we give the impression that this is not simply a handout but that they are equal partners.

Unemployment in indigenous communities is high, and we have an opportunity to create stable and well-earned jobs for all members in our natural resource sector. At the same time, we are growing our economy and helping all Albertans contribute to our strong economic future. This government was elected to get Alberta back on track and get things done. We are standing up for our energy sectors, we are standing with indigenous communities, and we are standing up for Alberta.

Indigenous people are stewards of the land. Alberta is full of natural resources. That all Albertans benefit from an economic and social construct – indigenous communities were the first to live off our land, to protect the land and its natural resources, and to benefit from the resources it provides. With Bill 14 indigenous communities will have the ability to develop those natural resources, and this government is partnering with those communities to make this happen.

This government is doing that in a number of ways. We're allocating $1 billion in loan guarantees for indigenous communities. This funding for indigenous communities will help raise the desperately needed capital to develop and profit from the resources extracted that lie below the land of their ancestors.

We see the impact of the wrongdoings in history on our reserves, and we have listened to the needs of indigenous communities. Minister Wilson and his department and members of this government have consulted with close to 200 indigenous community leaders, industry leaders, and businessmen and -women, who were consulted to engage with our government on involvement in our industry sectors. Bill 14 is not only creating financial stability for indigenous communities, but we are strengthening relationships with indigenous leaders and communities, something that has long been neglected.

Albertans want jobs, Albertans want responsible government, and Albertans want a government that builds relationships instead of tearing them apart. They want a government that'll listen to them, and, Madam Chair, I will continue to listen to my constituents and the great people of this province and support those initiatives that do just that.

Madam Chair, our indigenous peoples have suffered as a result of the neglect and mistreatment of the governments in this country. Residential schools, the '60s scoop, and most recently the ongoing tragedy of missing and murdered indigenous women are all examples of the neglect and mistreatment that the indigenous people of this province have suffered. We can begin to reconcile and mend in one small way some of the damage caused, by standing behind and supporting this bill. I am proud to stand in support of this bill, which I believe is one clear step in the right direction to mending the damaged caused in the indigenous communities of this province.

This bill will create a strong future for indigenous men, women, and children, and it will do so by ensuring that they're included in our resource industry, that access to capital is available, and that every opportunity to prosperity is opened. This UCP government will continue to stand up for their right to participate in resource development. I have met with my constituents, listened to their concerns, and I believe that this government is acting on their concerns with the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation. We are not overlooking the indigenous brothers and sisters in this province; we are standing with them and creating a strong partnership that will lead to prosperity for current and future generations, for all Albertans. We must look to the future, and this UCP government wants Alberta to continue to thrive for generations to come.

With this initiative indigenous youth and children will have more opportunities to invest in their province, in the natural resources that their ancestors protected, lived off, and cared for. I stand here supporting this legislation, and I am honoured to be representing my constituents in a government that is fighting for all Albertans. We will continue to promote indigenous economic opportunities in Alberta and respect the voice of indigenous leaders. We have engaged them in our natural resource sectors, and we will continue to engage them. We will not stop.

Bill 14 was introduced at the beginning of the fall session because, I believe, we are prioritizing our indigenous communities. The UCP government is working for all Albertans and defending the promises we made to voters in the last election. We are improving the lives of all Albertans and stabilizing our economic future. Indigenous communities have an opportunity to invest in major resource developments, projects that are constructed on indigenous land. Historically, the indigenous people of Alberta have had to fight for their voice, their rights, and their land. Bill 14 and the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation set the stage for a positive partnership with indigenous groups and government in this province, one that will last for many years to come.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? Comments, questions, or amendments? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. The goal of this act, really, is to work in a very positive and truly empowering way with our indigenous peoples in this province, really by means of providing increased capital and tech support so that there can be investment and ownership of natural resources and projects related to the infrastructure with that in a shared partnership with our province.

The act does a number of things. Section 2(1): it actually creates the indigenous opportunities corporation as an arm's-length Crown corporation. It also lays out a mandate for that corporation in 2(2), which is to "facilitate investment by indigenous groups in natural resource projects and related infrastructure, subject to the regulations" that are there. It both creates and lays out the direction. It will appoint a board of directors to manage it. It will define who might participate in all of that, indigenous groups. I'm pleased to see that it's a broad definition that includes traditional indigenous people but also Métis people and, beyond that, even the organizations that they own and control so that there can be no limits on their ability to participate.

It will also define some of the financial mechanisms that the Crown corporation may use in order to benefit them and provide the kinds of financial resources that will be useful and helpful. I think it's a great act, and I truly encourage all members to support the intent of it and to work through the details of it, because I think it is important that we go in this direction.

Yesterday I had the opportunity to speak with Mr. Stephen Buffalo. He's actually originally from Maskwacis, which borders on the north side of my riding, and I had a good visit with him. He is currently the president and CEO of the Indian Resource Council of Canada. His father, actually, used to be chief of his band in Maskwacis. He's well connected there. He knows the people, he knows their situation, and he's very frustrated, actually, with the endless politics in Canada with regard to aboriginal engagement in the economy and ability to participate and the fact that there's endless politics but no action. Nothing ever happens. Nothing ever changes.

We talked a little bit about that and some of the frustration with it. He's working together with some of the other chiefs that were there in a joint effort to draw together much support for this bill. He is in support of the bill and very clear about that. He actually said to me – and this was a phrase that really caught my ear when he spoke to me. He said that some of us have profited a lot from this industry. You know, the thing that matters there is that he wants and I want and our government want to see that kind of reality, that kind of ability to say that he's prospered, and for all the rest of his people as well, not just him. He wants to see his people also benefit from the resources of this land, from the resources that they live on and are part of.

Personally, I've never really understood why the feds keep bands in what I call a matrix of legislated poverty. I think it's time that we pressure the federal government to change some of that, and the reality is that our government hopes to actually change some of that, within the limits of our ability here at the provincial level, to truly make a difference for our aboriginal people.

I also had a bit of a visit yesterday with Calvin Helin. He's chairman and president of Eagle Spirit Energy Holdings, the group that seeks to build the Eagle Spirit pipeline across northern Alberta and B.C. to – what is it? – Grassy Point, B.C., in order to export natural resources product so that the aboriginal peoples of our province, really of all of western Canada, will be able to profit from that, will be able to prosper from it as well. One of the comments he made to me about this was that they have actually already been engaging with the state of Alaska. He said to me: you know, the state of Alaska has rolled out the red carpet for us. They would actually be very happy and very supportive of us regulatorywise, even with some funding potentially, if they would change the route of their pipeline a little bit and bring it to Alaska instead of to British Columbia.

If we continue with the federal policies that we currently have, what we're going to see here, again, is more of our wealth, more of our prosperity going to the U.S. because the federal government blockades and prevents Canadians from developing our western resources. Here Mr. Calvin Helin is clear that the Americans in Alaska are more than willing to welcome them and help them and provide it. He says that if we can't get it in British Columbia, we're going to Alaska with it.

I think we need to be aware of these kinds of opportunities and the fact that our indigenous people really do want to be able to participate in the industry, participate in the benefits from it, participate in the prosperity. By this act we really do hope to enhance the prosperity by means of access to participation in the economy in real partnership, in a new future for our indigenous peoples and our relationship together with them. I think this is important because, quite frankly, when indigenous peoples are strong, Alberta is strong, and together as partners we can continue to make Alberta the economic engine of the country. We can continue to make the indigenous peoples in Alberta the most prosperous in Canada and, hopefully, set a pattern and an example for other provinces and for the federal government as well.

With partnership and ownership come jobs, freedom of destiny, education, skills, social well-being, self-respect, and honour. I think that's something we would want to see for all Albertans. Our government, with this bill, is moving beyond vacuous symbolic gestures to real action, to actually engaging and creating the kinds of structures that will change the future and change the relationship and make it better. As has already been said, we have a moral obligation to put money on the barrelhead, and this bill is a step in the right direction. We truly do need to support this bill.

I'm pleased to see in the details of the bill, as I sort of already mentioned, a broad definition of indigenous groups so that we include everyone and not just some of them, so that there's no discrimination there. Everyone is entitled to be part of this. I think this is a bill of real importance. Indigenous groups have in the past been disqualified from participation in the economy because of legal structures that prevent indigenous groups from providing the financial guarantees needed to satisfy lending institutions. Therefore, it ends up in a refusal of funding for viable projects that could support their bands, that could prosper their people, that could benefit them in so many social kinds of ways. This bill is a strong step in resolving some of that. By this bill, we actually backstop indigenous groups, and I think it's a small step to fix that structural problem, that is such a barrier. In that regard, this bill really is an act of social justice, so I think it's extremely important that we fix it.

I think I would appreciate hearing the minister's comments, since in Committee of the Whole we can have some of this back and forth, with regard to that aspect of the financial backstop and the social justice element that it may carry with it.

The second thing I think I would like to hear from the minister on, if possible, is if he would be able to share with this House some of the comments from consultations that have happened. I know that he was involved in significant consultations, and I think that's important, so I would appreciate it if he would be able to share some of those comments with the House that have evolved out of those consultations.

Clearly, just in closing, I'd like to say that indigenous nations are deeply committed to the land, the air, and the water. They have always prospered by harvesting the natural resources of the land, whether it's game for meat or furs and clothing, whether it's plants for food or medicines or even to build their homes, even the tars of the Athabasca region. All of these things were part of their economy and trade from way back. The fact that the majority of the bands are actually in support of our resources is a strong statement about how clean and how sustainable our natural resource energy is. The reality is that they just want in. They want to be able to participate. They want to be part of the prosperity. They want real work. They want honour.

I think the issue here is that we really do need to understand that resources can be environmentally safe. That's what some of the indigenous leaders are telling us, that they can be without harm to the environment. They want to make sure that that, in fact, is the case, and I think it's just extremely concerning that some groups have come into Canada and tried to sway that, sometimes even by payment of money, to basically continue to leave our indigenous groups out of the circle of prosperity in this province. This bill allows the opportunity for them to engage in ways that have never been possible before. It is historic, it is a landmark bill, and I encourage all members to support it. I look forward to any comments the minister might be able to make in response to my couple of questions.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, I think the basic problem – and I've been here and listened to all 10 or so of the members of the UCP government talk about this bill, and I've taken some notes in terms of their words and what they're saying. My view is that this bill is short on detail, and I think it's led to many of the members of the UCP government talking about this bill in not-specific language.

I'm going to support what we have before us because I think it's a good initial start, but really the devil will be in the details. You can see that under section 2(12) "the Minister may make regulations," and then it goes on to identify all of the things that the minister can do.

I've listened to many UCP members talk about how important this is to give opportunity to First Nation peoples and Métis peoples. I've heard some talk about the awards in their community and how a First Nation individual got an award and that they never did before, and I heard people talk about how 190 individuals and groups – and some have talked about what those were – were involved in the formation of this initiative. You know, that should be standard, and it was standard operating procedure for the government that I was part of. Engagement is happening. That's great. Engagement happened with us.

I heard one person talk at length about the dignity of work and then ask another member back there: what do you think? And he said: well, you answered it, so I don't have to say anything. My point is that not a lot was focused on this bill.

Another person mentioned that the Fort McKay individual average after-tax income was $73,000, and I'm very happy to hear that. It was double the Canadian average and $17,000 higher than the average Albertan's. It really speaks to the presence of the natural resources and the involvement of the Fort McKay band in the Suncor oil sands storage north of Fort McMurray, their involvement as an owner in that project, that investment.

I heard lots of people talk about, you know, partnerships. No one disagrees with partnerships. That's a good thing.

There were some veiled kinds of discussions about a hand up and a handout, but no one ever talked about what the handout was or, you know, the implication of who was giving the handouts.

Then there was a statement just a second ago about vacuous symbolic gestures to First Nations and Métis peoples but no identification of what those gestures were.

I'd certainly agree that when all Albertans are strong, this province is stronger. I certainly believe in that. But, you know, I heard a lot of backslapping and congratulating the minister and the Premier and every other person in the province for this bill. Don't gloss over the significant challenges there are in the economic and social disparities in this province that affect First Nations communities and Métis peoples, and that was recognized by our government. We worked very hard to bring clean drinking water to reserves, the boundary reserves, we worked very hard to ensure child care was more readily available, and we worked very hard to support people off-reserve with income supports and other things, education, and to index those. Is there more to do? There's always more to do, Madam Speaker, but don't denigrate what's been done before to provide the supports that people have needed. Think of our work as providing a foundation and your work as building on that foundation.

I think the idea of loan guarantees is a really good one. I think my colleague from Calgary-McCall did a wonderful job outlining the monumental disparities and how we first tried to address those. I think everyone in this Chamber wants the same thing for all Albertans. We want Albertans to do well always. Our approach included an economic focus as well as a social focus. It'd be incredibly unfortunate if the UCP unwound the important social gains that were made in this province, as I said – water to reserves, income supports, green energy initiatives – and I'm concerned that that's going to happen because of your focus on this bill and believing that nothing else has to be done. I think we can do both. I think we can ensure that individuals and families in First Nations communities and Métis communities have the necessities they need to survive and do well, so the social framework needs to be in place for them and the economic framework you're proposing about guaranteeing loans to First Nation and Métis businesses to be involved in the natural resource sector. That's a good thing.

We were focused on taking direct action to reduce poverty, improve education, improve the mental health and physical health outcomes of First Nations and Métis peoples, and that can't be unwound in the service of Bill 14. It can complement Bill 14.

Madam Speaker, I don't need to take up a great deal of time to go on, but I do believe that we have some amendments coming, that the corporation that we're talking about is a good step that builds on previous steps of the NDP government. The fact that there's not a lot in this bill is something that I think we need to be very cautious about, that the regulation-setting process will be important. I'll be watching for those.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Now for something positive. I'd just like to take this opportunity and thank the minister for bringing Bill 14 forward and for reacting so quickly to a much-needed need in our Alberta society. It would have been very easy to, you know, as previous governments, just form another committee and kick the can down the road for another year or two years, but it is very, very important.

As you may know – some of you may know – while we were in opposition, I had many opportunities to visit a lot of the First Nations and Métis settlements around the province, and I did get a very consistent message from everyone. That was that they did want opportunities. They wanted to work with the government to lift themselves out of poverty and into prosperity. Many of the First Nations groups that I've talked to were surrounded by forestry and oil and gas. One of the chiefs actually asked me: "Well, why would I sign on to a pipeline? There's no benefit to my community." This is why Bill 14 is so important. We get opportunities to those folks because they cannot – you know, one of the major messages that I got from them constantly was lack of access to capital.

I talked to an entrepreneur that was a businessman that lived on one of the Métis settlements and had a beautiful home. Anywhere else in the province you would have been able to leverage that home for half a million dollars to bolster a business or start up a business, but he says: this house is actually worth zero in the eyes of any bank. That's why this is also very important. But we go back a long way, and you know what? I'm going to talk about some of the success stories from my region because we do have a lot of them. We've been surrounded by oil and gas for, you know, 50, 60 years up there. Some of the folks up there have taken advantage of that, seen the opportunity, and rather than fight the oil and gas exploration and development, they saw it as an opportunity to develop and expand their own.

I'm going to read for you from Goodfish Lake business corporation. If you go to their website, right on there it says: "Aboriginal owned, proudly Canadian." I think that's a very, very strong statement from those folks. I'm going to read to you their mission statement. It goes like this. It says, "Living the vision set by Chief Sam Bull and Council in 1977 to build a strong economic foundation that creates prosperity, employment for aboriginal people and protects the environment." Back as early as 1977 these folks saw the need for their communities, they saw the advantages that were available through the oil and gas industry, and they acted on it. That company started with a dry cleaning business to clean oil field clothing. I believe that just a few years ago they built a new 17,000-square-foot facility. They're actually producing these garments, fire-retardant coveralls, for Suncor and Syncrude and also continuing with the repairs of the coveralls and the dry cleaning process. That's a big success story that's been going on up in my area for very many years.

Also, the frustration. I can give you another example of that, where an entrepreneur at I believe it was Cold Lake First Nation formed a company to insulate piping products. She applied and was successful at bidding on a project, won the bid, and unfortunately had to come back to the oil company and say: "You know what? I'm not going to be able to do this because I can't get the financing to buy the product. Like, we have the people lined up. Everybody is trained. We've gone through all the training, but we just can't seem to finance this thing." The oil company stepped in and actually financed that project for them and got them off the ground. They've become quite successful in that.

You know, you get up into that Bonnyville area, and you've got companies like Primco Dene that have been operating for many years up there employing – I believe it's about 70 per cent of their employees that are their own First Nations and Métis people from up in that area. Seven Lakes Oilfield is another one. They provide all kinds of services to the construction industry, to the oil and gas industry up there.

Bill 14 is just another step. A lot of those companies have access to funds through the First Nations development fund, which has provided some of that backing, but we really need to step in and help out. There are a lot of entrepreneurs out there. They've got some great ideas, and it's just the lack of access to capital that's really holding them back. I really thank the minister for acting so quickly on this. It was something that we heard over the last few years. I'm very happy to see that it came forward so quickly. Like I said, you know, entrepreneurs out in that area are being held back just simply by lack of funding. Bill 14: if they come forward with some properly good business plans and do the right applications, I think we can really help out. I look forward to seeing some very successful indigenous projects in the future up in my area.

Thank you very much for the opportunity.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to thank all hon. members for all of your positive comments. It's been a pleasure for me to speak again to Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. It's been a rare occasion to hear so much agreement in this Chamber, which gives me a lot of hope for the future. I truly believe we all come from a place of acknowledging that the current path for indigenous economic development needs to be steered onto safer ground. I also believe that we share a commitment to be people who take on the responsibility and privilege of working with indigenous communities to clear that path because it's within our means to do so.

Since tabling the legislation on Tuesday, I've received incredible support from within this Chamber – I thank you for that – and from indigenous communities, industry, and government officials. More importantly, the reaction from ordinary, average Albertans has been overwhelmingly positive, and to see such incredible, positive feedback on this legislation from the people that got us here is a great benchmark for us. To the people of Alberta: I thank you from the bottom of my heart.

It seems we all have agreement on this bill, and it will move the province forward. Enabling legislation will create the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation as a Crown corporation of Alberta, or public agency, as we all call them in this province. Through the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation we will increase indigenous communities' access to capital and technical support to invest in natural resource projects and related infrastructure.

I would have liked to have had all of the leaders at our press conference because there is so much support, but of the ones that were there, the words spoken yesterday by Chief Joseph Weasel Child from the Siksika Nation of the Blackfoot Confederacy were, and I quote: I've never seen this type of commitment by a government anywhere, particularly within the province of Alberta.

Stephen Buffalo, as was mentioned earlier, the president and CEO of the Indian Resource Council, said: we now have a government that is willing to work with the First Nations and has created this opportunity for us.

The president of the Métis settlements association, Herb Lehr – and I hear this from him all the time – said: we want a hand up, not a handout. That's where it comes from. I sit and talk with him. He often talks of the pride that comes with having a good job. He says: that's all we're looking for; we want to have pride in what we do.

I want to finish by thanking everyone in the House for their support of this game-changing bill and especially acknowledge the Premier for his unwavering leadership on this file. To my colleagues, all of you: thank you for your statements of support. To the opposition members: I welcome your suggestions and support as well since we all realize that this is a good-news bill that benefits all of Alberta.

It's been a wonderful, crazy, stressful, and rewarding 24 hours, and it's been great. The work that we're accomplishing has been very rewarding, every second of it, and I thank you all.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise to speak about this. I do have a few different things, so I'm sure I'll be rising a number of times during our committee time together.

I think that the first thing I'd like to do is just offer support for this bill, in that in my tours of the province of Alberta for the three years that I had the privilege to be Minister of Indigenous Relations, I did hear many of the same things about people wanting an opportunity to succeed and, of course, heard about the many structural barriers that prevented indigenous communities from being successful, as the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka indicated. In many ways the laws and structures of Canada and Alberta have been in the way of successful economic development in indigenous communities, so I'm glad to see that we share that philosophy.

I was a little concerned yesterday when the Member for Peace River stood up to indicate that somehow talking about the structural barriers that have occurred and the oppression that has occurred in the province over the last year somehow is identity politics and that somehow we victimize the indigenous community by acknowledging the truth. I'm just glad to know that he is isolated even within the UCP party, that all the rest of the speakers I have heard have talked about the fact that indeed there are structural barriers, and perhaps they can take a little bit of time to bring the Member for Peace River up to speed. I'd appreciate him doing that.

I do get concerned when I hear some of the members refer to the things that have been done in the past as somehow being less important than the work that's being done today. I want to validate the work that's being done today because I think that it is very important. You know, we often hear them say things like, "Well, things that have been done in the past have been handouts to the indigenous community," which I think is a fairly insulting term. If you actually say, "We're going to be providing you actual resources in order to improve your life," that somehow that's a handout, as if, "You don't really deserve it, but from the goodness of our hearts we're going to give you a small, little pittance" – it's pretty insulting language, so I'd ask you to be a bit more respectful about talking about that in the House if you truly do want to see success in the indigenous community.

I notice that they also often make comments that somehow the work of previous governments – ours, of course, being the only non-Conservative government in the history of the province of Alberta – and the things that we did were symbolic gestures. Again, I'm not quite sure why, when you're introducing a bill with a positive intent like this, you would refer to the work that the indigenous community has done to educate us and to ask us to do various things in order to improve the lives of indigenous people, why you would refer to those requests by the indigenous community as somehow shallow or hollow symbolic gestures. I'm not quite sure why you feel the need to denigrate the work that the indigenous community has done up until this time. I just want to ask you to reconsider some of the language that you're using if indeed you are seeking to work with the indigenous community.

Just to accentuate that point just a little bit, I'd like to talk about some of the things that were actually created in co-operation with the indigenous community over the last four years. Many of you will know that when we first came into government, we took the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and adopted that, the first provincial government in the country of Canada, including the federal and provincial governments, to actually adopt the United Nations declaration and say that we accept it and that we will work very hard to enact it. We took that document and provided it to every single ministry that these ministers represent and said to them: would you please look at this document and then look at the rules and regulations and practices of your ministry and tell us where we are not in line with that? We also gave that same document to the community partners: Treaty 6, Treaty 7, Treaty 8, Métis Nation of Alberta, the Metis Settlements General Council, the friendship centre society of Alberta, the Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women. All of these partners also read that same document and came to us with incredibly important suggestions, which I really don't want denigrated by this government as it talks about the good work it's about to do because that work was good, too. That work was done with deep consultation with the indigenous communities, who provided us with hundreds of pages of documents and suggestions about how to move forward.

As a result, some very important, incredible things happened in the last four years, which I deeply hope that this Minister of Indigenous Relations and, of course, all of the members of the United Conservative Party will continue to support. I think the most obvious one, mentioned previously by the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, was that we were the very first and to date, I understand, the only provincial government to actually take specific action on the lack of clean water on First Nations. We were the only provincial government that said: "We're not just going to talk about it. We're going to actually build pipes to the reserves. Even though we can't build on the reserves – the federal government has to do that – we are going to build the pipes to the reserves." We informed the federal government that we were going to be doing that, and that forced their hand. As a result, every time we built a pipe – for example, to the Alexis reserve, to Paul band, to Cold Lake, to Whitefish (Goodfish), all of these reserves – the federal government has stepped up and provided extra money.

Because we took positive, real action, not empty gestures but real action, we were actually able to leverage more money out of the federal government for the people of Alberta. That came out of suggestions that were given to us when we took the United Nations declaration and used it as a common dialogue focus between the government and indigenous people across this province. That's not a hollow gesture. That is practical change in real life. As a result of having clean drinking water, the likelihood of people being more successful economically rises. They can do things like, as mentioned by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul, laundry facilities for the oil and gas areas.

I also want to mention just a few of the other things that we've done because they're not empty gestures. They're important things that were specifically asked for by indigenous communities. I'm very proud to say that of the things that came together, we identified a number of things, and we took immediate action. In the three years that I was minister, we were able to fulfill more than 14 of them, and they're not small, trivial things. They're big things.

I would just like to mention some of the things that we've done. As well as the talking things like, of course, the protocol agreement with the Blackfoot Confederacy, which we originally designed and signed and is now being reinforced by the present minister, we also did one with the Métis Nation of Alberta and one with Treaty 8. Those talking things we did because they're very important, because it was a response to the request by members of the indigenous community to begin to recognize them as nations, nations which have the ability and the desire to define and control the implementation of governance in their own communities. That is more than a hollow gesture. That's a practical acknowledgement of the reality that the people we're talking about are indeed people who have a right to that level of self-governance, just as you and I do. I think that to denigrate that is a mistake, so I think you should be cautious about that.

Beyond those kind of talking things there were also very specific choices that we made. We were one of the first provinces, for example, to adopt Jordan's principle, in which we define the right for people to have access to adequate health care and that we will proceed with a provision of appropriate health care without resorting to interjurisdictional quibbling about who pays for that health care, a very important principle that has resulted in First Nations communities actually improving their lives through direct and uninhibited access to health care. That's an important thing that we did.

We've also done hundreds, literally hundreds, and I could stand here all day and will, if necessary, to convince you that there are hundreds of very specific programs that have changed people's lives. I can talk about, for example, the creation of maternal health care programs. Maskwacis has been mentioned a number of times, and we've designed a maternal health care program that's actually helping to train and to provide services in the Maskwacis community with a particular priority on midwifery. That's a practical change that's going to help us to deal with the fact that indigenous people are overrepresented in terms of infant mortality, and we're going to deal with that. That's keeping people alive. That's not a gesture. That's a practical, important change.

We can talk about the fact that we've also created opportunities for indigenous communities to have a very specific and direct say over the land in this province. For example, we increased the amount of money available for First Nations communities with regard to oil and gas and other kinds of resource development from $7 million to $27 million, because when I went around, they said: we want to be able to speak to those kind of programs, those kind of businesses that are going to be doing something to our land so that we can talk about how that's going to affect us and we can actually make decisions about the appropriate style and nature of the development of those resources. We gave them practical, real money and opportunity. We spent two years in consultation with businesses, with municipalities, and with First Nations to talk about changes to the consultation arrangements under the ACO, Alberta's organization for consultation.

I think it's very important that this bill be seen as an adjunct to that, as adding to the work that we already did to give more voice to indigenous people in this province, something that I think we all can agree on. I just don't think that you should be taking away from the work that the indigenous community has already done in order to create those kinds of opportunities for consultation and so on.

I also want to point out, for example, that we created the very first Métis settlement consultation plan and the off-settlement consultation plan, which never existed in this province before. We created those opportunities to talk about resource development and to speak about how they're affecting the lands on which the indigenous people are living. I'm hoping that you're going to continue that work. I'm hoping that you're going to expand that work and improve on the first piece that we were able to put together in the time that we were in office.

I'm also pleased to talk about the fact that we worked with indigenous communities to create control over the land in terms of our development of parks such as the Castle park, where we sat down with the Piikani First Nation and said, "We are going to put you in a place of comanagement, and you're going to help us in this co-operative management style to actually decide what's going to be happening in this newly preserved, protected, piece of land," which is something, again, that the First Nations people have asked us. We created five new parks in the northern part of Alberta close to the oil sands development because we worked co-operatively with oil sands developers and First Nations such as Tallcree, which had a piece of land in the area, and we got agreement among all of the parties – the government, the industry, and the First Nations – to switch some land around so that we could create these five parks and to develop a co-operative management process in which the First Nations were able to speak to healthy, positive development of our natural resources.

These are the kinds of things that I think that we have to be careful not to say were not done in the past. Indeed they were done, and if I continue to hear people saying that nothing has been done in the past, I'm going to continue to stand up and read off more of these. I literally have a list of over 300 of them, and I'm more than prepared to teach you all about all these things. I do understand that, you know, many of you are new in this House and don't have that depth of knowledge of the work that's been done with the indigenous community. I appreciate the struggles of being a neophyte in an area and needing a little bit of instruction. I certainly received much instruction myself as I became Minister of Indigenous Relations. I look forward to providing you more lessons about the work that has been done in the past.

Now, I want to move on a little bit more to some of the particular choices that have been made in this bill. As we have said, we absolutely want to support this bill, but we think there is room for some improvement. One of the things that provides me with some concern is the number of times in the bill that there is reference to the fact that decisions will be made subject to regulations. I can tell you that in terms of the establishment of a corporation, the mandate of the corporation is subject to regulation, that the carrying out of the mandate or making grants or contributions is subject to regulation, section 2(6), that the establishment of a board is subject to regulation, that the minister can make regulations respecting natural resource projects; that is, the type of projects. Not the indigenous people but the minister will decide whether a project fits or doesn't fit, whether it's in or not.

Now, you started by saying that you actually talked to indigenous people and you wanted to give them a voice, and then you write into the bill that they don't have a choice in what kind of a project fits your contributions or not. I'm very concerned. You know, I've spent a lot of time working with people across the province, talking about the types of things that they'd liked to do, and certainly resource development is one of them, but it's not the only thing. So, as a result, I think that we need to take a little bit of time to have a conversation about why it is limited only to resource development here.

I would like to propose an amendment at this time, and then I will speak to that. I will provide an original and copies for everyone. I'll wait.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1. Hon. member, you have about two minutes and 50 seconds left.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I will read the body of the amendment here: that Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act, be amended in section 2(2) by striking out "in natural resource projects and related infrastructure."

I will just introduce this as a concept at this point because I think there are a number of MLAs who would like to speak to why we would like to see indigenous people be able to be successful in areas besides resource development. I'll just give one quick example before I allow other people an opportunity to speak to this, and then, of course, I will stand up and speak to it later in great length.

One example I'd just like to mention is that I've had the opportunity through our Métis and First Nations women's advisory council to speak to many entrepreneurial women. We have made sure that they have a voice in government by bringing them onto this council, by having them create proposals for government action and taking specific actions on that.

Through that, I also had the real privilege of meeting some incredible human beings who have done marvellous things in their own communities. I mean, people that have been active every single day to bring value and positive joy into their communities. One of those people is a woman by the name of Carrie Langevin, who started a company called Mother Earth Essentials. It's just an example but one that I'm just really proud to have seen. I went out to her shop, and I got the tour around, and we, in fact, held a press conference in her shop, trying to provide her with some support and our offer on the part of the government to actually support this kind of entrepreneurship. She was extremely successful.

In fact, you could look her up because she went to Dragons' Den, the television show, and she asked for their support to expand her services, and she received an offer to do that from a dragon. That tells you how successful this business was, that those very money-minded people were able to see that this was a well-run business with extreme potential. But I also want you to know that she turned them down. She said no at the end of the show. Do you want to know why? She told me later when I talked to her: because they wanted to control her business by taking too much of the shares. As a result, she went off on her own, and she's continued to be a successful entrepreneur. That's the kind of business I want to see more of.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to this amendment to Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. I am quite pleased to hear that there is universal support within this House not only for the concept behind this bill but for indigenous peoples and supporting them and making sure that they have every opportunity and even greater opportunities than they already have in this province.

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

I actually was very privileged to hear the former Minister of Indigenous Relations the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford speak about his experience travelling out to every First Nation and Métis settlement in this province, being the first minister to do so, but also speak about his experiences and what he's learned and what he tried to integrate into the work that he did when he was Minister of Indigenous Relations. I would actually be honoured to hear a little bit more about that. I especially took to heart his comments about the fact that when we're new to the House, as I am, we are neophytes and we are learning quite a bit.

Actually, I spent a little bit of time in my former life, before I became an MLA, working in Alberta Education, and I did a significant amount of work in First Nations education. That was working with the treaty areas, treaties 6, 7, and 8, the federal government, and working as a representative on behalf of the provincial government to improve opportunities for success for First Nation students in education. We know there are significant barriers to students, particularly those living on-reserve, because they don't have access to the same level of funding, professional development, the educational structures that we have, school boards. Things we take for granted didn't exist. Of course, the geographic disparity, being in small communities, northern communities, where it was often difficult to access a lot of those things, posed additional challenges.

That experience of working on those issues was an incredible learning experience, but more than anything it taught me how much more we all have to learn. It really is a respectful exercise in being quiet and listening to what indigenous communities and members and elders have to say about the needs of their community.

I very much take to heart this amendment because I think this amendment is really about saying: it is not the job of government to determine or predetermine how indigenous communities want to seek their economic development. It's a great idea. I, too, like my colleagues and everybody in this House, support the concept of the bill. I see this as an opportunity to improve it, to say: let's listen to the indigenous communities and let them determine how they would like to direct their economic development, provide the loan guarantees, provide those supports and those opportunities for capital investment for things that they need to do. But let's let them determine where they want to seek those opportunities and not limit them. We've seen that there are a lot of other supports that have been in place through government in the past and continue to be in place, and this is another great opportunity. But let's let them be the decision-makers of their economic future.

I really appreciate this amendment coming forward, and I appreciate the experience of the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I look forward to hearing a little bit more about perhaps the projects and the work that he has done and why he thinks this would be a valuable amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I really do welcome the opportunity to speak about the phenomenal successes that already exist in the indigenous communities throughout this province and the incredible work that has been done to try to achieve success, against what I think are some phenomenal barriers.

For example, one of the stories that I heard, that I like to repeat when I talk to people in the community, is a little bit about the success of the Sawridge band, who, many of you would know, has created a series of hotels across the province of Alberta. Now I understand they're also in British Columbia, perhaps farther. I wouldn't be surprised. They're very successful.

I would like to tell you a little bit about the history of that and Walter Twinn, who went on to become a Senator in the country at the federal level, and what he had to do in order to create that business. At the time that he was wanting to establish a hotel in Slave Lake, a small hotel had come up for sale. I believe it was somewhere in the neighbourhood of 20 rooms at the time. He wanted to buy it, but because of the laws of Canada, as a First Nations person he was not allowed to buy that hotel. This is not that long ago, by the way. This was, you know, in the 1970s.

What he had to do was take the money from the band and go to one of his nonindigenous friends and say: I'd like to give you this money, and I'd like you to buy that hotel, and then I will trust you to funnel that money back to the indigenous community. He had to absolutely, just on faith, find someone who would step in to do the legal, practical aspects so that he could run the hotel. Now, fortunately, he did find a very, incredibly decent human being who did exactly that and helped him to build an incredible set of hotels. Eventually, of course, the federal laws changed, and the band was able to more directly own those hotels.

I tell you that because I want to remind you that there have been serious structural barriers. It's not a lack of willingness on the part of indigenous people to participate in our economy; it's the fact that they have been prevented from participating in our economy. But one thing that's happening in this bill is that we're again creating a structural barrier for indigenous participation.

Now, it's different. Back in those days you weren't allowed to have a lawyer, so how could you possibly incorporate? So you can't run a business. These days it's: well, we're really interested in development of natural resources, which we actually define very narrowly as oil and gas, so we're not really interested in you building hotels. Senator Walter Twinn could not come to this government and ask for the resources to begin to build what has become a very successful enterprise across western Canada because in this bill you've decided that the work of Senator Walter Twinn does not have value. I'm very concerned about that.

I've mentioned, you know, the retail level of work such as Mother Earth Essentials, mentioned the commercial level of hotels, and I want to talk about a few other areas where indigenous people would be rejected by your structural barrier, that prevents them from coming and seeking the kind of economic development. Now, we've heard members, we've heard the Minister of Indigenous Relations, heard members from St. Paul, for example, who have talked about businesses such as laundry facilities. Laundry facilities would not fit in here. They would not be able to do that.

We've talked about the fact that under the NDP government we created the Indigenous Tourism Association in the province of Alberta. The tourism association could not come and get money in order to develop incredible tourism opportunities in the province of Alberta, and we know that tourism is going to be one of our best employment opportunities in the future.

One of the really nice things about tourism is that you can have tourism experiences spread all across the province. Even if you are on a far-off reserve, even if you live in Fox Lake, you can design a tourist experience where people could come and experience what it's like to live in northern Alberta: perhaps some canoeing, perhaps some horseback riding, perhaps living in some cabins or some teepees, all of those kinds of things. I can tell you, having spent some time speaking with people in the German and Czech communities in the province in Alberta, how much potential there is for tourism from those parts of central Europe and how much money that would bring in and spread around not just to Edmonton and Calgary but to the smaller communities, where we certainly could use a lot more employment. You're limiting a vast number of job potentials by limiting this particular bill to only resource development.

Another area that I think is important is the fact that communities are not only looking for business development because they want the profits that come out of it, but sometimes they want it because the business itself provides a service which they ultimately need. The Blood Tribe, for example Kainai, did an evaluation study about the economic leakage from Kainai First Nation into the surrounding community and found that well over 90, 95 per cent perhaps – I can't remember the exact number – of the money that people had in the community actually left the community to go out into the surrounding communities. Whenever anybody wanted to buy groceries, whenever anybody wanted to buy a car, whenever anybody wanted to do the things that we all want to do – buy clothes, buy things to make our houses nice and desirable – they had to leave the community.

So they made a decision that not only did they want to enter into economic development, but they wanted it to be an economic development that provided the services that people were now being forced to leave the community for. They created a grocery store, and they were able to do that with support from our aboriginal business investment fund. Because we have that fund – and you still have that fund available to you – they were able to not only have economic development, but they were actually able to have fresh groceries available within walking distance from most of the homes in Stand Off.

That was also done by the O'Chiese community, who built a gas station and a small grocery store in that community on the basis of their desire for economic development. Neither of those communities could come to this fund to actually do those things.

The third one I want to talk about is the grocery store that was built in Fort Chip by the ACFN and the fact that they were doing three things at once that I think are really important and would not be able to do. First of all, they were saying that, yes, they wanted to have economic development. They wanted to be able to benefit from generating income. But secondly, the cost of food in Fort Chip is extremely prohibitive to well-being of community members. For example, a four-litre jug of milk costs somewhere around $25, and if something costs that much, you're not going to avail yourself of it very often. As a result, nutrition was bad in their community.

As is typical in the First Nations community, they weren't singularly minded. It wasn't just profit that was driving them. It was the desire for the well-being of all the community members in terms of nutrition that also led to them doing the grocery store. Because we had the indigenous climate leadership program at the time, we were able to sit down with them and say: "How do we make this even better yet? How do we actually help you, through the indigenous climate leadership program, to bring in a more sophisticated level of freezers and coolers that will use less oil, gas, or other resources in terms of keeping your food safe for the community?" Because we had that program, which unfortunately you've decided to not fund again, we were able to ensure that they took care of the environment, they took care of the nutrition of the community, and they made a profit altogether at the same time.

Unfortunately, your bill would not have allowed that to happen. They could not have come to you and said: we want to build this incredible resource in our community; reduce our costs in terms of running our business; reduce the amount of oil that has to be shipped up to this small, northern community, which makes it, of course, very expensive and also dangerous to the environment; and we want to make sure our people are well fed. They can't do that. You've excluded that possibility here.

The purpose of this amendment is simply to take what you have decided is a good thing to do and to say to you: "Yes. We agree, but do not limit yourselves. Do not impose upon others your idea of what is right for them." The indigenous community didn't come to you and say: "We want support in resource development only. Please ignore our grocery stores. Please ignore our retail stores. Please ignore our hotels." They want life to be better in every aspect, and they're asking you to help them to be partners in that process. I think you've started to hear them, and I celebrate that, honestly. I mean, I'm just real thrilled to be here being able to support a government bill. But I ask you to make it work for them, to stop imposing the colonialist structure that says: you can develop but only in ways that we want you to develop or only in ways that somehow reinforce our intentions in terms of development of the province of Alberta.

Get out of the way. This is your chance to get out of the way and to say to the indigenous people: "You know what? You're smart enough. You're hard working enough. You care enough about this to decide for yourselves what kind of economic development really works and what you'd like to see happen in the future. We have faith in you, we believe in you, and we have respect for your sense of self-determination." That's what we're asking you to do. We're asking you to get out of the way and show some respect to the indigenous community by allowing them to have economic development where they determine economic development would best be directed.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Thank you for the comments. A lot of those issues, we put a lot of thought into it because we did do a lot of travelling and consultation across the province, and we heard lots of ideas come up, everything from tourism – if you go down to southern Alberta, they tell me they've got wind and water but they don't have oil and gas, so there are lots of options available.

Right now we're really focused on jobs and economy. That's what we're all about, and the amendment – the scope of the projects eligible, they're going to be defined in regulations, and the projects that are eligible will include natural resource projects and related infrastructure that fall within the mandate of the corporation. But in section 2(12) it also allows for the expansion of the mandate of the corporation to include other types of projects and related infrastructure.

We plan to lay out the definition of natural resource in regulation as opposed to legislation as it will keep the corporation flexible in the projects that it can participate in. Our intent is for the AIOC to initially focus on natural resource projects, which may be defined to include renewable energy such as hydro, solar, or wind. That's going to be laid out in the regulations. We're going to have a very competency-focused board so that projects that do come forward can't just be fluffy projects. They've got to be business-viable projects because we want them to succeed. We don't want them to fail. We want them to make money at this. That's why we're being very focused at first on the natural resources that are out there, which could include mining, forestry, all those good things that we have in Alberta.

Like I say, you did mention other tools in the toolbox, and we do have other tools in the toolbox for helping out with smaller projects.

We've also got a ministerial advisory committee, and on that committee I've got the president and chief executive officer of the First Nations Bank of Canada. Incredible man, full of knowledge, and I've been really respecting his input. He's working with us to help us with First Nations that may have other smaller projects that they could finance that way. There are other tools available for them to be involved. We're working very closely. We've listened to the First Nations, indigenous people. Like I say, at our stakeholders meetings there was an incredible amount of ideas that were coming forward, and we're looking forward to seeing them come forward to the board once it's put in place.

That's my bit for now. Thanks.

The Acting Chair: Thank you.

The Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much. I just have a few quick comments. I just wanted to again thank the Minister of Indigenous Relations. You've done so much wonderful work. Thank you for taking us all along with you. This has been truly an absolutely amazing opportunity to come along with you on your journeys where you meet people and find out what is in the best interest of those nations because they are independent nations.

I know that there's been a few comments about language and the way that we speak about these things. I would like to also call out – you had mentioned that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had mentioned that you said that you had put dollars in to ensure that they took care of their environment. Again, I don't think that that is an issue. We're talking about First Nations people. They are the stewards of the environment. That's who we're learning from, so please, if you're going to question language, I think that has to start from within, especially having been a former minister yourself of this. Probably that's not that language that they would use. I would suggest that we learn from them in terms of taking lessons and understanding what happens in First Nations. I think I will take that from the First Nations elders and the people themselves. I'm very interested in going along and continuing on this journey with you. Thank you so much for doing that.

I also wanted to mention: the minister had already mentioned about other opportunities that are available within this legislation for flexibility with regard to small business, but as another member had mentioned to me, you do realize that since 2006 there is the First Nations development fund, which will work in conjunction with other work that's already being done by our government and work that has been done by previous governments, many previous governments, that have worked in conjunction, in friendship with First Nations in order to start building. This is all about leveraging equity. This is all about looking at what they have available to them. Right now if you have a house or anything, like the member had mentioned earlier, they cannot leverage that for dollars in order to put into businesses. Let's look at what we do have. Our natural resources are something that brings prosperity to absolutely everybody in this province.

If you're looking at having a solid economy within a First Nations, we have to look at how we build that equity first and actually be able to support things like culture, the sale of culture, tourism, all of those things that the minister and yourself and other members have talked about. We completely agree with that. But let's be very, very understanding about the fact that we have this beautiful resource here in our province that is actually going to help build the equity that the First Nations and our partners in this have asked for. This isn't something that our government has imposed upon anybody. This came as a result of First Nations chiefs, families, people, women within the diversity council, all of those, who came to us with the idea of how to move forward because they're not benefiting from that prosperity in this province the way that other people are. That's the entire point, to make sure that we have a partnership here.

I'd also like to mention, because it has been mentioned by other people, that one of the members had mentioned something about backslapping or something like that. I actually think that if you've done something great – like, the former minister has stood up and said some of the wonderful things that the previous government had done. That's wonderful. We do appreciate and understand and know that we work in collaboration with work that has been done. You should be able to stand up and say those things.

I have another moment where I'd like to acknowledge one of the members on our side who in opposition was the reason why we even acknowledge the '60s scoop at all, because of the work that he did in opposition, going from nation to nation and bringing that information to the minister at the time and making sure that he had access to that information. The previous government may want to take credit for that, but actually we worked together in collaboration with that. I would like to personally thank the member from St. Paul for his incredible work. I had the benefit of actually going along with him at that time to meet with the First Nations groups to make sure that that was acknowledged within this House. I want to thank you for that.

I want to thank the previous government for their work.

I sincerely want to thank our Minister of Indigenous Relations at this point in time for moving forward and actually taking into consideration the intense ability to have prosperity at this time and to work together in collaboration.

The Acting Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? I will recognize the Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's always a pleasure to rise in this place and speak on these important issues.

I do want to thank a few people today. I want to thank the minister for bringing forward this bill. I think overall it's a bill that does move towards meaningful work towards reconciliation, and it's an important investment. I think that's why, for a large part I believe, our caucus is largely in support of this bill.

I also want to speak specifically here about the amendment that my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford has brought in. I want to speak to why it's so important that we do move forward with this amendment. When we look at some of the things that the minister was saying and how he was referring to the corporation being used in the future and how they have already scoped it out, this plan for what they want the corporation to focus on at the beginning and how it's these natural resources and projects and related infrastructure that's so important to them, and the minister had spoken about how the government is only so focused on jobs right now, well, Mr. Chair, I hate to break it to the minister, but there are jobs in other sectors than natural resources and related infrastructure. There are jobs in many different ranges of facilities, and those types of projects also deserve a chance to move forward. Those types of projects are important in communities. Those types of projects are something that are going to be able to move forward if we were to be less restrictive in this bill.

We speak often in this place about how government chooses to govern by regulation. In fact, Mr. Chair, I think this is one of those cases where kicking some things out of legislation might actually benefit the bill. That doesn't happen very often. Quite often it's better to be more restrictive in our legislation and keep things very tight and compact so that it must come back to this House every single time. But no, I actually believe that right now our goal, if we want to invoke economic prosperity, as the government members like to speak at such length about, if we want to actually get this bill and this corporation doing what it was designed to do, would be to let indigenous people choose what they want to build. Let indigenous people choose the projects they want to support and they want to move forward with.

I think it's not something that we should have the minister – and I have much respect for the minister and his office, but he's only been in this role for a few months here, not even yet a year. Really, to try and give him the obligation to tell indigenous people what they have to build and what types of projects they should support: I think that's something that this House should not support. I think that this amendment would allow us to have more meaningful work. It would allow us to have more meaningful access. I think that when we talk about this bill and how this amendment would make it better, we can look and see that, really, this isn't the end. I'm concerned about things like what the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka was speaking about earlier and the type of language that was being used around how basically the only thing we need to do is give indigenous people economic prosperity.

As we all know in this Chamber, there are many calls to action, and not all of them are only about the economy. There are many calls to action that we have to move on to have meaningful reconciliation between the government and indigenous people, indigenous people across not just Alberta but all of Canada.

That is something that I want to make sure we drive home here today, that this is something that we need to commit to, but it is not the end. It is a first step. It is something this government is moving forward with, but there is much more to do, and I want that to be very clear for every member here, for every single person that speaks. We understand that this corporation will help in some of those cases, but it is not the only thing that we have to do.

Really, Mr. Chair, when we look at how this bill is set up, how this act is established, and at the things that this amendment tries to address, I think it's really interesting that this government on one hand is going to be giving 4 and a half billion dollars away to the wealthiest corporations and on the other hand is going to be limiting the type of investments that indigenous people can do with the money that they're coming forward with with this corporation. I think that's something that's very interesting. It's something that I don't think is the right move forward, that if we're going to be establishing Crown corporations, we should be restricting the types of investments they can do while on the other hand giving money away to the wealthiest and most profitable corporations in this entire province and the multinationals as well. I think that's something that we should be concerned about.

I'm going to be supporting this amendment. I think it's important that we don't leave all of this work up to regulation. We just let the corporation of indigenous people choose what they want to move forward with. I think it's important that we give them full transparency in this act, and I think that this amendment would help us do that better.

Mr. Chair, I'd urge all members to support this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Acting Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, we will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Acting Chair: Back to the main bill. Any members wishing to speak to Bill 14? The Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to start by thanking the Minister of Indigenous Relations for his work and his commitment to developing this legislation. I understand that he has spent a lot of time meeting with indigenous communities and business leaders in order to form an understanding of what this legislation should look like in order to best serve Alberta's indigenous population. His commitment and the time he has spent on this incredibly admirable endeavour are amazing.

There is no reason that Alberta should continue to only make symbolic gestures to our First Nations people when we have the tools and the opportunity to make life better for a significant portion of our First Nations people. I'm glad that this government understands that when indigenous communities benefit from our resources, that impact is felt all across Alberta, whether from helping to ensure greater economic opportunity to the creation of more avenues with which to promote and pursue reconciliation. I sincerely hope this is seen as a massive step forward for reconciliation.

I tell you, Mr. Chair, that I was particularly touched in the summer in my own riding when I was meeting with an indigenous community leader who was so excited about this bill, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. He struck a meeting with me in Sherwood Park back in July. His name is Bill, and Bill's story, just like the story of so many indigenous people and communities, is one of incredible perseverance and inspiration.

Just sharing his story, he came from a difficult background, separated from his family as a youth, and had quite a life journey but eventually found his way back into his community, in this case in British Columbia, as a young man. He eventually honed his skills as a community leader in indigenous communities in British Columbia and got involved in helping with economic development in these communities, to great success across many First Nations communities in British Columbia. Now we're so happy to have Bill here in Alberta and in Sherwood Park. He was telling me he was so happy with this act, where, finally, an order of government, in this case the provincial government, is engaged in meaningful, substantive partnership with indigenous communities, including as well the Métis. He is very excited about that. Bill is a great community leader. His whole family, about 20 people, live within Sherwood Park, and they attend Sherwood Park Alliance church. I'm just so proud to mention his story here today.

One of the main issues that we see facing First Nations groups in Canada is a lack of economic prospects. That's not right. Those who were first on this land shouldn't be left without the economic opportunity to increase their quality of life. I'm glad this government recognizes that this is an area where previous governments have fallen short. I'm so glad to see our government recognizing not just the economic value that this investment brings but also the opportunities for reconciliation that the creation of this corporation enables.

This bill addresses recommendation 92(ii) of the truth and reconciliation report in a very unique way and one that I think opens up a number of opportunities for success. Recommendation 92(ii) reads:

Ensure that Aboriginal peoples have equitable access to jobs, training, and education opportunities in the corporate sector, and that Aboriginal communities gain long-term sustainable benefits from economic development projects.

This bill doesn't just ensure equitable access or that communities will gain long-term sustainable benefits. It actually puts the keys in the hands of our indigenous communities. It gives control and vested interest in the future of Alberta's economy and natural resource sector. It grants massive opportunity for employment for indigenous groups, and I think this shift from forcing First Nations to be dependent on government to a policy of supporting our indigenous peoples and creating an economic path for them to chart their own path forward is a massive step forward on the road to reconciliation.

But let's also talk about what, beyond the reconciliatory benefits, this bill could mean for our First Nations communities here in Alberta. To do this, I'm going to focus on just one of the success stories of First Nations involvement in Alberta's energy sector. Let's talk about what has been accomplished by the creation of the Frog Lake Energy Resources Corp., or FLERC. FLERC was founded in 2000 and is owned by the Frog Lake First Nation. It was launched without any assets, production, cash flow, or staff but quickly found success by partnering with oil companies that wanted to use the territory of the Frog Lake First Nation. As a result, FLERC developed an aggressive drilling program that meant that the Frog Lake Nation was involved in every project undertaken on the reserve. This includes over 600 wells, and when oil was booming, Frog Lake was producing more than 3,500 barrels a day.

This isn't just a company run like most either, and its approach shows a great opportunity for practical application of reconciliation. FLERC's teepee principles ensure that they are committed to core values and a work-life culture that elevates their employees. Their key values of respect, hope, humility, kinship, sharing, and thankfulness haven't just helped them in the boom times but have helped their communities as they have had to lay a few people off following the recent volatility in the oil industry.

Frog Lake Oilfield Services is another company owned by Frog Lake First Nation, and it conducts the project management at FLERC at their facilities around the reserve. Both of these companies create a large number of jobs on the reserve, creating economic prosperity for more of the nation as the increased income allows others to invest into their community.

But another thing sets Frog Lake apart from most energy companies: the profits of Frog Lake Energy Resources Corp. are reinvested into the community, building homes and improving the standard of living for all on the reserve. Recently FLERC spent $35 million in buying Pengrowth's cogen plant in northeastern Alberta. Despite the downturn in Alberta's oil market in 2015, Frog Lake didn't stop investing, and they hope that they and their 3,000 members can become self-sustaining as a nation. They plan to continue investing in projects such as cogen facilities to bring further wealth to their members.

Now, I want you all to imagine that this incredible success story could be replicated across every First Nations group in Alberta. This bill helps to see that possibility become a reality. We've seen how impactful this can be for our First Nations, the possibility of employment, investment, and economic opportunity for every First Nation in Alberta. This vision is why I am so thankful to Minister Wilson for all of his work on this legislation . . .

The Acting Chair: Names.

Mr. Walker: Yes. I see that. Thank you.

. . . and his consultation in meeting so many First Nations across Alberta. I would encourage all members of this House to support this bill and to encourage the First Nations in many of our ridings to take advantage of it.

I just want to reiterate, finally, Mr. Chair, just how excited I am about this bill and how, for example, my constituent Bill is also excited about this. You know, there are such great opportunities. We have the third-largest indigenous population in Canada and the only land-based Métis settlement in Canada as well.

I hope all members will support this bill. Thank you, all, for your time.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? I will recognize the associate minister of mental health.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thanks for the opportunity to share my thoughts in support of this bill. I wanted to support this bill on a couple of fronts. As a social worker I have had the privilege of working in aboriginal communities throughout my career, and most recently as Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions I toured the province. I had the opportunity to visit the Blood reserve. I also had the opportunity, when I went to Poundmaker's, to celebrate their powwow with the Premier and the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Let me tell you this. When we partner with indigenous communities, I discover that there are so many unique, creative ways that they approach the issues and challenges. Let me give you an example. In the opioid crisis we're talking about, the Blood reserve definitely is one of the areas that has been impacted very severely. But in looking at their creative solutions, when they did respond to this, they worked with EMS and created a culturally sensitive approach to manage the detox centre. That, I've got to say, is one of the very few different ones in the province taking that approach.

When I visited Poundmaker's, the same thing: they incorporated the healing process, using the aboriginal culture and elders in creating very unique programs there. I vividly see the impact, that people are inspired and taking different paths to address the mental health and addictions crisis.

When we think of this act, that is giving the opportunity for our indigenous communities to directly partner with our resource development sector and work in partnership and in co-ownership in developing this sector, to me, that's cutting edge, again exhibiting a very unique, different approach to this. To me, we are very fortunate to have a government that finds a very tangible, specific, and long-lasting, cutting-edge approach for helping aboriginal folks.

I had listened to lots of members talking about, you know, what the previous government did and what others did, whether it was a gesture. This is more an action. Let me tell you this. Through my career I've seen so many efforts tried in the past to help our indigenous communities. More often than not it is money that's given to them, it is a program designed for them, it is services provided to them, and for the longest part many of those efforts didn't really yield significant changes in the community. In large part, I believe it is not a true partnership that builds on the strengths and the uniqueness of the aboriginal community.

But when I saw our government propose this one – so specific, so tangible – creating the money that is available for the aboriginal community, giving them an opportunity where they have a guaranteed loan, giving them the opportunity where they can directly participate in the business development, in shares, in how to manage the resource development, I was so delighted. This gives me the fresh air of a very different approach in developing our indigenous communities.

Actually, during my campaign time I had the opportunity to dialogue with the community leader who is developing Eagle Spirit Energy, Calvin Helin, and when he spoke of his proposal at that time, he talked about addressing poverty. When we do ownership with the resource development, that will fundamentally change the game, and he calls that kind of a proposal transformational. I was so touched by that idea at the time. That was prior to our party developing a platform on this. When I saw later on that that kind of idea was brought into our party platform, that now as a new government we are implementing that, this is a remarkable – remarkable – example, in my view, of a government that is so committed to doing something real for the people.

For those of you who know me, I was born and raised in communist China. I'm so fortunate that I came to western Canada and have my master's and experienced the latter part of my life, or the other half of my life, in such a wonderful democracy. I came to a conclusion on my own that it doesn't matter how you label your government, that it doesn't matter what you say you want to do for people. What really matters is if an order of government can focus on the real needs of people and create opportunities to make a long-lasting change for people. That is a great government. I watched even in communist China how when the leaders focused on the economy – and over the last 20-some years a drastic change in people's quality of life in China. Actually, I just returned from a vacation there recently; it further enhanced my belief that even with a communist government, when they focus on the right issue for the people, people's livelihoods actually increase.

I see so much similarity to the current UCP government when we put economy, jobs, pipelines as the top priority, and when I see a proposal like this to tangibly, specifically bring our indigenous community on par with this piece, this is truly transformational. This is why I feel so passionate. I want to stand up to speak from my heart. I want to support this, and I urge our government and the rest of the members of this Assembly: let's put aside those political differences for the people of Alberta, for the people of our indigenous communities in our province. Let's put aside those little silly political games that you do, the meaningless amendment after amendment to delay for no purpose. Let's put your heart in the right place.

This is a great bill, and I'm so thankful to our minister for championing this, so thankful to our Premier for taking very specific steps to make tangible, realistic change. I'm looking forward to the long-lasting impact this one will produce for our province and for our indigenous communities.

Thank you, and thanks for the opportunity to share my thoughts.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm honoured to rise here today and speak to Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. The past couple of days I have witnessed my colleagues speak to this bill, and I'm proud to add my name to that list.

To start off the fall session, our government has introduced Bill 14, which allows indigenous communities to be stakeholders and invest in major natural resource projects across the province. I want to take a moment to thank the Minister of Indigenous Relations and his staff for their hard work on this bill. This is yet another campaign commitment that has come to legislation. This is another example of promise made, promise kept.

A commitment is long overdue for indigenous people. We are making life better for indigenous people. I couldn't think of a better way to begin the fall session of 2019 than by introducing Bill 14, the AIOC Act. I think it shows what a priority it is for this government and our minister.

Madam Chair, in April of this year our government was given the largest mandate in Alberta's electoral history to make life better for all Albertans. Bill 14 will set us down the path to economic reconciliation, allowing indigenous communities to own and invest in major capital projects. Bill 14 is the first of its kind in the country. If passed, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act will allocate $1 billion in loan guarantees to help indigenous communities. This will allow indigenous co-ownership and create a working relationship on major resource development projects. First Nation communities will now benefit from the resources that have brought such tremendous prosperity to our province.

Madam Chair, for the longest time indigenous people in this province were mistreated. Our UCP government believes a better future lies ahead for indigenous people in Alberta. Real, concrete action is needed to make life better for all indigenous communities. This government believes that Bill 14 is a step in the right direction.

Over the summer our Premier and the Minister of Indigenous Relations met with numerous indigenous leaders. We have been present. We have listened. We want to do things differently from past governments. We want to take action in making lives better for indigenous individuals and communities.

Before introducing this bill, our United Conservative government consulted with over 200 stakeholders in indigenous communities. I'm proud to be part of a government that takes pride in consulting with Albertans before introducing legislation. This critical step was lacking in previous administrations. We want to create a strong partnership with everyone.

Many indigenous communities have the tools and resources to succeed, and we want to help them reach prosperity. Bill 14 will do a tremendous amount to bring indigenous communities into the fold to enjoy the same prosperity we find across this great province. Those who are willing to invest in themselves and participate will find that Bill 14 is a tremendous opportunity for indigenous people.

As the MLA for Drumheller-Stettler I have travelled long distances. I've witnessed many individuals create good lives for themselves, yet for many indigenous people that call this province home, poverty is real, and access to good jobs is lacking. They're held up by red tape and bureaucracy that limit their ability to share in the prosperity Alberta is renowned for.

Madam Chair, indigenous people face many struggles in life. They face numerous life challenges and structural barriers, including layer upon layer of government bureaucracy. I would like to point out that in our election platform we stated, "A United Conservative government will partner with Alberta's indigenous peoples in pursuit of reconciliation, inclusion, and opportunity." If this piece of legislation passes, the revenue streams from these natural resource projects can be put back into indigenous communities. This government understands that indigenous people want a piece and a say in the development of Alberta's natural resources. One of the many obligations of a government is to put the voters first.

Madam Chair, I knocked on many doors during the campaign. The biggest issues I heard from voters were jobs, economy, and pipelines. I made the promise to my constituents during the campaign that a United Conservative government will put Albertans back to work. In our first session we focused on getting Albertans back to work. The legislation passed during that time highlighted that fact. We introduced the Carbon Tax Repeal Act, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, and the job creators' tax cuts, to name a few. It only seems right that we pick up this session where we left off. Bill 14 will help put Albertans back to work. My colleagues and I understand that our natural resource industry employs many Albertans. Bill 14 will help revive our natural resource sector.

As Conservatives we understand how important it is to have our natural resource sector thriving again. When our economy and natural resource sector do well, we all see the benefits as a result. Our communities and families will thrive. This government will continue to stand up for our natural resource sector. We won't apologize for this industry, that employs thousands of Albertans. We will fight back against those who are vying to land-lock Alberta's oil.

Madam Chair, we saw our past Premier and this previous NDP government oppose and actively protest the Northern Gateway pipeline, a pipeline that was unanimously supported by over 30 First Nations along its route. Indigenous people along with many other Albertans understand that we need to support our natural resource sector. Bill 14 will help provide financial and capacity-building support for First Nations looking to invest in the natural resource sector.

I had the pleasure over the summer of touring with Chief Joseph Weasel Child of Siksika Nation. We were in the Drumheller valley doing First Nations consultations on Drumheller's flood mitigation plan. He told me the exact same thing that our Minister of Indigenous Relations quoted him as saying. He said: this is real; this is the first government that's reached out with something real that can make a difference. Those were his words, not mine.

Thank you to everyone that was involved in making this platform promise become a reality. None of this would have been possible without your hard work. I'm supremely proud to support this bill.

Thank you for your time, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I welcome the opportunity to speak a little bit more to this bill. I find myself needing to comment on some of the words of the Member for Calgary-Foothills because it identifies exactly the problem that I'm trying to address in terms of the issue of government telling indigenous people what it is they're allowed to invest in and what they're not.

I just want it on the record that it was a UCP member that compared the present government to the communist China government, not anybody on this side of the House. I just want to be very clear about that. His comments were that when the government, this communist government, really focused on the economy, it benefited all people, and he somehow seemed to imply that the government rather than people deciding what should happen in the economy is a positive thing. A bit curious coming from the UCP side of the House. But I accept that that's indeed what they're thinking when they create a bill that says that the government will decide and that the people will not decide what investments are necessary. So I think you kind of proved my point in a slightly odd way.

I think, you know, we've addressed that amendment trying to broaden out the types of things that people can seek funding on, but we still have the question of who it is that makes the decisions here in this bill, and it's one that I'm very concerned about. I know that the Minister of Indigenous Relations said that one of the reasons he opposed the last amendment was that they wanted to ensure that these were viable business projects that were moving ahead. Again, I'm very concerned to hear that, that the government are the only people who can decide what are viable business projects. I just want to remind the minister – he already knows this, but for the record we'll remind him – that indigenous people have been making excellent decisions about viable business projects in many ways in this province for many years, including at least five corporations specifically designed to make good business decisions.

I'll just read some of them into the record here because I notice that these corporations are not in the act. There's no decision to provide increased revenues or resources to these corporations, who have demonstrated that they can work with the indigenous community because they are indigenous themselves and can be successful. We have the Indian Business Corporation. We have the Alberta Indian Investment Corporation. We have Apeetogosan (Métis) Development corporation, which, by the way, received an award two years ago as the best investment corporation in Canada in their category. We also have the Settlement Investment Corporation for Métis settlements, and we have the Community Futures Treaty Seven, all organizations which have demonstrated the ability to work within the indigenous community, to bring indigenous voices to the decision-making because indeed they are all staffed by indigenous people and have helped to create a number of indigenous businesses. In fact, if you actually believe that success should be rewarded, you should be taking this billion dollars and dividing it up between these five corporations because they have demonstrated it.

I just want to also point out that I'm a bit concerned that the Member for Calgary-Foothills has said in this House, after praising Communist China, that having an opposition that proposes amendments to a bill somehow is game playing. It tells me that he doesn't understand the nature of Westminster democracy, and I'm very concerned about that. You know, he actually got up and said that government should decide and opposition shouldn't propose. I can't believe that that's what I'm hearing from the other side of the House in a democracy of this nature. It is my job to actually propose amendments, and I would hope that the government would actually listen to the amendments and make good decisions based on the merits of that and not simply dismiss them as games because they would like government to have ultimate power like they have in Communist China. [interjections] I didn't bring this up. Let me be really clear. It was not this side of the House that made those comparisons, and I just really want to point out how appalling that is in, you know, essentially the centre of Westminster democracy in this part of the world.

I've identified a number of corporations that could have been financed through this bill in order to ensure that the actual decision-making in this bill is in the hands of indigenous people. These are people who have demonstrated through years of work the ability to successfully fund indigenous businesses and could have continued to do so if you really wanted indigenous voices to be at the forefront of making decisions in terms of economic development in indigenous communities.

On that theme, I am very concerned about another section of the bill, and that is the establishment of a board to make decisions about all of these matters. I've already pointed out and, actually, indeed the Minister of Indigenous Relations pointed out the fact that in section 2(12) it says that "the Minister may make regulations." Of course, in this case the minister identified this as a positive because he said that under that section the minister would be able to include other kinds of investment should they choose to do that, which is why he was bringing it up. But I want to point out that it doesn't say that the board can make decisions; that is, that the indigenous people can make decisions to expand this. It says that the minister can, so we're back to Communist China here again.

I'm very concerned about this. I'm concerned that while you're saying that you have had extensive consultation with the indigenous community in the creation of this bill, which actually I accept – I have enough contacts in the indigenous community to know that the minister, I think, engaged in some good due diligence and was around the province and, I know, brought some of the other ministers to some of the meetings. So I accept that the intent was clear, that the minister did wish to seek out the voice of indigenous people and give them an opportunity to speak to something that would be very positive for them. That's why I'm supporting this bill. Thank you, Minister. I appreciate that.

But now I'm concerned that you take the bill and then you stick a knife in the back of it. The knife in the back of it is that suddenly we're back to the minister making decisions, section 2(12). Then when it says that we will create a board, it's already undermined the ability of the board to make decisions because it's given those decisions to the minister.

Furthermore, in the description of the board it says, section 5(1), that the creation of the board will be "subject to the regulations." They're not telling us who's on the board or how those decisions will be made. They're not even telling us how many people are going to be on the board. One thing that they are absolutely doing is that they are not telling us how many indigenous people are on the board.

I think that if you are truly committed to hearing indigenous voices, then you must make sure that indigenous people are on the board. As a result, I have an amendment I'd like to introduce to the House on that section right now.

Thank you. I'll wait.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2. Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I will read the amendment. I move that Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act, be amended in section 5 by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) A majority of the directors appointed under subsection (1) must be members of an indigenous group identified in section 3(1)(a), (b) or (c).

It's pretty simple and straightforward. I like to keep my amendments really clean because it isn't a game. It isn't a game for me. I'm actually telling you what I think will make the bill better. I'm not trying to attack your bill; I'm trying to support your bill.

I am looking at the intent of that bill as described by many of you here in this House, you know, previously under second reading and now, subsequently, in committee, where you described what it is that you believed would be positive and wonderful about this bill. Almost to a person you identified that it was time that indigenous people had opportunities and decision-making power in their own lives, and often you identified structural barriers that prevented indigenous people from having those kind of decision-making abilities within the systems that we had constructed and forced them to live within. Yet when it comes time for the actual decision-making, who is going to decide what is a viable business project? Who's going to sign on the dotted line that, yes, we will backstop X number of dollars for this particular interest? There is not one single word in this bill that identifies that it should be indigenous people.

After hearing many of you say that ideas and values and programs should not be imposed on indigenous people but should be done in partnership with indigenous people, I haven't seen you take action on that, and that very deeply concerns me. If you fundamentally do believe that this is a bill that respects indigenous people and provides them the opportunity to act on their own behalf in ways we know they're fully competent to do because, of course, we've identified at least five corporations already existing in the province of Alberta that are owned and operated by indigenous people – we know they're perfectly capable – then I would question why you haven't asked these five corporations to step in and form the board. Why haven't you gone to the people who have demonstrated their success, fulfilled your own mandate that you have identified, and ensured that the construction of the board is indeed indigenous people? Now, I would think that you probably should go to 100 per cent of the board members being indigenous people, but I accept that you've decided this is a partnership and that you would like to have indigenous people working with nonindigenous people to ensure the well-being of all the indigenous communities through the success of these various loans and programs.

I've been reasonable and careful in my submission of an amendment and have suggested that we take the simple rule, which is widely accepted in government in Canada, that 50 per cent plus one is a reasonable level of representation in the determination of success. As a result, we would like to see this government simply accept an amendment that does not change the intent of their act – in fact, I think it enhances the intent of their act; it is completely in line with what I have heard people speak to for the last two days – and enshrine in the act itself the guarantee that indigenous people will have the control necessary, and that is the majority control necessary, not just a voice, 1 in 10 or 1 in 12, but a majority ability to make decisions about what happens in the indigenous community so that it is indigenous people that are saying yes or no with the enhancement of their relationship with nonindigenous people, seeking advice, perhaps, where necessary, encouraging their participation and their vote, but ultimately it is indigenous people that will be able to cast the majority vote, 50 per cent plus one.

I ask you to support this amendment not because it's some kind of trifling game but because we truly believe in what we say, putting our action forward where our mouth is and ensuring that indigenous people have the voice and that they can't be undermined by nonindigenous people. Fifty per cent plus one.

Thank you.

Mr. Wilson: I want to thank the hon. member for his input and for being so engaged on the topic. I do appreciate your input, and I do value it. Thank you.

Just to speak to our engagement a little bit, we did spend most of the summer on the road engaging with eight different organizations and over 200 indigenous business and political leaders from throughout industry. I did take their feedback into account when we developed this bill. Our bill is meant to fulfill our mandate of priorities of being partners in prosperity with indigenous communities and also to get people back to work and get our economy back on track. The Alberta natural resource sector, a large part of the Alberta energy sector, is a huge driver of our economic output, and the AIOC has a strategic mandate to support our indigenous communities in participating in the natural resource economy, of which they are extremely supportive. Many of the chiefs and community members that I've engaged with have expressed their eagerness in applying for this fund. We heard from the indigenous community that there are barriers to participating in equity ownership in major projects, and that is why it's important to set up a fund focused on addressing this barrier.

In terms of the other entrepreneurial opportunities that the opposition Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has raised such as tourism and retail entrepreneurship, we will continue to support that through other tools. The Alberta aboriginal business investment fund continues to be available to support these initiatives. We'll also work with other ministries such as our ministry of economic development and tourism to support these initiatives.

As to indigenous representation on the board, our plan is to include indigenous representation but to be flexible as to how it happens instead of laying it out in a specific number or a ratio in legislation. The board is meant to be a competency-based board, not a political board. It's going to focus on making sure that the projects that are chosen are commercially viable. Indigenous representation on the board will be laid out in policy and reflect the many talented and competent indigenous people that we have in this province. We want to make sure that the board is arm's length so they'll be making the decisions. It won't be political decisions.

As I've spoken to indigenous leaders throughout the summer, I've made it very clear that there will be a lot of indigenous people on the board. We have Treaty 6, 7, and 8 and the Métis people; I want to include all of them in it. It may end up being all indigenous people. There are, like you say, a lot of very competent business-people out there that are working in the industry. On my ministerial advisory committee that's helping me steer this along, I have one of the best philanthropists in Alberta, Nicole Bourque-Bouchier. She has over 1,000 employees in her company, and she's on my ministerial advisory committee, helping us steer this along. Like I said, I've got the president and chief executive officer of the First Nations Bank of Canada helping us steer this along. We've got a lot of indigenous input as to how we're putting this together.

It is such an important issue. In my area where I grew up, there was a huge oil boom. There was a huge gas plant there, hundreds of employees. How many indigenous employees? I can count them on one hand. I knew him; I can literally count him on one finger. That's why it's so important. Unfortunately, he's passed, but that's why it's so important. We have to have that input. It's for them, and that's why we're doing this.

I'm assuring you that we will be making sure that we do have indigenous input on that. Like I said, we will look at that, and it will be in the regulations. We'll ensure that there is representation there, but it has to be a competency board. We want to make sure that there's the opportunity for other people to sit on the board as well.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Until a couple minutes ago, I had some real hope in this place that the very corporation that is being designed with indigenous peoples would have indigenous people on the board. Now, no offence, Minister, but I'm not going to take you at your word and believe, when you say: trust me; we'll have a number of indigenous people.

There's an opportunity right now, today, to put it in the legislation to ensure that there is at least half or a majority, a little over half, of indigenous representatives on the board. You would think that they would be entrusted to take care of the very corporation – because the challenge, government: not putting a majority of indigenous people responsible for their own corporation looks like another way that the government knows better and we can't trust indigenous people to be able to manage their own corporation. It's disturbing, because if I am to take the minister at his word that potentially, as he just said, the whole board could be indigenous people, then this should be simple. Enshrining this in legislation ensures that there isn't a game of politics, that there isn't a bunch of nonindigenous people telling the indigenous people how to run their corporation.

Let's remember that between 2012 and 2015 there was a piece of legislation that the former PCs brought in on aboriginal consultation. The irony of that one was that they didn't consult with a single indigenous community on the very bill that had the title in the name, which once again was top-down, government-imposed, “we’re going to tell you how to function within a system; we’re going to tell you how you can participate.”

I think, you know, the fact of the matter is that I thought that we as an opposition party presented a reasonable amendment. We’re not saying that the whole board has to be made up of indigenous participation but that, as we’ve heard from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, there are incredibly talented, well-respected members of the business community who are indigenous, who I’m sure would love an opportunity to be at the table, to be able to help make decisions on the direction, the focus, the approval of the projects. This is empowering them, because right now, the way the legislation reads, it doesn’t empower them.

I mean, my concern with a well-intentioned bill is that much of the decision-making remains in regulations. The government can talk about how it means they can be more nimble. No. What it means is that your cabinet gets to make the decisions, and they don’t actually get debated in this place. I can tell you that you folks used that argument a few times in the last four years – and there’s merit to that argument – that when legislation is completely bare bones, it make it very difficult because we all know that the devil is in the details.

But this ensures that there is going to be adequate representation and participation, which, you know, for me, is critical. In fact, I think it’s paramount to ensure that the very people who this is going to affect have a say, that they are sitting at the table. Otherwise, this very much could be a bunch of nonindigenous people telling indigenous people how the very corporation that is set up in partnership is not really in partnership, or maybe it is in principle but not in fact. So I really wish that the government reconsiders adopting this amendment because I also think, quite frankly, it sends a really, really wrong message to indigenous communities: “We don’t trust you. We don’t trust you enough to put you on a board. We don’t want you in charge of your own destiny. We will decide who’s on this board because we know better, because government knows better.” That’s the message that it sends to indigenous communities.

Again, I hope that there will be a strong number of board members made up of the indigenous community. But this provides a guarantee not just for all 87 members in this House; this sends a really strong message to the indigenous communities: you will make up the majority of this board; we trust you, we trust your judgment, your business acumen, and we want to do it in true partnership. Without putting this into the legislation, there is no guarantee that that will happen.

You know what? I want to take the minister at his word. I know that he is an honest man, but he may not always be the Minister of Indigenous Relations, and future ministers may decide: “You know what? I am going to use this as a political football, and we are going to appoint who we want.” I mean, that is the challenge when it’s not enshrined in legislation. It makes it more difficult for a future minister, a future government to come along and say: “You know what? We’re not going to respect the fact that this should be a board comprised at least 50 per cent plus one of indigenous people.”

I do hope that in the course of the debate – I’m sure that there are many people that are going to be interested in speaking to this, and I encourage that – there will be a reconsideration on behalf of the government that this amendment is meant and coming forward in the true spirit of ensuring that there is indigenous participation. This is not a political game. This is saying that the board should be made up, at least half or 50 per cent plus one, of indigenous participation.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Madam Chair. Because my name was mentioned earlier, from the early comment, I’d like to have an opportunity to clarify what I said. I wish to clarify. I want to be very clear in the mention about China that the focus on the economy and the magnitude that hundreds of millions of people have been lifted from poverty because of the focus on the economy and jobs: that’s the point I was trying to say.

Let me be clear. I will never compare Alberta to anything like Communist China nor a UCP government to the Chinese government. That is totally not the conversation I was trying to say. I would never want to suggest that we’re acting like Communist China at all. My point in saying that even a Communist China, nondemocratic, when they focus on the right cause, can lift people out of poverty is a purpose that, you know, for this act – it gives the opportunity to develop, flourish the entrepreneurship of our indigenous community. That’s the real beauty of this bill.

That’s why I’m opposed to having any kind of a meaningless, insignificant amendment here and there just delaying the bill. That’s what I want to clarify, that I want to leave for the record.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Wilson: Thanks for clearing that up.

I just want to ask all members of the House – right now the board selection is open. If you reach out to your networks and if you have good people that you think would serve on the board – there are so many talented indigenous people out there; we’ve got them in all of our communities; they’re in the cities – reach out to them and tell them to go onto the government website for public board selection and put their name forward. I’d enjoy seeing as many names put forward as we can find because there are so many good people out there. I would ask you to reach out to your networks. I’m sure you all know a lot of good people that could sit on this board, so tell them to reach out.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I want to start by saying that I accept the apology by the Member for Calgary-Foothills, and we’ll leave it at that and move on.

I also wanted to address a couple of other issues. As the previous speaker from the opposition side has indicated, we really would like to see it enshrined in the legislation that indigenous people are on the board and in a majority position, not just, you know, token representation as some minor part of the board. I concur and reinforce the comments made by that member who said that actually we have good faith in the present Minister of Indigenous Relations that he will be true to his word. You know, it gives us some comfort, but we do know that ministers change. It’s the very nature of the work in Westminster democracies that we change our ministers for a variety of reasons and we don’t know about the next minister.

I can tell you that there have been concerns. I mean, in the last Legislature I worked very hard to get indigenous representation on the board of the AGLC because, you know, I’d had indigenous chiefs and other leaders come to me and say: we have all this money coming from our casinos going into the First Nations development fund, but we have nobody on the board to make decisions around this. So I went to our Minister of Finance at the time, who was responsible, and said: “Can we do something about this? Can we create perhaps another board or something?” We struggled with the answer. These are complicated questions. But one of the things we did do is that we did appoint a previous chief from Tsuut’ina First Nation to that board. We thought: okay; maybe this isn’t perfect, but certainly we have created something new that had not existed before. We had indigenous representation on the board making decisions about the monies coming from the casinos.

Unfortunately, shortly after this government took office, they removed that person from the board. They eliminated the only indigenous voice on the AGLC. Because we have seen that happen by this very government, unprotected by the Minister of Indigenous Relations apparently, we're asking that that not be allowed to occur in future, that if representation of indigenous people is to be guaranteed, we ensure it by putting it into the legislation.

In no way does putting the language of majority participation on this board change one iota what has just been promised in this House by this minister. This minister has said that that is the intention; they'll do it. If that's the intention, if that's where they're going, if they are going to ensure indigenous representation on this board, why not actually put it in writing? It always makes me worried when somebody says: yes, I promise to do something, but let's not write that down. If I went to a car salesman, and he said, "Oh, yeah, absolutely; this car has never been in an accident," it wouldn't stop me from asking for the history of that car because you want to see it in writing that there hasn't been an accident. It's the same way here. We're simply asking you to put your name where you put your voice, and that is to guarantee majority participation by the indigenous community on this particular board.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford again for moving this second amendment here. I think it's something that's very important we talk about, and it's disappointing, what we've heard from the government on this as well. It's disappointing that the government doesn't understand that just saying that they will do something isn't good enough. It doesn't go far enough. I remember quite vividly members of the now government bench, when they were in opposition, telling us the exact same thing. I remember quite vividly the current Minister of Transportation saying this to us, actually: well, we won't just trust you.

Through you, Madam Chair, to the minister: I would love to trust you, but the reality is that we should be enshrining this in legislation. The legislation can be made better, and I know the minister understands that because the minister spoke at length about how important it will be to have indigenous representation on this board. So the minister himself, I know, understands how important it is to have this representation on the board and understands that having them be a majority of the directors on the board will allow the indigenous people to have that ownership and to be able to make decisions about their own futures. That is something that I know is important to the minister. It's something that I know is important to all members of the opposition here.

That's why I think it's so disappointing – it's so disappointing – that the front bench has been told to sit down and that they can't make any changes. It's so disappointing that they're being told that they have to give out a 4 and a half billion dollar giveaway on one hand and on the other they can't even let indigenous people be the choosers of their own future, the deciders of their own destinies. That's something that's very disappointing, Madam Chair. It's something that every single member of the government benches should be concerned about. It's something that every single member of the government bench should be thinking very deeply about.

This is a simple amendment. It's something that is very commonly accepted, as my colleague had mentioned, across many jurisdictions and in many different contexts, that 50 per cent plus one is all it takes to say that there is adequate representation and that these indigenous groups will have the ability to control their own destinies. That's something that I think is very important, and it's why we are going to fight to ensure that their voices are heard in this space. Even though the minister has spoken about how he understands that these voices are important and the minister has spoken about how the corporation definitely needs indigenous perspectives on the board, the minister is not willing to actually do the work and not willing to actually show indigenous people that this government is committed. It's not actually willing to show indigenous people that this government actually understands the issues, and that's disappointing, Madam Chair.

I do take the minister at face value when he says that he understands its importance, but what I don't give the minister credit for, Madam Chair, is that he will then go out and actually fulfill that understanding, fulfill that promise. That's something that people will remember and that people understand does not show meaningful consultation, does not show meaningful reconciliation, and does not show that this government actually cares about what happens with this corporation. It shows that this government thinks they know best and thinks they can go tell indigenous peoples how to run their corporations and how to invest and how to do all these things.

The minister said, "Well, if you know anybody, please ask them to apply," and that's great. There are, of course, open application processes in this province, Madam Chair. But the reality is that this is a system that is designed to not necessarily have that voice. It's designed for this government to be able to exclude that voice if they so choose, and that's something that every single person in this House should be concerned about. It's something that every single person in this House needs to look at and say: how come we were so quick to ram through a 4 and a half billion dollar giveaway to already profitable corporations, but when we're trying to support indigenous corporations, we won't stop and just vote for them to have their own representation?

That's the most simple thing in our Westminster parliamentary democracy system, Madam Chair, that people should be represented. This corporation, which is designed – it's in the name, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. It's in the name, Madam Chair, that the indigenous people should be guaranteed representation in their own corporation, in the corporation that's intended to help them. That we wouldn't enshrine that representation in it: I think that's something that we should be very concerned about. I think it's something that perhaps members of the government are ashamed of right now.

I want to say that this is our chance to make this piece of legislation better. This is our chance to accept a simple amendment. My colleague the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I know, won't shy away from saying that he's not usually a man of few words, much like myself, but this amendment is. This amendment does not have any games, as the government has concerns about. This amendment is not trying to play politics or partisanship. This amendment is actually trying to make the bill better. It's actually trying to make the corporation more functional and more representative, and that's something I want every single person to think about.

I'm going to be supporting this amendment, I know all of my colleagues here in the opposition will be supporting this amendment, and I hope members of the government will have a long discussion about this and understand the importance of it.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to comment on the despicable display I just heard there. The hon. minister has worked very hard. I think he made it clear that he's talked to over 200 people, many, many aboriginal business and community leaders. If there's anybody in this Chamber that's done their work on a bill, it's this minister on this bill that we're talking about right here. When the members across start talking about who's done the work on it, you should actually be a little bit more fact based with your comments, because the hon. member that made those comments was very poorly informed. I'm going to assume he was telling the truth. That only leaves very, very poorly informed. He had not listened to the debate in this House, had not considered what's in front of him, and ought to actually stand and apologize to the minister although I do not expect that will happen.

I can assure you, as all members of this House now know – and I think the last one is maybe getting the message right now – that this minister has put a lot of work into this bill. He has considered it carefully, and he has considered the advice of indigenous people across Alberta with great care, respect, and treated them with care and respect and dignity. The hon. member really ought to actually give even at least half a thought before he gets on his feet the next time, because the last time was most unsatisfactory, and the hon. member really ought to be ashamed.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you. A lot of bluff and bluster from the other side again when that minister stands up.

I don't know if the Minister of Indigenous Relations has actually posed the question – he hasn't answered the question – to all 190 or 200 groups and individuals and organizations that he has talked to about 50 per cent plus one on the board of the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation. And did they say, "No; we're not interested; please don't put 50 per cent plus one on the board"?

That's what this Minister of Transportation is suggesting, you know, that he's done the homework – that's great; I'm glad – and that the homework proved that just exactly what's in this bill is what members of indigenous organizations and individuals who are indigenous and Métis have exactly wanted. Or would they see it as an improvement to what's here if, in fact, it was 50 per cent plus one of the board members, as my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford has suggested in his amendment, which is eminently supportable, I hope, that "a majority of the directors appointed under subsection (1) must be members of an indigenous group identified in section 3(1)(a), (b) or (c)"?

Has the Minister of Indigenous Relations put that to every individual and group he's talked to? I would suggest he hasn't. I would suggest he's said, "There's a billion dollars in loan guarantees; we're going to make it happen; get onboard and," maybe in more structured language, "for a longer period of time." But I just don't understand what all the backslapping is about. This will help, but, you know, there are improvements that can be made to it, too, and once the bill is in for a period of time, maybe there'll be additional improvements that come through regulation to improve it. That's great. I'm glad.

We put forward an amendment that was eminently positive and said that the scope maybe should be investments that indigenous people already have in tourism, in commercial, in retail, but that was shot down by members of the other side because the oil and gas sector – and I think it says "natural resource" sector here – is the only one that will create the jobs. It's what we ran on: I hear that repeatedly.

You know, I'm not going to belabour it. I just will say that this amendment is a good one. I think indigenous peoples, Métis peoples, identified in your bill as 3(1)(a), (b), and (c), would be fine stewards of this board, and it will force – it will force – your administration to meet a goal that is appropriate and important in the self-direction of this corporation.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A2.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:27 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We are in Committee of the Whole on Bill 14. The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move that the Committee of the Whole rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 14. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. Carried.
The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think we've made pretty good progress and had some good debate today on the bill before us. I'd like to thank members on all sides of the House for participating in that, and I move that we adjourn until tomorrow, October 10, at 9 a.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:45 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, October 10, 2019

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning, hon. members. I'd like to recognize that there is a wide range and varied amounts of faith and cultural backgrounds, so please feel free to pray or reflect in your own way.

Let us pray. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Orders of the day. Ordres du jour. You may be seated.

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice, Solicitor General, and Deputy Government House Leader has caught my eye this morning.

Canadian Armed Forces Health Care Funding

33. Mr. Schweitzer moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly denounce the federal government's decision to reduce the rates at which it reimburses the costs of providing health care services to Canadian Armed Forces members, call on the federal government to immediately reverse this decision and provide the highest level of treatment for these members, and recognize the contribution of these members, who bravely and willingly risk their lives for our country.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour to rise to move Government Motion 33 on behalf of our Government House Leader.

This is completely unacceptable. Our government stands with our military families. This is again another outrageous attempt by the Trudeau Liberals to push costs down. This is unacceptable. Our military folks put their lives on the line every single day with what they do for us. They deserve our respect. They deserve proper funding. They deserve proper care. It's unacceptable, and Trudeau needs to take this back.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion according to Standing Order 18(1)(a), and all members have the opportunity to speak. Would anyone like to join in the debate this morning? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the deputy House leader from the government side bringing forward this motion to denounce the federal government's decision to reduce rates at which it reimburses the costs of providing health care services to the Canadian Armed Forces members and call on the government to reverse this decision.

Now, certainly, our caucus, the New Democrat Official Opposition caucus, does recognize the right for all individuals to have access to top-quality public health care, not just in this province but right across the country. Indeed, this is a cornerstone of who we are as Albertans and Canadians. We recognize that public universal health care, which is afforded to military families and to all families here in the province of Alberta and the country, is an important way by which we can ensure the safety and the health, physical and mental health, of all people but also the financial integrity of all people and families here in the province of Alberta and across the country to ensure that all Canadian residents are protected from two-tier, American-style private health care. Our veterans deserve the respect, and they deserve proper health care. They should be cared for in the right way.

We know that the previous Conservative federal government under Stephen Harper eliminated pensions for the Canadian Armed Forces, which we found to be deplorable, unacceptable considering the important work that our Canadian Armed Forces do to protect our borders, to protect the integrity of our country. Now it appears that the federal Liberals are rolling back the health care supports for our Canadian Armed Forces. Indeed, we know and I think everyone knows, within both their hearts and minds, that this is wrong. This decision goes against the basic principle of protections for all citizens but particularly for Canadian Armed Forces, who are often in very dangerous circumstances. It is our position as well that this funding should be immediately restored.

From what we have read from media sources and indeed from talking to people and drawing on our own well of common sense – right? – we are disturbed that the federal government would seek to cut corners when it comes to health care for our Armed Forces personnel in this country. We should be looking for ways by which we can increase the scope of health care for Canadian armed service members and indeed all citizens in the country to ensure that we have in place, for example, a national pharmacare program that ensures that we are all protected as citizens along with Canadian Armed Forces from private profiteering on pharmacy here in the province of Alberta and across the country as well.

We know that Canadian Armed Forces members and indeed all citizens of Canada need and require an increased scope of mental health supports as well. We have looked through the original intention of the universal health care protections and know that it should be an evolutionary process, and that includes what we know now that we perhaps didn't know when we first brought in medicare, that mental health supports are indeed at least as important as the physical supports that medicare does afford us.

I think we believe strongly as well and I think that scientific evidence does support that universal dental care is an absolute necessity over time to ensure the overall physical health of all citizens, including Canadian Armed Forces. We know that the connection between good dental care and affordable protected public dental care should be under the umbrella of medicare programming and other supports as well to ensure that we're not just stuck in a static mode around the benefits of public health care but indeed we are moving forward to ensure the health and safety of all citizens in the province and in the country. Particularly, this flashpoint for our military veterans is a good place for us to remind ourselves of how important it is to invest in health care.

You know, I can't help but think, Mr. Speaker, that there is an element of irony with the government bringing forward a motion such as this because, of course, yes, we should ensure that our Armed Forces are protected in all ways for comprehensive medical supports, but then it's coming from the same government right now that has their eyes firmly targeted on reducing health care, universal and public health care, here in this province of Alberta. I don't look any further than the newspaper and the very disturbing reports out of Vegreville, Alberta, over these last few days, where a long-term care assisted living facility has made a choice to fire their entire staff at an assisted living facility and allow the severe reduction in services and pay for an essential assisted living facility that looks after our seniors, both their physical and mental needs, in the town of Vegreville. I can't help to think that this somehow is a precursor from a signal that this government has sent to say, you know, that all bets are off; go ahead and start this process of privatization of the compromise in health care that I think almost all Albertans would find both unacceptable and abhorrent as well.

I look, again, to this government's decision to cancel the lab services contract that indeed was building, in fact, a very, very comprehensive, important facility, which is a cornerstone of good public health care, and cancelling that, thus delaying the proper and timely execution of lab services here in the province of Alberta, which again is very sadly and importantly needed here at this time. Instead we see quite the opposite, which is a series of cuts.

Why is this all happening, Mr. Speaker? Well, I can't help but say that, you know, it all comes down to the budget, and we see a budget coming down on October 24, which is none too soon. I can't help to see that there is at least a $4.5 billion hole in that budget that this government chose to make in order to give big corporate tax cuts to corporations at the expense of health care, at the expense of education and other public social services and infrastructure that this government is responsible for.

I think it's very important to ensure that our military is looked after and that military families are looked after. I think it's a prescient and very timely opportunity to talk about the importance of public health care for all citizens and all people that live in the province of Alberta and in Canada as well and to see how those services are in peril and put in peril by the same government who brought forward the same motion here today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing has risen to add to the debate.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Seniors and Housing the responsibility of the military liaison portfolio falls under my ministry. When I was made aware of Justin Trudeau and the federal government's decision to reduce the rate at which they reimburse the cost of providing health care services to the Canadian Armed Forces members, I was thoroughly disappointed. This decision is disrespectful and deceitful given that Trudeau has campaigned on his commitment to expand medicare.

You may remember that in February 2018 injured veteran Brock Blaszczyk asked a question to Justin Trudeau at a town hall hosted at Grant MacEwan. Mr. Blaszczyk had served in Afghanistan for less than a year when he was injured in an explosion and lost his leg. Mr. Blaszczyk addressed his concern with Ottawa's plan to reform some veterans' programs, including changes to disability pensions, and asked Mr. Trudeau: why are we still fighting against certain veterans groups in court? Well, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Trudeau responded: because they're asking for more than we are able to give right now.

The insolence toward our Canadian Armed Forces that the federal government is placing upon the men and women who serve to protect our country is not how they should be treated. Our government will honour the access to care in Alberta and not respond the way that Mr. Trudeau has. We will protect our Canadian Armed Forces members.

I commend our Minister of Health for writing a letter to the Minister of National Defence to call for a reversal of the decision to unilaterally cut reimbursement rates for delivering health care to our members in the Canadian Armed Forces in Alberta and across Canada. The new rates will lead to a shortfall of $2 million. That $2 million will affect the fundraising source that our province relies on to provide the best care for our Canadian Armed Forces. The Department of National Defence will not share their rationale for the new rate, and the rate was imposed without any consultation.

As the Minister of Health stated, our government will step up and fully cover the costs of health care for our Canadian Armed Forces so that all members in our province receive the care that they need. We will not leave those who fight and fought so bravely for our country in purgatory.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Is there anyone that would like to make a brief question or comment?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday caught my eye.

Mr. Ellis: Under 29(2)(a), sir.

The Speaker: Oh, sorry. I didn't see you there.

Mr. Ellis: I'm sorry. I apologize for being late.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West has risen under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I just want to under 29(2)(a) take a moment here to thank the minister for standing up on behalf of certainly the government and the portfolio which she represents, Seniors and Housing. I'd just like to ask her, since the military liaison officer, which is, I believe, the Member for Leduc-Beaumont, falls under her ministry, falls essentially in her portfolio, what kind of impact the officer has had on the community which he's been engaging the last several months.

This decision that was made by the federal government: maybe expand a little bit on we'll call it the impact on our military members who are stationed here in Alberta and what the military liaison officer has been doing to talk to our military veterans and friends to let them know that we as a government are here for them, that we as a government are going to continue to support them even when the perception is coming from the federal government that that might not be the case.

Since this is a very important portfolio that falls under her ministry, if she can just expand on some of the conversations that she might have had with the military liaison officer and, certainly, some of the veterans and current service members who have been impacted by this decision. Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday on the main motion.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to this motion. Of course, I'll just read it over here one more time. "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly denounce the federal government's decision to reduce the rates at which it reimburses the costs of providing health care services to Canadian Armed Forces members." I'll leave it at that.

Now, I of course will be supporting this motion as well as the rest of my colleagues, I believe. Our NDP caucus, when we were in government, took the issue of supporting our veterans very seriously, and I do also want to recognize the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for her work as the military liaison. Through consultations with veterans and with the Armed Forces in this province, we were able to move forward on a housing and service centre for veterans, funding $3 million towards that, which was very important in terms of recognizing the importance of making sure we're respecting and supporting mental health concerns and homelessness concerns that often do happen with our veterans.

I do also want to recognize the fact that there is irony in this motion, as was mentioned by the Member for Edmonton-North West. The fact is that this Premier, when he was a federal minister – for a time he was the minister of defence – failed our veterans, simply failed them horribly. I want to recognize – it was mentioned – the fact that under Stephen Harper and this Premier, when he was in the federal government and was a minister, killed pensions, eliminated pensions for our veterans. We're talking about, you know, a downloading of services from the federal government. When we look back at the history of the federal Conservative government and the attacks that they've placed on our veterans by removing the rights to those pensions for injured and disabled veterans, those veterans lost between 30 and 90 per cent of their entitlements, which is very concerning. Once again, it's quite ironic, if not completely hypocritical, for this government to try and stand up and say that they are the champions of veteran supports while their history and their legacy says something quite different.

Also, looking back on the history of the federal Conservative government when they were in power: closing nine Veterans Affairs offices; another big concern. Those shutdowns laid off 89 employees, leaving eight workers to cover 17,000 veterans, once again showing a complete disrespect and lack of understanding about the supports that these veterans need. My question is: you know, it's wonderful that you're standing up for veterans now, but where was this Premier when he was in the federal government representing these veterans? It's very concerning.

Now, I also want to recognize the fact that while this government is complaining or concerned, rightfully so, that the federal government is talking about downloading services to the provincial government – and I'm happy to recognize that the minister of seniors said that they would cover these costs, which is good. It's important that we take care of our veterans. But they stand before us in this Legislature talking about a $4.5 billion handout to large corporations. What does that mean for regular Albertans? That means that they are going to have their services cut. Now, when we talk about supporting the families of veterans and veterans themselves, what is going to happen when funding for education gets cut? What happens when funding for FCSS gets cut, when we start denying more applications for these families that desperately need this funding?

Once again, on the other hand, we talk about the $4.5 billion handout to large corporations. That is going to mean – and we've seen it through the discussions with this Justice minister about the downloading of policing costs, in just one instance, on municipalities. On one hand, we have this UCP government saying: we're very concerned that the federal government is talking about downloading costs to the provinces. Then, on the other hand, we have this provincial government talking about downloading many services onto municipalities, which is very concerning. They're talking out of both sides of their mouths, Mr. Speaker. I think it's very unfortunate. I think that they should do the right thing on that matter and fully fund these municipalities.

Once again, I do plan on supporting this motion. I think it's important to show our support to these veterans. I think that when this Premier was in the federal government, he should have done a better job because, at the end of the day, he failed veterans miserably, and now he's trying to make up for it through a motion. Well, it's just not enough, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Is there anyone else that has a question or a comment? I see the hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat would like to ask a question or make a brief comment.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to point out how important this motion is. I mean, this is a motion where we are calling on the federal government, coming together in camaraderie to call out the action of the federal government and their failure to stand up for our veterans when it comes to access to health care. Instead of doing that, the opposition has taken this time to play politics with this motion. I think that's actually quite despicable considering that we're talking about people who are not asking for more than we can give. We are talking about people who put their lives on the line every single day for our country. Instead of doing that, we're going off on a tangent about irrelevant topics, I would argue, and we are not actually talking about the issue at hand here, which is access to health care for these veterans.

I would implore the members of the opposition, when speaking to this motion, to speak about this as an issue that affects everyone in every constituency. This is not a partisan motion. It happens to be brought forward by the government, but this is an issue that I think we can all get behind just because it is so important and it is so relevant. I know that the members of the opposition care about this topic, and I would not want these previous comments to cloud that, because I do think that this is an extremely important topic. I'm going to give the Member for Edmonton-West Henday the benefit of the doubt here when I know that he wasn't trying to play politics with this issue. I know that he wasn't trying to make a partisan issue out of something that really should be nonpartisan, because that would be, I think, a little bit beyond the pale on this issue. I would give the Member for Edmonton-West Henday, I guess, a second to respond, maybe apologize to the House for playing politics with this issue, and speak on behalf of his constituents when he's coming at the government for something that should really be a nonpartisan motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday, should he choose to respond.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I do want to respect the fact and respond to the fact that I am going to be supporting this motion. I think it's an important motion. I made it quite clear that I am in full support of our Canadian Armed Forces. You know, the work that they do really should be thanked more than it does get thanked by every level of government.

One more time, I mean, the member just raised the fact that I'm making this a partisan issue. This motion itself: of course, we're all going to be supporting it. But it is a partisan issue when the federal government, the federal Conservatives over the last several years before this Liberal government, failed veterans. It is a partisan issue when Stephen Harper failed them so miserably, took away their pensions, closed Veterans Affairs offices, kept them in court. Now, it's the exact reason why in 2015 veterans across Canada raised a campaign and lobbied against the federal Conservatives, recognizing that they failed them miserably. You can't, you know, as a government, as a federal government, a Conservative government completely fail veterans across the province for decades and then say: oh, how could you hold that against us?

All I'm saying is that I'm supporting this. I think that we definitely can do more, especially the federal government could do more. I just have to recognize the fact that the federal Conservatives failed. It's as simple as that. I think the Member for Edmonton-North West raised good points about the fact that we need to move forward on universal health care, whether it's dental or other matters. I think that the Conservatives failed on that, too. I hope that a federal government in the future will look at fixing that issue, whether it's for veterans or for all Canadians.

But the fact is that any time we enter this room, it is politics. It is an issue of whether the Conservatives are going to stand up for veterans at the federal level and frankly they didn't. I'll leave it at that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there's approximately a minute and eight seconds left under 29(2)(a).

Unfortunately, you've already spoken once, so it would be inappropriate for me to ask you again.

If there's anyone else – oh, check that. Feel free.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for giving me a minute and eight seconds to finish my thoughts. You know, we do come into this place from a political lens, of course, and that is important to remember. But I do remember hearing from the opposition side on a variety of issues, especially the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, about how we need to rise above politics, that we need to rise above partisanship. This is one of those sections where we can rise above. It really amazes me that the opposition is just like the federal Liberals in this regard, where they're actually campaigning against Stephen Harper instead of standing up for Albertans right here, and I think it's despicable. I would just implore the opposition to advocate for Albertans. I would implore the opposition to advocate for their constituents instead of coming at us on issues that really should be nonpartisan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Now there are eight seconds remaining. The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West, if he'd like to join in the debate.

Mr. Eggen: No, thank you.

The Speaker: I'm so happy for your keen observation of the timer.

Hon. members, I have just recently noticed the presence of military veteran Brock Blaszczyk in the gallery this morning.

I'd like to welcome you here. Thank you for your service and your attendance this morning. [Standing ovation]

Hon. members, is there anyone else that would like to speak to the motion? I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a few short weeks Canadians from coast to coast to coast will pin poppies to their chests for 11 days in November. Some of us will attend our local Remembrance Day ceremonies. Some of us will lay a wreath at our community memorial. Some of us will talk to a veteran, shake their hand, pose for a picture. But what will happen on November 12? We remember our veterans and active service members for 11 days in November. We recite the lines of In Flanders Fields. We let silence ring instead of gunshots. We pledge that we will hold the torch for those who threw it from falling hands. Will we fail them again on November 12?

I raise this question and stand in this House today because it is so easy for all of us to remember our veterans and their service and our active service members in November. We gather together in their memory and honour their service across the country. For that moment of silence on November 11 the active service members and veterans in this country are all that we care about. However important our ceremonies and our decorations and our acknowledgements are on November 11, Mr. Speaker, I'm asking everyone to think about November 12. It is easy to pay attention to the issues veterans raise with us when they are at the forefront of our minds, but if we don't continue to value the contributions of our service members on November 12 and every day after that, our words and our actions on November 11 ring hollow.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House today because our veterans and active service members deserve a government that remembers their sacrifice and everything that they do, not just on Remembrance Day but on every single day that we remain a strong and free nation, almost entirely because of the sacrifices that Armed Forces members made for generations before us. We cannot fail to consider their sacrifices in everything that we do and every policy that we make. That is why I'm shocked that our federal government would so blatantly disregard their actions in context with their consequences to everyone who wears this country's uniform and why I am standing in the House to advocate for them and demand that our federal government make our veterans and serving members a priority.

The stories and experiences of our veterans and serving members go far beyond Remembrance Day, Mr. Speaker. There are people who have served in the reserve force in this very room, as we just acknowledged, and people who have served in the regular forces who walk our halls here at the Legislature. The sacrifices they have made and the experiences they have gone through stay with them for longer than just the first 11 days in November. They live with the burden of memories, both nostalgic and difficult, that we could help them carry if only we chose to make their burdens easier or share them.

We talk a lot about how thankful and proud we are of our serving members. I have no doubt that there is sincerity and truth in those words when they are spoken in this House. However, how can we continue to pile on the platitudes if they are served by a federal government that doesn't remember their service for the other 354 days of the year? I have heard first-hand some of the struggles that our veterans face.

These brave men and women who make the choice to sacrifice everything for the rest of us frequently struggle with matters that they shouldn't be worried about. Far too often our military members face difficulties transitioning back to civilian life or coming back from a long and challenging deployment. While their service means everything when they wear the uniform, it means less on their resumé when they try to find a civilian job. When they come home after serving domestically or overseas, we greet them with hugs, cheers, and flashy signs, but the pomp and circumstance fade from day to day.

Symptoms of job-related risk often don't appear until far after the incidents that happen at work, Mr. Speaker, and many of us can testify to that. Our military members work marathon hours under high stress and are often working with dangerous materials. I recently heard the story of someone who has served and has been exposed to various chemicals throughout his career. A standard risk to the job, he told me, and his hands shake uncontrollably at random. He can't pin it back to an exact event during his military career, but he thinks the repeated chemical exposure to heavy diesel and other industrial fluids could have something to do with it. He worries about what caused it and what it might mean for his future family. There are many stories like this. They aren't uncommon.

These are young people in our Armed Forces, and they are breaking down their bodies for this country and asking not much in return, nothing except for consideration and for us to make sure their families are cared for. Now the federal government has given them one more reason to feel overlooked rather than giving them reasons to feel respected and heard.

We cannot stand idly by while our military members and veterans are treated as second-class citizens. We must stand together in recognizing and honouring their contributions. Most importantly, we must stand up for them and their futures. We must refuse to accept that cutting away more of their thin benefits is acceptable in any way.

I would ask that everyone in this House not only join me in standing up for our service members and veterans today but join me in standing up for them every day. A legacy and a career isn't lived in 11 days in November, Mr. Speaker. We have 354 more days that we must use to continue to honour their sacrifices.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone has a question or comment for the Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Neudorf: East.

The Speaker: East.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak to this important motion. I would just like to start off by saying that I will be supporting the motion, and then I just want to give a little bit of background.

I was a military partner for many years. I lived in Griesbach. I worked in Lancaster Park. My partner at that time was part of the PPCLI as a sig op and was in Afghanistan, so I appreciate the importance of this issue. I've lived as a supportive partner with my partner being overseas, and I recognize the military family and the importance of the military family. We had a community when we were living in Griesbach, before it became the Griesbach that it is now, where there were many of us that all lived in the row houses together, and when our partners were overseas, all of us would get together and support each other and talk about the stresses of having our partners in combat zones. During the time when my partner was in Afghanistan was when we had our major loss of our members from PPCLI that passed away in 2006. That had a significant impact on our community. Obviously, we were all around the same age at that time, and we all knew each other.

When I hear the members say, "Well, take the politics out of it," I hear what you're saying. The reality of it is that, you know, there are people in this House that are substantially impacted by this issue, that have strong beliefs. I have strong beliefs about the fact that our military families deserve support by all levels of government. I'm not just talking federal, provincial, but municipal as well.

When I worked in Lancaster Park, my focus was on working with families that had children with disabilities. I worked at FSCD, and all the families that were on my caseload deliberately moved from other provinces to Edmonton and to Lancaster Park or wherever because of the fact that the provincial government at that time had made an effort to recognize that there are additional stressors for military families outside of just service. There are children involved. There are spouses involved. My caseload was quite high because many families came from Ontario and other provinces to get the supports for their children that were struggling with developmental disabilities, physical disabilities.

Health care is extremely important to the military families. It's important to all Albertans. Mental health supports. I mean, when we lost our members in Afghanistan, it hit the community extremely hard, and it wasn't just about the individuals that had retired and the veterans. It was about members that were actively engaged in combat. It was family members that were part of those conversations. I mean, I'm sure we all remember when we filled Rexall for the ceremonies. It was hard. This conversation around health care supports: ultimately we all have a responsibility to take care of our military families, to recognize the service that veterans have contributed to Canada and internationally around this world.

But the reality of it is also that this motion was put forward to have this dialogue, and it was put forward for a political reason. I just caution everyone that throwing stones back and forth around one side making this more political than the other – well, we're having this conversation for political reasons or else we wouldn't have the motion on the floor. Honestly, the Alberta government, the minister could just fix it right now without us having to have this conversation.

I think that we all need to take a moment and recognize that there is a game being played right now. We all know we're in a federal election, and that is why this motion is even being put forward. The reality of it is that we can all do better. We can all serve our military families better. The fact that the military families in this country live in different provinces and travel around the world, travel to different places – I still have many friends that have moved every two years to a different posting, and every single time they move, they are impacted by the health care that is provided in different provinces, by the services, by the fact that there are struggles with retraining, that their spouses have to relocate and find new careers.

Those issues are real, so absolutely we should support this motion, but the reality of it is that we should just be able to do this without a motion. It should just happen. We shouldn't be standing up here and having this debate and going back and forth about whether or not it should be done. Yes, the federal government is downloading costs onto the provinces to cover military health care, but the reality of it is that the minister could just fix it right now, right? Like, why are we even having the conversation? If you don't want to hear the fact that there are other things that can be changed, that historically we have failed the military federally, that historically decisions were made by federal Conservatives, and things are being made by federal Liberals right now that impact military families – that is true. But the government decided to put a motion forward to discuss it, and we can't just discuss the one thing that the government wants to talk about, which is what the federal Liberals are doing, if they're not going to acknowledge what happened in the past with the federal Conservatives. If this really wasn't about politics, if this is really about caring about our military families, caring about the people that are serving our country, caring about the family members that have been impacted by the sacrifices that these families make, then this conversation shouldn't even happen, and this government shouldn't have put this motion forward, because it does impact people.

I'm sorry that I'm getting a little worked up about this, but, like, I've lost people that served. My ex-partner is impacted with mental health issues because of what he experienced while he was in Afghanistan. He had one of the hardest jobs. He's a sig op. It's a pretty sketchy job to have; all of them are. But the reality of it is that I am impacted to this day by his service because I still care about him and all of my friends and all of the experiences that they've had and the mental health issues and the PTSD and all of the other dynamics that have come because of what they've seen in Afghanistan and all of the other places where they've served.

So I'd just ask that instead of throwing stones back and forth, you acknowledge the fact that you put the motion forward. Therefore, talking about the whole gamut of what federal governments have done for our military, whether it be Conservative or Liberal, is part of the dialogue because you chose to put the motion forward. I thank our members that have served. I remember them every day. It's not about Remembrance Day for me. I will support this motion, but I ask that in the future, if we really want to do what's right, then we don't bring it to this House and the ministers just do what they should do.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West has risen to ask a brief question or comment.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I sincerely thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for bringing up a couple of very important points. It was actually something I was thinking about, too, because my constituency, Edmonton-North West, has many military families living there. People were transferred from different parts of the country – New Brunswick, Quebec, and Ontario – and often in conversation it's not uncommon for people to point out specifically that they were seeking a posting in the province of Alberta because of the enhanced medical benefits and social service benefits that they could access for themselves and for their families. You know, it always stuck with me over the years.

I'm sorry I didn't ask the hon. member before. I know you have some more information about that. Again, I know that her comments were very poignant and so forth, and I wanted to ask her about – well, first of all, I think that this motion is relevant because it brings up an important point about how we have built comprehensive public health care and social services that are recognized and sought out by Canadians in other parts of the country in the military service, and they might even choose to try to get a posting here in Alberta to access those services. If she could perhaps tell us about some of those services that people did want and desired and found to be excellent here in the province of Alberta and how those same services might be in jeopardy here now with the prospect of cuts to social services and health care. If she would choose to answer that, I would appreciate it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah. I mean, we know, again going back to my experience working in family support for children with disabilities, FSCD, the military families that I was working with in Lancaster Park – of course, lots of people live in northeast Edmonton. I have lots of military families that I represent in my riding now. I mean, there is a great benefit that we have in the fact that we do have supports for children with disabilities in this province. FSCD is one of the best programs, I think, across the country when it comes to supporting children that have additional medical needs, that need additional interventions or community aids or daycare aid.

The one thing that I would like to acknowledge is the MFRC, the military family resource centre, in Lancaster Park. The work that they do is amazing. They have an on-site daycare. They're always open to working with FSCD and making sure that there are aids in place for the children that go there. They offer additional supports. I know that the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs and I go to their fundraiser every year. There's always a great community turnout to support the resources that are being provided. They also provide mental health supports and then, of course, community referrals for those that don't want to access services on-base.

Again, going back to my comments around ministers just needing to do the right thing – making sure the military resource centres, making sure that the supports in FSCD continue to be funded, making sure the daycare aids are in place, $25 daycare is in place, all of the things that support healthy communities and healthy families – if we're going to talk about military families and their health care needs, they also deserve all of the community supports that they have a right to access. When you look at your budgets and you're having conversations around how we are going to do cost savings, I implore you that if you're going to say that this is an issue and that we need to have funding for military families, then you have to fund everything else, too.

You can't pick one issue with military families and say, "This is the issue," because then you're politicizing it. Acknowledge the MFRCs. Acknowledge the fact that resources on-base need to be funded and supported. If you're going to advocate for that, then you have to advocate for on-base resources and off, and that includes making sure that families on-base have all the supports that they need. And even if they live off the base: I mean, the access to child care, the access to training and being able to look at that when transitioning from a military career, that those skills are transferable to employment.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health has risen to join the debate.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a consideration in this House, an amendment to Government Motion 33.

The Speaker: The pages will grab it. Just have a seat for two seconds if you wouldn't mind, Minister.

Mr. Shandro: Okay.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the amendment will be considered to be amendment A1.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment that I'm asking the House to consider right now is striking out "call on the federal government to immediately reverse this decision and provide the highest level of treatment for these members" and substituting "call on the federal government to immediately and fully reverse this decision, commit to no future changes, and provide the highest level of treatment for these members." Is it all right if I then speak to this amendment?

I just want to say a few words generally. You know, I think that before this became an issue, most people probably didn't realize that the federal government pays for the health care services of our forces' personnel who are here in Alberta, mostly because when you are personnel for our Armed Forces, you don't get to choose where in this country you serve. You're told where you're going to be living. You're told where you're going to serve, and you're sent there.

Outside of the Canada Health Act, the federal government, the Department of National Defence have paid the provinces for those health care services. Typically, like here in Alberta, the Department of National Defence has a primary care network themselves to provide primary care from those physicians, but this is really dealing with the acute care and scheduled surgeries that are required to be provided to our forces' personnel here in Alberta through Alberta Health Services in the same way as if there was somebody from another jurisdiction, like B.C., who got acute-care services here in Alberta. AHS would be able to essentially send an invoice to the Department of National Defence for the acute-care services or the scheduled surgery for those personnel. Historically, what was paid to the provinces were amounts which covered those costs.

Without any consultation and still to this day without any answer about the rationale for this decision, unilaterally the Department of National Defence cut the amounts that they're going to be paying for those services. Sure, in the grand scheme of things it may not amount to what sounds like a lot of money. I think the total hit to AHS would be about $2 million per year. But first, Mr. Speaker, it's disrespectful towards the provinces that this happened without any consultation. It's disrespectful to the provinces that we still do not have an answer for the rationale. It's also hypocritical that the Trudeau government wants to talk about expanding medicare, yet unilaterally they make a decision like this to cut the funding to Alberta Health Services for this.

It's also disrespectful to the forces' personnel. I think the most important thing for us to be able to say in this House is, first, to everybody who can hear these words: if you are forces' personnel serving here in Alberta, understand that your care will not be altered in any way. You will still get the care that you need from Alberta Health Services and from Alberta Health. You will still be able to get the care that you need, and in no way should you have ever, ever heard any of these words and have had to question whether you are going to receive these services. I apologize to any forces' personnel who have had to make that inquiry. Please understand that you will still get the services that you require.

It is disrespectful to them, Mr. Speaker, and I think that this is the time for the Trudeau government to not double down on their decisions but to be able to reverse those decisions and make sure that it's clear to our forces' personnel and to our provinces that decisions will not be made unilaterally in deciding how health services are going to be paid for in this country but, as well, that the amounts that are going to be paid for the health care services that are required are going to be fully paid, that the costs are going to be fully covered by the federal government for forces' personnel here in Alberta.

What we're asking for in this amendment, Mr. Speaker, is a reversal, immediately and fully, of this decision and committing to no future changes. I would ask for the Assembly to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone has a brief question or comment for the Minister of Health.

Seeing none, is there anyone else that would like to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to this amendment. Obviously, as my colleagues have said and having looked at the amendment that was just presented to us, you know, I will vote in support of this motion. Certainly, we want to make sure that our military families have the support that they need. If anything, of course, we would like it to be even broader than this motion before us today. Our party believes very much in making sure all Albertans are supported and that we don't just make priorities of a select group of people, for example.

Immediately after being elected, the government chose to give a $4.5 billion handout to corporations, and this is having an impact on the rest of the services. Certainly, as the Minister of Seniors and Housing previously, I met many times with organizations, seniors' centres across this province, who are now very afraid of the cuts.

While we support and I support supports for health services – and the minister herself did just say that if the federal government doesn't reverse this decision, the Alberta government will, you know, backfill on that. We're happy about that. But that shouldn't be the only thing. There is an array of services that are needed, and we have seen, very sadly, that supporting the elite, supporting the big corporations doesn't trickle down. Those theories have been debunked for years and years. It doesn't support all people. We have the greatest inequality in our province in Canada, so many people don't benefit from that, and of course we already know that there haven't been any jobs created from that.

I mean, there are so many things to be done. For example, when we were government, with the MLA for Edmonton-Castle Downs – she was our military liaison, and she worked with my ministry – early on in the mandate I met a veteran who was working with homeless veterans. Sometimes because of the stress of the work, the very, you know, demanding issues that they face – sometimes they have physical injuries, but a lot of times it's more mental health issues – unfortunately, veterans will turn to addictions, and that can lead to a very negative trajectory, ultimately to homelessness.

This veteran was working very hard to support veterans experiencing homelessness. He wanted to meet with me, and I was happy to do that. That was sort of earlier in my mandate in that role. Very quickly, very expeditiously we actually opened a veterans' homeless facility here in Edmonton with next-door wraparound services to support veterans with mental health issues. Our government stepped up very quickly, responded to a concern in the community.

Of course, we know that housing isn't enough. We must make sure that there are those wraparound services. So while we support the government's move to make sure that veterans have the health care they need and that it's, you know, made sure that they get enough funding to cover those costs and it shouldn't be cut back, we know that there is so much more to do in this area and many others. We just want to stand in support of making sure that Alberta is an inclusive province, where all are included and some aren't privileged more than others.

Having said that, I'll thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for a brief question or comment. The Minister of Health has risen.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say that it is witless, it is shameless, and it's ridiculous. If somebody wants to perpetuate the misinformation to Albertans that there is $4 billion or $4.5 billion or whatever the fake number that they want to come up with for what the job-creation tax cut is, talk about it. Talk about it. It is your right to make that misinformation to Albertans, but doing it while we are debating this amendment and this motion regarding health care services for our forces' personnel is ridiculous, and it is shameful, and our friends opposite should cut it out. Let's talk about the amendment; let's talk about this motion. Do that on your own time. This is ridiculous. Let's talk about health care services for our forces' personnel.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone has a brief question or comment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly appreciate the comments and observations and insights that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has brought forward in regard to this motion. I think that it's abundantly clear that our side joined together with the government to call on the federal government to ensure that our Armed Forces are being given proper due in regard to health care and supports in the broadest possible way. You know, now more than ever is a prescient time to talk about the importance of ensuring that the public health care infrastructure and social service infrastructure are in place for our Canadian members of the Armed Forces here in the province of Alberta.

Health care is the responsibility of each of the provinces and territories in this country, and one thing does not stand in isolation with the other, Mr. Speaker, quite frankly. If the quality and the breadth and the scope of public health care are compromised in any jurisdiction, including this one, then the health care and the quality of social services for Canadian Armed Forces members and, indeed, all residents of this province or other provinces are compromised as well.

These things do not stand in isolation, quite frankly. You know, as you pull the string along the way, you have to face the responsibility that comes with that. If you are cutting and compromising health care here in this province, then it does follow that you are compromising the integrity of health care to not just Armed Forces personnel but to all residents here in the province of Alberta.

You know, I'm not here to give lessons in logic or governance, by any means, to the members opposite, but it's important to take that full responsibility. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning and I myself as well pointed out, often Canadian Armed Forces personnel would look to get a position here in the province of Alberta because of the quality of health care and social services that are provided to all citizens of this province as compared to maybe postings in other places in Canada. For us to ensure the integrity of our public health system and to fight and to fend against cuts to the budget of this government is, I think, in keeping with our responsibility as the members of the Official Opposition and indeed our responsibilities to all residents of Alberta, including members of the Canadian Armed Forces.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is approximately a minute remaining under 29(2)(a) if anyone has a very brief question or comment.

Seeing none, are there others wishing to join the debate? The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in debate on the motion before the House.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly denounce the federal government's decision to reduce the rates at which it reimburses the costs of providing health care services to Canadian Armed Forces members, call on the federal government to immediately and fully reverse this decision, commit to no future changes, and provide the highest level of treatment for these members, and recognize the contribution of these members, who bravely and willingly risk their lives for our country.

More specifically, of course, I'm speaking to the hon. Minister of Health's amendment, which calls for a full reversal of the decision insofar as, I gather, the federal government has announced a partial reversal. How did that come about, Mr. Speaker? Well, only because their surreptitious, middle-of-the-night, secret effort to cut health care for members of the Canadian Armed Forces was revealed by whistle-blowers in the Canadian Armed Forces and reported by Global television two nights ago.

Mr. Speaker, I stand here not only as Premier but also as a former Minister of National Defence and as the son of a former Royal Canadian Air Force fighter pilot and the descendant of people who have stood in our uniform going back, frankly, to the defence of British North America before Confederation. I stand here as somebody who is immensely proud of the sacrifices and risks taken by our men and women in uniform. I know that we Albertans have always had an enormous respect and great support for our soldiers, sailors, and aviators, and that has often been expressed by a disproportionately high level of military enrolment by residents of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, given that context I was shocked to hear the news earlier this week about the federal government's secret effort to cut basic health benefits for acute care for members of the military. As the hon. the Minister of Health has underscored, our soldiers, sailors, and aviators do not get to choose where they are deployed. It is a condition of their service that they can be deployed anywhere across Canada or, for that matter, around the world. It is therefore essential that they have the certainty of seamless health care coverage that follows them wherever they may find themselves. Before the Chrétien government effectively shut down and radically reduced the military hospital network in the mid to late 1990s, there was a system of military hospitals, and most of the clinical services provided to military personnel in Canada were provided at those military hospitals.

However, as a cost-cutting exercise, in order to reduce expenditures, the Canadian Armed Forces, the Department of National Defence, decided about 20-some years ago that it was more efficient to effectively contract out that domestic care for military personnel to provincial health systems, which essentially means that the Department of National Defence enters into service contracts with the 10 provinces through which the federal government is responsible for reimbursing the provinces at their normal rates for the services that are provided.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, just on that point alone, we do know that there sometimes are gaps that our transferred personnel fall between. For example, for a soldier at Gagetown, New Brunswick, who may be on a wait-list for surgery – or perhaps his or her spouse is – when they move to Alberta, they have to get to the back of another queue to access the same service. I know that I and the government's liaison to the Canadian Armed Forces, the Member for Leduc-Beaumont, have been in discussions with both the Armed Forces and the Department of Health to see if we can somehow resolve or mitigate challenges such as that. But, fundamentally, the system has worked reasonably well for the past two decades for servicemen and -women, where they've been able to access provincial health systems.

Now, I gather that the premise of the unannounced, secret cut by the federal government was that the provinces are supposedly charging DND too much for these clinical services. The truth is that their rates are the same as they are for any out-of-province individual or anybody not insured by Alberta medicare. They're the same rates that we would be charging, for example, the Workers' Compensation Board when it buys health services from AHS. They're the same rates that a foreign visitor coming to Alberta that goes into a hospital or clinic would pay or, for that matter, a Saskatchewan resident who has not yet established residency here, and then we would bill that back to Saskatchewan through the interprovincial reciprocal health care billing agreements. Mr. Speaker, the rates are quite fair. They're not set to generate some kind of notional profit for the Alberta Crown. They're set to essentially be cost recovery for Alberta taxpayers.

The effect of the changes that were made by the federal Liberals was effectively to impose those costs on Alberta taxpayers. Now, we estimate that that was a cost of $2 million, which may not seem like an enormous amount of money in the context of a $49 billion budget, but across the country it's quite a significant shift of costs from the Department of National Defence to provincial taxpayers.

In the case of Ontario I understand it's $10 million, so likely about $25 million to $30 million nationally.

Mr. Speaker, more deeply than that, this really shows a profound disrespect for the greatest Canadians, those who are prepared to, frankly, give up their lives in the defence of this country, our values and interests. Surely, it is incumbent upon any government of any partisan stripe to prioritize beyond everything the support required by our women and men in uniform. That's why the government has brought forward this motion, because we are so profoundly disappointed in the disrespect implicit in this secret decision by the Trudeau Liberal government.

Mr. Speaker, although I only served briefly as Minister of National Defence, for, I think, 10 or 11 months during a time of fiscal constraint, a time when the federal government was actually, unlike the current one, focused on fiscal probity and balancing the budget, we had to watch every dollar that was spent. And even in that context, let me tell you that nobody in the Department of National Defence or the Canadian Armed Forces approached me as minister to say: we need to cut the rates for health services for military personnel. Had they approached me about that, the conversation would have ended in a New York minute. It would have ended right there and then had they proposed such a thing to me as minister.

I find this, quite frankly, shocking. This was not, when I was minister in 2015, coming up from the system. Even after rigorous spending and program reviews, even after spending had been reduced in certain low-priority areas, nobody had proposed what was just done by the federal government. So I wonder: where did this come from, and why was this done, an act of great insensitivity that also has the collateral effect of downloading costs to the taxpayers of Alberta?

So, Mr. Speaker, I want to salute the hon. the Minister of Health for assuring our military personnel that regardless of the irresponsibility and cold-heartedness of the federal government on this matter, the government of Alberta can assure all military personnel serving in this province that we have their backs, that if there's any diminution in federal insurance or rates for health benefits, that will not affect their access to clinical services in Alberta through Alberta Health Services.

Mr. Speaker, I will just conclude by thanking members for their interest and support. I think it's regrettable the Official Opposition did not allow this matter to come before the House urgently yesterday. I urge all members to support this motion so that united we may send a message to this federal government, a government that has done so much to inflict such deep damage on this province. This is just yet one other example of, I submit, why we need a new federal government on October 21.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone has a brief question or comment.

Seeing none, we are on amendment A1. Are there those wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler has risen.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Prime Minister Justin Trudeau is not focused on making life better for Canadians. He increases our taxes, constrains our industries, and embarrasses us on the world stage. This week he's unilaterally decided that our members of the military no longer deserve proper health care coverage. Under the Canada Health Act and provincial health acts the federal government provides coverage for military members. Provincial hospitals provide services such as surgery, MRIs, and other acute care to military members, and then the military provides reimbursement to the provinces based on a set-fee model. Justin Trudeau and his Liberal government have decided that across the country these fees were too high, so he has cut them.

Let me say again: the government has decided to tell hospitals and provinces across the country that they are charging too much for health care and have picked the price they're going to pay. This arrogant act shows our Prime Minister truly believes he knows it all. He's abandoned our Canadian Armed Forces members, leaving the expense of their health care to the generosity of hospitals while the provinces take up the slack. That is a cowardly way to avoid this extremely important federal responsibility. These changes were made without consultation and remain without justification, without any respect for the sacrifices that our military members make. They've chosen one of the most challenging and dangerous careers in service to our country, and the thanks they get is being tossed to the margins by Justin Trudeau and his government.

Some hospitals in Ontario have drawn the hard line that they cannot afford it. Alberta hospitals will remain open and accepting of military members, and they certainly will not be turned away because they cannot pay for their treatment themselves. It is extremely disappointing, to say the least.

Just as disappointing, our colleagues in the NDP apparently kind of agree with this motion. We should not be here debating whether or not we will defend our military members from a cut to their health care. The NDP is more dedicated to standing behind Justin Trudeau than they are to standing up for our forces. This is a man that does not take his own actions seriously. He says that he's made it very clear there will be no cuts to services yet provides no justification for where the money will come from. It's as if he thinks our provincial hospitals are getting rich.

Mr. Speaker, every dollar that comes out of these reimbursements must come from somewhere. It is an absolute disgrace that behind closed doors our authoritarian Prime Minister attacks our military members, but as soon as a microphone is in front of him, he does just the opposite. Until our federal government shows some reason and humility and fully reverses this horrible decision, our province will make sure that they are properly covered. I'm happy to support this amendment, and I hope the rest of this House does as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any others wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Speaker: We are back on the motion, Government Motion 33. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has risen.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and speak to this government motion, resolving that the Legislative Assembly denounce this decision by the federal government to reduce the rates at which it reimburses the costs of providing health care services to the Canadian Armed Forces members, with the new amendment calling for that to be fully reversed and that they commit to no future changes and indeed "provide the highest level of treatment for these members". In particular, I appreciate this opportunity, being my first opportunity to rise during this fall session of the Legislature. I can't think of a better topic to have the opportunity to speak to in the position as the Official Opposition critic for the health care file.

I apologize that I wasn't able to be here a little earlier this morning for this debate. I was reading to students at Oliver school, and students always have lots of questions. One of theirs for me was: was I born here in Edmonton, and where was my family from? I was pleased to be able to tell them that my father came here from Trinidad in 1967 and that my mother's family came here from the Netherlands in 1948. One of the students immediately remarked and said: hey, your mom's family were in Holland before 1948; that means they went through World War II. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, my grandparents did, and they lost the majority of their possessions. They lost their farm and most of what they had, and that is largely what directly led to them coming to Canada.

So, indeed, I recognize the great role that Canadian soldiers played in the defence, in the freeing of many across Europe during World War II and, in particular, at home, a place where Canadians are still well respected and celebrated because of the brave and heroic work of our military members who served there. I recognize that since that time Canada has continued to have military members that have provided great service around the world in many different regions. Indeed, we owe the greatest of respect and support to those members who have chosen to step up to serve in our military, in the reserves, in whatever capacity and, indeed, the many sacrifices we know that they make in that work, up to and including at times their own lives.

That is why our federal government has largely throughout history been committed to looking after those individuals that do choose to serve, to make sure that we provide all of the appropriate supports and services and things that are needed for them and their families and, indeed, as we have learned more about the impacts of that type of service and work, to begin to improve the services we provide afterwards to help them deal with some of the other issues, thinking in particular about mental health, PTSD, and some of these other areas, where, admittedly, many governments of many political stripes have failed members in the past but have begun to learn, and we have begun to change and evolve.

On this particular issue I am one hundred per cent behind this motion that has been brought forward, calling on the federal government to reverse and commit to never again implementing this decision because of the effects that this could have on our military members. I appreciate the Premier's words in noting the challenges that members already face in moving between our different provincial health care systems, recognizing we have a complexity of services across Canada and ways that we interact as jurisdictions. We need to at all times, as the Premier has noted, on issues like free trade and others, indeed, also in health care, look for ways that we can reduce barriers, not create further ones for Canadians that are moving from province to province and, indeed, recognizing for our military members, as the Premier noted, who do not themselves get to choose where they live but are instead told and ordered to go to a particular place.

It is incredibly important that we maintain from the federal government the appropriate level of funding and do not try to download onto other jurisdictions the costs that are involved of looking after our military members and ensuring that they receive the health care that they deserve and that they earned through their service, for both themselves and their families.

Now, the Premier was reflecting a bit on how this decision might have come about. I can't say. Obviously, I was not there in that room. I was not part of that department. The Premier himself, having served in the role, has some idea of how these processes work, and indeed having been part of a government that pursued some issues of austerity and looking for ways that money could be saved, he is well familiar, I suppose, with how these sorts of things move through the system and these decisions are made. I appreciate that in his testimony he was thoughtful and reflective in that role to try to ensure that when cuts were made, they would not be made in such a way that they would affect those who we are most committed to supporting, those being our military members.

But I think it is an important lesson for us to consider, indeed, as we as a province are looking at making some real changes in how we apportion our spending and as we have a government that is strongly committed towards cutting the budget and to saving dollars, that we give due consideration, that we do not take steps like this federal government has done that are going to impact vulnerable populations and people to whom we owe a debt as a government and as a society; all those, in fact, that we want to support and assist.

When we simply make a resolution that cuts must be made without due care and attention, I think this is the sort of result we may get. The Premier used terms like "tone-deaf," and I think that's entirely appropriate. It is tone-deaf, but sometimes I think within the upper echelons of power or perhaps within bureaucracies or other areas where we are considering these issues, we do not always reflect on the effect it may have on the ground. And, indeed, we've seen that previously with federal governments in Canada of all political stripes. We saw it under the government of Prime Minister Harper, when there were changes that were made to kill the lifetime pensions for veterans – again, looking to save money – when there was the closing of at least nine veterans' offices across Canada, which, again, had effects on services for members and was definitely protested by many members of the military, or when we found even some of the jobs that were cut or other things that were affected. Indeed, there was a court case at one point, where the court was required to order the government to pay $887 million to veterans for dollars that had been clawed back from 4,000 disabled veterans and their families across Canada.

I don't think this is something that's coming from any particular political stripe. I recognize that members have been concerned about partisanship, and since my arrival in the House this morning, I have certainly heard that on both sides of this aisle. But to be clear, Madam Speaker, this is not an issue of a particular government. This is an issue that happens when governments fail to consider how their actions are going to roll out when they are perhaps a bit too driven by a particular purpose or, one might say, ideology. That does concern me as we come into this period now as a province of increasing austerity.

Again, setting aside the reasons for why this government may feel that's the road they need to pursue and certainly the mandate which they have to pursue it, what I would say is that as we stand here today in support of our veterans and as we recognize that we are all united in calling on the federal government to reverse this decision, we think very carefully about the decisions we are about to make as elected members on behalf of our constituents, on behalf of all the people of Alberta, that we are not downloading costs onto other jurisdictions, say, our municipal governments, as we look at making changes to RCMP and police funding, or as we may look at changes to how we fund FCSS or how we may choose to fund other parts, indeed, that the decisions we make on how we fund our health care system do not place anyone in jeopardy in terms of their ability to access care. We all recognize governments are required to provide and should provide for all their members. As we all here this morning to agree, the federal government needs to step up and do appropriately and fund appropriately for our military veterans. I think it's important that we make sure that as we stand and support this motion today, we do not ourselves then turn and forget the lesson that has been so amply demonstrated.

I appreciate that the minister brought this forward. I appreciate that the minister is raising this. I think it's important for us to consider, as indeed we are considering the cost of our health care system here in Alberta. I think it is reasonable that we would stand up and resist an attempt to place further costs on our system, and I would hope that we would be careful in considering that we do not do the same to others.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I recognize the great debt that we owe to those that serve in our military service and provide that protection. Indeed, I recognize many that serve in many different areas of the government or the public service and provide help and benefit in so many ways, but I recognize that when we look at our veterans, when we look at our military and those who serve there, that is a particular line of service that is worthy of an additional level of respect for their willingness, indeed, to sacrifice, if required, their lives but also to make great sacrifices in their own lives and those of their families as they move to different parts of the country, as they experience chaos and disruption, as they spend that time in service overseas away from their families.

It is incumbent on us to ensure that we hold our government to account, that we provide the best of services, appropriately funded, to ensure that those members will never find themselves wanting, that when they turn for help, it is available for them and their families so that they may continue to do the incredibly important and good work that they do and that others may be inspired to follow in their footsteps.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The selfless and brave individuals who compose our Armed Forces deserve more than lip service from the government that is sworn to honour and care for them. They deserve more than platitudes, and as important as saying thank you to our service members may be, they deserve more than that; they deserve a government that will fight for them.

I will remind this House of a critical failure that took place on February 8 of last year, not too far from this very room. A veteran who had been wounded by an improvised explosive device while on deployment in Afghanistan wanted to know why the federal government continues to fight veterans groups in court. You would think that the response he received would honour his service and his sacrifice – after all, he did lose one of his legs because of the attack he suffered while deployed – but instead he was told that the federal government would continue to fight veterans groups in court because, and I quote, they're asking for more than the federal government is able to give right now. The gross disrespect present in a response like that, Madam Speaker, is frankly nothing but shameful.

This pattern of established behaviour is why I'm not surprised to hear that the federal government is letting our veterans and our active service members down once again. I'm not surprised. I'm standing in this House today to support this motion because we need to send a clear message of support to our veterans and our active service members, that this side of the House – and it sounds like the other side of the House as well – refuses to fail them. How are we supposed to attract the best and the brightest to our Armed Forces when the federal government continues to cut cheques for them that are cancelled before they're even cashed? How are we supposed to reassure the spouses, children, and friends of military members that their loved one will be taken care of in the event of a damaging crisis if the federal government is pulling the rug out from underneath our active service members through their heartless decision-making.

I've heard specifically from spouses and family members about how they've been disregarded in this matter. The spouse of a full-time service member has told me on numerous occasions about the dangers of her husband's job. She says that there's a constant crushing thought in the back of her mind and in the minds of many family members that when her spouse leaves for another exercise or deployment or emergency response assignment, she may never see him again, or if he does come home, he'll need a calibre of physical or mental care that she isn't ready or able to provide on her own.

I can't relate to this. This isn't an experience that is common to me or my relationships with my loved ones. I wake up and I worry about fender-benders, black ice, and tripping up stairs; I don't have to worry about lost limbs, electronic warfare, biochemical weapons, or bullets when my loved ones go off to work.

As a member of this Assembly I do know what it's like to spend gross amounts of time away from my family; however, I don't know what it's like to go to work one morning expecting to see your husband at the end of the day only to have him be deployed last minute to combat a natural disaster with no notice and be gone for weeks with no indication of when or if he's coming home.

I also don't know what it's like to have to have conversations about what happens when a loved one is deployed or what could happen if they are injured while on deployment or on a training exercise, but what I do know is the way that our federal government has been treating our service members is wrong. It doesn't take a uniform or a family member enlisted to call out indecency or disrespect when you see it.

Madam Speaker, I for one vehemently disagree that veterans are asking for more than their government is able to give; they're just asking for the basics. They're asking to be remembered, respected, and considered. They're asking for the most basic level of human compassion that we can give them as governments. This basic dignity of a government that will take care of them when they've given everything they can to keep our country safe shouldn't be an ask; it should be a baseline attitude we approach policy-making from.

The job that our Armed Forces do is thankless, exhausting, and frequently dangerous. When members of our Armed Forces sign their contracts, they're committing themselves to our country. Their spouses, children, family, and friends come second to their service and commitment to their country, to Canada. Their very selves and those who they love the most come second to their commitment to our nation.

I love this country, but I know that so many of the reasons that make me love it are built on the sacrifices of hundreds and thousands of Canadian Armed Forces members that came before me. Why are we honouring them with a government that can't be bothered to commit to them despite their thankless and selfless commitment to us?

Before I close, I do want to honour one specific Armed Forces member, who I believe deserves an extra special thank you today. This is a wonderful lady named Maryanne McGrath. Maryanne is a second lieutenant and works as a reservist administering the Royal Canadian Air Cadets program to our rural youth. She commits several days a week to work with and empower our next generation. Her service for our country doesn't end there, Madam Speaker. Maryanne also serves the provincial government in her role as my legislative co-ordinator. Maryanne spends every day of her life tirelessly serving the people of our province and our country with a smile, and I consider myself so honoured to know her and have her in my life.

Madam Speaker, every Armed Forces member I have ever met has no hesitation when it comes to laying themselves on the line for the sake of this country and its people. The very least we can do is ensure this country will do the same for them when they need us.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise, and I'm going to say that it's my duty, I think, to speak to this motion today as amended. You might find it a little bit odd that I say "duty." It's not just because I represent a northeast Edmonton riding that is home to many of our military families, but mostly it's because of my personal connection and my support for the military.

Both of my parents served in the air force, but, very luckily, not in a theatre of war. I think about that. You know, they were lucky. They were both honourably discharged and were able to go on with their lives. Not only did they serve in the military, Madam Speaker, so did my grandfather. He served in both world wars: one of the major landings during World War I and as a prison guard for prisoners of war in World War II. Unfortunately, I never had the opportunity to formally meet my grandfather. During World War I he was a casualty of the mustard gas poisoning, which gave him significant health challenges going forward, and it was because of those health challenges that, while my mother was pregnant with me, he unfortunately passed away due to some of those things.

So when I look at this motion today, I feel a bit of a personal connection around this and how important it is, and I can't help but think about why it is we're here today bringing this motion forward. I'd like to call it this, Madam Speaker: we're here having to bring this motion because somebody did, what I like to refer to as bottom-line decision-making, where we're looking at the bottom line and we're making decisions based solely on that, and that usually leads to outcomes that are not desirable.

I've heard over and over again around our military families who have served in theatres of war, where the supports for them are not there. Of course, during the debate I've also heard, again, as the Member for Edmonton-City Centre said, some political exchange from both sides. I think we might want to consider the overarching thing about this, and it is that when we ask our women and men to go into harm's way, into a theatre of war, it is because of a political decision that was made by a handful of people just like us in a room just like this. It is a bit of a political spin on this, and we need to remember that.

When we do make those political decisions to send our military personnel into harm's way, we should be more than ready to have their backs when they need it. We're here with this motion because that has failed to happen, and it has failed to happen over a very significant period of time, Madam Speaker. We have not had the backs of our military personnel. I think about: would I have had the chance to meet my grandfather had the government of the day had my grandfather's back in terms of providing proper levels of health care, publicly delivered, no questions, show up and get the treatment you need? But a group of individuals made a political decision, a bottom-line decision to not do that.

I must say that I was certainly encouraged by the Minister of Seniors and Housing, that should the federal government fail to step up, you're ready to do that. I'm very, very grateful that you're willing to do that, as it should be, just make the decision, not even debate about it. Thank you for doing that. I really appreciate that.

When I think about some of the things that have been offered, again, I'm hoping to influence our ability to get away from bottom-line decision-making. My time in labour has seen many different union contracts being negotiated. One of the things that I've always seen during those times is where a company will say: "Well, we'll give you a lump-sum payment. That will make up for everything." No. It doesn't.

We've seen that kind of disrespect being given to our military families where a lump-sum payment – if you would indulge me here. There was a quote from Pat Stogran, who was the veteran ombudsperson, who was quoted saying: deputy ministers make more on average in one year than a person who lost two legs in Afghanistan can be expected to be paid out for the rest of their lives. We asked somebody to go and suffer that kind of an injury. It is insulting to offer a lump-sum payment. We should be there to provide for their medical needs, no questions asked, whatever it takes. I have to say I've seen some decisions made by this current government around bottom-line decision-making. We're here today because that was made.

I know that veterans are very strongly opposed to this. My hope is that this motion as amended, brought forward, will hopefully convince whatever federal government, whether it's the current government, whether it was the past government. They both failed to get away from this sort of bottom-line decision-making and provide our veterans with what we need to help ensure that they have a quality of life that is equal or better than the sacrifice we made as a political decision in a room like this.

Some interesting statistics that I've seen and that the OAG report found, that returning soldiers with mental health issues have increased sixfold between 2002 and 2014. One statistic that jumped from the report was a 24 per cent refusal rate for veterans applying for disability benefits. You have got to be kidding me. I've even heard stories – and maybe some of you have from your own military veterans in your ridings – where an individual on a regular ongoing basis has to prove their leg is still missing from when it was blown off in Afghanistan. We need to do better as political decision-makers.

What did that mean? That meant that 3,684 soldiers who believed they needed benefits to deal with things like mental health issues were refused on first application. Madam Speaker, I don't know about you. I've had disturbing dreams just from going to see a horror flick, let alone what our women and men may have seen in a theatre of war. And why we can't provide for their needs when they come back: it shouldn't even be a question.

After appeals, 2,841 veterans have been cast adrift, which means that they are no longer tracked by Veterans Affairs, and nobody knows whether they are endangering themselves or maybe even somebody else. Political decision-making based on bottom lines does not work for our veterans. From a very personal standpoint I very strongly agree with this motion as amended. I am not dithering or half-heartedly supporting as may have been suggested by one member. I would hope that other members will support this, but, more importantly, as we move forward in this 30th Legislature, that we start thinking more than just about the bottom line, because it affects people. It affects their families. When it comes to our veterans, we shouldn't even be having this discussion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to also thank the Member for Edmonton-Decore for his remarks, particularly outlining his connection, his family connection, to the military. Like him, I too share a family connection to the military. I'd just like to kind of respond to that, saying that I am the grandson of Jack Harker and Paul Schow. Both men served in World War II, something that I am very proud of and I am very passionate to speak about because without these gentlemen, without the service that they provided and gave to this country, we may not have the opportunity to stand in this Chamber today and even have this conversation.

But when I think about the military and when I think about those who serve our country, I often think about my grandparents and what they were asked to do at such a young age. At 18 years old my grandfather, Jack Harker, went off to war to become a bomber pilot. He flew a Halifax bomber in the Second World War. At 18, when I was lacing up basketball shoes, he was lacing up combat boots. When I was putting on a jersey, he was putting on a thick leather insulated coat to fly this bomber on bomber missions. When I was doing team huddles in basketball, he was doing a flight precheck with men who may not return to their families. That's the kind of service that I think about, and I wonder if youth today growing up understand that. While many of them are playing video games, my grandparents were not playing. They were at war.

Sometimes I think the impact and the gravity of the service of our military is lost on some people. I hope that isn't the case, but I find that that might be true. I've even heard some people go as far as saying that people who join the military do it by choice, so it's no different than any other job. That could not be further from the truth. Name me one other job that you go to every day that you may not return home from, with the exception of our first responders. Yes, it is a choice to join the military, but that choice takes significantly more deliberation than, say: do I take this job at this ad agency or this ad agency? What is at stake? For that, for that sacrifice, I'm so grateful to gentlemen like Brock Blaszczyk, who made that decision to go and fight for our country.

The question I've heard asked today is: if we agree on this motion, then why are we even having the discussion? In my opinion, Madam Speaker, the answer is simple: because we won't stand idly by and let the federal government do something as cowardly as cutting funding for our military veterans. It is patently unreasonable that this Prime Minister would have the audacity to pay out $10.5 million to a convicted terrorist and turn around and tell our military veterans that they're asking too much. It's disgraceful. It's despicable. I'm surprised the Prime Minister had the audacity to say that to Mr. Blaszczyk's face, and then he stands behind it.

Madam Speaker, I don't want to take too long on these remarks, but I needed it to be on the record, to be part of this conversation, that I support this motion wholeheartedly for a number of reasons, for Jack Harker, for Paul Schow, for Brock Blaszczyk, and for every other member of the military who has served and is serving now, to show respect for them and for the things that they do so that we can be here in this Chamber and speak freely on behalf of our constituents.

With that, Madam Speaker, I'll conclude my remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the motion as amended?

Mr. Nielsen: No. Do I get to respond?

The Deputy Speaker: You have 20 seconds. Did you want to speak, hon. member?

Mr. Nielsen: Is there time?

The Deputy Speaker: Yeah.

Mr. Nielsen: Thanks. I want to thank you for your comments, especially the family connection that you share. Interesting perspective, considering, you know, that we both like to play the game of basketball and whatnot, so I definitely connected with that. You know what? I would even take the one comment you said about choosing to serve: it's a calling.

The Deputy Speaker: We'll get you next time.

Any members wishing to speak to the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've heard some really good debate on this issue. We all have family connections, and I'd like to share a few of mine as well. There is a lineage that goes back, especially with Albertans in this province doing what's right and standing up in their times of need. My great-grandpa Kemp was actually British Expeditionary Force, so he was out of Pincher Creek. He served in both wars. Both of my grandfathers – Grandpa Ophus, Grandpa Getson – served. I have a lot of friends and family that have served.

As one colleague put it, the pipeline industry is the French foreign legion of construction, so with that, we get tons of other folks that come in. We're talking about transferable skill sets. Construction sites: they're wonderful for allowing these folks to utilize their team efforts, their planning skill sets, the ability to motivate, the ability to execute. You'll see that showing up in spades when anyone wants to give those folks a chance.

I've had, you know, the honour of working with a gentleman by the name of J.F. Trembley, who was the former base commander out of Calgary. He ran all of our camp side of it. A friend of mine, Glen Brooks, is former Australian airborne. A gentleman that volunteered during my campaign, former Sergeant Major Tom Cox, had served well and gone on to be a director at ATCO. My father-in-law, who's a retired physician, was a captain in the Canadian military for the airborne group. Greg McIsaac, another gentleman that came back and had served in taking care of all the logistics in Afghanistan, had worked with us as well. Ben Klick, master sniper and a pathfinder, is a gentleman that I do training with for long range. If we're to be proud of our sniper group, they are the ones with the most confirmed kills in the theatres in our current realm. The training and the commitment that these folks put in are second to none. I've also trained with him and current active-duty snipers in that group, going through some different weapons training in those groups. Bruce Pickford: I'm going to mention his sons, Ferron and Steven. I'm not going to mention them specifically because they're both under deployment right now.

When we're speaking about this and we're talking about cutting health care to these kinds of folks, it sits with me pretty hard on a personal note as it is. I'm glad to hear that it resonates with all members in this Chamber.

Obviously, I'm in support of this motion, but actually I'm appalled that we're even having this conversation in the first place. You know, some people say that Justin Trudeau has done much while in office. Well, I disagree. He's done quite a bit in terms of scandals, damage to our national identity, damage to our energy industry, lots of apologizing, lots of spending, and now we see that he's been doing lots of cuts, too, to health care nonetheless, and not just to health care for anyone, Madam Speaker, but to the servicemen and -women that we've been talking about.

How is it that our federal government can treat our military men and women with such disrespect? The Armed Forces, as we've heard, put their lives on the line all the time, but the Liberal government can't even be bothered to put the funds required to take care of them after they've come back and done their service and sacrificed so much for us. I find the Prime Minister's assertions that the federal Conservatives will make cuts, like, to health care completely ridiculous and hypocritical when he himself has just cut all these health care benefits for our veterans. It's complete nonsense.

I suppose this is another thing he has to do to account for his spending mismanagement over the last four years. I already knew higher taxes were his plan, but honestly I didn't even think he'd stoop this low. I understand that the Prime Minister has lots of money of his own. Obviously, he has this to deal with and to take care of the bills. He has that nicely padded trust fund, that would be more than enough to get him the health care he could ever need. He could probably even go to the States and order a suite and have all the health care he wanted. But many of our service veterans are definitely not as privileged as he is. I think he's due for a reality check, but unfortunately it's not in my power to grant that. That lies with the voters here in a couple of weeks.

For larger provinces like Ontario, the hospitals would be on the hook for at least $10 million. Here in Alberta we're on the hook for at least $2 million, and I'm glad to hear that it was said today that we will cover those costs and that these veterans won't be left out in the cold because of what the federal government has done. With that, it's almost a cut to all of us because taxpayers in Alberta are having to pick it up now as well. Again, we will and I know the folks in my constituency will back that as well for the service that these folks do.

Even more disgraceful, Madam Speaker, is that this was done quietly during the election period. Apparently, he doesn't want Canadians to know what he's been up to. And his history shows us that after most if not all of the Prime Minister's scandals come to light, he ends up going on vacation. I've got a suggestion for him. Maybe he should consider taking a permanent vacation from the Prime Minister's office and give us all a break from his circus.

This cut was done without warning or without consultation with the provinces. Some of these service coverages have been cut as much as 96 per cent. In addition, the military says that they will no longer pay for the MRI and the CT scans for our military members. This has led to one hospital in Ontario with little choice but to deny military members MRIs since they have no coverage and they need to maintain revenue to maintain operations. Now, the defence minister writes to the Prime Minister and his aides saying that these fee schedules were in line with what provinces pay for everyone else. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that the provinces pay under health care plans for the MRI and CT scans. Who's going to cover our military members now? Those scans can cost anywhere from $700 to $800 each. Maybe the Prime Minister can take personal responsibility and tap a little bit out of his trust fund to help out. But that isn't going to be doable because it seems like he's only worried about himself.

The department of defence has spent years saying that its people are priority number one. With these cuts, apparently not. Our men and women in uniform will tell you that it is an honour to serve their country. It should be our honour to take care of them when they need it, and I'm not seeing the respect that is necessary for these military members, who have given so much to all of us. I'm asking for proper health care benefits, which is more than the Prime Minister has given our service members in the Armed Forces. Perhaps Canadians should stand up to the Prime Minister and tell him that that vote that they have is too much to give. These men and women deserve more.

I'm glad to hear that we're all in agreement. I strongly support this motion, and we should send that clear message down east.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. government whip.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank the member for his comments. You know, as has already been stated several times in this House, this is a very important issue. It's a very important motion. I would myself, I think, be remiss in not talking about my family's history as long as others have done in this House. I think back to my father-in-law, actually, who was in the air force for 20 years. He was injured. He actually had to be discharged from the military due to a hernia incident that he received. He was, sadly, no longer able to serve. He was deployed to certain areas around the world through the Canadian Forces. He's a very proud veteran – a very proud veteran – who was medically discharged.

It's very concerning for me when I hear him talk, whether it be recently or just over the years, of at least the feeling that many of our veterans have regarding the way their country has treated them. Something that this Prime Minister has done recently just really sticks a knife into the way he feels about many of the – well, certainly, this current government. You know, I will say this. He is a proud Canadian. He will defend this country and its values and principles like no other. I'm proud of the service that he has done. Certainly, a person like him, along with others and the gentleman that was in our gallery, who has served this country and been injured in the line of duty – certainly, my father-in-law wasn't injured in the line of duty, but his injury was a result of his job, that he was doing while in the military.

These are the types of people that need to be taken care of. These are the types of people that have sacrificed so much. You know, we always talk about our first responders, we always talk about our military folks, but the fact is that over the years people have talked a lot but not necessarily followed through with some of the words that have come out of their mouths.

I want to thank that member for the words that he has said. I want to thank everybody in this Chamber for the kind words that have been said. I think that we all need to really focus on the servicemen and -women who literally put their lives on the line each day – again, I think it was previously mentioned by one of my colleagues – which allows us to have this voice in this Chamber to represent the constituents whom we have been very honoured to represent. I want to, you know, take this moment to stand here and say, sir, that I will be supporting this motion wholeheartedly, and I want to personally thank all the men and women who have served this country, who have done what a lot of people – we'll just say this. It's a choice that they have made, a sacrifice that they have made, and I thank them wholeheartedly.

You know, I could go on and on about other members of my family as well, but my father-in-law, who certainly is currently alive and does have a medical condition as a result of his job while working in the military: it's people like him that we really need to think about and make sure that they have the proper access to medical care and that we're treating them with the respect and dignity that these people certainly deserve. Thank you, Member, for your comments.

I yield the floor. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: There's about 18 seconds under 29(2)(a).

Seeing no one, any speakers to the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I proudly rise today to acknowledge the brave Canadians who stand up and risk their lives every single day to keep our country and our province strong and free. I am actually saddened to the core with the disrespect that the current federal government has for the members of our Armed Forces. It's sad to see that kind of an approach to those that serve and those that protect us.

It's not only about looking after our own in the time of need. It's the injured and those that have sacrificed not only themselves but their entire families both physically and mentally and not just in the past but in the future as their families will suffer the impacts of PTSD and other things such as physical injuries, mental health issues, and those unfortunate circumstances and pressures that face members of our Armed Forces. The Liberal government has a unique way of saying thank you – don't they? – to those who risk their lives for our country each and every day.

Madam Speaker, I often say to people at the doors – and you sometimes knock on the doors and somebody says: well, I'm not really into politics. It might be a little bit aggressive of me, but I remind those same people that say they're not really into politics that we had generations before us that fought for our democracy, fought for our freedom and did it selflessly. They were not really into war. They stood up for this country. They did the right thing. They did their duty to this country. We have now a generation of Canadians who take that same sacrifice, that same sense of honour and respect and duty and serve this country so that we can enjoy the democracy and the freedom that we have in this Legislature, in this province, in this country, which, we have to remind ourselves, are unique in the world and something that should be honoured and respected. It is a sacrifice for us, to maintain that in this great country.

Madam Speaker, that unique way that the federal government has actually thanked those hard workers and those dedicated people is to really kick the Armed Forces when they're down. Kicking them when they're down and injured and suffering, again, those physical and mental injuries that they may have, is a disgrace. For the leader of the federal government, the Prime Minister, to say that our Armed Forces are asking for more than the federal government can afford is beyond a disgrace. We've heard that, and that's been reported widely across this country in the past.

This is just another severe attack on those that have served. For the Liberal government to reduce the rates at which it reimburses the cost of providing health care services is completely unacceptable and should be completely unacceptable to all members of this Legislature. I loudly and proudly endorse our government's motion to denounce this decision by the federal government. It is morally wrong, and this motion should be supported by all in this Legislature.

Quite frankly, it's a disgrace to conduct this type of policy decision on behalf of an entire country on the global stage. It's a disgrace for us to have people outside of Canada, let alone inside Canada, see that this is how we treat our Armed Forces. It really shows that that government is not prepared to take care of our own on that global stage. It speaks to the respect that we try and generate for this country. We have from generations not only incredible sacrifice but incredible performance made in two world wars and after that across the world and around this globe, not only in defending that freedom and democracy but also in ensuring peace.

I want it to be heard loud and clear that this United Conservative caucus, our government, and certainly my peers in the Legislature strongly support our Armed Forces. We need to send that signal from this House that we are not only here to work with them but that we are here to defend them in their times of need. We will be their voice and will stand up to this federal government on this decision. We will make that message clear and unequivocal as we deliver it from this House, from Albertans, to this federal government.

Madam Speaker, to me, we need to embrace this. We need to talk about this issue, not conflate it with other issues, as we've heard from the other side of the House here, not conflate it and use it as an opportunity for partisan rhetoric. We need to take this as an opportunity to speak loudly, proudly, and with strong words and strong actions on this irresponsible approach by the federal government.

Madam Speaker, time and time again Justin Trudeau and his Liberal government have wronged hard-working Canadians, and on many occasions, frankly, I've been embarrassed by the loss of reputation that this country has faced over the past four years, fancy wardrobes aside. To the best of my memory, the current federal government gave 10 and a half million dollars on behalf of that government to a known convicted terrorist, and now we see brilliancy, of course, in deciding to take away funding from Canada's very own who are defending this country from that terrorism. That is shameful.

Under the Canada Health Act and provincial health acts across this country, military members are ineligible for various forms of public health care coverage, and that is why the federal compensation is so important to these members, Madam Speaker, so that we can continue in this province to honour and respect and deliver the health care that they so richly deserve.

Time and time again Justin Trudeau has made questionable decisions. The federal government is constitutionally responsible for providing medical care to the members of our military and those retired members of our military, and our Prime Minister has continued to prove that he is dismissive and unbound by the Constitution and has no moral authority when making such decisions that affect so many respected and honoured citizens of our country, denying military members the health care that they deserve and they need not just to survive but to thrive in our communities. I never thought that a federal leader could disrespect those front-line defenders of our democracy and our great country in the way that he has done to date.

Alberta is committed to being here for our Armed Forces. We heard that from our Minister of Health, and I'm proud to stand with him in those commitments. Regardless of what the outcome is of this reckless decision from the federal government, we will stand strong and free in Alberta in providing Alberta's military members with the health care that they have earned and which they so richly deserve. We shall stand strong and united against Justin Trudeau – I hope that we can do this in this House unanimously – and his misguided policies and stand up for our Armed Forces as they stand up for us.

Again, as the Minister of Health stated just yesterday on the front steps of this very Legislature: the Alberta government will not withhold services from military personnel, end quote. He also stated that the reality is that this is a unilateral cut in health care funding from Trudeau's government to the provinces, but, most of all, it's disrespectful towards the forces. End of quote.

Madam Speaker, again, those words that I've shared on many doorsteps have awakened some people to their responsibility, not just their right but, I think, their responsibility, to honour the democracy which has been hard fought for and hard earned and hard won in this country by generation after generation after generation. Many members of this House know people that have served, have family members that have served, and I would guess that we would find a list of those that have been lost just by talking to the 87 members of this Chamber. It touches all of our lives every time we hear of a loss. We go to Remembrance Day, we see the cenotaphs, and we see the names.

At my high school, Western Canada high school – and we didn't do this when I was there – what they have done is paired students with members of the Armed Forces that were lost. They have a project there; it's called the wall of fame. What they do is that they pair a student with someone who was lost, and it could be from World War I or World War II. They track down family members, and they get photos. They are responsible for telling the story of that individual, that former student of Western Canada high school who did not come back from the war. In doing so, they honour them, those young people, the youth 18 and over, some of them younger than that, who went and fought for the freedom that we so richly enjoy in this province, that we enjoy in this House, that everyone who has the opportunity to vote, to get involved with the politics that we know about, has an opportunity to honour by doing so. Again, I challenge those people: when you say that you're not into politics, think about those that fought for us that were not really into war.

Madam Speaker, I will be supporting this motion wholeheartedly and with great passion, and I encourage everyone in this House to follow suit. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As you know, the Thanksgiving season approaches, and amidst all the conversation happening in light of the upcoming federal election, I'm reminded of how lucky I am, how lucky we all are to be Canadian, to live in a country that is free from war and political violence, a country where we can worship as we want, where we can engage in the free exchange of ideas and voice our opinions freely, like we do here in this Assembly.

We can do all of these things, Madam Speaker, because those rights and freedoms have been fought for and continue to be defended by the brave men and women in the Canadian Armed Forces. These courageous heroes made tremendous sacrifices so that you and I could enjoy these freedoms. If you walk out into the rotunda in the Legislature, you'll see on the wall the names of Albertans who fought in World Wars I and II, and that's because we recognize that our democracy is able to exist today because of the sacrifices that our men and women in uniform have made and continue to make to protect our freedoms. We are eternally indebted to them as Canadians. That's why, Madam Speaker, my colleagues and I were shocked and, quite frankly, sickened to see on Tuesday that the federal government under Justin Trudeau's watch had made major changes to how it plans our veterans' health care.

Madam Speaker, the Canada Health Act as well as the provincial Health Act state that members of the Armed Forces are ineligible for health coverage under provincial plans. Instead, these expenses are supposed to be paid for by the federal government. However, the federal government has dramatically scaled back the amount that it is spending on veterans' health care.

The press secretary to the Minister of Health stated that the ministry received new rates for payment by the Department of National Defence for hospital services provided to eligible Canadian Armed Forces members. What the federal government is saying, what Justin Trudeau is saying, is that our veterans are not a priority for him, that their health is not a priority for him. Imagine, Madam Speaker, being one of the 40,000 CAF members to have served in Afghanistan between 2001 and 2014 or one of the more than 4,000 CAF members who served overseas during the Gulf war or one of the dozens of combat, training, or peacekeeping missions Canadian Armed Forces have engaged in over the years. Imagine being one of the roughly 61,000 living veterans who served in World War II. Imagine having sacrificed so much, having been willing to die for your country only for your government to turn its back on you. It would be an utter slap in the face.

Madam Speaker, as of 2018 there are an estimated 649,300 veterans in Canada: 48,300 war service veterans and 601,000 Canadian Armed Forces veterans. Covering the health care costs of these veterans is not a big ask when compared to what these veterans have done for Canada. When one has served our Armed Forces, it can be expected that they might need extra care when it comes to their health and well-being. There may be physical ailments that can be expected due to the physically demanding nature of being a member of the CAF. There may be an added need for mental health supports given the high prevalence of depression, posttraumatic stress disorder, and other mental health concerns among veterans, particularly those who have served in conflict zones. In fact, in 2018 it was reported that over 6,700 military members who served in Afghanistan received benefits for mental health conditions, with PTSD being the top mental health concern.

The federal government should also be there to support our veterans as they age and potentially require additional care. Our veterans deserve to have the support that they need to enjoy a high quality of life. Our veterans never abandoned Canada, even in the most trying times, so why in the world does Justin Trudeau think it's okay to abandon them? Madam Speaker, for Justin Trudeau and his government to cut funding in this way is appalling.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak on the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowsell: Thank you for giving me an opportunity to stand in front of the House today, Madam Speaker. I'm appalled and disappointed by the actions the federal government has taken against our veterans. They are heroes of this country and deserve to be treated that way, not tossed to the side and left on the street. The steps that the Trudeau government has taken in regard to this matter are appalling and hypocritical. Praising their heroism and bravery while simultaneously stabbing them in the back is beyond disgusting. They deserve a government that will fight for them and recognize their incredible contributions to our country, a government that has their backs like they have had ours, a government that will not leave them alone or any one of them behind, just as they would while on the front lines.

Under the Canada Health Act members of the military are not covered by provincial public health plans but are instead covered by the federal government. The government is constitutionally responsible for providing care to all members. Service members that need medical care go through a similar process as out-of-province patients. The military will reimburse the hospital for all services provided. However, these fees can be as much as three times more than the rates that are allowed to be charged by most provincial plans. When put in tandem with the massive cuts to funding, this puts hospitals on the hook for millions of dollars.

In layman's terms, these changes essentially mean that the military will be covering less of the fees physicians charge, leaving the hospital to cover the rest. These changes set a dangerous precedent for our veterans and will change the way hospitals view them. For example, Pembroke regional hospital projects a shortfall of $3.4 million, and Kingston health services centre estimates a loss of $2.3 million, all due to funding cuts. At least one hospital completely stopped accepting military patients for selected services. The hit for Ontario alone is estimated to be at $10 million. These drastic cuts were done without consultation of our province and will cost Alberta about $2 million in lost revenue to Alberta Health Services as well as income loss for physicians in our province.

Just because the federal Liberals choose to disrespect our veterans does not mean our party will do the same. Our UCP government has stated that we will not withhold services from any military personnel and that these changes are essentially just a unilateral cut in health care funding to the provinces and are disrespectful to the forces. The department of defence is just as two-faced as Trudeau himself. For years they have gone about flaunting and touting how their people are its priority while playing Judas. Apparently, the Liberal government has the money to give convicted terrorist Omar Khadr a $10 million payout but doesn't have the money to compensate our brave men and women who fought to serve and protect our country.

We need to stand together as a province and as elected officials and denounce the atrocious, despicable actions of our federal government. An immediate reversal of this policy should be implemented. Our service members deserve the utmost respect, and the least the federal government can do is recognize their contribution to our country and give them the treatment they deserve.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

11:20

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, it's with a certain degree of sadness and anger that I rise in the Chamber today to discuss the issue of the Trudeau Liberals cutting health care for our military veterans. As you know, a big component of my constituency is 4 Wing Cold Lake, which is home to one of the largest military bases in Canada. Frankly, I find it very disappointing, and the federal Liberals ought to be ashamed of themselves. Cutting our veterans' health care funding while Trudeau and his elite allies posture about caring for all Canadians is beyond the pale.

Under the Canada Health Act members of our Armed Forces are not normally able to access public health coverage under provincial plans. What happens instead is that the federal government is constitutionally responsible for providing comparable medical care to all members of the Armed Forces. Then the military reimburses the hospitals the cost of providing those services.

The Trudeau government has cut the amount the military can pay out to hospitals under this system, therefore rendering hospitals on the hook for caring for military members and waiting for the payout. The end result of this is large portions of Armed Forces members without health care as the hospitals are unable to pay for care, and the Canada Health Act prevents them from getting care as a civilian would.

Madam Speaker, our veterans and currently active military servicemen and -women deserve so much more than this, and so do their families. You know, I hear stories from folks about the stress that is put on kids when mom or dad are deployed overseas, with always that fear of them not coming home. We also have to think about the families of those servicepeople. These brave men and women fight for our lives and our freedom by sacrificing their lives willingly and often without a second thought. That's because they love our country, and they want to see it protected. They want to see it flourish for them, us, and their families. What do these Armed Forces members get for their service and sacrifice? They get a slap in the face once again from the Prime Minister as he blows off our veterans and active military personnel.

We have to recognize Mr. Brock Blaszczyk, a war veteran who was in the Chamber here earlier this morning, who lost his leg in an explosion in Afghanistan as part of his duty. Mr. Trudeau in a town hall meeting in 2018 was asked by Brock why the government was not providing funding to help veterans. Brock said: I was prepared to be killed in action; what I wasn't prepared for, Mr. Prime Minister, was Canada turning its back on me when I got home. Trudeau's response to this was: the veterans are asking for more than we're willing to give. Amazing. The Prime Minister said that our Armed Forces veterans were asking too much but was all too willing to give convicted terrorist Omar Khadr, a convicted terrorist, $10.5 million.

Is it any surprise, then, that this government is once again sloughing off our military members? Not really, unfortunately. Trudeau and his Liberals have led a legacy of cutting funding and support to veterans and Armed Forces groups. This is simply another logical step along that path, Madam Speaker.

I know how important our military is. As I mentioned, 4 Wing Cold Lake is one of the 14 wings of the Canadian Armed Forces and is a very big component of the Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul constituency. According to the Royal Canadian Air Force, Cold Lake is the busiest fighter base in Canada. It hosts a multitude of training programs such as being home for the Canadian fighter pilot training, but 4 Wing Cold Lake also attracts top gun crews from all over the world for the annual aerial combat Exercise Maple Flag. We also welcome pilots from all over the world to come and train because we have some of the most accessible airspace in the world for new pilots to get that training that they would never be able to get in their home countries.

In addition to this, Cold Lake has one of the largest aerial weapons test facilities in all of Canada. These air force members have been nothing but a boon since 1954 to the community of Cold Lake, and to think that any of them may not be able to access health care is completely unacceptable, in my eyes. I think I speak for everyone on my side of the House when I say that it is a despicable act and that our veterans deserve the highest level of care available to them. We must not compromise on the quality of service we provide to our military members and veterans because they do not compromise on their willingness to serve and sacrifice for us.

Once again, Madam Speaker, I want to unequivocally denounce these health spending cuts imposed by Justin Trudeau and the Liberals and urge the federal government to reverse these changes immediately. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've already spoken under 29(2)(a) on this, but I just wanted to get my name on the record and everything else supporting this motion, put forward by the Minister of Health, as amended. I think it's important that our government takes action on this, standing up to the federal government and really coming together in this Legislature to support our veterans.

Our veterans: we know that they've given it all. They continue to give it all. They make sacrifices. My great-grandfather was one of those veterans. He passed away a few years ago. He was more affectionately known as Bops. He fought in World War II. He was a gunner on the back of an airplane, and he had hearing loss, obviously, from that war. He fought against one of the most brutal regimes the world has ever known. He had integrity and grit, and he was a fantastic human being, and I'm very proud to be from the same family as Orville Studer.

When we're talking about this issue, this is not about him asking for more than he could give. He gave everything. He gave his hearing. His wife gave her husband and his ability to hear her properly. They were married, and then he was off to war. I think that when we're talking about this, context is so important. So, for me, this issue is personal.

Also, in my riding this issue is very important. On I believe it was Sunday I spent some time with the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat out in Redcliff, and we were meeting with veterans at the Redcliff Legion. This is a yearly event where we celebrate some years of service from these veterans. One of the veterans came up to me. His name was Wayne, and Wayne told me about his story and how he's recovering from posttraumatic stress disorder related to his time in the service. He told me story after story about just how important it is to have proper health care and to have these supports because the supports have lent him the ability to sleep at night. The supports have made it easier for him to continue doing what he does and to support his family. I'm happy to be able to speak on his behalf because I think that, for Wayne, this issue is extremely important.

In addition, Brooks-Medicine Hat has the Canadian Forces base in Suffield, Alberta. The Premier, myself, and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont went out to Suffield along with the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, and we toured the base, as it's known in southern Alberta. These people are innovators. They are strategists. They are excellent, and they give it all every day, too. Some of these soldiers and their families have uprooted and moved to little Medicine Hat and Suffield and Ralston to be able to train there. You know, they give so much, and I think the Member for Edmonton-Manning discussed this as well. These people are moving all over the place to take care of our country in the ultimate act of patriotism and laying their lives and their families' lives on the line every day to make sure that our freedoms are taken care of.

At the end of the day, us providing for them and making sure that they have proper access to health care and health care services is the absolute – I believe it's incumbent upon us as government to stand up for these people because they've given so much. These people are not asking for more than they can give. Like I've said before, this is not a political issue. This is an issue that we should be taking to heart and seeing that this is integral to our functioning as government, to be able to advocate for these people, because at the end of the day I don't know who deserves it more. I am happy and proud to be able to stand here as the great-granddaughter of a veteran and the MLA for some of the greatest people that I've ever met, the veterans in Brooks-Medicine Hat.

I proudly support this motion, and I would encourage all members to do the same. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any members wishing to speak to the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I, too, will be supporting the motion before us. I think the latest actions by the federal government are just the last in a long line of federal initiatives by governments of all stripes to act in an egregious way towards our Armed Forces' men, women, and others who have given of themselves to protect our country.

I was reminded, by listening to many of the people around the table, of a speech I gave in this House a while ago with regard to the importance of veterans and supporting them. My father served in the Second World War, and he only really found out about his various benefits very, very, very late in life and took advantage of some of the health-related ones. But I can remember that there was never any talk around our table about what the government of the day – he, of course, returned home in '46 – would do for veterans. He was not privy to that information, and he just went on and married, raised his family, and then only late in life understood that there were some benefits that he could get, and he took advantage of those, as I said. I think that a better job, obviously, could have been done for him, for many, many, many veterans over the years, starting after the First World War and onward, but the governments of the day did not take that solemn responsibility to protect and support their people who had served for them, served for Canada as best they could.

I appreciate that the government of Alberta is stepping up and has the backs of veterans in this province who need that support. I think that's the right thing to do. It makes me proud that we're taking that action, and it makes me proud that there is no disagreement around this table around the need to do that. We are standing as one for our veterans with regard to this Motion 33 as amended, and that's a good day for Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the motion as amended? The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The recent announcement by the federal Liberal government came as a shock to me, like I think it did for most Canadians. It's completely against the Liberal campaign strategy of trying to buy votes. They have pledged to spend billions of dollars before the campaign and billions of dollars during the campaign, and they claim to be the only party that is standing up to support middle-class Canadians, yet they are slashing funding for the members of the Canadian Armed Forces and veterans. Our members and veterans are middle-class Canadians like so many others, and they do not deserve to be treated with such disregard.

I am pleased to see that after all the public outrage the government is willing to consult with the provinces, but how can Justin Trudeau justify these cuts? These men and women selflessly serve our country to keep us safe. They leave their families for months to protect our freedom and the freedom of others around the world. It is astonishing that the federal government has chosen to slash health care funding for members and veterans in the name of trimming the budget while wasting money on photo ops and other opportunities that they have to save money as well.

Justin Trudeau really does believe that our veterans are, and I quote: asking for more than we can give. End quote. This complete and utter disdain for our troops cannot be tolerated. We must not stand by while this Prime Minister slashes the benefits of our troops. We must not stand by as the Prime Minister actively disgraces Canada time and time again. As a member of the UCP caucus I stand here proudly to say that we support our troops, we support their access to timely and effective health care, and we will work hard to ensure that they continue to get the service that they deserve. Our troops give their lives for us, so for the Prime Minister to say that their health care is too expensive is appalling to me.

Our government has pledged to make sure that our members and veterans will receive the health care that they need regardless of the $2 million that the Liberals are cutting, $2 million that was being invested in providing members and veterans with front-line services. But what could the Prime Minister possibly be spending this money on? What else is the federal government doing with this money that would have been better than providing a service of health care to our front-line troops? The bottom line is that the funding of health care for the military members is clearly under the jurisdiction of the federal government and the Canada Health Act. This Prime Minister is attempting to pass his responsibilities on to provinces while also reaching into the jurisdictions that suit him. The level of disrespect for our forces is truly troubling. Our members and veterans deserve the highest standard of care, and they face numerous challenges already.

In my own experiences, Madam Speaker, in travelling across the province as the military liaison, I've had the honour to be able to go to military bases across the province, military family resource centres as well, and really hear from the front-line members the incredible work that they're doing. It's really an honour for me when they actually give me a tour of their base because I'm just an MLA from Leduc-Beaumont, and I really look up to these members and what they're doing. If they put me on a tour, it makes me feel like they're putting me on a pedestal, which they should not. I'm honoured to be able to see what they do, and I'm always in awe of what their capabilities are. To all of them: thank you for your service.

To hear from our Health minister and from the Premier that the support will continue is extremely important. We have a number of troops in Alberta who are deploying overseas or are waiting to deploy. That's enough stress on their families already and on themselves, and to add in that they're going to trim back their health care is – I just don't understand why they would think that this is the place to save money, the health care of our veterans.

My own grandfather served in the Royal Canadian Air Force. He joined in 1943 as a gunner. He did numerous sorties and bombing runs, finishing his career as a military police officer in 1965, in fact, finishing in Cold Lake. I've always been proud of his service and loved hearing about the stories and seeing his medals when I was a kid. He was always somebody that I looked up to. Although I got to know Richard Brewer, honestly, through stories from my family – he died young. He sacrificed so much, and so did my grandmother. Some of the injuries he sustained may have caused, later on, his untimely death, and I really wish that I'd got to know him more personally rather than just through the stories that I was told. I'm proud to be able to stand in the Legislature today to defend the health care that our veterans deserve and that our serving members deserve because he would have wanted me to be able to do that for him. I'm proud to be able to do that on his behalf as his grandson.

For all the serving members across the province, again, thank you for your service; the provincial government has your back. We'll do everything we can on the provincial side within our jurisdiction to make sure that they and their families are supported.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, any more speakers on the motion as amended? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to say thank you for that moving speech.

Also, I move that we adjourn debate until 1:30 this afternoon. Oh, sorry. Do I move to close debate first? I'll gladly do it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, if you are to speak again, you will be closing debate on this motion.

Mr. Schweitzer: Oh. I see.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there anyone else that would like to speak to the motion as amended?

The hon. government whip.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much. You know, there's been a lot of progress here, and I know that this is something both sides of the House can agree on, that we support this motion. I know that everybody would like to be a part of this vote after question period, so I would like to move that we adjourn the House and return at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:40 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, October 10, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, visiting today from the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford: grade 6 students from George P. Nicholson school. Also, from Edmonton-Riverview we have grade 9 students from Hillcrest junior high. Welcome to all of the students.

Hon. members, seated in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon is a guest of the government military liaison and MLA for Leduc-Beaumont. It's my pleasure to welcome former military serviceman and Canadian military veteran Mr. Brock Blaszczyk.

Also in the Speaker's gallery today is a very familiar face to many, perhaps the visitor and guest most often in this Assembly, Mr. Pat Nixon.

Hon. members, a guest of the Minister of Energy, Mr. Mark Scholz, president and CEO of the Canadian association for oil well drillers, and students from the Students' Association of NorQuest College: Shylo Morin, Daniel Kazambu, Jamila Davis, Joshua Chiazza, Albert Nsapu, John Skene, Hutchoy Moris, Mohammad Rajab, and Peyton Monahan. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has a statement to make.

Vegreville Century Park Supportive Living Facility

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for introducing the hard-working Albertans who are joining us in the gallery here today. Indeed, there are a few visitors that we have who are hard-working Albertans and, at least for a few more days, employees of the Century Park seniors' facility in Vegreville. A few days ago these Albertans and their colleagues, 53 people, were all dismissed by Century Park's operator, Optima Living, a private company based in Vancouver. Our guests do difficult, demanding work. They bathe, toilet, dress, feed, and support the seniors in their care day and night.

These guests deserve the thanks and the respect of every member in this House, yet the letter that Optima handed them said that the reason they were all being thrown out of work was because it, quote, offers the prospect of greater return to our shareholders. This decision wasn't about providing the best care; it was about getting the most cash. Is the Minister of Health's vision of seniors' care for the Century Park building to provide a return to shareholders in Vancouver or a home to seniors in Vegreville? Well, we'll find out because these Albertans are here in this room today to learn whether their government cares about them and the seniors that they care for.

Make no mistake; wholesale staffing changes by operators contracted by AHS require AHS approval, and the Minister of Health has the authority to give direction to AHS. This government is clearly not shy about inserting itself into labour relations when it wants to. I'm sure that the Health minister is well aware of his government's actions through Bill 9. These Albertans are here to learn whether the Minister of Health will use his authority to protect 53 Alberta families from the ravages of unemployment and 40

Alberta seniors, family members, from losing their primary caregivers. I know that seniors and families, workers, and operators are watching today. It will be a defining moment for this Minister of Health.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Calgary-Klein has a statement to make.

Mental Illness Awareness

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to mental illness, stigma and discrimination cause people living with symptoms to feel alone and often to not seek treatment. In 1992 Mental Illness Awareness Week was established as October 7 to October 11 by the Canadian Psychiatric Association. This week is dedicated towards opening the eyes of Canadians to the serious realities of mental illness so that we can change our behaviours towards acceptance and respect for people.

One in 5 Canadians is directly affected by mental illness, but we know that indirectly millions more across this country are also impacted. Despite efforts to reduce stigma and raise awareness, many Canadians still live in fear of being stigmatized and of what seeking help could mean. Others do not know that they need help or sometimes are not able to identify or explain what they are experiencing.

The goal of Mental Illness Awareness Week is to break down barriers by increasing awareness of the symptoms and the resources available for people that need help. The biggest goal is to let people know that they do not have to face this alone. We can help those with mental illness by being available to talk and being available to listen. The good news is that there's hope. There are many examples of recovery and many examples of community-driven programs to support individuals and families to live satisfying and hopeful and purposeful lives.

Our government is hopeful that our investment into more nurse practitioners will be a proactive step into mental health support across this province, but it will take continued investment, and we will all have a role to play. We need to realize that we are all in this. This isn't an us-and-them question but something that we all suffer with, and we all have a role in supporting each other.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Read In Week

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise in this House today to recognize 30 years of Read In Week. Earlier this week I had the opportunity to read to classes of students at l'école Campbelltown elementary school in Sherwood Park. It was an awesome experience. This week is a time to celebrate the joy of reading and come together as a community to enrich the lives of our children by reading aloud in our classrooms, our homes, and around our province.

This year marks the 30th anniversary of Read In Week. This initiative began when Edmonton public schools, Edmonton Catholic schools, and NorQuest College decided to come together to encourage the development of literacy and language skills amongst students. It has since expanded, and many school divisions outside of Edmonton have started to participate or conduct similar events. Reading is a key exercise to help students develop the skills they need to succeed. It inspires children to have a vivid imagination and to be curious learners and creative thinkers.

I would like to recognize all the community partners in Edmonton, my own community of Sherwood Park, and across Alberta for their hard work to raise awareness for the importance of literacy and spreading the love of reading. During this important week I would encourage all my colleagues in this Chamber to get out into their communities and read to a class. I am certain that schools would be happy to have you, and you would be helping promote the importance of literacy to the next generation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning is rising to make a statement.

Mental Health Awareness

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise in recognition of mental health awareness day. Mental health impacts all of us in different ways and at different times. Sometimes this is with personal experience when the stressors of life can create moments of anxiety or depression. As individuals we may not always speak of the personal struggles that we experience. For some of us, we are not impacted as individuals, but instead we may have loved ones that have mental health struggles. Some of us may have even lost a person due to suicide. This is why this day is so important, a day that is dedicated to encourage all of us to talk to each other about how we are doing.

Every 40 seconds a person dies due to suicide, a staggering number of people, people who do not feel they were loved. Today why not do 40 seconds of action? If you are struggling, talk about those struggles. If you know that someone is struggling, let them know that they are not alone, that there are people that are thinking about them, that care about them and love them. We need to continue to talk about mental health, about suicide, to improve the knowledge of how to identify when someone is struggling, to be able to be supportive and remove the stigma around mental health so that people feel they can talk about their struggles. Simply put, we need to show people that we care.

As Albertans we are caring people. We want to help. That is why it is so important that we ensure that supports that people need are available to them. Mental health services need to be funded and supported. Access to counselling and treatment without financial barriers needs to be available to all.

So let's spend the time to talk to one another, to listen, and to be supportive. Tell those in your life that they are important. Take care of one another. Above all, take the time to take care of yourself. If you are struggling, tell someone. We're all here to help.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville has the call.

International Day of the Girl

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Friday, October 11, is International Day of the Girl, a day to promote girls' empowerment and advocate for their human rights. It is a day to recognize and celebrate how far we have come in the advancement of the rights of women and girls, both at home and abroad. But it's also important that we recognize the challenges that girls all over the world face. We see advertisements and even world leaders saying that girls can do anything, but the reality is that girls still face many barriers that hold them back from fulfilling their potential and realizing their dreams.

Mr. Speaker, on the day of the girl we reiterate the fact that girls can do anything. Given this, I think it's only fitting to touch on the important efforts that our government has undertaken to empower women in trades. Women are dramatically underrepresented in the skilled trades. Our government is changing that. Being a journeyman and the chair of the skilled trades caucus, I know many women who made great contributions to their families, communities, and our economy as a tradesperson. If we truly want girls to pursue their goals and follow their dreams, we need to make sure they have access to a wide range of opportunities, including pursuing a career in the trades. I'm glad our government is taking concrete action to support women. We are providing Women Building Futures with $10 million in funding over the next four years. By investing in training for women in the skilled trades, we're investing in Alberta's future.

It is incumbent upon all of us in this Assembly to show girls in Alberta and beyond that they can become whatever they want. Let's all take a moment today and every day to teach, inspire, and learn from our girls and help carve a path for them to realize their dreams, whatever they may be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Old Alberta Farmer by Davie Barnes

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, Davie Barnes was an Alberta farmer from Thorhild, a Canadian soldier, a lifelong family friend, and a poet who recently passed away at age 94. The following poem he wrote was recited at his memorial service by one of his granddaughters. I promised her that I would read it in the Legislature to honour his memory. His daughter Linda Pack and grandson Neil Pack are seated as my guests in the public gallery to hear my address. It is titled Old Alberta Farmer.

He stands beside his tractor, in the evening of his life,
A strong successful farmer who has weathered storm and strife.
He stares into the sunset as the evening shadows fall,
And thinks about his family with a father's fond recall.

He is going to give up farming, so this spring will be his last,
And his mind is on the future, but his heart is in the past.
He day-dreams of the children who once played where he now stands
And the happiness and comfort once provided by his hands . . .

He looks slowly 'round the farmstead – each familiar field he sees –
Remembers each one's weaknesses and idiosyncrasies.
He remembers all the planning that goes into each new crop,
And the practices that pay the most, and practices to drop.

He glances at his tractor, waiting patiently at hand,
For his touch to start and guide it far across the rolling land.
He has serviced the injectors, checked the fuel and the oil,
And now it stands there waiting to begin its yearly toil.

He will run it one more season; then the parting of the ways
From his faithful iron monster and those sixteen-hour days . . .
With a start he realizes that it is no longer day –
He takes a last long look around, then sighs and walks away.

Hail to you, Alberta Farmer – (and your understanding wife –
For she shares you with a mistress that has claimed your soul for life!
Woe betide the marriage partner who says: "Choose! The land or me!"
For a true Alberta farmer just might set the lady free!)

You have suffered toil and hardship, dared the weather's fiercest blows,
Had your share of joys and sorrows, summers' heat and winters' snows.
Now the time is fast approaching when, for you, the race is run,
And you cease your operations at the setting of your sun.

When your days on earth are numbered, come you home at last to lie
In the bright Alberta sunshine, 'neath the blue Alberta sky;
In the arms of Mother Nature you shall have your final rest,
And tell your loving Father: "Lord, You know I did my best."

Davie, we miss you.

Small Business and Thanksgiving

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, Thanksgiving should be a time of reflection and goodwill between friends, families, and our communities. While some of us will be enjoying good laughs and turkey naps this weekend, I want to bring the attention of everyone in the House to those who won't be gathering in good spirits with the rest of us.

We can talk about economic downturns and slumps and sluggish growth for hours, Mr. Speaker, but what goes unheard is the true cost of the poor policies of the previous government. As much as we like using fancy fiscal terms to illustrate how hard past policies kicked Albertans when they were down, nothing says it quite like seeing yet another for-lease sign crop up in another storefront in Airdrie's core. I have to commend the strength and will of our small-business owners as they fought to stay afloat under bad policies like the carbon tax, but I can absolutely not blame them for being cornered into closing their doors due to legislation that couldn't support their vision and their dreams.

Thankfully, Albertans made it resoundingly clear this year that they were done with the carbon tax, they were done with the poorly thought out minimum wage increase, and they were done with policies that won't support them. Our government has set a clear path towards economic recovery, and we are on track for economic prosperity. Our policies give hope to the small-business owners who weathered the storm of the economic downturn and will signal to those who shut their doors that now is the time to reinvest and try again.

What we need to see from this House and from every Albertan is a resounding message of support to small businesses in this province. I believe in giving a hand up instead of a handout, Mr. Speaker. The best way to do that is through supporting local businesses, that are the backbone of our communities. Policies only go so far. The rest is up to us and who we decide to give our business to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Tenille Townes

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise in this House today to speak about Grande Prairie's own rising country music star, Tenille Townes. Anyone who knows me knows that I take tremendous delight in any opportunity to speak about my friend Tenille as she is a close personal friend but also truly one of the nicest and most genuine people I have ever met.

This year at the 2019 Canadian Country Music Association awards in Calgary Tenille swept the podium, claiming all four awards for which she had been nominated, including songwriter of the year, female artist of the year, single of the year, and music video of the year for her song Somebody's Daughter.

Besides her work ethic and incredible talent as a country music artist, Tenille is a true humanitarian. At age 18 she was the youngest ever recipient of the Slaughter humanitarian award from the CCMA in 2012. This recognition came as she has been a champion for Sunrise House, which is the northernmost youth emergency shelter in Alberta, which is located, of course, in Grande Prairie.

In September 2019, just one week after her big win at the CCMA awards, she celebrated the 10th anniversary of her annual fundraiser event, Big Hearts for Big Kids, raising over $415,000 in just one evening and bringing her grand total raised to over $1.9 million. The first Big Hearts event she hosted raised just $30,000 and happened to be held on the very night that the shelter closed due to lack of funds. It is largely due to Tenille and her dedication that the shelter reopened and serves youth to this very day. She embodies the drive of Albertans and what they can do when they decide to make a difference.

Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that I am very proud to be from Grande Prairie, and I don't hesitate when I see an opportunity to brag about my community or the wonderful people who call it home. I am quite certain the folks in Calgary could hear my cheering all the way from my living room in Grande Prairie the night she got called up over and over again. I am so proud to be able to show Canada and the rest of the world the talent that resides right here in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Calgary LRT Green Line Funding

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Calgary continues to expand, it also continues to seek to increase its LRT coverage. LRTs enable large cities to move people in an efficient, safe, and environmentally friendly manner, especially for work and large events. As many in this Assembly are aware, construction on the first phase of the green line is set to begin in 2020 and will result in a line from the north of Calgary to the south. To date this is a $4.65 billion project with funding from all three levels of government. Unfortunately, the project funding falls short of what is necessary to complete the project fully. While I appreciate the work that has been done thus far and the funding from all three levels of government, I have concerns about this project, concerns shared by my constituents.

The first is that the southern portion of the line is only presently funded to reach 126th Avenue, or Shepard station. The residents of Calgary-South East are disappointed that the green line will not reach as far as their southern constituency. This is a section of the city which is rapidly expanding and includes the South Health Campus hospital.

We also have concerns about the growing budget uncertainty and also the lengthening timeline. I recognize that future phases of the plan for the green line extend to the community of Seton, but there is debate on whether this will be included on the second or third phase. The first phase is scheduled to be completed in 2026. This means that even if Seton is included in the second phase, we will not see an LRT in my constituency until at least 2030.

It is my sincere hope that the city of Calgary, our government, and the federal government can come together to find a cost-effective and fiscally responsible path forward for this project and that it will include a station in Seton as soon as possible.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Provincial Fiscal Policies and Job Creation

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All week our members have risen to ask this Premier about the various cuts he's planning as he scrambles to pay for his 4 and a half billion dollar corporate giveaway, a giveaway, I might add, that hasn't created a single job to date. The Premier has ducked, dodged, and weaved our questions, and I expect him to do the same today. But I have to ask the Premier: are you scared to introduce your budget because you know the harm it'll cause Albertans and the anxiety it will also cause your very caucus?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we'll be introducing our budget even earlier than the NDP did back in 2015. Of course, we had to take onboard the expert advice of a former NDP Finance minister, Dr. MacKinnon, and her nonpartisan panel in framing this plan to get Alberta back to work and to bring our finances back to balance. What the NDP is scared of talking about are the real issues facing Albertans in the election to happen two weeks from now. The question I have for that member is: will the members of the NDP be voting for their antipipeline leader, Jagmeet Singh, or their antipipeline ally, Justin Trudeau?

Mr. Bilous: That's a very nice duck, dodge, and failure to answer the question.

Let me give the Premier a bit of a rundown on what's already happening because of his failure to deliver the budget. Rural police funding is being cut. School fees are going up. Insurance rates are up. Child care pilots are stuck in limbo. So, too, is classroom funding. I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. Every day the Premier refuses to answer our questions and accuses us of fear and smear. By refusing to table your budget, you are hurting Albertans. Perhaps it's something to do with the federal election. To the Premier: do you fear that your budget is so bad that it'll hurt the election chances of . . .

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Albertans gave this government the largest democratic mandate in our province's history in part in order to create jobs and bring balance back to our province's finances after the fiscal catastrophe of the NDP. [interjections] I hear the former failed Finance minister continuing to heckle. I understand why he feels so bruised. You know what they're calling him out there in Alberta these days? The $60 billion man. That's the debt that he left this province in, on the way to $100 billion, with five credit downgrades. We're going to get Alberta out of the hole that the NDP put us in.

The Speaker: The hon. the Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Premier, Albertans want action today, not two years from now. Here's the thing: the Premier hasn't created a single job. Not one. Albertans elected you to create jobs, but so far 13,000 jobs have been lost in the energy sector alone under your watch, Mr. Premier. All the while the Energy minister sits on her hands, and the economic development minister uses the same tired talking points daily. To the Premier: will you scrap this failed experiment, listen to the business community, reinstate the successful tax credit that the NDP introduced, and perhaps consider a cabinet shuffle while you're at it?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it's the first week after five months away, and that's the best that they can come up with? That's a pretty strong confirmation that we're on the right track. Imagine the socialists saying that we should listen to the business community when all week they've been attacking the job-creation tax cut and the businesses that create employment in our province. I'll tell you what: that government raised taxes on businesses and on Albertans and on everything with the carbon tax, and they drove us into a historic recession. That's why they're the first one-term government in Alberta political history.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert has risen.

School Bus Routes in Calgary

Ms Renaud: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's becoming abundantly clear where school boards are cutting to pay for this Premier's $4.5

billion corporate giveaway. Students with complex needs in Calgary have seen their ride times double, and they've been crammed onto buses that are much more crowded than in years past. Many of these kids can't cope with the additional stress of noise and longer commutes. Given all of these facts, I have to ask, Mr. Premier: do you still think your $4.5 billion corporate gift is worth it? Is it more important than kids with complex needs or severe autism?

Member LaGrange: Well, first of all, I want to say how sorry I was to hear what had happened to those individuals, those children and their families. But the NDP knows full well that this is an internal decision by the Calgary board of education. School divisions are in the best position to make their bus routes, and they have done so. I think that if NDP MLAs are wanting to micromanage school routes, they should be looking to run for school boards in the next election.

Ms Renaud: Literally throwing school boards under the bus.

This government obviously won't listen to me, so I'm going to try bringing forward the concerns of parents, just like we promised to do. One mother who wrote to us about the busing funding said that the stress of these bus rides is causing her child to vomit daily. This Premier won't even consult with parents like this before making drastic cuts that harm our students. To the Premier: what do you have to say to this mother and so many others who fear for their kids every single morning that they send them out the door, put them on the bus to school?

Member LaGrange: We have been very, very upfront and committed to providing a world-class, high-quality education for all students. We owe it to parents and children to get better outcomes for the money that is being spent on education, including the bus rides and transportation. I find that it's just another example of the NDP fear tactics. I've travelled across this province, and what I heard more and more was that they are continuing to create fear in the education community. It's deplorable.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to ask this question one more time. Other than the talking points, listen to what the parents are saying. These bus rides are not working. These kids cannot function in these buses that are packed. These bus rides are too long. They can't do it. These kids are vomiting. This isn't about your talking points, your lack of budget, your delay. Answer these parents. They have serious questions or concerns for these children. Stand up. Speak to them.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I have to put it back to the fact that we do not micromanage school boards. We have heard loud and clear that school boards want their own authority to put together the bus routes. Unlike the previous Minister of Education, who was missing in action, this summer and this fall I have been touring the province, meeting with school authorities, teachers, students, and parents. What I've heard is that the system is tired of the NDP scare tactics. The narrative that they've been spreading to further their agenda is causing the anxiety in our education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Vegreville Century Park Supportive Living Facility

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope the Premier is able to take a moment to look up from his desk and see the guests gathered in this House who've travelled in from Vegreville, health care professionals who provide front-line personal care for Alberta seniors. They work hard. They work long hours. They take on tasks like bathing, toileting, dressing, and feeding our seniors day and night. Their employer has dismissed them and insulted them with an offer to be rehired for $10 less an hour. To the Premier: plain and simple, do you believe this decision to fire these workers was fair?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I understand that a transition like this can be stressful for employees and families. Our priority is going to continue to be making sure that the residents are going to continue to have the care that they need at Century Park. Now the NDP is asking me: am I going to interfere in these contracts at this site? The answer is no. We believe that the system . . . [interjections] And they heckle me. We believe that the system that we have in continuing care in Alberta, with a mix of private partners as well as government . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Transition, Mr. Speaker.

This Minister of Health has the legal authority and responsibility to intervene to uphold the standard of care for these seniors, as the previous Minister of Health did, but this government seems far more focused on helping rich corporate friends with a 4 and a half billion dollar handout than providing any form of support to these workers. To the Premier: will you commit right now to directing the Minister of Health to prevent 53 Vegreville families' unemployment and protect 40 Alberta seniors from losing their familiar primary caregiver, or do you only interfere when you're breaking contracts to lower their wages?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, the NDP has a long history of interfering with businesses, interfering with their contracts. The bias against the private partners that we have in continuing care, in the system is quite obvious. Over four years they tried to squeeze our nonprofit partners, our private partners in continuing care. We see them again, now that they're no longer in government, continuing to attack those partners, our nonprofit partners and our private partners. We support the decades that we've had of continuing care in Alberta with the mixture of government, nonprofit, and private providers in the system.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, Mr. Speaker, that answer is as tone deaf as the statement yesterday from the minister for women's issues. When our critic asked her yesterday about how this government would support these workers and if she supported this cut in their wage, the minister seemed to simply imply that they should all just go and look for jobs in the trades. This is shameful. The jobs they do have dignity. We need quality health care workers like the ones that are gathered here today. They deserve the respect of this government and a decent wage. To the Minister of Health: will you commit to meeting with these health care workers and myself immediately after question period today, so we can find a resolution to get . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to meet with them. I'm happy that they have come to the Legislature today to be able to meet not only with the hon. member and his colleagues, but if they would like to meet me, I'm very happy to meet with them. Also, just to say this as well for any Albertan who's listening today, for the residents at Century Park, our department and AHS are monitoring this transition very closely. We'll provide any supports that are needed during this transition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has risen.

Rural Police Service Funding

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has told this House many times that a response to rural crime is a top priority of this government. The UCP government has promised 500 new officers and 50 new prosecutors. Well, it's been six months since the election, and this House has passed 13 bills. Rural communities are still waiting for the Premier to get around to his so-called top priority. If the Premier believes there is a rural crime crisis, why couldn't he find a single dime for rural policing this spring when he handed out $4.5 billion to corporations.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I've answered questions on this the last few days. We are being very clear with Albertans. We're talking about more money for policing. More money for policing.

Now, last night I was in Camrose, and 150 Albertans came out and expressed their concern regarding the justice system, Mr. Speaker. I heard a lot about the NDP legacy in the justice system. I'm going to be in Rocky Mountain House in a couple of weeks with another town hall. I invite that member to come to Rocky Mountain House and hear about their NDP legacy on rural crime.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has the call.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we were in government, we took action on rural crime, and the UCP notoriously voted against that rural crime strategy while in opposition. In government, after they got their $4.5 billion corporate handout done this spring, they all went on vacation and forgot about rural crime. Here we are in October, and it's still another two weeks before we'll get a budget. Police officers take time to hire, train, and deploy. To the Premier: will we see a single new officer on the streets within the first year of this government's term?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, again, silence. Yes or no, will you come to Rocky Mountain House to hear about your legacy? This is the utmost in frustration. Let me share with you some of the stories I've heard on my tour: people living in fear across Alberta, people that are scared now when somebody drives down their dirt road. They're no longer happy to think: maybe a neighbour is here. They're now wondering: who is here to harm me? Why won't that member come hear about their legacy on rural crime? Open invitation: come to Rocky Mountain House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and the Justice minister have repeatedly announced 50 new prosecutors, but the minister recently admitted that they have yet to hire a single one. The minister tried to blame these vacancies created by the UCP's hiring freeze on me. To the Premier: since the minister seems confused about who's in charge of the Justice department, can you tell us if there will be a single new prosecutor hired this year?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we're hiring the 25 unfilled positions that we inherited from that member. We're hiring right now. We have job opportunities right now. Yes. We will be also funding 50 new prosecutors. But that member hasn't even answered the question. Will you come to Rocky Mountain House? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Members, we will have order.
The Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat has a question.

Investment Incentives and Job Creation

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have already seen positive results from the job-creation tax cut, with major investment announcements made in September by Telus, Suncor, and Polycarp, and this activity has come just after the first of four cuts to the corporate tax . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Hon. members, we will have order.
Hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, please feel free to restart your question.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have already seen positive results from the job-creation tax cut, with major investment announcements made in September by Telus, Suncor, and Polycarp, and this activity has come after just the first of four cuts to the corporate tax rate. It is my understanding that our government has made other tax changes that have helped increase Alberta's attractiveness as a place to invest. To the Minister of Finance: what are these changes, and how will they help drive investment back to Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. In addition to announcing the job-creation tax cut, the carbon tax repeal, our government is going forward with the accelerated capital cost allowance provision adopted by the federal government. This measure allows businesses to invest in equipment with accelerated writeoffs, which will support investment and, ultimately, job creation. This measure will be felt very directly by our small businesses, which we know are essential employers in the province. We're continuing to re-establish Alberta as the most competitive business environment in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that specifically the announcement from Telus of a $16 billion investment will have great benefits for my constituents in Brooks-Medicine Hat and given that this announcement alone will improve rural connectivity while creating 5,000 jobs, can the Minister of Finance elaborate on what other impacts this broad-based tax incentive will have for our province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In terms of impact, let's hear from an Albertan. I quote Mick Dilger, president and CEO of Pembina Pipeline Corporation, with respect to the accelerated capital cost allowance measure: these investment incentives are critical to the development of creating value-added goods, which in turn create employment, tax space, and help our global competitiveness in industries across the country; for our company, this will help stabilize our recent investment decision into the development of a world-scale polypropylene facility.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that the previous government seemed determined to drive business and investment out of the province and had no regard for job creators and their unique challenges, that they themselves created, can the Minister of Finance provide more detail about how these investment incentives work to support Alberta's job creators?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for the questions. These changes allow Alberta businesses to write off 100 per cent of their manufacture and processing equipment and clean energy equipment in year 1. They also mean that for most classes of capital assets, in year 1 they get three times the otherwise deductible amount. Alberta is attracting much-needed investment back into this province. Again, this measure will especially support small businesses, and we're very pleased to make a decision to go forward with it.

2:10 Rural Police Service Funding (continued)

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, councillors, in a Lac Ste. Anne county press release yesterday, are warning that this Premier's plan to cut funding for rural police will "place a considerable financial burden on resource-strapped municipalities." They also warn that they may have to raise taxes to keep communities safe. Now, both the Premier and the Justice minister have stood in this House this week and claimed that they are not cutting police funding. To the minister: if that's the case, then why do town councillors keep saying the opposite? Are you really trying to claim that local leaders in Lac Ste. Anne are completely wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that question. I have spent the entire summer travelling across our province listening to the concerns and priorities of our municipalities, but I think the question ought to be to that member. When he was the Finance minister when they were in government, what did they do? Here are the records. They left us with more than $60 billion in debt, and they chased away investments out of our province. They led a government that led us to have more than 200,000 of our fellow citizens out of employment. We are working to solve all of these problems.

Member Ceci: You're well on the way to losing more jobs.

Given that Lac Ste. Anne county councillors described the response of the provincial government to their questions and concerns as "noncommittal and ever-shifting" and given that this flies directly in the face of the minister's claim on Tuesday that he has been "crystal clear" in his commitments, to the Minister of Justice: will you end your noncommittal and ever-shifting approach to communicating with rural municipalities and finally be straight with them about your plan to cut their funding for police?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we have been communicating clearly with municipalities across Alberta regarding our plan. We're seeking their feedback right now. They have a few more days now to get their feedback in regarding our proposals regarding police costing. We're listening to Albertans. We want to make sure that we have their feedback. We were at the AUMA. We had 1,000 people there. We answered their questions in detail on this. We are committed to spending more money on policing. This is about more pie.

Member Ceci: Then why did you vote twice against increases to rural police funding?

Given that Lac Ste. Anne councillors also said the government's plan to cut police funding by up to 70 per cent is "an ill-conceived and poorly-communicated initiative" and given that we know that this cut is being done to help pay for the $4.5 billion you're giving away to big corporations, to the Premier. Your minister has screwed this up. My question to you today is: will you cancel this cut and work in true partnership with RMA and AUMA to craft a way forward?

Mr. Schweitzer: Again, I don't know how many times I've got to repeat this in this House. We are dedicated to more funding for policing. We have been crystal clear on that from day one. I also want to quote for that member. We got some feedback as well. Terry Ungarian, reeve of the county of Northern Lights: if we have to pay a little bit extra but see money reinvested to bring rural crime under control, then that's a win. From Lance Colby, mayor of Carstairs: I believe everybody should pay a little, that anything we pay should be reinvested. And from Cheryl Eikeland, mayor of Marwayne: the idea behind this proposal is very good; we need more police on the ground. Mr. Speaker, we're continuing to listen to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has a question.

Canadian Energy Centre Managing Director

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday this government announced that they have appointed failed UCP candidate Tom Olsen as the head of their so-called energy war room. At last check, this individual was a lobbyist for payday loan companies and now is being paid a massive $195,000 a year salary, and all this war room seems to do is post on Twitter. To the Premier: how much money is Mr. Olsen being paid per tweet?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the real story here is that the United Conservative Party, Alberta's government, has followed through on yet another promise, creating an organization that will work to defend our oil and gas industry. That's where we're going. We will spare no cost. We will work hard to defend the hard-working men and women that work inside the oil and gas industry, something that those members did not do when they were in government just a few short months ago, when they were working against our energy industry. I can tell you, through you to Albertans, we will continue to fight each and every day to protect our largest industry.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the appointment of Tom Olsen to head the energy war room is puzzling and given that Maclean's writer Jason Markusoff said about the Olsen appointment that, quote, if this war room is to be judged by its general, this isn't an encouraging sign, to the Premier: can you please explain to all the qualified people in Alberta's communication and energy industries why you think Olsen was better for this job than they were?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this side of the House will not be lectured by that side of the House when it comes to appointments in regard to our energy industry. That's the side of the House who, you will recall, appointed Tzepporah Berman to their panel to defend the oil sands. Talk about putting the fox in the henhouse. This side of the House is dedicated to getting jobs and the economy and pipelines going in our province. We will always stand with our oil and gas industry, the complete opposite of the NDP in this province. Their former Education minister stood on the very steps of this Legislature chanting: no more pipelines. Through you to him: shame. Albertans, you can trust us when it comes to the energy industry.

Mr. Sabir: Given that 60 per cent of the voters in the Calgary-Buffalo constituency rejected Mr. Olsen in the last election and given that he now stands to earn more than all the members of your caucus who had winning campaigns, to the Premier: will you commit to releasing the hiring criteria that you used to hire Mr. Olsen and the rationale for rejecting more qualified Albertans? Or was this just a patronage appointment with no rationale?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, there are members of the NDP caucus who are sitting in this House even though 60 per cent of the voters in their own ridings rejected them. I don't dispute their right to be able to sit inside this Chamber.

What I can confirm to you on behalf of the Premier is that we will continue with the platform promises that we have made to protect our oil and gas industry. We will stand up for our oil and gas industry. We are proud of our oil and gas industry. We have the best environmental standards in the entire world, the best social standards in the entire world. We will continue to stand with them. Again, to them, the real question that's been asked the entire time: are they voting for their close ally Justin Trudeau and his antipipeline policies, or are they voting for their NDP leader and his antipipeline policies?

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of stories circulating about changes occurring at the Century Park continuing care facility in Vegreville, including a suggestion that all staff are being thrown out of work and being replaced by people brought in from outside the province. These claims are causing tremendous anxiety to seniors and families in Vegreville. Can the Minister of Health please explain to me and my constituents the situation in Vegreville?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm advised that the transition will take effect on November 1. I know it's stressful for the residents and their families as well as for staff at the facility. I'm concerned about the impact on staff and employment in Vegreville, so I'm glad to hear that the new operator intends to hire most of the current staff. The claim that staff are being replaced with people from out of the province, I'm told, is simply false. I also understand that AHS has vacancies in the Vegreville area, so there should be jobs for most or all of the staff.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for sharing this information with us. Given that there is also a suggestion that pay rates at the facility are going to be cut under the new operator, to the same minister: do you plan on intervening to prevent pay reductions or cancel the transfer of the facility altogether?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member. I support the rights of the staff under the law and their collective agreements. My department and AHS are monitoring the transition closely, and they'll provide any supports that are needed, as I said before. You know, unlike the NDP, I don't believe in manipulating individual contracts for political purposes. [interjections] Continuing care for decades has been publicly funded and delivered by a mixture of government, nonprofit partners, as well as private partners. The NDP just can't accept that. That's why they're heckling me. They can't accept . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again, Minister. Given that there are also questions being raised about the whole issue of contracting continuing care and the potential that changes like the current one in Vegreville may happen again elsewhere, again to the Minister of Health: do you plan to change the process for funding continuing care facilities to avoid the potential for any future subcontracting situations like this?

Mr. Shandro: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no. We believe the system is based on the right approach. We fund the operators – public, government, private, and nonprofit – all on the same basis. The NDP ignored the real issues in the continuing care system for four years and imposed their bias against private providers in one area after another, from continuing care to labs to laundry. Our government campaigned on the real issue: improving access to care, not who provides it. That's my priority as Health minister.

Commercial Driver Training and Testing Standards

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we heard the Transportation minister fail to justify why he had abandoned critical highway safety measures and turned his back on the victims and families and survivors of the Humboldt Broncos bus disaster. It was shameful, but let's give him another chance. Will the minister do the right thing today and commit to maintaining the standards brought in by the previous government to keep Albertans safe on our highways?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will remind the hon. member again that the standards that he claims they brought in – it was the MELT standards – come out of the United States. No truck driver will be able to go from Canada into the U.S. with a class 1 or 2 after February without MELT training. But they didn't actually bring them in. They announced them. They say that they operationalized them on March 1, about two weeks before the election, but on the same day they nationalized the driver examiners and lost half of them, crippling the government's ability to deliver what the hon. member now claims they delivered. So it's not true.

Member Loyola: Given that an independent, third-party review of Alberta's PC-era driver examination model found seven significant safety gaps, 17 important safety gaps, and eight critical safety gaps, has the Minister of Transportation actually read the Tantus report, and how can he justify returning to this deeply flawed and fundamentally unsafe model of driver training?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently we're still using the method of driver examination that the previous government left behind. It finally gave me something to agree with. There was a test that said there were problems with the system. I agree with the hon. member that there were problems with the system. We will continue trying to sort that out. I think we're on the right track, and I think we have quite a few fail-safes in place that will solve, we hope, all those problems.

Member Loyola: Given that this government only seems to open its doors to big corporations and given that the Premier rushed to hand over $4.5 billion to these corporations in a failed experiment to create jobs – not one – and given that we now know that this Minister of Transportation is putting the interests of big trucking companies over those of families who lost their loved ones in a tragic accident, to the minister: who convinced you to make these awful changes, and why didn't the families of the Humboldt bus tragedy have a say in the matter?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like the hon. member and the House to know that I spoke with Mr. Boulet a second time today, just not long before question period. The MELT is here to stay. The previous government actually never got MELT delivered. We will get MELT delivered – and it is here to stay – which is the higher standards. The previous government failed to do it. This government will not fail.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the organization led by anti-LGBTQ2S-plus campaigner John Carpay wrote to the Edmonton public school board urging them to repeal their locally developed policies that protect students from being outed against their will. The letter states that this repeal is needed thanks to this UCP government's shameful Bill 8, the first rollback of human rights in Alberta's history. Will the Minister of Education admit that this attack on LGBTQ2S-plus children was her goal all along?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The truth of the matter is that Mr. Carpay and his group do not speak for the government of Alberta, nor do they speak for the Department of Education. The fact of the matter is that our government has the most comprehensive statutory protections for LGBTQ2S-plus students in Canada. Students can be assured that they will continue to be protected and cared for in our schools.

Thank you.

Member Irwin: Given that this letter also contains a threat of legal action against Edmonton public schools unless they expose these vulnerable youth to being outed against their wishes and given that lawsuits drain money from school board budgets that really would be better spent in the classroom supporting students, will the minister commit today to paying the legal bills of any school district that resists the homophobic bullying of John Carpay?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Privacy Commissioner stated in June, membership in any student organization, including GSAs, is protected under Alberta's robust privacy legislation. I will not comment on hypothetical litigation. Students absolutely can be assured that we are looking after them. We will protect them. We always have. We always will.

Member Irwin: Hypothetical. This is exactly what we predicted would happen under Bill 8. We're seeing fewer students joining GSAs as a result of your harmful policies.

Given that Mr. Carpay also brought a lawsuit against this province to try and out LGBTQ2S-plus kids and given that he dropped this lawsuit immediately after the passage of Bill 8, what message does it send that this Minister of Education accepted generous campaign donations from two supporters of this homophobic bully's lawsuit?

Member LaGrange: I reiterate: the fact of the matter is that our government, Alberta Education, has the most comprehensive statutory protections for LGBTQ2S-plus students in Canada. Our students can be assured that they will continue to be protected by provincial legislation.

An Hon. Member: Shameful.

Member LaGrange: What is shameful is that the NDP continue to play politics with this issue, and they cause fear amongst our LGBTQ students. That's reprehensible. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South has risen with a question.

Needle Debris and Addiction Treatment

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following NDP mandates, social agencies distribute on an annual basis millions of needles for taking illegal drugs, including upwards of 100 needles at a time to individual drug users. There are little or no internal controls preventing the growing number of discarded needles in public parks or other spaces, causing public safety risks. To the minister: will this government require distributing agencies to be more diligent and responsible to reduce needle debris?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for a very good question. Our government takes the issue of needle debris very seriously. Albertans deserve safe communities that are free from needle debris. Our government will continue to work with municipalities and local law enforcement to find new ways to keep our communities safe and reduce needle debris.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that at the recent AUMA convention municipalities passed a resolution requesting that government develop a province-wide strategy for cleaning up used needle debris and given that flawed NDP policies have exacerbated the proliferation of needle debris, to the minister: will this government develop a province-wide strategy to reduce the millions in taxpayer costs to clean up needle debris in Alberta's parks and other spaces?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer is yes. I have already directed my staff to report to me with options to reduce needle debris. I'm looking forward to a comprehensive plan that will reduce needle debris in our province. Until then we will continue to fund needle debris services throughout the province in the communities that were impacted. That is something we can do to make sure that we keep our communities safe.

Mr. Stephan: Given this government's commitment to invest in supporting individuals seeking to become free from addictions and given the prior NDP government's focus on supporting those remaining in their addictions, including in Red Deer, with a drug overdose prevention site that omits services for addiction recovery, and given that the end goal for drug addiction should be freedom from drug addiction, to the minister: will this government begin with the end in mind, with a focus on supporting those seeking to become free from addictions?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. Our government believes in a full continuum of care to support Albertans with multiple choices when they need help. We believe harm reduction alone cannot be the answer for the problem. That's why we have committed unprecedented funds, $140 million, to help Albertans to develop a comprehensive strategy, and we also announced recently that we will create 4,000 treatment and recovery spaces to help Albertans who need support services get the support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Early Learning and Child Care Centres

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Children's Services has been described by the media as a minister of mystery, and to be honest, the title fits. She didn't rise once in the last session to speak on behalf of vulnerable children, when her government slashed minimum wages for young people and protections for LGBTQ youth. Now it's been months since the minister has said that she would be conducting a thoughtful and careful review of the NDP government's $25-per-day child care program. We're aware this government is fond of its reviews and panels, but the lack of transparency here is deeply concerning. To the Minister of Children's Services: what is the status of your so-called review, and do you support affordable child care or not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans struggled for the past four years under an NDP government, and I can tell you that while members opposite had a platform, so too did we. We are going to continue to create jobs so that parents have the opportunity to provide for their families, we're going to continue to work on growing the economy so that we can provide supports for those who need them, and we are going to ensure that the parents who need supports have access to them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the previous government, child poverty was cut in half, and that was partly because of affordable child care. Given that the minister has received many, many letters of support for the ELCC program from child care providers and families across Alberta and given that the minister knows that parents are concerned about the future of the program and given that this government has raced to cut a $4.5 billion cheque to big corporations but has left families looking for affordable child care in the lurch, to the minister: is affordable child care even on your radar?

The Speaker: I'd just like to take this opportunity to remind all members that preambles after question 4 are not acceptable.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last six months I've been travelling across the province to all different types of licensed daycares, speaking to Albertans about their priorities in child care, and in that time I have heard from concerned daycare operators, child care workers, and parents that the $25-a-day pilot was concerning because, unfortunately, your pilot did not track need, it did not track income, it did not track employment, and it did not track wait-lists. I know this because while the member opposite spent her summer with radical antipipeline activists and fear-mongering on Twitter, I spent mine talking to parents and child care operators across the province. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member.
Order.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I also spoke to a number of child care centres and families over the summer, who told me repeatedly about the impacts that this was having on their children's accessibility and readiness for school and that they were having increased professional development and cost of living for early childhood educators – I'm sure that information will also be included in the review – and given that this government is causing . . .

The Speaker: I think I provided a caution about the use of preambles mere moments ago. I would encourage you to get immediately to the question now.

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, given that while this government claims to be in favour of creating jobs but has refused to acknowledge the evidence that affordable child care helps get parents back to work and boosts the economy, to the minister: do you think it was wise to spend . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Well, that was some fast talking, so I'm going to slow it down here. We will review the results of the pilot. We understand that there were some major gaps in that pilot, and there is some data that we just won't be able to gather. That's why I spent the summer speaking to child care operators, front-line child care workers, parents across the province. We are advocates for quality child care. We are advocates for affordable child care and, certainly, for helping parents who need help to take part in the workforce.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions' Remarks

Ms Sweet: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday during the debate on Bill 14, the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions compared the UCP government to the communist government by saying: "It further enhanced my belief that even with a communist government, when they focus on the right issue for the people, people's livelihoods actually increase. I see so [many similarities] to the current UCP government." To the associate minister: could you please share with this House what similarities you see between the UCP government and a communist one?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. associate minister clarified those comments in the House yesterday.

What's interesting to me is what has not been clarified by the Official Opposition in this Chamber, the question the Premier asked the Official Opposition yesterday, and that is that many of their members participated in a protest on the steps of the Legislature that included communist flags within the crowd, and they still have not condemned that. So will they stand up in this House right now and condemn that type of activity?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the associate minister compared the priorities of his government to communist ones and given that the current Premier has condemned the Prime Minister for similar remarks, to the Premier: will you also condemn the comments of the associate minister, or will he admit that he shares his views that a nondemocratic communist government is positive for people's livelihoods?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the associate minister clarified his comments in the Assembly yesterday, and those comments speak for themselves. The members is welcome to refer to Hansard if she did not notice them at the time.

Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier's question to the opposition: do they support protests that include communist flags? Four of their members at least, that I know of, participated in a protest on the steps of the Legislature that was organized by a well-known antipipeline and anti oil and gas activist who in other places had blocked bridges and conducted themselves with civil disobedience that caused significant disturbance of the peace. Do they support that behaviour?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the associate minister twice expressed his admiration for the positive effects that a communist government can have on people's livelihoods and given that when trying to explain his remarks to the House, the associate minister went on to compare the government's Bill 14 to the priorities of nondemocratic communist governments, to the associate minister: will you apologize to your cabinet colleagues and UCP party members for comparing them and their priorities to those of nondemocratic communist governments?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again, the associate minister clarified his comments in the Assembly yesterday. His clarification comments speak for themselves.

Here's another question that hasn't been answered by the NDP that has been brought up by myself earlier this week. The NDP, we do know, conducted an investigation into some of their members, some of the members who may remain in the benches today, for serious sexual misconduct. The leader of the NDP confirmed that there was a problem with some members when it came to sexual misconduct and that she had to take constructive action. She still has not acknowledged who those individuals are. Mr. Speaker, through you to them: do they currently sit in the NDP benches, yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Adoption, Foster Care, and Kinship Care

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans dream of one day having a family to call their own. Tragically, and often due to circumstances out of their own control, these dreams are unrealized. Some families may turn to adoption or fostering initiatives; however, these processes can be lengthy and expensive. To the Minister of Children's Services: how will this government create efficiencies in these processes that allow Albertans who are ready to adopt to build a family of their own?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister for Children's Services has the call.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It was such an incredible pleasure to spend time with my colleague in Lethbridge-East this summer and see what an exceptional advocate he is for his constituents.

Adoption is an issue that many members of our caucus care deeply about, and I am grateful for their advocacy in this area. Like my cabinet colleagues, I'm taking a thorough look at what red tape families encounter as they look to adopt to see how we might be able to streamline those processes while ensuring that children are safe and supported. We're also continuing discussions around the bill proposed by the minister of culture that was unanimously . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that children in care often face unique challenges when placed in foster homes, including challenges such as integrating into a new foster home and adjusting to a new community, and further given that foster families must be adequately prepared to overcome these challenges and support the children in their care, can the minister please explain how this government is supporting families in caring for foster children?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister for Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Fostering and kinship caregivers across the province do incredibly remarkable work. They step up in a child's hour of need to offer safe and caring homes to the most vulnerable children in our province. Because this work is intensive and can be incredibly challenging, my ministry offers a variety of supports, including mandatory training, dedicated caseworkers to provide guidance and assistance, and things like respite care to give caregivers time to care for themselves. Later this month is Fostering and Kinship Caregiver Week, which will give us an opportunity to recognize these remarkable Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that children in foster care also require comprehensive support and follow-ups in order to ensure their success in foster care and beyond and given that these children must not fall through the cracks of this complicated system, to the same minister: what will this government do to ensure foster children are placed in homes or in kinship care arrangements that best suit the needs of the child in question?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our priority is to ensure that vulnerable children are safe and supported. We are committed to keeping indigenous families together whenever safely possible. Because of the nature of these fostering roles, rigorous screening is done for both kinship and foster homes, which includes annual reviews, ongoing contact, and assessment of any care concerns that might be identified. My ministry also recently launched new training for caregivers. The training now better reflects an understanding of child development, trauma and historic trauma, and highlights the importance of maintaining connection with family, community, culture, and language to a child's safety and well-being.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I can have your attention for one brief moment. I would just like to bring to your attention the presence of the consul general of the country of Japan. He has joined us in the Speaker's gallery. I invite you to welcome him to the Assembly.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less the Deputy Speaker will proceed with the rest of the daily Routine.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 21(4) of the Election Act I'd like to table six copies of the following report, A Report of the Chief Electoral Officer: 2018 Enumeration. An electronic copy of this report will also be provided to all members.

Thank you very much.

Ms Renaud: Okay. I have an article from the Guardian, and it's a question. Bad Ancestors: Does the Climate Crisis Violate the Rights of Those Yet to Be Born?

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. We're going to do it this way. Does anybody else have a tabling?

Mr. Feehan: I have an article entitled A Data-based Dismantling of Jason Kenney's Foreign-funding Conspiracy Theory by Sandy Garossino in analysis, energy, and politics.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have two tablings today. First, a tabling on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, a Joint Media Release in Response to Alberta Justice and Solicitor General's Draft Police Funding Model: Municipal Leaders Express Collective Concern Over Costs and Effects of Contemplated Change. I have five copies for tabling.

Also, on my own behalf I have the privilege of tabling a poem that I read today entitled Old Alberta Farmer, written by Mr. Davie Barnes, a Canadian soldier, farmer, and Thorhild resident, whose family is here to witness the tabling as well.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I think we all enjoyed that poem.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

Canadian Armed Forces Health Care Funding

33. Mr. Schweitzer moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon, as amended:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly denounce the federal government's decision to reduce the rates at which it reimburses the costs of providing health care services to Canadian Armed Forces members, call on the federal government to immediately and fully reverse this decision, commit to no future changes, and provide the highest level of treatment for these members, and recognize the contribution of these members, who bravely and willingly risk their lives for our country.

[Debate adjourned October 10]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any speakers to the amended Motion 33?

Should I put the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 33 as amended carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 15 Real Estate Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 15.

The Real Estate Council of Alberta, also referred to as RECA, was established under the Real Estate Act as the regulator for the real estate industry with a mandate to protect customers, establish and enforce professional standards, and provide services to the real estate industry. Unfortunately, over the past couple of years that council has failed to deliver on its mandate. RECA's current and most recent governing councils have been unable to exercise proper governance and oversight over the organization. It is clear that actions need to be taken in order to protect the overall operations of the council and its critically important role by refocusing and stabilizing the regulator for the immediate term and then ensuring efficiency and confidence in the future.

For those of my colleagues and for Albertans who don't know the backstory, this afternoon I'll walk you through what brought us to this point. In 2016 my department received the highest number of complaints about RECA that it had ever received, and since then that complaint number has continued to be consistent. That means that for at least three years there have been significant issues identified by Albertans, industry, council, and administration. This government is addressing those issues.

Early in my mandate I received a review from KPMG about the governance structure of the Real Estate Council of Alberta. The review had begun earlier in the year, after KPMG was tasked not just with reviewing but also with putting forward recommendations to address any concerns as well. Considering the complaints that had been raised against the council, complaints that included conflict within the council, a lack of trust, allegations of misconduct, and an inability of the council to work with the administration, I was curious what the independent reviewer's reaction would be. It didn't take me long to find out. I needed only to read the first page to find out that the complaints my department had received over the past three years were warranted.

To be frank, Madam Speaker, it was very disappointing. It was disappointing that the council had deteriorated to this level. It was disappointing that the full scope of complaints was confirmed, and it was disappointing that nobody had addressed the complaints earlier. It's important to note that these complaints were significant.

The review is very clear in laying out all five major findings: first, "significant interpersonal conflict amongst Council and Administration"; second, that the "Council is not focused on strategic issues"; third, "Council does not have constructive relationships with industry associations;" fourth, that "Council is not exercising adequate oversight of RECA"; and fifth, that there is "minimal public representation on Council, and one industry association's ability to control the majority of Council member appointments contribute to these challenges."

Madam Speaker, by every measure RECA received a failing grade. That is why this legislation is so important. It will allow us to dismiss the current council and to appoint an administrator and to restore stability to the regulator while we work with industry partners to tackle the issue of broader governance reform in the coming months. Any further governance amendments will come later, but first we will engage with members of the real estate industry before we can chart a new path forward.

Madam Speaker, I've talked a little bit about what we're doing; now I'd like to go into why. Despite council having a positive history as an effective regulator prior to 2016, since that time the number of complaints made against them has escalated substantially. As the KPMG report has indicated, the level of dysfunction is undeniable. Since becoming minister, I've had numerous Albertans approach me about this dysfunction, and they've been asking for my intervention. Clearly, the council has lost the confidence of the real estate industry, of Albertans, and I have to say that I, too, have lost confidence in the regulator's ability to protect Albertans. It may be surprising to you to hear that the council itself recognized and was concerned with how it was operating. It may also surprise you to hear that the council was asking for the minister's office to intervene.

At the bottom of the first page of the KPMG review it states:

All Council members and senior staff interviewed during the review described the current state of Council as being challenged. There is a lack of trust among Council Members and between Council and Administration, as evidenced by several complaints and allegations amongst and between Council members and Administration, and requests to the Minister to intervene in Council affairs from Council members and Administration.

I'll point out to you, Madam Speaker, and to the other members of this House that it was not a singular request for ministerial intervention. There were multiple.

With that in mind, the action proposed in this bill is long overdue. There may be some who say that dismissing the entire council takes things a step too far. To them I would say that the KPMG review directly addresses that concern. The authors of the review state that it is necessary to remove all members of council because "dismissing only a subset of Council could contribute to a further deterioration in trust amongst Council, Administration and industry."

Madam Speaker, there may be some who ask: why is legislation needed to dismiss council? To them I would say, through you, that over the past number of months I have had to intervene with ministerial orders to stop the dysfunction of the council. One particular ministerial order I issued addressed the overreach of the council when they were proposing to implement a font-size change for real estate agents on their promotional materials. Preliminary estimates indicate that this would have cost between $35 million and $50 million to the industry to implement and would have accomplished nothing to protect Albertans. This just illustrates how out of touch the council has become. But these ministerial orders have not been enough, and the dysfunction persists. As the KPMG report suggests, we agree with the need to replace council, full stop. That is why this legislation is necessary.

Madam Speaker, some might ask: why is the appointment of an administrator necessary? To them, through you, I would say that for Albertans to have faith in the real estate industry, they have to have faith in the regulator. For them to have faith in the regulator, the regulator has to do their job and do it well. The council has not been doing its job, and that is why this legislation will dismiss them. But we need to ensure that the regulator function is performed, and that is why this legislation will allow me to appoint an administrator. This is a necessary step on the path to restoring Albertans' faith in the industry and its regulator. A properly functioning regulator is incredibly important for any industry and especially for one that oversees billions of dollars of transactions. Alberta's real estate industry, specifically the resale housing market, saw approximately $21 billion worth of sales in 2018. Fortunately, this dysfunction we've talked about today has not affected everyday Albertans who are simply trying to buy or sell a home. Albertans can still trust the real estate professionals they are working with.

Investment in real estate is a significant decision for many Albertans, who should benefit from a well-governed regulator that ensures their industry professionals are licensed, have professional education, and can be held to account for any wrongdoing. Albertans deserve to be confident that their investments are protected.

Effective oversight is also critical to protecting the livelihoods and reputations of real estate professionals. Madam Speaker, I have been clear with you that the dysfunction of this council is significant and is clearly disclosed in the independent review conducted by KPMG. With this legislation I am putting an end to the dysfunction and putting us back on a path to proper governance and a path to restoring Albertans' trust in the regulator.

For these reasons, I am pleased to bring this bill forward and move that it be read a second time. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 15? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 15. I would also like to thank the minister for continuing our government's work to address the concerning situation that has developed within the Real Estate Council of Alberta.

While I think both sides can agree that it's important for arm's-length organizations to remain that way, there are times where government must intervene to safeguard the interests of all Albertans. In this case it is necessary, which is why I will be voting in favour to support this act.

Thousands of Albertans access the services regulated through the Real Estate Act every year, and while the vast majority of those transactions are happy occasions – new homeowners buying for the first time or moving to a new community to access job and education opportunities for their family – sometimes the process does not go as smoothly as it should.

Now, the Real Estate Council of Alberta plays a critical role in ensuring that Albertans buying and selling property can rely on a well-regulated profession and a strong appeals process when those issues do arise. This work is important, and it must be done to a high standard to protect Alberta consumers and property owners.

I would just like to take a moment to share with this House some background on the actions – I know the minister did, but I would also like to touch on them – already taken by the government to address this important issue. In 2018 the then Minister of Service Alberta received a number of complaints from the profession and the public that the work of RECA had essentially ground to a halt. Our government took the responsible step of investigating these concerns. That preliminary assessment was completed in October 2018 by George B. Cuff & Associates.

The assessment led the minister of the day to commission a review under section 76 of the act to provide real, practical solutions to the problems being faced by RECA. KPMG took the time they needed to get their review right. Their 60-page review, which is available on the government's open-data page – and I would urge all of my colleagues to review their findings – was released at the end of June.

Now, normally a review under the act would result in the minister issuing an order to RECA to follow, but as an arm's-length organization the act anticipates that RECA would be given the opportunity to put their own house back in order before more drastic measures are taken. But in this case KPMG saw a need for more timely action to address the issues facing RECA, which is why we are here today to discuss the merits of giving the minister new powers to fire the board before issuing orders.

I would also like to take a moment to thank KPMG and all of the stakeholder organizations who have worked on the recommendations that have ultimately brought this bill before the House. Their hard work and diligence are to be commended.

While I will be supporting this bill, I do have a few concerns. This bill gives the Minister of Service Alberta a lot of power. He will have the unilateral ability to appoint an administrator to oversee the work of RECA while the council is re-established. Now, it's very important that the minister gets this right. The Real Estate Council of Alberta deserves a fair, transparent, and smooth transition into what its new governing structure and membership will look like. Albertans deserve that transparency and will benefit from a transition back to a council that includes industry experts and public oversight as soon as possible.

Real estate agents, mortgage brokers, appraisers, and property managers are an integral part of our province's economy, and they deserve a good governance process.

Stakeholders of this bill should have a say in who the administrator is and should work with the administrator in deciding what the new governing structure of RECA will look like. I have spoken with stakeholders impacted by this bill, and they agree that these steps are necessary but also hope that the resulting process of restructuring RECA is fair and transparent.

The minister, of course, gets to select his own administrator. This administrator is appointed for a one-year term, which is renewable. The renewable terms give flexibility for the administrator to be there for specifically just as long as they need to be. Now, if done properly, this is a good plan. The administrator should be someone who will work closely and collaboratively with the stakeholders involved.

However, I do have some concerns with this government's recent appointments, and I hope this is not the case this time. I hope the minister does not take this opportunity to appoint an administrator as a chance to pay a favour to a UCP donor or candidates that did not win in the recent provincial election such as Len Rhodes being appointed to the AGLC or Tom Olsen being appointed to the energy war room or whatever it's being called today. The judgment this government exercises in appointments has been particularly bad lately with selecting the Member for Calgary-East to be on the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund despite the active investigations into his conduct. RECA's current turbulent situation should not be used as a time for UCP cronyism. The real estate industry is too important and foundational in Alberta to be neglected for a political ploy. Albertans deserve better than that. Unfortunately, we in this House have no assurances that that will be the case.

I'm not criticizing KPMG's findings. They are experts, and, as I said, they took the time they needed to get it right during their review. I do not, however, necessarily agree that this bill is the only way to enact those recommendations. Too much of how this is going to go after this bill passes will be left to regulation, and that's turning into a bit of a pattern under this government.

Remember the changes to the Education Act? This government assured Albertans that those details would be looked after in the regulations. Fast-forward to the Friday before the Labour Day long weekend, literally the last business day before school starts, and late in that day it came to light that the Minister of Education had repealed rules that protected Alberta parents from paying school fees. They used that same bill as an excuse to change the name of public school boards by taking the word "public" out without any consultation or notice to the affected boards. And months later we're still waiting for details that were supposed to come in regulation about whether the government's Red Tape Reduction Act is actually going to make life better for any Albertans or whether it's an administrative boondoggle that accomplishes nothing other than adding an associate minister's expenses. I would hope that this government would be more transparent.

Now, given the wide-ranging powers the minister is asking this House to accord him and how much of this work is left to regulation, I think it's fair to be concerned. We will hold the government to account to ensure that the power of RECA is given back to Albertans and not used in a way for the UCP to appoint more of their insider party members to boards. I look forward to further discussion in this House. I hope the minister will take the opportunity, as he has already, to shed some light on how he plans to get RECA back on track. I will of course have more questions as we reach committee, but I do appreciate the minister taking action on this file, and I look forward to discussing it more very soon.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 15 in second reading? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise with pleasure to speak to Bill 15, Real Estate Amendment Act, 2019. As a former industry member for 30 years, a real estate sales agent, it's important to me to see the industry regulator, the Real Estate Council of Alberta, operating properly. I know there have been long-standing issues with the real estate council, and our former government, under Minister Malkinson, took action to instigate this review as a result of complaints that were received. This review was, I think, welcome news by the industry members, which are administered under RECA's watch. I think that KPMG did a fairly thorough analysis and came up with recommendations that the current government is basically following through on. I agree and I think industry members also agree that simply tinkering with the membership of RECA, given the numerous evidences and findings of the KPMG report of the dysfunction of the council, wouldn't have worked, so basically starting fresh with completely new members and starting with an administrator is the appropriate way to go in this situation.

I always am concerned when we find that a self-regulating body such as the real estate industry has found itself in governance trouble. That, to me, says that there may be something we should be looking at across the board in terms of the self-governance operations of some of the boards and councils that we have in the province. That may be taking a look at how and what and the terms of reference that we use to appoint individuals, particularly to not only the council memberships but also to the executive director or board chair positions. What can happen in those situations is that those executive directors or board chairs can form associations because of their longer standing than most of the council members, who will rotate in and out of the positions on a more frequent basis. The executive director can wield a significant amount of power and influence, which may lend itself to the creation of teams of council members.

I think that's something that we need to take a look at in terms of ensuring that executive directors of such councils perhaps have term limits and also ensure that the annual performance reviews are done and have some means of enforcing that these performance reviews are carried out. I know that the KPMG report that was commissioned by our former government indicated that these performance reviews were not necessarily done as required. They may have revealed earlier some of the deficiencies in governance that were happening at the Real Estate Council of Alberta. I know that many stakeholders have been concerned for a long time about the operation of the real estate council. They, I believe, are happy to see that some action has been taken as a result of the review that our former government initiated. There are concerns, of course, about the process by which the new council will be appointed and how that transition will go.

Also, I'm concerned about the timeline. We know that it's a one-year renewable contract that the administrator has been proposed to have. I don't know if it's going to go beyond a year or not, but industry members deserve to have a functioning body, a functioning council, which deals with the issues and matters of the real estate and Alberta mortgage brokerage industry and other industries that are under RECA's purview. Rather than focusing on governance problems and getting bogged down in those issues, the industry members are all wanting to get back to normal business and functioning. I along with them are hoping that the appointments are – that that process gets undertaken fairly soon, that the administrator has as a top priority getting back to normal business and getting back to a properly functioning real estate council that is focused on the interests of industry members and the general public in terms of protecting both of their interests in the operation of the industries that are under the purview of the council.

Many stakeholders are concerned about the long-term industry impact or the impact of having an administrator rather than an effectively operating council over the longer term. There is a genuine desire to ensure that the process of appointments gets into place fairly soon and that it be an open and transparent process so that we avoid the pitfalls of the past and we don't end up getting into a quagmire that the RECA council ended up getting into over the course of its last number of years. It's something that I and the critic for Service Alberta on our opposition side, the Member for Edmonton-West Henday, will be closely watching and monitoring. We will, of course, in further readings of this bill have further questions and bring up other concerns that we're looking forward to addressing as this legislation moves forward through the different stages of debate in this House.

I'm wondering if, of course, a power of RECA is to actually be placed in the hands of councillors, once again, beyond the administrator's time frame. What I wonder and what I hope is that we end up with an adherence to true principles of a governance model that any government, board, commission, or council or even, for that matter, a private corporate board might be expected to follow. It's my view that it's high time that the review got undertaken. I'm very, very glad that we initiated it when we were government ourselves under the former minister and, now that the review has been released, government is acting upon it. I'm looking forward to getting the process started but also making sure that the same result doesn't happen. It would be shameful if we ended up having the process of appointments allowed to result in a quagmire of personality conflicts and an executive director that fuelled the fire.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is now available. Would anyone like to speak?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 14 Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act

The Chair: We have under consideration Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. Are there any speakers or amendments to the bill?

Mr. McIver: Well, Madam Chair, we made good progress this week, and I know that some of our members have a long ways to go to get home to their families for Thanksgiving. Even those that don't have far to go, I'm sure, are looking forward to spending some time with their loved ones, so I would, if the House agrees, move to rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration some bills and would like to report progress on the following bill: Bill 14.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, say no. So carried.

Mr. McIver: Madam Speaker, as I've said, we've done some good work this week, and I'd like to wish everybody a happy Thanksgiving and move that we adjourn the House until the appointed time on Tuesday morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:15 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 1st Session (2019)

Activity to Thursday, October 10, 2019

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitzings.

10 a.m.

Tuesday, October 15, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning, everyone. I hope you had a wonderful Thanksgiving weekend.

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us pray. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideals but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. So may Your kingdom come and Your name be hallowed. Amen.

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 14

Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act

The Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for . . .

Mr. Eggen: Edmonton-North West.

The Chair: Thank you.

. . . the great riding of Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act, Bill 14. Certainly, our party, the Official Opposition, does support this very meaningful work towards reconciliation. We also believe, of course, that each of these things that we do here in the Legislature must contribute to the larger work of supporting reconciliation towards Alberta's indigenous communities.

We know that economic opportunities for indigenous communities in Alberta are absolutely essential. To make that investment now and in the future is a very important part of creating growth and meaningful economic opportunity in rural areas, and it's a good idea, I think, especially with, particularly, the energy industry.

We know that it's important to make sure that we have transparency, when we build this bill to become law, every step along the way, and it's important to remind ourselves every step of the way that we must make sure that we are dealing with this on a nation-to-nation basis and that indigenous leaders and membership, indeed all community members, must have real and demonstrable power in the oversight of whatever economic opportunities the corporation might create.

I think we know that with the current tools that we have available to us, we must not discount those, by any means. The aboriginal business investment fund, I think, for example, provides capital to indigenous and community-owned businesses, and this has done good work in regard to the forestry sector, the service industry, the financial and agriculture sectors as well. We also have the Alberta aboriginal economic partnerships program – right? – which, again, needs to be buttressed and strengthened every step of the way. There is the First Nations development fund, which is a way by which you can develop economically as well, and, you know, there are other mechanisms as well.

I think that, you know, we need to remind ourselves of where capital does come from every step of the way here in this Legislature, and it's important to remind ourselves of the importance of ensuring we have sufficient funding for these sorts of initiatives. Again, I think it's not lost on anyone here in the House or across Alberta that by making a significant, $4.5 billion corporate tax cut to our bottom line here in the budget, each initiative that we might move forward here, be it in regard to the Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act or to education, health care, and so forth, is undermined or jeopardized by a lack of adequate funds from the provincial budget to support that.

You know, always we're here to be constructively critical, Madam Chair, and ultimately, if you don't have sufficient cash flow into the government in terms of the budget, then each of these initiatives, including this one, could be left in jeopardy.

You know, I think that there are lots of First Nations that are very interested in developing opportunities around, especially, the energy sector. We know that we had a great uptake, our government, in regard to First Nations renewable energy initiatives. I just hope that this doesn't get lost in the transition to this new government. I think we found that just naturally and, I suppose, with a sense of conscience around developing sustainable energy industries here in the province of Alberta that many First Nations and Métis leaders were drawn to and were very interested in renewable energy initiatives – right? – which I think we saw bear fruit in solar programs across the province as well as other potential.

We don't want to lose any of those things. We must look at this as a whole. Certainly, our energy industry is the backbone of our economy here in the province of Alberta, and we as the Official Opposition look to keep it that way – right? – to make sure that we have the funds and the initiative for everyone to prosper here in the province of Alberta.

The Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act, Bill 14, is certainly something I do support. It's an important way by which to help to work with First Nations on a nation-to-nation basis to ensure prosperity for the future, and I look forward to seeing the details of this bill as it becomes an act and the regulations that will support it.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm very happy to hear that the opposition is going to support Bill 14 and that we can move forward on the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act, a very important act. As I said in my previous speech, I believe during second reading, there's a common theme that I heard all across the province over the last four years. A lot of opportunities out there, a lot of commitment to communities that wanted to get involved: regardless of whether it was forestry or the oil and gas industry, the common theme I heard out there was just a lack of access to capital.

You know, I look at the example of the Primco Dene group up in Cold Lake First Nation and what they've done with access through the First Nations development fund and the casinos up there. We can see that they've gotten into the oil and gas industry. They're very, very well situated up there in that. Hotels: of course, they've got the casino up there. Since then they've also gotten a gas station right up there at the casino as well as some service bays in Cold Lake, restaurants in Cold Lake. They've really diversified and given opportunities to their community just by having that access to capital, so I'm really looking forward to what we can see coming forward in the years to come.

Again, I'd like to thank the minister for acting on this so quickly. I mean, we're only about five months into our mandate, and this is something that was very important. I think it was brought up when we were having discussions before with the campaign, and I'm really glad to see another positive promise made and a promise kept as well. Again, thank you, Minister, for that.

All the indigenous leaders that I've talked to are very, very committed to their communities and looking for opportunities. I think that this Bill 14 will provide access to funds for those communities, especially the remote ones that don't, you know, have access to the bingos or a community that could even support that. I really look forward to what we can bring forward in the future, and I hope that we see some really positive access to this and some fantastic companies. I know that there are some really good entrepreneurs out there that are waiting for this, and, like I said, I look forward to seeing it. Again I thank the minister for that.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. minister of economic development and trade.

10:10

Ms Fir: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a true pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. I want to commend my colleague the Minister of Indigenous Relations for his profound and unceasing advocacy for economic development in indigenous communities and for his tireless work in his portfolio. The constituents of Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin are lucky to have him representing them not just in this Chamber but also at the cabinet table. He's a stalwart proponent of the indigenous peoples in our province.

Alberta finally has a government that understands that when indigenous communities benefit from the responsible development of our natural resources, the entire province benefits. I had the privilege just a few weeks ago to attend, with several of my colleagues and the Minister of Indigenous Relations, an event where he and the Premier signed a protocol agreement with the Blackfoot Confederacy. The Blackfoot Confederacy includes three First Nations in southern Alberta that together have more than 22,000 members. As the Premier said at the signing of the protocol agreement: our government is focused on building a true partnership with indigenous peoples through shared prosperity; this agreement will formalize how we build success together.

This historic agreement had many topics of co-operation listed, and one of them was economic development. Those two words are of tremendous importance to me, not merely because they make up half of my ministry title but because they are of huge importance to our government's mandate and, in this case, to the creation of shared prosperity between our government and indigenous communities across the province.

Through economic development Albertans can see prosperity, yes, but it is also through growing the economy that we fund our government's programs. Without economic development – and we see this in many jurisdictions, not just in Canada or North America but across the world – without the natural growth of an economy, our beloved health care, education, and social programs are not possible. The roads that we drive on, the hospitals we attend, the fountains outside the Legislature: they are all powered by economic growth. Through economic development we can bring prosperity to all Albertans. Economic development for indigenous communities means that we will be equal partners in prosperity, where the growth that comes from Alberta's economy is enjoyed by all of those who live there.

Before I speak directly on the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation, I want to speak of the crucial importance of economic development in indigenous communities. At the signing of the Blackfoot protocol agreement I spoke to a young man excited about his plans and his vision for a tourism business in his community. In my meetings with business leaders across the province I have been told of the tremendous potential in indigenous communities and how government can, through co-operation and partnerships, play a part in building prosperity for indigenous Albertans.

There is tremendous potential for tourism in indigenous communities. Many communities are eager to share their culture and their history with the world. These communities are unique within the realm of human experience and indeed in the history of our planet, and we need to partner with communities who wish to share their experience with the rest of humanity. There are profound and inspirational stories that will spread the tremendous history of indigenous Albertans and showcase their truly exceptional culture to visitors from around the globe if we can only harness the entrepreneurial and innovative spirit that is already present in indigenous communities. Those partnerships are just waiting to be formed, and we today are discussing legislation that will lead to partnerships of a similar potential, the harnessing of natural resources for the benefit of all.

The Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation will make it easier for indigenous communities and organizations that want to participate in natural resources development to access funding. That is a critical part of economic development. Accessing funding is often a barrier for indigenous communities, and through this legislation we are providing a pathway to do that.

As the Minister of Indigenous Relations said in first reading of this legislation, this government has committed to walk a path of economic reconciliation with indigenous peoples. Many indigenous communities have inhabited their lands for thousands of years, and they want to benefit from the wealth generated from that land. Indigenous peoples have long been innovators and entrepreneurs in their communities. Their culture and their communities have been a part of the very fabric of Alberta for millennia. The Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation is a profound demonstration of how dedicated our government is to partnering with them. The reserving of $1 billion, promised in our election platform, to partner with indigenous communities is a derivation of the natural resources across our province.

Our government has put a great deal of preparation into this legislation. There were 89 indigenous participants in the engagement sessions. Business leaders such as Syncrude, Suncor, ATCO, and EPCOR and industry associations such as the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers and the Canadian Heavy Oil Association took part. Coalition representatives from Eagle Spirit Energy, First Nations Major Projects Coalition, Project Reconciliation, Iron Coalition, Western Indigenous Pipeline Group, and the Fort McKay Mikisew Cree tank farm project all participated. This is a prestigious list, and it shows that our government is serious in making the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation an effective undertaking. But even that was not the extent of the consultation. Minister Wilson met with nearly 200 indigenous business and finance leaders on the establishment of the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation.

Time and time again indigenous communities have been unable to share in the prosperity of Alberta's natural resource economy. It is time to move past words and move into action. That is why we are moving boldly and decisively to bring forward this legislation within mere months of forming government. The legislation is emblematic of our government's vision: bold, common-sense, and with a laser focus on creating prosperity for all Albertans. What has historically been an inability for indigenous groups to provide adequate security to financial lenders has been a significant barrier to their ability to access capital and, therefore, develop the capacity to develop or invest in major resource projects. Some communities have been able to do so, but others have not. The indigenous opportunities corporation will bridge that gap.

For too long all of the debate around the energy industry and indigenous communities has focused on the negativity and the conflict, yet that is only a tiny minority of the true conversation. So many different indigenous communities want to be partners in responsible resource development, and some have already done so. We have the Frog Lake Energy Resources Corporation, which produces 2,000 barrels a day of crude oil. The Fort McKay First Nation purchased a 34 per cent stake in a major Suncor oil tank farm.

Those are just a few examples, but they highlight that there is tremendous potential for further partnerships, and we can build and increase the momentum to a new height, where indigenous communities can become the real owners of major energy projects. We will not get pipelines built or our energy to market if we do not have strong relationships with our indigenous peoples.

After our government hosted the first cabinet-indigenous meeting in five years, Treaty 6 Grand Chief Wilton Littlechild said, and I quote, it is possible to have sustainable development and promote respect for Mother Earth at the same time. I think from our experience the answer is yes. Treaty 8 Grand Chief Arthur Noskey said: working relationships and this billion-dollar fund to backstop investments for First Nations to have their foot in the door and the economic benefits of Alberta, that was ideal thinking for us.

Madam Chair, there is clearly a desire for strong support for this initiative among indigenous leadership, and our government is certainly putting action to words with this legislation. Sustainable development and respect for our planet: this is a message that indigenous Albertans have been speaking about since time immemorial, but it is also the biggest part of the national debate happening right now. We see opposing forces clashing over those two concepts on a monthly, daily, and even hourly basis, but it can be done. Indigenous peoples have done so throughout their history. We should not only listen to them but also reach out and form new relationships in the name of doing just that. When indigenous peoples thrive, Alberta thrives. Through mutual respect, through strong relationships we can create a lasting and cohesive Alberta that will enshrine prosperity for all in the spirit of entrepreneurship that has been emblematic of the inhabitants of this land for thousands of years.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'd just like to take what may be one of the final opportunities to speak to this while it's in committee. In the past we have talked about our desire to be co-operative and supportive of the government in their plan to move forward on economic development with the indigenous communities as, indeed, we did in many different ways when we were sitting on the other side of the House. We were very pleased to be working with economic development in terms of green energy projects; for example, $50 million a year under our indigenous climate leadership plan, that was accessed by all 48 First Nations and all eight Métis settlements and provided jobs, well, in fact, in every single one of those communities, at least a job or two, and then, of course, many other jobs as they developed incredibly strong solar panel companies and house assessment companies and those kinds of things.

We were very pleased to work with the indigenous community in economic development, and we're very discouraged to see that this present government has decided to cancel those kinds of economic development pieces for the indigenous community. We were also very pleased to be working with the indigenous community in terms of our renewable energy electricity programs, wherein in the second round of the REP there was a requirement that indigenous communities have a minimal capital investment of 25 per cent of the project. As a result, we had three First Nations communities in the province of Alberta who were able to get invested in significant renewable energy projects – the Blood Tribe in southern Alberta in Treaty 7; the Paul band in Treaty 6; and, of course, Sawridge in Treaty 8 – where they were able to contribute to the electricity market here in the province of Alberta, where they were able to expand our renewable energy programs in the province of Alberta. Again, I'm a bit discouraged to see that there is no commitment on the part of the government at this particular time to help indigenous communities in that avenue of economic development.

I guess I just want to speak to some of the things that we heard just now from the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism. While we agree with the intent here of helping the indigenous community, the actions of the government so far, up until this bill came into the House, have been exactly the opposite of the intention of this bill, removing economic opportunities for indigenous communities. We actually had a demonstrated positive effect in terms of creating jobs and creating economic development in indigenous communities. So when we have a successful program that is fulfilling the intent of this particular bill, why would you undermine all of that?

I know that the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism mentioned a number of things that made her very proud. I was curious to hear that she was very proud of them as almost all of the things that she mentioned are things that were accomplished during the previous government. I'd like to take just a moment to reiterate some of those things for the record, to demonstrate, indeed, that the government of the NDP was, in fact, very successful in creating economic development in indigenous communities. But we were not limited in where the economic development could be created, as this present government is. We indeed had a broader, more expansive definition of success, not a narrow one that forced indigenous communities to get in line with a narrow objective of the current government.

Let me mention a few of the things that she did speak about. For example, she talked about the Blackfoot protocol agreement, which she was very pleased to attend with the Minister of Indigenous Relations, and how profound that was for her. I want to remind her that it was, in fact, our government that created the Blackfoot protocol agreement. We're very pleased to see that this is one piece that you're continuing. I'd like to thank the Minister of Indigenous Relations for seeing the good work that had been done by the previous government and continuing that.

I notice that in referring to her conversation with a gentleman at the Blackfoot protocol agreement signing that occurred earlier in the year, she indicated in that discussion that there were great opportunities for tourism, of course something she'd be interested in as that's part of her mandate in her portfolio. However, I also want to note that last week this government defeated a motion that would allow indigenous communities that are interested in tourism to use these dollars. So here she is standing up and saying how great this particular bill is, and then she actively votes against the possibility of creating the economic development projects that she was specifically asked to champion in the House by someone at the protocol agreement she attended with such pleasure. You know, it just seems contradictory to me – I'm sort of caught off guard – that this government would act to defeat their own intention, that the minister would stand up and talk about her excitement at the potential and then act to defeat it by voting against it. Those kinds of things confuse me in terms of their thinking around these things.

I would really like this government to reconsider, before we go into the final third reading on this bill, the potential of having indigenous communities themselves have the ability to define how this bill would most help them. If you go to the indigenous communities and say to them, without constricted controls such as "you can only invest in resource development," but rather say to them, "How is it that you would like your communities to develop?" you will find that they're very interested in a very wide range of economic development opportunities.

There are people within the indigenous communities that are capable in every single field that is available to every other Albertan, people that would love to see some expansion in terms of manufacturing, people that would love to see retail sales, people that would love to see projects that not only help with economic development but help with the internal development of their nations such as grocery stores where food is readily available and prices are kept under control, as we were able to help fund in the Blood Tribe and O'Chiese and Fort Chip under our previous government's work.

Those are the kinds of things that came forward and they were asking for. Now suddenly none of that matters. That concerns me deeply, and I don't know why the government would work around them.

The other thing that hasn't been mentioned here is the second half of responsible development in the oil and gas industry. Now, the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism just said that she heard Grand Chief Willie Littlechild say that the appropriate development of our natural resources is completely possible, and it can be done in an environmentally respectful and appropriate manner. All I hear in this bill is about the development, nothing about the other half of that: the development in an appropriate and environmentally respectful manner. Nothing in here helps the indigenous communities who want to make sure that as these projects develop, they will be appropriately consulted and have the opportunity to speak to those pieces of development in a way that reflects their values, not just simply the value of developing the resource but doing so in a way that is good for the environment and good for their communities.

A lot of work has been done previously in terms of enhancing the consultation policies for First Nations people. In fact, we increased the amount of monies available for First Nations from $7 million to $27 million in the last year. I am hoping that when the budget comes out, we'll of course see that money continue. But I also know that there were about 14 recommendations about other mechanisms that could be used to enhance First Nations' ability to speak to resource development through the consultation process, yet we haven't heard a word from this government about the renewal of the consultation policies. I'd like to see that because if, as Grand Chief Willie Littlechild says, two things can happen at once, resource development and protection of the environment, why is this government only speaking to resource development and not speaking to protection of the environment?

It seems to me that what we're seeing in this bill is a good intention but made narrow by a very narrow vision of society and a very narrow vision of the future; that is that the First Nations people can participate only if they jump onboard with the gung-ho development of oil and gas resources. Now, we know this to be true, and not only have they brought in this bill, but they've also designed a fund of $10 million for litigation, which will allow First Nations who are developing resources to sue First Nations who are trying to protect the environment.

Now, I've had a number of phone calls from indigenous people in the community who are saying that it is quite clear what is happening here. This government is trying to pit First Nations against First Nations, indigenous communities against other indigenous communities. They're doing that by enhancing the ability to develop and build the economic potential in the resource sector and doing everything possible to quash the very important value, as mentioned moments ago by the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism, of protection of the environment. She heard half of what Grand Chief Willie Littlechild had said and acted on half of what he said and completely ignored the other half.

This is my last chance to seek from the government the consideration of actually changing this bill before we go into third reading to allow different kinds of development and to bring forward a bill that would enhance consultation and the protection of the environment. If indeed you believe what it is that you're being told by the indigenous community, which I kind of hope you do, I would like to see action by this government in pursuit of that set of values. Right now we're not seeing that. We're seeing a government who is trying to co-opt indigenous participation in their own agenda and limiting indigenous voices whenever the indigenous voice does not suit their agenda. That's something that's simply not acceptable.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. It gives me great pleasure to be able to stand today. You know, we just finished having a weekend of Thanksgiving, and I hope that all of you had a good Thanksgiving weekend. It sort of got me thinking a little bit that one of the things that we can be giving thanks for is Bill 14. I want to thank the minister personally for his vision and for his willingness to move forward in action on that vision. This bill is in many ways unprecedented in the history of Canada and Alberta, and because of its bold vision, I think that we can say that we are grateful and thankful for the opportunity. That's what Albertans really want, I believe, in life: the opportunity to try and succeed, the opportunity to use our skills and our capacities and our abilities to move forward and to create a better life for Albertans and for our families. I believe that this bill helps us to do that.

Indigenous communities will be able to own and invest in natural resource development, and that has the capacity to change lives. That has the capacity to change communities. It's something that has my wholehearted support and that I believe will move us forward as a province and as a community. Madam Chair, this allows our First Nations peoples and Albertans in general to be able to become true commercial partners in the industry that is perhaps the foundation, to this point in our history, of this province. The United Conservative Party stands up, as we have every single time, for the responsible development of our natural resources, and this allows us to continue to do that. These loan guarantees and other financial tools will allow us to continue to responsibly develop the natural resources and create the vibrant communities that are capable of providing for their families and for the community in general. This is going to be up and running by around the spring of 2020. I just know that in my communications with the First Nations that are in my constituency, they're very excited about Bill 14.

Mr. Minister, there's nothing better in life than having the capacity to dream and to vision and to provide hope as you can see a path forward, and that's what I think is the heart of this bill. It provides a vision and a hope for a path forward. I'm just going to give you one quick example, and then I'm going to sit down. We've had conversations with a company in my constituency about partnering and using this program to have the first program of its kind in the world, which is a deep-well, continuous-loop geothermal electrical project. When we outline the potential and the vision for some of the First Nations to buy into something like this, to sit down with the board that's going to be struck and that's going to be looking at the business propositions, they get excited about this, a company that they could own that's going to provide carbon-free electricity that they can either sell onto the grid or that they could use, as we're going to suggest that they use, for a greenhouse operation on their own lands using abandoned wells and making them produce again, this time with electricity.

Now, we'll see if that vision and that hope go through, and we'll see if we can put that business plan together and work with them, but it provides a conversation. It provides hope. It provides a vision. It provides a way forward for them to be able to provide the jobs they need for their community, to provide the hope that they need for their community. They're excited, we're excited, and I just want to say thank you to the minister for bringing this bill forward.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to be able to rise and speak in favour of Bill 14 today. I think the Member for Edmonton-North West was right on point starting off, when we're talking about moving towards reconciliation, that we need to do everything we can to rebuild that relationship, including things like simply recognizing treaties, something that I've seen, unfortunately, fall off here since the new government has come in. So the opportunity to rise right here in the heart of Treaty 6 to discuss this bill is, I think, very, very important.

When I'm looking at this bill, there are a couple of items that I'm a little bit, I guess, disappointed around. I don't want to get into a lot of the details. I think the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford got into them quite well. When we're talking about a bit of the narrow focus of the opportunities that are being provided to our indigenous peoples in terms of investment, I think we should be able to promote a wide range of ideas, of thoughts, and of opportunities rather than simply a rather limited scope in terms of what we're looking at. I think the member said that it's most important for them to decide what is going to work best in each of their communities, and we have to be able to enable those opportunities. I think, unfortunately, we're missing that piece out of this bill to enable them to look at many different opportunities, not just in the natural resources, not just in our oil and gas but anywhere from renewable energies, manufacturing, anything along those lines. I really wish we could have seen some language around that, but as I said, I am in support.

I guess, you know, thinking back on my time in the labour world, one of the things we used to say was: sometimes some language is better than no language. So I'm looking at this as an opportunity to, at the very least, use this as a springboard to move on to bigger and better opportunities for our indigenous peoples. I'm also a little disappointed around a lack of language around the board membership. I highly think that we should have had that board consisting of a membership of, at the bare minimum, at least half because they're the ones that live in these communities. Our indigenous peoples are the ones that know what will work best for them, and we have to seek that knowledge, that input at every opportunity. That's what reconciliation is all about, something that I think the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and former Indigenous Relations minister took to heart, I think, not only each and every day but every second of those days that he was minister.

When I look at things like a $4.5 billion corporate handout yet we're only getting a mere $24 million for our indigenous peoples, I think that's a bit of a disservice. We should be looking to invest those dollars right here at home within our own communities and, again, providing those opportunities that they feel are best suited for them.

Like I said, I think the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford said it very well. I do support Bill 14. I hope this will be a springboard for, you know, greater opportunities for indigenous peoples. I will thank the Minister of Indigenous Relations for bringing this forward. I hope that in that spirit of reconciliation you will continue to allow those opportunities to grow from what we hear from the communities, not just what we think that we're hearing.

Again, I appreciate the opportunity, Madam Chair, to be able to speak to this.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 14 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Any opposed? Carried.

Bill 15

Real Estate Amendment Act, 2019

The Chair: Are there any speakers to the bill?

Shall I call the question?

[The clauses of Bill 15 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Any opposed? Carried.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: I move to rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 14 and Bill 15.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the motion, does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. So carried.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 14

Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to move third reading of Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act.

We have moved swiftly through debate on this bill, in part because we're all elected officials and we know what it means to want the best for the communities that we represent. It is for this reason we ran for office in the first place. We don't take jobs like this just for the hours. I, like many of my colleagues, saw too many of our friends and neighbours struggling to get by. Alberta's economic downturn put a lot of hard-working people out of work and out of luck. For me, their stories became my rallying cry to get involved in government so I could try to change the outcome for them. Everyone wants a chance at a happily ever after, Madam Speaker, and I believe that being a good steward of the public trust means working hard for every Albertan to have their chance.

Through debate in this Chamber we have heard many passionate stories about indigenous people and their struggles for their economic security. However, it's best to hear directly from some of the most respected First Nations and Métis leadership in the province. Like Chief Billy Morin of the Enoch said during our AIOC Act announcement last week: this is needed for First Nations, for treaty people, but we're also Albertans; this is Alberta, and Alberta is known for its oil and gas, and that's what's going to keep us going forward. Or the words from Chief Joseph Weasel Child of Siksika Nation: we've always been told, since the time of treaty, that we're going to be given the tools to make us more self-sufficient, and that has never happened, but now, after this election, we're really excited.

Madam Speaker, we need to remember that indigenous communities are our neighbours. Their success is our success, and the jobs they create boost Alberta's economy. The projects they invest in bring new revenue to their communities so that they can take care of the socioeconomic projects that they need, and they want to be part of the industries that can bring them prosperity.

I mentioned briefly in my earlier speech, last week, the incredible success story of the Whitefish (Goodfish) First Nation and their dry cleaning business, and we saw the prosperity and revenue driving the local economy and lifting up the community supports. What I didn't talk about was the sense of community spirit and the laughter and comradery we witnessed when we dropped in that Saturday. The ladies in the main sewing and stitching room all had smiles, and they were telling jokes, and you could sense the love and the friendship in the room. I'll never forget the welcoming feelings I received that day. While I feel that resource revenue is critical to the life of our First Nations and Métis communities, it is the sense of community spirit and love that's just as important.

Members of this House have been really supportive of Bill 14 and have provided thoughtful debate. Yet I've heard from people who question why Alberta would invest in indigenous communities, and I have to say, Madam Speaker, that this is not up for debate. Indigenous communities have long been held down by laws, policies, and practices that impoverished them and kept them dependent on government funds. These are the kinds of stories we expect from the long past, not today, not from our friends, our neighbours, and our loved ones.

We're in a position to support indigenous governments and communities to work around this funding crisis. The Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation is a strong, positive step toward a future of self-determination, a future in which indigenous communities can partner in prosperity instead of watching as their neighbours benefit from the lands around them.

Madam Speaker, this is a start, and starting points are usually focused. Starting with the eligible natural resource development projects, we achieve two things. First, a narrower project scope will help us more easily get into a process and evaluate progress. It's good business sense. We start the organization, let the board and staff find their footing, and explore more breadth if that's what it makes sense to do. I assure you that we have ambition for growth. As Premier Kenney has shared, this organization will become a model for other provinces to promote indigenous economic development.

Second, this focus will renew an industry that's the bedrock of Alberta's economy. Recent years have been far too hard. Even though Alberta is known for responsible and innovative natural resource development, with more indigenous participation in the industry I expect we'll be catching more global attention for environmental excellence, and that could spur more investment in Alberta.

Now, I've heard the argument that the government is imposing a direction on indigenous people. That direction, Madam Speaker, has come directly from indigenous people.

Others are questioning the indigenous makeup of the board, and to that I say: this is about maximum flexibility, ensuring that nothing will disrupt the corporation from achieving success. It's the same reason we gave ourselves the flexibility to appoint up to nine members, to ensure maximum flexibility for the board and to not risk anything standing in the way of this corporation carrying out its work. As I've said over and over and as the Premier has said, we intend to have strong indigenous representation on our board because the government understands what this opportunity means for indigenous peoples and what is required for its success. I can assure you that that will be another promise made and another promise kept. Again, actions speak louder than words, and our actions have spoken.

Let me go back to the words of Chief Morin, who shared with us a good perspective about the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation and resource development. He said: it's clean energy, it's technology, it's opportunity for our future, and now is the time to capitalize on that.

Grand Chief Arthur Noskey of the Treaty 8 First Nations of Alberta spoke on the ancient role of the guardians of the land of our First Peoples, that they've taken on over the eons, and these are his words: many of our nations are in support of the energy sector, but as stewards of the land and waters we also have obligations; we must look at sustainable resource development and balance the production of our natural resources; our natural resources depend on us.

The word “and” is so important. Like indigenous people, this government believes in developing the economy and doing it responsibly. We can do both. We should be proud of striving to be responsible developers, Madam Speaker, and acknowledge that we will always have room to learn more and to do better. Living in a complex world, we cannot afford to wish for happy endings for our stories. We need to write those endings for ourselves and each other, and those endings should be written boldly, with focus and determination to be better and the will to take a stand against wrongdoing.

I want to again thank you, Madam Speaker, members of caucus, members across the way, and all who have contributed to the debate and the vigorous discussion on this most important piece of legislation. It's critical that we get it right, get it finished, and get it working to benefit all Albertans, who call this great province home.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I just would like to remind everyone that we are not to use names of members in this Assembly, a good caution for everyone moving forward.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Associate Minister of Natural Gas.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This government has drawn a line in the sand, and we have made it clear that we will be allies of First Nations people. We saw that right away. One of the first things that this government did was that cabinet met with all 48 First Nation chiefs within the first couple of weeks of taking government. You know, that was the first thing that we saw. I have to tell you that, thanks to the Premier and the minister of indigenous affairs, I've actually become quite good at my dancing at powwows, because this is just what our government does, and this is just one more example of how we will be allies of First Nations communities.

Now, let me, first, begin by thanking the Minister of Indigenous Relations for his commitment to partnering with indigenous communities in building their economic and social well-being. I'm proud to be part of a government that is choosing to move beyond symbolic gestures, and I'm honoured today to speak in favour of Bill 14, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act. Alberta finally has a government that understands that when First Nations and Métis communities thrive from the responsible development of our natural resources, our entire province thrives.

This is a topic that is close to my heart, and if you don't mind, I would like to share something with you. I think we all have different reasons for why we're so excited about this act, but mine is from when I was much younger. I grew up in a small town called Lac du Bonnet – you wouldn't have heard of it – and there was a First Nations boy that joined us halfway through my grade 6 year. You know, I certainly didn't at the time really know that he was indigenous. What I knew right away was that he was a big kid, and I liked that because it meant he was good at sports. I was sort of drawn to him, and we had this immediate friendship. He also had this quietness about him. At the time I mistook his reserved nature as a quiet confidence, but as an adult I look back, and I think there was lots more going on that I didn't have access to. He was a good kid. I really liked him, Madam Speaker.

Unfortunately, he came from a lower socioeconomic background, and he didn't have access to hockey. This was something that was very important to me. My mom, who was a great, wonderful mother, sort of took a shine to him as well, so she went around town and gathered as much used hockey equipment as she could find so that this boy could play hockey. He was fitted up with all the requisite gear. She even paid his hockey fees so that he could play hockey. That was all very well and good, but he still couldn't get to practices or games, so then she took it upon herself to go pick him up and drop him off after all these games and practices.

You know, there were little clues there that I should have seen, but I didn't have access to that experience, so I didn't recognize the clues, Madam Speaker. One of them was that he was always frozen solid when we picked him up. He was frozen solid because he would be waiting outside for almost, like, an eternity, it seemed, for us to pick him up. This was, of course, before digital clocks. I realize now that the real issue was that he couldn't tell time, couldn't read an analog clock. Rather than make my mother wait, he just got out there so early to make sure that he was there when she showed up.

He was such a good kid. He was a good friend of mine. Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, we sort of drifted apart as things happened. This was a small town, and I ended up going off to a private school, you know, in the city, a boarding school. In high school I got a call from my mom. She asked me if I'd heard what happened to Chris. I said no, because we had drifted apart. Well, he had been arrested. He'd had too much to drink, and he shot his mom. I mean, it really, really hit me hard because this was something that I just didn't see coming.

What I learned from that, Madam Speaker, is that you just can't put Band-Aids on some things. I learned that, you know, lip service is not enough. When it comes to breaking the poverty cycle, to ending things like the cycle of abuse, lip service is not enough. You need meaningful action. That's why I like this act, because this is meaningful action. This will make a difference in the lives of First Nations communities. It's why I'm proud to support it. What I take away from Chris's story is that sometimes it's not enough to just simply offer help. You need to do more, and this is that “more” that this government is going to do.

We have a long and, frankly, sad history in Canada of disenfranchising indigenous people from their communities, their culture, and their ability to prosper, but we have an opportunity now, thanks to the deliberate efforts of this minister, to right a systemic wrong and to support these communities in accessing much-needed capital. We as a society that has prospered from our country's vast natural resources have a moral obligation to be better, to do better, and to remove the barriers that have kept indigenous communities from achieving better outcomes.

That's exactly what the Alberta indigenous opportunities corporation will do. Instead of relying on federal money, indigenous communities will have access to $1 billion in loan guarantees that will support First Nation and Métis co-ownership and financial participation in major resource developments. I ask you, Madam Speaker, what's better, lip service or meaningful action? Instead of handing money to communities with little to no strategic oversight, we will now be able to work with indigenous peoples to help develop their business acumen, build up their workforce, and remove the obstacles that have prevented them from being commercial partners in our natural resource sector.

First Nations and Métis people, particularly youth, benefit greatly when given the opportunity to learn skills and access capital, but we have learned that unemployment on some First Nations is an alarming 99 per cent. We must do more to build stronger communities by providing means for employment and self-sustainability. I can only wonder how my friend Chris would have benefited if he had had access to these opportunities, if his parents before him had had access to these types of economic drivers, how things could have been different. The AIOC will allow indigenous communities to experience a higher standard of living not for themselves but, more importantly, for the generations that will follow them.

First Nations' ancestors inhabited these lands thousands of years ago, long before we began extracting our natural resources. They know and understand the land, earth, water, and air, so what better people to aid us in our efforts to develop our resources in an environmentally responsible manner than the original stewards of these lands? By reaching out and offering a truly equal hand in partnership, the AIOC will bridge the gap between indigenous groups who wish to be commercial partners in our natural resource sector. The efforts of this government, in my opinion, are what true reconciliation is all about.

Thank you for the time to address the House.

Madam Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, October 15, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Romy McMorrow. I would invite all members to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Roger Brewer

December 26, 1946, to July 27, 2019

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed to introductions today, it is with great sadness, felt by the Legislative Assembly Office and all of you, that I would like to take a moment to pay tribute to a significant figure in this Chamber.

Roger Brewer, the long-time console operator of the Legislative Assembly, passed away on July 27 after a brief battle with cancer. Roger started working at the Legislative Assembly Office in February 2004 after retiring from working at the CBC. Roger was hanging around home but his wife, Pauline, who joins us in the gallery today, was also working from home. Roger would come into the room where she was working and say: what you doing? It wasn't long before Pauline said, "You need a job," and she found the ad for the console operator position. Roger applied, was interviewed, and immediately was offered the job.

As console operator Roger sat up in the crow's nest, just above the big clock. Today Lacy is sitting there. The console operator does a few things. They press "record" so that what we say can be broadcast to the people we serve, and as I'm sure you've noticed, they turn the microphones on and off for us as we speak. As Roger turned on a microphone, he would quietly say the name of the person into the headset which he wore. Back at the Hansard office, editors could listen and double-check to see who was speaking. Roger would also tell those editors what was happening inside the Chamber. For example, he'd let them know if there was a change in the chair or a standing ovation. Sometimes he would chuckle along with a joke that the members had timely provided. Most importantly, Roger passed along to Hansard staff what they called pizza alerts. If Roger whispered that pizza was on its way, Hansard knew it would be a very late night.

It was clear to everyone around him that Roger loved his job. He was very dependable, always on time, and always available for work, planning his vacations around the legislative calendar. Roger was tireless. Once, when the Legislative Assembly sat for an afternoon, an evening, overnight, and through the next afternoon, he worked 36 hours straight. Sometimes he said that it was a bit boring, but he never complained that a shift was too long. As Speaker Wanner said in 2018: "He is always there. He never leaves." And just this spring, at the end of a record-breaking sitting I personally thanked everyone who had contributed and called Roger the hardest working man in politics.

It was a shock to many when, halfway through this spring session, Roger had to resign because he'd been diagnosed with cancer. Since then, more than a dozen people have been trained on operating the console to replace him. Of course, Roger Brewer is irreplaceable, and he will be greatly missed by all.

Today we are joined by Roger's family: Roger's wife, Pauline Brewer, their daughter and son-in-law, Shelley Brewer and Shaun Semple, and grandsons Dominic and Taye Semple. Please join in welcoming them here to this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, joining us this afternoon from Edmonton-City Centre are grade 5 and 6 students from l'école Grandin and, from Edmonton-Mill Woods, grade 6 students from Ekota elementary. Also, Edmonton-Decore: welcome grade 6 students from St. Anne Catholic elementary. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Hon. members, we were treated to a stirring rendition of O Canada today from the constituency of Edmonton-West Henday. I mentioned Romy McMorrow, who led us in the singing of the national anthem today. She's sung in various choirs since the age of 10, in elementary school and the Knights of Columbus choirs, then the University of Alberta mixed choir. She's currently at the St. Thomas More music ministry. She has also sung the national anthem for Edmonton's own baseball team, the Edmonton Prospects, and I'm particularly happy to welcome her here today as a first generation Canadian. It's such a wonderful pleasure to see folks engaging in our new plan, but more importantly than all of that, today is also her birthday. The most happiest of birthdays to you.

An Hon. Member: Happy birthday . . .

The Speaker: Oh, man. You almost started Happy Birthday there. That got very dangerous. Unfortunately, we don't have anyone to lead us, so we'll have to leave that for another day.

On behalf of all 87 members, happy birthday to you.

Please join me in welcoming Romy and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chakkalakal. Welcome to the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has a statement to make.

Early Learning and Child Care Centres

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know what will become of my job if this pilot program ends. What's the point of working? How can families get ahead? This grant has created jobs and has allowed parents to re-enter the workforce. Please don't take this away from us. I am pleading that this funding be taken seriously; it is so desperately needed by many people. This program has been many things to our family: a lifeline, a saving grace. These are quotes from letters and e-mails sent to the Minister of Children's Services from Albertans who are desperate that the early learning child care centre program be extended and expanded.

Today this Assembly is privileged to have in the gallery members of the AFL Fair Start committee, educators, child care providers, parents, and children – I see you, baby Carl – who have benefited from the ELCC and are pleading with the minister to listen to their voices.

Last week, when asked about the review of the ELCC pilot program, the minister criticized it because it “did not track need . . . income . . . [or] employment.” This is troubling because it demonstrates that the minister does not understand the very program she claims to be reviewing. If she did, she’d know that the ELCC program is a pilot program for universal child care. It’s intent was to serve the majority of Albertans who do not qualify for subsidized child care but who can’t afford over $1,000 dollars a month for it.

If the minister does not understand how the program works, then I’m worried about her ability to review it fairly and thoughtfully. I’m worried she doesn’t understand the significant impact ELCCs have on early learning, readiness for school, staff retention and professional development, accessibility, and, perhaps most importantly, getting Albertans back to work. Considering how quickly this government rushed to give away $4.5 billion to wealthy corporations, I think the minister owes it to average Albertans to listen to them, too.

I’m passionate about this issue. I only wish that the minister was as passionate about making life more affordable for Albertans, improving early learning for children, and getting Albertans back to work. I’ll be speaking on this issue a lot, so I hope the minister can keep up.

1:40 Early Learning and Child Care Centres

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, I recently received a letter from a concerned parent in my constituency of Highwood. In this letter this constituent speaks at great length about the impact of the NDP’s $25-a-day child care pilot program. When this pilot program was introduced, privately owned daycare centres across the province and even nonprofits that weren’t selected felt the pain.

Now, due to the previous government’s meddling in the marketplace, two daycare centres in my riding have had to close their doors. Kid’s Stop in Black Diamond and Children’s Place in Turner Valley were both forced to close down because they could not compete with the government-funded $25-a-day daycare. Mr. Speaker, these are two well-loved daycare programs that provided an essential service and are no longer options for parents in my riding. This has caused upheaval for children and parents alike, and many child care workers are now out of jobs.

The previous government’s pilot program has caused a shortage of available child care in my riding, and families are now turning to private day homes. As my constituent said: “Day homes just don’t work for every family. And we used to have [a] choice in our town . . . Parents should be making [child care] selections based on who can provide the highest quality of care that works for them and their situation.” Government interference in the marketplace, running private child care providers out of business, and limiting choice for parents that need child care to return to the workforce are not making life better for the constituents in my community.

Given that the pilot program did not track income level or whether the parents are actually employed and given that this means we have no way of tracking if this program supports low-income families in need, I can only conclude that this is an ideologically driven and fiscally irresponsible program from the previous government. The constituents in my riding stated, in their words, “The government should not be [in the business of] picking the winners and losers in the childcare industry.” I couldn’t agree more.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler has risen to make a statement.

Rural Crime and Police Service

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to update this Assembly on something truly despicable that happened in my riding this weekend. In the dead of night, two armed men with their faces covered by balaclavas broke into the home of Art and Bev Bergman near the town of Craigmyle. They proceeded to sneak into this elderly couple’s bedroom and hold them at gunpoint. These two men then bound Art and Bev with duct tape in painful positions and demanded money. The couple pointed them to a safe in the bedroom with some old savings in it, which the two men then emptied. Once they had the money, these men left a knife at the end of the bed and said: you can use this knife to cut yourself free; by then, we’ll be long gone. That was true. By the time they were able to call the police, these criminals were gone.

Yesterday I went to visit Art and Bev to hear their story first-hand and offer any support I could. It was heart-wrenching to hear their account of the events, and I’m sorry they had to go through this traumatic experience. Events like these have a ripple effect in the community, and people are scared. I heard about one of their neighbours who has stopped working past sundown so he can be home to protect his family.

Incidents of this severity are incredibly uncommon, but property crime remains rampant. No criminal starts off with home invasion, forcible confinement, and robbery. These guys have seen that they can get away with stealing quads and whatever else they can get easy. By eliminating the culture of apathy towards property crime, hopefully we can stop future offenders from getting as bold as these two.

I’ve heard a lot about the new police funding model proposal this last week, and despite the fact that the opposition does not have a single MLA representing a rural riding, they seem to believe they represent rural Albertans. Your NDP policies gutted rural Alberta for four years. I’m proud to stand with the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Municipal Affairs while we work with rural communities to get more boots on the ground.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Millbourne Laundromat Thanksgiving Dinner

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the Leefield Community League hall a special Mill Woods tradition took place once again. It was the 27th annual serving of the Millbourne Laundromat Thanksgiving dinner, an event that was first held in 1993, and one that has continued to grow with each passing year. In 1993 the original owners of the Millbourne Laundromat, Shirley and Don Tripp, served their first free Thanksgiving meal to 42 people. Since then the event has grown considerably, and it now feeds over 1,300 each year. After the Tripps sold the laundromat, the new owners continued this wonderful tradition.

The increasing size of the event brought new challenges. Those were met with new partnerships. In recent years the Leefield Community League has hosted the event in their warm and well-cared-for community hall, the Rotary Club of Edmonton Southeast has also been a co-host now for many years, and Victoria Ewert, a Rotary Club member, has helped organize the event for most of the past decade. Volunteer chefs start cooking turkeys on the Friday and work through the weekend to ensure the feast is ready when the doors open on Thanksgiving Monday. Everyone is welcome, and those who can are encouraged to bring donations of warm winter clothing for those in need.

The Millbourne Laundromat Thanksgiving dinner is an excellent tradition, one that brings together people from across the community to enjoy each other's company along with a holiday meal. It's my distinct honour to have helped serve this meal at this wonderful event since coming into office, and I look forward to it every year. I want to thank everyone who's volunteered over the years to keep this incredible tradition alive. Mill Woods is a special place, where community is built through caring, compassion, and togetherness, and the Millbourne Laundromat Thanksgiving dinner is an exemplary example of that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Federal Policies and Economic Development

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This summer my MP, Earl Dreeshen, and I spoke at a public rally in Red Deer organized by Rally 4 Resources and the Canadian tax federation. As demonstrated by bills C-48 and C-69, socialist policies hostile to economic competitiveness, and reckless indifference to billions in deficits, the greatest threat to Alberta's and indeed Canada's economic prosperity right now is the Trudeau Liberal government. The Trudeau Liberal government is an unprincipled government who by its actions cares more about political calculus than doing what is right. It is time to hold unprincipled governments to account.

The Canadian tax federation has offered one form of accountability. The Quebec Premier says that there is no social acceptability for oil pipelines. He also says that one of his favourite things about being in Canada is the $13 billion his province receives in equalization. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation's response to this hypocrisy is launching the No Pipelines? No Equalization! campaign. Alberta has contributed more than $600 billion net into equalization since 1961. This is what equalization has become, a structural, permanent welfare payment from Alberta to provinces which seek to undermine Alberta's interest. This is dysfunctional and in the real world is unacceptable. In the public interest I would invite Albertans to hold failed governments to account and, in particular, vote to fire the Trudeau Liberal government on October 21.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Canadian Energy Centre

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, last week the Premier unveiled his $30 million campaign vehicle. It's run by a failed UCP candidate with no experience in oil and gas who's paid far more than the rules dictate. This campaign slush fund is also exempted from basic public disclosure rules, public tendering rules, whistle-blower protection rules, ethics rules, and conflict-of-interest rules, to name a few. To the Premier: how arrogant and entitled does he have to be to believe that it's okay to exempt himself from all of these long-standing rules for accountability?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of measures in place to ensure financial transparency.

As for the strategy undertaken by the Canadian Energy Centre, we will not be revealing that to the opponents of our oil and gas sector, who have for the last decade launched a campaign to land-lock our oil and gas sector. We will not be revealing that because Albertans do not want us to be doing that.

Ms Notley: Well, I disagree, Mr. Speaker. The Premier actually thinks taxpayers are happy to just hand over $30 million every single year to his secret sandbox and that somehow we should just trust them. The problem is that the trust is already broken. Instead of hiring a credible nonpartisan with experience in energy and demonstrated campaign success, he's handed the job to a failed UCP candidate who is best known as a lobbyist for the payday loan companies. The first act this corporation has taken reeks of partisan game playing. How can Albertans possibly trust them?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, Albertans elected us to fight for them, to stand up for our oil and gas sector. With regard to the Canadian Energy Centre, it's a provincial corporation, which means that its financials are consolidated into ours. Under the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, section 10, their expenditures will be transparent. Under that piece of legislation they will be filing all of their budget, and that will be disclosed. It is transparent.

Ms Notley: In contrast, Mr. Speaker, this is the most secretive corporation created in the history of the government of Alberta. Now, this Premier broke a promise to disclose his secret leadership campaign donors. In his next leadership race his kamikaze campaign broke the law to the tune of over $180,000 in fines. Most recently both the Premier and his Attorney General have been questioned by the RCMP in an ongoing investigation into fraud. Is the Premier really so tone deaf that he doesn't understand why his government should not be trusted with $30 million to go off in secret and buy advertising and collect data about Albertans?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Energy Centre will be subject to the Auditor General review. That will be very publicly disclosed. Under the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act all of its budget and its financials will be disclosed. It's subject to a code of conduct, similar to all other government, where they have to abide by whistle-blower legislation. It's very transparent. It's all there in the legislation if the NDP would simply choose to read it.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition for her second set of questions.

Ms Notley: Well, I do congratulate the Energy minister on about the fourth version of what this legislation means, so we'll wait to see what comes next.

Rural Police Service

Ms Notley: On a different topic, the Premier gives 4 and a half billion dollar handouts to big corporations, and rural Albertans are paying for it. He can deny it all he wants, but the communities of Brooks, Wetaskiwin, Barrhead, Sundre, Foothills, Lacombe all oppose his plan to cut rural police funding. In fact, the CEO of Crossfield warned that some municipalities will, quote, very likely dissolve due to financial insolvency. Can the Premier please direct Albertans to where in his platform they can find "destroy small communities in rural Alberta?"

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has been clear. We are not cutting any police funding. In fact, we will be increasing police funding. It's unfortunate that the Official Opposition continues along this line of questioning when they know they're being unfactual.

I was back home in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, to meet with my constituents and yours, right along our constituency line, about rural crime the other day. Let me tell you that they were still horrified by the fact that this opposition while in government completely abandoned them, as they did all rural Albertans. Let me be clear, through you to them: we will not be lectured by them on how to represent rural Alberta. They abandoned rural Alberta, which is why they don't even have a member from rural Alberta.

Ms Notley: Well, don't take my word for it, Mr. Speaker; ask the more than 10 or 15 representatives from rural Alberta who apparently are being unfactual. Every day we hear new concerns from people in those communities. The mayor of Red Deer county called the changes unfair, and he's now openly asking: what else do we cut to make this happen? To the Premier: if you won't answer me, will you at least answer the mayor of Red Deer county? What services should they be cutting to pay for your 4 and a half billion dollar handover to corporations?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that the Official Opposition continues to misrepresent the facts. Let me be clear, as the Solicitor General has: we are not cutting rural policing. In fact, we are going to be investing in rural policing, something that that party should have done while they were in power. But, again, through you to them, I will not be and nobody in this government caucus will be lectured by them when it comes to representing rural Albertans. Thousands of rural Albertans, my constituents and your constituents, sat on the stairs of the Legislature protesting against that former government. The NDP forgot rural Alberta, particularly when it comes to rural crime. That member even laughed at them when I asked questions about them in this Chamber.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that officials for this government as well as copious representatives from municipalities are not misrepresenting the facts, as the member opposite suggests. They are simply reading the documents that have been provided. Now, the reeve of Lacombe county asked the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka and didn't get the answer, so maybe someone here could answer it for the reeve. She asked: how do you look Albertans in the eye and say, "You've been broken into eight times, and there are absolutely no plans for increased police service in rural Alberta"?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Let me be clear. I'm not saying that any municipality is misrepresenting the facts. I'm saying that the Official Opposition is misrepresenting the facts. The Solicitor General has been clear: we are not cutting funding when it comes to rural policing; we are increasing it. But the question still stands. The hon. member, the leader of the NDP, while she sat in this very seat right beside me, sat in this Chamber while I was Leader of the Opposition and asking about rural crime, and she laughed at rural Albertans while the galleries were full. Mr. Speaker, through you to her, will she finally stand up and apologize for how she treated rural Alberta? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Corporate Taxation and Job Creation

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Friday of last week new jobs numbers came out. There was not much to celebrate. Almost 12,000 people left the workforce. That's 12,000 people who gave up waiting for the UCP's 4 and a half billion dollar handout to big corporations. They gave up waiting for that handout to create them a job. To the Premier: what do you have to say to the almost 12,000 people who have given up hope for this government's corporate tax giveaway?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has the call.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reality was that in September there were another 4,900 new jobs created in the province. While that's not a lot, it's an increase, and we're appreciative of that. Here's the reality. The previous NDP government, when they took office, inherited a challenging economic file, but they exacerbated that by raising corporate taxes by 20 per cent. With it, we witnessed the flight of capital by the billions and the loss of jobs by the tens of thousands. This government will chart a new course. We will create the most competitive business environment and attract new investment.

Ms Phillips: Well, some new course, Mr. Speaker. Since this government's corporate tax giveaway came into effect, almost 27,000 full-time jobs have been lost; 15,000 of those jobs have been lost in the oil and gas sector. Corporations benefiting from this Premier's handout have decided to boost shareholder dividends rather than create jobs. Many of these shareholders live outside of Alberta. To the Premier: is your government okay with the profits from the 4 and a half billion dollar tax gift going to Bay Street bankers out east while 15,000 oil and gas workers get pink slips?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, when the previous NDP government raised corporate taxes by 20 per cent, the following three years they actually collected $2.3 billion less in revenues. That's the reality. When you create an uncompetitive business environment, you see investment fly out of the province, and you see job creation lost, ultimately leading to lower government revenues. We will reverse that course. We will attract investment into this province and create jobs and opportunities, which will lead to increased government revenue.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, this government cancelled programs that diversified our economy and added jobs and value to our natural resources and our renewable resources. They won't even support 50 women health care workers that were fired in Vegreville for no reason and only offered them their jobs back if they took a $10-an-hour pay decrease. To the Premier: will you admit that when your Finance minister lackadaisically says that there might be jobs eventually from your corporate handout experiment, what he really meant was that his friends would get buckets of cash first and working-class people would come last?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of our job-creation tax cut, we've already seen significant announcements about anticipated investment in this province. Telus announced that they are going to be investing $16 billion in the province, creating 5,000 additional jobs. Suncor announced that they will be investing $1.4 billion, creating 600 additional jobs. Economist after economist has supported our view that reducing corporate taxes, creating the most competitive business environment, will create jobs and opportunities for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

2:00 Early Learning and Child Care Centres

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta families are faced with child care costs equivalent to a mortgage payment, and working families are being forced to choose between their jobs and their families. That's why we created the $25-per-day child care pilot program, that helped Albertans re-enter the workforce and saved families $425 a month. This Premier, by comparison, rushed to give $4.5 billion to big corporations, but Alberta parents have to wait. To the Premier: give us an update. Are working parents and their kids the next group to pay for your tax handout to big corporations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services has risen.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to point out once again that the rhetoric around the job-creation tax cut is simply false. Speaking of jobs, we know that people want jobs. They want the economy back on track because it allows people to provide for their families, and a strong economy allows us to support those who need it most.

The terms of the pilot have not changed, and we will review the report when it's complete. The NDP set up the pilot so that it did not track need. It did not track income nor employment nor wait-lists. We've heard from many parents and daycare operators who say that the program isn't working for them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the evidence is actually overwhelming in support of quality and affordable child care, especially when it's universal, as intended to be. This pilot project alone created 450 new jobs in the first few years in early childhood education, and estimates show that expanding it would further increase women in the workforce, adding nearly $6 billion a year to Alberta's economy. What's more, 22 of the child care programs that we started are scheduled to end in less than six months without any action or comment from this government or the minister. To the Premier: if you're serious about supporting jobs in this province, why do you continue to remain silent on the future of $25-per-day child care?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I spent the summer with a variety of child care operators and Albertans. We will be transparent, and we will ensure that people know so that they have predictable care as we move forward. Do people value affordability? Absolutely, especially for low-income families. Do $25-a-day centres provide quality child care? Yes, but so, too, do the centres who weren't in the pilot who have been providing quality child care for decades. After the runaway spending, making life more difficult for families under the former government, we're going to stay focused on getting our province back on track, getting people back to work, and supporting those who need it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that there are a number of centres that weren't part of the ELCC program that would love to be part of it. If the Premier won't answer me, maybe he will answer the parents and advocates and child care centres that are here right now, today. They want to know where this government is going with child care. They say that this program has been a lifeline and a saving grace that has benefited their child's development and helped them drive our economy. You owe these families an answer. To the Premier: can you commit today to expanding this affordable child care project?

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, just because the member opposite doesn't agree does not mean I haven't answered her questions.

In April Albertans gave us a mandate to deliver on our campaign promises, not theirs. I appreciate some of the considerations made in the pilot to address affordability, but I also know, as a working parent and someone who values fiscal responsibility, that I've never once questioned whether my neighbours, struggling to find work over the last four years, should be paying for my child care. On this side of the house, Mr. Speaker, we will remain responsible stewards of taxpayer dollars and stay focused on the needs of parents who really need support to enter the workforce. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members. [interjections] Hon. members, we will have order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein is rising with a question.

Provincial Lawsuit against Opioid Manufacturers

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Opioid addiction is a deadly issue that our province and our country are facing. Last year alone we lost close to 800 lives because of opioid overdose and addiction. Many of these deaths were caused by prescription opioids. In addition to the loss of life that we have endured as a province, the total economic cost of opioid addiction on our province is estimated to be in the hundreds of millions of dollars. To the associate minister: what is our government doing to recover the losses to our province?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the great question. It is true. Our province has endured many costs as a result of opioid addiction. This is why this morning I announced, alongside my colleagues Minister Shandro and Minister Schweitzer, that our government will be supporting the actions of British Columbia and other provinces in a lawsuit against opioid manufacturers and distributors. We will never be able to recover all the human costs associated with this, but we are standing up for Albertans. We're going to do our work to recover the costs associated with health care and the justice system.

The Speaker: I might just remind all members in the Chamber that the use of names of other members in the Chamber under any circumstances is not permitted.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein has a question.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the loss of life, including a little over a year ago the tragic loss of my close friend, former colleague, and constituent and given that opioid addiction has such a dramatic and lasting effect on our province, our families, and our economy and given that these companies seemed to have known that they were acting in bad faith, to the associate minister: just how far is the Alberta government willing to go to ensure that these companies are held to account?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans can rest assured that our government will not stand idly by while any company seeks to take advantage of families and individuals who are suffering from mental health addictions. Any company engaged in these practices should know that our government will pursue them to the fullest extent of our authority. Our government was elected to stand up for Albertans. We're going to do just that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. I'm deeply encouraged to hear that answer and to hear what this government is willing to do to protect Albertans and to stand up for Albertans.

Given that opioid use and addiction is a deadly scourge that our province is facing and given that this government has committed $40 million specifically to deal with the opioid crisis, to the associate minister: how does supporting this lawsuit fit into the overall addiction recovery strategy?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for making a very great point here. Ultimately, what we believe in is an approach that is fair, firm, and compassionate. Our government's participation in this lawsuit sends a clear signal to Albertans and the companies that we are committed to ensure that Albertans are treated exactly like that. That is also why we're funding an additional 4,000 treatment spaces, to ensure that those with addictions have access to the life-saving treatment and recovery services that they so deserve.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, young people all over the world, including in Alberta, are looking for leadership on the most pressing issue of our time, climate change. This leadership is embodied in Greta Thunberg, who will be visiting Alberta. Now, I don't agree with everything that she says, but I do agree that we need to take this issue seriously and that we need to listen to youth, not mock them. To the minister. Young people don't want to pay for your $4.5 billion handout to big corporations. They want action on climate change. When are you going to listen to them?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are taking this issue seriously. I'm looking forward to tabling TIER in this very place in the next few weeks, focusing on the UCP's approach, the Alberta government's approach, to the climate change file. We're proud of that. Now, I can tell you that what we won't do is continue the NDP's process, which was to put their head in the sand, tax hockey moms and hockey dads, have no visible impact on emissions at all, and instead go forward with a situation that was all economic pain and no environmental gain. That's a different approach from the one this government is going to take. We're excited to table TIER, and we look forward to seeing how the opposition reacts to it.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, given that the member opposite is making hockey moms and hockey dads pay for their $4.5 billion handout to big corporations and given that this visit will undoubtedly draw a massive amount of publicity and given that this government mocked the youth rallying outside the Legislature earlier this year, to the minister: if you treat this visit anything like you treated the young people who rallied outside the Legislature, how many millions do you think it will take Tom Olsen's attack machine to fix Alberta's reputation?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, there's the difference between Alberta's government and Alberta's former government, between this side of the aisle and that side of the aisle. They say that sticking up for our oil and gas industry, talking about our great environmental record, talking about the innovation that we have inside this province is somehow mocking people. That's not mocking people. We're proud to stand with the oil and gas industry. We're proud of our largest industry, and we're proud of the work that they're doing on emissions.

The real question for those members is: in this upcoming election are they going to vote for their antipipeline leader or their antipipeline close friend and ally Justin Trudeau? It's a question I've been asking for a while. We're running out of days. Which way are they voting?

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, given that this government tore up Alberta's only climate change plan and replaced it with exactly nothing and given that our plan cut 50 megatonnes of emissions, created over 7,000 jobs, and funded green infrastructure investments all over Alberta, to the minister: if you really do care about tackling climate change like you say you do, will you commit to more renewable electricity, commit to phasing out coal-fired power, commit to reducing methane, commit to energy efficiency? Actually, will you commit to doing anything to tackle climate change?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I've already been clear. We have a plan coming forward on climate change, that I'm excited to table in this very place.

Let's talk about what the former government did on climate change. They brought in the largest tax increase in the history of this province. It was all economic pain, no environmental gain. The leader of their own party in an interview near Christmastime couldn't even point to any emission reductions as a result of that plan. We will not be lectured by the NDP when it comes to this issue. Let's be clear. That is a party that oversaw the largest job loss in the history of the province, that took our economy on track to a hundred billion dollars in debt. Shame on them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Commercial Driver Training and Testing Standards

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I asked the Minister of Transportation last week why he was repealing truck safety measures rather than listening to the families and survivors of the Humboldt Broncos bus tragedy, the minister told us he had spoken with Toby Boulet. Well, Toby Boulet spoke to reporters about that phone call and said, quote: the government of Alberta has completely forgotten about the Broncos; this is about politics and economics, and obviously the minister skipped that part in our phone conversation. End quote. Minister, why did you misrepresent your conversation with a grieving parent?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation is rising.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had a couple of conversations with Mr. Boulet. They were both quite respectful. Speaking of misleading, the NDP had the Humboldt parents believe that they brought in MELT as a result of the Humboldt bus crash. Nothing could be further from the truth. That was brought in because the United States of America won't let a truck cross the border after February 2020 without MELT. Why don't you tell them the truth? This is something that you did that I agree with, but you exaggerated why you did it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Mr. Boulet went on to say that the Minister of Transportation, quote, only told me what I wanted to hear, and I was led to believe that the consultation process was still in place, that it was going on; well, it's obvious that many parts of the consultation process have already been decided, end quote, again to the minister: do you think it's appropriate to deceive and play political games with people who lost loved ones in the Humboldt tragedy, like Toby Boulet?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, as I just pointed out, it's the NDP that misled those people. In fact, the consultation will begin shortly. It hasn't begun yet. The hon. member says, yes, we make some decisions as we go along. We do that. But certain parts of the population asked for a consultation, and they'll get one. No decisions have been made on the results of that consultation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister has compromised on safety and doesn't have the stomach to tell a grieving parent the truth and given that he's now resorted to misrepresenting a few conversations he's had with those who lost loved ones in the Humboldt bus tragedy, will the minister now commit to cancelling his repeal of truck safety measures and start an actual consultation with the Boulet family and so many others that were impacted by this tragedy?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member fails to say that they actually didn't bring MELT in. They announced it. They announced it and put it in place officially, I suppose, on March 1, less than about two weeks before the election. On the same day they nationalized driver training, cut the number of driver examiners in half, and crippled the government's ability to deliver MELT, the higher standard. We will deliver the higher standard as we undo the damage that the NDP did that made it impossible. We're going to fix it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Connect Care Clinical Information System Review

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With the launch of the new provincial clinical information system, connect care, Albertans will have their health information consolidated under one system. This will ensure that Albertans have access to their health care information and actively participate in their care with their physicians. This system can reduce gaps, enhance efficiency, and improve communication between health care providers. The current scope under the NDP government was only rolled out to AHS-affiliated facilities. This means that health care providers, clinics, and PCNs not affiliated with AHS will not be included. To the Minister of Health: what is the status of the connect care review this government promised in the platform?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health is rising.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. The member is correct. We committed in our campaign platform to review the health information systems in the province. I announced a review in June, including three systems: connect care, Netcare, as well as the MyHealth Records platform. The purpose was to avoid duplication of services and to make sure that we use digital health information to make the system work better for patients. In August I announced that Ernst & Young was selected to conduct the review. The work began in September, and I expect to see a final report in January.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that physicians working with AHS and also running private clinics will be required to maintain two systems that may not allow flow of information between the systems – this is not only costly and inefficient but may offer opportunities for abuse by patients seeking multiple prescriptions, possibly to opioids – to the same minister: will Albertans and their physicians have the ability to access their information from all sources in an integrated manner?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health has the call.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, they will. There will be one entry point for patients to access their medical records through the existing MyHealth Records portal and the new connect care patient portal, my AHS connect. The entry will be seamless. Patients, as I said, will be able to access their AHS medical records through this connect care patient portal, and they will also be able to securely communicate with their health care provider as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for the answer. Given that the entire point of the connect care system is to reduce oversight and abuse and promote greater communication between health care providers in Alberta and Albertans and given that an efficient system will ultimately reduce health costs and prevent abuse and given that connect care is only currently available to AHS, to the same minister: how is this government planning on integrating other health care providers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Shandro: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, this is an important issue, and I'm happy to assure my colleague that we're working with AHS to make sure that that integration does happen. Community health care providers outside of AHS will be offered access to a connect care health care provider portal so that they can securely access information about their patients. That includes physicians, nurse practitioners, pharmacists, and other allied service providers. It's complex work, so it will happen in phases, not all at once. But it's essential, and I'm committed to seeing it through.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is rising with a question.

Education Funding for Enrolment Growth

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Education said that the opposition was wrong about enrolment growth in our schools this fall. This was another classic attempt that she had at misdirection, because she has failed yet to provide schools and school boards with any kind of funding certainty about what's happening in their schools. Meanwhile Edmonton Catholic schools has 1,200 new students that have come to their schools this year. To the minister: how exactly were we wrong about enrolment growth, and will Edmonton Catholic schools see any new money for these 1,200 new students?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education is rising.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. There has absolutely been enrolment growth, but we've accounted for enrolment growth. We have been very clear that we will be accounting for it in the upcoming budget, which will come out next week, and we look forward to sharing that with everyone.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the question that we and parents and school boards have been asking for six months is, "Will 'accounting for' actually mean 'funding'?" – will there be any new money for new students? That's the question that these parents keep asking me. Given that Edmonton public schools has an increase of more than 3,000 students this year and that that means they need about 100 more teachers and about 100 more classrooms, many more schools, and dozens of EAs to support students with complex needs, to the minister: will the budget have the funds – not the accounting; will it have the funds, the money, the dollars – for these teachers, schools, and educational assistants, or should we ask the Finance ...

The Speaker: The Minister of Education has the call.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Our government remains committed to providing a world-class, high-quality education for all Alberta students. What the MacKinnon report highlighted was that Alberta spends more on its education system than most provinces, but the results just aren't there. Our government is committed to providing school divisions with the sustainable, predictable funding that they require and that they need. That's what I'm hearing. That's what we're going to do.

Ms Hoffman: Given that in the recent telephone town hall conversation with the Finance minister, he said that funding for education would be on par with the last school year – that doesn't account for 1,200 new Edmonton Catholic students or 3,000 new Edmonton public students – and given that many schools right across the province are reporting enrolment growth like Fort McMurray's, about 6 per cent growth in both of their Catholic and public districts, to the Premier: how come you had $4.5 billion for corporate handouts but you don't have a penny for thousands of new Alberta students?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education has risen.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Again I reiterate to the parents and to the children that we are committed to funding education. We're committed to building schools. We have already said that we are not cutting funding to education. We owe it to parents and children to get better outcomes for the money that we're spending. It's just another example of the NDP's fear tactics that continue weekly. Next week we will bring forward a budget, which will reveal everything to everyone.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is rising with a question.

Seniors' Benefit Program and Long-term Care

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta seniors fear they'll pay the price for the UCP's regressive policies, including the $4.5 billion giveaway to corporations. The UCP commissioned a report that only looked at expenditures and thus recommends a 20 per cent cut to health care funding commensurate with B.C. Notably, B.C. has no government-funded drug plan for seniors. Here in Alberta we have such a plan. To the minister of seniors: are you really going to make Alberta seniors spend more on their prescriptions to pay for your corporate tax giveaway?

Mr. Shandro: I think, Mr. Speaker, that's for me if it's about the seniors' drug plan. We spend $2 billion on our 21 different drug plans within the province. We're very proud of the drug plans we have for all Albertans, including our nongroup plan, as well as the $600 million that we spend on our seniors' drug plan. Very happy to answer any other questions the member has about this.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that a few weeks ago our leader and I stood with seniors worried about the UCP government's plans to cut funding for seniors and given that Alanna Hargan, director and Calgary chair for Seniors United Now, called on the Premier to follow through on his promise to maintain or increase support for seniors, to the minister: why isn't your government shelving its failed corporate handout and focusing on care for seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to supporting seniors and Albertans with low incomes, but we also need to address the debt, spending problem from the one-term NDP government.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, given that the Canadian Medical Association reports that twice as many B.C. seniors living in long-term care report experiencing more pain than do those living in Alberta facilities and given that 50 per cent more B.C. seniors in long-term care are victims of inappropriate antipsychotic medication treatment, to the minister of seniors. We do a better job of taking care of seniors in this province. Indeed, seniors built this province. Why do you want to cause them more pain?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has an overspending problem thanks to the NDP government, who chose us to be on track to exceed $100 billion and paying $5 million per day in interest payments. We cannot unfairly burden this generation and the generations ahead. We must act now, and we must take care of Albertans and all seniors.

Federal Energy Policies and Taxation

Mr. Singh: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are generous people. We pride ourselves on helping our fellow Canadians, especially when times are bad elsewhere. All we ask in return is for the right to develop our resources and sell them at a fair price, but right now Alberta has received the short end of the stick. Minister, how will this government ensure that Albertans get a fair deal in the Canadian federation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy is rising.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Political leaders from across the country continue to inflict economic harm on our oil and gas industry. These are the friends and allies of the NDP. Whether it's Justin Trudeau musing about phasing out the oil sands, the carbon tax, bills C-69 and C-48, clean fuel standards – all of these things harm our industry – the federal election right now seems to be a race of which political party, the friends and allies of the NDP, can inflict the most harm on our oil and gas sector. We will fight for our oil and gas sector.

Mr. Singh: Mr. Speaker, given that Albertans have contributed a net amount of $200 billion in the last decade alone to federal taxes and given that Justin Trudeau continues to attack Albertan prosperity with no more pipelines, Bill C-69, and the tanker ban, Bill C-48, will the minister please outline our government's plan to fight this legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy has the call.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-69 is opposed by 9 out of 10 provinces, almost every major industry association in Canada, as well as dozens of First Nations. Bill C-69 is a flagrant violation of our exclusive constitutional jurisdiction to manage and develop our natural resources, so we've already launched a constitutional reference, a challenge against Bill C-69. Saskatchewan has joined this challenge, and we're in discussions with other provinces who are like-minded about defending our exclusive constitutional jurisdiction.

Mr. Singh: Mr. Speaker, given that Albertans voted strongly against the carbon tax on April 16 and given that our government has a plan to ensure that emissions remain low through our TIER program and given that Justin Trudeau intends to impose a provincial carbon tax on our province, can the minister please outline how our government is working to fight this unconstitutional tax?

Mrs. Savage: Well, Mr. Speaker, some days it seems like our primary method of defending our right to develop our oil and gas is through litigation and through the courts. Again, we have another one, the constitutional reference against the carbon tax. We launched that constitutional reference on June 20. We are expecting that to be heard in the court sometime in December. We have joined the Saskatchewan and Ontario reference, which is set to be heard in the Supreme Court of Canada in the early part of 2020. Manitoba is launching a constitutional reference, and almost all the provinces across the country have joined in this constitutional . . .

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Meadows is rising.

Community Grant Programs

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I joined our leader and my colleague from Calgary-McCall for a meeting with the new executive at the Dashmesh Culture Centre in Calgary. Members of the Sikh community told us about their vibrant and growing community. Specifically, they shared their concerns about the community facility enhancement program, known as CFEP, or the community initiatives program, known as CIP, that help support their community. To the minister: are communities are going to suffer as a result of your pandering $4.5 billion to big corporations?

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that I'd like to say is that we're very, very honoured to have the very first ministry of multiculturalism in this province in 25 years. The direct result of that is to make sure that we're able to work with these communities to build Alberta up, to bring people together. That's actually why we were elected. They were tired of division. They were tired of people asking questions like this. Of course, we're going to be looking at making sure that those grants are available.

Thank you for the question.

Mr. Deol: Given that when the NDP was in government, we consistently supported the CFEP and CIP programs and given that we committed more than $62 million to those programs in Budget 2018 alone – and that money went to community centres, hockey rinks, social clubs, and countless other groups – to the minister: where are these community groups supposed to turn now if there's only money in your budget for big corporations?

2:30

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much. Well, this is exactly what I'm talking about, Mr. Speaker. This level of division and throwing people against each other is exactly why these guys are in opposition now. We are of course going to look at CFEP grants and CIP grants and all of those things that are available, even more so. In fact, this government has pledged money, $2.5 million, to make sure that newcomers that are coming to Alberta have the ability to make sure that their professions are recognized, that they have those designations, that we make sure that we actually pull them out of survivor jobs so that they're able to pay taxes in this province to actually provide dollars for community centres.

Mr. Deol: Given that communities and organizations are concerned with government grants that help community members – in fact, the Finance minister even said during his recent telephone town hall that, and I quote, we are all going to have to learn to do more with less, end quote, even though big corporations have literally been handed billions of dollars, which aren't even creating jobs – to the minister of culture: are you disappointed that your Premier's corporate experiment isn't working, and will you commit here and now to maintaining or increasing funding for CFEP and CIP?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, the members opposite, when they were in government, taxed everything that moved. They spent like gangsters, and they had this province on track for a hundred billion dollars of accumulated debt.

Ms Ganley: Point of order.

Mr. Toews: We were elected to change course, to manage our finances responsibly, and we will do that. We will deliver a budget next week that does it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order has been called at approximately 2:32.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has a question.

Medical Laboratory Services

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, this weekend, while the Minister of Health and his colleagues were enjoying their Thanksgiving with friends and family, medical laboratories here in our city had hundreds of samples sitting untested because they were forced to use medical equipment that has either failed or is about to fail. In many cases this equipment that they're forced to use is nearly two times older than its life expectancy, and lab staff have resorted to repairing malfunctioning machines by cannibalizing parts from broken ones. To this Minister of Health: were you aware that Alberta's medical testing equipment was in such a crisis?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, I think it's a shame that once again we see from the NDP that they're spreading fear throughout the province by spreading misinformation. I was aware of the press conference that the hon. member had last week, and I can say this: these purchases have not been cancelled; they are being reviewed. It's a very ordinary review process within AHS, and I understand from AHS that most or all of them are going to be proceeding. Our government has given no direction regarding these purchases. There's been no reduction of funding for lab services in this province. We stand by our health care guarantee.

Mr. Shepherd: That's precisely the problem, Mr. Speaker: this government has no direction.

Given that our government not only committed to building the Edmonton lab hub and also created a $3 million bridge fund so that these labs could immediately replace this urgently needed equipment and given that last week Alberta's lab technologists were told that money was no longer available and that they had 24 hours to provide a crisis case for equipment they had already begun purchase orders for, will the minister commit today to ensuring that that $3 million bridge fund is available for that equipment?

Mr. Shandro: What I can say right now, Mr. Speaker, is that this information that's being provided by the hon. member is completely false. It's incorrect. It's a misunderstanding of the ordinary budget procedures within AHS. Let me be clear that I was concerned when I first heard the initial report, so I had my staff get more information from AHS. I understand that the APL identified that they did not have funds for these equipment purchases within their own budget, so they forwarded them for consideration to be part of the overall AHS equipment budget. AHS is clear that these are urgent priority items, and as such, they would be normally funded once they are evaluated through the ordinary AHS process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that this minister, on the orders of his Premier, just simply jumped without a parachute earlier this summer when he chose to cancel the building of the Edmonton clinical lab hub, which would have brought new and cutting-edge equipment, and given that this minister has yet to indicate that he has any plan on how to fix the crisis state of Alberta's medical testing facilities, will this minister admit that this is simply part of their plan to let equipment fail so that they can use it as an excuse to justify introducing further American-style health care in our province?

Mr. Shandro: I will say this, Mr. Speaker. I am well aware of the need to invest in lab equipment in the province, and I'm working with lab providers to be able to determine these priorities. But I am not going to apologize for taking a different course from the NDP. Their plan was to spend $50 million of taxpayer money to buy out a successful private lab provider in this province and remove 700 jobs in the constituency of Edmonton-City Centre.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose is rising. [interjections] Order.

Driver's Licence Road Tests

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The previous government made significant changes to the scheduling of road tests, to the detriment of the entire system. Rural communities such as mine in the Camrose constituency were particularly negatively impacted as the backlog resulted in a lengthy wait time for road tests. We are finding that it is still many months before a scheduled time for a road test can be made available. Can the Minister of Transportation please give this House an update on the status of the road test system?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation is rising.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not pretty. What happened is that the former government got a test on driver examiners that said that it wasn't good enough, and I agree with that. I've reviewed that test, but part of what it said was that the number of tests needed in the summer is the highest. That government responded, on March 1 of this year, by cutting the number of driver examiners in half, less than half. That's how they responded to a report that said that the highest need for driver examiners is during the summer. Not only that, they added the MELT requirements on at the same time. They essentially crippled . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that answer.

Given that Albertans are not able to take scheduled road tests in a reasonable period of time and given that it is a drastic change from the situation before the NDP formed government, in which those hoping to take the road test would only have to wait a week or so, will the minister consider returning to the previous system whereby local testers are scheduled and, by doing so, returning to a more effective privatized system?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, we haven't decided what we're going to do yet. We are going to look at it, but the NDP left a heck of a mess. They added on the MELT requirements, which we're going to deliver because MELT is here to stay. I know this system is not good enough, but we are cleaning up that mess that they left.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for his answer.

My final question is to the same minister. Given that residents who live in my constituency of Camrose continue to express concern regarding the backlog of road tests and given that the people of Camrose see no resolution coming in the near future, can you please explain to this House what Albertans can expect from this recently elected government as pertains to the scheduling of road tests and clearing out the backlog?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've doubled the number of driver examiners. We've added people under licence to provide more drivers' tests. If need be, we'll add more people under licence to provide driving tests. I'm sorry we haven't got it done yet. The mess they left was that big. We couldn't possibly get it done because they dug quite a hole, that we are working very hard to dig out of.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will proceed to Members' Statements. If you have other meetings or appointments, please exit expeditiously.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has risen to make a statement.

Rural Schools

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, and Happy Thanksgiving, Mr. Speaker. This last weekend families and friends gathered to share a meal and express their gratitude throughout our province, and it probably won't surprise you, but the little ones who sat around my table talked about their school and their teachers. School is a big part of children's lives, and a lot of Albertans come together to ensure that kids have a positive school experience: teachers, support staff, custodial staff, bus drivers, principals, maintenance teams, curriculum and assessment experts, and the list goes on. Schools are community hubs, and this is especially the case in many rural communities, like the one I grew up in, where the school library is the town library and the school gym and the ag hall are the two large public spaces that people come together in to gather.

Rural school staff go above and beyond their regular school day to support the community. Many rural educators teach multiple subjects to multiple grade levels. They help students explore new career paths. They sign up to coach a team that they know will take them on the highway for long trips on many weekends. Rural educators should be respected and honoured, but this UCP government couldn't rush fast enough to give away $4.5 billion to profitable corporations, and now the MacKinnon report makes it clear that rural schools and those who work in them are on the chopping block to pay for this $4.5 billion giveaway.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to say thank you to the folks who work to provide learning opportunities for all Alberta students. My NDP colleagues and I will fight for you to have the tools that you need, and we certainly won't stand by while this UCP government makes you and your students pay the price for a $4.5 billion corporate giveaway. We're going to have your backs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis is rising.

Canadian Nationalism

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Oxford dictionary a nationalist is, quote, a person who strongly identifies with their own nation and vigorously supports its interests. Yet this poor word has seemingly found itself so negative and controversial lately. By that definition I am a Canadian nationalist. I always have been, and I always will be. As a proud Canadian who truly believes that Canada is the most incredible country in the world, is that definition not exactly what I should wholeheartedly aspire to exhibit in everything that I do?

I think it's time we stop treating "nationalism" as a dirty word and start being unapologetically proud of this great nation that we call home. Loving and taking pride in our country should not be controversial. We are living through arguably the most divided times in our country's history, but rather than focusing on our differences, it's time we refocused on the commonalities and that which we love about our country. We are leading the world in environmental stewardship efforts as we continue to develop our natural resources. We are active in and committed to our democracy, our freedom of thought and expression, and our freedom of association, and we are known world-wide for our exorbitant friendliness. These are all reasons that should unite us in our love for our country.

All this hatred and division that's seeded itself across our federation lately is not the Canada that I know. I believe in a united Canada, and I believe in a Canada that empowers all of us to realize our dreams and our futures. We westerners are rightfully frustrated with much of the treatment we receive within the federation, but that does not mean we should outright give up on our federation. We have so much to be proud of as Canadians, and we will only continue to develop these reasons if we choose to work together rather than splintering apart. We need to put an end to this hatred and the division that is turning neighbour against neighbour.

On the eve of October 21st's pivotal election I beg of everyone in this House and everyone across the country: vote appropriately and refuse to give up on our Canada. Tough times don't last, but tough countries do.

Thank you.

Crime in Northeast Calgary

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to speak about the devastating crime wave that has been inflicted on my constituency and other parts of northeast Calgary. Like my colleague before me, I too have a story to share. Late last week Calgary police were called following reports of a sighting of armed men roaming the streets of the Calgary-Cross community of Monterey Park. Police quickly arrived and located the suspects, but the story does not end peacefully there. These armed men tried to flee the scene by shooting their way through, and police were forced to return fire. Two suspects were promptly arrested, but one managed to escape. Sadly, this is becoming more common in places like northeast Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, starting in 1999 Calgary's crime severity index score sat well below the national and provincial scores. The economic recession of 2014, combined with an already upward trending crime rate, caused Calgary's score to spike from 61 to 79 points, a nearly 30 per cent increase in a matter of months. As of 2017 Calgary's crime severity index is sitting at 82 and has been drifting upwards while the inverse is happening to the rest of the country. These statistics look troubling on paper, but to my constituents they are not just numbers but a part of their daily lives. The crimes being committed are not simple summary offences like vandalism or speeding; they range from violent crimes to large-scale drug operations.

Northeast Calgary is an epicentre for gang-related activity and a central hub for the distribution and trafficking of drugs for the rest of the city. Resolving the issues that this community and my constituents face will not only be a major benefit to that community but to the city and the province as a whole. The Calgary police have been working hard to put a stop to the rampant crime, but it is a challenging process. Halting the production and distribution of deadly drugs is a key first step in improving the quality of life in the area.

Of course, there are many barriers preventing a drop in crime . . . [Mr. Amery's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

Navratri

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, recently many Albertans of South Asian background celebrated Navratri, which is a Hindu community festival. In the north part of India plus Nepal the festival is celebrated as Dussehra and Dashain. In the eastern part of India plus Bangladesh it is celebrated as Durga Puja. In the south part of India it is celebrated as Vijayadashami, and in the western part of India, especially Gujarat, it is celebrated as Navratri.

Mr. Speaker, the Gujarati community celebrates this festival with the traditional folk dance of Garba and Dandiya globally during the nine nights of Navratri festival. Navratri's meaning is "nine nights," and traditional folk dances take place by performers during the nighttime. The Navratri festival has the utmost significance in the Gujarati community as they have records of more than 100,000 people in the same place performing their traditional dance.

On behalf of the Premier and the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women I had the honour of attending three Navratri celebrations put on by our Gujarati community recently at the Butterdome in Edmonton and at Millennium Place in Sherwood Park. These events were hosted by the Alberta Gujarati Association and the Garvi Gujarat Association of Canada. Each event had around 3,000 to 4,000 people who performed their folk dance of Garba with colourful dresses.

At recent Butterdome events I enjoyed the company of my colleagues the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the Minister of Infrastructure, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, and the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain, too. I know that the Minister of Community and Social Services also attended a Navratri event in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, Navratri is truly a beautiful festival that I especially enjoyed with our Gujarati community in Sherwood Park. On behalf of the Premier and our government I sincerely wish our Hindu, Gujarati, and South Asian communities a very happy Navratri.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present to the Assembly the Save Our Childcare petition, which has been signed by over 1,700 Albertans from ridings all across this province, including ridings represented by the members from the other side. The petition urges the government to continue the early learning and child care program, known as $25-per-day child care, at all participating child care centres beyond the 2020 or 2021 pilot project end date and to expand the ELCC program to more sites across Alberta.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has a notice of a motion?

Mr. Jason Nixon: I have two, Mr. Speaker. First, I wish to advise the Assembly pursuant to Standing Order 3(1.2) that there shall be no morning sitting for the following day: Wednesday, October 16, 2019.

I also request leave to introduce a bill at the appropriate time being the Public Lands Modernization (Grazing Leases and Obsolete Provisions) Amendment Act, 2019.

The Speaker: Bill 16 is already on notice, so there's no need to provide oral notice of that, but thank you for your additional comments.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Public Lands Modernization (Grazing Leases and Obsolete Provisions) Amendment Act, 2019

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to introduce first reading of Bill 16, the Public Lands Modernization (Grazing Leases and Obsolete Provisions) Amendment Act, 2019.

As you know, the ranching and cattle industry plays an important role in our province. This bill will ensure that Alberta's hard-working ranchers can continue to protect our environment and help support our economy for generations to come.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has caught my eye.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of over 800 signatures collected in person and online from the AFL Fair Start committee, that petitions the government and the Assembly to

- Recognize the positive impact access to child care has on women and gender equity;
- Expand access to high-quality, centre-based child care;
- and create a concrete plan with clear timelines to build a universal system of early childhood education and care.

This is in addition to the 1,700 signatures that I filed earlier on the petition.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta has risen.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the KPMG Governance Review of the Real Estate Council of Alberta, which clearly lays out the extent of the dysfunction at the council and which I referenced several times in my comments about Bill 15 on Thursday afternoon last week.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings today? It looks like the hon. Member for St. Albert has risen.

Ms Renaud: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This is an article from St. Albert Today, part of the St. Albert Gazette, and it's entitled 30 Per Cent Drop in Bird Numbers Since 1970, Finds Report, by writer Kevin Ma.

The Speaker: Anyone else who would like to table a document today?

Seeing none, hon. members, we are at points of order. The hon. deputy Official Opposition House leader.

Point of Order

Insulting Language

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order under 23(j), using "abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." This point of order is in response to a statement made by the Minister of Finance in regard to a member of the Official Opposition saying that the Official Opposition, while in government, "spent like gangsters." Again, I am sure that all members of this House understand that, you know, framing people as gangsters is not necessarily a parliamentary term that we should be using when speaking to each other. I would just caution the government side that when you're speaking about things like that, you might want to consider which side of the House is currently under investigation with the RCMP.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise on this point of order. I want to start off by pointing out very clearly that the hon. Finance minister did not refer to any members as gangsters in his comments. He was extraordinarily clear that they spent like gangsters. We are talking and he was referring to the fact that they brought us to $60 billion in debt, on track to $100 billion in debt, and oversaw a government that usually had well over $10 billion in deficits. If that's not spending like a gangster, I don't know what is. With that said, though, I do understand that the opposition probably doesn't want to have it pointed out that they had the worst financial record in the history of this province. As such, I'd be happy to withdraw that comment.

The Speaker: While I appreciate the member's comments, I hope that in the future, if he chooses to withdraw, he'll do so in a more expeditious manner to save us all the time and trouble. Having said that, I consider the matter dealt with.

We are at Orders of the Day. Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 15
Real Estate Amendment Act, 2019

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and move third reading of Bill 15.

As I have said before, this bill is an important first step to restoring Albertans' trust in the real estate regulator. I'm also very pleased that all members in this House seem to approve of the action our government is taking and see the importance of this bill. We cannot allow the real estate regulator or any regulator to wallow in dysfunction. The problems at the Real Estate Council of Alberta should never have been allowed to last this long or to get this bad.

Mr. Speaker, some of the members opposite have tried to take credit for the KPMG review that I just tabled moments ago, but I'd like to clarify something. For years members of the real estate industry, members of the council, and members of the public had brought substantial concerns forward to the previous ministers. Those concerns fell on deaf ears for at least two years despite the fact that complaints escalated in number and requests for ministerial intervention were received. It took at least two years before the previous government finally initiated a review into the council. Regardless of the rising complaints and the growing problems and concerns and requests for ministerial intervention, the former government sat and did nothing until the end of their mandate.

In our government we will not sit on our hands and wait for problems to deteriorate, Mr. Speaker. This is a government of action, and that is why we acted so swiftly to address the jobs crisis we inherited from the NDP with our job-creation tax cut. This move was supported by leading economists as a strong step in the right direction to get Albertans back to work. That's why we passed Bill 1, the carbon tax repeal act, as our first order of business, putting more money into Albertans' pockets and ending a failed NDP policy that resulted in all economic pain and no environmental gain. That is why we have been working so hard to reduce the red tape and to unleash the productive capacity of Albertans and Alberta businesses. Over 1 million Albertans voted for this government, asking us to carry out our ambitious platform, the most detailed platform in Alberta's history.

I'm proud of the actions that we have taken in these first six months, but sometimes, Mr. Speaker, we find matters of critical importance that aren't in our platform that do require immediate action. That is why we acted so quickly on the industry complaints and the KPMG review that we received about the Real Estate Council of Alberta. Albertans did not vote for a government that would listen to complaints but not hear them, that would review issues but not understand them, that would talk but not act. Albertans voted for a government that would do what they were elected to do, to take charge.

Mr. Speaker, in my previous speeches on this topic I very clearly laid out some of the issues at the Real Estate Council of Alberta. I encourage the members of this House and, in fact, all Albertans to read the KPMG review, that our government posted online. This report illustrates why Bill 15 is such an important piece of legislation. It was necessary for me to be so blunt about the problems at RECA because Albertans needed to know the extent of what was happening behind the scenes at the industry regulator.

They needed to understand that the action that our government is taking is critically necessary to stabilize the regulator and to get it back on track. I want to say that our priority is protecting Albertans, and our focus is on ensuring confidence in a real estate regulator that is functional and effective, not just in the immediate term but in the long term as well.

I cannot count the number of positive messages I have received from members of the real estate industry, not just since I tabled this bill but also since my second ministerial order to RECA in August. This feedback has been overwhelmingly positive, with a recurring theme of: thank you; it's about time. Mr. Speaker, the pain felt by this industry was very real.

You may remember that in early August I issued a ministerial order and a statement about new advertising guidelines that RECA intended to impose that did nothing but add red tape and cost tens of billions of dollars to implement. Following that order and statement and carrying on through the summer, I received phone calls, e-mails, Facebook and Twitter messages from real estate professionals across the province, who were so grateful that I was seeing the problems at RECA and I was intervening. I was taking action. I received comments about bullying that was taking place and about gross oversteps by the council. I had one professional call my office in tears to thank me for the action I was taking. I received information about other problems that existed, and I got pleas to dig deeper. Many of those professionals emphasized the fact that it was refreshing to have a government that was listening and taking action.

With the tabling of this bill last week, Mr. Speaker, I continue to receive thankful and encouraging messages. Real estate professionals were and continue to be grateful that at last someone in government has really listened to their concerns, has heard them, has understood them, and is taking action. I've been clear that the council lost the confidence of their fellow members, of the industry, of Albertans, and of me. Judging by the feedback I've received over the past week and also over the past number of months, that confidence is already being restored by this government's actions on this file. Real estate professionals are already more confident not just in their regulator and in their industry, but they're also more confident in their government.

It's a slow process, Mr. Speaker, building confidence. We know that we have our work cut out for us in many areas as we work, for example, to undo the damage done by the previous government to our economy. This is work that cannot be completed overnight; it will take time. This government is focused on restoring confidence in all industries in Alberta.

When it comes to restoring confidence in the real estate industry, that work began with the clear action I took through a series of ministerial orders to address urgent issues and oversteps over the summer and is followed up by this bill, which will dismiss council and get the regulator back on track. That work will continue as we move forward alongside industry professionals to propose further amendments early next year. I intend to build on the confidence that the real estate industry is regaining by ensuring that we have a skilled and competent administrator in place to serve as the real estate regulator in the short term.

On the subject of appointments I'd like to talk for a minute about the Auditor General's findings on the NDP's appointment process when they were in government, which were included in a report published only six weeks ago. Some of the findings included that evidence was lacking on how board members had the skill and experience that the boards were seeking. Much as RECA received a failing grade from KPMG, so too did the NDP receive a failing grade from the Auditor General.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that there will be no such report from the Auditor General's office about the appointment of an administrator for RECA. In order to effectively stabilize and focus the real estate regulator, it is imperative that an administrator is chosen who can come into the position, hit the ground running, identify gaps, problems, and solutions, and move forward to bring about positive change. This is no small task, and not just anyone will do. This is also an appointment that will need to move forward with some urgency because Albertans and professionals within the real estate industry must have clarity and stability as we move forward. Whoever is appointed to the role of administrator will have the qualities to assure Albertans and, specifically, real estate professionals that there is stability moving forward.

As I mentioned in earlier comments, Bill 15 is only a stepping stone, Mr. Speaker, and further work needs to be done. Once again I'll reiterate that I am committed to working with members of the real estate industry to ensure that further work and amendments are carefully considered so that we can develop recommendations for broader governance reforms to ensure that this dysfunction cannot ever happen again. Let me assure all members of this House and all Albertans that our plan is to transition to a functional council that will serve as regulator and that everyone can have confidence in. We will take the time to do this right, and the end result will be one achieved through collaboration.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank KPMG for their work on the review that they conducted on the council. I'd like to thank members of the real estate industry for their supportive comments and for the trust they have placed in me as I work to clean up this mess. I would like to encourage them to continue to share their thoughts and opinions as we move forward together. We will not let them down.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has risen to speak to this matter.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is something on which we were in agreement on both sides of the House here, and I was about to rise and comment on the importance of governance and how it crosses partisan lines and how we can work together in instances when it's important. It's a little bit tone deaf to say those things after such a blatant and unnecessary display of collateral attack and partisanship. Nonetheless, here we go.

We are, of course, in support of this bill though not, obviously, all of the comments that were made. I think it's probably worth pointing out that I am in fact looking at the ministerial order that set up this particular review. It is, in fact, signed by the previous Minister of Service Alberta, so it was in fact started under our government.

I think it's also worth noting in this case that, you know, when we're talking about governance, it's not just about individuals; it's about systems. Yes, there was dysfunction on this board, but some of that dysfunction arose from the way the board itself was structured. That structure, I hasten to point out, significantly predates 2015 and is, in fact, a Conservative legacy. So I applaud this step. I absolutely think it is a necessary step, but I think it's worth pointing out that laying the entire blame for this on individuals when, in fact, in the report there are governance concerns fairly clearly identified – I think it's insufficient to simply do this. There need to be significant steps taken to address those governance challenges.

I also think it's worth pointing out that in this system that was challenged and that had some disfunction, there were good people, people who worked with AREA, people who came forward to complain about the council from within the council, who genuinely felt committed to creating better governance for the industry and to creating a better situation. I understand the reasons why it has to be done like this, and I don't disagree with them, but I do think that it's worth pointing out that some of these individuals were trying their best to fix what is a challenging and dysfunctional system.

I also think it's worth pointing out that the precursor to this report was another report, which the current government is refusing to release.

I think we're in agreement on both sides that this step needs to be taken. We're certainly supporting this. I'm certainly supporting this bill, and I'm urging all members to support this bill, but I do hope that additional steps are taken to fix the overall governance challenges. I'm someone who cares very deeply about governance and about the way we set things up and about creating a system of fairness. I think, you know, that having challenges this large arising from someone who asked some very valid questions about why people who were ill or who had children were disadvantaged as a result of that – I think that those questions were legitimate, and I think that they were properly placed, and I think that having people advocate for what they see as good governance and having people advocate for what they see as good regulators is very, very important. I do know that a number of folks from AREA had concerns about this going well back into the past.

I'm glad to see that this report has come forward, I'm glad to see that the government is acting on this report, and I'm glad to see that things will move forward, but I just hope that this doesn't get written off as being a problem with this board only or as being a problem with every member of this board. I hope that as we move forward, additional steps are taken to ensure that power doesn't concentrate in certain members of the administration, giving them the ability to control elections on council in a way that is not really appropriate. The minister did indicate that he would take further steps, so I hope this is one of them.

I do hope that they bring in a mediation process because I think we all know – you know, the court system is a fantastic system. It does a lot of things very well; it does not do all things well. Certainly, one of the major problems with the court system is that well-funded parties can sometimes use litigation to, shall we say – I don't want to say "take advantage of less well funded," but they can shift the balance. So I think that having mediation in place not only is a recommendation of the report, but I think that it's an important step forward so that in future, when issues arise – it's often the case that a governance body will have a disagreement amongst themselves. There are many regulators out there where the individuals have such disagreements. The point is that you need to have a method to remedy that disagreement that doesn't sort of deadlock everything. So I think that that mediation is really, really important, and I hope that it will be applied to ongoing matters arising out of the previous issues.

I guess, to sum up, my points here are that this is the right move. We are fully in support of this bill. I hope that this isn't the only thing we see. I hope that going forward, we see a change to the structure and a change to the governance so that issues like this don't reoccur and so that if good people do step forward and are willing to volunteer their time and their effort and their hearts to do something that they care about, to try to make the world a better place, and to create a better system of governance, this isn't the result of that. I do hope that we'll see a structural change that will result in a council that's able to govern itself going forward. I do thank all the individuals that were involved in the writing of this report and the minister for being willing to take the necessary steps.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to this matter? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has the call.

Member Ceci: Thank you to the hon. member behind me. You know, I find myself rising and wanting to correct the record because what I heard from the minister really is just part of the story. The story about RECA is one that started before the NDP government that I was a part of. It was set up by the Conservative government, of which there are members who are Conservatives over there, the former party, and they were part of the people who were sitting on their hands with regard to RECA. They were doing that because they didn't bring anything forward at all, Mr. Speaker. It was the government that I was part of that initiated the work that led to the actions that the minister is talking about today. There was a KPMG report. Had we been in government, we would have acted on that report. There was a previous report that was commissioned that is not being released, I understand, by the current government.

The minister took an opportunity to talk about the appointment process, and I want to talk about the appointment process as well. When we were government, we set up a public appointment process. As I understand it, that's been thrown out by the UCP government, and they are back to appointing their friends and insiders to boards and commissions all across this province. I say that because I know people who were taken off boards and commissions on a Thursday evening. They were given a phone call at 7 o'clock at night that said, even though they're volunteers: "Your services will no longer be needed. We are putting new people in place." In many cases they had a couple of months to serve out before they would finish their time on that board.

I asked that person: do you know anything about how the replacement for you got put in place? The person told me that they understand that the person who was put in place as the chair of the board did not even know they were being put forward. I take from that that there was no public appointment process. People were tapped on the shoulder, essentially, and put in place, Mr. Speaker. If the minister talks about the Auditor General and their feelings about the appointment process that was put in place by us, I can tell you that the Auditor General will have a field day when that person looks at the appointment process put in place by the UCP government, which is back to who you know and not what you know and how you can help the organization.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to just correct the record to say that RECA was set up by Conservative governments. For years those governments turned a deaf ear to the egregious governance issues that were in place. The actions taken to get us to today, which is Bill 15, were started by our government. If the minister knows something different, perhaps he'll share that, but I can tell you that I, too, support the work of getting to the bottom of RECA and getting a better governance process in place. That has not happened under previous Conservative governments. It started with us, and it would have finished with us.

The minister may want to get up and be partisan again about this issue. I feel like he's going to take every opportunity to say that the previous NDP government messed things up. That's not true, Mr. Speaker. I will stand up and defend our appointment process at every opportunity and let him know that we started the work that he is taking credit for today. That is the truth of the matter. That is what we did. Recognizing that there were egregious problems with regard to governance, we started the actions.

People may argue about, "You know, it didn't go quick enough" and all that, but the reports were under way, Mr. Speaker. They weren't under way prior to the NDP government. They were being ignored by previous Conservative governments, who set up RECA in the way they set it up, and they put the people in place in many cases who were there – I think the person at the top stepped down after 25 or so years in place.

Mr. Speaker, we took the actions that led to the actions today, and I'm very proud of the work of my colleagues and I in that regard and of the former minister as well. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Prior to any further speakers, 29(2)(a) is available for anybody wishing to speak or make a quick five-minute question or comment.

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill proper?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Service Alberta to close debate?

Mr. Glubish: Yeah. Before we close debate, I should just say, for clarification, you know, that timing is everything. While the former government did initiate the KPMG review, I still maintain that this should never have been allowed to last as long as it did. The complaints began to escalate substantially in 2016, and it took until 2019 for the KPMG review to be initiated. With that said, I'm pleased to be able to move forward with this as a solution to a problem.

With respect to the comments about future reform, I mean, I think I've been very clear in my comments in this Chamber that we acknowledge, as the KPMG report indicates, that further governance reforms would be recommended. We will move forward in exploring that with the real estate industry, and we recognize that that is a necessary next step for the long-term health of this industry. We will make sure that we get this right so that this level of dysfunction is never allowed to happen again.

With that, I close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a third time]

Bill 14

Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act

[Adjourned debate October 15: Mr. Nally]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members looking to speak to Bill 14? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think this is a bill that will provide a lot of assistance, and I think it will do a lot of good things for our indigenous friends within our community. I know that the minister has worked very hard and consulted with many stakeholders to ensure that he put the best bill forward that he can.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that we adjourn until tomorrow, October 16, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:20 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, October 16, 2019

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's my esteemed pleasure today to introduce to you a group of visiting parliamentarians from Hokkaido, Japan. Hokkaido and Alberta share a very special and long-standing, 39-year friendship agreement. I invite all members to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Hon. members, if you might indulge me for just one brief moment. If all members could rise and just take a very brief moment of silence in recognition of the many who have lost their lives in the typhoon in Japan, I know that I and many others would be greatly appreciative of your co-operation.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Members, the galleries have many distinguished guests today, including guests of the Minister of Indigenous Relations: Elder Marggo Pariseau, Elder Jackie Bromley, Josie Nepinak, Emily Taylor, Victoria Sedgwick, Muriel Stanley Venne, Rachelle Venne, Marlene Poitras, Lisa Higgerty, and Chevi Rabbit. Please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Guest of the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland: Mr. Denis Meier.

Guests of the Minister of Ag and Forestry: a Premier's 4-H award recipient, Ms Amanda Hardman; her family, Barb and Keith; as well as Pamela Fald and Stacy Murray.

Guests of the Minister of Community and Social Services: Andrea Silverstone, executive director of Sagesse violence prevention society.

Joining us from Drumheller-Stettler: Holli Smith and Lindsay Bond of the Prairie Land school division.

Guests of the Member for St. Albert: Patti Fair, Chris Joseph, Andrea Joseph, Laurel Patter, Pam Cameron, Shauna Nordstrom, Peter Snaterse, Shaylyn Hunter, and Shelby Hunter.

Please rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations is rising to make a statement.

Prior to him rising, I would just like to point out to the members of the Assembly that the minister has sought special permission to display a red dress in the Assembly.

Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for your consideration on this important matter. On October 4 Canadians from coast to coast gathered at community events and vigils to honour and commemorate the lives of missing and murdered indigenous women and girls. In 2004 the Native Women's Association of Canada launched the sisters in spirit initiative. Why? Indigenous women and girls represent 4 per cent of the Canadian population but make up 25 per cent of all female homicides in this country. According to a 2015 report by the RCMP indigenous women are more likely than nonindigenous women in the Canadian provinces to experience violent victimization. The same study also shows that our province's homicide rate for indigenous women was more than seven times that of nonindigenous women between 2001 and 2015.

Mr. Speaker, those are unacceptable and horrific numbers. Too many families have had to bury their loved ones, and many still don't have the answers. I cannot fathom the pain that comes from losing a loved one in this manner.

I attended vigils in Calgary and Edmonton on October 4, and as we gathered in support of one another and paid our respects through song and prayer, I was overwhelmed by the strength and resilience of the families of the missing and murdered loved ones. On our way to the march on Stephen Avenue Mall I met one young mother whose best friend's body was found in the North Saskatchewan River just last year. Her young friend had travelled to the vigil with her young child all the way from Saddle Lake to honour her friend Lindsay Marie Jackson and to tell her that she's not forgotten and still very much loved.

The high numbers of indigenous females who have been victimized by violent crime is a tragedy that we must all recognize and address if we're truly on the path to reconciliation. We must acknowledge the injustices that have been committed against indigenous people.

In June I attended the national inquiry's closing ceremony in Ottawa, where I received the final report of the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls. It was there that I connected with several families who had the courage and strength to appear in person, and I became acquainted with one mother who sat near me. I told her that Alberta would take the report, all 1,200 pages of it, and our government would work to address the calls for justice. That's why I'm honoured to be part of the government that is committed to renewing its partnership with indigenous people in the pursuit of reconciliation and to address gender-based violence. We recognize that this is no small feat, and we must approach reconciliation with humility and understanding. I call on all Albertans to stand against violence towards indigenous women, girls, 2SLGBTQQIA people.

In that spirit, I present this beautiful handcrafted red dress, which honours those loved ones who no longer walk among us but whose energy and spirit come to guide us. Emily Taylor, if you could please rise. She's the artist who made this dress for us here today. Let's welcome her. Thank you, Emily.

I'm pleased to tell her and all the honoured guests that the public will be able to view this dress and read about the meaning behind it in a display at the Federal Building, just north of here on the grounds of the Legislature. The countless indigenous women and girls and 2SLGBTQQIA people who have been lost will never be forgotten. Their memories will be honoured and help drive us as we work towards creating an Alberta where all indigenous lives are valued and safe.

Thank you again, Mr. Speaker, fellow ministers, esteemed colleagues, and all our honoured guests for allowing me to do this today and to rise in the Chamber on this very important topic.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to reply.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the minister for his words and for accepting the gift of a red dress from the Awo Taan Healing Lodge in Calgary, the creation of artist Emily Taylor. I know all members of this House support the arrival and display of a red dress at the Alberta Legislature. It's a powerful symbol of the indigenous women and girls who have been murdered or gone missing across this country. The original red dress project began as an art project by Métis artist Jamie Black, a remembrance of the murdered and missing. But soon the symbol turned to protest. Organically, indigenous people across the country adopted the red dress as a cry for justice and a call for a national inquiry.

A major element of this tragedy has been the indifference and inaction of Canadian and provincial governments, even as evidence of an unfolding genocide mounted. Indeed, the federal government that our current Premier was a member of displayed no interest in pursuing the truth of this national tragedy. But here we are today, and I'm grateful that we have come such a distance as to display a red dress in our Legislature.

In my time as Minister of Indigenous Relations I was graced with the opportunity to meet many family members of murdered and missing women and girls and, indeed, of missing men and boys as well. The pain and trauma that has been experienced by these families is unbearable and impossible to fully imagine. What we can only do is stand with these families and ensure that this genocide stops now, today, ensure that words turn to action. The threat to these families now is that they will not be listened to. I've often seen women wearing the red dress also apply a red hand to their face to symbolize the silence that indigenous women heard as their sisters and mothers and daughters and nieces and cousins and friends died violently or simply vanished.

Today is a milestone. It's a time to remember the thousands of people who were lost in this genocide. It's a moment to remember that it is still happening and there's a great deal of work ahead and a great number of painful truths to confront.

Members' Statements

The Chair: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis is rising to make a statement.

Advocacy for Alberta's Energy Industry

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are pleased to welcome anyone to our province. My riding of Banff-Kananaskis welcomes over 4 million tourists every year who come to see our breathtaking landscapes. For those folks that travel around the world to visit, we are happy to showcase our beauty and introduce them to our world-class energy industry, but oftentimes there seems to be some miscommunication.

Alberta produces its energy to the highest global standards of labour rights and environmental oversight while investing huge sums of money into technology that will help reduce the 1.6 per cent of global carbon emissions that Canada is responsible for. LNG produced by the Canadian energy sector will help developing nations such as India and China reduce their dependencies on coal and replace it with cleaner energy, which will help the world meet the Paris targets. Alberta is achieving all of this real progress while working alongside our indigenous partners and creating new opportunities for their communities to create lasting jobs.

Albertans welcome all of those who are passionate about our future, but we ask that they look at the whole picture and approach us with an open mind. Alberta is not part of the problem, but it is one of the only energy-producing jurisdictions that is part of the solution. We must recognize that as long the world demands energy, it will be supplied. Alberta is second to none on the responsibility of our energy production. We must displace energy produced by other nations who have deplorable environmental and human rights records with responsible energy from Alberta. The Iranian, Saudi, and Venezuelan petrostates will continue to supply the global energy network if we do not get our oil to market. With the right leadership, Albertan can and will continue to meet the needs of the global economy while utilizing environmental standards that will make a real difference on the global stage, and we're proud to do it.

As we continue to welcome all people to our province with open arms and the hospitality that we are known for, we must also be proud to tell our story. We will do so with respect, and we will speak with one voice to condemn anyone who descends into harassment or threats of violence as this is never acceptable. But I hope that today we can all stand together to tell the story of Alberta's innovative, responsible, and world-leading energy.

Commercial Driver Training and Testing Standards

Ms Renaud: The tragedy of the Humboldt Broncos bus crash continues to be felt across Canada, and it hits especially close to home in St. Albert. Four young men who lost their lives in that crash grew up and played hockey in our community. Their names were Logan Hunter, Jaxon Joseph, Conner Lukan, and Stephen Wack. In the wake of tragedy, St. Albert came together to support their families and honour their memories. St. Albert has raised over $450,000 to set up scholarships in the names of these four players.

That's why I and many of my constituents were profoundly disappointed to learn about the UCP's deliberate decision to exempt thousands of semi-truck and bus drivers from long-overdue safety standards introduced by the province in the wake of this crash. Because of the UCP's choice to cater to special interests rather than enforce the measures needed to prevent another tragedy like Humboldt, up to 6,800 truck and bus drivers could dodge these safety requirements. This decision places Albertans at risk and is disrespectful to families who lost their loved ones in that crash.

I've been contacted by the St. Albert families of the Humboldt players regarding this decision, and I'll share some of their words in this House.

I never thought he would die on a rural road in Saskatchewan, on a safe bus with his brothers . . . [The] reason for [this] exemption is about the money! . . . the road is the road . . . no one should be entitled to exemptions.

I am writing to [ask you to ensure] that the provincial government DOES NOT relax any rules for Class 1 Drivers . . . Please don't let our son, and many others die for nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I know that consultation is not top of mind for this government, but I ask my UCP colleagues to please listen to the St. Albert families and immediately reverse their decision to roll back safety standards. Some red tape exists for good reasons.

Thank you.

Eddie Maurice and Rural Crime

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's a stretch to say that when you mention the words "rural crime," in many cases the name Eddie Maurice immediately comes up in the same conversation.

On Saturday, February 24, 2018, at around 5 o'clock in the morning two criminals trespassed onto Eddie's farm and were in the process of burglarizing his property. As any father and husband would reasonably do, Eddie stood his ground to protect his property and his family. He shouted for the men to leave, but ultimately it took not one but two warning shots fired into the ground to force them to flee his property. Subsequently, after waiting for two hours for the RCMP to respond, the first thing that happened when they arrived: Eddie was arrested and charged with multiple firearms-related charges. Eventually he was acquitted, but the fact that he was charged at all has had major consequences.

I will explain why I feel this is so important. The reality of the situation in rural Alberta is that people have lost faith in the system and they're now stopping and not phoning 911. So when the members opposite want to talk about statistics that suggest a decrease in rural crime, I'll be quite clear. Rural crime is still on the rise. Our rural residents need more support. Now, to make matters even worse, Eddie Maurice is now being sued for $100,000 by the criminal who burglarized his property. It's absurd to think that this innocent, honest, hard-working, tax-paying resident is now being revictimized by the same criminal. But Eddie has made it clear that he will not back down to criminals on his property or in the courtroom.

It's time for everyone in this House to realize that rural crime is at a critical point. We need to provide real support to our rural communities so that we can gain back the confidence necessary. So while the members opposite want to waste time spreading misinformation about this government's plan to provide more support for our rural communities, I'll be on this side of the House working with my colleagues to support rural Alberta, Eddie Maurice, and his family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West has a statement to make.

Logan Boulet, Organ Donation, and Traffic Safety

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to say a few words about two great Albertans, the Boulet family. Toby and Bernadine Boulet are constituents of Lethbridge-West. They are decent, honest, plain-spoken Albertans who have endured a heartbreaking tragedy. Their son Logan was a fine young man. As many Albertans know, Logan was catastrophically injured in the Humboldt Broncos bus disaster.

The Boulets were following the bus that night in their car, and they searched through the wreckage at the crash site before learning that their son had been rushed to hospital, where he would later pass away. Logan had filled out his donor card. Six people benefited from Logan's understanding, even as a young man, of the life-changing, positive effects he could have on his fellow Canadians. Logan's sense of individual responsibility for our collective well-being prompted what's been called the Logan Boulet effect, with more than 100,000 Canadians signing up to be organ donors. I know that not a day passes without Toby and Bernadine feeling Logan's absence. The Boulets have worked incredibly hard to create hope in the midst of their loss. Many Albertans now recognize April 7 as Green Shirt Day to honour organ donation. I was honoured to take some time away from the spring election campaign to wear my green shirt and salute the Boulet family.

Mr. Speaker, I have seen the powerful effect of organ donation, even in people very close to me. My own partner was a living donor to his brother, and I saw someone's life change for the better literally overnight as a result of an organ transplant. The Boulet family has set an extraordinary example in advocating for organ donation. But now, unfortunately, they have to advocate for trucking safety standards and stand up to a government that seems more interested in powerful lobbyists and people who want to turn a buck off lax safety standards. So I have to say this to the Premier and his Minister of Transportation: the Boulet family of Lethbridge and Logan Boulet's memory deserve better.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Commercial Driver Training and Testing Standards

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans and, indeed, Canadians from coast to coast were devastated by the Humboldt Broncos crash. Kids who had their whole lives ahead of them, families turned upside down in a flash. When we learned that the driver of the truck had no business being behind the wheel, Albertans were angry, so we made the highest standard safety training mandatory to make sure this could never happen again. These families are here today. To the Premier: can he explain why his government doesn't think every single truck driver or bus driver on our roads should be safe?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, of course with all Albertans and Canadians we grieve the loss of those young men and those who were injured in that terrible, tragic accident. Of course this government and all Albertans believe that anybody driving a truck on our roads should be properly qualified according to the highest standards, which is why our government will continue with the implementation of the mandatory entry-level training for class 1 and 2 drivers. However, unfortunately the previous government cut in half the number of driver examiners available, creating an enormous backlog. That's why they provided an extension for farmers and school bus drivers, which we'll hopefully be able to close as soon as the backlog . . .

Ms Notley: Well, in fact, this Premier's government has said that it will not require 6,800 drivers who obtained their licence in the period between October and March to complete the new MELT test; 6,800, and it only takes one to destroy a family. Right now this government is allowing 6,800 new truck drivers on the roads with no enhanced safety training or testing at all. Please, through you, Mr. Speaker, will the Premier reconsider his decision and direct his minister to ensure all drivers have MELT training or testing?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, in point of fact, the previous government exempted from the MELT requirement over 150,000 class 1 and class 2 truck drivers on our roads. Is she proposing that we retroactively apply that new standard to drivers who have been driving for decades with a perfect safety record, including the 150,000 that they exempted?

I'll tell you what we are also taking action on. I've asked the minister of immigration to investigate the troubling revelations from last week's Globe and Mail story about the apparent abuse of the temporary foreign worker program with respect to class 1 drivers. We intend to crack down on any such abuse, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Notley: Well, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Premier is not being appropriately briefed because those 6,800 truck drivers I referred to don't have the experience that he referenced.

In addition, this government is also planning to fully exempt heavy-load farm truck drivers and, if you can believe it, Mr. Speaker, school bus drivers. Somehow the safety of schoolchildren is too expensive to ensure. To the Premier: will you commit to supporting an emergency debate today on all aspects of this issue so we can ensure the best plans are in place to ensure public safety and to prevent another tragedy like the one in Humboldt?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it's regrettable to continue to see a pattern of misrepresentation from the other side of the House. I have today a letter from several mayors objecting to the Leader of the Opposition's "dishonest and unbecoming," misleading comments about their position on a different matter.

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what the leader of the NDP just said is completely false. In fact, as I've said, the mandatory entry-level training requirement will be mandatory going forward. The NDP decided to exempt over 150,000 drivers from that, but we're also going to deal with something they didn't, which is the apparent abuse of the temporary foreign worker program that has put unsafe drivers on our roads.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

School Bus Driver Training and Testing Standards

Ms Hoffman: When parents put their kids on the bus in the morning, they shouldn't have to worry if their kids will be safe when they get to school or not. Nothing is more important than the safety of our children, yet the UCP government rushes to roll back safety standards for school buses. Did the Premier know and approve of his minister's decision?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member, I believe, knows, the previous government had given an extended period of time for school bus drivers to get their MELT requirements so that the school boards could get the kids to school, because they wouldn't have been able to get school bus drivers hired and in place on time. Now, the NDP government actually gave an extension. We extended that extension, too, at the request of the school boards, and many of them were happy. I'm not sure how the kids would have got to school in September had we not done that.

Ms Hoffman: I remember where I was when the Humboldt crash happened, and I know that the parents in the gallery remember where they were, too. I attended the funeral in the Humboldt arena alongside families across the country. Our country lost its breath. We don't want this to happen again, and we must take steps to ensure that. Why won't the Premier take steps to make sure that our kids are safe on the bus?

Mr. McIver: You know what, Mr. Speaker? I've never thought of safety as a partisan issue, and I still don't think of it as that today. Everybody in this country cares about the families and victims of the Humboldt tragedy. That has not changed. It will never change. We all care about safety. The previous government, rather than throwing stones, should perhaps think about being a little bit helpful in this endeavour. On this side we will move forward to try to make the roads as safe as possible because that's what really matters.

Ms Hoffman: The UCP government originally said that they'd pay for the necessary school bus driver training, but now they won't, so inexperienced and unqualified operators can take a bus full of children on the highway. To the Premier: what is the value to you of a bus filled with children and their driver?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, there's nothing more valuable than a life, whether it's a child or an adult or anybody else, and certainly the lives lost and injured in the Broncos tragedy are no exception.

We take safety very seriously. The previous government had school buses in 61 divisions, with the same training, taking kids to school for four years in a row, and that was the right thing to do because they were trained for the licences they had. That hasn't changed. Over time the MELT standard will be put in place and kept in place because we care about safety as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has risen.

Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. Mr. Premier, when you were in Ottawa, multiple requests were made for your government to initiate an inquiry into murdered and missing indigenous women and girls. The response from your Prime Minister on behalf of your government was, quote, um, it isn't really on our radar, to be honest, unquote. Consequently, it waited until your government was fired by Canadians before an inquiry was instituted, after calls from the Alberta NDP and others. Mr. Premier, can you please explain to the House why you failed to respond with an inquiry for so long?

Mr. Wilson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to have the ladies from Awo Taan here today, showing that we are working hard on this very important subject. Our government is committed to moving towards true reconciliation, that will empower indigenous Albertans to take charge of their own destiny. Part of those calls for justice is the final report of the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls and the call for self-determination in the pursuit of economic and social development, and that is exactly what we're pursuing. I presented Bill 14 – and the House has approved third reading – the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation Act, through which indigenous communities are able to purchase an equity stake in natural resource projects.

Mr. Feehan: Mr. Premier, I wouldn't stand to defend my record if mine was the same as yours.

Tanya Kappo, a leader of the Idle No More movement and a member of the Sturgeon Lake Cree Nation, said about the Premier's past government, quote, the Conservative government does not believe First Nations people have rights and make their profound lack of respect painfully clear. End quote. To the Premier. There's a lot of mistrust with how you have handled these important matters in the past. How can our First Nations people really trust you at this point?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations has the call.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like I said, this is a very important issue to us. You can see that today. I've personally spent time meeting with the organizations from Alberta that had standing in the final report, the Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women and the Awo Taan healing society. I've also sat down with the hon. minister of status of women to read the report in its entirety and discuss our plan to begin to focus on the calls for justice that will have the greatest impact on ensuring that indigenous women are treated with dignity, humanity, and respect, that may be taken for granted by others. Our government has been very active in reviewing this report and creating plans for real action on protecting indigenous ...

2:00

Mr. Feehan: I think the Premier's silence on this is deafening.

The Conservative federal government failed hard, but there is a chance for this Premier to make it right. There are 231 recommendations in the final report on the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls. These are to be followed through on by provincial and federal governments. To the Premier: have you read the entire report, and if so, can you please detail which recommendations you will follow through on first and when that work will be completed? Please be specific.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Myself and the minister of status of women have thoroughly read the report, thoroughly read every page, and are working hard on this to come up with a plan. I can tell you that that's why the ladies are here today. I took action on this plan. I said that I would. On page 199, if you look at sections 15.1 through 15.8, you will see that part of it is just making recognition and standing up for murdered and missing indigenous women, and that's what we're doing.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Electric Power System

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Price spikes and rolling blackouts: that's the legacy of Conservative governments in this province when it comes to our electricity system. We know that this Premier is moving to kill the capacity market introduced by our government and supported by the Alberta Electric System Operator. This decision will create uncertainty for consumers and put them at risk of further price spikes. To the Premier: why are people's power bills the latest casualty in your bid to make friends with big corporations?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, we announced earlier in the summer that we are staying with the energy-only market after extensive consultation with numerous stakeholders, including the renewables stakeholders, who unanimously supported our desire to stay with the energy-only market. That will ensure the most reliable, the most stable, and the most affordable electricity in the province.

Mr. Sabir: We know that this Premier rushed to give a $4.5 billion handout to corporations, and they are not creating jobs. They have stalled on all other efforts to support working Albertans and their families. To the Premier: will you stand in this House right now and pledge that power bills will not go up as a result of your actions?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, that side of the House, that government, drove the electricity policy into a situation where we had a $1.4 billion boondoggle with the return of power purchase agreements. That boondoggle is going to be paid for for a very long time by consumers and taxpayers in Alberta. If anything is driving up the cost of electricity, it's the actions of the previous government.

Mr. Sabir: I'm also hearing that hundreds of people are being laid off at the Alberta Electric System Operator as this government rushes to kill the capacity market and abolish any attempts to move to renewable sources of energy. To the Premier: how many people are being fired at Alberta Electric System Operator, and is the only justification you have found to fire them that they don't agree with your government's policies?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, that's a completely ridiculous statement. That's a completely ridiculous statement. We have stayed with the energy-only market after extensive consultation with stakeholders across the province who have said that the capacity market was not going to attract investment, was not going to produce reliable and affordable electricity. We have taken steps to keep electricity rates down for consumers in the province and to keep taxpayer rates down, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The southwest Calgary ring road is a significant project for my constituents in Calgary-West. The Calgary ring road is part of a larger east-west trade passage that will enhance access to markets, of course, out of Alberta. Now, given that the previous government committed to financing 60 per cent of the construction, can the Minister of Transportation please update the House on whether the project will remain on budget?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My officials tell me that we are currently on budget with this project. An agreement was signed with Mountain View Partners, who will finance 45 per cent, or approximately $625 million; 55 per cent will be funded through a P3, or about $725 million. I believe we're on track.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the construction of the southwest Calgary ring road involved the transfer of land from Tsuut'ina Nation and given that the agreement requires construction to be completed by next year or the land will be transferred back to the First Nation, can the minister please update the House on the current status of the ring road and if it will be completed on schedule?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, my staff tells me that we are on schedule. We will have the road open on time. Of course, those listening might want to know that the part of the project not on the Tsuut'ina land is scheduled to be completed for a full ring road in May 2022, and so far so good.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the project is a significant investment for the province, involving the negotiation of land transfer and several public-private partnerships, can the minister please update the House on how the Calgary ring road fits into the broader goal of economic development for the province?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The project currently supports more than 3,700 jobs. There are 49 bridges, 14 interchanges. It will create 101 kilometres of free-flow traffic when it's done and help provide market access in and out of the Calgary area to the world, essentially. It's part of our commitment during the election to support jobs, the economy, pipelines and to make life better for Albertans, and we intend to deliver on all of those promises.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West has a question.

Postsecondary Tuition and Scholarships

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recommendation 8 of the Premier's blue-ribbon panel report calls for the Minister of Advanced Education to “achieve a revenue mix comparable to that in British Columbia and Ontario” for Alberta’s postsecondary schools. Alberta’s schools currently get about 18 per cent of their revenue from tuition, so I have a simple question for the minister. Can you please tell the House what share of their budget postsecondary institutions in B.C. and Ontario get from tuition?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of postsecondary education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, over the last few months I’ve spent a lot of time engaging with students and speaking to students when it comes to their needs and priorities regarding tuition, and it’s clear that the one thing that students are really looking for, which has been lacking over the last several years, is predictability. The NDP’s policy provided no predictability. Their ad hoc approach, a fly-by-night approach, deciding to freeze tuition on one day and then making decisions about what to do the next day didn’t provide that predictability, and we’ve heard that loud and clear from our students. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will have order during the answering of questions.

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, wrong answer, right? The correct answer is almost double the tuition, twice as much.

Given that the blue-ribbon panel specifically says “less reliance on government grants, more funding from tuition” and given that we all know that the tuition hike is being planned by this government to help cover off this Premier’s $4.5 billion corporate handout, to the minister: just how close to double are you going to hike tuition to force our postsecondary students to pay for your big fat corporate giveaway?

The Speaker: I might caution the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West on the use of preambles. I think we can all agree that was an example of one.

Mr. Nicolaides: Mr. Speaker, the claim that there’ll be a doubling of tuition is just more of the same from that side of the House, as we’ve seen time and time again over the last few months. No surprise. More fearmongering. We’ve been spending our time and I’ve been spending my time speaking with students and talking to students about what their priorities are. When it comes to the tuition freeze that the former government imposed, you know what students told me? They told me they didn’t want the tuition freeze and they didn’t ask for it, so I don’t know where the NDP decided to get the ideas for their . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. We will have order.

The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that students often turn to scholarships as well to pay for their education and given that this minister attempted to scuttle programs like the Rutherford scholarship and only changed his mind when he got caught, to the minister. There are still many scholarships stuck in limbo right now because of you. Will you admit that there are more cuts coming to scholarships in this budget this year, or can you fix the problem?

Mr. Nicolaides: Mr. Speaker, let’s be absolutely clear. The problem that we inherited with scholarships was because of that side of the House. Under their watch they began a scholarship transformation project that was mismanaged, extensive time periods of delay, no decisions being given to the department as to what to do. We inherited a broken system. We fixed it. Furthermore, we’re committed to providing opportunities for our students to access postsecondary education, which is why I was proud in September to announce a new scholarship for high school students to enter the trades. That’s our record.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South has a question.

Investing in Canada Infrastructure Program

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier’s so-called blue-ribbon panel report recommends that the Ministry of Infrastructure should, quote, make better use of the investing in Canada infrastructure program, or ICIP. Apparently, the decision of the Infrastructure minister is to make no use of ICIP, and he sent a letter to municipalities to that effect on September 24. Many of these local projects have their cost share in place, they are ready to proceed, and they would actually create badly needed jobs, unlike this government’s 4 and a half billion dollar corporate handout, but the Infrastructure minister sits idle. My question is simple. To the minister: why?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure is rising to answer.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. The Member for Edmonton-South: what he said was incorrect. Actually, there are many ICIP projects we have already approved, which were shovel ready and which would create economic activity and help the local municipalities. We approved those projects, and we’ll continue to work with the federal government. When the new government is in place, we will work with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the minister, that’s not what his own letter said.

Given that ICIP is a bilateral legal agreement signed between Alberta and Canada and is used to fund critical infrastructure projects and given that while this government has rushed to give billions away in corporate handouts, they seem completely willing to let ICIP wait, to the minister: can you please inform this House of which critical infrastructure projects are being shelved or completely abandoned as a result of his poor management?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the intake for ICIP applications was closed as of July 31, and it was oversubscribed. We had about 712 expressions of interest. We’re going to review all of them in due course and approve the projects based on the merit, not based on the ideology like the previous government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m sure municipalities will be glad to hear they have to wait in due course.

Now, given that former Bank of Canada governor David Dodge reminds us that the government should build infrastructure when economic demand is weak, both to create jobs and get good value for tax dollars, and given that the government’s 4 and a half billion dollar corporate giveaway hasn’t boosted economic demand at all, is it the intention of the minister to go back to the old PC ways of waiting to build when demand is strong and repeat their legacy of delayed and overpriced projects?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, in our campaign commitment platform we clearly stated that we’re going to build key infrastructure projects that will deliver prosperity for all Albertans, and our government is on track to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Vaping

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are raising concerns over the health risks of vaping. It's been identified in short-term respiratory difficulties and complications in a few cases, actually growing numbers of cases, leading to death in the United States, and it's unknown what the long-term effects of vaping really are. To the Minister of Health: given the reports of people getting seriously sick from vaping and some even dying from it, do we need to act more urgently and ban vaping?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, to date we have had no identified cases in Alberta, but we are monitoring the situation closely. If the chief medical officer of health of Alberta identifies an urgent risk, I will support her in taking any action which is required. That could be a public health advisory. It could be a product recall. It could be working with law enforcement to address illicit products. But I emphasize that as of today we do not know what is causing the cases. We simply have no basis to intervene today.

The Speaker: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that other provinces are actively monitoring and continuously discovering cases of serious vaping-related lung injury and disease and given that youth seem to be the largest demographic beginning to vape so youth may be most at risk of vaping-induced respiratory health risks, Minister, what is this government doing to reduce the number of vaping products sold to youth?

Mr. Shandro: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question was: what are we doing to reduce the number of products? We've started a review of what's known as the Tobacco and Smoking Reduction Act. The Member for Calgary-Klein is leading that review. We're very happy to have that member engage with interest groups to be able to get information on what gaps we have in the current legislation and what can be done going forward to fill in those gaps. We're looking forward to that engagement being completed.

The Speaker: The hon. member for his second supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer and for having recently announced a review of the tobacco legislation. That's what I want to ask about next, in a way. Given that Alberta is one of the last provinces in the country to introduce legislation on vaping and given that other provinces have taken measures to do so, for example banning flavoured nicotine products, can the Minister of Health commit to enacting similar measures here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. Actually, those are already taking place here in Alberta. On September 5 . . .

Ms Hoffman: You're welcome.

Mr. Shandro: I believe that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora was not the minister on September 5.

On September 5 Alberta's chief medical officer of health, Dr. Hinshaw, made suspected, serious, vaping-related illness a notifiable condition, as it's known under the Public Health Act, Mr. Speaker. That means that any physician who sees a patient who meets that definition must report the case.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Early Learning and Child Care Centres

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Children's Services why her government won't commit support for the affordable child care pilot program. Given the minister's response I can now see why the Member for Highwood doesn't understand that our $25 per day child care pilot program isn't about picking winners and losers. In fact, his own government is picking winners and losers by refusing to expand the program to all providers and all Albertans. To the Minister of Children's Services: access to quality, affordable child care shouldn't be a lottery. It should be something that families in Alberta can depend on. Will you commit to expanding this important program?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services to answer.

Ms Schulz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can understand that it must be frustrating, when you ran on a platform focused on $25 a day child care, that Albertans chose to prioritize jobs, getting our economy back on track, making sure people could provide for their families and that our economy was strong enough to support those who need it most. We will review the pilot project, and I will continue to listen to Albertans' priorities when it comes to quality child care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister might need to be reminded about what her responsibility as the Minister of Children's Services is.

Given that quality and affordable child care is a win-win situation for children, working Albertans, and our economy and that the Conference Board of Canada has said that every dollar invested in child care earns at least a $2 return, again to the same minister: have you considered the data in your review of the program? I can provide a copy if you want to learn about the responsibilities of your ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said a number of times in this House, we are awaiting the report on the pilot project, but Albertans told me this summer that their concerns with the pilot are that it did not track income, it did not track need, it did not track employment, and it did not track wait-lists. What we are going to focus on is quality child care, affordable child care for those who need it, and accessibility to child care across Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud for her second supplemental with no preamble.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the evidence is clear and that parents are pleading with the minister to provide certainty for the program so they know if they need to quit their jobs to care for their child and given the research shows that this program not only helps parents, improves child development, and is the key to unlocking Alberta's economic potential, again to the minister:

are you aware that by failing to support affordable child care for all Albertans, the only people losing here are Alberta families? Are you happy that while corporations are raking in your government's handouts, families are struggling to pay the bills?

Ms Schulz: Speaking of working families, Mr. Speaker, the NDP legacy is 170,000 people impacted by job loss and $100 billion in debt that isn't going to support the families who need it. The member opposite has also been fearmongering and telling the public that the $25 a day centres are closing, so I want to be clear because I know that no one in this House would want to mislead the public. The vast majority of these centres were providing high-quality child care long before the pilot began. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member . . . [interjections] Order, hon. members. The Leader of the Official Opposition will come to order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows would like to ask a question.

School Head Covering Policies

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week we learned that an 11-year-old boy, Emmelle, was told by his teachers at Christ the King elementary school in Edmonton to remove his do-rag. This piece of clothing is culturally significant to Emmelle and his family. When Emmelle's mother raised her concerns in the principal's office, she was banned from the school for the rest of the year. Is the Minister of Education aware of this incident, and has she reached out to Emmelle's family to make this situation right?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education has risen.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Anyone feeling discriminated against based on their race: it is absolutely unacceptable, and I have asked for a full report from Edmonton Catholic schools on this issue.

Mr. Deol: Given that Emmelle's mother, Una, was told that her 11-year-old boy's headgear was gang-related and given that she was told that we don't wear anything on our heads in this school, does the Minister of Education support this school's assertion that no head coverings should be worn in classrooms regardless of their cultural or religious significance?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I have to reiterate that any discrimination based on race is totally unacceptable. I'm asking for a full report, and I await that report.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Una believes that she and her son were the victims of racial profiling and given this minister's terrible record of support for minorities in Alberta schools, will this minister launch an investigation into what exactly occurred at Christ the King elementary and report the findings back to the House?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer would be yes, I will be asking for a full report. I have said so three times now, and I will be happy to share the results when I get them.

Thank you.

Natural Gas Industry Concerns

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, for decades Medicine Hat, or the Gas City, as it was so aptly termed, has extracted and produced natural gas, amassing over $600 million in revenue straight to the city. Our city has built a community around resource production. However, last month it was announced that 2,000 natural gas wells will begin the process of shutting down. To the Associate Minister of Natural Gas: what is this government doing to ensure that the city of Medicine Hat will not have to shutter its remaining 500 to 700 natural gas wells?

An Hon. Member: Order MSI.

Mr. Dang: Corporate giveaways.

The Speaker: Order. Members, including the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, will come to order.

Mr. Schmidt: Yeah, South West. Take that.

The Speaker: Or Edmonton-South.

The Associate Minister of Natural Gas.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are aware of the city of Medicine Hat's decision to shut some of their wells. This is one more nail in the coffin on the previous government's mishandling of this critical file. Now, as you know, on April 16 we were elected on an overwhelming mandate to stand up and fight for the energy industry. That's what we're doing.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the city of Medicine Hat cited extremely low prices as a reason for the 2,000 of its natural gas wells being deemed uneconomic and given that Alberta has had consistent price volatility over recent years with minimal relief and, incredibly, the spot price of natural gas has actually been negative at times, again to the associate minister: could the recent changes to gas storage on the NGTL system help alleviate some of these issues felt by the good people in Medicine Hat?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Natural Gas.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't be more pleased to announce that the changes to TC's protocol to storage has in fact started to alleviate some of the pressure being felt by our natural gas producers. In fact, since this was implemented on October 1, natural gas has been trading above $2, which is something that hasn't happened in a long time. We committed to reducing price volatility. That's exactly what we're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many young families residing in Medicine Hat rely heavily on the jobs and the income created through its historic natural gas sector and given that Medicine Hat has access to resources and over a century of experience and given that this government was elected on an overwhelming mandate to bring investment back to the province, again to the associate minister: what else is your government doing to attract and assure investors that Alberta's natural gas sector is the best place to invest?

The Speaker: I recognize the Associate Minister of Natural Gas.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is an energy-driven province. Quite frankly, it's nothing short of embarrassing how much investment has left our province thanks to the members across the aisle. Now, in the six months since forming government, our office has taken action on 26 of the 48 recommendations of the Kvisle report. Our government has done more in six months on this file than the previous administration did in four years.

Canadian Energy Centre

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, did the Minister of Finance or any of his officials, prior to establishing the energy war room, talk with the Auditor General about his role with respect to oversight of this corporation, and did anyone consult with the Ethics Commissioner on how conflicts of interest must be managed in this highly unusual instance when ministers are directors of government corporations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can certainly declare to this House that I have declared all of my interests with the Ethics Commissioner, and I've been cleared to serve in the role that I do today. The opposition would like to distract us from their record of failing Albertans, creating a business environment where investment has fled this province by the billions, racking up a debt that's over $60 billion, and leaving us in a situation where tens of thousands of Albertans are looking for work.

Ms Phillips: Given that conflict of interest legislation exists to ensure that ministers do not exercise inappropriate influence to line their own pockets, will the minister state for the record that all contracts executed by this corporation, including sole-source contracts, will be disclosed, and if not, should Albertans assume that this is because these contracts will be given to the friends of the UCP or to firms gathering data and using government resources for partisan gain?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, there are multiple, multiple measures to ensure full financial transparency in the Canadian Energy Centre. For instance, the centre is a provincial corporation; it will be funded by provincial grants. Under the terms of those grants, a budget to the ministry is required in 30 days, a business plan in 60 days, and there will be monthly – monthly – expenditure reports. All of those will be subject to public knowledge.

Ms Phillips: Given that the stated aim of this corporation is to make war on political enemies, can we assume that part of the reason that it has been so difficult to get answers to the questions about transparency and disclosure is that the ministers don't want to tell Albertans who they are giving $30 million to because the plan they are hiding from Albertans involves giving taxpayer money to Russian troll farms, far-right meme factories, and offspring of Cambridge Analytica?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what is shocking is that the Official Opposition continues to play these games. Even after mayors have sent in letters asking them – and I quote the mayors, not myself, calling them “dishonest.” It's ridiculous.

The Minister of Energy has been very, very clear in answering the transparency questions. The member has asked about the Conflicts of Interest Act, which is overseen by an independent officer of this Legislature, the Ethics Commissioner. As the Finance minister has said and as the Energy minister has said and as I am telling you now, Mr. Speaker, and this House, this was cleared by the Ethics Commissioner, who is in charge of the Conflicts of Interest Act, not who the current member is referring to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Coal Workforce Transition Program

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been recently reported that workers who should be eligible for the coal workforce transition program are experiencing endless delays and runarounds while trying to access these important benefits. Some workers impacted by Stephen Harper's coal phase-out first applied in April, and many suspect that these delays mean the government is planning to cut these programs. To the minister of labour: can you explain why processing times for this vital initiative have skyrocketed, and will you promise that this critical program won't be cut as you work to pay for your $4.5 billion handout to big corporations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I answer the specific question, I have to call out the members on the other side about their continued misrepresentation on the $4.5 billion claim. Respected University of Calgary economist Trevor Tombe has said that this claim is “not accurate.” In fact, when the previous government was in power, they increased corporate taxes by 20 per cent, and revenues went down. On this issue this claim, the $4.5 billion, is not accurate, and the NDP have no credibility on this issue.

Ms Gray: Given that coal workers will be reading these answers in Hansard and watching this government and given that the point of the coal workforce transition program is to avoid unfairly burdening Alberta's hard-working energy workers, who have tirelessly provided our province with vital energy, can the minister explain why he's okay with his government rushing to hand billions to corporations but is sitting on his hands when it comes to providing coal workers with the financial supports they need to keep the heat running and the lights on in their own homes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to clarify that the coal worker transition program applications continue to be processed. Anyone who has been approved for support will continue to receive it. I'd also like to point out that this program was established as a result of the disastrous policies of the previous government phasing out coal despite the industry moving to natural gas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this Premier was a minister in Stephen Harper's federal cabinet, which was known for increasingly opaque and inscrutable budgets and for hiding important financial details and transparency from the people of Canada, can the minister assure us that when the government's budget is released on October 24, the full fate of the coal workforce transition program will be made clear, or will the UCP continue to delay providing services and information to Albertans?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as indicated, we continue to process applications under the coal worker transition program. Everything will be made clear when the budget is presented. But I need to focus on what our government was elected here to do. It was to create jobs. On the other side, when they were in government, they oversaw over 170,000 job losses. We are focused on putting policies in place to attract investment back into this province and create jobs for Albertans. That's what we were elected to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Affordable Housing for Seniors

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Meridian foundation is a large third-party organization in my riding that provides funding for housing for seniors all over Spruce Grove and Stony Plain. Before leaving power, the NDP announced a $6 million grant to build this new facility, called 17 Folkstone Place. Now, this was to be in co-ordination with funding from both communities in the tri region as well as the federal government. However, at the same time, the Meridian foundation was forced to pay a large part of this cost out of their own pocket. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: will this project continue to be funded?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. The Folkstone manor project will continue to be funded. I'm very pleased to share that the groundbreaking is taking place this Friday in Stony Plain. This project will support more modern, affordable housing for seniors with low incomes living in and around the Stony Plain area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for the answer. Given that in the last 13 years of its operation the Meridian foundation has never had a vacancy and given that the executive director of the Meridian foundation has stated that there is a large and growing need for housing for those aged 50 or older, can the Minister of Seniors and Housing commit to the people of Stony Plain to a firm timeline for this project, and if so, will new residents of the housing unit be able to move in in 2020?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member. The operator of Folkstone manor would determine the timeline in which the residents are able to move in. Our government is proud to support this new affordable housing project. The groundbreaking at Folkstone manor is a step in providing safe and affordable housing for Albertans, especially for those who live in the area of Stony Plain and Spruce Grove. It will enable them to continue to live safely and independently.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Turton: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that organizations like the Meridian foundation continue to do incredible work in ensuring that seniors' housing is widely available and given that seniors' housing organizations are often major employers in their ridings and given that tax and regulatory changes deeply affect these organizations, can the minister speak to what kind of assistance private organizations can expect from this government as they seek to provide sustainable and affordable care options for seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Folkstone manor is an excellent example of a partnership, the provincial government and the local civil society organization working together on behalf of Albertans. This kind of partnership makes life better for Albertans and makes our province a better place to live, to work, and to retire. Our government will continue to explore the expanded use of a P3 partnership that enables individuals and families, including seniors, to reside in their chosen communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville has a question.

Skilled Trades Labour Supply

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are over 3,000 skilled workers in the trades and related occupations retiring each year. These are highly rewarding, high-tech, in-demand occupations that can provide endless opportunities. The UCP made many promises in the campaign that aimed at increasing the number of students entering the trades in an effort to curb this decline. To the Minister of Advanced Education. You recently announced $10 million in funding for Women Building Futures. How will this investment help curb the decline in skilled trades workers in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of postsecondary education.

Mr. Nicolaidis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. She is indeed correct. We made a number of very specific and detailed commitments to Albertans during the course of the last election, and we are intent on delivering on those commitments. The member is correct that we are facing the challenge right now in our province – the dual challenge, I should say – of a retiring and aging skilled workforce and the highest youth unemployment rate in decades. We recognize that it's important for us to be ahead of these trends and to be proactive, which is why our government has a very robust skills-for-jobs agenda.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Our current education system does not place enough value on the trades as it prioritizes university or college degrees. Given that this overemphasis on university education results in racking up tens of thousands of dollars of student debt and given that most students do not learn about the potential of a job in the trades from schools but, rather, from family and friends, how does the minister plan on spreading awareness about the value of a career in the trades and the lifestyle that this career path can provide?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of postsecondary education.

Mr. Nicolaidis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the member is correct. There's a challenge in terms of spreading awareness about the value of a career in the skilled trades, which is why I was proud a few weeks back to announce the creation of a skills-for-jobs task force that will help to inform government priorities about next steps and about helping to develop strategies to increase awareness regarding careers in the skilled trades.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Canada skilled trades credentials do not always transfer from province to province. Given that Alberta has historically seen a great number of working professionals move in from out of province and given that Alberta is currently losing 3,000 tradespeople a year to retirement and given that with the pro-business policies being implemented, we will see an increase in investments and therefore need a larger labour force, how does the minister plan to harmonize the mobility of skilled tradespeople into our province and to fill the increasing need for skilled trades workers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, it's quite a challenge. You know, there's no reason why an individual from British Columbia or another province can't come to Alberta and continue to work in the same skilled trade, which is why Alberta is a full participant in the Canadian Council of Directors of Apprenticeship, who are responsible for training and certification. To date we have aligned with the council's harmonization priorities in 21 red seal trades. Labour mobility is a key priority of mine and of this government, and we'll continue to work with our provincial and federal counterparts to scrap barriers to mobility and make it easier for people to get back to work.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will move to Members' Statements. Please exit the Chamber expeditiously if you have other engagements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Underground Infrastructure Disturbances

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Here in Alberta we have a great deal of underground infrastructure, most in use and some abandoned. Our underground infrastructure distributes services such as electricity, oil, natural gas, clean drinking water, stormwater, waste water, communications via fibre optics and still some old copper. In March of this year the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship recommended that Bill 211, the Alberta Underground Infrastructure Notification System Consultation Act, proceed to the next stages. Unfortunately, this bill was not able to finish its legislative journey. The direction of this bill would have forced the exploration of requirements to reduce damages to underground infrastructure. This work must continue.

When a line strike or an infrastructure strike occurs, the impact is huge. It can lead to property damage, project delays, traffic congestion, extensive repairs, mitigation, and remediation. These incidents needlessly cause a strain on emergency services and often require home and business evacuations, but most importantly, Mr. Speaker, these incidents can cause loss of life. The estimated societal cost of a single ground disturbance strike to underground lines or infrastructure is $80,000, with an annual cost totalling at least $350 million. In a time when we're trying to bring costs down and to address rural Internet and bandwidth issues, now is the time to act. If we are serious about attracting increased commerce to this province, we must pick up where this bill left off and press forward.

With the information at our disposal of where buried infrastructure is located, it will provide us a clear footprint of where existing structures are and how we can avoid them or capitalize on those assets in a measured plan for future builds. We need to know where these lines are so that they can be safely worked on without costing so much money and causing delay in projects in future years. Further still, in my opinion, we must make it mandatory for those undertaking construction work with underground ground disturbance to request the location of underground infrastructure before they excavate, with stiff penalties attached for ignoring that responsibility that at least will equal the damage and costs associated with remediating lines that are hit. We must move quickly to ensure the safety of workers, homeowners, businesses, and the infrastructure itself.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Commercial Driver Training and Testing Standards

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I sat down with Laurel Patter and her son Derek in my office in Mill Woods. Derek was one of the 13 players injured in the Humboldt Broncos bus crash, that also killed 16 others. Laurel and Derek had reached out to my office because they have serious concerns that this government may be creating loopholes when it comes to safety on our roads and highways. Laurel and Derek were very clear during our conversation. They want to make sure our roads are safe for everyone. They feel strongly that improved training and safety measures should be mandated Canada-wide. But until that happens, Alberta needs to implement improved standards and protect the families that travel our province's roads and highways.

Laurel shared that after delivering their victim impact statements, as they travelled from Saskatoon to Melfort, they were cut off by a semi-truck driving dangerously. It's hard to imagine the terror that must have gone through their minds and the bitter irony of that timing. Many of us experience bad driving on the highways, but few appreciate the potential danger that exists.

Laurel and Derek asked me if anyone had calculated the total cost of the Humboldt tragedy. How much did Saskatchewan spend on the first responders, the air ambulance, the medical staff, and all of the other services that were needed in the aftermath? They can't help but think that funding adequate standards and proper enforcement would be considerably cheaper than having another horrific accident such as the one they lived through. We can save lives, avoid trauma, and do so while also avoiding the heavy cost that such an incident involves.

Laurel and Derek are not interested in the partisan bickering that has crept into this issue. They didn't come to see me because of my political party; they came to see me because I am their local MLA. They expect all 87 MLAs in this place to listen to them, to recognize the tremendous impact that the Humboldt tragedy had on them, and for all of us to ensure that the proper rules are immediately put in place. I hope each member in here will take the time to speak with Laurel and the families impacted and do the right thing.

Brock Blaszczyk

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, I want to formally recognize an incredible individual who recently visited our Legislature, Brock Blaszczyk. While not born there, Brock was raised in the most beautiful constituency in the province, West Yellowhead, in the hidden gem of Grande Cache. A couple of years ago Brock found himself with the opportunity to ask Prime Minister Trudeau some very pointed questions about his military service benefits while Mr. Trudeau toured Alberta. His questions garnered national attention, brought to light critical issues currently facing veteran service members, and highlighted that the Prime Minister wasn't living up to his campaign promises for our military personnel.

Brock served in Afghanistan, returning to Canada only after he encountered an improvised explosive device, an IED, losing one leg and majorly injuring his other. Not only is Brock a decorated veteran, he has committed his efforts since returning to Alberta to helping other veterans overcome traumatic experiences of their past and seek the treatment they require. Brock has a vision to see our province lead the way in how we ensure that first responders, corrections employees, and veterans are able to properly function after their years of dedicated service. He wants to ensure that we do away with the stigma associated with posttraumatic stress disorder so we can save lives and families moving forward.

People like Brock and our service personnel exemplify true heroism in that they are not only willing to lay down their lives for a friend; they will lay down their lives for complete strangers in the name of justice. Today, in light of this past Thanksgiving Monday and with Remembrance Day on the horizon, I want to remember Brock for his sacrifice and thank him for standing up to injustice far from home and right here in Canada. I also want to acknowledge his continued advocacy to ensure that our military personnel and our first responders and their well-being are never forgotten.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Calgary LRT Green Line

Member Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The green line in Calgary is a vital transit project that will support jobs and economic activity in the city. Stage 1 of the green line will create more than 12,000 direct jobs and over 8,000 additional jobs in supporting industries during construction. Once completed, it is expected to create hundreds of long-term transit operations and maintenance jobs. The first stage will transport 60,000 Calgarians daily, and once the full line is completed, there will be an estimated quarter million trips per day.

Calgarians support this project because they understand the importance of it, and they want all levels of government to support it as well. According to a recent survey 83 per cent of Calgarians think the federal government should provide funding for future stages of the green line. In the city of Calgary's YYC Matters election survey every federal party except the Conservatives promised additional funding to expand the green line, and just this fall the Premier and his caucus have been campaigning for the federal Conservatives. Why is this Premier campaigning against such an important project that supports jobs and a modern diversified economy? The Premier needs to finally explain where he stands on this project. Either he supports it or he doesn't. Because I have news for him. This project will be built whether he likes it or not, so he needs to get behind it or get out of the way of the moving train.

Investment in Alberta

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, today I want to talk about something that has been at the core of our government's mandate since we were elected into office, bringing job-creating investment back to Alberta. Not only did the previous government implement policies that hurt our economy, the former government also raised taxes during one of the most challenging economic times in our province's history. Now, these job-killing policies and higher taxes made Alberta less competitive nationally and globally. Our investors have told us that they want nothing more than a free market, and our government fully supports the implementation of policies which bring investors back into Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, our plan is working. Suncor recently announced a $1.4 billion investment that will create 600 jobs to build a gas cogen facility. This announcement demonstrates increased investor confidence in Alberta. Suncor is not the only organization to demonstrate their confidence in our economy. Telus recently announced a $16 billion investment in technology and operations. This investment promises to create 5,000 jobs over the next five years.

Now, our government is working tirelessly to bring investment back into Alberta, and, Mr. Speaker, these recent announcements are proof that our efforts are indeed paying off. Our government is determined to show our investors that we can dream big and that we can get big things done. We will continue to work and restore investor confidence in Alberta and to show the world that Alberta is indeed open for business.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, first, pursuant to Standing Order 7(8) I would let the House know that I will extend daily Routine.

I also have a notice of motion, if I could do it now, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to provide oral notice of Government Motion 34.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly denounce all federal political parties that would enable a provincial government to unilaterally prevent the construction of interprovincial infrastructure projects of national importance, including natural resource pipelines.

The Speaker: Are there other notices of motions? The hon. the Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At the appropriate time the Member for St. Albert will move the following motion pursuant to Standing Order 42.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to maintain safety requirements for newly licensed commercial vehicle drivers, including school bus and agricultural drivers, to ensure rigorous training and testing standards implemented by the previous government continue to protect the safety of all drivers throughout the province and prevent incidents such as the Humboldt Broncos tragedy from occurring again.

The Speaker: Hon. Official Opposition House Leader, I trust that you have copies for all members, that you can provide them for us now. Appreciate that.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 17

Disclosure to Protect Against Domestic Violence (Clare's Law) Act

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce and move first reading of Bill 17, Disclosure to Protect Against Domestic Violence (Clare's Law) Act.

Mr. Speaker, domestic violence endangers the survival, security, and well-being of another person. This legislation, if passed, could help save the lives of those at risk of domestic violence. It would allow people at risk in defined circumstances to find out if their romantic partners have a violent or abusive past. This legislation is a tool that could help prevent domestic violence in Alberta. This legislation is also a significant campaign promise and will empower those at risk of domestic violence so that they can make informed decisions about potentially harmful relationships.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has caught my eye.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table requisite number of copies of three articles from the Globe and Mail. The first is entitled How an Immigration Scheme Steers Newcomers into Canadian Trucking Jobs – and Puts Lives at Risk. The second is titled Western Canada: Why the Trucking Industry Has Come under the Spotlight. The third is titled Alberta Eases Safety Rules Issued in the Wake of Humboldt Bus Crash.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert is rising.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling an article from the Atlantic. It's entitled No Climate Event in 2,000 Years Compares to What's Happening Now.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings of returns and reports?

Hon. members, we are at points of order. The Official Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(h),(i),(j). At approximately 1:55 today the Premier was responding to a question by the Leader of the Official Opposition where he accused her of misleading Albertans. Now, I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I am pretty confident that in a moment the Government House Leader will rise and try to defend the Premier's words because he was reading a letter. I'll direct your attention to the fact that on numerous occasions in this House you, yourself, have ruled that there is, in fact, a point of order, and members opposite have had to apologize and withdraw when there is an accusation made against a member, as is this case. The Premier was accusing the Leader of the Official Opposition of misleading Albertans.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as you're well aware, a similar instance, if a member rises to read a letter or an official document that contains the name of the member in the House, that is out of order. Reading a document or quoting an external source does not give a member carte blanche to be able to make accusations, to use unparliamentary language. In your own words: accusing another member in this House of misleading anyone, whether it's Albertans or others, is unparliamentary. For those reasons, I ask that the Premier or someone on his behalf apologize and withdraw those comments.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader is rising to add to the debate.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you for the opportunity to rise on this point of order, Mr. Speaker. First, I'd refer to Beauchesne's 491, which makes it clear that context is important. Former Speaker Wanner would often talk about context – you would know yourself in your time as Opposition House Leader of this Chamber – while he was the Speaker.

First off, to be clear, I don't have the benefit of the Blues, like the Official Opposition House Leader. I do not believe the Premier said misrepresent. In fact, Mr. Speaker, what I believe he referred to was the direct quote in a letter, which is what the Official Opposition House Leader has referred to, in which several mayors say to the Leader of the Official Opposition in this letter complaining about her misrepresenting [their] views for political theatre is dishonest and unbecoming for any member of the provincial legislative assembly.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly do agree that if a member of the Legislative Assembly is misrepresenting mayors' views in this Chamber, that is unbecoming of any member of the Chamber. I'm not saying that's what the Leader of the Official Opposition was doing, nor did the Premier. The Premier referred to a letter in regard to the context of a question that he had received and the Leader of the Official Opposition had received from many mayors, including some mayors that I represent in this Chamber, that made it clear that things the Official Opposition has been saying inside question period, they felt, misrepresented what they said and were dishonest. That would be a matter of debate on whether they're right or wrong, but the word "dishonest" is not unparliamentary, which the Official Opposition House Leader seems to be indicating. That is not the case, from my understanding.

Calling a member dishonest, basically saying that a member is a liar, we all would agree is unparliamentary and not appropriate for this place, but the Premier did not do that. The Premier referred, again, to the context of this letter, Mr. Speaker, that said that the Leader of the Official Opposition was misrepresenting the views of these mayors for political theatre, that it was dishonest when she did that, and it was unbecoming of a member of the provincial Legislature. If that is true, I would agree with those members, but I'm not saying it's true one way or another. What I am saying is that context matters. The Premier was not calling any member of this place dishonest and referred very specifically to the letter in his answer to the question.

The Speaker: Well, thank you for your submissions, hon. members. I might just add some brief comments. Holy cannoli. I hope that you have something new to add, but I look forward to hearing your comments.

Ms Notley: I will merely say that on the matter of context, which is, indeed, something that former Speakers have spoken to, the context was a set of questions about traffic safety in relation to the concerns raised by several families who are still in this Legislature hoping to see and hear a debate on this issue. The Premier was referring to a letter that was sent about an entirely different matter, so if we want to talk context, I think that is the context which should govern this particular decision on your part.

The Speaker: Are there others that would like to add to the debate?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to rule. Hon. members, I know that you have all polished up on your House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, when it comes to members trying to do indirectly what they can't do directly.

Now, I do have the benefit of the Blues, and the hon. Premier said:

It's regrettable to continue to see a pattern of misrepresentation from the other side of the House. I have today a letter from several mayors objecting to the Leader of the Opposition's, quote, dishonest and unbecoming, misleading comments about their position on a different matter.

The Official Opposition House Leader called a point of order at that time.

I think it's fairly clear to see that the Premier was referring to the other side of the House and not specifically one member. We have a long-standing tradition – and by long-standing I mean over the past number of months – around this issue of a specific member or groups of members. I have cautioned at some length about the use of the word "misleading" or doing things indirectly which you can't do directly. I will specifically say from page 614 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice:

Generally, the reading of articles from newspapers, books or other documents by a Member during debate has become an accepted practice and is not ruled out of order provided that such quotations do not reflect on past proceedings in the House, do not refer to, comment on or deny anything said by a Member, and do not use language which would [otherwise] be out of order if spoken by a Member.

Now, I recognize that the Official Opposition feels like this should be a point of order, but I have clearly stated that the Premier referred to a group of individuals. In this case I will not find a point of order, but I will remind all members that, from Procedure and Practice, we cannot do indirectly what we cannot do directly.

I consider this matter dealt with. We are proceeding to the oral motion under Standing Order 42.

Motions under Standing Order 42

Commercial Driver Training and Testing Standards

Ms Renaud:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to maintain safety requirements for newly licensed commercial vehicle drivers, including school bus and agricultural drivers, to ensure rigorous training and testing standards implemented by the previous government continue to protect the safety of all drivers throughout the province and prevent incidents such as the Humboldt Broncos tragedy from occurring again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm just going to read it again, and then I'll chat further about it: be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to reverse the decision to relax safety requirements for newly licensed semi-truck drivers and bus operators, a move that will allow hundreds of drivers to bypass rigorous training and testing standards that were implemented by the previous government to increase the safety of all drivers throughout the province and the country and prevent incidents such as the Humboldt tragedy in the future.

Mr. Speaker, again, I would like to thank all of the family members that stayed through question period and points of order. I know it's stimulating. I really do appreciate them being here, and I'm sad that this is the reason that they're here.

As you know, this is a serious matter. As my colleagues have also said, the entire nation was shaken by the events of April 2018, the Humboldt bus crash, that took 16 lives, many of them young hockey players really just starting out their lives, at the cusp of their future, full of dreams and hopes. I can't even imagine the loss that these families experienced.

However, we later found out that the driver responsible was lacking adequate training, so the previous government took steps to fix it. As my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods said, this really isn't a partisan issue. This is something that all 87 of us should be really concerned about, that if there's anything at all that we can do to prevent the loss of life or the tragedy that we had to all witness and that these families had to endure in 2018, then we should take those steps instead of, as my colleague so eloquently said, the partisan bickering about, "You did this; you did that," you know, for the Transportation minister and the Premier to just stand up and say: "You know what? Maybe we made an incorrect decision. Let's fix this. Let's make sure no other life is lost or cut short."

What I've heard in this place has been difficult to follow over the last few days. We've asked a number of really good questions. There's been quite a bit of reporting on this, and it has been quite difficult to follow, but here's what I know. This government currently believes that some people should be exempt from critical training, training that teaches them how to check and secure loads, how to properly brake for heavy loads, how to handle the responsibility they have to both themselves and those they share the road with.

To my colleagues in the House: this is deserving of a debate of the House, and it's urgent. It is very urgent. I can recall that when the government sat on this side, a number of times they made compelling cases for us to stop what we were doing and to have important debates about what they felt was important, and we indulged that. We may not always have agreed a hundred per cent, but we listened, we participated, and we allowed that debate to happen. I would encourage all of my colleagues on the other side and on this side as well to do the same.

The Minister of Transportation tells us that he's comfortable – this is a direct quote – with the change, stated . . .

Speaker's Ruling Speaking to Urgency

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you for your intervention. Just to provide some context of how a Standing Order 42 works, with all due respect to all members in the gallery and otherwise I am merely a humble servant of the rules that are applied before us. The only opportunity that you have to speak to the motion under Standing Order 42 is to express your desire around urgency. You cannot, unfortunately, debate the motion that is before the Assembly. So if you can do your very best to ensure that you are discussing the urgency of the matter and not what members may or may not have said during the past, I think that would be a much more useful use of our time.

Debate Continued

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely. Why is this urgent? Because we could have an accident tomorrow or later today. I think back to seat belts, how important it was to pass those rules, regulations, legislation, anything that we can do to prevent this horrific tragedy from ever happening again. Put partisan thoughts aside, put allegiances aside, and just listen to these families, who stood together and said: this is unacceptable. We need to do this today to prevent anything from happening tomorrow or later today.

I encourage all of my colleagues to allow us to go forward with this. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 42(1):

A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 39.

As such, unanimous consent is required for this Standing Order 42 to proceed.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for St. Albert, prior to proceeding with the motion, the words that you read into the record were slightly different than the words that were distributed on the paper. So I want to confirm that the motion that we are now debating is as such:

Urge the government to maintain safety requirements for newly licensed commercial vehicle drivers, including school bus and agricultural drivers, to ensure rigorous training and testing standards implemented by the previous government continue to protect the safety of all drivers throughout the province and prevent incidents such as the Humboldt Broncos tragedy from occurring again.

The hon. Member for St. Albert has the call on debate. There are 20 minutes allotted to you.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sincerely, I'm very thankful to all of my colleagues for allowing this debate to go forward. Once again thank you to all of the families that have stayed to witness this.

Why is it important to do this? I think I was fairly clear earlier that of anything we can do in this place as legislators to represent our communities, to do what's right, the most important thing is to protect and preserve the lives of the people in this province. This is one way that we can do that. Sadly, I think that we all had to see what happens when there are gaps in safety standards or the safety standards don't meet the requirements of the job.

I started to say a little earlier – I got a little bit off track, but I wanted to go back. We've had a fair amount of debate just in the form of questions and answers over the last few days, but I did want to say a couple of things. One of the things is that the Minister of Transportation has told us that he is comfortable with the change, stating – and this is a direct quote – that they had been operating mostly safely for the last 30 or 40 years. Now, I think it's easy sometimes to get wrapped up in the issue of the day and to allow things to continue, but this is really unacceptable. I think that now we've arrived at a place – we arrived at the place in 2018 – where we saw that there was a gap. There was a need to close a loophole, to do more stringent training, to have better requirements for drivers, for bus drivers, for semi-truck drivers. What was good 10 years ago, 20 years ago, 30, 40 years ago is not good enough today. Whether a short distance or a long distance, safety minimums exist for a reason.

Bus drivers carry our children. They are our most precious cargo. As our leader said earlier today: who hasn't been on those roads driving our kids to tournaments or to games or to practices? I'm sure most of us have, and if you haven't, I'm sure you will in the near future. They are our most precious cargo. It should never be about that it's inconvenient for the company or that it costs too much or that there are too many hours of training or there's too much red tape. That's unacceptable. This is our most precious cargo, so this is an investment.

In the not-too-distant past, as I referred to a little bit earlier, seat belts were not mandatory. It's hard to believe that there was a time when that was the case, but I think I'm old enough to remember even some arguments against seat belt safety. We won't even get into seat belts on buses. I'm sure that is coming. But the government of the day, and to their credit, made their use mandatory for the good of the people of the province. Years later we know exactly how many lives have been saved.

The government of the day stood by their decision, and the members of this Assembly should look at that. It's hard to believe that at the time that wasn't a popular decision, that that was something that people were actually arguing against as – I don't know – limiting their freedom to put on a seat belt. But it's a really good example for this House. When you look back, it seems like it's pretty easy. It's a no-brainer, right? Why wouldn't you demand a seat belt in a vehicle? This makes sense. Why would you not put in the safety standards that we talked about? Whether it's training, whether it's hours on the road supervised, whatever it is, why would you not put those things into place if you knew that there was a potential for it to save lives? We owe it to Albertans, all of us. It's our job to do this. It's our job to ensure that the vehicles on the road are as safe as possible.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

Again, I just want to say that it's horrible that it took the enormity of the tragedy that occurred in Saskatchewan. It's sad that it took that for us to have made the changes then and now to be having this discussion again. As my colleague so eloquently said, this isn't a partisan issue. Let's make the changes that we need to make to ensure that this never happens again and we know that we have done everything possible to prevent this from happening.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has the call.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so glad that we have unanimous consent in order to discuss this very important issue, and I want to thank the families of those who tragically lost their lives in the Humboldt bus crash and that are here today advocating. Unfortunately, it's too late for their loved ones, but as was expressed to many and they have been expressing to so many people, they do not want this to happen again on our highways, on our roads. That's what this issue is really about. They've emphatically expressed that they do not want exemptions for anybody here in Alberta when it comes to this issue, when it comes the safety of people on our highways. This is what these family members are here to communicate specifically to each and every one of us.

Now, as a representative it is my job to communicate what people are advocating for. I'm so happy to be able to get up in this House and be able to speak that truth here to all of my colleagues. I think that it's important we recognize that here in Alberta our regulations were so out of date when compared to other jurisdictions across this land, and the previous government simply was trying to get us on par with other jurisdictions here in Canada. This is about the safety on our highways.

When the Minister of Transportation comes into this House and says that they're going to be rolling back on these particular regulations and not only that, Mr. Speaker, but then the exemptions – and it's true that the previous government was providing exemptions for class 1 drivers so that they could all get rolled into the program and the same for class 2, those bus drivers. They were going to be able to get an exemption until the next school year. But now we're finding out from this minister, not in this House but through the media, when this minister is speaking to the media, that at first the exemption was going to go on even longer. Now the exemption is probably going to be indefinite. I would like to hear from the minister if that indeed is the case, and he should put it on the record inside of this House and not just simply state what he's thinking to the media. He should be expressing it here so that it is on the record.

I want to highlight the fact that according to the Tantus report there were so many problems with the system here in the province of Alberta, so many upgrades that had to be made to the regulations to make sure that our highways could be safe. It's sad that it took the Humboldt bus tragedy for us to really get focused on this and make the changes that had to be done in order to put us, bare minimum, on par with other jurisdictions.

I really want to appeal to the Minister of Transportation and to all the colleagues in this House so that they really think about what it is that they're doing when they're rolling back these regulations. What is it that is calling you to do so? Is it a special-interest group? Is that who you're here to govern for, or are you here to govern for all Albertans and specifically for the safety of all Albertans?

You know, we just passed Read In Week, and whenever I have the opportunity to go to schools and read to the children, of course, we always do a preface on what my job is as an MLA. I explain to them that it's basically, in a nutshell, to come up with the rules of the province along with all 86 other members of this House. I always ask them: what do you think are the most important factors that we need to consider when we're coming up with the law and the rules for the province? These children always get the hammer right on the head of the nail, and they say: fairness and safety. If children can understand that safety is such an important part of coming up with new legislation, then why does the Minister of Transportation not understand that? Instead of making it safer on Alberta highways, he's rolling back on these regulations to make it less safe.

Mr. Speaker, I want to call on all the members of this House to really think about what it is that we're doing here today or what's happening with the rolling back of the regulations. As I stated, the minister has already said that these exemptions are going to go on indefinitely, so I hope that we can hear from the minister on specifically if that is going to be the case.

I don't want to get into a he said, she said kind of scenario, but it breaks my heart that the minister is reaching out to the Humboldt families – he gets up in this House and he says that he's reached out – but then he's not completely transparent about what those conversations were about. If anybody is interested, I've specifically asked the minister about this in question period, about his conversations with Mr. Boulet and what Mr. Boulet actually thinks about the conversation that the minister had with him. I hope that he can address that as well because I think it's unfair to the members of this House for the hon. minister to get up in this House and say things that are perhaps not the most accurate. I'll put it that way.

So again, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all the colleagues of the House for permitting this debate to go on today. Again I want to respectfully thank all of the members of the families that are here of the Humboldt bus tragedy. Thank you for advocating and continuing to work hard on this issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Minister of Transportation has risen.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand and speak on this motion. Let me just say this. This is another opportunity for the Official Opposition to take yes for an answer. They've been getting yes for an answer for several days now, and they just don't seem to want to accept yes for an answer. We agree with them. Safety is the most important thing. It always has been the most important thing. It always will be the most important thing. It is.

Mr. Speaker, I want to also take time to thank the families and loved ones from the Humboldt tragedy for being here and for the respectful conversation that we had earlier today, where they, I thought, were very gracious in giving me their time and very helpful in laying out what they thought was important.

Mr. Speaker, while we're having this talk, let's talk a little bit. The hon. member across I think just suggested, if he didn't outright state it, that the former NDP government came up with MELT as a result of the terrible Humboldt tragedy. No one could deny that it was a terrible, terrible tragedy. But the truth is that MELT came from the United States. It didn't come from somebody in Canada. It didn't come from an NDP. It didn't come from a Conservative. It didn't come from a Liberal. It didn't come from Canada. It came from the United States of America. The fact is that as of February of next year somebody driving with a class 1 or 2 licence and driving a vehicle in that category won't be able to take that vehicle across into the United States without MELT qualifications. That's where this came from. But what's really important is that it gives us an opportunity to increase the driving qualifications and the safety standards, and that importance is magnified 1,000-fold at least, maybe more, because of the tragedy that happened with the Humboldt families. Let's clear the record on that. That's where MELT came from, the United States of America. But that's not to diminish how important it is. Safety always was, is, and always will be the most important thing.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the motion put on the table. Though we have said yes before and I expect we will say yes again today, the fact is that where the opposition – in my opinion, we're going to go further than what's in here because what it says in the motion is “standards implemented by the previous government” when, in fact, MELT was not implemented by the previous government. Sure, it was announced and then they said it was the rule of the land, but the same day that they said that it was the rule of the land, March 1, was also the day they actually crippled the government to deliver that policy by essentially firing all of the past driver examiners, at which time, by my understanding, there were 151, and then we ended up with 73 driver examiners. As I say, with half as many people to give tests on class 4, 5, 1, 2, MELT at the busiest part of the year, it essentially set the government way behind on the traditional road tests, let alone the more stringent MELT tests.

The government said that they implemented it, but I say they did not. I say they announced it, and then they called an election and left the government. Had they won the election, they would have been having the same problem that we're having now, having to correct the terrible mistake they made on March 1 by cutting the driver examiners in half.

Now, I don't have a problem with how the government reacted to the Tantis report, but they might have missed a line or two. Here's a piece out of the Tantis report. At some point it says in the Tantis report that summer is the busiest season of the year for road tests. Now, they've gone on at length about how they read the Tantis report and how important it is, but they didn't read it carefully enough because if they had read it carefully enough, they would not have cut the number of driver examiners in half at the beginning of the busiest part of the year while trying to implement a new and important safety standard. Perhaps they need to go back and read it again and pick up the parts that they missed the first time because clearly, if they read it, they ignored it. Mr. Speaker, on October 11 last year they said that MELT was coming, and on March 1 this year they said that MELT was here, which was, I will repeat, the same day that they cut the number of driver examiners in half or less.

Again, I agree with them that they thought that MELT was a good standard, and it is. MELT is here to stay. Again, MELT was not invented by the NDP; it was invented in the United States of America and imposed upon us. So we were left with a situation of having to impose these higher standards while falling behind severely with road tests every single month because of the mess that the previous government created by putting us way behind on the number of driver examiners here. But we set about to complete the task, and we're still working on it now.

Frankly, I wish we were further ahead than we are. I would be happier if we were because we're somewhere north of 30,000 tests behind. I don't have the most recent numbers, but it's high. That's because we're falling behind probably 6,000 to 8,000 tests per month from March 1, essentially, until the end of August or maybe even the end of September because of the decision of the previous government.

In the meantime, I would like people to know that we've been working hard to catch up. We hired a lot more drivers. You know what? That took a while because, as I think the opposition would agree, you shouldn't take shortcuts on safety. So we didn't put driver examiners out there to give these road tests that we're behind on until they had what we thought was proper and full training to do so.

We also announced that we've added licensed people to do drivers' exams to try to catch up. We announced that, I think, three or four weeks ago, and we're adding 20 more. I think there are four up and running now, and the other ones are in training. We're fortunate enough to have four previously experienced driver examiners, which is why we were able to get them on the road a little bit faster. They'd already had some of the training that was required, and the other ones we're busy putting through the training. We made a decision not to limit it to 20 licensees to deliver driver exams because we know how important it is to deliver the drivers' licences, including the MELT certification, which is a higher standard. We get that.

I find it a little bit insincere when the opposition complains that we give an extended period of time for some agricultural drivers and school bus drivers to get their drivers' licences when they indeed caused the problem and, further, when they indeed themselves, when they were government, gave an extension to those same groups of people. Yet today they would have you believe that it's a terrible crime though they did exactly that when they were in government. Frankly, I agree with their decision because school boards across the province told us that they needed to get the kids to school and they couldn't do it unless they could train drivers to do that. Agricultural people told us that they wouldn't be able to get their crops out of the field.

The fact is that the day of reckoning has to come when MELT has to be put in place, and the day has come. I agree with what the opposition has said here recently, that too many hours of training is not an excuse, too much red tape is not an excuse, too much expense is not an excuse. I agree with all of those things because we agree with safety. Again, this shouldn't be a partisan issue. I sense that the other side says in one breath that it's not a partisan issue; on the other side, they're sure working hard to make it one. Mr. Speaker, we agree with these things. It's interesting also that they complained about the regs being out of date, but they didn't change them themselves until MELT came along from the United States. For their government to say that they're adopting MELT: I agree with them. We need it. They're not wrong. Somehow when we say it, we're wrong, but I'm going to say it out loud. The opposition was right when they did that because safety matters.

Now, I will tell you about the one thing that we did. There were about 6,500 to 6,800 people that had their driver exams between October 11 last year, when the NDP announced that they were going to do this, and March 1 of this year, when they said it was the rule. These are transition drivers that passed the same class 1 or class 2 test as the other 150,000 or more drivers around Alberta driving class 1 or class 2 vehicles. I don't mind telling you that we would have preferred to say, "You've got to have the MELT requirement," except, again, we were kind of crippled in our ability to deliver that with not enough driver examiners available to us because of the decision the previous government made on March 1 of this year. But we set about to get it done.

Yes, we did say that these people with a good driving record would have their full class 1 or 2. We did say that, and I've pretty much confirmed this in the House, though the member who just spoke said I hadn't. I've said this before. This is well known.

I have to tell you that the good, good people from the Humboldt families told me that they're not happy about that. They made that very clear to me. I didn't promise them what I would do differently other than I told them that because they asked, we will consider what we have decided, because no one that I can think of has paid a bigger price for a lack of safety in this province than the families of the victims of the Humboldt tragedy. Because of them we will consider that. I'm not sure what we're going to do, and I'm not making a promise or announcement right now, but I'm telling the House what I told them: we're going to look at it. I know that they want a hard promise today. I'm sorry; we can't give them that today, but we're going to look at it. If they're not happy with me, not happy with us, I understand that, but they've convinced me to take a second look.

Let me just say this. Again, it's funny that the opposite side talked about school boards getting kids to schools as a special-interest group. Yeah, maybe, but it's a pretty darn important special-interest group. I received a bunch of letters from different school boards thanking us for the extensions on those drivers getting their MELT standard because they tell me, not my words but theirs, that they wouldn't have gotten the kids to school, that they wouldn't have had the bus drivers to get the kids to school. They did. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the opposition doing that, and I agree with us extending it. I think that it was the right thing to do when they did it, and I think it was the right thing to do when we did it.

Similarly, some of our agricultural friends expressed that because they have a high turnover in their drivers some years, they weren't sure they could get the crops out of the fields without a time extension. The NDP gave them a time extension, and we extended that a little bit more. Frankly, I think that they were right, and I think that we were right, too. There are probably people who disagree with us. However, it comes down to: we have to make the roads as safe as we can, we have to make the drivers as safe as we can, and we have to make the vehicles as safe as we can.

The Premier announced today that we are making efforts to look at some of the cases that may and probably do exist where people are bringing in people from other countries and putting them on the road without being fully qualified and trained. That has happened, I believe. That may be happening today. I certainly hope not, but if it is, we are going to make a big effort to put a stop to it. Again I agree with the opposition on that. If they say that that's a problem, I agree with them because safety is not a partisan issue; safety is a human issue. It's an Albertan issue. It's one that I'd like to think every member of this House cares about as much as I do, and I'd like to think that I care about as much as all other members of this House do. I don't really see an exception in this room of people that care about that.

So here we are, Mr. Speaker. I'm asking the opposition to take yes for an answer. We do believe that safety is needed for all drivers throughout the province to prevent incidents like the Humboldt Broncos tragedy and all other tragedies, and we need to stop those from occurring again. Yes. The answer is yes.

Again I want to thank the Humboldt families for being here. They have agreed to advise the Ministry of Transportation on safety issues going forward, and we're going to listen to their advice. We didn't promise them that we were going to do every single thing that they said, but we promised them that we were going to consider it all carefully because we know it comes from an honest, sincere, and, unfortunately, in a very negative way, educated place, educated by tragedy.

So that's where we are. I'm in favour of what's in front of us. I would say to the opposition, and it's not the first time I've said it: take yes for an answer. We've essentially been saying yes in this House for weeks, days at least. Hopefully, this time they will actually hear the yes that we're saying loud and, I surely hope, clear.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West has risen to speak.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak in favour of this motion that is before us as MLAs. I want to first start by recognizing the families in the gallery, and I also want to read into the record the note that I got from Toby Boulet, who could not be with us here in the gallery. Toby and Bernie Boulet are constituents of Lethbridge-West, and here's what they wrote:

Please apologize on both Bernadine's and my behalf for not being in attendance as we are presenting at the Canadian Transplant Summit in Banff on Wednesday. Please use this quote on my behalf. I am continually shocked that some in Canadian society are placing the value of a truck full of grain over my son's or any life.

Let's talk a little bit about how we got here. The minister has given a certain interpretation of events. I'm pleased to fill in some of the details for members assembled in the House this afternoon. Certainly, the previous government made several commitments and changes, including reviewing training for truck drivers, requirements for new commercial carriers, and intersectional safety on Alberta highways. There were previously no regulations around training requirements before obtaining the licences, and I might note that the current Minister of Transportation also served in the Redford government as Minister of Transportation, in which there were no training requirements before obtaining these licences.

So, yes, we did introduce a mandatory entry-level training program for class 1, which are semi-trucks, and class 2, bus drivers' licences. There was also a pre-entry requirement for new commercial carriers to ensure that their trucks met safety standards and that all of the drivers had received MELT training. Also, in order to clean up some of the shadiness that had prevailed in previous years, we made it more difficult for carriers that were suspended to resume operations as a chameleon company using a new company and safety fitness certificate. Previously truck companies shut down for noncompliance would simply migrate to a new company brand and restart operations. Again, this was a system that was in place prior to our government and certainly under this minister's watch.

Now, the current minister has taken issue with some of the actions taken around driver examiners, so let's talk about why those decisions were made. I think it's important for the Humboldt families, for the folks watching, and for the whole House to understand just what this Minister of Transportation has called a terrible mistake on behalf of the previous government. This minister has said that half of the driver examiners were no longer able to conduct driver testing and that this was, quote, a terrible mistake. That is what he just said.

There was an internal review of the driver examination model and 40 investigations of impropriety in just three years. Here's what it found: road tests were conducted without proper permits, there were incorrectly scored road tests, examiners had more than seven demerits on their licences, examiners offering a pass on a road test in exchange for money, and inappropriate touching during a road test. Now, I don't think that anyone in this House thinks that those folks should be put back to work. It was not a terrible mistake to take away their ability to do driver exams. That was the right thing to do for decency, for the rule of law.

Of course, we are now finding ourselves in this position where there is a review of bringing driver testing in-house as well as the MELT program, and now we have indefinite extensions for some of the exemptions. Now, the exemptions are going to be, we think – and this is why we're having this emergency debate. We don't have clarity on whether those exemptions are going to be indefinite for drivers wanting a class 1 licence for the operation of a heavy-load farm vehicle or for class 2 licences for those operating school buses. We don't know, and we deserve to know, and the families deserve to know.

Are these exemptions going to be there or not? Are we going to bring our standards up in the face of all of this evidence that we need to or not? It's actually a pretty simple answer for the minister to give. There are, in fact, some pretty easy fixes here if he wants to manage this issue appropriately and also do the right thing. You know, the easy fix isn't: we're making efforts to look at our options. That's what the minister just committed to, making efforts to look. That's pretty cold comfort for something that is essentially a yes or no answer. Will there be exemptions or not?

Let's just give the minister a five-step program to make this issue so that we can move on, so that we can do the right thing, so that we can look those Humboldt families in the eye and say that we did the right thing for Albertans and for Canadians. Here it is. One, establish a timeline of no exemptions. Work with the Alberta Motor Transport Association and others who are interested stakeholders in this file. The AMTA has already said that they fully support the new regulations and the new system. Work with those stakeholders, the good actors in the trucking industry, who don't want to see bad actors unfairly subsidizing their operations. Just work with them and establish that timeline. Commit to it right now.

Two, stop making excuses for a broken system that was in part his responsibility as minister. That's an easy one.

Three, fund the training for school boards. How hard is this? Kids deserve to drive to school in a safe environment with a bus driver that has the appropriate training. If it's expensive, fund it. Just do it. Stand up in the House right now and commit to it.

Four, stand up to the hard-core lobbying, and send a clear message that it won't work here, that this is too important for Albertans. We know that those lobbyists were the first ones in the door when this government was sworn in. Just stand up to them. Make a public statement right now: "Not going to work. Safety is first."

Five, this minister and this government could take this opportunity to take national leadership on this file, to establish common cause with other provinces for road safety. We know that folks cross borders. These families' kids crossed a border. We know that these standards should be in place for the entire country, so go to the next federal-provincial-territorial meeting and put it on the agenda that everyone is going to have the same standards, that there won't be any exemptions. Take national leadership, and just get it done. Don't cave to lobbying, and put pressure on the feds if you need to with respect to seat belts on school buses and all the rest of the things that the families have been asking for.

Take some leadership on this. At the end of the day, we are all Canadians, and we all deserve to be safe on the roads. We all deserve to know that the people behind the wheel of whatever large vehicle have had an exam that is within the public interest, that was not bought and paid for, that was not the result of some shady transaction, money changing hands inappropriately. We all deserve that. We deserve to know that the school bus drivers that are picking up our kids have the appropriate training and that the government has taken responsibility for that training and the safety of those kids and that the Education minister and the transport minister and every other minister of Executive Council have taken responsibility for that safety. They can easily make that commitment. Do a prebudget announcement. Make it right this afternoon. No problem. It's not that much money. Just get 'er done.

Mr. Speaker, we are standing in this House because we have a lack of clarity. We have a minister who has committed only to make efforts to look at the situation, and we have Albertans and people across Canada who are saying that that is not good enough. Let's do better as Albertans and as Canadians. Let's be clear with our constituents – mine, the Member for St. Albert's, the Member for Edmonton-Mill-Woods', and everyone else's – those grieving families, and give them some clear answers and some clear assurances. Let's let them get back to the business of rebuilding their lives instead of having to advocate for trucking safety standards.

Toby Boulet is trying to get ready for the opening of the Logan Boulet Arena in Lethbridge. He's trying to focus his life. Toby and Bernadine are trying to move on, yet they have to engage in strategic planning and government relations and lobbying to make this government do the right thing? That's not right. That's not respectful, especially when I just outlined that it would actually be pretty straightforward to fix this problem.

Mr. Speaker, that is why we are having this emergency debate this afternoon. I believe that I have made my views in favour of this motion clear, and I want to urge all members of the Assembly to do the right thing this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise this afternoon and speak on what's a fairly important topic that's been discussed in this Chamber at length over the last few weeks. I'd like to start off by reiterating the comments of the hon. the Transportation minister earlier in his discussion and make it, first off, clear that all Canadians share the pain of the families whose young people lost their lives in the tragedy that was the Humboldt Broncos bus crash and that safety on our roads is the number one priority of our government. The hon. Transportation minister has been clear about that today. I thank him for that. He's also been clear about it repeatedly in question period for the last week and a half.

He's been clear on this fact: the new training requirements, MELT, introduced for new heavy-truck drivers and bus drivers, class 1 and 2 licences, as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, are here to stay. He's been clear about that today. He's been clear about that in question period. He's been clear about that. As he said to the hon. members, "Take yes for an answer."

He's also been clear that the previous NDP government exempted over 150,000 existing drivers while also providing an extension for the requirement for farmers and school bus drivers, which is a fact, as I understand it. That was under the previous government. He's also been clear that we regret that at the same time that that government was imposing those new requirements, the previous NDP government made compliance practically impossible by cutting the number of driver examiners in half at the very same time that they were bringing in the new rules. The hon. Minister of Transportation has also been clear that he on behalf of our government is moving quickly to fix the problem by hiring more examiners. He was talking about that before this was even raised in question period, in fact before this sitting of the Legislature started.

In addition, today the Premier has been clear about the facts that I just presented but also that he's instructed his Minister of Labour and Immigration to begin to reach out to his federal colleagues regarding possible exploitation in regard to temporary foreign workers' programs in regard to heavy trucking and particularly around the context that was reported in the Globe and Mail recently.

Mr. Speaker, those facts have been made clear. It's important that they're made clear, and I thank the hon. Transportation minister for making those facts clear. I am proud to call the hon. Transportation minister my friend. I'm proud to have served with him in this Chamber side by side for many years. In fact, I even had a lot of fun when we served in opposite parties for a little bit of time. He's always been approachable. He's always answered questions fairly, both in his time as a minister now and his time before. He's been easy to work with when he was in opposition, and he has been clear on that.

While the tragedy that was the Humboldt bus crash is a tragedy, it's important to recognize what the Official Opposition continues to do in this Chamber, not just on this issue but on many issues, Mr. Speaker. It's shocking. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West spoke at length about what Albertans and Canadians want. I certainly agree that Albertans and Canadians want to make sure that truck safety is handled right, that the lessons that have been learned from the Humboldt bus crash are acted upon so that a tragedy like that can never occur again, and hopefully no other family will ever have to experience that tragedy. None of us in this Chamber can even understand what that tragedy has done to the families. That's important.

But what's important also is to recognize the track record, Mr. Speaker, that the Official Opposition continues to use in this place, and I would submit to you that it's why they're the Official Opposition. It's why they were the only one-term government in the history of this province. It's why they have been sent to that side of the House. [interjections] They think that coming here and acting like this and misrepresenting facts benefits Albertans. It doesn't.

The hon. Transportation minister has been clear on this for a very long time. It's why . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I actually think that this is a good opportunity for me to just mention that all members do have under Standing Order 42, if they should so choose, 20 minutes. There's no 29(2)(a). So if there are other comments and arguments that are potentially going to be made, I invite all members, perhaps after we hear from a member, to then stand and be recognized.

Thank you.

Please continue. There are still 15 minutes and 37 seconds.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that. I do hope hon. members take the opportunity to participate in debate, not to spend their time heckling but to actually talk about this important issue.

Why I refer to the opposition's behaviour in the context of this motion is that it's important for Albertans to understand what continues to take place in this Chamber. It's appalling for most Albertans that see how the NDP continue to go about their business as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition inside this Chamber, and today is another example. When you have the hon. Transportation minister, who has been clear for weeks on his position and then continues to see the opposition rise in this place and say the exact opposite of what he has said, that does not serve Albertans, Mr. Speaker. It does nothing to benefit Albertans nor the debate on what is an important issue.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition has done this several times. They did this often when they were in government, and it was disappointing to Albertans at the time, which is why I suspect that they were voted out in record numbers. But it's even more disappointing now to watch as they've done it in opposition, as they've continued to rise over and over and over and misrepresent facts inside this very Chamber. They've done it on rural crime, and that is a great example that is very similar to this situation. They repeatedly for several weeks have stood in this Chamber, misrepresented the facts on where the Solicitor General was going to on rural crime, repeatedly misrepresented the facts at the very same time as the Minister of Justice has gotten up over and over and over and said that those are not the facts.

Mr. Speaker, of late they've taken to then standing up in this Chamber and quoting town councils or county councils, mayors, and saying that they are expressing their views and that the mayors are concerned, to the point that we see a letter now come from the mayor of Brooks, the mayor of Wetaskiwin, the mayor of Lacombe – I can tell you that I suspect there will be more of these letters in the coming days – addressed to the hon. Leader of the Opposition that say: “We read with dismay the Hansard of October 15, 2019, in which you said in the legislature,” and I quote: ‘He can deny it all he wants but the communities of Brooks, Wetaskiwin, Barrhead, Sundre, Foothills and Lacombe [will] oppose his plan . . .’ when, in fact” – this is the mayors now; we're out of the quote – “that is not the case.”

The mayors go on to say:

The position of the cities of Lacombe, Wetaskiwin and Brooks has been, and continues to be, that all municipalities (including municipal districts and counties) should bear a portion of the cost for police services they receive. We also support the principles that any new models should include . . .

Then they list some of the principles.

Then they close with this:

Misrepresenting our views for political theatre is dishonest and unbecoming for any member of the provincial legislative assembly.

We respectfully ask you to correct your statement for the record immediately.

Mr. Speaker, I note that that still has not happened on behalf of the mayors of those three communities. I note it hasn't happened on behalf of several of the other communities that have been listed within that context, and I know those letters are coming shortly. Many of those communities I have the privilege of representing, and I can assure you they are quite disheartened to continue to watch the NDP misrepresent facts inside this Chamber for their own political gain. That is not the role of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. It's not the role.

I was proud to serve as a Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in this Chamber with many of the members that are still on the benches with me now, who sat on that side of the House, Mr. Speaker. It was not the role when we were there, and it's still not the role now that they are there. They can do better than this. They should do better than this. Albertans deserve better than this. This Chamber is a place for open and truthful debate, not where you come and misrepresent facts.

Ms Ganley: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: I recognize that a point of order has been called. I can deal with that right now.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hesitate to rise for fear of setting this off all over again, but we're here discussing an incredibly serious matter. We're talking about families who lost their children, and we're talking about the safety of all road users. To see the hon. Government House Leader get up and sort of take us on a wander through a number of collateral attacks I think is a bit inappropriate. If he wishes to disagree with us on this matter and have a conversation about this issue, I'm happy to hear from him. I think it's important to hear from all members of the House regardless of whether they disagree, but I think that out of respect for the families, we ought to contain our debate to this subject. If we disagree with each other on other matters, we ought to disagree about those other matters at other times.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: On the point of order or just moving on?

The Acting Speaker: On the point of order.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Clearly a matter of debate, Mr. Speaker. While I do understand that the Official Opposition does not want to have pointed out the political and partisan games that they play with these issues, it is clearly relevant to the motion that we are talking about. The fact that they brought it forward made it very clear in the context of the motion. Again, I should be allowed to continue with my speech.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. In this specific case, I will take the opportunity to say, first off, that I do not find a point of order specifically or at least in part because there was no mention of any standing order that was broken. Secondly, though, I will also take this opportunity to just remind the whole House that we are debating a specific motion at this time, so if all members could just continually move towards ensuring that they discuss the topic at hand, that would be very appreciated.

The hon. Government House Leader, with 11 minutes and 29 seconds left.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for recognizing me again. Why I bring this up is that it's important for Albertans to understand what is going on inside this Chamber and what their Official Opposition is up to.

Now, with that, I will go back to the motion that is at hand, Mr. Speaker, and make it clear again on behalf of the government, as the hon. the Transportation minister already has repeatedly, that MELT is here to stay. That is a fact, a fact that has been made clear in this Chamber. The hon. Transportation minister is working through one heck of a mess that, unfortunately, the NDP have left them. Sadly, it's not the only mess that the government has to work through, as you know, that the NDP have left, but he is working through it. He's committed to the direction that he is headed in.

It is not helpful for the NDP to continue to stand inside this place and misrepresent facts, Mr. Speaker, and, through you to them, I encourage them to stop that behaviour because that is not becoming of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. They're better than that. If they're not, they should certainly act better than that. They've received a great privilege to be a member in this place, and repeatedly coming here every day misrepresenting facts . . . [interjection] I see the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall heckling away about speaking to the motion. This is about the motion because it's related to why the NDP are playing these games. It's not appropriate.

This is a very important issue, Mr. Speaker, and I'll be excited to vote for this motion shortly if the NDP send it to a vote, but we will continue to call them out on their behaviour. It's why they're in the spot that they're in, and Albertans do not like what the NDP continue to do here. Their job is not to fear and smear people. Their job is not to come here and misrepresent facts. Their job is to come here and debate, to make sure that we end up with good legislation, not to continually listen to a minister stand up and make it clear about very clear, specific facts and then stand up and misrepresent the facts not only in this Chamber but then across the province. It's shameful, it's not appropriate, and I do hope they stop.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has risen to speak.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the Member for St. Albert for moving this important motion this afternoon and for giving an opportunity to all members to support unanimously and to debate this motion. It's unfortunate that the Government House Leader has spent so much of his time not focused on the matter at hand.

I have to say that better safety standards – I'm going to agree with something that the Infrastructure minister said. MELT was absolutely invented south of the border. Sometimes things that are invented south of the border can have benefits here. Sometimes things that are invented even across the ocean can have benefits here; for example, the three-point seat belt, that was mentioned by the Member for St. Albert. That wasn't invented in Alberta. It wasn't invented by one political party or another. It was invented in Sweden. But when a good safety device was invented in Sweden in 1958, it was about 30 years later that we adopted the same practice here in Alberta because it had saved about 50 per cent of the lives from those accidents. The research was clear. I wish it wouldn't have taken 30 years, Mr. Speaker. I really hope that the government acts far more quickly than the Infrastructure minister has been hinting at through recent public interviews, because MELT absolutely wasn't invented here, but it has the opportunity to save lives.

For that, I think our kids on school buses, our teams travelling around the province, individual families or individuals on the highway, our agricultural workers, and our transport workers deserve to have a government pay due attention and give due consideration, and that was done, Mr. Speaker. That was done previously. The decision was made that we were going to move forward by having enhanced safety training. I can tell you that there was an accident in Lamont when my mom – I think she was a first-year teacher at the time. There was a school bus that was hit by a train, and every time we drive by Lamont or go to Lamont for a family function, my mom tells me about that accident. She wasn't on the bus, but she knew some of the kids who were, and she definitely knew all the families, and it has had a lasting impact on somebody who was, you know, not directly impacted. But it impacted the community. It impacted our province. I know that the same is true for Humboldt.

I have to say how disheartened I was to have learned recently through media reports about the government's intention to delay and dismiss important measures that can act to heighten safety. I think that 6,800 trucks and bus drivers having less than what I would say is appropriate safety training is not in the public interest, and it shouldn't be in the government's interest either. I know that's been confirmed, that there is potentially an indefinite delay. That's been confirmed with the Alberta Motor Transport Association. That is deeply concerning. I think a delay in acting to save lives is an injustice in this place.

I'm going to mention two other things: the intersection of highways 35 and 335. That is an intersection where there is constant agricultural traffic. Of course, when we saw the footage, it wasn't an agricultural vehicle. It was another vehicle that was involved in striking the bus, but if it would have been a load of grain, I don't think anyone would have felt any better about it. Delaying safety standards for folks who are driving those vehicles puts them at risk as well as those on the road who aren't driving those vehicles.

The minister absolutely has the opportunity to stick with what he said in June. In June he said that they were going to be funding this important initiative to make sure that there was this heightened safety. Definitely, it appears through other media reports that funding is not going to be a priority for this government, something that could have been committed to – it was committed to in June – and could have been followed through on.

I want to say that I've been in your shoes. I've been sitting on the front bench where somebody made a decision before me, and it was up to me to make a decision whether or not we wanted to follow through on a decision that was made previously. This decision I'm speaking specifically to was when I was Minister of Health, and a former minister of seniors had announced that they were going to put sprinklers in seniors' homes, but there wasn't money in the budget. There was no money put aside for it, but the announcement had been made by the previous government, and I was in a position where I had to make a decision about what we were going to do. I wasn't going to live with the risk that seniors were going to be in seniors' lodges that weren't safe. I wasn't willing, knowing how many seniors use walkers, use wheelchairs, and aren't able to flee from a burning building, to take that risk for those seniors.

So I went to my Premier, and I said, "I'm going to make this announcement, and it's not yet in the budget, so I need you to have my back and say that we're going to make sure that we put this funding forward," and my Premier had my back because she cared about those seniors and about the families who were worried about their well-being. This minister can do the same. This minister absolutely can go to his Premier and say: this is the right thing to do.

I've talked to the families. The families have demonstrated that they feel this is important, and certainly a significant number of Albertans and Canadians feel that this is important. Yes, it will cost some money, but it's not worth the risk. Please don't make other families go through the devastation that they have already experienced. Please don't make other community members, every time they drive by that intersection or the next intersection, have that same knot in their stomach when they tell their families the story about what happened.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I know that it takes some courage, and I know that sometimes it can be challenging when you don't feel that you've got the money in your budget, but these kids' lives and all of our lives are worth the investment in increasing our safety on our roads. I don't just want to hear, "Yes, I'm going to look at it; I'm going to consider it down the road." I want to hear, "Yes, this is a priority; yes, it will be funded; and, yes, we will act to make our roads safer." I know that sometimes it can be challenging, but I think that today is the day.

We all ran, I hope, to make this province a better place and to make our communities safer and more successful for all, and this is an opportunity to do that today. That seniors' lodge example, I hope, is something for folks to reflect on. I definitely see the parallels myself.

With that, I'll cede my time. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to begin my remarks, of course, by acknowledging and thanking the family members of not only the Humboldt tragedy but the tragedy that occurred in B.C. for being here and for advocating so hard and so thoughtfully and so earnestly for a change in law that would take the otherwise meaninglessness of their tragedy and mitigate it ever so slightly by saving the lives of many other Albertans and, ultimately, Canadians through your efforts. I want to thank you so much for your courageous presence here because I can't imagine that it is easy at the best of times, and I can't imagine that it's easy sometimes to watch the back and forth in this Legislature and feel tremendous faith, necessarily, in our ability to focus on the matter at hand. So I want to thank you for that.

I do also want to thank most of the members opposite for agreeing with us to have this debate and certainly the minister, who has indicated that he is willing to give this a little bit more consideration. I think, at the end of the day, that's what this House should do when it works the way it is intended, which is something that, you know, happens about once every 365 days, but maybe today will be that day.

What I really want to focus on, then, is to talk about the matter that we are hoping to achieve through this conversation today, to talk about the goal that the families and probably hundreds of thousands of other families across Alberta want to see us achieve, which is simply to make our roads safer, to make the people who travel on our roads safer, to make our kids who travel from point A to point B with school, with soccer, with hockey, with dance, with whatever safer, to make the people who work for us safer, the people that drive those vehicles safer. That's what we are here to talk about today.

And how do we do that? That is, really, the focus that I want to try to maintain and to back away as much as possible from the "he said, she said; he's worse, she's worse" kind of conversation that we can be tempted to fall into.

Thus far in this conversation the concerns that have been expressed are that we are unsure of what is happening with respect to the roughly 6,800 new drivers – and that's a number that we got from the government, we think, through reports in the media – who would have been licensed between October '18 and March of 2019. That's one group of people that we want to talk about for a minute.

The other group of people we want to talk about are those folks who work in the agriculture sector who drive heavy-load vehicles and who we believe may not be currently meeting the standards through MELT, either the training or the testing, and for whom there has been an extension and for whom there has been another extension for quite a bit longer and for whom there is now some concern that there might be an indefinite extension. Through that concern with that group we are also worried that if that extension were allowed to continue for any length of time, whether that will become a loophole through which other companies will travel in order to extract drivers who otherwise will not have to take the testing and earn the associated costs but will otherwise be able to be on the road doing a much broader form of driving of semis and moving other products.

Then the third group we are concerned about, of course, is school bus drivers and the training that they would be expected to follow.

Those are the things that we are worried about. If there is confusion, it's because there's been confusion in how it's been communicated. Different people in different settings have suggested that there are different outcomes. If there is confusion, it is not contrary to what the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre would suggest. It's not some big conspiracy; it is simply that there is confusion. At the same time there is confusion about an issue about which many, many Albertans are concerned. But I think those are the three areas that we're mostly addressing, dealing with right now.

Now, one of the things that the Minister of Transportation has suggested is that, "Well, we had to, you know, write off these 6,800 people, and we had to extend for at least two years and maybe indefinitely for these other folks because there are half the number of driver examiners available" because our government took steps to change the way people in Alberta had their licence issued. So let me just talk about that for a moment. I was actually around the table, contrary to some of the assertions that have been made that this was all something that was brought on by something that was going to happen in the U.S. two years from now. That's not what happened. We were around the table when this happened.

The reason the change was made to the examiners and how they were paid and how they were overseen and who employed them and whether they were independent contractors or not was primarily related to a number of the concerns that were delineated, I think, by the Member for Lethbridge-West but generally speaking, concerns that, in some cases, there was abuse by those private operators, certainly not all. Some of them were great people doing a great job and working very hard. By no means are we suggesting that that wasn't the majority, but there was a large enough minority of that group that it was incumbent upon us to step in, not only because consumers were having their rights jeopardized, not only because in some cases people were overpaying through the nose for these services in certain parts of the province but also because, at the end of the day, it came down to the issue of safety. If you couldn't trust the people that were giving people licences to be on the road, then, obviously, that becomes a matter of safety.

So that's why we stepped in. But, of course, it was happening at the same time that we were also trying to improve significantly the level of training that these drivers would receive before they went onto the road with these very big vehicles that could be dangerous if people didn't know how to drive them. That was a problem, no question.

What needs to be understood, though, is that when the members opposite say, "Oh, they were down to half the number of examiners, and therefore we had to blow up the whole situation," most of those examiners worked part-time. When we hired a whole bunch of new ones, they were working full-time. In fact, our sources tell us that certainly not by March 1 – that's absolutely true – but by the end of April our capacity with respect to the ability to train and to examine was almost back to where it was at the outset. Now, even if it wasn't quite there, the question is: is it delayed by another month or two? I don't know. Maybe. But is it delayed by two years or indefinitely or to never? No.

I don't think that it is a fair characterization of this debate or that it is the most straightforward way to engage in this debate by trying to say that we had to exempt the 6,800 and exempt the school drivers and exempt the farm people because of the change in the way drivers' examiners were paid and employed. I think it was a problem, for sure. I take full responsibility. It was a problem, but it's also a fixable problem, and it was well on the way to being fixed, so let's focus on fixing the problem. Let's move away from who was in charge for how long and didn't do this and who tried to fix it and maybe it wasn't fixed the right way or whether it was fixed before or after the election. Let's move away from that. This is a process that was in transition that we can fix or we cannot fix. Let's just focus on fixing it because safety is really what's at the heart of the issue. If we move beyond that and imagine that we should have, if we haven't already, gotten ourselves back up to and beyond capacity when it comes to training and examining, we should be able to, and there should be no barrier to that because we were awfully close as of April. That's the first thing.

So then what do we do about these other three groups? There are these 6,800 folks. We announced it in October, and then we brought it into effect in March. Now, we delayed it until March because we were told by ministry officials that we wouldn't have the capacity to start the work until then. As it turned out, it was a bit later, but that's what we were told. We also announced that it was going to happen because we wanted to give those in the industry time to adjust and to seek out other forms of training if it was possible and to start the work of being safer.

The concern we had, though, was that if we didn't make everybody between October and March subject to these rules, some of the not good players in the industry – and let me be clear. There are many good players in the industry, great, responsible players within the trucking industry, but there were some who were trying to slip underneath and who were making shortcuts, and that's where they saw that they were making money. They were the ones – the bad actors, we'll call them. We were worried that those folks were going to try to get thousands and thousands of people licensed in that window in order to game the system and get there before the new rules were in place. That's why we said: "No. You won't take the training until March, but you need to know that you're going to be compelled to take the training even if you get your licence in December, so don't rush it. Don't think you can game the situation because we're closing that loophole." That was the point of creating that.

But then what's happened now, by saying that 6,800 are exempt, is that we've essentially rewarded those bad actors, and I don't know why we would do that. If it takes a bit more time to get those folks trained, to get them examined, why don't we just do it? You know, we don't have to just say willy-nilly that those 6,800 brand new drivers are okely-dokely to drive on the highway. We can still compel them to be trained. We can still compel them to take the test as they would have in March if we'd had enough people, as they would have in April because we probably had enough people at that point. There's no need to just let them stay out there driving and earning their experience at the expense of our safety. That's not the right way to go, and that's what these families are fighting very hard against.

Now, the next group that we need to talk about, of course, is heavy-load truckers in the agriculture industry. Again, we know and the member opposite, I think, acknowledged that there are some small sectors within that industry where this is an area that could be abused and has been abused. It's a relatively small area of the agricultural industry, but if that exemption remains in place, whether it be one year, two years, or indefinitely, then that will become a pipeline, if you will, for a huge swath of drivers who work their way through that, don't incur the cost of training and licensing, and then suddenly are able to use that experience there to get themselves onto the road driving these big rigs, which was exactly the problem that led to the Humboldt tragedy in the first place, having people that were not properly trained.

I would urge the government to shut that down, to say no to the rather compelling, pervasive, loud-voiced lobbyists to whom they have been exposed. We know who they are. We met with them. We know what you're hearing, and we know what you can say no to. It can be done. Say no to them on that and just insist that everybody be subject to the training. If the issue is funding for particularly precarious operators within the agriculture industry, well, then fine. Consider whether there might be an opportunity to set up grants or whatever so those folks can get the support they need to ensure the safety that we all need on our roads. That's a different way of fixing the problem without generating the kinds of safety risks that not fixing the problem generates.

The final thing I want to talk about is the school buses. You're right; for years and years and years the school bus drivers were not properly trained. I rode on a school bus. There are days when I am shocked that I'm still here. You know, it was quite the operation: no seat belts, overcrowded with kids, sliding all over the icy roads.

Yes, we had some times in the ditch, lovely times when it was minus 40 out and we went into the ditch and waited for two hours for somebody to come and drag us out. Good times. Not safe. Therefore, the fact that we did it before is not an argument for why we should continue to do it. When we were told that we should be raising the standards, we said: yes, we should be raising the standards.

Now, the minister is correct. In both of those examples we did give an extension. Because the thing came into force in March, we said, "You know what? Right on the eve of seeding, maybe that's too fast. They won't have time to get these folks up to speed" if it was the farming sector. For schooling we said: "You know what? The boards will not necessarily have the money. They won't have the time to get all these folks up to speed that quickly, and many of them struggle to find bus drivers in certain areas, so what we'll do is that we will delay it until September and let both of those groups take the summer to get the training done." That was the only reason we delayed it. We didn't delay it because of any expected shortfall of trainers or licensors. We didn't delay it for money reasons. We didn't delay it for lobbying. We simply delayed it to ensure that it did not disrupt the services that they were providing. We thought: "No. We'll give them lots of notice, and they can get it done in the summer and be ready for September 1." That was the only extension, so I don't understand now why we would be extending for a year or two years or three years.

With the schools I suspect the reason that we're extending is because it is costly to school boards to train all their school bus drivers, but I say: who cares? I honestly can't imagine that a single one of the members opposite or at least the rural members opposite would want to look at their constituents and say: we don't have enough money to make sure that school bus drivers are adequately trained to keep your kids safe. You know what? Give them a grant so they get the training.

Ms Hoffman: Pay for it.

Ms Notley: Pay for it. Get your school boards to pay for it. Don't say: "Well, it's all up to the school boards. School boards can make their own decisions. They're really superindependent." You're not independent if you don't have your own revenue-generating option. It has to be a question of ensuring everybody has safety and everybody can afford safety. So yeah, pay for it. Safety is worth it. I would argue that safety is worth it.

In the overall scheme of things the cost is not by any means undoable. We're talking about, you know, I think, at most 100 hours of training. It's a two-week course or a two and a half week course. It's probably less than that for school bus drivers. I absolutely believe that this is an investment that we should be making in our kids, in our workers, in our citizens who are on the roads, whether they're on the roads as passengers or drivers. Whether they're on the roads as residents or business leaders, doing economic travelling or vacation travelling or schooling travelling, it doesn't matter. The reality is that we know it's not as safe as it should be. We can fix this.

The solution is not that expensive, it's not that complicated, and there is no need to be considering extensions of one year, two years, or indefinite. There is no need to be allowing those 6,800 people to remain on the road right now. You need to draw a line in the sand somewhere. That's exactly what we did in October. By not following that, you run the risk of having even more poorly trained people than normal because those folks rushed in after the announcement was made, before the training started, so you cannot let them get away with that gaming.

They're simple solutions. I would urge the minister to ask his officials to be significantly more transparent and clear on what is happening. I would urge them to set up a website and show who is being trained, when the training is available, how many people have been trained, how much it's costing, you know, what the criteria are. The best way to avoid confusion is to be clear and consistent on what exactly is going on. Be clear and consistent about what is going on, and then raise your standards. Take it back to where it was, because we were on the path to being the safest jurisdiction as opposed to a destination jurisdiction for bad actors, which we were before. We should get back to that, and then we should keep our minds open to anything else we need to do to promote safety.

We can do all that to honour the memories of the victims of the Humboldt tragedy and to honour the memories of many, many, many other victims of a failure to keep our roads safe that has been created over many, many, many years in the past. We can do better, and this government can do better. I think that our debate should be focused solely on those issues, not about who caused what and, you know, who did what well and who said what in a completely different conversation on a different topic that's completely unrelated but, rather, about how we just get to a pragmatic, practical solution that keeps our people safe. That's what these folks up in the gallery are asking for, and that is, I think, what this government has to deliver.

I look forward to hearing and seeing the kind of transparency and clarity that I believe the families and all Albertans are looking for in terms of safety standards in this province. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, shall I call the question?

[Motion carried]

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 16

Public Lands Modernization (Grazing Leases and Obsolete Provisions) Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, for recognizing me this evening. I rise today to introduce for second reading the Public Lands Modernization (Grazing Leases and Obsolete Provisions) Amendment Act, 2019.

Madam Speaker, as you know, the ranching and cattle industry provides a vital role in our province, contributing to the environmental, economic, and social landscapes of Alberta. In order to ensure Alberta's hard-working ranchers can continue to protect the environment and help support our economy into the future, we need to take some action.

Now, the cattle rancher is a powerful symbol in Alberta of what it means to be Albertan: rugged, salt of the earth, and self-sustaining. Madam Speaker, as you know, I'm proud to come from Sundre, from the riding of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, to live west of the 22, as we call it there. Some of you would call it west of the 5th. Where I come from, we would refer to that as west of the 22, which is west of the Cowboy Trail. In Sundre we consider ourselves the crown jewel of the Cowboy Trail, the beating heart of the Cowboy Trail. It is definitely a cattle community that has existed in this province for a very, very long time.

The ranching industry, though, is modernizing, and government should take its lead from them because Albertans deserve fair value for our shared resources and ranchers deserve a predictable and innovative approach. As such, our government is moving to modernize the grazing fee framework so that it's transparent and fair for ranchers and disposition holders. Updating this framework will reflect current economic realities and will ensure that Alberta is receiving market value for its public land resources. Since grazing disposition rental rates have been frozen for so long, changes will be introduced through a five-year phase-in to ensure that there are no sudden changes to costs to ranchers and disposition holders.

The bill enjoys support from all of the province's major grazing stakeholders, a testament to this government's commitment to engagement and transparency through this process. I think it's important to re-emphasize that point. This bill enjoys support from every major grazing stakeholder in the province. That is a sharp contrast to the last pieces of agriculture legislation that we saw the former NDP government bring to this Chamber. Yesterday we stood on the stairs of the Chamber. Behind us was the support of every grazing association in the province. When that government brought forward agriculture legislation in this place – Madam Speaker, I don't have to tell you – there were a lot of farmers and ranchers standing on the stairs of the Legislature, but they certainly weren't there in support of that government's legislation. They were there against it, primarily because that government, the NDP government at the time, did not even take the time to consult with those very members. We have a different approach. This piece of legislation shows that.

It also shows our dedication to the ranching and farming communities inside our province, how much we respect and appreciate their contribution to our economy. The NDP – and this probably is why they don't have any rural members inside their caucus. They don't have any members that represent large agriculture communities because when they spoke and brought in legislation in regard to farming and ranching inside this Legislature, right here in this very spot, they spoke about comments like the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, at the time when he was the Finance minister, who rose inside this House and implied that farmers and ranchers in Alberta needed Bill 6, that they hadn't consulted with them about, because farmers and ranchers were trying to hurt their employees. You can go and check Hansard about that, Madam Speaker. It happened live in this Chamber. I know you were sitting there at the time, watching, likely with the same reaction that I had, quite appalled on behalf of my constituents that a then minister of the NDP would imply that the farming and ranching communities that I am proud to represent would in some way deliberately try to hurt their employees.

Now, if they had taken time to consult, as we had, they would know that those are not the farm and ranching communities that I come from; they're not the farming and ranching communities any of my colleagues come from. I'm proud to call ranchers my neighbours and my friends.

Importantly, though, as well, the bill will also help us avoid possible trade countervails from the United States under NAFTA. Now, Madam Speaker, you may not be aware that in 1999 a United States Department of Commerce countervailing duty investigation identified grazing rental rates as a significant contributor to the subsidization of the Canadian cattle industry. If a countervail investigation was launched today, there is a risk of a subsidy and a duty being imposed on the Canadian cattle industry, not just the Canadian cattle industry that uses grazing leases inside our province but on the entire Canadian cattle industry.

This is an issue and a risk that the cattle industry has faced for a long time, that they have raised both with this government and with the previous government. In fact, I was shocked to know that the previous government did not act on this despite the fact that grazing associations and the cattle industry were very clear with them, is my understanding, as to the risk to the cattle industry, again, I would submit to you, Madam Speaker, showing the complete disconnect that is the NDP with rural Alberta, with agriculture communities in particular. If passed, Bill 16 will help to mitigate that threat.

Simply put, the current grazing rental rates have been frozen for 25 years, Madam Speaker, and they are drastically in need of updating. Many of these changes will bring us into harmony with other jurisdictions, including the province of Saskatchewan, to the east of us. They will also remove barriers to succession or entry of young people into the industry, an important step in order to keep the industry thriving for generations to come.

There are several additional changes outlined in the bill, all aimed at benefiting the ranching community and Albertans as a whole. In order to streamline our government system, we are proposing changes which allow for updates to rental rate formulas to recognize a two-zone grazing system, with boundaries that recognize the true cost of maintaining a grazing disposition and the differences faced by ranchers in northern and southern Alberta. As you know, Madam Speaker, ranching up in High Level, with its climate and shorter growing seasons, brings challenges that they don't see in Lethbridge or even in my home of Sundre, and our new rental rate formula takes that into account. Two zones employ a different minimal rental rate charge when profits are low to reflect differences in capital cost. As profits rise, the rental rates will increase, and the formula will capture a progressively greater share.

If this bill is passed into law – and I do hope all members of the Chamber will support this important piece of legislation – we plan to annually allocate 30 per cent of grazing disposition rental revenue above $2.9 million in rangeland sustainability initiatives. To be clear on that, Madam Speaker, we intend to take 30 per cent of the increase in grazing disposition fees and invest it back in rangeland sustainability initiatives. This will ensure that Alberta receives a fair share for the use of our resources and that, when market conditions are good, a substantial amount of money is dedicated to supporting rangeland sustainability through proactive partnerships.

While more details of the exact programs being funded will be determined once the legislation is passed, we do believe that this could include improvements to existing research and better rangeland management. We already have stuff, Madam Speaker, inside our platform around this. Our platform promised to invest over $1 million in a program called cows and fish, that works with the agriculture community on important waterways in grazing areas to be able to protect fish habitat. It also means support for programs that will benefit our shared environment, namely the wetlands and grasslands Albertans treasure so much. This is also one of many legislative changes that demonstrates our government's commitment to create a fair and balanced system that supports the environment and helps grow the economy.

Madam Speaker, passing Bill 16 will support our ranchers now and for the years to come while ensuring that Albertans remain leaders in the ranching industry, an industry that has deep ties to our past and to our future. I truly believe that ranching and our agriculture community are integral to the future of our province. They are our second-largest industry. We depend on them. In many ways they've helped keep us going over the last few years.

While the former government continued their prolonged attack on our largest industry, the oil and gas industry, our farming and ranching community has stood up and fought for this province despite the fact that they had to work with a government that thought – it's appalling to me that the last time we saw a major piece of legislation associated with ranching or agriculture in this House, the former Finance minister, the worst Finance minister in the history of this province, the Member for Calgary-Fort stood in this very Chamber and implied that my neighbours and my friends and the people of the hard-working ranching and farming community inside this province were somehow deliberately trying to hurt their employees.

Madam Speaker, through you to them . . .

Ms Hoffman: That's not true.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora saying that it's not true. You could check it on Facebook. It's on my Facebook page, has been for years because I confronted him about it that day.

That's the history of this former government when it comes to agriculture. We have a different approach. We will continue to partner with our second-largest industry, make sure that they can benefit the province for future generations to come, and stand with them because that's what matters. We are about jobs, the economy, and pipelines, Madam Speaker, but we recognize on this side of the House that it's not just the energy industry, though that's important, that we have other industries, including forestry and agriculture and others inside this province. Through you to them, to the agriculture and ranching community, I want them to know that their new Alberta government stands with the ranching and agriculture community side by side.

We value their benefit to both the economic development of our province but also to the environmental protection of our province. The importance of ranching and grazing, the importance of that industry to our environmental protection inside this province cannot be overstated, Madam Speaker.

We will continue to stand with them. We will continue to work to always get the best deal that we can for the farming and ranching communities and the best deal for Albertans, a sharp contrast to the former government. I'm excited about that, and I do look forward – and I do hope that all members of the Legislature support this important piece of legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, to be clear, you're moving second reading?

Mr. Jason Nixon: That's what I said.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this important piece of legislation, which will affect the farmers and ranchers of our province on an issue that we began to work on when we were government as well. We support the bill that the current government is continuing with. We applaud their good work in moving forward with this. It's part of a way of demonstrating that the economy and the environment can go hand in hand.

I think that stewardship of our grazing lands is something that Alberta farmers and ranchers take very seriously. They've demonstrated this by their advocacy to have this piece of legislation brought forward. I know that there was a concern over the risk of a potential countervailing action taking place by the United States if, indeed, these measures weren't taken, and I'm glad to see that we are moving forward with them. They will have my support. That's for sure.

I know that many Albertans don't realize, I think, that the figure is that 14 per cent of all our forage that our cattle consume actually comes from these grazing leases, so it's an important part of the makeup of the nourishment that our cattle herd actually receives. Protection of these lands is important, and ensuring that they're fairly distributed and that fair payment for those grazing leases is achieved is something that we're pleased to see implemented in this proposed legislation. The new formula for grazing leases is oriented toward market conditions and fluctuates with the price of cattle, and that, I think, is a reasonable way to go. Phasing it in over four or five years, of course, as the minister indicated, will soften the blow.

When in conversation with the people who came to the Legislature yesterday, I sat down and ate my lunch and talked with them. Some of them, of course, reacted knowledgeably to my comment about how the added costs of this would have to be borne by them because it is certainly something that's going to increase in cost. It's not often that you'll hear an advocacy group suggest, you know, that "it's time to increase the cost on us," but indeed they realized the risk of not doing this, and they were willing to pay their fair share for the privilege of grazing their cattle on these leases and entering into these leases. The opportunity to finally finalize a new modernization of this grazing lease legislation is something that they may welcome. We welcome it as well, and we look forward to supporting the bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Our world is constantly changing every day. Twenty-five years ago not everyone had a computer at home. It was only about three years after that that the World Wide Web became public, and four years after that we had Google, every university student's favourite friend. Now we have computers in our pockets. We can live stream things online, including the proceedings in this beautiful Chamber, and we can search anything on Google and talk to someone across the world instantly. Twenty-five years ago even some of the members in this Chamber weren't even born or were toddlers, and I would love to consider myself part of that group, but that would be false. Now we look to what our constituents want, and we're advocating for them.

Madam Speaker, I'm not saying any of this to make anyone feel old, but I'm trying to make a point that in 25 years, a quarter of a century, our world has rapidly modernized, and it doesn't take much to look around to notice it. That's why our government is determined to pass this Bill 16, and I hope that members of this Chamber will vote in favour of it, the public lands modernization act. This is based on our commitment to keep Alberta's ranching industry thriving now and in the future, an industry that, particularly in Cardston-Siksika, is near and dear to my heart and essential and vital. It only makes sense that our government create the conditions so that one of our most historic practices, that which shaped our province's history, can continue to thrive in the modern economy.

Madam Speaker, of all of these things that have changed over the years, from music to culture and technology, one thing has remained completely consistent: people have to eat. We depend on our ranchers and farmers to produce the food that ends up on our tables, and sometimes I find there's a disconnect between where people think their food comes from and where it actually comes from. The fact of the matter is that it doesn't come from a grocery store. Someone gets up early in the morning every day year-round to make sure we have food that we can purchase and create meals and feed our families and ourselves. That's why our government wants to ensure that our ranchers and beef producers are set up for continued success as they play an important part in our provincial economy and the environment.

Bill 16 will continue with our province's high environmental standards, that we have worked so hard to build and maintain throughout our province's history. This legislation will modernize the public land grazing disposition fee framework, which is to decide the amount of rent and fees that are paid by ranchers for the use of public lands. It will also lead to the establishment of dedicated revenue that will support rangeland sustainability initiatives to ensure the long-term success of the industry and the environmental health and sustainability of Alberta's rangelands. This bill also updates Alberta's current grazing zones and removes outdated regulatory requirements, something the government has been committed to for a while now. The changes implemented will allow for the creation of a rent framework that is fair and transparent, Madam Speaker, and reflects current economic realities faced by our province. We want to ensure that Alberta receives a fair return for our natural resources.

Our current grazing rental framework is outdated. It was implemented in 1960, and the rates have been frozen since '94. Alberta has had the same rates now for 25 years. Madam Speaker, when you get a notification on your phone or your computer saying, "Hey, it's time to update your operating system," you know how most of us react; it's "Remind me later." Well, successive governments have been hitting the Remind Me Later button on our grazing framework for 25 years now. It is time for us to go ahead and press the update button. By using market-based rental rates rather than outdated arbitrary rates, it reduces the risk of trade actions. Our government realizes that we cannot continue to operate this way. That is why we're taking action. Our government has worked very closely with industry and stakeholders to get their feedback and listen to their concerns so that we can create a comprehensive solution.

Madam Speaker, this is something that I wish the previous government had done on the famous antifarm legislation, something that I talked to grazing lease holders, farmers, and ranchers about across my constituency of Cardston-Siksika, and none of them were consulted. Rather, they didn't feel consulted, and they definitely didn't feel like they were heard. But I can tell you that in the short time since the election in April I have been contacted by numerous agricultural producers, telling them the dramatic shift between the current government stance on agriculture and how we've been consulting them versus the previous government. One even went as far as saying that he tried for four years to get a meeting with the former minister of agriculture, who is no longer in this House, but since the election he's had three meetings with the minister of agriculture. That is the difference. It's a stark contrast, and it's exactly why the previous government was voted out with historic numbers.

We've gotten widespread support from the ministry with these proposed changes. One of the new initiatives that we're proposing is a dedicated revenue stream to proactively invest in rangeland sustainability initiatives. Not only will this dedicated revenue stream support and improve existing initiatives within our role as government and as landowners and resource managers; it will also ensure the long-term sustainability of rangeland areas. If this bill becomes law, we plan to annually allocate 30 per cent of grazing disposition rental revenue, which is over $2.9 million, Madam Speaker, to rangeland sustainability initiatives. Wow. That's a big number, and that's something I'm really excited about. It will ensure that Albertans receive a fair share for use of their resources. When market conditions are good, a substantial amount of money is dedicated to support rangeland sustainability through proactive partnerships.

There are some more details in this legislation that can come into effect if it is passed such as improvements in existing research and in rangeland management practices. This would maintain Alberta's position as a leader in rangeland management.

Our government is also proposing changes that will allow for updates to the rental rate formula to recognize a two-zone grazing system with a boundary that recognizes the true costs of maintaining a grazing disposition and the different geographies and contexts in which ranchers in northern and southern Alberta operate. Different areas of Alberta experience varying weather conditions that impact their seasons of farming and growing crops. It doesn't take a genius or a geologist to know that. You just have to simply go outside, wait 15 minutes, and the weather is likely to change. For example, ranching in High Level, with its colder climate and shorter growing season, brings more challenges than when normally started earlier in the season in southern Alberta. Our new rental rate formula takes this into account.

Our government's proposed changes also include a switch to a flat-rate assignment fee, which is to say the amount paid to transfer a disposition to another individual. This will help remove barriers to entry into the industry and align with assignment fees charged for all other public land dispositions.

These changes will transition Alberta's beef industry to a future that is sustainable and based on sound environmental practices. Our ranchers and farmers are vital to our economy and livelihood in our province. Without farmers and ranchers, we would have to rely heavily on imports of all of our food, which would be costly for all Albertans, similar to the way that eastern Canada relies heavily on conflict oil from Venezuela and Saudi Arabia, something that we could change with a pipeline to the east. But I digress.

Alberta is known for amazing beef, and it would be a shame if our ranchers were forced to stop raising Alberta beef because they cannot afford the outdated fees. Our ranchers and farmers are not getting the best or a modern deal for allowing their animals to graze. Our government is committed to creating a fair and balanced system that not only grows the economy but also protects the environment. This is one of the many legislative changes that demonstrates that.

Our government is committed to also reducing red tape that burdens our hard-working Albertans. We are shocked that it took 25 years for a government to update their rental rates. It just shows where our loyalty lies. This government is committed to our agriculture sector.

While the previous NDP government implemented bills and taxes that hurt Alberta ranchers and farmers, our government has been working with them to ensure that they get a fair deal. This is because our government understands the needs and the concerns of ranchers. All you have to do, Madam Speaker, is talk to them, something that, unfortunately, the previous government failed to do over and over and over.

We have many United Conservative MLAs and a minister who are and have been ranchers. They know how difficult these fees can be when the weather gets too cold or snow is unexpected in the province. We were elected to be advocates for the people who are not getting a fair deal due to unfair legislation that was implemented by our previous governments, not only unfair legislation but incredibly outdated. All of us may live in a modern world, Madam Speaker, but our farmers are still getting the same fees from 25 years ago, and they are stuck in the past.

When I was visiting the Lethbridge tractor show not long ago, I took a walk around the expo facility. It doesn't take long to see the modernization of farm work and farm capabilities in this province and across the country, so if we're modernizing our equipment and modernizing our practices, we most certainly should be modernizing our legislation. It's our job as representatives of all Albertans, including farmers, that we propose amendments to outdated legislation. I'm surprised that it took three different governments to implement a change and update this legislation. We were elected to bring jobs to Alberta, to make sure that the economy is doing better than it was under the previous NDP government, and to ensure that unnecessary red tape does not hinder Albertans. Modernizing this act will do just that.

It will also ensure that Alberta ranchers and farmers are able to continue their work providing food for Albertans. By providing rental rates that are responsive to market conditions and reducing financial barriers to new producers entering the cattle industry, we are thus creating more jobs. It will be responsive to market conditions to ensure that all Albertans, producers and consumers, are getting a fair deal, and it will reduce red tape and create a system that is transparent and fair for all. Transparency: something a little bit foreign to the previous government.

Our government is working hard to maintain our campaign promises that we were elected for, and we also want to do this in an environmentally sustainable way. This bill will use a portion of the rental revenue to support rangeland sustainability initiatives to ensure a long-term sustainability in Alberta's rangeland through proactive investment. We have put a lot of effort into ensuring that our ranchers are getting a modern and fair deal. It's 2019, Madam Speaker. It's about time.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Under 29(2)(a).

The Deputy Speaker: You should stand a little quicker, hon. member. I will allow you, though, this time and this time only to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was just struck, again, when the Member for Cardston-Siksika was speaking, about the importance that the industry has on the day-to-day lives of his constituents and the economy and about the really personal impact, how it affects the lives of those constituents. I was wondering if he could speak a bit more as to how this bill will help improve the lives of constituents in or out of the cattle industry.

Mr. Schow: Well, Madam Speaker, I'd be happy to respond to that question. I think, actually, the better answer is just given by talking about the general direction this government is going, which starts with consultation. When I was campaigning for this provincial election, I heard time and time again from agriculture producers how upset they were with the way they were treated by the previous government, how Bill 6 affected their livelihoods and their ability to operate family farms and do what they do best. You know, they create jobs, and they grow our food, and they raise our food. They make it so we can buy our food at the grocery store.

But the reality is that I think it really came down to this level of respect that we do have and a respect for the people that we work for. It's unfortunate that I heard all these stories, because you'd think that a government elected by the people, one that at the time represented a number of rural areas, would be in touch with their constituents in rural Alberta. But it's apparent to me and became very apparent with every bill they passed that agriculture and oil and gas, for that matter, were at the bottom of the priority list. You know, we can serve up Albertans platitudes on a silver plate all day long, but the actions speak far louder than the words. The previous government made it apparent to us that agriculture really was not a priority for them.

It was interesting when the Leader of the Opposition said recently that she was surprised that she's still here. Well, frankly, so am I. You know, the reality is that Alberta repudiated the previous government with record numbers. Well over a million votes were cast in favour of this United Conservative government because we put forward a clear and transparent campaign platform that put the needs of Alberta on the front page: jobs, economy, pipelines. What creates jobs? Albertans create jobs, and a big part of that is our agriculture sector. Our producers are grateful – they're grateful – for the direction this government is taking in the relationship that we are building with our agriculture producers.

Madam Speaker, you know, I'm grateful to stand here today to talk about this bill because we are modernizing legislation in our agriculture sector, something the previous government failed to do, something that we're committed to doing. It's the first of what will be, I'm certain, many more pieces of legislation that show our commitment to Albertans, to our oil and gas sector, to our job creators, to the small businesses, and, of course, agriculture.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will conclude my remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, first, I just want to start off by saying that I love Alberta beef. I mean, who doesn't? In my opinion, it is the best-quality and absolutely the best-tasting beef in the world bar none. But we would not be able to have such amazing beef without our ranchers. They work day and night year-round to provide not only for their families but also for Albertans and Canadians.

Many take for granted the work that is put into ranching. As a society we are often removed from the source where our food comes from. It doesn't come from Safeway, Madam Speaker; it comes from our farmers and ranchers. There are many steps involved in bringing beef to market and before we can enjoy it at our dinner tables. Ranchers must ensure that they have suitable land that is not only ample in size but is also fertile to allow the animals to graze. Ranchers have to feed and water their cattle daily, especially in winter, when there is not visible food for the herd to graze.

Ranchers must also ensure that their cattle are safe and healthy throughout the year. When animals are healthy and well, all is well. But sometimes animals get sick or grow old. Not only do ranchers have to worry about their animals and their health but also about constant concerns over weather and food supply for their animals, not to mention all the details that contribute to the life of a rancher. Waking up before the sun is up and working way past sundown, a lot goes into this job. I have such respect for our farmers and ranchers such as my friends the Balisky family, friends who farm near my constituency of Grande Prairie. I have been out to the Balisky farm during calving, and it is definitely a 24/7 responsibility, not for the faint of heart, for sure.

Our government realizes the struggles of ranchers. Many of our United Conservative members are ranchers or farmers themselves. They have shared stories and advocated for ranchers across this province. That is why our government is introducing Bill 16, the public lands modernization amendment act. We have a commitment to keep Alberta's ranching industry thriving not only now but far into the future, Madam Speaker. We understand that Alberta's ranchers and beef producers play an important and pivotal role in our provincial economy and in the care of our environment as well.

We know the concerns and issues that ranchers face with this outdated act. That is why our government wants to ensure that our cattle industry is set up for continued success. We will do this by modernizing the public lands grazing disposition fee framework. This outlines the amount of rent and fees paid by ranchers for the use of public lands. It will also update Alberta's current grazing zones and will remove outdated regulatory requirements.

Our government is determined to maintain the highest environmental standards, that our province has worked so hard to implement over the years. This act will lead to the establishment of a dedicated revenue stream that will support rangeland sustainability initiatives. This will ensure the long-term success of the industry and the environmental health and sustainability of Alberta's rangelands.

The changes that this bill will make include allowing for the creation of a rent framework that is both fair and transparent and better reflects the current economic realities faced by our province by ensuring that Alberta receives a fair return for its natural resources. Our economic realities are very different than in 1994. We are recovering currently from the former NDP government, who through their policies caused significant economic challenges for our province.

Currently Alberta's grazing rental framework is outdated and not responsive to today's realities in ranching. It was first implemented in 1960 – in 1960, Madam Speaker – almost 60 years ago, and we have had the same rates for the past quarter of a century. I can certainly attest to the fact that a lot has changed in the past 25 years, yet for 25 years we've been using the same arbitrary rates, and it is definitely time for an update. By using market-based rental rates, we are reducing the risk for trade actions.

We are not going to stand back and allow outdated bills to determine the viability of our ranchers and their ongoing ability to produce food for Albertans and for Canadians, for that matter. But it does not surprise me that the previous NDP government did not take action to modernize this bill. They definitely have a track record of not caring about our farmers and ranchers and not demonstrating that meaningfully to the farmers and ranchers.

In contrast, this government has been working very closely with industry stakeholders in order to create a comprehensive solution. We value the feedback and concerns they have expressed. The proposed changes are getting widespread support from industry and, in fact, have come largely from the industry's suggestions. One of the new initiatives we are proposing is a dedicated revenue stream to proactively invest in rangeland sustainability initiatives. This dedicated stream of revenue will support and improve existing initiatives within the government's role as both landowner and resource manager and will ensure the long-term sustainability of rangelands and riparian areas.

We plan to annually allocate 30 per cent of grazing disposition rental revenue, which is over $2.9 million, to rangeland sustainability initiatives if this bill is passed into law. This will ensure that Albertans receive a fair share for use of their resources. When market conditions are good, a substantial amount of money will be dedicated to support rangeland sustainability through proactive partnerships. We will have specific programs that we are funding that include improvements in existing research and rangeland management practices, which would maintain Alberta's position as a leader in rangeland management.

Our government is also proposing changes that will allow for updates to the rental rate formula. It will recognize a two-zone grazing system, with a boundary that recognizes the true costs of maintaining a grazing disposition and the different geographies and contexts in which ranchers in northern and southern Alberta operate. The climate and growing season for crops is very different, obviously, between the north and the south in our province. Farmers may face seasonal challenges, depending on where they live; for example, a severely dry summer or perhaps a cold and early fall. The new rental rate formula would take these factors into account.

Our government's proposed changes also include a switch to a flat-rate assignment fee, which is the amount paid to transfer a disposition to another individual. One of our goals for this bill is to remove barriers to entry into the industry and align with assignment fees charged for all other public land dispositions at this time. These changes will transition Alberta's beef industry to a future that is both sustainable and based on sound environmental practices. This is only one of the many legislative changes that demonstrate our government's commitment to create a fair and balanced system that both protects the environment and grows the economy.

Our government is committed to ensuring that Albertans are getting a fair deal. That is why we have already passed legislation that reduces the unnecessary red tape and regulatory burden by at least a third for Albertans. Our government understands the needs of everyday Albertans. We understand the needs of our ranchers. We understand that it takes a lot of work to bring high-quality beef to Alberta's dinner tables. We understand the burdens and hardships that ranchers have faced over the years. We also have a connected investment into the land and want to ensure that the best sustainable practices and environmental measures are undertaken and continued.

Our government cares about jobs and our economy. We want to ensure that we will continue the high environmental standards we currently uphold. That is why an important part of this bill is not only modernizing the past land rental fees but also investing in sustainable measures for rangelands. It is time that our province adapts and modernizes the grazing fee framework. We need to ensure that our farmers will have continued success so that they will be able to afford to produce the world-class, quality beef that Alberta is famous for world-wide.

I hope that all members of this Assembly understand the importance of this bill with respect to sustainability measures and to our hard-working ranchers. We live in a modern world, Madam Speaker, and we must adapt our legislation accordingly. I will certainly be supporting this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to the bill in second reading? The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Today I have the privilege of speaking to Bill 16, the Public Lands Modernization (Grazing Leases and Obsolete Provisions) Amendment Act, 2019. Ranchers and farmers have been integral to our economy for generations. Settlers came to Alberta from eastern Canada, the United States, and Europe to farm here. Between 1914 and 1921 there was an influx of farmers and settlers coming into northwestern Alberta, where I live. At that time Alberta's population grew from 73,000 to over 584,000. Farming and ranching: it's what we know.

We often don't think about it when we're at the grocery store, but without farmers and ranchers we would have to rely heavily on imports for all of our food, which would be ridiculously expensive. Alberta farmers help supply a substantial proportion of the food you and I eat every day.

Like many Albertans and probably like yourself, Madam Speaker, I enjoy a good steak every now and then, and there's no better steak than Alberta beef. I've had a chance to eat some steak in different parts of the world, and I can attest to that fact wholeheartedly. There's nothing better than Alberta beef. In fact, I've had clients come from around the world, and that's one thing they always comment on, the quality of our beef and our steak here. In fact, I had one group come from Florida, and they ended up wanting to eat steak every single day, so they actually bought their own little barbecue and barbecued steak every single day they were here. They tried to figure out how they could take steak home with them. It's obviously high quality, it's got a great taste, and of course it's important to our economy.

Our ranchers need stability and fairness in the grazing lease fee schedule. This doesn't mean fees dropping; it means stable and fair. That is why I'm excited to see that the minister of environment has introduced Bill 16. This is in line with our commitment to keep Alberta's ranching industry thriving now and into the future. We recognize the need to ensure that our ranchers and beef producers are set up for continued success as they play an important part in our provincial economy and the environment. Bill 16 will see that our province's high environmental standards remain intact, standards that we have worked so hard to build and maintain throughout our province's history.

This bill will modernize the public land grazing disposition fee framework, which is to decide the amount of rent and fees paid by ranchers for the use of public lands. It will also direct a portion of revenues towards rangeland sustainability initiatives to ensure the long-term success of the industry and the environmental health and sustainability of Alberta's rangelands, and we know that our farmers and ranchers feel that is very important.

This bill also updates Alberta's current grazing zones and removes outdated regulation requirements. The changes implemented will allow for the creation of a rent framework that is fair and transparent and gives a better reflection of the current economic realities faced by our province. We want to ensure that Alberta receives a fair return for our natural resources. Our current grazing rental framework is outdated. It was implemented in 1960, and the rates have been frozen since 1994. Alberta has had the same rates for 25 years.

Madam Speaker, it is time for an update. By using market-based rental rates rather than outdated and arbitrary rates, it reduces the risk of trade actions by our trading partners around the world. Our government realizes that we cannot continue to operate this way. That is why we are taking action. Our government has worked very closely with industry and stakeholders to get their feedback and listen to their concerns so that we can create a comprehensive solution. We have gotten widespread support from industry when we proposed our changes.

One of the new initiatives we are proposing is a dedicated revenue stream to proactively invest in rangeland sustainability initiatives. Not only will this dedicated revenue stream support and improve existing initiatives within our role as government, as a landowner and resource manager; it will also ensure the long-term sustainability of rangelands and riparian areas. If this bill becomes law, we plan to annually allocate 30 per cent of grazing disposition rental revenue, which is over $2.9 million, to rangeland sustainability initiatives. It will ensure that Albertans receive a fair share for the use of their resources. That's because we need balance.

Balance includes the viability of the ranchers and a return for Albertans, and when market conditions are good, a substantial amount of money is dedicated to support rangeland sustainability through proactive partnerships.

This bill also contains provisions that would see enhanced research and rangeland management practices. This would maintain Alberta's position as a leader in rangeland management.

Our government is also proposing changes that will allow for updates to the rental rate formula to recognize a two-zone grazing system, with a boundary that recognizes the true costs of maintaining a grazing disposition and the different geographies and contexts in which ranchers in northern and southern Alberta operate. Different areas of Alberta experience varying weather conditions, that impact their season to farm and grow crops. For example, ranching in High Level or in the north Peace Country, with its colder climate and shorter growing season, brings more challenges that are not normal in southern Alberta in an area such as Lethbridge. Our new rental rate formula takes all of this into account.

Our government's proposed changes also include a switch into a flat-rate assignment fee, which is to say the amount of money paid to transfer a disposition to another individual. This will help remove barriers to enter into industry and align with assignment fees charged for all other public land dispositions. In essence, it'll help new young farmers get into the business without having those barriers of high costs of transfer fees.

These changes will transition Alberta's beef industry to a future that is sustainable and based on sound environmental practices. Our government is committed to creating a fair and balanced system that not only grows the economy but also protects the environment. This is one of the many legislative changes our government is bringing forward that dedicates our commitment to fulfilling our promises to Albertans.

Madam Speaker, if the members of this Assembly support our ranchers and fair legislation, they will support this bill. Not only does it modernize the fee framework, that will reduce unnecessary red tape for ranchers; it will also create a system that is transparent and fair. Not all ranchers in Alberta experience the same weather, soil, and other conditions that will affect their crops and animals. Northern Alberta not only experiences overall lower temperatures in fall and winter but also has experienced forest fires that will impact farming. Northern Alberta grazing lease holders also have to deal with trees growing up through their fence and also falling on the fence, adding costs to their operations.

We need to not only create a system that responds to weather changes but also to a fluctuating market. It has been 25 years since the rental rates have been updated, and a lot has changed in the past 25 years, including our economy. This caused most people to suffer. What's happened with our economy in the last four years is that with the NDP government they have driven out so much investment that it has caused a lot of suffering to Albertans. This suffering has been felt by our farmers and ranchers, too. We need our rental rates to reflect the market issues in the ranching industry by providing rental rates that are responsive to market conditions.

Our government is committed to reducing red tape that burdens our hard-working Albertans. While the previous NDP government implemented bills and taxes that hurt Alberta's ranchers and farmers, our government has been working with them to ensure that they get a fair deal. We love our ranchers and the world-renowned beef that they produce. Madam Speaker, I'm grateful for our ranchers and all the work that they put into providing food for Albertans. When we go home at the end of the day to eat supper, they are still out in the fields working. We know that with the weather conditions that are happening this fall, many farmers are in a tough situation as far as getting their crops off right now.

I know our own minister of agriculture and many UCP MLAs can speak to the farming life as they, too, are either presently or have in the past experienced the farming life. They know first-hand how difficult it is and that the outdated rental rates have been tough on farmers. That is why our government has been working so hard on this bill. They've not only heard from Alberta's ranchers but their own MLAs who know how difficult it is to be a rancher. Ensuring that Albertan ranchers' and farmers' voices are heard is one of the many reasons why these MLAs have committed to representing their constituents in the Legislature.

Madam Speaker, we live in a modern world, and over the last 25 years a lot has changed, and it's time for an update and change. We all live in this modern world, so why should our farmers be stuck in the past? It is time for a change and a fair deal for our farmers and ranchers. Our weather conditions in Canada and the varying conditions throughout the province provide different farming experiences for farmers. We need to have rental rates that reflect those differences. We have the ability and technology to be able to do these types of changes, so in 2019 it's time for a change.

Maybe just to kind of summarize some of these changes that will happen because of Bill 16, what we know is that the new fees will better align with land values and make sure that ranchers benefit from any market fluctuations. When markets are down, so are the fees. We know that we worked closely with farmers and ranchers to develop this new fee structure, and this has broad support among the major associations. Modernizing the framework will reduce red tape for ranchers and will create a system that is transparent and fair.

Government is now ready to implement this new framework, which will update the public land grazing disposition fees and ensure trade stability. Of course, when we look at our agriculture industry, we know that we have an export market there, too. We provide for Albertans, of course, but we also export a lot of our products. In order to be able to export, we need to be viewed as having fair-trade practices with other countries around the world. This will help build that stability and that trade stability. We know that we have to have long-term economic viability for ranchers, and this will help do that also. Of course, we need a fair return for Albertans on their resources, and of course this bill is focused on that, too.

I think it's also important – and we need to remember that we dedicated funding, using a portion of the rental revenue, to support rangeland sustainability initiatives and to ensure long-term sustainability of Alberta's rangelands through proactive investment.

Of course, this bill reflects the geographic differences that I mentioned earlier and their impacts on the beef production across this province, and of course it helps address demographic issues in the ranching industry by providing rental rates that are responsive to market conditions and reducing financial barriers to new producers entering the cattle industry. The thing that'll have the effect there is the flat-rate assignment fee. We know that this will create management efficiencies and align the act with regulation to current business practices and operations. It will help maintain market access and social licence and provide dependable funding for rangeland sustainability initiatives. We know that the rental rate and the assignment fee are currently embedded in the Public Lands Act and the public lands administration regulation. Therefore, amendments were required to change these things.

Madam Speaker, I think it's fair to say regarding Bill 16 that there's been widespread consultation. This consultation has been going on for years. I know that when I was first elected, grazing lease holders came to me, and we had several meetings over the last few years. This is something that has been key to their requests. The previous government, of course, didn't seem to get it done in the four years they were here. Obviously, we're just a few months in, and we're taking care of our farmers and ranchers. We know it's important to them, and we know it's important to Albertans.

I encourage everybody to support Bill 16 when we vote on this. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was very interested in listening to the hon. member speak. You know, as a Smith that's from Saskatchewan, at least born in Saskatchewan, there's a little bit of a debate in my family as to whether my cousin's ranching operations in Saskatchewan provide better beef to Canada than do Alberta ranchers. I have sometimes found myself in a little bit of trouble in my family when I have come to the defence of Alberta ranchers and tried to convince them that indeed the beef that we process in Alberta seems to be number one in my books.

However, it was also a rather interesting thing that happened when we had a caucus meeting down in Lethbridge. I happened to go down to the hot tub that night in the hotel that I was staying in, and who do I see in the hot tub but my cousin and his family. They were there for an auction of beef. They were auctioning off the beef in that hotel, and I had the opportunity to witness first-hand some of the modernization that has occurred in the modern ranching industry. They are now auctioning off cattle through the Internet, where they are posting the videos of these cattle, and the bids are coming in from far and wide.

In listening to the member speak about geography and about the modernization that this Bill 16 will bring, I was wondering if he could talk a little bit about the differences between how a northern rancher in his area is going to be able to see themselves in this piece of legislation and somebody that may be from down in the Lethbridge area, how this new Bill 16 will allow us to be able to accommodate the differences between the north and the south as well as, perhaps, address some of the issues with regard to modernization that we see in this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, and thanks for the questions and comments there. I think maybe what was most important about the comments that the member made was that his family from Saskatchewan had actually come to Alberta to buy beef. I guess that just proves who has better beef, obviously. They wouldn't have been coming to Alberta to buy poorer beef, so obviously they're trying to improve their stock in Saskatchewan by coming to Alberta. I think that's probably the most important part of that story.

I guess I should mention that I grew up on a cow-calf operation. My dad was a farmer and a rancher, so we grew cattle on our farm, but we didn't do the finishing. We just had the cow-calf operation. We sold the calves every year. Growing up in that operation and seeing, I guess, kind of the changes – like, obviously, I grew up with it. We had cows since I could walk, kind of thing. When I see the changes between how operations run now and how efficient they are, I think I can see also how the concern for the environment has grown and grown over the years. I think that years ago when we were doing farm practices, we'd probably seen things that we thought we could improve, and I think that over time we did improve those things. I think that's why we're such a leader in the world when it comes to our environmental record in our resources industries and also in our agriculture and farming and ranching industries. Those kinds of improvements, I think, are why our resources and our beef should be so desirable around the world.

5:30

When it comes to the question itself about northern ranchers versus southern ranchers, as I mentioned in my speech, we're talking a bit about the little differences, of course, with the trees and how the forest affects fences and that sort of thing. Also, I think the shorter growing season in the north, of course, affects things, too, and there's a shorter amount of time that you can have cattle on grazing leases in the north versus the south. So I think there are some differences there.

I think we need to realize how important the ranching industry is to Alberta, to its economy and to our production of food. Like I say, when we talk about the quality of beef, our quality is second to none around the world. I think that's important, and what we need to realize here.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 16?

Seeing none, shall I call the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 16 Public Lands Modernization (Grazing Leases and Obsolete Provisions) Amendment Act, 2019

The Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak?
Shall I call the question on Bill 16?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 16 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Any opposed? Carried.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report the bill.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 16.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the motion, do the members concur in this report? All those agreed, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. Carried.
The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I do appreciate, all hon. members, lots of progress today, and as such I will move that we adjourn until tomorrow, October 17, at 9 a.m.

The Deputy Speaker: Given all this talk about Alberta beef and steak, do the members agree with the motion to adjourn the House until tomorrow at 9 a.m.?

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:34 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, October 17, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning, everyone.

Let us pray. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. May Your kingdom come and Your name be hallowed. Amen.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 17

Disclosure to Protect Against Domestic Violence (Clare's Law) Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 17, Disclosure to Protect Against Domestic Violence (Clare's Law) Act.

Madam Speaker, Bill 17 supports our government's core belief that we need to prevent domestic violence from happening in our province. If passed, Alberta's version of Clare's law would give people at risk of domestic violence the information they need to make informed decisions about potentially harmful relationships.

Today I would also like to share a quote I received from my dear friend Tamara Monilaws last night as she poignantly expressed her support for this bill. She wrote: if this law was implemented 21 years ago, it would have saved my son and I from many counts of violence, sexual assault, criminal harassment, unlawful confinement, broken bones, almost losing our lives; this is simply huge; what a positive day for so many. Madam Speaker, Tamara's terrible ordeal made national headlines, and she readily shares her experience to spread awareness. The reality, however, is that in so many cases these stories remain untold. We believe people at risk have a right to know if their partners have a history of violence and abuse, and we believe this preventative measure could help save lives.

Madam Speaker, last week we celebrated the international day of the girl. We celebrated a day that recognizes that girls have vast potential, promise, and every right to be heard, to be free, and to be empowered to reach the pinnacles of that potential. Next month we will acknowledge Family Violence Prevention Month. In the same breath, mere weeks apart, as we celebrate girls, we also spread awareness about family violence, knowing that these same girls and women continue to be victims of domestic violence and victims of physical, emotional, sexual, and financial abuse.

As a society we have fallen far short of the mark in protecting our own. Domestic violence doesn't discriminate. It affects people of every age, ethnicity, gender, or sexual orientation, and it endangers the survival, security, and well-being of its victims. We know that women and girls are the main victims of intimate partner and spousal violence, and this act is focused on preventing domestic violence between romantic or dating partners. Let me share with you just a few disturbing facts. Females are victimized in 82 per cent of police-reported cases involving opposite-sex partners. In fact, more than half of women who are murdered across Canada lose their lives at the hands of an intimate partner. Indigenous women are disproportionately represented in these numbers. Alberta's domestic violence rates are third-highest amongst the Canadian provinces, and in 2017 alone police in Alberta reported more than 10,000 victims of intimate partner violence.

Madam Speaker, we believe these statistics are unacceptable and are a sad reflection of how far we still need to go. We need to address the prevalence of domestic violence here in our province. The value of prevention is undeniable, but there are no definitive ways to quantify what prevention looks like with any precision. That's a statistic that is difficult to track, but nonetheless it's an outcome we must pursue. We know that if people have information to make an informed decision, particularly as it relates to a potentially harmful situation, they might choose a different path, and we need to give them that opportunity.

Our government made several important promises to Albertans to combat domestic and family violence, including legislation and increasing support to specialized agencies. These promises include committing $2 million to expand the use of specialized electronic monitoring technology to prevent individuals serving sentences from having contact with those they were convicted of victimizing. It includes committing $5 million in new funding directed to sexual assault service centres that provide counselling, support, and advocacy. It includes maintaining the 24-hour crisis line that monitors a sexual assault nurse examiner. It includes immediately reviewing what improvements to medical and forensic evidence gathering is needed in rural communities. It includes developing and implementing a specific repeat-offender policy with both provincial and federal components.

Madam Speaker, our government is taking action on domestic violence in several ways, but this legislation is a milestone step in helping the women and girls in this province. We offer supports and services for victims of domestic violence, but tools like this piece of legislation will help us deal with the issue before it begins. We committed to the prevention of domestic violence not only through services and supports but through legislation. By putting forward this crucial piece of legislation, we are keeping our promise.

The story of Dianne Denovan's experience was brought to our attention in recent weeks through the media. Our office has had the pleasure of speaking with her, and we look forward to including her in the consultations for this legislation. Her friend Krista put forward a petition to bring Clare's law to Alberta based on Dianne's experience. Dianne was in a relationship with a man she met online for seven months before he attacked her after a concert they had attended together. The man assaulted her for nearly four hours, leaving her hospitalized for three weeks and finding refuge in a shelter until the man was arrested nearly five weeks later. Dianne had no idea that this man had a criminal history dating back to 1987 with several convictions for assault, uttering threats, assault causing bodily harm, and other domestic incidents. Had she been able to request information, this experience in her life could have been prevented. We're very grateful to Ms Denovan for having the courage to share her story in the media and for being such a strong advocate for domestic violence and supports in this province.

She is not the only real-life story we've heard of. Jasmine Lovett and her daughter Aliyah Sanderson were killed in a domestic homicide by Ms Lovett's romantic partner, and it was later released that her partner had previously been married, with a restraining order against him granted to his ex-wife, who feared for her and her child's safety.

Madam Speaker, these are tragic cases, and we must learn from these to ensure that we do whatever we can within our power to ensure that we protect others from a similar fate. I've personally spoken to many women over the years in my volunteer capacity that have suffered from domestic violence. Like these women mentioned today, some didn't even realize that they were in an abusive relationship until the abuse had already occurred. There are the very real cases of newcomers who have arrived in our province who often don't know where to turn when they experience domestic violence because of cultural barriers, language barriers, and customs and traditions that make it taboo to ask for help. I would venture to say that my experience is not unique, that we all know somebody who has experienced domestic violence, and this is an untenable reality. It's a reflection of how prevalent domestic violence is in our society.

The women I've mentioned today have experienced the tragedies that we are working to prevent. I am certain that their families wonder every day if the abuse or, in some cases, their deaths could have been prevented if they had access to more information. We are proposing a way to help prevent domestic violence from happening. Alberta's version of Clare's law is about making sure that people are informed. It's about enabling the right to ask and the right to know for people at risk, making sure that those at risk have the information they need to make a decision that is right for them. Our version of domestic violence disclosure legislation was modelled after Clare's law in the U.K., also known as a domestic violence disclosure scheme. It was named after Clare Wood, a young woman who was killed by her intimate partner, who had a history of violence towards women. Had Clare had the opportunity to find out about her partner's past, she might be alive today.

Clare's law was first introduced in England and Wales in 2014, and it allows people to check if partners pose a risk or have a history of domestic violence. The first year Clare's law came into force in the U.K., police received over 4,700 applications, which led to almost 2,000 disclosures. That's 2,000 instances where people at risk of domestic violence had information that they could have used to protect themselves. The government of Saskatchewan passed similar enabling legislation in May 2019, and while it hasn't yet been proclaimed, they're working hard to define the regulations. Newfoundland and Labrador are also working on a version of Clare's law.

Madam Speaker, we have the opportunity to join these few jurisdictions and make Alberta a leader in the prevention of domestic violence rather than a leader in the number of cases. We have been assessing each of these approaches to domestic violence disclosure and have been using them to inform our own approach to the law. We want to make sure this law can be as effective as possible. We're committed to making sure it works for Alberta. Looking at its application world-wide has helped us to define our current proposed legislation, and it'll continue to help us as we define the regulations.

Once Bill 17 passes, we'll have the opportunity to begin our second phase of stakeholder consultations. It's critical to get this legislation right, and we have an incredible lineup of expert partners and stakeholders who will provide input every step of the way. That's why in July we hosted two significant stakeholder consultations, one in Calgary and one in Edmonton. Together with the ministers of Justice and Solicitor General and Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women we met with key stakeholders in domestic violence prevention, and we asked them to share their views and perspectives. The stakeholder participants included those with experience delivering services to victims and offenders of domestic violence, Alberta police agencies, and the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. We also included LGBTQ and multicultural organizations, indigenous communities, and academics. We've included the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner during stakeholder engagement to make sure we understand the privacy implications of the proposed legislation. Likewise, all Alberta police agencies provided written feedback to the questions posed in the consultations.

Specific consideration was also given to concerns about potential liability and resourcing issues. These consultations allowed us to gather a variety of diverse perspectives on things like who can request information, how much information should be shared, and how to protect privacy. The feedback we gathered was helpful to our understanding of what Albertans want to see in this legislation. All of the perspectives shared at the consultation sessions will inform our strategic and regulatory development of this legislation. It is worth mentioning that the purpose of the consultations was not to establish consensus but, rather, to gain as many perspectives as possible to gain a comprehensive view of what this law might look like as we apply it here in Alberta.

If this bill is passed, we will continue our stakeholder engagement at phase 2 early next year. The second phase of stakeholder engagement will include a broader range of participants, including people with lived experience. We want to make sure the law's development takes into consideration the perspectives of those who have experienced domestic abuse, whose lives could have been changed by a law like this. The second phase stakeholder engagement sessions will help inform the law's day-to-day application, and this will include how someone can apply, what situations are eligible for disclosure, whether someone can apply on behalf of another, and more. These kinds of specific details will be built out in the act's regulations.

For now the proposed bill in front of you today is enabling legislation. It will enable the right to ask in Alberta. This will allow people at risk of domestic violence to submit applications for information on an intimate partner's history of domestic violence or related acts, and it will also enable the right to know. This will allow police to proactively disclose relevant information to those at risk of domestic violence without an application.

The act will also prohibit the sharing of information for purposes outside of the act. We know that there will be concerns about what this act would mean for personal privacy and what implications would follow a disclosure, but we are committed to making privacy a priority as much as possible while still protecting the victims of domestic violence. We have been taking privacy matters into consideration every step of the way, and we will continue to do so as this legislation passes. The legislation will work in accordance with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, which allows for disclosure if another act authorizes it, and we will continue consulting with partners like the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner to make sure that our approach takes privacy concerns into account.

We also plan to co-ordinate wraparound supports to go alongside disclosure. We believe that these are necessary for those who receive a disclosure and might not know where to turn for help. These supports will be an important part of the implementation and may include supports for domestic and sexual assault, housing and homelessness, health, mental health, and justice. Further details on supports will be identified in the regulations and plans for implementation once we complete the consultation phase. There are many situations to consider, and we want to continue consulting with experts to make sure that the regulations are as inclusive as they need to be for the purposes of this act.

I'm very thankful to have support from our ministry co-lead, Justice and Solicitor General, and the teams in Indigenous Relations as well as Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women. I would also again like to thank the stakeholders who participated in the first phase of consultations. We're all working together to make sure this legislation will be effective in preventing domestic violence. This legislation will provide us with a new tool to help in preventing domestic violence and making services available for vulnerable Albertans. It's also important that this legislation works not only for Albertans who are at risk but also for the staff who would be involved in implementing and managing the application process.

I'm very proud to support this legislation and its ability to empower Albertans at risk of domestic violence. Madam Speaker, we have the opportunity to save lives, to help make life better for some of our most vulnerable people. This is what our version of Clare's law is all about: giving people the chance, the opportunity, to stay safe; the chance to protect themselves from harm; the chance to choose a different path. We're hopeful, intentional, and determined to reduce the rates of domestic violence in our province, and that is why the support of this House is essential in moving this bill forward.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Community and Social Services has moved second reading of Bill 17, Disclosure to Protect Against Domestic Violence (Clare's Law) Act. Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill in second reading? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising in the House today to declare my complete and total support for the bill before us. I'm proud to stand with the Minister of Community and Social Services as she endeavours to make Alberta better and safer. Bill 17, Disclosure to Protect Against Domestic Violence (Clare's Law) Act, directly addresses an issue that we must bring out of the shadows and into the light. Domestic violence is an issue that is uncomfortable to discuss and difficult to legislate. It is undoubtedly hard for many to speak about and even more challenging to address to its fullest extent as legislators. The effects and impacts of domestic violence and intimate partner violence are often long lasting, intergenerational, and hidden by unjustified shame.

However, Bill 17 provides a direct pathway to addressing this heinous issue through taking common-sense steps towards creating a safer Alberta for all. Modelled after Great Britain's Clare's law, this new piece of legislation will better protect individuals from domestic violence in a way never seen before in this province.

The original Clare's law is named after Clare Wood, whose life was cut short by a disturbing act of violence inflicted by a partner who had hidden from her a six-year jail term he had served. The term he'd served was for holding a woman captive at knifepoint for 12 hours, an absolutely inexcusable and unjustifiable act. Experiences like these are difficult to recollect but are crucial to ensuring that incidents like these never happen again. This bill will reinforce this government's commitment to creating a province where domestic violence has no home or place to hide. Had Clare Wood been able to know the truth about her partner's violent past, her life could have been saved.

When it comes to domestic violence, one incident is too many. However, we also know that these incidents happen all too frequently throughout our province. We cannot ignore them or their impacts on families and our communities. As ugly as these crimes are, we must not fail the survivors and victims of these crimes by keeping their stories hidden or downplayed due to their disturbing nature. We know that, on average, a dozen Alberta women are murdered every year in domestic disputes. Each of these individuals harmed is a pillar missing from our communities. They are not just mothers, sisters, and wives; they are educators, artists, entrepreneurs, and so much more. They are their own persons with hopes and dreams and aspirations, which can go unrealized due to heartless violence. Stalking, intimidation, abuse, and other forms of violence are never acceptable and never excusable. These acts cut lives and futures short, before they can even begin.

Our government will set a clear path towards reducing these incidents through measures to increase funding for law enforcement agencies focused on stalking, child exploitation, and intimate partner violence as well as initiatives intended to deal with the unique circumstances of rural women, all introduced through this bill. Further to this, Bill 17 will provide a mechanism for a person at risk or their family members to apply for information regarding an individual's history in domestic disputes. This crucial information can and will save lives, Madam Speaker. This is not an instance of Big Brother government impeding a person's or individual's personal freedoms. This is a mechanism that will be used to prevent abusers from hiding behind smoke, mirrors, and lies. No one should be allowed to continue to hurt others without consequence due to the failings of the law to fully expose their repulsive actions. We cannot stand idly by while harm is being done to one of the most vulnerable sectors of our society.

I am proud of this government for introducing this groundbreaking piece of legislation, and I am firm in my belief of its necessity. We have an obligation as legislators to act in the best interests of all Albertans. This includes Albertans who are the most at risk for this specific kind of violence. Our province is only strong when every person that makes up its population is both free and safe. Through introducing bills such as this one, we are sending a clear message to criminals and perpetrators that their actions are not welcome here. Their behaviour and their violence are not welcome here ever, Madam Speaker. The conversation we are having today is likely difficult for some to listen to, but the weight of this discomfort is important for us all to notice and respect. To those of us who know a survivor or are one ourselves, this government will not fail you, not when bills such as this one are supported, passed, and enforced.

I invite all members of this House to send a resounding message to those who are survivors and in the name of victims such as Clare Wood through unanimously supporting this legislation. We will not allow these crimes to go on without consequence, not here, not now, not ever.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 17? The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the minister for moving such an important bill. I know that when I saw this in the platform, I was very happy to see such important and, I think, needed legislation coming forward from our government.

Today I speak to Bill 17, also known as Clare's law. Before I dive into why I support this bill and why it's a much-needed piece of legislation, I want to provide some background as to why we are speaking about it today, not just the reason why we're here, Madam Speaker, but who is the reason why we're here. That person is Clare

Wood. A little forewarning here to those who are in the Chamber and those who are listening online that we will be discussing domestic violence, which might be emotional for some, and if you need to recuse yourself, I would understand why. This story is troubling and disturbing, but it did happen. I think we have to talk about the reality of domestic violence because it is a reality for far too many people in this province.

In 2007 Clare Wood met a man on a dating site, a man whose name I won't say because, quite frankly, it does not deserve to be said. After a year of dating and discovering that her partner had been unfaithful, Clare ended this relationship in 2008. Almost immediately following the breakup, Clare's now ex-boyfriend began harassing and threatening her. Clare went to the police. They took note of her complaints and escorted her back home to make sure she got there safely. The man was twice arrested for harassing Clare and posted bail each time. After one arrest Clare thought the man had changed and that he had become less aggressive since he allegedly stopped doing drugs, and she actually spoke in favour of his release. Two months after he was released, Clare called the police claiming that her ex-boyfriend had sexually assaulted her. Following this, Clare's ex-boyfriend was repeatedly arrested for harassing Clare but was released either on bail or due to insufficient evidence. On February 2, less than a month after Clare reported having been sexually assaulted, Clare was brutally murdered by her ex-boyfriend. Her body wouldn't be found for four days.

What Clare didn't know, Madam Speaker, is that the man she had dated, the man who stalked, harassed, assaulted, and murdered her, had a history of violence, violence against women. He had previously served a six-year prison sentence for holding a woman at knifepoint for 12 hours, but Clare didn't know that. Clare's parents believe that had she known, Clare likely would not have suggested that her abuser be released on bail. Perhaps law enforcement would have done something differently or taken bolder or more decisive action to make sure that Clare's ex couldn't hurt her and ultimately take her life. We are here because of Clare and because of the way that the system failed to protect her. While this incident happened thousands of miles away, we have seen similar examples of systemic shortcomings right here in Canada.

I think of a case in Ontario in September 2015 when Carol Culleton, Anastasia Kuzyk, and Nathalie Warmerdam were murdered by a man that all three had dated at different points in their lives. The man in this case had been repeatedly charged for domestic violence, but he had repeatedly managed to evade conviction. This man's history of domestic violence should have been a red flag, and I believe it would have been had these women known their abuser's history. Something should have been done before things escalated to this point, however, the point where three innocent women lost their lives at the hands of a monster.

There are stories that don't make the headlines, stories of women who this bill could also be named after. Many women do not report domestic violence or abusive relationships due to fear of not being believed, lack of enforcement, or even societal stigmatization. This is wrong. As legislators we need to right this wrong. It is incumbent upon us to act when there is an obvious problem ahead of us, Madam Speaker. With such an obvious solution, there is no reasonable decision other than to act, in my opinion, and that's what our government is doing right here with Clare's law. Our government recognizes that domestic, sexual, and gender-based violence is a persistent issue in our province and across the country. Some organizations say that there is an epidemic. When there is an epidemic due to illness or disease, governments are quick to act in order to save lives. It only makes sense that the same approach be applied when it comes to domestic violence.

As a society we don't give enough attention to signs of abuse. In fact, we usually turn a blind eye. The old saying, "What goes on behind closed doors," tragically, holds true. We don't see the same level of action from lawmakers and community organizations targeted at issues like addressing domestic violence, but we do have amazing advocates across the province who do incredible work providing supports to victims of domestic violence, organizations like WIN House here in Edmonton, which has a long history of supporting women fleeing from abuse right here. Closer to home I have the Medicine Hat Women's Shelter, which I was proud to visit just a few short weeks ago. I stand in awe of those who give their time and resources to aid these women and some men, too. The Women's Shelter is an inclusive space that welcomes all who need refuge from abuse and from those who have hurt them and their families. I'm so proud to have them in my community. But these organizations can't end domestic violence alone. More needs to be done to prevent this violence before it happens.

Another incredible story is the Sagesse Domestic Violence Prevention Society. Their mission is to empower individuals, organizations, and communities to break the cycle of domestic violence. Their director, Andrea Silverstone, has voiced support for Clare's law. Yesterday she said, quote: this law will be an important tool in breaking the cycle of domestic violence here in Alberta; it gives people a greater chance of safety from violence by providing access to resources and supports they might not know about.

Another incredible woman and a strong survivor and actually a friend of mine, Kristin Raworth, said, quote: safety is paramount; this law could save lives; it could make a difference for so many vulnerable people; these people have a right to know what the risks are.

Madam Speaker, domestic violence is cyclical, and the issue isn't new. It's been happening for years. We know that domestic violence impacts everyone. It disproportionately impacts women in heterosexual partnerships, but it also impacts men, who are often left out of the conversation about intimate partner violence. Domestic violence occurs amongst all people, races, religions, sexual orientations, and socioeconomic backgrounds.

You know, the start of a relationship is often referred to as a honeymoon phase – you feel like your partner can do no wrong – but as time goes on, things can change, and you might start to see a side of them that you didn't even know existed. This is exactly what happened to Clare Wood. The man she thought she loved had a whole other side to him that she didn't know about until it was far too late. That, Madam Speaker, is why we need this legislation. We need to empower people to take control over these situations by arming them with the knowledge of who their partners are so they can take the necessary steps to protect themselves.

I want to stress, Madam Speaker, that this legislation, while incredibly important, is not a magic bullet when it comes to domestic, family, or gender-based violence. Domestic violence is a deeply complex and convoluted issue, and we understand that there's more that has to be done. There are so many other factors at play that desperately need to be addressed. Our government made addressing sexual, domestic, and gender-based violence a priority during the election and in this House today. It's time for action, and quite frankly the time for action was long ago. We know, now that we're in government, that we are not going to waste the opportunity to implement reasonable, effective policies that will have a real, positive impact.

This bill is a step in the right direction. We know this legislation would have helped Clare. It would have helped thousands of other people, and we know that it'll be instrumental in helping those in the future to protect themselves. If Clare's law can help one person get out of an abusive situation, if it saves even one life in this province, then that is the reason why I need to support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 17? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 17, disclosure to protect against domestic violence act, also known as Clare's law. I want to begin by thanking the government, the Minister of Community and Social Services for bringing forward this piece of legislation. Certainly, we support this legislation and this bill and its intentions in principle.

We do know that gender-based violence, domestic violence is an issue in our province, in our country, and, quite frankly, everywhere. If we talk specifically about our province, I think that in Canada Alberta ranks fourth highest when it comes to gender-based violence, domestic violence. The Family Violence Death Review Committee: according to their numbers, from 2008 to 2017 there were 166 incidents where women were murdered by their partners. There is also enough evidence to suggest that, for the most part, in these incidents the perpetrators in general have a history of domestic violence or they have some convictions beforehand. Certainly, having that disclosure available will be a good step in the right direction, and it will make sure that that information is available to individuals about potential dangerous partners.

As was described, this act was introduced in the U.K. after the woman named Clare, and that was discussed in detail, so I won't go into much of that detail. What we see here, as the minister also mentioned, is that it's enabling legislation. More information will fill the regulation after the consultation.

I think what's also important is that whatever we do, we also fund these services, fund these actions so that the police have the resources to provide that service, so that social service agencies, nonprofits, and the organizations who are working in this area have the resources to provide that support. Otherwise, just legislation alone won't cut it.

If I talk about when we were in government, certainly this was a top priority for us as well, and I think I can point to a number of different actions that we took in this regard. I can start with a private member's bill from one of my colleagues, the MLA for Calgary-Bow, Deborah Drever, who brought forward a piece of legislation, the safer spaces legislation, that allowed the victims of domestic violence to break leases in situations where their safety was at risk. The Ministry of Community and Social Services was responsible for the implementation of that legislation and in the first year helped almost 400 Albertans to end their leases. That action certainly was backed with the proper funding, and almost, I think, $4 million or something was added towards that.

Then we also knew that there was a huge need for an increase in services through women's shelters, so we increased funding by $15 million. That alone in 2017 helped 17,000 women and 14,000 children across this province. Also, in 2018 nearly $6 million was provided in emergency financial support for 5,400 Albertans who were fleeing domestic violence and abuse. Then we also introduced changes to our limitation period regime, where the limitation was removed for those who are the survivors of sexual assault so that they can bring forward their claims whenever they feel that they're ready to bring that forward.

There were other things. Like, we also added and supported communities through FCSS programs. Like, in Edmonton and Calgary FCSS may work differently, but in rural Alberta FCSS supports all kinds of grassroots initiatives, which include healthy relationships, which include services to women and children, including services relating to domestic violence and gender-based violence. In four years, through the Ministry of Community and Social Services we also added $38 million through family and community support programs grants, which were focused on building healthy relationships, which were focused on addressing gender-based violence, which were focused on providing supports to the survivors of domestic violence and family violence. Through that program I think we were able to support many grassroots initiatives everywhere, including in my own riding. We made sure through those grants that these services are available all across Alberta and also in a manner that people can receive those services in a culturally appropriate manner.

Certainly, when we were in charge, this file was a priority for us. We believe that no one – no one – should ever face violence in any shape, form, or manner, and when that happens, I think it's the obligation of the government, it's our obligation as society to make sure that all the supports are available to them so they can rebuild their lives. That was the reason that we worked with women's shelters and supported their programming. This was the reason that we worked with many community-based organizations and supported their initiatives around gender-based violence, domestic violence, and sexual violence. That was the reason that we worked with the Alberta Association of Sexual Assault Services and funded them. They made a case for $8.1 million, and their entire ask was funded in 2018 to address the wait time issues, to make sure that counselling services are available to the survivors.

All I'm saying is that, yes, it's a good piece of legislation. It's needed, and if it's properly funded, if this legislation is backed with money, the needed funds, the needed resources, that will certainly help us make this province a better place. It will help us address and curb and eliminate domestic violence. But I think it's short on details, and there will be further questions that we can ask and discuss during the committee stage, when the government intends to share further details: what regulations they intend to bring forward, what will be the timelines, and what resources they are committing to support this legislation. Also, I think that earlier the minister mentioned that this legislation will work kind of like the freedom of information and protection act, so we would want more details around that, how it will interact with the FOIP legislation.

If the consultations are ongoing – I think domestic violence, gender-based violence is by no means a partisan issue for any of us on this side of the House – if there is any room for us to provide feedback on those consultations and on the various aspects of this piece of legislation, I think we are here to help make this legislation better, and we are here to work with you on this piece of legislation and the regulations that will follow this to make sure that our province is a safe place for everyone.

Again, thank you to the government. Thank you to the Minister of Community and Social Services for bringing forward this important piece of legislation. I look forward to the further discussions at the different stages of this debate.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 17? The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, it's my pleasure to get up today and speak to Bill 17, Disclosure to Protect Against Domestic Violence (Clare's Law) Act. I think that somewhat the title of the bill says it all. It's about protecting against domestic violence. When we look at what Bill 17 does, Bill 17 allows people at risk of domestic violence to obtain information on an intimate partner's previous history of domestic violence or other relevant acts. I think it's important to realize just how encompassing that can be and how important that can be to people getting into new relationships and meeting new people and having that opportunity to see if the person that they're with is the person that they believe they are.

Domestic violence disclosure, also known as Clare's law, was first passed in the United Kingdom in response to the death of Clare Wood, who was killed in 2009 by her boyfriend. Her boyfriend had a pre-existing history of violence against women, of which Ms Wood was, of course, unaware. In the first year there were over 4,700 applications under Clare's Law in England and Wales. I guess that nationally this led to nearly 2,000 disclosures. That's 2,000 women that had an opportunity to know what their partner's past history had been, you know, in dealing with the law and, of course, domestic violence.

There are some important facts, and I guess they're somewhat disturbing facts. Half of all young women and girls who were victims of domestic violence homicide in Canada were murdered by someone with a prior conviction. Of course, this is exactly what this legislation is to combat. Most often this conviction was for another violent offence such as sexual or physical assault. Those were young women and girls who, had this legislation been in place, would have had the opportunity to know what their partner had done in the past and would have been able to make a decision based on that information.

Another disturbing fact is that Alberta has the third-highest rate of police-reported intimate partner violence of all the Canadian provinces. It's sad to say that, of course, in Alberta we have this situation, and it's not a good situation. Another disturbing fact: from 2008 to 2017 there were 166 deaths in Alberta due to family violence. That's an alarming statistic and a statistic that just doesn't need to be. There's no reason for these situations. There's no reason for this kind of violence. There's no reason for those young women and girls to have died.

Now, we know Saskatchewan passed a similar law in May 2019, and we know Newfoundland and Labrador are currently developing their version of Clare's law. This bill will allow people at risk of domestic violence to obtain information on an intimate partner's previous history of domestic violence or other relevant acts. This could save lives. This law would allow people at risk to make an informed choice about potentially harmful relationships. This is another tool that could help prevent domestic violence in Alberta and empower people who may be at risk.

This legislation will act as a preventative measure for those at risk. I think that's the important part of it, that this is a preventative measure. People can, again, make informed decisions as they go through their lives. The consultations that the government has undergone here have included privacy considerations, including input from the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. Obviously, we've taken privacy matters into consideration every step of the way. We want to make sure that we are safeguarding personal information.

Now, it is a priority for our government to address domestic violence and provide preventative measures where possible.

Domestic violence refers to abuse against spouses and dating partners in current and former relationships. Spouses are current or former legally married, separated, divorced, and common-law partners. Dating relationships involve current or former boyfriends, girlfriends, or other intimate relationships.

9:50

Other acts in Alberta have defined relationship violence such as the Protection Against Family Violence Act and the Residential Tenancies Act. We are using these to inform a definition for the Disclosure to Protect Against Domestic Violence (Clare's Law) Act. We want to validate a definition with stakeholders to ensure it is the most appropriate one for the purposes of this act. We will continue involving stakeholders to define the regulations for this legislation. It's important to know that the work is ongoing. We need to make sure that we get this right, both to protect the people that it is designed to protect and also to protect the privacy of those people, too.

If we look back to the definition of family violence in the Protection Against Family Violence Act, it does not include dating relationships, which is the primary focus of this proposed legislation. The PAFVA and the disclosure to protect against domestic violence act will be complementary tools to address domestic violence. The disclosure to protect against domestic violence act will help prevent violence within a dating relationship whereas the other will address violence within the context of a family relationship.

When it comes to who can apply for a disclosure, people in defined circumstances who are at risk of domestic violence can apply for disclosure. Further details as to eligibility will be defined in the act's regulations. There are many different situations to consider, and we will consult with stakeholders further on this to make sure that the regulations are as inclusive as needed for the purpose of this act. Applications will be reviewed by a panel to determine whether the risk warrants the disclosure. We have some safeguards and, you know, things that we are working with to make sure that the disclosure is warranted and to make sure that the disclosure, if warranted, happens.

This legislation is being developed with considerations for privacy and the FOIP Act. The legislation will work in accordance with FOIP, which allows for disclosures if another act authorizes it. We have been consulting with the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner to make sure our approach to the legislation takes privacy concerns into account. Now, FOIP enables the disclosure of personal information under certain situations. Bill 17 will define the circumstances by which personal information can be disclosed, in this case to prevent domestic violence. The legislation will also prohibit the sharing of any disclosed information and will ensure this information is safeguarded and cannot be used outside of the scope of the act.

When we think about the young lady that is somewhat the namesake of this act, Clare, and when we look at her situation, had she known about her partner's violent past, her murder could have been prevented. It is utterly tragic. Our goal is to prevent similar tragedies here. I think it's sad that we need legislation like this. When I've been to openings of women's shelters or visited women's shelters, I often think about how great that we have those places, places of refuge for people in dire circumstances, but it's even sadder to think that we actually need it in a society that we have right here, a free society where we have laws, where we have protections, yet we still need these safeguards.

But, again, where we need them, we have to have them. That's why we're here today. We're here to make sure that more situations like the one that Clare suffered don't happen and don't happen in Alberta. We will do our best, as we continue on, to make sure that these acts don't happen and that we protect the vulnerable in our society.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I guess that for anyone who's listening at home, of which I don't have high hopes, I will begin by saying that this is one of the rare things on which we agree. We absolutely think that in principle this bill is an incredibly good thing. But in order to be an incredibly good thing, it needs to work, and I think we're a little bit short on details.

Now, when in government, I endured countless lectures from the opposition on bills with significantly more substance than this in them about the number of things that were going to regulation. I'm not going to give such a lecture because I actually think that it's often the case that things are correctly placed in regulation although I would have liked to have seen just a little bit more of the substance in the bill just because it makes it more difficult to change and it makes it a little bit more transparent for the public. I think that in principle, still, this is an absolutely good thing to move forward on. I think that it's absolutely necessary. Both parties committed to it in the election, one of the very few things, I think, that we agreed on, so that's really good.

I think that in order to work, some of the critical things that this bill needs is to deal with who holds the information and how we ensure it flows between people adequately. It could be the case that the police service holds it. It could be the case that a ministry within the government holds it. In that case, how is information flowing either between police services or, potentially, between provinces in the country? That's one big question.

It's also important to know who it is that can make an application, including who it is that an applicant can give consent to to make an application on their behalf. I think it's also important to understand how risk is being assessed, which, again, will be left to regulations. Because, obviously, someone somewhere is going to be seeing this information, they're going to be making an assessment on whether it ought or ought not be disclosed to the individual in the circumstances. So those details are really, really important. It's also important to talk about who handles the information, who they give it to, how quickly it moves, and what the assessment on how that's done is based on.

Now, all this talk about the movement of information – and this is a bill that primarily talks about the right to know, so primarily what we're talking about is a right to access information. This stuff is important. It doesn't seem like it's important, but in order to achieve the result of actually making women safer, we need to ensure that it happens effectively.

When I first came into government, one of the first reports that landed on my desk was a report having to do with the tragic death of Constable Wynn. He was a police officer who was murdered by a person who was out on bail. The reasons for that were many and complex, but one of the biggest reasons was that the information about the accused individual wasn't placed before the decision-maker. As a result of that information not being placed before the decision-maker, the wrong decision was made because it was made without information, in the absence of information, and that had a tragic result. I don't want to see that happen here. That's why I think it's really important that we're able to move forward with this.

I also think that it's important that we see what kind of supports come with this. You know, obviously, I think that investment in these sorts of things is very important. When our side came into government, we made a historic investment in domestic violence shelters. I was so proud to see the former Member for Calgary-Bow – not the current member – introduce a bill that helped women break their leases. There's a lot of this that's very, very important. At the end of the day, some of this is going to cost money. What I'm hoping is that we will see in this upcoming budget that someone will be able to point us to directly where that money is because there'll need to be money for supports. There'll need to be money for counselling services. There'll need to be money, potentially, for the implementation of the necessary information systems.

One of the other big things I'd like to see is a timeline on how this is going to be developed. This can't be implemented, it can't be proclaimed, it can't do anything until such time as the regulations come into force, so I'd love to see sort of a working timeline of when we're going to get that information.

10:00

That being said, and before anyone thinks that I'm trying to drown the poor minister in questions, there actually are a whole bunch of delightful humans who work in departments, who are listening to this or will later read it, who will write a series of questions down that have come from the opposition, seek out answers to those questions, and then provide the minister with speaking notes for the subsequent reading. They're very hard-working, lovely humans. Hello.

I have a couple of different questions about this. Specifically, there are situations in which police are going to be permitted to disclose when no application is made. I would be interested in how we're sort of going to develop, you know, who's going to make that determination. If there's no application, but there's someone in the police service that for some reason feels they should disclose proactively, the question is: how did they get that information? Is there someone who is sort of constantly gathering that information, or is it based on the knowledge of the individual officers because they know of certain chronic offenders, shall we say, and they, therefore, go out to make that disclosure? I'd be interested to know how that's going to work.

I'd be interested to know the timelines for setting up the disclosure protocol and whether or not we think we're going to be working through, say, something in the ministry, like JOIN, justice online, or whether we're going to be working through CPIC or something in the police services. That would be really interesting to know.

Also of concern, I think, is that there are provisions in here that deal with the fact that an applicant – that's someone who thinks that they may become the victim of domestic violence who's applying to receive this information, probably a woman in most cases – makes an application, and the name of that applicant is privileged. I think that that's important although I'm trying to remember a time in which I've seen legislation just deem something privileged without an analysis occurring, but hopefully that works okay.

That information is privileged, but at the same time there's a provision, section 6, which says that this doesn't detract from anything that the Information and Privacy Commissioner does. One of the things that the Information and Privacy Commissioner can do is essentially disclose what personal information the government has about you, so even though the name of the person who made the application is privileged, I'd like to ensure that the fact of an application is also privileged because potentially, depending on the timing of the application, that individual could figure out who made the application. I'm sure that these things are being considered. I'd just like to see these answers for greater clarity, if you will, for purposes of debate in this House.

I'm a tiny bit concerned. I understand the reasons for the immunity provision. The provision essentially says that if anyone who's sort of operating in this disclosure protocol, whether in government or whether with the police service, if any of those individuals make an error, they're immune from any liability for the consequences of those actions. I get the reasons for this, especially if they're acting in good faith. I'm a tiny bit concerned about the message that that sends in terms of their need to do things carefully, because if someone makes an error here, it could have really grave consequences.

The other provision I had a question about was section 10. Section 10 refers to the nonapplicability of the act. What it says is that, essentially, the Lieutenant Governor in Council, who's cabinet, can designate a person or a class of persons or circumstances in which this act won't apply. I'd be interested to know why that's necessary because nothing springs immediately to mind in terms of a person, a class of people, or circumstances in which this act ought not to apply. So I'd be interested to know what the theory behind that is.

Most of the rest of this actually looks pretty good. Yes. I think most of my questions continue to be around, as I mentioned, in what circumstances an individual can grant consent to a third party to make an application on their behalf. I can think of instances in which this would make sense. Yeah. I'd just be interested to see how that's going to move forward.

I guess with that, I'll probably save the rest of my questions for the next reading of this bill, but I think it's worth summing up by saying again that I applaud the minister for this. I think that this is a great move. I think it's absolutely a necessary move forward.

In order to be in full support, I would like to see a little bit more detail around, specifically, what the timelines are going to be – when they intend to meet, when they think regulations are going to be published, when we're expecting this act to be proclaimed so that it can actually start doing the wonderful work that it's intended to do – and in terms of money for the supports that we'll need to surround this act, and most specifically again in terms of what the information systems are going to look like and how that's going to flow. Of course, the U.K. is a very different circumstance legally with respect to a number of factors than it is here in Canada. My understanding is that Saskatchewan passed legislation similar to this, but that legislation, too, is awaiting regulations. It hasn't been proclaimed yet, so we haven't actually seen what any of those outcomes are or where it is that the rubber meets the road, so to speak.

So with that long and somewhat intense, I suppose, foray into the legislation, I will take my seat and again just thank the minister for bringing this forward. I think this has the potential to be amazing.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to Bill 17 in second reading? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to echo what my colleague said. This is encouraging, actually, to see legislation like this, but of course our job as opposition is to make suggestions and ask questions. I certainly have some questions to ask, so I'm going to spend a little bit of time doing that.

I do, first of all, on Bill 17, Disclosure to Protect Against Domestic Violence (Clare's Law) Act, understand that it is enabling legislation, but I think that everyone in this House can appreciate the fact that in this short time that we've had this government, there have been a few pieces of legislation that appear to be somewhat enabling because they're short on detail and they're short on answers to our questions. So, you know, I'm a little bit skeptical that – actually, let me rephrase that. I'm going to be hopeful that all of the questions that we'll ask will be answered fairly so that we can all work together to make sure that this is the best piece of legislation possible, because I don't want this piece of legislation or this work to end up with the kind of questions we see around some of the decisions that the government has made; for example, the piece of legislation called job creation, which is really a large corporate tax credit. You know, we're told to just have faith that it'll all work out, people will benefit, everything will be wonderful, and so far we've not seen that. So, of course, you can understand some of my cynicism.

Anyway, I do have some questions about this legislation. I understand that there'll be another phase of consultation, and of course I'm really curious about who the stakeholders will be and what that consultation will look like. We've seen a few things online that have popped up, where people can weigh in and add their comments. You know, there were face-to-face meetings, which is great, but it would be really great if this government would really look at ensuring that all stakeholders are invited to the table, to maybe make that process in itself a little bit more public so that we can share our ideas about it. There are perhaps groups of people that haven't been included that would bring some really great information or ask some good questions.

You know, some of the documents, one of the supporting documents that I read: obviously, we have questions around the process that will be used once the request is made for things like a risk assessment to determine whose information will be shared and when. Obviously, I have a great deal of faith in our law enforcement and the tools that they use, that they'll make the best informed decisions, but perhaps it wouldn't be a bad idea to look at that risk assessment process in itself.

I think some of the other jurisdictions that the government talked about in some of their supporting documents, you know, really leave a lot of questions about the number of requests that were fulfilled. For example, in Saskatchewan The Interpersonal Violence Disclosure Protocol (Clare's Law) Act: I note here in the report that about 80 applications for information were made each year once the legislation was implemented, with disclosures happening in less than half the cases. I'm assuming that had something to do with their risk assessment process. In British Columbia the bill was only introduced in May 2019. Again, looking farther away, in New Zealand, the information in this document shows about 75 per cent of the cases where the disclosures were approved or passed on.

So, obviously, there are some different tools for assessing. Again, as I said earlier, I have complete faith in Alberta's law enforcement, that the tools that they use are current, up to date, and thorough. But perhaps in an effort to always make things better – that's something that we talk about because things are always changing – maybe there are some things we can add to that.

I know that in a quick meeting that we had yesterday about this, one of the things that I was thinking about was that any time you're adding more responsibilities to any kind of department, you know, it requires humans to do that work. It requires effort, and sadly that effort always translates into resources, so I think it's really important to talk about the workloads that will be impacted by this legislation and the processes that are involved to make this happen. But in a time where municipalities are not sure about funding – well, of course, we are all not sure about funding because we don't have a budget – where smaller municipalities are worried about some of the costs being deferred to them or them having to take on more responsibility to pay for policing, this is a concern for them.

We certainly don't want people that are impacted by this in larger areas, that are better funded, to be more safe than in rural communities because of lack of resources. So I think it's important to talk about that.

The other thing that I did want to talk about is that – and, you know, maybe it's just something to think about. When legislation is crafted, you're always using the most recent examples that we might have or whatever research that we might have, but maybe we can look at: is there a way to expand this even further? I appreciate that this legislation focuses on letting people know in certain cases in intimate relationships – whether they're married, separated, divorced, other kinds of intimate relationships – but in my previous work I worked with people with disabilities, and very often people with profound disabilities are in intimate relationships that you wouldn't think are the typical definition of intimate relationships. Very often they're reliant on just a couple of people to provide the very necessities of life, whether that's feeding them, bathing them, whatever that might be, helping them with banking, all of those things that although it's a work relationship are very similar.

I can tell you that with the hundreds of people that I had overseen their hiring and sometimes firing, we did, you know, request criminal record checks and as much information as we could. We did our best to check references, all of those things, but sometimes the really important information like the information we're talking about isn't easily accessible depending on where they are in the system or where they are through that process. I think, you know, maybe it's worth having the discussion that we expand the definition of intimate relationship and expand the definition of who we can further protect. I just wanted to talk about that a little bit.

But most important – and, again, this is a great step. If I'm sounding awfully negative about this, I don't mean to be. I'm actually trying to make suggestions that would make this better or to add some questions to what I'm sure is a growing list of questions. But the thing that struck me the most is that this legislation is great, but what will always be more important than this is prevention from this ever happening.

I can only use the examples in my constituency and my community of St. Albert. We have some community groups that are funded by FCSS. I'm sure you've heard us talk about this before. One of those groups does some really amazing work. The acronym is SAIF Society, and it stands for Stop Abuse in Families. This group does a number of things. They offer free counselling to people who sometimes are still in those relationships and trying to make a plan to leave. Sometimes people have left, and you can imagine all of the things that go on there. But, more importantly, they go into schools and talk to students and do presentations. They really have a sharp focus on prevention because they understand that that's key. They also do quite a bit of counselling with the children of people that are impacted by domestic violence who have left a violent situation. They really do a lot of support work with those kids, and it's all free. They do this because they understand the cycle of violence, and they understand that without the proper intervention, this problem can manifest itself and most likely will manifest itself in some way.

The reason I'm talking about the SAIF Society is because they are reliant on FCSS funding. I'm sure you know that FCSS funding is an 80-20 split with the province and the municipality. What was interesting, while we were in government, is that every year I think we added an additional $24 million to that fund, and municipalities started to step up and actually add more funding to those programs as well. Now I am hearing from municipal leaders in my community that they're seriously concerned that this government is going to cut some of that funding. I understand the talking points that the government is saying, that "We have hard choices to make,"

because, you know – I won't even go there. I had a really hard time with watching legislation pass that would give a huge corporate tax break to profitable corporations, and now we're having this discussion that's framed around: you know, we have hard decisions to make. Well, we should have made those hard decisions before. In any case, one of the decisions that I'll be looking at is the FCSS funding.

If we're going to stand up and say, "Hey; we're supporting this legislation because we want people to be safe," and of course we do – of course we do – you have to do the other work, and the other work is prevention and supporting people that are leaving situations, or supporting people so that they can leave situations. Sadly, I'm sure every single one of us in this place knows of somebody who has had to deal with this, who has had to deal with a violent domestic situation, and it's horrible. The impact is so far-reaching and so devastating. The supports have to be there for the people to be able to leave and then pick up the pieces and start life. That means affordable housing. That means safe housing. Believe it or not, that means affordable child care.

When you have, for example, a family that is splitting up or you have a spouse that is leaving, often with the children, often without a lot of notice, often without a lot of money or possessions, they're struggling. They're really struggling and struggling to move. I'm sure some of you have had to recently look for child care. The wait-lists are enormous for child care. It's very sad that I hear people talking about getting on wait-lists for quality child care soon after their baby is born. We've heard again and again that the cost of child care is equivalent to a mortgage. So affordable child care, believe it or not, is an essential support.

In this document released by the government, they talked about the essential wraparound services. I believe that. I read that and thought that absolutely – absolutely – wraparound services are essential. While this legislation is great – it's great because information is power, and information in the correct hands is power for people to make good decisions for themselves and their families – you have to have the other pieces. You have to have the prevention, and you have to have the follow-up.

Just to summarize, I, like my colleague, have a number of questions about how the next phase will proceed. Who will be invited to those tables to offer suggestions and ideas? Is there a way to expand this scope when we define what an intimate relationship is? In 2019 we have some very complex intimate relationships that perhaps we've overlooked, so let's make sure that we get it right and invite everybody to the table. You know, let's also look at: what are the tools that we're using to make those assessments? Is there a way at all that we can support law enforcement or the officers that will be making the decisions around disclosure? Is there a way to look at assessment tools? Like any tool, sometimes they need to be sharpened. Is there a way that we can look at the assessment to make sure that we've not missed anything?

Most importantly, more important than anything else, is that we need to invest in the wraparound supports for people that are impacted by this kind of violence. We need to invest in prevention, and we need to invest in wraparound supports. Just like the documents says, we need to invest in wraparound supports, and that means housing, that means income support, that means child care, and that means affordable transportation. That means all of those things.

I look forward to seeing this government's budget. I look forward to seeing how much you're going to invest in wraparound supports to support this piece of important legislation that you've brought forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 17?

Seeing none, would the hon. minister like to close debate? The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to start off by saying, first of all, that I'm really heartened to see that there is consensus on both sides of the House on the importance of this piece of legislation and the impact it could have on potentially preventing harmful relationships from taking place and actually reducing the rates of domestic violence in our province.

I also want to talk a little bit about some of the horrible statistics that we've shared today. We've talked about the fact that 82 per cent of women are the victims of domestic violence in all police-reported instances, and we've talked about a number of other statistics. I think it's really important that we don't become desensitized to these numbers. As part of my background before I became an MLA and minister, I worked as an economist, so I dealt quite a bit with numbers and data. What does get lost in this whole conversation is that there are so many instances of domestic violence and abusive relationships that never get reported, so those numbers that we talk about, as horrible as they are, don't reflect the true reality and the true picture of what the problem really is within our province.

I also know that there are a number of questions around how this legislation is ultimately going to work. There are questions around who is defined as an applicant. There are questions, obviously, around wraparound supports, risk assessment, and timelines. The intention is to implement this legislation fully with fully fleshed out regulations by the spring of 2020. We are committed to ensuring that we have diverse stakeholder engagement as we move through operationalizing the regulations to make sure that we capture all the voices that need to be at the table and to ensure that as we operationalize the regulations, we've heard all of the different perspectives that need to be heard.

I do appreciate all of the input that I've received so far, particularly in the first stage of stakeholder engagement. I will emphasize again that this is an important commitment from our government, and it's an important promise to Albertans that we are taking action on domestic violence. I personally don't think it's aspirational to say that we should aim to eliminate domestic violence in our province. I do look forward to including everybody's comments and concerns and suggestions in the next phase of consultations as we build out the regulations. As everybody has heard today, this legislation will empower those at risk of domestic violence with the right to know and the right to ask so they can make informed decisions about potentially harmful relationships. We have to work together to get this right, and I'm committed and this government is committed to making sure that we get this legislation right.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move to close today's debate. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a second time]

Government Motions

Interprovincial Infrastructure Projects

34. Mrs. Savage moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly denounce all federal political parties that would enable a provincial government to unilaterally prevent the construction of interprovincial infrastructure projects of national importance, including natural resource pipelines.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in the House today in support of this motion to denounce all federal political parties that would enable a provincial government to unilaterally prevent the construction of interprovincial infrastructure projects of national importance, including natural resource pipelines.

While my constituency of Grande Prairie is fortunate to benefit from a diversified economy, the area relies heavily on the oil and gas sector for our viability. We recognize the significance of pipelines and interprovincial trade, co-operation, and economic development. Without co-ordination among provinces Alberta would not have an efficient and effective way to transport our oil and gas to market.

Allowing a province, Madam Speaker, any province, the unilateral decision to prevent the construction of interprovincial infrastructure – for us here in Alberta at this time in particular, pipelines – would be devastating to our province and also to our country. Our oil and gas industry stands on a remarkable record of clean, ethical, and efficient production. Alberta has long served as the economic engine of Canada, and we must not be crippled economically by unbalanced and ill-informed policies that land-lock our resource-rich province. Alberta and Canada have an abundant endowment of resources, and our nation has built its standard of living on the ethical extraction of these same resources within our provinces. Our national economy is dependent on creating value by delivering key resources to the world. The rising demand globally for fossil fuels is an opportunity for Alberta and for Canada, in fact, to continue to lead the way in ethical and sustainable resource extraction and technological advances, which very much include Alberta oil and gas.

Resource export economies rely on efficient transportation to reach markets between provinces, to the U.S., and overseas. Canada's energy industry has been built on supplying Canadians, Americans, and the overseas markets with reliable, ethical, and affordable energy. We need to continue to build new transportation facilities, pipelines, and other production facilities to serve those markets in an open and competitive way. Madam Speaker, this includes all provinces, not just Alberta. At this time the pipeline issues are paramount to Alberta's economy and growth, but other provinces will foreseeably require interprovincial infrastructure in the future for their growth and development. This goes both ways. We are a federation, a nation, and we must work together and not against ourselves by permitting any province the power to block critical infrastructure projects going forward. Beyond North America the strongest growth market in the world is Asia, where Canada and Alberta can play an important role in providing responsibly developed natural gas and oil.

We need to be ever vigilant to ensure that we have free trade across provincial and international boundaries and ensure that Albertans and Canadians continue to benefit from our resource base. This is true today, and we have a responsibility to ensure market access and economic viability for future generations as well. This was a significant driver for me personally in my decision to step into the political arena, to ensure that we leave our province in good shape, poised for growth for future generations. I believe we have a responsibility to get our fiscal house in order and not live today by mortgaging the future of our kids and grandkids. That is why I wanted to speak to this motion, Madam Speaker. I believe that it is incumbent on this Legislature at this very time in history to stand up for Alberta and for Canada.

The egregious bills C-48 and C-69, both imposed by the federal Liberal government, have proven to be devastating to Alberta. Tanker bans and no more pipelines: really? Is that what we have come to in this country? It is a sad day to have to stand up and move what should be a given, that we must support each other in Canada for the greater good of our country and its people. The track record of the federal Liberals under Justin Trudeau shows the flagrant disregard for the men and women who work in oil and gas and for their families and, frankly, for those men and women in Saskatchewan and those men and women in British Columbia. I could go on, Madam Speaker.

The Trudeau Liberals have revealed their lack of leadership in this flagrant disregard and their gross misunderstanding of the reality of oil and gas production in Canada. It is time to relieve them of their duties and send them a clear message, not just to them but to all federal political parties, that we will not stand idly by while we are economically crippled and ideologically attacked. We will get Alberta and Canada back to work. Bill C-69 and Bill C-48 and their ideological underpinning cripple our industry and the free and efficient movement of goods and services across Canada, also with our international trading partners. If provinces continue to have the ability to unilaterally prevent the construction of pipelines, Alberta would be at a standstill. Alberta at a standstill means Canada is in economic crisis.

I have sat in this House, Madam Speaker, and I have heard questions and debate over other policies; for example, pilot projects around $25-a-day daycare. This sounds helpful for families. I'm not intending to debate the merits of this particular pilot either way, and I don't purport to have studied it enough to have an informed assessment of this pilot. However, I do want to say that we here in Alberta are forced to make challenging decisions regarding our upcoming budget, and we may not have the luxury to offer programs like this or expand them. I'm not sure what will happen in that regard, but while we debate this one policy, it is my understanding that Quebec continues to offer $7-a-day daycare across the entire province. I just have to wonder: where is the money coming from to support $7-a-day daycare in Quebec? I find the hypocrisy shocking, that our oil and gas revenues are welcome in other provinces but our pipelines are not.

We need to continue to build these new pipelines in order to bring our oil and gas to the global market. As I already mentioned, our federal Liberal government has taken multiple steps in order to try to prevent this from happening. This Monday is a clear opportunity to make a change, and I implore every Albertan and every Canadian, for that matter, to really consider this when you make your choice at the ballot box. Alberta and Canada need to create the conditions to efficiently and safely build pipelines for the future, LNG plants, and ports to ship to overseas markets. By supplying responsible energy to Asia, Canada can grow its economy, create prosperity in our communities where energy is produced and along transportation routes. This development will also greatly help indigenous communities build the capacity of their youth as valuable contributors to society and as potential owners in Canada's energy production. Delivering responsibly produced Canadian energy to Asia can also help lower global emissions. By displacing coal for electricity in Asia with Alberta's natural gas, we can cut carbon emissions in half and reduce the well-known health hazards that result from coal-fired power production.

I also just want to say that these projects of national importance, infrastructure that's required interprovincially, allow for industry and economic development. I think that sometimes in our communities we forget that when we have economic development, it benefits everyone. It benefits people outside of that sector. It supports schools, roads, hospitals, bridges, other critical infrastructure that we need to live in a first-world economy, and I think that we need to remember that when we look at this.

I definitely support this motion, and I thank you for your time today, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to speak to this motion. This motion is crucially important for our government and our relationship with our federal counterparts going forward. While our relationship of late with Trudeau's Liberals has been less than ideal, we must strive to condemn any political party allowing provinces, on their own, to prevent infrastructure projects that are of national importance. This could be anything, but the most recent example would be British Columbia filibustering Alberta and the federal government on getting our pipelines through.

This motion is less about preventing provinces from bullying or blockading other provinces and the federation. What this motion is about, though, is ultimately promoting unity and allowing for a cohesive and comprehensive vision of what Canada should be to shine through. The importance of the federal government being able to collaborate in a seamless and constructive manner with the provinces in order to have goals met is very important. It is important for advancing our national interests, ensuring economic success for the country, bringing investor confidence back to Canada, ensuring all provinces are successful and profitable, and generally increasing the quality of life for Canadians.

It is very easy to allow ourselves to be divided by regional differences. All of our provinces have unique flavours, with vastly different economies, whether they be resource based like Alberta or manufacturing based like Ontario. With so many differences, it's no wonder that provinces bicker with themselves and the federal government to further their own interests. We have seen these differences in government.

We've seen these differences manifest with difficulties Alberta has had in getting our oil to market and pipelines built. Some provinces have taken issue with our oil and taken issue with allowing pipelines that transport our oil to be built through their province. They fail to realize, though, that our oil and pipelines do not just benefit Alberta or Ottawa; these infrastructure projects benefit all of Canada. This is because oil constitutes 10 per cent of our total GDP as a country and is used in virtually every industry in some respect.

In addition to the benefit oil gives, it also attracts investor confidence to bring money into the country. This also provides us with greater capacity to provide goods and services to all Canadians.

The reality, Madam Speaker, is that we can accomplish so much more when we work together. A shining example of this, of course, is the Trans-Canada highway. This highway was approved back in 1949 and dubbed highway 1. It required the support and the effort of all provinces to eventually get it built. Construction commenced in 1950, and it was officially opened in 1962. The construction would finally be complete in 1971. This 21-year effort is the greatest highway in all of Canada, running coast-to-coast and being used by millions of Canadians each year. The Trans-Canada highway is a testament to what the provinces can do when they work together with the federal government to accomplish a task for the betterment of this country.

Being part of a federation means working together to ensure all Canadians, regardless of which province or region they hail from, have a superior quality of life and access to excellent goods and services. As Albertans we feel the sting of this unwillingness to co-operate the most right now with our oil industry, but soon it could be any other province. It could be Quebec with their lumber, agriculture in Saskatchewan, fishing in the Maritimes, mining in the north, steel and auto manufacturing in Ontario. Any of these industries could be next to face blockades similar to what we are facing now.

This is why we are bringing forth this motion. As Albertans we have historically been trendsetters and leaders in Canada's energy business. So, too, must we rise up and be leaders on this front as well. We must show that Alberta, despite our current economic turmoil, is willing to take the first step towards conflict resolution and moving forward together as a cohesive unit to the benefit of all Canadians.

Albertans have always had the mentality that when the going gets tough, we pull ourselves up by our bootstraps, disregard what makes us different, and knuckle down and get the job done. We are calling on all provinces and the federal government to recognize that this is a necessary step and for them to do the same.

If this motion is undertaken and becomes successful, the potential gain is massive for our country. Bringing investor confidence back would cause the value of our dollar to rise, giving Canadians more international travel and buying power. A well-thought-out and implemented plan would also bring many jobs back not only to Alberta but also to other places where jobs are so sorely needed such as the east coast. Bringing these jobs back would alleviate many of the struggles faced by a great number of Canadians. This would improve the economic well-being of every Canadian, which would be a huge boon to our economy. This would mean Canadians buying homes, investing, starting small businesses. The entrepreneurial spirit that made this province and this country great would flare up once again.

This is why I'm proud to stand and support this motion. The benefit far outweighs the cost. It is time to move past our differences and put our heads together like we did in the past. This motion will foster stronger bonds between the provinces and greater camaraderie with our federal counterparts. Our interprovincial infrastructure must be allowed to go forward. This is how Canada will move forward and compete in our ever-growing, ever-changing marketplace. I would ask that all members, on both sides of the aisle, join me in recognizing the importance of this challenge.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is applicable. Are there any members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the motion? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to this motion on the floor, which I believe is a ridiculous political stunt that makes a mockery of this legislation, and I will explain why. The government called us back early because they apparently had such a robust legislative agenda that they couldn't wait to get back to work here, but what we have seen in the past two weeks is that they are filibustering their own bills, filibustering their own motions, and essentially bringing forward legislation that has been unanimously supported by this House. Now, when they have nothing left, what they are doing is bringing this motion to discuss federal politics in this House.

I think that this Thursday, instead of discussing federal politics, I would rather be discussing the budget, that Albertans have been asking for for a while now, waiting for for a while now. We know that our school boards across this province are waiting for that budget. They don't know what numbers they should be working with. In Calgary there are reports that schools have put students in hallways. There are reports that kids have been put on buses for two hours. Those are the things that Albertans elected us, that Albertans elected me to discuss and represent on their behalf here. Instead, we are using this House again as a launching pad for the Premier's bid into federal politics and the Premier's bid to support his friend.

I think this government has completely lost focus. If, I guess, they want to do federal politics – I think the Premier has campaigned in Ontario – he's more than welcome to go again. But this House, I think, should focus on the needs of Albertans, on the challenges Albertans are facing. In the last two months we have seen that as soon as they became government, they rushed to give a $4.5 billion handout to big corporations, and Albertans were promised that that will create jobs. In the last two months in the resource sector alone we have lost 14,000 jobs. Albertans are looking for action from this government so they can get back to work, so they can get jobs, and here we are seeing these political stunts in this House, which are wasting our time, this Legislature's time.

In what they have done so far, with that $4.5 billion handout, even their own front-bench ministers are acknowledging, are saying in the media that they are disappointed that it didn't work the way they wanted it to work, because corporations have used those to buy back their shares, to give more dividends, and they have no plan of investing that into the economy. The reason for that is that they have done nothing on market access. Instead, what was already in place – for instance, oil-by-rail contracts that would have moved 120,000 barrels a day to the market, would have created returns for Albertans, for the companies – they cancelled. As a result, we are seeing a huge job loss in the resource sector. Economic activity in that sector is at its lowest.

Instead of focusing on that and taking steps that are needed and necessary to create jobs, to support that sector, they're wasting this Legislature's time. On the issues that should be, that are debated around and across this province, across this country: instead of participating in that, they're using this Legislature's time to debate federal politics and federal issues while Albertans are losing jobs, while our economy is stuck, while we are not progressing on pipelines.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

While we believe that the federal government has and should retain the authority to build national building projects and be free of any kind of veto, this applies to pipelines running across provinces.

But we have worked on a pipeline, and when we were in government, we went coast to coast to coast to build a case for a pipeline. When we started, only 4 in 10 Canadians were in favour of that project, and as a result of the efforts of the former Premier and now Leader of the Opposition, 7 in 10 Canadians are supporting that project.

Here we are seeing that over time this Legislature's time is being used in political gamesmanship and nothing else. Yesterday in this House we had families from all over Alberta who were concerned about the safety of our roads in this province, survivors of the Humboldt crash. They didn't even listen to them; they ignored their concern and failed to assure them that they will take steps that are needed and necessary. They didn't engage in that debate. Instead of looking at what matters to Albertans, instead of looking at the provincial budget this morning, we are asked to weigh in on federal political issues.

Our schools are still looking for funding certainty. They don't know what numbers they need to work with. They still need to hear whether enrolment growth will be fully funded or not, because the answer we get is that they will either maintain or increase, which doesn't help at all. After an outcry from the opposition and Albertans they're, I guess, barely committing to the child nutrition program. We still don't know anything about class improvement funds. These are the priorities in my riding. These are the issues that I hear when I talk to my constituents. They are concerned about kids getting jammed into classrooms, 40 to 45 kids in one classroom. They're concerned about their bus rides, in particular students with complex needs. Their bus ride times have tripled.

We have postsecondary students fearing for the tuition to even go double because they want to match the funds collected from students in B.C. and Ontario, where they collect almost 30 per cent as compared to Alberta's 18 per cent. We didn't hear anything on that.

At the same time, we have seniors who are concerned about their out-of-pocket prescription drugs.

Instead of debating those issues, here we are with this motion while Albertans are waiting, and they're stressed about their future. They still have to wait for another week before the budget could be introduced lest it has any adverse impacts, negative impacts on how the federal Conservative campaign goes and how that budget plays out in their campaign, just like how the Ford budget is playing out in the federal campaign.

I think Albertans want this government to focus on their priorities. Albertans want this Legislature's time to be focused on the issues that matter to Albertans, and if we are to govern for Albertans, then we should be debating the budget this morning. This Legislature shouldn't be a playground for partisan games, for this kind of gamesmanship. Instead, we should introduce a budget. If we could, I think we should be debating the budget here this morning.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I believe that the hon. Minister of Energy has my eye.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite has said that he is disappointed that we are bringing a motion. He called it ridiculous, and he called it a political stunt. What is disappointing is their position when we have a jobs crisis in Alberta. We have tens of thousands of people out of work. We have a jobs crisis. It's disappointing to the thousands of men and women that work very hard in our oil and gas sector and are proud of the work that they do. They want to continue working in our oil and gas sector. We are in a jobs crisis.

We don't have capacity to move our product to market. We have had every single pipeline project in the last four years, under a federal Liberal government in Ottawa, either cancelled, vetoed, or stalled, either on this side of the border or that side of the border. Energy East: cancelled. Northern Gateway: vetoed by Justin Trudeau. We've had line 3 stalled. We've had Trans Mountain stalled. We have line 5 in Michigan now under threat. Yet the member opposite said that he's disappointed to see us standing up and fighting for pipelines, fighting for our energy sector.

Mr. Speaker, what we've seen out of Ottawa in the last four years is nothing short of insulting to Albertans. We've seen a federal government, we've seen a Prime Minister who mused about phasing out the oil sands, and he's serious when he talks about phasing out the oil sands. His method to do it is Bill C-69. We've seen Bill C-48 pass through the House, a tanker ban. We've seen him bring in a carbon tax, a carbon backstop, methane emission regulations that our industry said can't be met, clean fuel standards that add onto the carbon tax. These policies out of Ottawa are harmful to our province.

This election is one of the most important elections in our lifetime, perhaps in this century. This is an existential question for Albertans and for Albertans working in the oil and gas sector, yet the opposite side of the House says that they're disappointed. We were elected on a platform to stand up for our energy sector, to fight for jobs, and to have them say that they're disappointed that we're doing that, exactly that, what we were elected to, shows why they lost. We are going to continue to pursue the priorities that Albertans elected us to do.

Mr. Speaker, during this election we can see that it's a race of three of the federal parties to see who can damage Alberta most, who says that Alberta can be off oil and gas the quickest. We've had the Liberal leader muse about phasing out the oil sands. We've had the federal leader of the NDP promising to help oil sands workers find new jobs. Find new jobs. Our oil and gas workers are proud to work in the oil and gas industry. These are the types of policies that we are going to stand up and fight for. That's the job that Albertans elected us to do, that's the job that we are going to do, and that's what this motion is about.

Mr. Speaker, the member opposite has said that we should be focusing on priorities like the budget. Well, we are. We're bringing in a budget earlier in our term than the NDP did when they were first elected. Our budget is challenging because we've had pipeline constraints, because we've had harmful policies out of Ottawa. We are dealing with a challenging time for exactly the reasons why we are now standing up and fighting for our energy sector.

Mr. Speaker, while the members opposite can call this a political stunt and say that they're disappointed, we're doing what Albertans elected us to do, and we're going to continue to do that each and every single day.

The Acting Speaker: With 50 seconds left under 29(2)(a), I'm not seeing anyone.

Are there any members willing to speak to the motion proper? The hon. Premier has caught my eye.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and debate the following motion before us:

That the Legislative Assembly denounce all federal political parties that would enable a provincial government to unilaterally prevent the construction of interprovincial infrastructure projects of national importance, including natural resource pipelines.

Mr. Speaker, what caused the government to bring this motion before us is a matter of great urgency that touches on our vital economic interests, jobs, the economy, and the future of Alberta. That is the debate being conducted currently in the federal election, where we have, well, not just three but, in fact, four parties – the Liberal Party of Canada, the New Democratic Party, the Green Party, and the Bloc Québécois – all of them openly attacking the industry that has been the lifeblood of Alberta's modern economy and much of Canada's modern prosperity, our responsible energy industry.

One of the ways in which they have launched these attacks, Mr. Speaker, attacks that will be on the ballot next Monday, is by arguing that we should effectively ignore and suspend the letter of the Canadian Constitution in order to allow provincial governments to block federally approved interprovincial infrastructure, including oil and gas pipelines. Should that coalition of parties who want to shut down our energy industry succeed in so doing, the impact on this province would be long lasting and devastating.

I just heard one of the members of the NDP opposite, who was one of the members of the only one-term government in Alberta electoral history, whose government was defeated in a massive electoral trampling because of their refusal to stand up for and defend this province, talking about the priority of his constituents. Well, we canvassed Albertans last April, Mr. Speaker, and do you know what they said their priority is? Jobs, the economy, and pipelines. That's exactly why we brought this motion here before us. Albertans understand that issues like funding education, health care, and other social programs is largely dependent on our ability to get this economy rolling, and that is in large part dependent on our ability to get pipelines built.

So the speeches that we've heard from the NDP today demonstrate that they've learned absolutely nothing from the drubbing that was handed to them by Albertans just six months ago, but we haven't forgotten the lesson, Mr. Speaker. Albertans demand leadership that will, without relent and without apology, defend our vital economic interests, and that's why we brought this motion forward, to give Alberta's elected representatives an opportunity to respond to the ongoing campaign of defamation being led by several federal parties that are using this province and its workers as punching bags, convenient political punching bags, in this federal election.

Within minutes of the beginning of the French leaders' debate, the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Speaker, attacked me as the Premier of Alberta for defending the oil and gas industry. He said that Canada needed a federal government that would, to translate into English, stand up to the government of Alberta and the big oil companies. If the Prime Minister and his friend the NDP leader and his friends the Green and Bloc leaders want to stand up to the big oil companies, as they put it, in this province, then when are they going to stop taking the revenues generated by those companies, that have produced, that produce every year tens of billions of dollars of federal revenue which are shared with Canadians across the country through fiscal federalism, through equalization, and other transfers?

No, Mr. Speaker, we are not going, as the NDP advises us – we will not sit here passively, quietly ignoring these political attacks daily in this federal election by people whose charge, whose mandate and responsibility it is to unite the country.

Three days after I had the honour of being sworn in as our Premier, Mr. Speaker, I was meeting with the Prime Minister in his office in Ottawa. The hon. Minister of Energy was in attendance, and she can confirm that I reminded the Prime Minister that the primary responsibility of a Canadian Prime Minister is to ensure, protect, and strengthen national unity. But picking on one province for short-term political gain, defaming the industry that has been the greatest creator of jobs, wealth, opportunity, and prosperity across the country is not national leadership. It does not strengthen but, rather, undermines national unity.

So, no, to the members opposite, we will not be silenced. We will not be silent when this province and its workers are being attacked by national leaders, including their leader, Mr. Singh. The NDP: there's not a separate provincial and federal NDP. They are legally, constitutionally one and the same party. Their leader, Mr. Speaker – it is just shocking that we have members of the Alberta Legislature who are sitting here passively, silently accepting their leader, their party, their candidates, their platform seeking to shut down the largest industry in this province and put hundreds of thousands of Albertans out of work.

Mr. Speaker, I call upon them to stand up and defend their constituents, defend this province, disassociate themselves publicly from the politics of their leader, Mr. Singh, who has said, and I quote: I would not impose a project on any province, and that means there has to be social acceptability with respect to oil pipelines; I mean, it should be the fact that if we want to move forward with a pipeline project, there has to be buy-in from all people involved. He said that the NDP's platform states that pipelines "cannot bypass Quebec's . . . laws and cannot proceed without the agreement of the Government and people of Quebec." When asked recently about what he'll do to TMX in a minority government position, he said the following: I am opposed to the project, the Trans Mountain expansion, absolutely and fully opposed to it; whatever government the people of Canada choose, I will be doing my best to continue to fight this project; I will work with whatever position I'm in to continue to oppose this project. Mr. Speaker, quote, unquote. That is their leader, and not one of them has had the gumption, the courage, or the integrity to stand up to their leader and say that he is wrong.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the leader of the NDP, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the first Premier to be defeated in an election after one term, the former Premier, was asked recently by the media who she was supporting in this federal election. She implied that she wasn't going to support the NDP, and then when the media reported that, she came out with an urgent clarification. She said: I'm not not voting for the NDP. Imagine this. They're ashamed to admit – they're ashamed to admit – that they are New Democrats, yet they are also afraid to stand up and denounce the anti-Alberta policies that are dividing our country and seeking to balkanize it.

Now, Mr. Trudeau is not much better, Mr. Speaker. He said, when my friend the Premier of New Brunswick sought to get federal support for an effort to revive the failed Energy East pipeline concept, that would have taken Alberta energy to our east coast, displaced OPEC energy imports, stopped some of those dictator oil tankers from coming into the Bay of Fundy and the Port of Saint John, would have helped us to achieve the dream of energy independence, would have moved hundreds of thousands of barrels of responsibly produced Alberta energy to be upgraded and refined by Canadians on our east coast – it made so much sense that the NDP's close friend and ally Justin Trudeau killed it. He did so by imposing new regulatory mandates to require that TC Energy take account in its application for the pipeline of up- and downstream emissions notionally associated with that pipeline, even though the regulation of the upstream production of energy is, under section 92A(1) of the Constitution, a matter of exclusive provincial jurisdiction.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, that Prime Minister and that government killed Energy East, so Premier Higgs, desperate to create jobs for his people in New Brunswick, sought federal support. He said: listen, if you guys are willing to buy a pipeline to the west coast in desperation because you drove a global company, Kinder Morgan, out of Canada, how about helping us to get an east coast pipeline built? You know what the Prime Minister's response was? He said to New Brunswickers: you need to get the government of Quebec onside because we will not support Energy East unless the government of Quebec is onside. He handed – he handed – an unconstitutional political veto over that project, that would unite the country and increase its prosperity, to one government.

And, Mr. Speaker, of course, the Green Party leader, who is now vying to support a prospective Trudeau-led coalition, is even more extreme on these matters. She says, "I say to Quebecers: I will stand with you, we will fight against any pipeline project . . . and we will defend Quebec's right to refuse pipelines." What right? We have a quiescent, silent NDP here, refusing not only to defend our province's vital economic interests against their own party and its allies but refusing to defend the Constitution of Canada.

What are these party leaders – Mr. Trudeau, Mr. Singh, Ms May, and le leader du Bloc Québécois – seeking to do? They are seeking to kill the dream of Canadian Confederation as an economic union. That is what brought the colonies and territories together into one great northern dominion in 1867 and in the decades that followed. It was the audacious dream, which we now easily take for granted, of uniting the northern half of North America into one great union. Mr. Speaker, that is why, from July 1, 1867, this document, the Constitution of Canada, originally the British North America Act, gave to the national government the exclusive authority to regulate projects that run between provinces, because the whole point of Canada was to knock down barriers, was to create unity, to share prosperity, to be partners in that prosperity.

That is why, in their wisdom, the Canadian founders wrote the following into section 92(10)(a) of the Constitution Act, which says that it will be the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal Parliament over other Works and Undertakings connecting the Province with any other or others of the Provinces, or extending beyond the Limits of the Province . . .

And further, in section 92(10)(c),

Such Works as, although wholly situate within the Province, are before or after their Execution declared by the Parliament of Canada to be for the general Advantage of Canada or for the Advantage of Two or more of the Provinces.

This says that any project that runs between provinces is the exclusive regulatory jurisdiction of the dominion Parliament and government and that even projects that lie solely within provinces that are deemed to have national economic benefit are the exclusive domain of the federal authority.

Mr. Speaker, in other words, the position – like, this is shocking. This is why we brought this motion forward. I know the NDP doesn't want to talk about it because they cannot bring themselves – they cannot bring themselves – to disagree with their own. That's how socialists always are. They call it solidarity. They are in solidarity with Jagmeet Singh and the NDP in throwing Alberta workers under the bus, just as Justin Trudeau has thrown this province and its workers under his campaign bus and just as Ms May is doing the same thing. If they won't stand up for our workers against these attacks on Alberta's energy sector, then can we please bestir them to stand up for the rule of law and the Canadian Constitution and national unity against these efforts to balkanize this country?

That's what this is, Mr. Speaker. I know that for some of the Laurentian elites, you know, for some of the chattering classes who write columns in the Toronto Star and the Globe and Mail, for their leader, Mr. Singh – they regard us as little Canadians. They regard us as parochial and too focused on our own economic interests. They could not be more wrong. It is Albertans who are the great champions of national unity and of Confederation, of constitutional federalism as originally conceived by the founders of Canada and not just originally conceived: only six months ago the British Columbia Court of Appeal upheld unanimously, in a five to nothing decision, federal paramountcy over interprovincial pipelines per section 92A of the British North America Act. So this is not some sort of dead letter of the law. This is not some antique constitutional principle. This is live constitutional law that is being ignored.

Mr. Speaker, we need to regain the sense occasionally to have a bit of outrage. We have leaders seeking the highest office in the land who are saying that they will wilfully violate the Constitution of the land by handing to individual provinces the ability to block interprovincial projects, including oil and gas pipelines, notwithstanding the Constitution's absolutely clear assertion of federal paramountcy on these projects. That's why we're bringing this forward for a vote. We're trying to put on notice those parties. We're trying to gain the public's attention not just here in Alberta but across Canada. This is not just about the hundreds of billions of dollars of wealth and the resources that the left wants us to keep in the ground. We're not just talking about hundreds of thousands of jobs. We're not just talking about our ability to pay for schools and hospitals in Alberta and, through equalization, across the rest of the country. We are talking about whether we will become 10 balkanized little provinces, undermining the dream of Confederation.

No, Mr. Speaker. We Albertans are big Canadians. We are champions of national unity. We are the defenders of the Constitution. We call on all federal parties to stop the Alberta bashing, to stop bashing the women and men who have come here from every corner of the country and every corner of the world to responsibly develop the patrimony of our natural resources. Mr. Speaker, we call on the federal parties to stop the division, to stop separating one province from another, to stop setting up interests against one another, to think big, to dream big, to build big things, yes, including energy pipelines.

Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the House that this past summer when I chaired the Western Premiers' Conference here in Edmonton, I was immensely proud to see all seven of those Premiers, four western and three northern Premiers – British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nunavut, Northwest Territories, and Yukon – all agree unanimously in our joint communiqué with the principle and the goal of building energy and resource corridors, including, and I quote explicitly, oil and gas pipelines. To take that further, a month later we gathered in Saskatoon at the Council of the Federation with the 10 provincial and three territorial Premiers, and 12 of those heads of government on behalf of their provinces and territories agreed to a language that I proposed in a joint communiqué to support energy and resource corridors, including oil and gas pipelines. One province resiled from the words "oil and gas"; otherwise, unanimous agreement with the concept of energy and resource corridors.

Now, that's really what we're asking for here, Mr. Speaker: respect for the letter of the Constitution so that those corridors can be built, the modern version of the CPR that linked the Dominion together in the 1870s and '80s. What kind of a weird, upside-down, topsy-turvy world do we live in where we have 12 of 13 provincial and territorial governments from all different partisan backgrounds, including the New Democrats in British Columbia, for goodness' sake, and Liberal governments on the east coast, all of these governments aligned, understanding federal paramountcy on interprovincial pipelines, supporting resource and energy corridors, including oil and gas pipelines, 12 of 13 provincial and territorial governments in favour of those job-creating, country-uniting projects, yet we have four of five federal parties against that principle.

Let me just restate that in case it's lost on anyone. We have all but one of the 13 provincial and territorial governments saying that the federal government has unquestioned constitutional responsibility to build these big projects or to see that they are built, but we have four of five federal parties against the federal power, against the Constitution, against our share of prosperity. What is going on in this country, Mr. Speaker, and why is Alberta's NDP silent about this? Well, we all know why. Because – you know what? – they're all just New Democrats. They're in solidarity – they're in solidarity – with the folks trying to land-lock this province. We will be able to see that depending on how they vote on this motion.

You know, let me go a step further on this. Not only do we have 12 of 13 provincial governments aligned with the spirit of the motion before this House right now – and by the way, I must pause to congratulate the one federal party that is actually seeking to respect and defend the Constitution. I want to thank Mr. Scheer for supporting the principle of energy and resource corridors. Mr. Speaker, the NDP is heckling me. Here we go. Yes, absolutely, here we go. Why don't they stand up and put their partisanship aside and thank – and they're laughing at this – and thank the one party, even if they may not vote Conservative or agree with the Conservatives on other issues. How about they have the integrity and the independence to stand up and at least thank one party for embracing energy and resource corridors, including federal paramountcy on interprovincial pipelines? Why don't they? Because I guess they don't agree with that principle. I just want to thank Mr. Scheer for endorsing a concept embraced by 12 provincial and territorial governments and, I believe, by virtually everyone in Alberta except some folks on the left.

Mr. Speaker, we are through the looking glass on this. We're living in an Alice-in-Wonderland world right now in our national politics: national leaders arguing against the national Constitution and the national authority, national leaders – okay, with the exception of the Bloc leader – whose responsibility it is to affirm national unity, dividing this country, attacking the province that has been the key engine of prosperity and growth. But at the same time, the same national leaders, four of the five, supporting unilateral federal interference in an area of exclusive provincial constitutional jurisdiction, namely the regulation of upstream production of our resources. What am I talking about? I'm sure the NDP doesn't understand because they never opposed the no more pipelines law, Bill C-69's assertion that they can regulate, that the federal government can Bigfoot into our territory and regulate the production of resources.

I refer the House, Mr. Speaker, to section 92A(1) of the Constitution Act. Allow me to read this into the record:

In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

- (a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;
- (b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and
- (c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the founders of Confederation didn't have the wisdom to include that in 1867 because these issues were not current at the time. What I just read is the single most important constitutional victory and, arguably, political victory of the government of Alberta in the last century. This section – this section – was fought for and won by the late, great Premier Peter Lougheed during the patriation of the Constitution in 1981 because he was never going to again allow a federal government – let's be pointed about this – a Trudeau government, to destroy the economy of this province through a replay of the national energy program.

The consent for Alberta to the Constitution of Canada was conditioned on that section I just read. Had Peter Lougheed not succeeded in getting that written into the Constitution, we never would have signed the Constitution. We still would be outside formal consent for the Constitution as has the province of Quebec since 1982. What I just read was a conditioned precedent of Alberta's signature to the Constitution Act. This is serious business, Mr. Speaker. This section, which I just read, gives to this Assembly alone, let me re-cite: "In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to . . . exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province; [and] development, conservation and management of [those resources]."

Mr. Speaker, that is the law of the land, yet we have a federal government that just brought into force a bill they passed through Parliament against the advice of the Senate of Canada, with opposition from, I believe, eight provinces and two territories. They brought in the no more pipelines law, which asserts a federal power to regulate the exploration for nonrenewable natural resources in the province and the development, conservation and management of nonrenewable natural resources and the rate of primary production therefrom.

Mr. Speaker, C-69, the no more pipelines law, a complete prima facie, gross violation of the Constitution, not just any provision but the provision of the Constitution which was the condition precedent of Alberta signing on – the federal government is running on that in this campaign, the Trudeau Liberals supported in that bill by the NDP and the Green Party. I must add that on this point at least the Bloc Québécois agrees with us, Mr. Speaker. As Premier François Legault confirmed to me in my meetings with him, Quebec is against this – why? – because they've always been allies of Alberta in defending provincial jurisdiction under the Constitution.

We had, I think, every province supporting us in opposition to Bill C-69, with the exception of British Columbia and I think the exception of Yukon territory. I think the Energy minister will confirm that. Why am I talking about C-69? Mr. Speaker, let me just be clear. You've got four of five federal parties saying that they are giving federal power over pipelines to the provinces and then they are taking provincial power over the upstream regulation of a resource and taking it to the federal government. This is a complete inversion of the Constitution. They are turning the Constitution upside down, on its head.

Now, I guess, I know that to many people constitutional issues are abstractions, but these principles were enshrined here for a reason, Mr. Speaker. The reason: so that we could have a right to develop our resources and have a national government that would get those resources to market. When it comes to the continuing jobs crisis in this province, that's what we need. All we need is that the Constitution be respected, but in order for that to happen, we need federal leadership that will respect the Constitution along with us. That is why we brought forward this motion.

I know the NDP in their hyperpartisanship want to dismiss this. They want to talk about anything else but this. They were quipping earlier that they wanted the budget earlier, even though in 2015 they brought their first budget in later. But you know, Mr. Speaker, consistency has never been an NDP virtue. The real question for them is: why have they been so silent in a federal campaign where this province has become a political punching bag? Why won't they speak up? Why is their own party campaigning actively against this province? Why are they going to go and vote for that party? Why are they going to go and vote for the leader who is now, according to the polls, potentially in contention to be a future Prime Minister, who wants to shut down the energy sector in this province? If we think we have a jobs crisis right now, could you imagine – could you imagine – the crisis in our economy under a federal NDP government? I don't know what's worse, that or a Liberal-NDP-Green coalition.

Mr. Speaker, it's time for them to stand up and defend their constituents and their jobs. It's time for them to stand up and defend national unity and the Constitution of Canada. It's time for them to stand up and defend the future of this province. Well, this government certainly will, and that is why I commend this motion to the House. I make it clear to the leaders of the federal Liberal, NDP, Green, and Bloc parties that in this province we have a government that will defend our vital economic interest, that will defend our patriotic attachment to Canada, that will advocate for the spirit of Confederation to do and build big things once again. We will defend national prosperity. We will defend the letter of the Constitution of Canada. We will defend national unity against the forces of division and balkanization. That's what Albertans have hired us to do, and that's exactly what we will do.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available should anybody be wishing to take that opportunity.

Seeing none, I see that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has the call.

11:30

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to weigh in on the motion up for consideration. I want to be very clear that nobody is asking the Premier to be silent. Nobody. What we are asking for him to do is his job, and a big part of his job is making sure that he puts forward a plan that outlines the budget for the province of Alberta. I know he will say: well, we're going to get it in two days earlier. Well, that's actually a very creative, flexible way of revisiting history, because the history is that his cabinet was sworn in in April. His cabinet has had more than six months to get together and work on their plan for our province. That's actually their job.

For those six months there has been a lot of political grandstanding, a lot of weighing in on federal issues, and a lot of spending time engaging in things that actually aren't getting pipelines built, aren't creating more jobs, and aren't giving clarity to the people of our province about what the plan is for health care and education and social services. Members of the government caucus have said things like: we don't know if we'll be able to afford the luxury of affordable child care. It's problematic to me that six months after the election we're hearing language like that, but we're also not here debating the things that are actually core mandate to the province of Alberta, including the Ministry of Children's Services.

I think that this motion is making a mockery of this place and of our provincial responsibility, Mr. Speaker. I think that this government called us back early, and in this caucus, the NDP, we were very excited to come back early because we have been saying for months that it's really important to get a budget out, and even if you don't have the full and final budget, give the targets to schools so that they know what the funding formula will be. When they know how many kids they have, they can do the math, and they can figure out how much money they're going to have. That didn't happen. We said: bring forward a budget so that we can have that certainty.

As a result, we've seen things like kids in Calgary on buses for their ride times. I met with a family last week. Their ride time had nearly tripled. It was about 20 minutes previously, and it was over an hour. This is students who have severe challenges – severe challenges – that in the morning wake up with such anxiety that they are bent over a bucket in anxiety and stress. These are the things that we are asking the Premier to speak up on, for the Premier and his cabinet to be leaders on. Under provincial jurisdiction is the funding of education. The funding of education is so fundamental to making sure that we have a strong society and a strong economy for this and the next generation as well.

But what we've seen for the last two weeks, as was mentioned by my colleague the Member for Calgary-McCall, is filibustering on government bills, bringing in bills that we obviously are going to unanimously support. I imagine that when members of government caucus were called back, they were also hopeful that we'd be here debating substantive, major pieces of public policy. Instead, we are being asked to stall and delay on the actual substantive work of this Legislature and engage in highly partisan attacks against the Official Opposition, Her Majesty's Official Opposition, in Alberta.

I will tell you that the Premier made it clear in his opening remarks that he wants this debate to be an item of national news, and what I have to say is that I am concerned about his focus on national news over the focus on his core mandate. I'd say that the government is lost at this time. They're not creating jobs as they promised. They brought in a $4.5 billion, no-jobs corporate handout that has certainly not helped them live up to the mandate that they were actually given by Albertans, and they continue to engage in items of federal interest, which I am also interested in. I am interested in knowing why the Premier, when he was sitting around the cabinet table and representing Alberta in the House of Commons, only said the word "pipeline" twice in the House of Commons. The Premier only said the word "pipeline" twice in the House of Commons. It seems pretty interesting to me that he's taking this opportunity in the middle of a federal election to try to aggrandize what his – to rewrite history, one might say.

He's also cancelled oil by rail. The Energy minister, when introducing this, talked about capacity, and certainly the Energy minister acted in the exact opposite way from what she was espousing by actually reversing those decisions to increase capacity and get to new markets.

Those are some of the main points I wanted to begin with. At this time I will take a moment to introduce an amendment that I have to the motion, please.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Just so that you understand, I'm just taking a quick moment to ensure that it gets a chance to be passed around the House. Then, once that's done, I'll call on you, and you will have the remainder of the time to speak on this amendment.

Thank you, hon. member. To ensure that we can continue moving forward, would you be so kind as to read it into the record, and then please continue with your remarks.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would be my honour. I'm moving this amendment on behalf of my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, who proposes that we amend Government Motion 34 by adding the words "and that would roll back progress on efforts to reach Canada's current greenhouse gas emissions targets, including the abysmal federal TIER plan" after the words "prevent the construction of interprovincial infrastructure projects of national importance, including natural resource pipelines."

What we're proposing here is not to take anything out of the government motion but to actually add to the government motion. What we are saying is that you can't have one without the other, which I think many have made very clear throughout the debate on this. The economy and pipelines as well as the environment need to go hand in hand. So what we are proposing is the addition of this wording to say that we actually take the environment seriously and that we add to the motion by saying that anything that would roll back progress efforts to reach Canada's current greenhouse gas emission targets, including the abysmal federal TIER plan, would be something that this House would be opposed to.

Those are my remarks with regard to this this morning. Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to consider other feedback we have with regard to this amendment and to the main motion.

I want to say again that there is important work of this Assembly. The important work of this Assembly includes bringing forward a provincial budget. That is the direct responsibility of the province. It's actually one of the recommendations that was also made in the MacKinnon report, that there be certainty around budgeting. Certainly, I have to say that the crisis that is being created in our schools and in our hospitals – we're hearing people this morning on the Internet talking about things like radiologists being told that they can't refer patients for more tests at this time because there just isn't enough certainty about the budget and that there's a deep level of concern that the budget isn't sufficient to cover increased testing requirements.

These are the types of things that I really would propose the Premier and his cabinet spend some of their time addressing. I know that he is enjoying the opportunity to engage in federal politics again, which he regularly does, but in this House we also have a responsibility to actually focus on the mandate that was given to the province, and to bring forward a budget, of course, is a big piece of that.

If the Premier was really focused on what I would argue is the most important part of his job, he would take those responsibilities very seriously. So I request that he please stop stalling and playing games and that he introduce the budget already. This is something that many, many Albertans are deeply concerned about the government failing to do, and for good reason.

That is my amendment and my remarks as such. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other hon. members looking to speak to this amendment? [interjection] Oh. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available first. My apologies. Five minutes for questions and comments. I see that the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika has risen to speak.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't want to take up a lot of time in my response, but I did have a quick thought to share with the Legislature here. The member opposite had said at the beginning of her remarks that she's disappointed we're standing here talking about this motion and not about the core mandates of the government. Well, frankly, if jobs, the economy, and pipelines aren't the core mandate of this government, I don't know what is. I don't.

We campaigned on this for months, you know, well over a year before the election was officially called. Albertans across the province knew what the core mandate of this government would be if elected: jobs, the economy, pipelines. This motion speaks directly to that, so I find it irritating that the members opposite would suggest that we're wasting our time debating this motion when defending the province is our main priority, and that's what this motion does.

With that, I just had to respond to that ridiculous remark.

The Acting Speaker: With three minutes and 50 seconds remaining, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has risen.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member, for giving me an opportunity to reinforce what I was saying. In terms of jobs, one of the first bills that was brought forward by the government in the spring session, many, many months ago, was around a massive corporate giveaway, what has been referred to as a $4.5 billion, no-jobs corporate handout. Even the Minister of Energy has said how disappointed she and many of her colleagues, I imagine, are about the fact that there are no jobs that are coming from this massive, massive giveaway.

I have to say that when the member says that chiming in about trying to argue about certain political parties in this House is core to his mandate, I would say that core to his mandate is actually developing policies that will result in jobs. That is one of the key pieces rather than giving a massive $4.5 billion, no-jobs corporate handout – say that three times fast – to certain friends and insiders.

I also have to say that when it comes to creating a budget, that is one hundred per cent core to the work of government. Every government should be bringing forward a budget, and they shouldn't have to take more than six months to create one. The government was sworn in in April.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Like you.

Ms Hoffman: Oh, thank you for the comment, Government House Leader. The 2015 government was sworn in in May, but I appreciate you chiming in through your heckling. It's always fun when you belittle this side of the House for chiming in during other people's debate, and now the Government House Leader is heckling me, which is, you know, standard practice, I guess.

But let's get back to what's actually core to government's role, and that is actually bringing forward a budget, a budget that gives clarity to hospitals in the Government House Leader's riding about what their future will be. I know that when he was in opposition and I was the minister, I was very pleased to work across party lines to make sure that we fought hard to save hospitals in his own riding. Are those his priorities now that he's sitting around a cabinet table creating a budget?

We've certainly got a lot of health care workers deeply concerned about the future of the health care system in this province, and for good reason. When we hear government members say things like a luxury to have affordable child care that is safe and accessible, what else is next? Is it a luxury to have affordable health care that is universally available? Is this inevitably the next step along this path? Is it a luxury to have a fire department that is available if you're in times of crisis? Is it a luxury to be able to send your kids to postsecondary institutions so that they can achieve the most from our opportunities in this province? Is it a luxury to be able to go to school without having to lean over a bucket in the morning because you're in such agony about your transition time and what your experiencing on that bus when you're a student who has severe special needs? I see the Government House Leader continue to laugh and mock these things that Alberta parents are saying are so important to them to have addressed.

They stall and delay and weigh in on federal matters, Mr. Speaker. Again, I will not apologize for holding the government to account about the government's core work. If they actually wanted to focus on their mandate, one of the things that they would be doing is bringing in a budget.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, on amendment A1 I see the hon. Government House Leader has risen to speak.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting to hear the deputy leader of the NDP refer to apologizing. I think that's a good spot to start in regard to the amendment that the NDP has brought forward to a motion brought to this House by the government to stand up for our largest industry and for our province's rights in a nonpartisan way, to defend the people of Alberta, which, I would submit to you, is why everybody got sent to this House. It does not matter which side of the House they are on.

But if we're talking about apologies, Mr. Speaker, when is the NDP going to apologize for their behaviour in government? Albertans fired them because of their behaviour, because of that hon. member, who was part of a government who oversaw the largest job loss in the history of the province, who sat in this Chamber supporting a Premier who would laugh at Albertans when they would come and talk about rural crime, supported a Premier who called Albertans Chicken Little, told them to take a bus, and belittled them at every point, refused to consult with the agriculture community, creating some of the largest protests in the history of this province on the steps of the Legislature, mocked them even. Even in this Chamber their own Finance minister said to them, to the agriculture community, that they were deliberately trying to hurt their workers.

That side of the House has no business lecturing this side of the House at all. They are the only one-term government in the history of this province, the worst fiscal government in the history of this province, who did more damage to this province in four years than any government combined over the rest of the other 100 years, of the time that Alberta has been here, Mr. Speaker.

They have not apologized for the most important issue, and it's very relevant to their amendment. They have not apologized for their coalition with their close personal friend Justin Trudeau. They sat on this side of the House when they were in government and went out of their way to sell out Albertans over and over and over, to support a Liberal Prime Minister who attacks this province daily, whose stated policies devastate our communities. Not just the stated policies, Mr. Speaker; the policies that he brought forth like Bill C-69: that hon. member, the deputy leader of the NDP, once mocked us in this House because we asked during question period why she wouldn't get on an airplane or why her cabinet had not gotten an airplane down there to go fight about Bill C-69.

It took them hundreds of days even to respond on behalf of the people of Alberta while constituencies like mine were being devastated because of NDP policies that were then being shored up by an NDP government that that hon. member was the Deputy Premier of. Shame on them. On behalf of Albertans, shame on them. You want to talk about apologizing? When are you going to apologize for what you did to this province? They still don't realize what they did to this province. It's one of the problems that they have. They seem to think that they can continue with their bizarre approach to managing our province or to talk about our province in that context and not understand that the reason they got voted out in record numbers, the reason that they are the only one-term government in the history of this province, is because of the things that they did, particularly when it comes to how they interacted with the federal government, Mr. Speaker.

All of the members in the government caucus who had the privilege of serving in the Official Opposition will remember sitting up in the Federal Building preparing for question period on the day that that hon. member, the former Deputy Premier, stood by her leader, who was then the Premier of Alberta, and they had a party and spiked the football on a pipeline, stood outside – it was shocking, Mr. Speaker – and celebrated it as a victory. They never got a pipeline built. They never got a pipeline built. They sold us out to Justin Trudeau and the federal Liberal Party. Over and over they did that.

Now here we are yet again with a simple motion for this House to call upon federal parties to take our constitutional rights as a province seriously, to recognize our right to produce our resources, to recognize the damaging policies of their close personal friend Justin Trudeau and their party.

Mr. Speaker, remember that their provincial party and their federal party are the same. They're the same party. They're connected, the same legally, through the structure. It's been well established in this House. That's how it is, and they have never stood in this House and condemned their leader, their federal leader, who has been very clear that he's anti oil and gas, antipipelines. They want to talk about apologizing. Come to Rocky Mountain House and apologize to the people for the damage that your policies have done. Come to Drayton Valley, that has been devastated under the NDP's watch. Shame on them. Shame on them for bringing this to this House. They still have not stood up. They still have not stood in this place and condemned their leader. Their leader. Their leader. Their party and the federal party are the exact same party legally, structurally, everything. They've never stood up and condemned him.

What they have done over and over in this House is stood up and defended Justin Trudeau, Mr. Speaker, stood up and defended a Prime Minister who went out of his way to devastate this province. Over and over and over and over they've defended him. Here we are yet again, in the eleventh hour before one of the most important federal elections in the history of this province, and they still cannot stand up for this province. They still choose Justin Trudeau each and every day over top of Albertans. It's shameful. It's shocking. It's why Albertans are so frustrated with the NDP.

It's why the NDP are in Official Opposition and – we'll see what Albertans decide – I suspect, at the next election will go to the third, fourth, and may not even be a party in this place, because you do not get to represent Albertans and then sell them out to the Prime Minister, a federal Prime Minister that does not care about this province. You do not get to say that you get to come here and represent your constituents and then go out of your way to stand side by side with the Prime Minister who would bring in Bill C-69. You do not get to represent Albertans and claim that you stand with Albertans when you will not point out the hypocrisy that Justin Trudeau has brought forth. You will not do it. They will not stand here and condemn him. They went out of their way.

Mr. Speaker, in some ways you see how politically they fought, that was expedient for them when they were in government. It's unfortunate that they chose what they thought would be to their political advantage over top of Albertans, but you can see how they did that.

How they think, now that they're back in the Official Opposition benches, that it makes sense for them to go out of their way to shore up and to tie themselves to a Prime Minister and a federal Liberal Party that are absolutely despised in this province, how they think that the right political strategy and the right decision as the Official Opposition is to stand side by side – side by side – with the Prime Minister that is causing devastation to this province, that is hurting the very people that I represent and that they represent: it is so shocking over the years to watch how the NDP abandoned their own constituents when it comes to this issue, how they've chosen a federal Liberal Prime Minister who is anti our largest industry, who is anti our province, who has done nothing to help the people of this province, how they chose to stand with him instead of the very people that they represent.

As the Premier said earlier, this should not be a partisan issue. This is about Alberta. This Chamber here is Alberta's Chamber. It's our job to represent Albertans, to stand up for Albertans. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of Albertans are absolutely infuriated with what is happening in the federal election. They do not agree with the federal Liberals, they do not agree, certainly, with their leader in the federal NDP, and they certainly don't agree with the Greens. Will they stand up? No. They stand up and continue their partisan games.

Now they want to add some language to the motion instead of standing up for the industry, and I will encourage all of my colleagues to vote against the amendment, Mr. Speaker, because, again, this is a motion to stand up for our province, to stand up for our constitutional rights. You want to talk about how parties manage climate change policy and policy around greenhouse gas emissions, an important issue, and it's something that we've taken seriously in our platform, and we'll legislate on it shortly.

But when you compare it to the record of the Official Opposition when they were in government, when their own leader, who brought in the largest tax increase in the history of this province at the very time that Albertans, everyday Albertans, were hurting, that ended up, by her own admission on a TV interview at Christmastime – by her own admission, the leader of NDP said that it had no impact on emissions. She could not point to one concrete example of an impact on emissions. That's a fact. At the same time that they made things worse – Mr. Speaker, it is ridiculous. Their leader was on TV – they know it – and could not point to any emission reductions on her signature policy issue.

Do you know what it was, Mr. Speaker? It was those members putting the largest tax increase in the history of this province on the people of Alberta at the very time that they were down, at the very time that they needed the most help. It was all economic pain, no environmental gain, and it lost them the government. It was not even a smart political move. They're in the wilderness of opposition now with no hope of coming back to government any time soon, because you don't treat Albertans like that.

At the same time that they were treating Albertans like that, they would stand in this House, and the hon. deputy leader of the NDP was the main culprit, would stand up as Deputy Premier each and every day and say, "We got two pipelines built" – they didn't, Mr. Speaker – say, "We're with Justin Trudeau to the end: Justin Trudeau, Justin Trudeau, Justin Trudeau." Albertans are not with Justin Trudeau.

This Chamber should make it very, very clear, with a clear statement with this motion, that we stand up for our provincial rights, our constitutional rights, as the Premier did a good job articulating today, that we stand for Albertans, that we stand with our small towns that are struggling to keep people employed, that we stand with the people that have lost their jobs in the oil and gas industry and are struggling to pay their bills.

What message does the opposition send when they continue to do this game? They continue to come here and shore up their friend Justin Trudeau. It's shocking that anybody who says that they represent their constituents in this province could do that with a straight face and then come here and say that they still support Justin Trudeau, that they still support their federal leader. Their federal leader: they can't run away from that. They're the same party, literally the same structural party. It's not just that they're NDP or the same ideological views; they're the same party, the same legal entity. Their leader has travelled across this country attacking pipelines, attacking this province, saying things that are not true about our largest industry. By them standing over and over with their leader when he does that, they're supporting what he says about the hard-working men and women that work in the oil and gas industry in this province. Even more disturbing, they're supporting an attack on the economic engine not only of this province but of this country, over and over and over, and they can do that with a straight face, Mr. Speaker. I don't think the opposition has any credibility left on this issue at all.

Certainly, Albertans spoke loud and clear. They don't trust them to represent them. They made that very, very clear in the last election in record numbers. Certainly, their actions over and over and over show that they will sell out this province for their close allies in the national landscape. Certainly, they have shown over and over that their priority is not Alberta, that their priority is not Albertans. We've asked them repeatedly to stand up and condemn their leader's actions and words, to condemn their close personal friend and ally Justin Trudeau. I mean, they chose that alliance, not me. They still have not stood in this Chamber and condemned what he's done with our province, condemned the policies he's bringing forward, Mr. Speaker, and, shockingly enough, they're not even condemning now the even more outrageous statements of policy that are coming from a potential coalition between the NDP and the federal Liberals. Not once have they stood up there.

Again, Mr. Speaker, they smile because they know that they side with their ideological NDP friends before they do with their constituents. They side with their ideological friends. I see the hon. deputy House leader. She, by supporting Justin Trudeau, is siding with the federal government, with the federal Liberals and Justin Trudeau over the good people of Edmonton-Manning. It's shocking.

Now they want to talk about the budget. I barely have any time left, Mr. Speaker. I will tell you this. It is ridiculous for the NDP, who has already been called out for the NDP's dishonesty, according to the mayors, has already been called out once for that – I suspect more will come soon – to talk about budgets. Well, let's talk about the NDP. They came into power a few days later than us, in early May 2015, and they tabled their first budget on October 27. This government is getting ready to table their budget on October 24.

The reality is that we inherited a heck of a fiscal mess because they spent their time trying to support Justin Trudeau, Mr. Speaker, and now they're still here trying to do it and trying to make up things, misrepresent facts about the budget. I look forward to seeing the budget next week, the same time as almost any other government in history during the same type of time frame. I can tell you this. The difference between us and them is that we won't side with Justin Trudeau, we won't sell out this province, and we will commit to our promise to be able to get our fiscal house in order.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, I strongly suggest that we vote down this amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Seeing the time, under Standing Order 4(2.1) this House stands adjourned until 1:30.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, October 17, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good afternoon, hon. members. Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Persons Day

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, tomorrow, October 18, 2019, marks 90 years since the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council recognized women as persons under the law, a major victory for women's rights. While women had attained the right to vote in 1918 and were able to sit in the House of Commons as Members of Parliament, until 1929 they were denied appointment to Canada's Senate. The Persons Case ruling was the culmination of a legal challenge launched in 1927 by five women living in Alberta, now known as the Famous Five. I am proud to say that three of these women, these strong women – Louise McKinney, Irene Parlby, and Nellie McClung – were elected hon. members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in years prior to this monumental case. I am also honoured to acknowledge that for the first time in this Legislature we have an all-female table and a woman as chair.

Please join me, and thank you for joining me, in recognizing Persons Day and the significance of this landmark decision which redefined the legal status of women, promising greater equality for women upheld by legislative rights and protections.

Introduction of Visitors

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, as some of you are aware, this week the Legislative Assembly has been hosting a delegation of MPs from Kenya's National Assembly's Select Committee on Members Services & Facilities. I am honoured to welcome our guests seated in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon. Please rise as I call your name: Hon. Ezekiel Machogu Ombaki, Hon. Janet Nangabo Wanyama, Hon. Christopher Aseka Wangaya, Hon. Elisha Ochieng Odhiambo, Hon. Florence Chepngetich Koskey, Hon. Thuddeus Kithua Nzambia, Hon. Charity Kathambi Chepkwony, and the principal clerk assistant, Mr. John N. Mutega. Welcome, and thank you for joining us here today.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: We have a school group joining us here today from the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. Please join me in a warm welcome to the grade 6 students from Mundare school. Welcome.

Hon. members, it's an honour to introduce to you guests seated in the Speaker's gallery from my own constituency of Airdrie-East – some might say the best – Erin and Corey Kope. Welcome.

And today in the galleries are guests of the Minister of Health, five hard-working LPNs: Valerie Paice, Linda Stanger, Jeanne Weis, Tamara Richter, and Teresa Bateman. Welcome.

Also in the galleries this afternoon are guests of the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and 2019 4-H Alberta Premier's award recipient and grade 11 student at Spruce Grove Composite high school, Ms Amanda Hardman. She is joined by her parents, Barb and Keith; her grandmother Frieda Hardman; 4-H club leader Pamela Fald; and 4-H regional specialist Stacy Murray. Welcome.

We also have guests of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Welcome to Erin Armstrong and Blair and Eli Armstrong Tucker. Welcome.

Introduction of Visitors

The Deputy Speaker: We have one more guest to introduce: the director of committees, Florence Atenyo-Abonyo, from the Kenya delegation. My apologies.

Members' Statements

Climate Change Strategy

Member Irwin: A few weeks ago I joined thousands of others gathered here in Amiskwaciwâskahikan on Treaty 6 territory to demand climate action. It was a moving experience; thousands marching down Jasper Ave. and then gathering right here outside the Legislature.

One of the most beautiful moments was when my constituent seven-year-old Blair Armstrong Tucker stood at the mic. Blair spoke about climate change and how important it is that everyone act, and not just young people. Kids like Blair are worried about this climate crisis and are demanding that governments act, but in the absence of adult leadership and responsiveness, young people are taking this on.

We see the local work of Blair and climate justice activists. We see indigenous water warrior Autumn Peltier. We see Greta Thunberg mobilizing millions to demand action. Greta is in Alberta now, and she'll be in Edmonton tomorrow.

The kids are leading while many adults do very little. Some minimize the importance of the issue, some full out deny the existence of climate change and that we are indeed facing a climate crisis, and some even mock. While this government might not care to act on climate change, might not think the demands of thousands of Albertans matter, might not believe that young people should have a voice, young people like Blair and Greta are going to keep pushing on this issue.

As Greta said:

Adults keep saying that "we owe it to the young people to give them hope." But I don't want your hope. I don't want you to be hopeful. I want you to panic. I want you to feel the fear I feel every day. And then I want you act.

I want you to act as you would in a crisis. I want you to act as if [your] house is on fire. Because it is.

I couldn't be prouder of Blair and of every young person out there who's standing bravely to say that we cannot wait to act on climate change. We're running out of time. Our houses are on fire. So let's have the maturity and the foresight to think about the world we're leaving for our kids' kids because I know Blair does, and if a seven-year-old gets it, what's stopping the rest of us?

Official Opposition Members' Remarks

Ms Glasgo: Madam Speaker, on Tuesday in question period the Leader of the Opposition said with gusto that "[the Premier] can deny it all he wants, but the communities of Brooks, Wetaskiwin, Barrhead, Sundre, Foothills, [and] Lacombe all oppose his plan."

Well, Madam Speaker, I've spent my summer and time away from the Assembly consulting with stakeholders in my constituency, including the city of Brooks. The Leader of the Opposition's comments just didn't sit right with me, so I reached out to Mr. Morishita, mayor of Brooks, myself. Turns out, what has become a pattern of behaviour from that side of the House was on full display on Tuesday. This pattern of misleading Albertans, putting words in their mouth that they, in fact, did not say, has happened before.

I'm reminded of a time when the former Minister of Environment and Parks told this House about her extensive consultation on the Bighorn. Not to worry, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre corrected that. I'm reminded of a time when the former Minister of Children's Services, who was rightly fired by Albertans in April, stated that the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police did not support Serenity's law. Well, thank goodness, that mistruth was corrected by the Member for Calgary-West and the rest of the UCP caucus when they voted for this bill despite a lack of support from the NDP. And I'm reminded of just a few short months ago when the Member for Edmonton-Glenora was corrected in this House after sharing a conversation that she claims to have had with the superintendent of the Canadian Rockies school board. This was corrected by my friend from Banff-Kananaskis. You see, Madam Speaker, there's a distinct pattern here. The opposition misrepresents the facts, and this side of the House corrects them.

In a letter to the Leader of the Opposition the mayors of Brooks, Lacombe, and Wetaskiwin have urged the former Premier to take the time to rise above all that and correct those statements here. The mayor said:

Misrepresenting our views for political theatre is dishonest and unbecoming for any member of the provincial legislative assembly.

We respectfully ask you to correct your statement[s] for the record immediately.

If the Leader of the Opposition and her colleagues would like to have their record be one of deceit and an adversarial approach to humble Albertans, I have one request: leave my constituents out of it.

1:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Kashmir

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to condemn the ongoing violations of human rights in Kashmir, which is a huge cause for concern for many Albertans in my riding and across this province. Kashmir is the subject of dispute between three nuclear-armed countries, but primarily this issue is about the future of 15 million people of Kashmir and their rights.

Last year the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights reported on human rights violations in Kashmir and directed the UN Human Rights Council to conduct an independent international investigation. A year later things have gotten worse. On August 5, 2019, Prime Minister Modi's government revoked the special status of Kashmir under article 370 of the Constitution and proceeded with the creation of two union territories under direct Indian rule. These actions were preceded by the imposition of Governor's rule, the suspension of state Assembly, massive troop deployments, an unprecedented lockdown, mass arrests, suspension of telephone and Internet services, and media blackouts. Since then the situation remains tense.

Madam Speaker, I recognize this issue is complex and politically charged. However, at stake here are basic human dignity and rights, democracy, people's right to self-determination, and fundamental freedoms such as freedom of conscience, belief, opinion, and expression, all of which are values that we all share and cherish. On behalf of all those concerned, I call on the Premier to use his decades-long friendship with PM Modi to influence this situation and urge the federal government to ensure basic human rights are protected for the people of Kashmir.

To all my colleagues in the House: let's speak up for those who have no voice and for all who are dispossessed of their rights both at home and abroad. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Persons Day

Mrs. Allard: Well, thank you. As previously mentioned, Friday, October 18 is Persons Day. This date marks 90 years since the Canadian government included women in the legal definition of persons. Five bold women, the Famous Five from Alberta – Judge Emily Murphy, Henrietta Muir Edwards, Nellie McClung, Louise Crummy McKinney, and Irene Parlby – took the Canadian government to court so that they could be considered legal persons.

In 1929 the Privy Council of England, which at the time was Canada's highest court, ruled in favour of these women in a constitutional ruling that decided that women were, in fact, persons. This meant that women could no longer be denied rights based on a narrow interpretation of the law, and also ruled that women were eligible for appointment to the Senate. In 1867, the year of our Confederation, Canadian women were not allowed to hold nor run for public office, but on February 15, 1930, Cairine Wilson was sworn in as Canada's first female Senator, and in 2000 Justice Beverley McLachlin was appointed Canada's first Chief Justice.

It's hard to believe that 90 years ago tomorrow I and the other 25 women in this Chamber would not have been considered legal persons. The Persons Case was monumental, but it didn't fix everything for women. Until 1951 indigenous women were not allowed to vote without giving up the rights allotted to them under the Indian Act. The right to live free of discrimination on the basis of one's sex was not in Canada's constitution until 1981.

We've certainly come very far in the last 90 years, but there is still much that needs to be done. We need to keep working to see more women in traditionally male-dominated fields like STEM, the skilled trades, and, of course, politics. I am confident that we can address these issues, Madam Speaker, because there are thousands of women across this province who are working to get things done, 26 of whom are in this House.

To all the women listening, let's empower each other as we move forward. We owe it to the Famous Five and the female advocates who came after them to do just that.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

MCSnet Rural Internet Provider

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Alberta was built on innovation, the entrepreneurial spirit. Some of the most successful Alberta companies started from humble beginnings. Recently I attended a reception in St. Paul for a local company whose success quite literally started with a Pringles can.

Company owner, Leo VanBrabant, was experimenting with wireless delivery to augment his company's digital service line. Their very first successful connection, using homemade antennas, was a few kilometres at their home place. I quote: we'd make our own antennas, like using a Pringles can, put some little washers to create the exact frequency that we would need.

That was the beginning. Today the company Leo started in 1995, MCSnet, is Alberta's largest fixed wireless Internet provider, and it's based in St. Paul. MCSnet currently provides wireless and fibre optic services to 24,000 customers in an area that stretches from Westlock to Paradise Hill, Saskatchewan, as well as from Wandering River in the north to Provost in the south, covering my entire constituency and beyond. They recently connected the entire community of Cherry Grove to fibre optics. They pride themselves on providing equal or better service than what is available in cities like Edmonton or Calgary.

Leo is now retired, and the company is run by his three sons and two sons-in-law. They strive to continue to seek out the latest innovation to bring more reliable service to more people and places in rural Alberta. MCSnet is proudly a family-owned and -operated high-speed Internet provider. MCSnet is a true Alberta success story that is serving the needs of rural Alberta, 24,000 customers, and it all started with a Pringles can. That is true innovation. That's what Alberta is all about.

Climate Change and Poverty

Ms Renaud: Today over 2 billion people, one-third of the global population, are poor or near poor. Two billion people world-wide have limited access to basics such as nutrition, water, shelter, and clothing as well as education, health care, sanitation, and electricity. The poor face consistent and growing threats to their livelihoods and survival because of climate change. Pope Francis summed up these alarming facts when he declared a global climate emergency and warned that failure to take urgent action would be a brutal act of injustice towards the poor and future generations.

To be clear, the last five years have been the hottest in the modern record. The consequences we see around the world today, that are attested to by the record temperatures, are rapidly melting ice caps, unprecedented wildfires, frequent so-called thousand-year floods, as well as devastating and more frequent hurricanes. Millions face malnutrition due to devastating drought, and many more will have to choose between starvation and migration.

The billions who live in poverty around the world, including right here at home in Alberta, will be disproportionately impacted by climate change. People who live in poverty are more susceptible to climate change. They're less resilient because they don't have the resources to mitigate the losses associated with climate change. They're more vulnerable to natural disasters that bring disease, crop failure, spikes in food prices, death, and disability. It's happening all around us. It's been suggested that we are witnessing the beginning of a climate change apartheid.

Madam Speaker, today is the day that we mark the United Nations International Day for the Eradication of Poverty. We don't need fancy speeches; we need action. We need leadership, not self-serving partisan politics. We cannot tolerate austerity budgets and a $4.5 billion giveaway that is delaying essential services that are vital to the people of this province. We need investment in poverty eradication. We need action now.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane.

Oil and Gas Transportation

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Are the federal Trudeau Liberals actually targeting and purposely trying to harm Alberta? To answer this question, let's look at a piece of legislation the Liberals passed which I believe is aimed directly at Alberta. Bill C-48, the Oil Tanker Moratorium Act, is specifically targeted to damage our economy. The bill only relates to the transportation of Alberta oil sands products off the northern coast of B.C. It outlaws the ability of Alberta oil sands producers and builders to create infrastructure to a deepwater port in northern B.C., which obstructs our ability to achieve market access.

TMX is a line being built into Burnaby, which is a shallow water port. The product headed down that line is not destined for evolving markets in Asia but, rather, the heavy refineries in San Francisco. While TMX provides much-needed takeaway capacity and will help alleviate our buildup of storage, it is not meant for full market access. TMX is absolutely vital to Alberta's economy, and the urgency of that line cannot be overstated.

But the Liberals have purposely targeted Alberta and limited our ability to grow our economy by stalling market access and then passing Bill C-48, ensuring that we can never gain market access to Asia. It is unclear to me why the Liberals have targeted our beloved province. Our products are the most ethically produced, with world-leading environmental standards, and Alberta companies are instrumental partners in helping to solve the climate change challenge.

To answer the question I opened with, the evidence is clear: Alberta is a target. I ask all members of this House to stand and fight against these nonsense policies that are driving Alberta towards a deep anger and frustration.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Corporate Taxation and Job Creation

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Premier ran a campaign full of big talk, claiming that his plan to hand $4.5 billion to big corporations would fix the economy. But there are no new jobs, and there are actually 15,000 fewer jobs in the oil and gas sector. Things aren't getting better in the patch. Rig counts show an average of 91 active rigs per week, down more than a third from this time last year. Last year Alberta was bouncing back. How long before this Premier realizes that his corporate gift hasn't increased drilling and hasn't created jobs? When will he wake up?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Madam Speaker, there were 5,000 net new jobs created in September of this year. But let's talk about last year, because it was one of the five years of economic decline under the NDP's administration. Five years of economic stagnation and decline, the longest and deepest recession in our history since the Great Depression under the NDP's policies: obviously, no government is going to be able to turn around that disaster overnight, but we're doing everything we can. What's their alternative? To raise taxes on job creators, raise taxes on employers, and drive us to $100 billion in reckless debt, mortgaging our future. Thank goodness Albertans fired them last April.

Ms Hoffman: Madam Speaker, the fact is that we are in one of the worst drilling seasons in Alberta's history. According to the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors each active rig represents about 145 direct and indirect jobs. This means that rigs are supporting around 7,000 fewer workers than they were this time last year: 7,000 fewer workers, Premier. His answer this summer was to kill shipping by rail and extend curtailment in the patch. Can the jobs-economy-and-pipelines Premier please explain why he's failing on all three fronts?

Mr. Kenney: Madam Speaker, I'm glad that the NDP has finally discovered the Alberta jobs crisis over which they presided and which they deepened in their four years in office. The reality is that we're doing everything that we can, pushing against the NDP, their Liberal allies in Ottawa, who cheered on the killing of the Northern Gateway and the Energy East pipelines, who bungled Trans Mountain, who surrendered to a veto on Keystone XL. If any one of those projects had been built – I'll tell you what – we'd be in a totally different situation. Instead, we saw tens of billions of dollars of investment flee from our energy sector to that of the United States. We're working hard to bring it back.

Ms Hoffman: Madam Speaker, this Premier's $4.5 billion no-jobs corporate handout is a failure, and he's looking to anyone to blame but himself. He promised increased rig activity, and in his platform he had some ideas that might have worked. But what did he do instead? Before the drilling season he rushed to give a $4.5 billion corporate handout to shareholders, not to actually help people in the patch. Why did the Premier put shareholders and dividends ahead of Alberta workers?

Mr. Kenney: First of all, Madam Speaker, the $4.5 billion figure is a complete figment of the NDP's imagination, as will be evident from the Finance minister's budget. Secondly, virtually every reputable economist in this province who has commented on it says that it will be a significant creator of employment and will help over time to actually increase government revenues. Professor Mintz says: 55,000 new jobs, Professor Dahlby says: 58,000 new jobs. But what's the NDP's alternative? Increase the tax burden on employers, killing jobs. They did it; that's why they were fired in April of this year.

The Deputy Speaker: On her second set of questions, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Well, none of those people are in the Premier's cabinet, and his own Energy minister has admitted that the $4.5 billion corporate handout has not worked to create one single job.

UCP Fundraising Breakfast Budget 2019 Consultation

Ms Hoffman: It turns out that the talk of the UCP – when it comes to the upcoming budget, you only have to have a chequebook at hand. If you want to talk about the budget, that's the only way you're going to get face time with this Finance minister, because he's holding a UCP fundraiser breakfast for $125 per plate the day after the budget is dropped. To the Minister of Finance: how do you justify forcing people to pay for face time with you on your terrible budget planning?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Madam Speaker, Albertans are not going to take any lectures from the acting leader of the NDP over the question of creating jobs. Professor Trevor Tombe said that the job-creation tax cut that we've introduced does indeed translate into about a 50,000 increase in employment. He further said that the long-run effect of the corporate tax cut, from 12 to 8 per cent, will be an increase in wages of 1.6 per cent. Professor Mintz said: a 55,000-person increase in employment. They were the all-time champions in killing jobs. This government is focused without relent on creating jobs in Alberta.

Ms Hoffman: The government's so-called budget consultation extended to two telephone town halls and one one-question survey posted online for about two weeks. On one of those telephone town halls the Minister of Finance told a nonprofit worker from Grande Prairie who was worried about the future of CIP and CFEP that Albertans will have to, quote, do more with less. To the Premier: does it really take thousands of dollars in UCP donations to get nonprofits a seat at the table? Is that the only way they can get face time and actually have a little respect from this government?

Mr. Kenney: Madam Speaker, we had the biggest public consultation possible last April, when a record number of Albertans voted on competing plans for the future, and they embraced a plan to create jobs, grow our economy, and bring our province's finances back to balance, partly through fiscal restraint and the job-creation tax cut. I understand why the NDP is angry with Albertans for firing them after four years, but we will keep the commitment that we made to Albertans in that historic consultation.

Ms Hoffman: Except that this Premier is failing on all three fronts. The fundraiser that's coming up is yet another example of the UCP using their government positions and titles to raise money for their party. This is something that the Government House Leader has twice promised in this House that the UCP would stop doing. To the Premier: will you immediately direct your Finance minister to cancel his fundraiser, something that your House leader actually committed to, and instead start consulting with Albertans on the budget? And I don't mean just the ones who have big chequebooks and credit limits on their credit cards.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Speaker, it is just outrageous to watch the NDP continue with these bizarre tactics. It's not working for them. Let's be clear. The hon. Finance minister is attending a breakfast that is a tradition, that Finance ministers have attended for a long time, is my understanding. What I have committed to in this House is that we would not use our official Executive Council titles in fundraising letters and those types of things. My understanding is that that's not happening. That's what we committed to. But what's really important is that the NDP continue to just want to distract from their dismal record when it comes to the way that they managed the finances of this province. I will take our current Finance minister over their former Finance minister, who was the worst Finance minister in the history of this province, any day. I think Albertans agree with us, which is why they sent us here to govern this province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Climate Change Strategy Advocacy for Alberta's Energy Industry

Ms Hoffman: Tomorrow, Albertans will once again gather in numbers outside of this Legislature, and their message is on climate change. It's clear that it exists, that it's an existential threat to our way of life. Climate change is real. Our way of life in Alberta is threatened if we don't address it, even if the UCP wishes it wasn't. The gathering will be addressed by Greta Thunberg, whose advocacy for young people commands the world's attention. The eyes of the world will be on our Legislature tomorrow. To the Premier: will you be on the steps?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Speaker, as I've said several times in this House, we will not be lectured by the NDP when it comes to managing emissions and climate change in this province. The NDP brought in the largest tax increase in the history of the province and then admitted – their own leader admitted – that it had no impact on emissions and just punished Albertans. It was all economic pain and no environmental gain. On this side of the House Alberta's government is actually focused on solutions. I'm looking forward to tabling TIER in this very place in the coming weeks, which is an innovative solution moving forward on a very important file. The difference between us and the NDP is that we focus on solutions. The NDP focuses on taxing Albertans.

Ms Hoffman: If there were ever an opportunity to make a case for Alberta energy, this is it. Tomorrow people will be gathering in person, on social media, through traditional media in huge numbers. Greta Thunberg is giving the Premier an unprecedented opportunity to speak up for Albertans and for the energy industry to a global audience. The lights are on, the cameras are rolling. Why is the Premier running away?

Mr. Kenney: Madam Speaker, I'm very, very happy to inform the acting leader of the NDP that I will be, tomorrow, attending the opening of a new natural gas pipeline that will allow the displacement of coal-fired power with natural gas power, one of the practical measures that Albertans are taking to reduce emissions.

Instead of calling for the shutdown of the entire modern economy, instead of calling for all the airplanes to stop flying and all the cars to stop driving, instead of calling on Albertans to stop heating their homes in the winter, we instead will be leading with practical measures to reduce emissions while continuing to fuel our future prosperity.

2:00

The Deputy Speaker: Last question, Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: It's a sad sight to see a Premier with no courage for his convictions. The Premier is spending $30 million of taxpayer money on a dimly lit war room, where lobbyists can hide behind keyboards and post memes to one another. Meanwhile in the real world nobody in the UCP government is making a case for Alberta energy and Alberta's right to export our products. The Premier only talks to people who agree with him. Will the Premier please take this free opportunity – it's not $30 million. You don't need to hire failed UCP candidates to do this work for you. The Premier can show up or send one of the members of his front bench to actually have a conversation with Greta. Why won't he do it?

Mr. Kenney: Madam Speaker, on the subject of standing up for Alberta . . . [interjections] You know, heckling doesn't do it, but I'll tell you what does: leadership. That's why this government is challenging today in the Legislature through a motion the federal NDP, the Liberals, the Greens, and the Bloc Québécois, all of whom are using Alberta as a punching bag in this campaign, who are trying to defame this province and the people who work in our energy industry, who are trying to land-lock our energy, including the NDP, the very NDP to which they belong. Will they have the courage to stand up and denounce the NDP and their friend Justin Trudeau for throwing Alberta under their campaign bus in this federal campaign?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Commercial Driver Training and Testing Standards

Member Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Following their meeting with the Transportation minister yesterday, one of our visiting Broncos family members, Shauna Nordstrom, wrote the minister a letter. I hope he's ready, and I hope he answers today some of her questions. Ms Nordstrom asks, quote, minister, since when do trucking companies get to put the price on my son's life and the lives of our loved ones driving on our roads? Minister, will you answer Shauna?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was pleased to meet with several of the Humboldt families yesterday, and they were very articulate and said how they feel. Of course, we all should respect the pain that they've gone through. We are going to increase safety on the roads. We are going to put the MELT standard in place. The previous government failed to do that. We will not fail. We will get that job done.

Member Loyola: Ms Nordstrom writes, quote, our Premier was on Global News and said that he heard from a number of trucking companies who said the new training regulations will be too expensive. If money is the only barrier, well, we have a big problem. You are our government. You have the power to make this right, and you said that you would work with us, end quote. Minister, will you put aside your cost arguments and commit to road safety as your first priority?

Mr. McIver: Well, Madam Speaker, the hon. member got part of it right. I did say that I would work with the members. I actually spoke with one of their representatives about an hour ago. Madam Speaker, the fact is that cost has never been an excuse. It's a complaint that some people have, but it won't be accepted by our government as an excuse. What we actually need to do is talk about more cost-effective ways of delivering the MELT training; that's mandatory entry-level training, a higher level safety standard for truck drivers. We will have that engagement and that conversation with the industry so that we can help them deliver this important and urgent safety standard.

Member Loyola: Ms Shauna Nordstrom continues in her letter and writes, quote, I heard a lot of words yesterday. It's time for action. Please stand up and be clear on what you are doing, end quote. The question speaks for itself, minister. Will you stand up and be clear on exactly what you are going to do?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've been clear. I've been clear in this House. MELT is here to stay. It's a United States requirement for truckers to go into the States from Alberta or anyplace else in Canada. It's a safety enhancement that we agree with and are implementing, regardless of the fact that the folks across the aisle had at least the second half of the four years to implement it and didn't do so. Even though they put roadblocks in front of us to get it done, we will get past those roadblocks, and we will implement MELT. It's happening right now.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Clare's Law

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Alberta has the third-highest level of reported domestic and intimate partner violence. We also know that a dozen Alberta women are killed every year in domestic disputes. It is clear that Alberta needs a concrete pathway to addressing and lessening these incidents. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: can you please tell us what the government is doing to help survivors of domestic violence?

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the member for that question. Madam Speaker, Alberta has one of the highest rates of domestic violence amongst Canadian provinces. In fact, Alberta had 10,000 victims of domestic violence in 2017 alone. Disturbing as this number is, it is understated because it does not account for those instances of domestic violence that were never reported. Yesterday we introduced legislation that will give people the ability to request information about an intimate partner's violent past.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that we can rely on the experiences of other jurisdictions in establishing this legislation and that the United Kingdom has already had years to track the success of this legislation and given that Saskatchewan values this legislation to the extent of introduction and further given the importance of enacting best practices when such practices can save lives, can the minister tell us how implementing similar legislation will protect individuals from domestic violence?

Mrs. Sawhney: Madam Speaker, in Canada half of all young women and girls who were victims of domestic violence homicide were murdered by someone with a prior conviction. These are needless deaths. Allowing people at risk of domestic violence to obtain information on a romantic partner's previous history of domestic violence or other relevant acts will save lives. This legislation will give people the right to know whether their intimate partner has a violent past.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Ms Rosin: Thank you. Given that Saskatchewan introduced its version of Clare's law this spring but has yet to proclaim it and further given the urgent nature of implementing legislation that addresses issues as critically important as combatting future incidents of domestic violence and protecting those vulnerable to these incidents, can the minister tell us when we can expect domestic violence disclosure legislation to be fully implemented and in place here at home?

Mrs. Sawhney: Madam Speaker, we introduced this legislation in the House yesterday and passed second reading today. Should the proposed bill pass third reading, we will then begin the second phase of stakeholder engagement to help inform the laws and regulations for day-to-day application. We anticipate that this legislation will be implemented by spring of 2020.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Automobile Insurance Rate Cap

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. One late Friday this summer this UCP government quietly announced it was going to remove the 5 per cent insurance rate cap that our government brought in, just another example of this government favouring big companies over working Albertans who rely on their vehicles to get to and from their job. To the Minister of Finance: can you please inform this House who you consulted with before making this decision and how much it costs to get a seat at the table?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. We inherited, quite frankly, a mess in terms of automobile insurance from the previous government, who didn't have the courage to deal with it but instead put a Band-Aid on it, that ultimately failed, led to actually increased insurance rates for many motorists, and was incredibly unsustainable into the future. We will deal with this problem. We will be consulting with consumers and industry stakeholders to provide a long-term, sustainable solution for Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much. Unfortunately, consumers needed an answer yesterday, not in the future.

Now, given that Albertans immediately began feeling the pinch after this government pandered to insurance lobbyists and given that Edmonton resident A.D. Langvand wrote a letter to the editor describing how, as a result of this decision, his insurance premiums rose over $400 despite never having an accident in 21 years, to the minister: can you explain to Mr. Langvand and countless others who are now paying more to keep their cars on the road exactly how this price gouging fits into your plan for Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: I would like to remind all members of the use of preambles after Question 4. The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again we recognize that there are challenges with automobile insurance in Alberta, and we're committed to fixing the problem that the previous government didn't have the courage to take on. The Band-Aid solution that they put on, which was a rate cap, was not sustainable in the long term, was ultimately going to result in less choice for consumers, and had the effect of actually creating a situation where some automobile insurers couldn't even find the insurance they needed.

The Deputy Speaker: Supplemental. The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that this government rushed to hand over $4.5 billion to large corporations and given that they've also clearly chosen to side with insurance lobbyists over working people and given that Mr. Langvand and others deserve to know who drove the minister to make this heartless decision, to the minister: will you commit to tabling a list in this House of all of the meetings where government members have discussed the insurance file?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, this government will take on this file. We will consult with consumers, industry stakeholders to develop an automobile insurance plan that will be sustainable and that will provide consumers with low-cost, affordable, effective insurance in the long term. What the members opposite left us was an unworkable mess. They simply didn't have the courage to fix it. We will fix it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Postsecondary Education Policies

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Advanced Education if he plans to take the advice of the Premier's so-called blue-ribbon panel report and double tuition costs for Alberta's postsecondary students. Albertans definitely did not hear a clear answer from the minister, but what I did hear was so ridiculous that I want to give him a chance to clear it up. Is the minister really claiming that Alberta's postsecondary students actually want to pay more tuition?

Mr. Nicolaidis: Madam Speaker, I don't know how clear I can be. The NDP is continuing to engage in their usual tactics of fearmongering and misrepresenting the facts. No one is talking about doubling tuition. Our priority is to help ensure that students have accessible options which is why in September we created a new scholarship to give students who excel in the trades more opportunities to access postsecondary education.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, given that the member yesterday said that he met with students who wanted their tuition to increase – I found that difficult to believe, but he didn't clear that up – and given that this government is not even creating jobs for young people – in fact, we've lost 27,000 jobs since this government came to power – and given that this is all hurting the ability for our students to earn a postsecondary education, to the minister: just how much is every student in this province going to end up having to pay to help to cover for your bogus $4.5 billion handout to big corporations?

Mr. Nicolaides: Madam Speaker, how rich, really, it is to hear that member and the members from that side of the aisle talk about jobs, when they presided over the largest decrease in jobs and the largest economic decline in the history of this province. I won't and we won't be taking any lessons from them. One of the concerns that our students have is high-paying jobs at the conclusion of their programs. We are committed, of course, to jobs, economy, and pipelines to help ensure that they have rewarding careers at the end of their studies.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that firing postsecondary board members and replacing them with UCP boosters and donors does nothing to help student learning and given that this same minister has even gone so far as to defend anti-Semitic speech on our campuses, my final question to the minister is very simple: don't you think that our students and staff deserve better?

Mr. Nicolaides: Madam Speaker, I agree that our students do deserve better and do need better, and we will create a stronger and more sustainable postsecondary system, not the one that we inherited from the NDP, a rudderless system that is driving costs through the roof, that is not increasing accessibility. We are going to fix it. Our students do deserve better, and they will get better.

Immigrants' and Minorities' Access to Health Care

Mr. Amery: Madam Speaker, new immigrants often have distinct needs and face linguistic and cultural barriers when it comes to accessing health care. Our government has committed to supporting new Albertans through initiatives like the fairness for newcomers plan, but we also need to ensure that Albertans are properly supported when it comes to accessing health care in this province. Can the Minister of Health please explain what he is doing to support new Albertans and their health care needs as they integrate into our province?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes. Alberta has a proud history of welcoming newcomers from around the world. We're not just open for business; we're open to people looking to build a better life for themselves and for their families. New Albertans do face barriers of language and barriers of culture in accessing health care, and they need supports. The health system does put a lot of effort into helping them. For example, AHS works with primary care networks, social outreach agencies, and organizations which serve immigrants and refugees.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the minister for that reply. Given that Albertans deserve quality, accessible health care and given that this includes all new Albertans who have immigrated here, can the minister please elaborate on whether there are specific outreach services that target newcomers and other minority communities aimed at reducing barriers to accessing these services?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Yes, Madam Speaker. There is a wide range of programs. To take one example, there is a multicultural health program at the Grey Nuns hospital here in Edmonton. The program connects patients with services, including community multicultural brokers. That helps them access services like the healthy beginnings program for new mothers. It's not about the services themselves; it's about navigating, or wayfinding, and it's about knowing that the services are there and how to find them in a new place and in a new language.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mr. Amery: Thank you once again, Madam Speaker. Given that one of the most substantial challenges that immigrants face when coming to Canada is learning the English language and given that there is a demonstrated need for linguistically diverse health services in this province and given that many of these newcomers settle in my constituency of Calgary-Cross and in other areas nearby, can the minister please explain what information is available on how to access health services and other health-related information in languages other than English?

Mr. Shandro: Yes. There are currently, and we're going to provide more, Madam Speaker. AHS provides 24/7 interpretation and translation services for more than 300 languages free of charge. You can call Health Link and say the language you speak and be connected with an interpreter. At a facility as well, you can walk into any of them and do the same: say the language, and you'll be put in touch with their interpretation service. They're also planning at AHS to increase their advertising in ethnic media and are finalizing a project which will make content on their website available in eight languages.

High School Construction Capital Plan for Calgary

Mr. Sabir: Residents of northeast Calgary have been desperate for a high school for years, and the previous Conservative government talked about building the school for years but never did. In 2018 our government committed funds to see this project through, but now parents are worried that the UCP will not follow through on this project. To the Minister of Infrastructure: can you please inform this House on whether you are funding this high school? Yes or no?

Mr. McIver: Madam Speaker, the hon. member, I think, knows very well that the budget is set to be released next week, so the hon. member knows very well that that answer can't be given in this House today because it would break the rules. I know that it's not his first term in office, so perhaps by his third term he won't ask questions that he knows very well cannot possibly be answered.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the UCP platform committed to build new schools and given that this government rushed to cut a $4.5 billion cheque to big corporations before the budget but have not said a word about building the new school, to the minister: can you confirm that north Calgary will get a high school? Yes or no?

2:20

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We were elected with a very clear mandate to continue to build schools across this province. While we are still finalizing our capital plan for the upcoming year, I can assure this House that we intend to honour that platform commitment. More details will be brought forward when we table the budget on October 24.

Mr. Sabir: Given that this government's promises in this very House about education funding have not been followed through on and given that this government is warning of capital spending reductions of 15 to 20 per cent and given that these types of cuts are being signalled by the Premier's so-called blue-ribbon report, to the minister, right here for all the Calgary MLAs with constituents depending on the construction of this high school: will it be built? Yes or no?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I believe I've just answered the question, that we are continuing. We're committed to building schools. We will continue to build schools. Wait till we announce on October 24 what our budget is. More details to come.

Beekeeping Industry Concerns

Mr. Dach: Madam Speaker, 2019 has been a difficult year for Alberta's honey producers. Alberta's beekeepers are reporting a higher than average winter die-off as a result of the weather this season. Many producers are concerned about a partial to total failure of the 2019 honey crop and the imminent collapse of some beekeeper operations. During a meeting on October 7, the Alberta Beekeepers Commission proposed that the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry find money within the government of Alberta or apply to utilize federal ag recovery framework disaster funding to provide a financial lifeline to industry members struggling to survive. To the minister: which of these steps have you taken to provide urgent financial support to Alberta's important honey industry?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Dreesen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I'd like to thank the member opposite for the question. I do appreciate that. The beekeepers, yes, have met with me. Like many farm groups, they are having a very difficult year. Their crops are low. It was a very cold, rainy year this year. We are working with AFSC and with the existing suite of programs that they have available to make sure that funding will be available to them.

Thank you.

Mr. Dach: Madam Speaker, given that honeybees play a major role not only in our honey industry but also a critical role in our $25 billion canola industry and given that the canola industry relies on managed bee pollination to pollinate the 20 million acres of canola grown annually in Canada and given that, also, $4.5 billion was handed out already by this government to profitable corporations yet nothing to rural Alberta beekeepers and honey producers, Minister, were you aware of the critical role that bees play in our agricultural sector, and if you were, why haven't you stepped in to help this industry already to save thousands of Alberta jobs and our most important crop?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Dreesen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, I am aware of the importance of pollinators. As a farmer that's grown billions of plants, I do understand that they are very important, and it's something that this government is proud of, all the hard work that farmers do. We will stand with them every step along the way throughout this very difficult harvest.

There is one more question coming, I do know, and I hope that the member opposite can answer who he'll be voting for on Monday in the upcoming federal election.

Mr. Dach: Madam Speaker, given that there is an average 20 per cent sustainable winter die-off of honeybees and given that this year the Alberta Beekeepers Commission has estimated that the winter die-off was 28.8 per cent, much higher than the 20 per cent sustainable average, and given that we are forced to rely on foreign suppliers, primarily New Zealand and Australia, to replenish our hives each year with bees bred there, is the minister planning to develop a provincial honeybee breeding program so that Alberta can reproduce our own local bee populations and even export them, creating jobs and growing our economy? If not, why not?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Dreesen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's unfortunate that the member opposite didn't take the opportunity to answer that question that I had for him.

We are looking at red tape reduction measures on bees coming over from British Columbia and their blueberry harvest to be able to come over to Alberta at different times throughout the year. We are looking at other bees that come across the borders to make sure that we can actually have a stronger beehive population here in Alberta. Pollinators are very important to the agriculture sector, and it's something that this side, the government, with all our rural caucus members, understands the importance of. And we're making sure that our farmers are well taken care of by a government that supports them every step along the way.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Natural Gas Export

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As the majority of us in this room are aware, carbon taxes serve only to reduce the competitive edge by taxing industry when our neighbours to the south are not. With the abundant supply of natural gas we have here in our province, we instead have an opportunity to have a real and positive impact on global emissions while improving our economy at the same time. To the Associate Minister of Natural Gas: does our government have plans to increase the amount of natural gas that our province can export in order to aid in reducing global emissions?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Natural Gas.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I can answer that question with a resounding yes. As you are aware, Albertans have an overwhelming hangover from four years of NDP mismanagement, and nobody has experienced a bigger headache than the natural gas producers. I'm proud to tell you that Alberta's natural gas producers provide clean, affordable energy, and we're working hard to get it to international markets.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Associate Minister.

Given that Canada contributes only 1.6 per cent to global emissions compared to countries like China, that contributes over 25 per cent, and given that countries like China who currently use coal to generate power are looking to switch to natural gas fired electricity plants to produce up to 60 per cent fewer emissions and given that ramping up exports of natural gas would greatly benefit not only the global environment but our economy as well, can the associate minister tell this House: how soon can we be ready to ship natural gas to those international markets?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Natural Gas.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Albertans elected our government on an overwhelming mandate of jobs, the economy, the pipeline, and nothing fits that bill better than LNG. Canada's most promising opportunity right now is with LNG Canada, and we expect to start shipping natural gas in 2025.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Associate Minister.

Given that liquefying natural gas is the best way to ship this product and given that Alberta has an abundance of this product to liquefy and given the number of constituents in my area as well as Albertans across the province who have experience in the energy industry and who are ready to get to work, can the associate minister please tell us and this House what opportunities Alberta has to get our LNG to other jurisdictions?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Natural Gas.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Woodfibre LNG, LNG Canada, and Énergie Saguenay are just three of the opportunities that we're currently looking at. But I'm pleased to say that Pieridae announced today that it just recently secured a 20-year deal to provide Alberta natural gas to its Goldboro LNG facility in Nova Scotia. Alberta is going to be the primary supplier of that natural gas, and it's going to result in hundreds of jobs for Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Springbank Reservoir Flood Mitigation Project

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In 2013 the city of Calgary was devastated by flooding. Sadly, lives were lost, and it caused $6 billion worth of damage across southern Alberta. Flooding disrupted businesses, damaged critical infrastructure, and had a devastating emotional toll. We must protect Calgary for the future, but this Premier has continued to waver on his support for the Springbank dam. To the Premier: will you finish construction on the Springbank dam, or will this be another victim of your $4.5 billion giveaway?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The reality is that we've been clear as a government with the process that we're working through when it comes to the Springbank dam. Let me also be clear that we recognize the importance of flood mitigation when it comes to the city of Calgary. With that said, what the hon. member is not bothering to bring up in this House, I do notice, is that she was part of a cabinet that we now know messed up in submitting documents associated with the Springbank dam, which is causing all sorts of trouble within the process and lands with them. Like so many other things, this government is focused now on, unfortunately, having to clean up the NDP mess, but Albertans can rest assured that they sent the right government here to get the job done, and we will clean up the NDP's mess.

Ms Ganley: Given that recently the Premier stated that this government will look at other flood protection options for Calgary but that any other option will take longer to build and will cost more money and given that this government rushed to support corporations with a handout that ultimately failed to create any jobs and has largely waffled on flood protection in Calgary, to the Premier: what is the timeline for the Springbank dam, and are you fully committed to this project?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Speaker, I'm sure the hon. member – or at least I would hope – would know, as an MLA for Calgary and a former minister of the Crown inside the province of Alberta, that there are going to need to be multiple mechanisms for flood mitigation to the city of Calgary. There are multiple rivers that flow into the city of Calgary. Bringing up the need to have a discussion for different avenues for flood mitigation for Calgary shouldn't be something that shocks people. It would be completely appropriate. But, again, I do notice that the hon. member has dodged the question. The reason that you're in any sort of delay in a conversation around Springbank is because their government messed up on filing paperwork and presenting paperwork. Again, the NDP created a mess. It's their fault. We'll get it fixed.

Ms Ganley: The members across the way can misrepresent the past, but they're in government now, so given that the Premier campaigned on jobs, economy, pipelines and given that Calgary's downtown core is critical to the economic hub of the province and given that the Premier's corporate handout isn't creating any jobs and any future flooding in downtown Calgary would only serve to make the economic woes of this province worse, to the Premier: can you actually tell the people living and working in downtown Calgary what you have done to protect their homes and places of work? It's been six months. Can you please tell them where you stand?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Madam Speaker, I think what the Premier would probably say in regard to that question is the following: Albertans fixed the problem. They replaced the NDP with the United Conservative Party, who's now Alberta's government. We are waiting on approval processes and other conversations that involve the federal government. Again, the NDP government that was just in office six months ago messed up filing the paperwork. That's what that comes down to. The hon. member: can she explain why she was part of a cabinet on an issue that was so important to the city that she represents and that cabinet couldn't even get paperwork filed properly? Calgarians spoke loud and clear on election day on who they trust to get this fixed, and they sent us here to do it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Social Assistance Program Funding

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last week we learned from Statistics Canada that close to 12,000 Albertans had simply given up looking for work. Now new data from the University of Calgary shows that the number of households on social assistance in Alberta is rising. We are now approaching the highest use of social assistance programs in the country. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: what support will you be providing for social assistance in the coming budget, or did all the money go to big corporations?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you for that question, Madam Speaker. Right now the best thing we could do in terms of providing more social assistance to vulnerable Albertans is to make sure that we revitalize our economy. We need to make sure that we put into place a very favourable fiscal environment that brings investment back into this province so we can get more people back to work. More people we have back to work means more revenue that we have to actually fund these very vital social services.

Ms Renaud: Wow.

Given that this minister's own government reimposed school fees, slashed funding for nonprofits, cancelled the insurance rate cap, and has left many small businesses fearing what's next as they work to impose the recommendations from their harmful MacKinnon report, to the minister: will you be ready, and will you provide more funding for these assistance programs instead of continuing to leach money from household budgets?

Mrs. Sawhney: Madam Speaker, I've said many times in this House that this government and my ministry is committed to serving the vulnerable in our province and those who are most in need. Absolutely, we will take care of those folks who need social assistance, but again, I think our focus has to be in understanding that we need to make sure that we create jobs. Creating jobs for vulnerable Albertans will help them get back to work, will offer them equality of opportunity, and a life of dignity.

Ms Renaud: Given that the previous government's record is clear – we cut child poverty in half – is this minister prepared to be the one who pushes thousands of children back into poverty?

Mrs. Sawhney: Madam Speaker, on the contrary. This government is working very, very hard to make sure that those in need are taken care of. We are taking a crossministerial approach, working with our departments to make sure that those who are most in need are getting the supports that they need and deserve.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Investment in Alberta

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The last four years have seen Canada's competitiveness take a serious hit. Inflows of foreign direct investment into Canada fell by two-thirds from 2015 to 2017, particularly due to investors fleeing Canada's uncertain and hostile regulatory environment created by the former NDP government and the federal Liberals working in tandem. Can the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism please update this House on what our government is doing to assure foreign investors that Alberta is a safe place to invest?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Our government is taking action to show investors that Alberta has the best conditions for investment and job creation. First we repealed the job-killing carbon tax, and then we introduced our job-creation tax cut, which will give Alberta the lowest taxes on job creators in Canada. The Premier also recently travelled to the United States, where he met with investors that have more than $9 trillion under management.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that Canada is a major producer of oil and gas globally and given increased competitiveness in the international markets, can the Minister of Energy please explain how our government will help create an economic environment whereby Alberta energy producers can remain competitive and attract additional investment?

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you for that question. It's been no secret for the past several years that our oil and gas sector has been struggling under the previous NDP government. To attract investment in the oil and gas sector, we need a competitive tax structure, we need a competitive regulatory environment, and we need a stable political environment with political leaders in Ottawa who support, not attack, our oil and gas sector. Just this morning, Madam Speaker, our government tabled Motion 34 to stand up to political attacks coming from Ottawa from three parties: from the NDP, from the Liberals, and from the Green Party. I would ask the members on the other side of the House which of those three parties they're voting for on Monday.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that the investment in Alberta's oil sands declined under the previous NDP government and given that significant efforts are being made to signal to investors that Alberta is open for business, can the Minister of Energy please update the House on the progress this government has made to let investors know that they are again welcome in Alberta?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Since taking government, our government has been relentless in standing up for pipelines, fighting for jobs and the economy. As my hon. colleague noted, we have taken steps to lower the corporate tax rate to remain competitive with other jurisdictions. We're speeding up the regulatory approval process and cutting red tape to remain competitive with other jurisdictions, and we have launched constitutional challenges against a hostile federal government under Justin Trudeau to defend our exclusive constitutional jurisdiction. We're taking steps to defend our energy sector, unlike the previous government.

Educational Curriculum Review and Student Assessment

Mr. Toor: Madam Speaker, parents in my riding have voiced overwhelming support for grade 3 standardized testing. They provide accountability for teachers and are an objective measure of success for students and parents. Our government has committed to reintroducing these tests. Can the Minister of Education inform this House as to whether students will write grade 3 provincial achievement tests this year?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Madam Speaker and the hon. member for the question. We were elected with a clear mandate to reform student assessment and improve outcomes for our students. To provide stability to the education system, we are making SLAs optional this year, and we will make them mandatory for the 2020-21 school year. New grade 3 assessments will be developed alongside the new curriculum.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that answer. Given that our government has committed to revamping the school curriculum to ensure that Alberta students have foundational skills and given that over the summer the Minister of Education appointed a panel to review this curriculum, can the minister please outline what opportunities parents and educators will have to voice their opinions to this panel?

2:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you again for the question. We value and appreciate the role parents play as the primary educators of their children. The Curriculum Advisory Panel has been tasked with drafting an updated ministerial order on student learning, which will modernize and strengthen how students are taught in the classroom. The panel's work will serve as the starting point for public engagement in the new year. I would heavily encourage any parent to participate in that engagement once it happens.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that Alberta has slipped dramatically in its ranking in a world-wide program for international student assessment scores and given that students need to be prepared with English and math skills that will prepare more students to compete for jobs in STEM fields, can the minister inform this House why our government is committed to ensuring that students learn foundational skills in subjects like math and English?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you again for the question. Education is a key priority for our government, and literacy and numeracy lay at the foundation for lifelong learning and future success. The new curriculum will have a stronger focus on literacy and numeracy, and student assessment tools will clearly identify how students are doing, not only for their teachers but for the student and for the parents as well.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, you have less than 30 seconds to do what you need to do before we carry on.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Louise McKinney Exhibit in Claresholm

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm proud to rise today in this House to share with you about the opening of a new museum exhibit at the Claresholm & District Museum. Claresholm resident Louise Crummy McKinney made history when in 1917 she was elected as the first woman to a Legislature in the entire British Empire, barely a year after women earned the right to vote and run for office. While historically significant in her own right, most of us are more familiar with her in her association as part of the Famous Five, five women who went all the way to the Privy Council in Britain to establish the right of women to be recognized as persons and therefore be eligible to be appointed as Senators.

The British North America Act of 1867, which set out the powers and responsibilities of the provincial and federal governments in Canada, stipulated that only a man could be a person and only qualified persons could be appointed to the Canadian Senate. The Persons Case began in 1927 when Judge Emily Murphy, an Edmonton women's court magistrate, upon realizing that women were not fully defined as persons under the BNA Act, called on four other Albertan women for support. McKinney was the second woman asked to sign Murphy's petition for personhood. The others, who would make up the Famous Five, include Irene Parlbay, Henrietta Muir Edwards, and Nellie McClung.

On October 18, 1929, came the landmark decision that Canadian women were indeed persons and eligible for appointment to the Senate and participation in the final stages of enacting federal laws in Canada. On July 10, 1931, the remarkable Louse McKinney was laid to rest in Claresholm, Alberta.

With the support of the United Farmers Historical Society, 88 years later the Claresholm & District Museum opened their own exhibit dedicated to the important work and inspirational life of Louise McKinney and her truly Albertan tenacity. I know our community will benefit from her exhibit and her very great example for years to come.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Coal Transition Payments to Corporations

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for that statement.

Today I'm going to make a statement on behalf of Alberta taxpayers. In 2015 the NDP imposed new costs on coal-powered plants producing electricity for Alberta consumers. As a result of their unilateral cost increases, these power providers were able to terminate contracts that had been in place for over a decade. Fast-forward to 2019. This week the Ministry of Energy attended the Public Accounts Committee to answer questions, including in respect of their last annual report. Page 78 of the report discusses the real-world consequences of these NDP actions and states: "The Ministry of Energy will make payments totalling $97 million . . . to the three generators." These payments started in 2017 and "will continue for the next 12 years."

The NDP were fired but not before leaving Alberta holding the bag for more than $1 billion. Alberta taxpayers may ask the following questions. What steps, if any, can our government now take to mitigate this NDP harm inflicted upon Alberta taxpayers?

Last of all, how could this have happened? This $1 billion cost to Alberta taxpayers was completely avoidable. Was the prior NDP government negligent in respect of their contracts, or were they just indifferent about harm to Alberta taxpayers?

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 18 Electricity Statutes (Capacity Market Termination) Amendment Act, 2019

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to introduce Bill 18, the Electricity Statutes (Capacity Market Termination) Amendment Act, 2019.

Madam Speaker, our government promised to review the planned transition to a capacity market for electricity. We did that this summer, consulting with industry experts, including consumer groups, to determine the best path forward for Alberta's electricity market system. We heard loudly and clearly that investors and Albertans want what works, and that is Alberta's tried-and-true energy-only market, not the complex planned capacity market.

Madam Speaker, if passed, the electricity statutes amendment act will enable return to the energy-only market, a market which for more than 20 years has provided a reliable and affordable supply of electricity to investors with certainty.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have here the requisite number of copies of a letter sent to the Leader of the Official Opposition from the mayors of Brooks, Wetaskiwin, and Lacombe. In this letter I read a quote, and why not read it into the record one more time?

Misrepresenting our views for political theatre is dishonest and unbecoming for any member of the provincial legislative assembly. We respectfully ask you . . .

the Leader of the Opposition,

. . . to correct your statement for the record . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we'll just table that. Thank you.

Are there any other members with tablings? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have the requisite copies of a tabling, a fundraising letter for the UCP for the fundraiser of October 25, $125 or $1,000 tables, with the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board including his name.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to table the requisite number of copies of an article from Science & Environment magazine dated September 22, 2019. The article is titled Climate Change: Impacts 'Accelerating' as Leaders Gather for UN Talks.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members with tablings? Oh. So many of you. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of an article from the Guardian titled The Climate Crisis Explained in 10 Charts: from the Rise and Rise of Carbon Dioxide in the Atmosphere to Possible Solutions.

2:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today with the requisite number of copies of a report from the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights titled Report on the Situation of Human Rights in Kashmir: Developments in the Indian State of Jammu and Kashmir from June 2016 to April 2018, and General Human Rights Concerns in Azad Jammu and Kashmir and Gilgit-Baltistan.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a couple of pages from the Baker Hughes report, which shows that Alberta's drilling rig count is at its all-time low in the province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have here the requisite number of copies of an article I referenced yesterday in question period written by Tanya Kappo entitled Stephen Harper's Comments on Missing, Murdered Aboriginal Women Show 'Lack of Respect': Prime Minister Says National Inquiry Not High on Government's Radar.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to table this afternoon the appropriate number of copies of an article from Vox magazine. The article is very interesting and timely, talking about: Greta Thunberg Is Right: It's Time to Haul [Butt] on Climate Change. It actually doesn't say "butt," but I don't think that the word is appropriate parliamentary language. It's from October 4, 2019, by David Roberts.

The Deputy Speaker: There are so many tablings today. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. This is related to questions that I asked the minister of labour yesterday. I have five copies of an article from the Star titled There's a Lot of Uncertainty: Coal Workers Unsure of Support Program's Fate as Alberta Budget Approaches, just sharing the concerns of workers in these affected communities who rely on these programs.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have five copies of an article entitled After Oil and Gas: Meet Alberta Workers Making the Switch to Solar. It's dated October 2, 2019, and it's from the Narwhal.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members with tablings? Seeing none, we are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Evening Sitzings

31. Mr. McIver moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) commencing upon passage of this motion the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business for the duration of the First Session of the 30th Legislature 2019 fall sitting unless the Government House Leader notifies the Assembly that there shall be no evening sitting that day by providing notice under Notices of Motions in the daily Routine or at any time prior to 6 p.m.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Government Motion 31 is not debatable.

[Government Motion 31 carried]

Interprovincial Infrastructure Projects

34. Mrs. Savage moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly denounce all federal political parties that would enable a provincial government to unilaterally prevent the construction of interprovincial infrastructure projects of national importance, including natural resource pipelines.

Ms Hoffman moved on behalf of Mr. Bilous that the motion be amended by adding “and that would roll back progress on efforts to reach Canada’s current greenhouse gas emissions targets, including the abysmal federal TIER plan” after the words “prevent the construction of interprovincial infrastructure projects of national importance, including natural resource pipelines.”

[Debate adjourned on the amendment October 17]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment on the motion? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my privilege to stand and speak to the motion put forward by the government, led by this Premier, and the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

I’ve been reflecting on the circumstances that have led us to this very difficult time in federal-provincial relations. We are in a very unique and unfortunate circumstance. Canadian federalism, the formal and informal rules that govern our country, is under assault, and there is at this point in time no clear path forward. Albertans have a right to be frustrated. We are challenged to get our products to market, we are challenged to get a fair price for our resources, we’re challenged on the action on climate change, and we are challenged to think of ourselves as Canadians first as opposed to Albertans or British Columbians or Quebecers.

Mr. Speaker, I’ve been reflecting on the proximate cause of our national division. I’ve been asking myself: what sparked this? What was the spark that ultimately lit the flame of division? What decision was made that led to this roaring fire that has pitted region against region, province against province, and led to the fracture of our great Canadian federal state?

Mr. Speaker, before I get into that discussion, let me say a few words about the issue that led to this very unfortunate series of events, the fire that is putting Canada at risk. That issue was pipelines. For those of us in the west and in Alberta, no issue in federal-provincial relations has been more divisive than pipelines. On the pipeline file, we have been facing moving goalposts, provincial infighting, and an abdication of federal leadership. Now, the issue of pipelines and federalism shouldn’t be that complicated. Our Constitution lays out the responsibilities of provincial governments and of federal governments. If the orders of government adhered to their responsibilities and if the orders of government stayed within their lanes, we wouldn’t be faced with this messy, divisive, and unproductive period in federal-provincial relations.

So, Mr. Speaker, how did we get here? It’s an important question, and I think it deserves an answer. The government motion before us speaks to the issue of jurisdiction; in other words, what are the responsibilities of the provinces, and what is the responsibility of Ottawa? Or, to put it another way, who is responsible for what in our federal system of government, and much more importantly, what happens when one order of government abdicates its responsibility to make decisions?

Mr. Speaker, let me say a few words about the key discussion that ultimately led to the situation we find ourselves in today, the spark that lit the flame and burned our modern system of federalism to the ground. We don’t have to go back too far, because the year was 2012. The issue was pipeline approvals and, in particular, the famous five key conditions from B.C. The key players in these issues are well known. They included Premier Christy Clark from B.C.; Premier Alison Redford from Alberta; Prime Minister Stephen Harper, operating from Ottawa; and two pipeline proponents, Kinder Morgan and Enbridge. Of course, we had the current Premier of Alberta, the former senior federal minister and, more importantly, the political Alberta lieutenant in the Harper government.

So what happened in 2012? What was the decision that led us to this mess we face today? Well, in 2012 Premier Clark laid out five conditions to win B.C.’s support for the future pipeline expansion. It was an odd set of demands, to say the least. Interprovincial pipelines, of course, are a matter of federal jurisdiction, so naturally B.C. had no issue dictating to Alberta the conditions that would lead to their support for additional pipelines. B.C.’s demands shouldn’t have mattered. B.C. had no jurisdiction here. B.C.’s demands only mattered if the federal government failed to step up and assert their sovereignty over interprovincial pipelines.

But B.C., in an effort to reshape modern federalism, took a chance and laid out demands to see if they could surpass the federal authority over interprovincial pipelines. B.C. employed threats and coercion. B.C. wanted to get paid. It was B.C.’s way or the highway. This led to the decision or, rather, the lack of decision by the Harper government and his chief lieutenant, the political minister of Alberta and the current Premier. When B.C. made its demands, the federal government failed to assert its jurisdiction. It washed its hands of any responsibility. To put it another way, it abdicated its responsibility, and it left Alberta to fend for itself.

Now, this decision may have seemed small at the time, but it had an enormous impact on Canadian federalism, and the impact has been terrible for the economic health of our country. The failure of this Premier to intervene in 2012 and assert federal jurisdiction led to the idea that horse-trading among provinces was okay to get pipelines built, that legal manoeuvring by provinces in federal areas of jurisdiction was okay, that stopping permitting processes over pipelines at the provincial level was okay, that all of this was okay. That decision in 2012, that failure to act and stand up for the federal government's exclusive jurisdiction over interprovincial pipelines, has led us directly to the terrible situation we face today.

Now, back in 2012 the federal government could have put a stop to all of this. They could have said no to the B.C. Premier before things got out of hand. They could have in no uncertain circumstances said no. They could have said that interprovincial pipelines were the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal government. But back in 2012 this Premier failed to act when he had the legal and moral authority to make the decision. This Premier failed to stand up and fight for the issues of jurisdiction, an issue that goes to the heart of our Canadian system of federalism.

Mr. Speaker, as I conclude my remarks, I want to offer the Premier of this province a chance to apologize, to apologize to Albertans for the mess that his lack of action created and to apologize to Canadians for the havoc his lack of leadership created in tearing down our institution of federalism. I'd also like to ask this Premier: why? Why as the senior federal minister responsible for Alberta did he not stand up and fight for pipelines? Why did he open the door for B.C. to threaten our economy and our key industry? Why did he allow us to be taken hostage? Why did he fail to assert federal jurisdiction over B.C. when they were first testing these waters, and why did Alberta have to wait for the previous Premier, the current Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, to make the case on behalf of Alberta that it is the federal government that has the exclusive authority over international and provincial pipelines?

Today our Premier blames the current federal government for failing to step up, but he was the one who opened the door. He was the one who failed to show leadership, and he was the one who lit the spark that created the fire that now engrosses our politics. The problem is that now he's trying to fix a problem that he created. We'll debate the government motion, but let's not forget in this Legislature how we got into this problem of jurisdiction. That is the key issue facing this Assembly, the key issue facing this country.

With that, I will conclude my remarks.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a), I believe it is the hon. member for Edmonton-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview: you can't forget the south end of the riding; they don't like that.

Thank you very much. I'm just rising to ask the member – I appreciate her comments, especially looking at the historical context and the role that our current Premier played when he was part of a federal government that very much had jurisdiction over other pipelines and the role that he played or failed to play in ensuring that Alberta and Canada increased its market access. I just wanted to ask the Member for Edmonton-Manning in regard to the amendment, I guess, her thoughts on balancing the economy and the environment, so taking meaningful action and still demonstrating to the world that, yes, Alberta is a world-class producer of our resources but acknowledging that we can bump that bar even higher.

If the Member for Edmonton-Manning can just talk a little bit about how the amendment would maybe be perceived across Canada by Canadians that are demanding that governments take more meaningful action on our environment. I mean, you know, our most precious resource is our Earth: our land, air, and water that we need to survive. Recognizing that, obviously, is absolutely critical not only for the Trans Mountain pipeline but for pipelines in all directions to get that market access, which is causing so much pain to Albertans and Canadians and to our economy. This is about the livelihood of people. What role can the environment or those that are at the federal table have to ensure that we will see movement on things like pipelines and more support for the Canadian energy sector?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has the floor.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I think it's important that we recognize that, you know, when we were in government, we proposed the climate leadership plan. We implemented it, and we were looking at how we can make sure that when our product goes to market, everybody across the country and internationally sees that we are also addressing the climate crisis that many people are concerned about. The key thing that I think is a concern here is that we've now seen that that plan is now being put aside by this current government. There really is no plan by this government to address the issues around carbon emissions and what they're going to do around the climate crisis that we have right now.

The other piece about it as well is that we also looked at diversifying our economy, so we were talking about the fact that, you know, we can't just only depend on the oil and gas sector to drive the Alberta economy. We're seeing that now in the job loss numbers that have come out in the last few days. Depending on oil and gas and looking at that is not the only way to drive Alberta forward, so we implemented looking at green energy – solar panels, wind energy – recognizing that there are other things that can be done in Alberta that will drive our economy moving forward. We haven't seen from this government – in fact, we've seen some of the green grants that were being offered to help companies diversify to look at solar, to look at wind cancelled. The question really is – and this is why this amendment is so important – that you can advocate for the oil and gas industry without completely ignoring the fact that we have to address climate change. That is the reality of this.

What we are saying to this government is that if you're going to have this conversation and you're going to put this motion forward, you also look at how you're going to address climate change. What we're seeing right now is that this government very clearly wants to take us backwards and not forward and doesn't want to address any issues when it comes to climate change. We've seen that with the refusal to even go out and talk to people who are outside this Legislature protesting and will be here tomorrow. If this government would like to demonstrate how they are going to address climate change and take it seriously, I welcome you all to come out and have a chat with people who will be at the Legislature tomorrow and maybe sit down with Greta and have a conversation with her and learn and share the information about Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, with 30 seconds left under 29(2)(a), any takers?

Seeing none, any members looking to speak to amendment A1? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to enter the discussion around Government Motion 34 and the amendment brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview on Motion 34. His addition is:

"and that would roll back progress on efforts to reach Canada's current greenhouse gas emissions targets, including the abysmal federal TIER plan" after "prevent the construction of inter-provincial infrastructure projects of national importance, including natural resource pipelines".

Mr. Speaker, I think that this is an essential addition to this motion. We know that there's a tremendous amount of controversy in all of the four compass directions around our province in regard to building pipelines to move Alberta energy products to market. This has been a source of frustration to our economy here now for quite a number of years. Certainly, it's been incumbent upon the previous to last government, I guess, the PC government and then our government and now this current, new government to look for ways by which we can build market access for our energy products to the United States, to eastern Canada, and to the Pacific coast as well.

I think that, you know, it's been all hands on deck in regard to attempting to secure these pipelines, I would say, from each of the three governments. You know, one thing that we learned over the last four years is that it's better to use a sense of diplomacy and conversation and argument to convince people of the importance of moving our energy products here in Alberta, the importance of the value of moving those products not just to the economy of our province but the whole country as well. We know that as the price of energy slips and the purchase of our oil and gas products is reduced here in Alberta, so, too, does the GDP of our nation, of Canada. So, you know, as our government embarked on a significant program to help to educate Canadians across the country about the value and the importance of our energy here in Alberta, of moving it to market, with a lot of efforts we managed to change hearts and minds, quite frankly.

We engaged in a national advertising campaign that was very successful. I'm just thinking of British Columbia, where we crossed the point where the majority of British Columbians changed their minds and recognized the value of the pipeline to the Pacific coast. We know that a similar movement was afoot to the east of us, and I think that it's important for a government in Alberta to responsibly help to educate Canadians and indeed North Americans and the world about the value and the importance of our energy industry here in the province of Alberta. We hear it often, but it bears saying again that we have, as we can demonstrably show, the highest standard for our conventional energy industry and demonstrate that highest standard of safety and mitigation of both carbon and pollution in the widest possible way. Then we can convince people.

You know, people are not convinced just with words and rhetoric. You have to actually show these things to be true. That's why, you know, we worked so hard with the climate action plan to be demonstrable leaders in building a direction to reduce our carbon footprints through the energy industry and as individuals as well. Those are the kinds of things which you can attach to an argument to convince Canadians and, in fact, the world about the importance for us to be able to have market access for Alberta energy products, because people can see that, you know, we're not just pumping oil and gas but that we are actually working to apply that highest standard not just to our use of energy and our production of energy here in the province but to set an example that we can export and use across the country and indeed around the world.

The key to this amendment that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview did bring forward is to have that aspect of the argument, of the debate, across the country in terms of reducing greenhouse gas emissions and having targets and having a carbon trading market to point to and have people understand that we are serious about ensuring our place as economic drivers for this country but also ensuring our place as economic and environmental leaders for this country, too. Those two things must go together. I mean, people will judge us on our actions, and it's absolutely essential to have both of those arguments functioning in place at the same time.

I know that it's not easy to bestride the two arguments together and to square them in people's minds. You know, we see a whole new generation of people in our province, across the country, and around the world that are looking at the detrimental effects of climate change as, you know, some very raw and not pleasant inheritance which they will have to deal with for the rest of their lives. To show leadership to that next generation is absolutely essential, not just to show that we care – right? – in some sort of heartfelt sort of way but to lead by example to ensure that the next generation of leaders indeed continue down the path of carbon reduction and mitigation of greenhouse gas emissions into the future so that we can achieve sustainability here on the planet.

I think that we have a very unique opportunity here in the province of Alberta. But it's terribly time sensitive because I think the vision for our energy industry and indeed the direction for our economy must be that we make best use of the conventional energy resources that we have available to us here now and use that as a means by which to demonstrate a transition and a leadership to a more sustainable energy economy both here in the province and exporting those innovations around the world, to use that conventional energy industry, that is the backbone of our economy, to help diversify the economy in the broadest possible way as well, to build value-added resources in our petrochemical industry, and to invest significantly in alternative forms of energy and become energy leaders in those areas as well.

The expertise that our working population here in Alberta has is significant. We are world leaders in conventional energy extraction and energy development, and those same skills we can use both for the diversification and the value-added development of, for example, the polypropylene industry, that we helped to stimulate here through tax credits over the last term of our government, and, to carry on with that theme, with that sentiment, to demonstrate that our plumbers and our pipefitters, our welders and engineers and infrastructure expertise can be utilized to build value-added product and industry here in the province of Alberta.

Those individual projects, the polypropylene plants that are being built in the Industrial Heartland, in the Redwater corridor, represent thousands of construction jobs – right? – and then also represent a value-added price that you can add to those base energy inputs from natural gas and oil, that you make money from, quite frankly. These are ways by which we can help to mitigate our reliance on the extraction of primary energy resources and then to make sure that we're not just capturing that value-added product but capturing some of the profit from the traditional resources to invest in renewable infrastructure as well, in solar energy, geothermal energy, wind energy, and transit, among other areas.

It's very important. Like I say, it's time sensitive, Mr. Speaker, because, you know, while we have those resources and while they have a value-added economic value, that's the time to act, right? We don't sit and rely on what has driven our economy in the past. Countries and jurisdictions that have done so throughout history were bound to fail. I don't think that Albertans are really in that situation, nor do we have that attitude of resignation, quite frankly. I believe that being the youngest population in Canada, the best educated population, at least for now, in the country leads us to a very, again, prime opportunity to capitalize, to diversify, and to lead the new energy industry and continue to lead the economy of this country through the innovation and the can-do spirit that has built this province over the first 100 years.

I believe that by making sure that we reach out through diplomatic efforts, we can solve a lot of these problems. I know that as we look, in the final few days of this federal election, you know, we see some interesting movement of vote and intention. I guess you can't count it till Monday, when they actually have the election. But one of the things that we see is a phenomenon in places like Quebec – right? – where we need to make sure that we have conversations with the people, the population of Quebec to talk about energy sustainability and their place in Confederation. You make sure that those channels are open, because we can sell and exchange energy expertise and energy products between our provinces, and that we don't put up barriers, either physical or trade or psychological, that would otherwise impede the forward progress of our economy and how we trade between provinces here in the confederation of the nation.

I mean, that's my two bits on this. I think that the amendment that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview brought forward is prescient. I think it's helpful. You know, always in the spirit of firmness but through diplomacy do you move forward, right? This idea of putting up fences or otherwise drawing lines in the metaphorical sand and so forth: I mean, it's necessary sometimes, but ultimately I believe that we have more in common with the other provinces and territories of this nation than we do differences.

Alberta has led the energy industry in this province, in this country and will continue to do so but only with a clear vision of what needs to be done. I trust that this Legislature will be able to deliver on those things. I have seen lots of variations of legislative procedure and action in this, but I think that in 2019 we know that the best way to ensure that we continue to be leaders, both economically and in terms of energy and in terms of direction, here in this province and this country is that we act together.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I believe that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has the call.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was so enthralled by what the Member for Edmonton-North West had to say, and I was hoping that he could talk a little bit more about specifically what he's heard on the doorsteps of his own constituency in relation to this matter.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. You know, Edmonton-North West represents a diversity of both socioeconomic groups and population. It's very young. I think it well represents the face of Alberta in terms of both diversity and in terms of a cross-section of employment, right? Lots of people do work in the oil and gas industry and were very concerned. Lots of people, in this last election, had one or more members of their family that had been either unemployed or underemployed for a number of years.

I know that if we cut through the rhetoric of the House here, we all know that the energy industry went through a significant economic downturn that was global in nature. The price of oil, for example, was precariously unstable. The price of natural gas was definitely through the basement of the floor price, very low. You know, everybody wanted to make sure that there were ways by which we could move forward. We saw that if you lived here for more than, say, one or two of these economic cycles of boom and bust, you knew both that the bust was catastrophic in terms of unemployment and job loss and financial losses but that the booms could be quite stressful as well in regard to people working away from home for long periods of time, basic commodities such as mortgages and property and food and so forth being very expensive, right? So people were looking for a way by which they could have a more stable future for themselves and for their families as well.

You know, one of the things: I think we're at that sort of crossroads with the oil and gas industry where they're starting to take a serious second look at efficiencies in regard to money, input-output. That's a very difficult thing to do, but I think that the energy industry has realized that in order to be sustainable and competitive, they have to move and diversify, well, first, find efficiencies to ensure that they are making a dollar off the oil and gas that they're extracting but also look for ways by which you can mitigate, diversify the economy and the balance sheet of the oil companies that function here in the province of Alberta.

I learned a lot over the last four years as part of government, seeing just how Alberta oil and gas companies were seeking to diversify and to ensure that they were putting a modern, forward-looking face on their future here in this province. We saw, you know, most energy companies seeing the importance of carbon pricing. I think that became a new reality that everyone understood, and everyone also understood, I think, the importance of diversification and of upgrading product here in the province of Alberta to ensure that there's a value-added element to the bitumen and the gas that people have been extracting in the province.

You know, people living in Edmonton-North West: I think it's not any different from any other part of the province. People are nervous, but they want to make sure that they know that our economy is stable and that the social services that they require for themselves and their families are there when they need them, right? One thing that we learned very quickly is that when you have an economic downturn, you certainly don't double down and exacerbate the problem by making massive cuts to the essential public services that people need for their families: K to 12 education, social services, health care, and infrastructure.

In fact, I definitely learned that it's not a bad time to build some key, much-needed infrastructure during an economic downturn because it's...

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.

Any other members looking to speak to amendment A1? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really my pleasure today to rise and speak to the amendment here. I do want to thank my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for bringing this forward. I think it's so important, when we're looking at this motion, to also have perspective, the perspective that you don't have to choose between the environment and the economy. It's not one or the other. It's not something that's a dichotomy. I think that's something that we have to keep in mind, that we have to be aware of, and we have to make the concerted effort as an Assembly, if we're going to be making large statements, to understand because that is what a responsible government would do, that's what responsible parliamentarians would do, and that's what I believe our job is here in this House.

When we want to speak to federal political parties and the federal government, what we need is to look for a real plan for our future, one that not only supports our energy industry and the industry of all Albertans and our economic prosperity but one that also has environmental stewardship in mind, one that also understands that we are living in perhaps one of the most influential times in human history, Mr. Speaker, not just Alberta history, not just Canadian history, but, really, all of human history. This is one of the most influential times, when we have the opportunity to make a difference on the global stage. We have the opportunity to make a difference and change the world for the better.

This amendment, I think, is just a reflection and just a furthering of what we've been saying all along, that we have to not have this dichotomy of ideas, that we have to understand that you can have both a strong environment and a strong economy. It's something that's so important.

I think it's very telling that we can see that members of the government caucus here, the Conservatives, that have been sitting with their heads down, on their phones, don't believe that's true. They don't believe that we need to take real action on climate change. They don't believe that we can take action on climate change while also creating good jobs and diversifying our economy. I think that's something that is a little bit shameful, Mr. Speaker. It's something that I'd be very concerned about because it's something that we must strive to do and we must strive to do better.

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member failed to mention that his leader is not in the House this afternoon. You want to play like that?

The Acting Speaker: Just to be clear, a point of order under which standing order?

Mr. McIver: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), making comments designed to create disorder in the House, commenting on other people doing their work while failing to comment that his leader is not in the House.

3:30

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think very clearly there was no disorder, so therefore it's not a point of order. However, you cannot raise a point of order during a point of order, but the hon. member should withdraw and apologize for referring to the absence or presence of a member in the House, which is a point of order.

The Acting Speaker: As of right now I do not have the benefit of the Blues, and I am not convinced as to what exactly was stated. Therefore, given that I think we are operating under a single point of order initiated by the Minister of Transportation – looking around the House, it looks like people seem to be somewhat in agreement with that – going forward, I will have to reserve judgment.

My assumption, though, is that if the hon. Member for Edmonton-South did comment on whether or not some individual or hon. member from our House not being in the House may not be doing his or her job . . . [interjections] Okay. I think that was the original source of the point of order. Therefore, if that's the case, whether your thoughts are that or not, we will have the benefit of the Blues. If that is the case, then I would ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-South to retract that statement. If he decides that that is not his viewpoint, then we will refer to the Blues at a later date, and come Monday or perhaps the next time that this House is adjourned until, we will deal with that point of order then. However, at this point what I will do is offer the floor to the hon. Member for Edmonton-South to continue, and he shall do so as he sees fit, given my comments.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you. I'll speak for him. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Or Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Speaking on behalf of this point of order.

Mr. Eggen: That's correct. Yeah. You betcha. I think that it's a very wise choice for you to make in order for us to see the actual Blues, the actual transcript of what the individual from Edmonton-South did say before passing judgment. I think that we all could probably use that clarification, but I also do, you know, want to point out at this time that even if he did mention the absence of someone in the House, which I don't think he did, then it certainly does not provide license for the hon. member opposite to point out the absence of someone else in the House, right? It's the proverbial thing of two wrongs do not make a right, and this idea of thinking that that gives some license somehow to start indulging in indiscretions: I think that's entirely incorrect as well.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I think I'm prepared to completely rule on this matter now. In this I do not find a point of order on the initial point of order or even in the explanations of the point of order. What I would do is that I would ask the hon. members at this point if they believe that perhaps they may have looked towards causing disorder, which was the original point of order, and in that case, whether that is the case, I would also offer the opportunity for the hon. minister, if he does not believe that there was a point of order in this case, to simply retract the point of order.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I think we need to get back on to the business of the day. I'll withdraw the point of order. I think the other side knows that commenting on what members are doing in the House when they're doing their work is just what we don't do here. I think I've made my point, and I'll withdraw the point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Seeing that I will consider the point of order to be dealt with at this stage, I would ask that the hon. Member for Edmonton-South continue with his statements.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it is important that we do continue to consider how important it is that we have a government that is focused on not only the economy but also the environment, that we understand that we can do both, that we understand that it is not one or the other. We look at what the government is doing, and we look at what, indeed, the Premier is doing in the last days and weeks and months, even, and what he is doing is going out and using divisive, separatist language campaigning for a federal party that continues to use divisive, separatist language and, indeed, actually is campaigning with a party that is entertaining entering a coalition with the separatist Bloc Québécois. That is something that I think we should be very concerned about in this House. Those are the types of things that we're trying to understand when we talk about these issues.

We talk about how the Premier needs to understand that this country needs to work together. We need to work together on issues that affect the economy and the environment, Mr. Speaker. It's a waste of time, really, to be trolling federal politicians in this House, and really I wish the government could use the time of this Assembly better. I wish that instead of trying to use this as a political talking point, they can understand that we actually have business to do here, things like investing in the economy, investing in the environment here in Alberta.

I hope they'll be able to accept this amendment because that would show maturity on their part. It would show that they would understand that there are multiple issues the government should focus on at once, and indeed perhaps it is actually their job, Mr. Speaker. I hope to see perhaps the Minister of Environment and Parks speak to why he doesn't believe that emissions standards are important or why the Minister of Environment and Parks doesn't believe that federal greenhouse gas targets are important, especially in relation to a motion like this. That's something that I think is very important. I think that we need to look at realistic solutions. We need to move forward with plans that actually work.

We need to look at what this government is actually doing when they present this motion. We need to look at how they're actually proposing probably – actually, it is, Mr. Speaker – the worst climate plan out of any of the federal parties, and that is something that's very concerning because it shows a lack of understanding, a lack of maturity from this government, a lack of realization of the critical nature and the critical, pointed history that we are at. It's something that I think this amendment would rectify, I think that the government voting in favour of this amendment would rectify. It would allow us to have more certainty to that matter. It would allow us to understand whether this government really does care about all facets, like they claim they do. I think it's something that's very important.

By amending this motion, we're going to be pointing out that the type of ideas that the parties that this Premier is campaigning for, the federal Conservative Party, are ideas that are going to drive this country apart, that are attempting to drive this country apart, and instead we should be focused on building a plan that pursues Canadian, Albertan economic interests and also combats climate change. It's something that I think is very important. It's something that I think is real action that we need to take today, Mr. Speaker, because it's a plan that, when we proposed our nation-leading climate plan, was one that also invested in our economic future. It's one that also understood how important that was.

These types of conversations that we're having in this Assembly are essential to a strong Alberta, are essential to a strong Canada, and the government members: I hope they understand that. I hope they can see and hear and understand how critical it is that we understand we have both the economy and the environment. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we see that instead of focusing on actual issues that will affect Albertan jobs like investing in the economy, like investing in climate change, like moving forward with our nation-leading climate plan, that we had brought forward when we were in government, instead of doing that, the government is spending their time giving the largest 4 and a half billion dollar corporate handout that's ever been seen, experiments that we've seen fail time and time again in the United States, experiments we've seen fail time and time again here in Canada.

Really, what I wish we could see the government do when we look at this amendment, what I wish they would understand is that instead of wasting their time on huge corporate giveaways, instead of wasting their time on giving money away to their friends and donors, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that we focus on the issues like climate change. I think it's important that we focus on understanding how fighting climate change works with the economy. I think those are the things that we need to be talking about in this House. It's the things that we need to look at in this House and say that we understand that there is the opportunity to have both. There is the opportunity not to pander to federal Conservatives. There's the opportunity not to talk to federal parties that don't understand the importance of climate change, federal parties that are striking divisiveness through this country.

If the Premier intends to also move forward with that divisiveness and if this government intends to also move forward with that divisiveness, that is something that is shameful and should be on the record here today. It's something that we should understand here in this Assembly today, Mr. Speaker. It's something that is essential that we get into Hansard because we need to know when we're looking at this in the future. I've heard time and time again from members opposite. I've heard time and time again older members here in this Assembly say things like: we're doing this for our children or our grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear. When I talk to young people in this province – and just last week I attended many schools in my province – I am actually closer in age to those young people than I am to the oldest person and then the majority of people in this Assembly, so I think I have some authority on this matter in the sense that I'm able to understand what the effects of this will be moving forward. I'm able to understand that I am the one along with my generation, and the ones that come after me are the ones that are going to have to live with these decisions. We are the ones, the young people, that will have to have a voice to come right now because these are decisions that will be affecting my future for years and decades to come and generations to come.

Perhaps the other members don't understand that. Perhaps they don't care. Whatever it is, Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't speculate. But I think that they must understand that young people care that we have both a strong environment and a strong economy because it doesn't matter if we're able to create corporate handouts, if we're able to create all these corporate handouts but that young people aren't able to have air they can breathe in 20 years. That is something that we're going to have to be concerned about. We can talk about these issues all we want, but the reality is that we must do both. We can do both. We can do better. We can do better than the government wants to propose to us. We can do better than the pandering and the fearmongering that the government wants to propose. We can do that.

We had a plan. We had the best climate plan in the entire country. We had a nation-leading plan that had some of the best targets for things like methane emissions. It kept all of the money here in Alberta, and instead of giving a 4 and a half billion dollar corporate handout and wasting taxpayers' money on lawsuits, we could have had a plan that kept the investments right here in the economy, in the green economy, Mr. Speaker, here in Alberta. We had that opportunity, and the government can now take a step back and realize that we had that opportunity by voting for this amendment.

Instead, Mr. Speaker, it looks like the government simply either doesn't understand the impacts of giving 4 and a half billion dollars away to corporations, or they don't care about those impacts. But that's something that I'll leave to government members to get up and speak to because I think it's very important that we all speak on behalf of our constituents here and we explain why instead of focusing on things like tangible greenhouse gas emissions alongside of our economy, instead of focusing on that, they're going to be focusing on giving 4 and a half billion dollars away to their friends and donors. I think that's something that we do need to talk about. I think it's something that government members should be pleased to speak to here in this House because they make it such a critical point of all their talking points, how they've given 4 and a half billion dollars away to corporations.

That's something I'm very interested to hear about. I'm interested to hear about how that's so important and that they're not going to be voting for a climate plan, they're not going to be voting to speak about a climate plan, and that they don't think federal parties should have a climate plan. I think that that's something that we're going to have to see, Mr. Speaker. It's going to be very interesting.

I think that what we really do need, though, when we talk about this amendment and we talk about greenhouse gas emissions and we talk about things like the federal TIER plan, all these things, Mr. Speaker, is to understand that these are policies that are coming in place around the world, right? Greenhouse gas emission targets – and perhaps it's intensity-based targets; perhaps it's not – absolute caps, whatever it is, when we talk about issues like this, we have to understand these are coming in all over the world. They're coming in above the national level in many cases in the sense that there are unions of nations that are bringing in these types of targets.

We talk about these issues, and if the government doesn't understand the financial impacts of that, if the government doesn't understand the ecological impacts of that, if they don't understand the economic impacts of that, then I am sure there are many members here of the opposition who would be willing to explain that to them. I'm looking forward to some of the other speeches we'll be hearing from opposition members here today.

I hope we'll hear from government members why they think it's okay to give 4 and a half billion dollars away to wealthy corporations but then not even want to talk about climate change and how fighting climate change can help improve our economy as well and diversify our economy. I'd be interested in seeing that as well and hearing that from government members. I hope some of them will be able to speak to that.

I hope they'll be able to speak to why their Premier is currently out there, the leader of the United Conservative Party here in Alberta, Mr. Speaker – I hope they'll be able to speak to why his government has brought forward this motion that doesn't even touch on climate change. In fact, it's so clearly political pandering, it's so clearly grandstanding, and it's so clearly an attack on parties that care about the environment. Again, I believe we can and we should do both. We absolutely can and should do both. We have to have a credible plan, and we did have a credible plan before the Conservatives threw it away. They threw away the nation-leading climate plan, and instead they've brought back this motion that does nothing but strike divisiveness across this country. They intentionally are trying to strike divisiveness across this country.

If that's not the case – and it may not be – then perhaps government members can get up and speak to that. They can speak to why they think it's important to not talk about climate at all in this amendment. They can speak to why they think it's important that we start attacking federal political parties, Mr. Speaker, and the federal government and wasting taxpayer money on lawsuits and doing things of the sort. If they have time to give 4 and a half billion dollars away to wealthy corporations, then I'm sure members will have time to get up here and speak to why climate change isn't important, why we shouldn't have greenhouse gas targets, and why we only need to focus on one side of the equation.

I'm sure you took math courses the same as I, Mr. Speaker. When you have an equation, you have to make sure they're balanced on both sides. The economy and the environment are just like that. You have to be able to manage both of those issues. You have to understand that you don't solve the problem by trying to erase one half. Let me tell you, I know there are a number of teachers in my caucus here, and I would bet they would not give you a passing grade if you just decided to erase the environment.

It's something that is very important. We have an understanding here. It's very important that government members understand this, Mr. Speaker. It's very important they speak to this and they speak on behalf of their constituents on why they think it's okay to be divisive, why they think it's okay . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I believe the individual who caught my eye was the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you very, very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity under 29(2)(a), I believe. Thank you. Well, I don't think anybody has been fooled over the last four years by the NDP's sudden support for the oil and gas industry. I don't think it's any shock, listening to this member that, you know, it was a very public support for oil and gas but not a real support. He brought up a couple of things about how much business we have to do. It's a little bit surprising coming from that member, who very rarely talks to the business at hand when he's up here speaking.

One thing he did bring up and that did kind of come back to the motion and the amendment that we're speaking about is to do with the federal election. While I'd never, ever ask anybody how they're going to vote in the federal election, what I would like to know from the member is which party he actually thinks has Alberta's best interest, his constituents' best interest, Edmonton's best interest, and the interests of the families that work and live here in Alberta? Is it the NDP party, his federal leader? When you buy an NDP membership, you actually buy a membership to the federal and to the provincial parties. Mr. Jagmeet Singh is actually his leader. You can't hide from that fact. You also can't hide from the fact that the NDP federally supported the Leap Manifesto, which is basically an anti-industry, antipipeline, antioil, anti oil and gas, anti fossil fuels piece of paper.

He's either going to say that the NDP is the best route to go federally for the province of Alberta, or possibly it's the Liberal Party, with bills C-69 and C-48, the tanker ban on the west coast that only affects Alberta-produced oil. Or perhaps he thinks it's the Green Party, Mr. Speaker, the Green Party that has made very, very clear that all they want to do is shut down oil and gas completely and fossil fuels. I'm sure that possibly tomorrow he will be taking selfies out on the front steps with the protesters that are here to protest our oil and gas industry. That wouldn't surprise me at all. I'll be looking forward to looking at the pictures on Monday.

The Acting Speaker: While I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, I would just say that if hon. members in the House believe that there is a point of order to be called, they should call that point of order. If not, then I would invite them to have the opportunities to speak when they choose to do so, whether it's on the amendment, the motion proper, or perhaps in a 29(2)(a) of their own.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Hanson: I'm almost at my question. Please, if you could, is it is NDP Leap Manifesto party, the Liberal bills C-69 and C-48 party, the Green crash-everything party? Or perhaps you're going to jump out and support the only party that supports the oil and gas industry in Alberta, the Conservative Party.

The Acting Speaker: With about two minutes left under 20(2)(a), I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-South has risen to speak.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's such a shame that the member that just rose here, instead of spending the time to actually speak to matters of importance, like what type of plan we have to balance the environment and the economy, went on to grandstand and take shots at the federal government. Instead of having the opportunity to explain, perhaps – because it was the opportunity for comments as well – why he thinks it's so valuable to give 4 and a half billion dollars away to wealthy corporations. He chose to grandstand instead. And that's okay. That's what the government does. It's what government members do. I don't think it's particularly mature, but that is the case that we just saw here. Those cheap shots and cheap attacks are what they choose to take their time with, and that's okay.

But let me make it very clear. I don't believe in any party, the federal Conservatives or the provincial Conservatives included, that would strike divisiveness across this country. I don't believe in any party that would go out and try to attack the foundation of our Confederation. I think that's something that I can make very clear. I think it's something that the member that just rose should make clear, whether he supports the divisive comments his Premier is making, the divisive actions and moves that his Premier is making, and the federal leader of that party that he is leading. I think that is something that he should be ashamed about if he does indeed support that divisiveness because it's something that we as Canadians and as Albertans need to understand, that this country works better together.

We need to focus on fighting for our environment and fighting for our economy because those are things that we can do better, we can do together, and we have the opportunity to do here. But instead of trying to actually take tangible action that will support our economy, the government decides to give 4 and a half billion dollars away to the wealthiest corporations and does nothing to invest in diversification, does nothing to invest in the economy, does nothing to invest in the environment, and that's absolutely a shame. It's a shame that the member has nothing to say.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you for your comments.

On amendment A1, are there members looking to speak? I believe the individual who caught my eye was the hon. Member for Edmonton-East. Sorry. Calgary-South East.

Mr. Jones: As long as you're happy, Mr. Speaker.

The member spoke a lot about balance. Perhaps he should have put his name forward for Finance minister the last time. Something tells me it would have ended the same.

It is a sad day for Alberta and indeed Canada when a motion such as this is required and when the opposition continues to confuse their role to oppose government with opposing Alberta. How did we get here? I believe that we are here because of a crisis of leadership and rampant hypocrisy. Fortunately, we no longer have a crisis of leadership here in Alberta, but federally is a different matter.

We have a Prime Minister that talks about the environment while undermining the most environmentally responsible oil and gas production and transportation. We have a Prime Minister that talks about national unity while campaigning on division. We have a Prime Minister that talks about supporting women and visible minorities while cutting them down and furthering violent, offensive stereotypes. We have a Prime Minister that believes our military members are asking for more than we can give. We have a Prime Minister that will pay terrorists while making cuts to the health benefits of those that fight terrorists. We have a Prime Minister that would violate ethics laws to further his own interests, but he would not use the law, indeed the Constitution, to support an industry, a province, our country: an industry and a province that is the leader in environmental and ethical oil and gas production, an industry that has picked up the tab for his government's gross mismanagement of our country's finances.

Now, I'm a parent, and I have four children. I teach them not to lie, to do what they say they will do, to keep their hands to themselves, to respect authority, to not bully, to watch out for others, and to accept consequences for their actions. It occurred to me the other day, with great sadness, that I expect a higher level of conduct from my children than is expected of the Prime Minister of Canada.

So today I stand in favour of this motion and against this amendment, "to denounce all federal political parties that would enable a provincial government to unilaterally prevent the construction of interprovincial infrastructure projects of national importance, including natural resource pipelines." It is, in my view, unconstitutional and goes against what a federal party in this country should be doing, which is working to unite the provinces and towards national prosperity.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone who should wish to take the opportunity. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate you recognizing me. You know, I was listening to the last speaker's comments, and I unfortunately keep hearing a recurring theme going on around divisive politics. We seem to be focused – I think the Member for Edmonton-South might have mentioned this – around trolling federal politicians in this House. I think about how we have somebody in this House who used to represent a Calgary riding during his time in federal politics and how we seem to have missed the boat around the things that he could have brought to the table as a senior cabinet minister and how we could have prevented some of this divisive politics.

I guess my question to the member – I would like to ask him if it really is appropriate. One minute we have our Premier saying that we need to work together, we need to come together as one, but in the next minute we're asking people to choose sides, to say that we have to build the economy at all costs. Then we have others that are forced to say that we have to protect the environment at all costs. We keep stoking this sentiment. So I was wondering if maybe the member might share his thoughts around: is that the appropriate way for us to be able to show the world – you know, I've had the opportunity to meet, for instance, with U.S. legislators, to talk about the great things that Alberta does not only in producing energy but in manufacturing and in agriculture and in tech, even in our health care system. I always hear from U.S. legislators about how envious they are about that.

If we are to show the world that we're, essentially, competent, responsible adults in the room, that we want to be stoking such divisiveness within this country around how we should proceed, what kind of message, what kind of picture does that send to others outside of Alberta, not even just in Canada but in the world? If we are ready to essentially sink to these types of levels – you know, let's look on their side, stand in their shoes for a minute – would they want to do business with us? Would they want to invest in our province if we're sitting here basically trying to divide our country and stoke separatist policies? We're showing the world that, well, maybe we don't really want to necessarily look at our environment because it's going to cost our economy. When are we going to start showing that you can do both at the same time? Maybe the member might be willing to share some thoughts around that and whether that is really, truly productive in terms of raising our profile not only within Canada but across the rest of the world.

Mr. Jones: I realize that my comments about the Member for Edmonton-Decore's close ally Justin Trudeau may have bothered him, but he was not able to identify anything that I said that wasn't true, which I find sad and disturbing, again. What I can share is who I voted for because I'm not ashamed. I'm supporting the federal Conservatives. If you can't tell someone who you're voting for, then maybe – maybe – you shouldn't be voting for them.

The Acting Speaker: With 30 seconds left, I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has stood to speak.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak to this amendment and to . . .

The Acting Speaker: I will just hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. You were still under 29(2)(a), the last 30 seconds. You can fill it out.

Mr. Feehan: Okay. Well, then, speaking under 29(2)(a), I'd be happy to take a few moments to talk about some of the concern that I have about the divisive politics that I hear being used here in the House talking about the federal . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaking to this amendment, the hon. member who has caught my attention was the hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I always love to catch your attention, because it gives me a chance to speak about this amendment that we have before us today. On this amendment, we've heard a few conversations, one particularly about the next generation, about climate change, about making sure that the economy and the environment are balanced. Well, I know for a fact that the people who actually have a plan to balance the economy and the environment are the Conservatives, because, at the end of the day, we're actually the only ones who went and spoke to stakeholders who are in business. It's pretty rich for the opposition to be talking about balancing the economy with anything when they're the party that presided over a government with the highest downtown office vacancies in Calgary. It's also pretty rich for them to be talking about balancing these things for average working Albertans when they're the government that presided over the carbon tax, which taxed hockey moms and hockey dads.

You know, it's really interesting to me. Also, the Member for Edmonton-South talked about, basically, the next generation and how he was close to that age, and, I mean, as a member, a younger member in this Legislature, I thought I'd get up. I don't claim to be more woke than he is, but I will say that one thing that's important to the next generation is having a job and having these things that can actually fuel our economy and make sure they can get back to work. I know that the Minister of Advanced Education has spoke about this at length, which is his plan to make sure that all students have a place to go when they graduate, which is extremely important, as we all know.

I know that there's also a great group of people. I'm thinking of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation here in Alberta, led by a young Albertan who is going around the province talking about debt and deficit and just how much that does to damage our economy and damage our competitiveness world-wide and also our credit rating, which – I mean, once again, the members opposite would know all about damaging credit ratings because they presided over six credit downgrades. But I digress. We have an incumbency and, really, a responsibility on this side of the House to make sure that we're standing up for Alberta taxpayers, to make sure we're standing up for Albertans.

You know, I've had the pleasure of door-knocking for some federal Conservative candidates, including my own in Medicine Hat-Cardston-Warner, and I will be door-knocking with my friend in Bow River as well. The thing that comes up time and time again is that people need a job. They need the opportunity to be able to work. They need the opportunity to put food on their table, and they can't do that if you have a government on the opposite side of the House who is more determined to please the ivory towers in Zurich and New York and all these other places instead of actually fighting for Albertans here at home. This is a pattern that's been demonstrated again with the Prime Minister. I mean, you have a Prime Minister who has done many questionable things like having two planes to lower his carbon footprint.

It's just amazing to me that this is the same government. This former government won't stand up to him on that. You know, they have no problem pointing out what they feel to be hypocrisy on this side of the House, but when it comes time, like I spoke about in my member's statement today, to actually put their, you know, boots on the ground, they won't call out the hypocrisy of the Prime Minister. They won't call out the hypocrisy of Jagmeet Singh. They won't call out the hypocrisy of Elizabeth May. They'll sit there on that side of the House and lecture us about economic development, about investment in Alberta, about lowering taxes, about being responsible for the people that we represent. They sit on that side of the House, look at the ceiling, heckle, do absolutely nothing to represent the people that elected them in the first place.

What I would say, Mr. Speaker, is how important it is that we are on this side of the House today, that we have a government that's actually standing up for taxpayers and standing up for the people who work in the energy industry. I was talking to Cody Battershill. He's written quite a few articles lately, especially one talking about how important it is for us to get our natural resources to market. Now, this motion speaks to that. This amendment, however, undermines that by taking a shot at the federal Conservatives, which really makes no sense to me, and also taking a shot at something that actually a resounding number of Albertans voted for in April. We actually put forward the TIER plan in our platform, as the members opposite would know because half of their former members aren't sitting with them right now. We put forward the TIER plan. The TIER plan, obviously, would actually do something to reduce emissions.

When the former Premier was asked, you know, "What has your carbon tax done to reduce emissions?" she actually didn't know. I know, and I'm confident in our Premier and our side of the House, our Environment and Parks minister, our ministers, our whole front bench. They know what's going on in their own ministries. They know that their plans will actually work, and they're actually willing to stand up for that whereas that Premier had an opportunity to be on the radio and actually defend her climate leadership plan, or what she called it, and she didn't do that. She had no idea how many emissions, what kind of emissions she actually reduced.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say to the opposition: "If you're really so proud of that plan, stand up for it. If you're really so proud of that plan, go to Albertans again with it. I can guarantee they won't vote for you in the next election because of it, because they didn't vote for you this time." At the end of the day, Albertans know that when you want to get ahead, when you want to put more money in people's pockets, the best way to do that isn't to take it from one pocket and put it in the other. That doesn't work. At the end of the day, I mean, that's a flawed socialist ideology, which is exemplified on that side of the House anyway, so what can you do?

I would just like to state for the record, too, I mean, I'm 26. I'm not going to lie about it. There's no point in hiding it. I'm pretty young, young to be in this House. I think, at the end of the day, we have a very important job to do, and that job is to represent all people in this Legislature, including those who do not want a carbon tax, including those who don't think that the way to prosperity is by taxation. That's why I'm standing up here on this side of the House today, because I was elected under a platform to make sure that that doesn't happen.

When we hear things about, you know, adding an amendment that talks about the abysmal federal TIER program – I think "the abysmal federal TIER plan" is written here – it's just kind of sad because, at the end of the day, that's what Albertans voted for. You just stand in direct defiance of that. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. Through you, the members opposite stand in direct defiance of that. I just really don't understand how they think that that is going to help them win the next election. I know it's three years away, but they've already started campaigning. I mean, the deputy leader of the Official Opposition has called herself the acting leader. We have many people on that side changing their tone. We see that there's a push to get ahead on that side. It's pretty obvious what's going to happen for the next election.

I'd be interested to know when the other side of the House is going to be releasing their leadership platforms. If so, I'd be kind of scared because, based on the conversation today, their plan will be to tax, tax, tax, tax, tax, do nothing, then tax some more. I'm just curious to know when they're going to be releasing those plans.

In addition, you know, my dad is one of the people who builds pipelines that take our resources to tidewater. He's worked extensively here in Alberta, and he's also worked in Saskatchewan in recent years. The reason why he's worked in Saskatchewan isn't because of a Conservative government; it's because of the NDP government. He's had to find work in Saskatchewan because our competitiveness was so shot by that former government that he couldn't find jobs here in Alberta. When he actually was working – I mean, a lot of his friends weren't, and there were times when he wasn't as well – he was going to Saskatchewan. Now, wouldn't my mom like to have my dad at home? Absolutely. I would love to have my dad at home, too. My whole life I wished that my dad could work closer to home, but that's not the way things are sometimes.

These men and women: they work so hard in atrocious conditions. In minus 40, plus 40, rain, hail, or shine, those guys are out there and those women are out there as well building these natural resource infrastructure projects. At the end of the day, that other side of the House has the gall to fail to represent those people. That amazes me, Mr. Speaker.

I guess, in closing, I would just like to say, you know, that this isn't a contest of who's the most woke. This isn't a contest of who can say the right thing and virtue signal to some ivory tower eco radical sitting in Zurich. This is actually a contest of who can represent Albertans the best, and that contest was actually won on April 16. So if they have a problem with the TIER program, I would ask them to consult the overwhelming majority of Albertans, that actually voted for us to implement the TIER program.

At the end of the day, this isn't about the TIER program; this is about making sure that we have a government that stands up for critical infrastructure projects that are in the national interest, just like our projects that we have here at home and that we're fighting for but Justin Trudeau is delaying.

I guess that, with that, I will relinquish the rest of my time, Mr. Speaker. I would just be interested to hear if that side of the House will tell us who they're voting for. I know I'm going to follow the Member for Calgary-South East. I voted for Glen Motz in Medicine Hat-Cardston-Warner because I'm not ashamed of that. I voted for him because I know that they have a plan to get my family ahead, to get me ahead. I know that they have a plan and a leader who is dedicated to unity in this country and dedicated to making sure that we are not balkanizing and that we are making sure that we have people who will stand up for Alberta and stand up for western Canada and stand up for our interests as well.

With that being said, Mr. Speaker, I'll relinquish the rest of my time.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I believe that it was the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated the hon. member's remarks, and I appreciate her forthrightness in that she will support the federal Conservative Party in the election, as will I. It seems that the folks on the other side of the House seem less proud of who they're going to support. In fact, they're hiding from it. I would like the hon. member's opinion on, you know, the debate here today and the government motion that the Legislative Assembly denounce all federal political parties that would enable a provincial government to unilaterally prevent the construction of interprovincial infrastructure projects of national importance, including natural resource pipelines.

The opposition won't support that the way it is, Mr. Speaker. I'd like the hon. member to talk about the fact that our government side of the House is prepared to stand up for Alberta and make that known to the whole nation before the whole nation goes to vote in this national election. I'd like her to comment on the fact that the opposition will not stand up for Alberta and will not stand up for the ability for us to get our natural resources to market, the very thing that allows men and women in Alberta to have jobs, to look after themselves, to look after their families, to pay taxes, to share some of that through their taxes and perhaps through their take-home pay with other people.

We've got members on this side of the House willing to stand up and support that and members from the NDP on the other side of the House that will not stand up for Alberta and have demonstrated through this entire debate that they will not stand up for Alberta, to the point where they're debating things that are completely different to try to distract from the fact that they will not stand up and support Alberta in this federal election at a time when Alberta needs their support more than ever. They're equally responsible to support Alberta, as members of this House are, but they're not doing it, and members on this side of the House are standing up during this debate and saying that we will support a motion that's good for Alberta. The NDP will not. How disappointed is the hon. member in the opposition in refusing constantly through this debate to say that they'll support Alberta?

The Acting Speaker: I would just remind members of this hon. House to ask their questions through the chair.

Ms Glasgo: Mr. Speaker, may I please ask how much time is left under 29(2)(a)?

The Acting Speaker: Currently there are about two minutes and 20 seconds.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you very much. The question was asked if I would elaborate on how disappointed I am that the opposition won't support our motion and, actually, any motion to support Albertans. Fundamentally, I mean, I take this personally because, like I've said, this is my dad that we're talking about. These are people who rely on these jobs to put food on their table. Not only that, but there are people like my uncle; he's a welder. I have cousins who are in different areas of the pipeline industry and the oil industry as well as people who are close to me that are engineers who rely on this stuff. There are pipe fitters. There are tradesmen and tradeswomen of all stripes. It's important to stand up for them.

I know there's heckling from the other side of the House because they are so infuriated that someone would have the tenacity to stand up for Alberta workers, but I actually don't have a problem with that, because they can heckle all they want. At the end of the day, my constituents have given me a mandate, which is to talk about and advocate for Alberta's ethical energy sector as well as the people who work within it. At the end of the day, I mean, it's just really sad that that side of the House can't humble themselves in this House in order to be able to stand here and tell Albertans what they really feel about them.

I mean, it's kind of like there's a contempt for Albertans from that side of the House. We saw it in the last Legislature with, you know, comments like sewer rat, embarrassing cousin, et cetera, and we continue to see it, with people on that side of the House heckling when somebody has, like I said, the tenacity to talk about Alberta workers and their jobs.

I mean, I would be curious to know how they're voting in the federal election. It's all over Twitter. It's on Facebook. There are people asking in every corner of this province how the NDP will be voting. You know, if they're really so proud of being a New Democrat, then stand up and say it. I'm proud to be a Conservative, which is why I'm standing here right now. The Member for Calgary-South East: he's proud of that, too; he said where he's voting. The Member for Calgary-Hays: he's proud of that as well. I can bet you pretty good money here that every member in this House would stand up and say the name of the MP they're voting for and how proud they are to do that. Unfortunately, that side of the House won't do that. That's despicable, Mr. Speaker.

I know I have about eight seconds left, so I'll just close by saying that I'm very proud to be supporting Andrew Scheer, I'm proud to be supporting a united Canada, and I'm very proud to be supporting Alberta energy.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaking to the amendment, the individual who caught my eye was the hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I missed the . . . [interjection] Sorry? No. I think I got the call, sir.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member here has the call.

The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had the chance, well, like some of the folks in the room – on our side of the floor, that is – to actually work in this wonderful industry. I've had a chance to meet tons of folks, both on the Canadian side and the U.S. side. I've had a chance to actually manage these major projects, and I've had a chance to oftentimes, when you're on the road and in hotel rooms or back in the camp, see the members opposite protest vehemently against our industry, vehemently against the men and women that actually put these things together, and against how we ethically produce our product and get it to market.

Honestly, at the time when you're seeing these people on the stage and you're seeing them up there, you make them more than what they are. You look up to them, and you think that they understand what's going on. You obviously want to listen to their perspectives, but, Mr. Speaker, being in the House, seeing these people represent what their interests are, I don't believe they're in our best interests.

Quite frankly, my kids have a reference for that. It's called paper dragons. Everything is scary to a point until you realize that it's just a little cardboard cutout that's been made to be scary. They get divisive politics. Yeah, they really get divisive politics. It's either one absolute or another.

Let me tell you what happened in my area, being a new candidate running against the former agriculture minister, who carried that mandate into a town hall. He got laughed out and heckled out. This is a man who gave four years of his life to represent his constituents and to carry that ideology forward of what the social New Democrats were bringing forward. This man was expounding the same thing about the carbon tax, he was expounding the same thing about environmental protectionism, and he was expounding everything that was anti-Alberta. He got voted out.

The people of this province have spoken time and time and time again. Our Premier is walking across this country and down in the States knitting our provinces back together. Under the guise of the Trudeau government and the former NDP government, they subversively have broken apart this country. I'm a pretty simple farm boy. I don't often get this loud, Mr. Speaker, but this one – my gosh. My simple message to my constituents in my area was: "Let's take our province back. Let's take it back." And we did. I'm here to represent them.

The second message I gave them was: let's take our country back. There are absolutes. Absolutely, if you go against the pipelines, if you go against this motion that was brought forward – this addendum here: my gosh. My gosh. Can you be more decisive on where you're going to vote and where you actually stand? If you ain't with us, you're against us: how about that for an old western quote? It's pretty simple at this point, at this juncture. Either you're voting for Canada, to keep us in the Confederation, either you're voting for the people in this province to stand up with them, not get their back – how about stepping out in front and taking the bullet for them for a change? Everyone can stand behind and say: "I got your back. I got your back. I got your back." My gosh.

Apparently, none of these folks have actually been in a duster in their life, ever had to sit across the table from those folks, ever had to make those negotiations, ever had to make those sacrifices, ever. You have never met these people. You have never met these men and women. You have never supported this industry, and you'll continue to do that. You'll continue to expound this rhetoric of how you've got the province's back. The province has spoken.

An Hon. Member: For now.

Mr. Getson: For now. Forever, my friend. Strong and free forever: there you go. Right up there. Strong and free: that's what this province is.

I just came from a nice little business meeting here this morning. It was the actual folks from the Acheson business community. I had a little canned speech to talk to them about, but – you know what? – in feeling the measure and the temper of that room, it was simple as this: we're standing up. They want someone to push back. They want the province to be proud again. They want to stop hanging their heads in shame. They want this misinformation to be over and done with. It's time to cowboy up, be proud of who we are, what we stand for, and what this province means to the rest of the Confederation. We are Alberta, strong and free.

If you aren't willing as a person to stand in this Legislature and to support this – what we're proposing is a motion to say no. Giving the veto rights to break apart the Confederation is not what we would support. To allow the country to be – I don't know – disheveled and sent apart, scattering and bickering over minor items: it's not allowed. Pick one – pick one – stand up proud, and say it. Stand up in front of Albertans for a change instead of behind their backs. Doing everything behind their backs isn't quite the good thing you should be doing. Getting on their back, standing on it, jumping up and down, freaking out little kids, seniors – the health scare issues, this scare, that scare. We talk about fear and smear. Yeah, I've dealt with bullies my entire life.

You got me off the projects, as a major-projects guy, and you got me into politics. I hope you like your decision, because I'm here to stay, and Albertans are here to stay, too.

There was a gentleman that told me once early in my career: when you get into your 40s, things are as they appear. Well, it appears that any time you go against the Trudeau regime, well, then, you're just not loving the environment. Well, if you go against the concept of doing something with technology and actually using our efforts on our industries and all the people that do the good things, well, then, you don't like the environment.

Mr. Bilous: Artificial intelligence: why didn't you fund it?

Mr. Getson: Artificial intelligence: I've seen a lot of it in this Chamber recently.

You can have a diverse economy, you can do all these things, but you have to make a choice. This divisiveness has to end.

The amount of environmental protectionism that we go through on a project is astounding. For the average homeowner, it would drive them crazy. We separate the soils. We do the bugs and bunnies reports. We do all the background information. We do siltation and sedimentation control. We offset simply everything that we do. We build an entire road structure out there during the course of construction. We have a moving assembly line by which we're dropping this pipe in the ground at 1.5 clicks a day. We're spending millions of dollars a day. When you're building these big projects from – I don't know – Edmonton down to Chicago, we had 12 spreads going at once, $12 million a day that we're spending, $3.5 billion. I've been on those projects. I've managed that.

A lot of the prior experience of the members opposite: I don't know; they sold real estate; they did these other things. Maybe they were social workers. I'm not saying anything against that, but don't stand up here and tell me what it's like, and don't tell me about the coal workers. They're in my area.

One member professed in here earlier that Stephen Harper shut down the coal mines. Oh, my gosh. I felt like it was Dallas again, that Pam is waking up and Bobby is in the shower. This is completely a revelation. What happened was that they accelerated the shutdown of a viable asset drastically. Now, these folks put thousands of people out of work because of it.

One of the members had the audacity to dare me to go talk to them personally. I did. I went to the union hall, talked to these guys, and told them exactly what was going on. Mr. Speaker, 15 people in that room, all card-carrying union members, all part of that proud working group out there. We had the hard dialogue: "What's happening with these payments at the end? What's happening with it?" We had the hard dialogue that we have to get back to them, exactly what the minister of labour relations had said earlier. We have to have those hard dialogues: "If you're in the hopper right now, we're dealing with it. We'll tell you on budget day what comes next."

Those people in that room accepted that. At the end of that meeting I asked a simple question: out of you guys, 15 in the room, how many of you voted for me? Twelve, Mr. Speaker. Two didn't. Well, actually, three didn't because they were in different constituencies, but they did vote UCP. One from Edmonton didn't. I think that's pretty reflective of what happens in my community, my area. I'll speak for those men and women out there, and I take exception to somebody else speaking for them, because they elected me. I have never spoken for the Member for Edmonton-Decore ever, but I can't say the same when you start speaking up about my people and my area, rural Alberta, our issues that we're dealing with, the energy sector.

This is a simple one. This amendment: I'm not sure how much parliamentary language I can use to say what I would do with it, but I'd hazard to say that the bottom of a birdcage would be well served by using it. This is not the time to flinch. This is the time, right now, to make sure that we stand strong and that we send a clear message to the rest of Canada and to the investment communities that we are open for business, that we do mean what we say, and that we're going to stand up and do what's right.

We've been criticized about everything that we've done to go against it. I couldn't believe the dialogues we had here about the carbon tax. What they were concerned about is that Trudeau's carbon tax was going to come in. You know what happened? We got rid of it. The price of gas went down. We got people shaking our hands. They've got a couple of extra bucks in their pockets every month. Then what did they do? "Well, let's just back Trudeau. Maybe if we just, you know, gave more concessions."

I think Winston Churchill spoke up at one point in history about giving concessions to a dictator, giving concessions to someone who just takes more. It didn't work. You have to fight the battles. You don't send somebody else to do it for you, you sure as heck don't stand behind them, and you don't try to negotiate your way out of it. You stand your point. You hold your ground. If you have to negotiate, you do it from a position of strength, not of weakness. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we've been put in a precarious, weak position. The reason why Albertans voted for us: they want some strength; they want some leadership. They don't want the rhetoric. They want the hard decisions to be made, and they want people to do it with honour and integrity, people who can stand up in here and say what their positions are and not be worried about it.

I'm voting Conservative. It might come as a surprise, but I am. I strongly support the candidate in my area, strongly support the message that's coming out there. There's only one party, in my opinion, that wants to be knitting this country back together again and giving that presence and giving that piece of mind to the rest of the investment community and the global stage. What we currently have is a laughingstock. Look at any media outlet that isn't controlled and kept within that little regime. External to this, the world is laughing at us, and they can't trust us. They can't trust what we say. They don't know how to predict what's going to happen next because it's unpredictable.

We're doing it to ourselves. The enemy has been identified, and it's us, so either we fix it . . .

Mr. Dang: Who's the enemy?

Mr. Getson: Well, would you like me to speak directly to you? It might be unparliamentary, but I'd be more than happy to do it outside.

Mr. Dang: Who's the enemy?

Mr. Getson: The enemy has been identified, and it's us. If we don't choose to do the right things, we are the enemy, so either you stand up for the people that put you here, you stand up for those mandates, you protect those flags, those colours, our province to keep it part of that nation – it's that simple.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: My gosh, seeing the time, it looks to me to be, unfortunately, 4:30, meaning that under Standing Order 4(2) I believe the House is adjourned until Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:29 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 1st Session (2019)

Activity to Thursday, October 17, 2019

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitzings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, October 21, 2019

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by the Maryview elementary school choir, and I would invite all members to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, this afternoon, from the constituency of Red Deer-South – I am so pleased to welcome our very first school choir to sing O Canada and to do it on such an important day in Canada – it is my absolute pleasure to welcome Miss Tammy Davis from Maryview elementary. Thank you so, so very much for bringing your class to join us today. You did an absolutely terrific job.

Visiting guests of the Leader of the Official Opposition, Katherine Engel and Ricky McCoshen, please rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

Also in the galleries today are guests of the Minister of Transportation visiting from the motherland of many of you, I am sure, the province of Saskatchewan. Marilyn and Wayne Elhard, please rise.

And last but certainly not least: the better half of the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul, Ms Donna Hanson.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis has a statement to make.

Election Day

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

'Twas the day of the election, and all through the Leg.
Politicians were stirring, their people's futures unhedged.
Party platforms were etched in their minds with great care
And hopes the next morn wouldn't wake to a nightmare.

Our government was restless, not snug in our seats,
With dreams of built pipelines, balanced budgets,
support for our beef.
Our opposition still hadn't voted
As none of their options were quite what they'd hoped.

But suddenly on Twitter there arose such a clatter,
I rose to my feet to see what was the matter.
I turned on my Windows, hit refresh, refresh:
Another scandal for Justin Trudeau, perhaps?

Albertans skipped work to get out and vote.
To all Liberals on the ballot they promptly checked "nope."
Jobs are depleting, the country at war,
And all they wanted was something to live for.

So goodbye Goodale, McKenna, Sohi, and Morneau.
Let's elect Cummings, Lilly, Blake Richards, John Barlow
To the highest of cabinets, to the top of the chain.
Today Albertans pray Conservatives will reign.

The clock strikes 6. Politicians go home
But really to a place where much beer is poured.
The fate of the country they love and serve dear
Awaits its verdict for the next four years.

Will identity politics, global embarrassment, and mismanagement win, too,
Or will a leader with competence, compassion, and principles pull through?
Four more years of Justin Trudeau the grim:
Will Andrew Scheer win these voters with his dimply grin?

Also, cuts to corporate welfare, overspending, foreign aid,
Energy corridors, and tax breaks sure all sound great.
Conservatives speak the language of the west.
I just hope the east sees a united Canada best.

So today I stand here to proudly state clear
That I will be voting for the Andrew Scheer.
Our country needs leadership, ethics, and care
And to ensure this election is won by much more than a hair.

So dress in your woolies from head to toe,
There are only six more hours to go hit the polls.
Go start your trucks, give your friends a whistle,
And elect a federal government that isn't such a thistle.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has the call.

Public Health Care

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When Albertans are consulted, they frequently cite public health care as a defining characteristic of Canada and a primary factor in their pride in being Canadian. But it seems that this pride is waning on the other side of the House. Health care guarantees are not worth the cardboard they're printed on, and instead of investments in health care we keep hearing about cuts to finance a $4.5 billion giveaway and more American-style health care in Alberta.

On this side of the House we're proud to be Albertan Canadians and proud that public health care was initiated by NDP leader and greatest Canadian Tommy Douglas. We were also proud, during our time in office, to have shown significant support for Albertans' well-being by hiring 4,000 nurses, building the Calgary cancer centre, committing to the south Edmonton hospital, and ending parking lot medicine in rural Alberta.

What we see coming from this government, however, is an insidious agenda to deprive Albertans of what they want the most, strong, affordable, universally accessible health services. With the cancellation of the Edmonton lab services building construction and the failure to support Bill 203 in committee, we can see that the UCP is bent on bringing down the excellent public services available to Albertans and bringing in American-style, two-tiered health care, with boutique services for the wealthy and diminished services for the rest of us.

Here is yet another time when we see the UCP ignoring the research in order to impose their rigid ideology on the province. Canadian and international research tells us that increasing private systems reduces resources to the public system, results in long wait times for people without money, and does not provide better results. Private services lack accountability as Alberta Health Services cannot obtain universal health records. The commodification of medical care benefits only the few, ignoring the everyday, hard-working Albertans who, with the trauma of illness, are burdened enough without the added strain of financial barriers to their well-being. Albertans deserve better, and I'm calling on this government to reconsider and not go down this dangerous route.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Small Business Week

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is Small Business Week, when we celebrate the small businesses across our province. My own riding of Camrose has many wonderful small businesses, whether you're walking down the historical main street of Camrose or in many of the communities that I'm proud to represent. You can truly see that they are the economic engine of our province.

Last week I had the opportunity to attend the Camrose chamber of commerce excellence in business awards. These awards celebrated businesses, with awards ranging from small business of the year to young entrepreneur of the year. These businesses contribute heavily to my community, whether it be by offering employment, selling goods, or even sponsoring the local youth sports team.

It was great to see them being celebrated because, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's small businesses deserve recognition and celebration. Small-business owners are dreamers. They have a vision, and they work tirelessly to carry it out. Small businesses hire local employees. They invest in their communities, they find innovative ways to meet a need in their community, and they contribute in countless ways. Small businesses in our province make up 98 per cent of all businesses and are responsible for 45 per cent of private-sector employment. Together they form the foundation of Alberta's economy. Each of us here in this Chamber knows of a small business that has made an indelible impact on their neighbourhood or their community, whether it's a family member, friend, or just someone you see as they tirelessly open their business every morning and close it every night.

After four years of unpredictability under the NDP – the carbon tax, countless other barriers to starting or growing a business – our government is making Alberta the best place to start a business or raise a family. I'm proud to be part of a government that will make it easier for small-business owners.

As we celebrate Small Business Week, I encourage all Albertans to take some time to recognize and support local business.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. Schmidt: On Friday I joined thousands upon thousands of Albertans concerned about climate change at the climate strike here on the steps of the Legislature. We were joined by the founder of the climate strike movement, Greta Thunberg, who addressed the rally. She reminded us of what the best science on climate change tells us, that to avoid catastrophic global warming, we have only eight years left to get our carbon emissions under control. She urged all of us to treat this like the emergency that it is, to set aside the partisan bickering, and to unite behind the science and get the job done. While the UCP chairman and the rest of his crew wanted to smear this little girl's reputation, portraying her as a communist and sending his former staff members to harass and intimidate her, she rose above and sought to unite us all in action. Our main enemy is not our partisan political opponents, she reminded us; our main enemy is physics.

Albertans need to start planning now for a low-carbon future. The good news is that the tools we need for creating this future are at hand. Investments in energy efficiency; renewable energy; clean, affordable public transportation; and reducing methane emissions will produce real, immediate results. Used correctly, these tools can also be used to make sure that every Albertan has a job that can support their families, allow them to live in prosperity, and retire with dignity.

Planning for a low-carbon future may be the greatest task that Albertans have ever had to undertake, but Albertans have never been scared to take on tough jobs. We don't make excuses. We don't wait for others to do the job for us. We just roll up our sleeves and use our skills and ingenuity to get the job done. We've only got eight years left, Alberta. Let's get to work.

The Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane has risen.

Chester Mjolsness

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a man that epitomizes the heart of my constituency, Chester Mjolsness. Chester is one of the founders of Spray Lake Sawmills in the town of Cochrane. Last year the mill celebrated its 75th anniversary, and this year, in fact last week, on October 14 Chester celebrated his 100th birthday. Chester was born in Didsbury and grew up on a family farm west of Sundre, and he resides in the area today. At a young age he lost his father and began cutting wood to help his mother make ends meet. In 1943 he founded the sawmill and was joined by his brother Lloyd a few years later. With determination and dedication to his dream he laid the foundation for what became an industry-leading sustainable forest management operation which now employs about 400 people. In 1980 Chester stepped away from the sawmill and passed the reins on to his son Barry, but – make no mistake – his presence is felt throughout the company, and his legacy is strong.

Chester and his family, along with many generous donors, in 2001 funded the construction of Spray Lake Sawmills Family Sports Centre in Cochrane. This centre is used by thousands and is a focal point for families, sports enthusiasts, seniors, and the entire community. Chester's positive impact reaches beyond our constituency. To recognize and honour Chester's lifelong commitment to hard work, leadership, and his faith, Ambrose University introduced Mjolsness Hall, an area that houses the library and academic offices.

Chester's philosophy is simple: live with integrity, keep your word, build relationships, give back, and trust God. There are many examples that demonstrate Mr. Mjolsness' commitment to his family, friends, and community, but I'm only afforded two minutes here, so thank you for all that you've done. Happy 100th birthday, Chester.

The Speaker: Chester, indeed, is a good man.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Over the past few months I have been meeting with students and staff across Alberta, and one message has come through crystal clear: now more than ever we must invest in education and postsecondary education in particular. We have an important and time-sensitive moment to act on immediately. Alberta has the fastest growing youth population in Canada. Students currently in grade school will require thousands more postsecondary spaces than what is currently available here in Alberta's colleges, universities, and trade colleges. We need to invest, not make cuts.

Furthermore, we cannot afford to delay progress on diversifying Alberta's economy. Our colleges and universities are the most powerful tool that we have to nurture and support industry and the knowledge economy. Each dollar we invest in research and development and the education and training of our population will pay us back exponentially in terms of good-paying jobs, economic development, and financial security.

The alternative is grim: thousands of students will be denied postsecondary training because there are no spaces available or they simply won't be able to afford to go to school; instructors and support staff laid off, resulting in lower quality education; a lack of investment in capital projects, resulting in crumbling classrooms and research facilities; graduation and completion rates will decline. All of this will combine to reduce the competitiveness of our province, resulting in a further decline in investment and job creation.

Students need affordable tuition and access to programs. Colleges, universities, and training programs of all types need to be supported and expanded, not cut. For the sake of Albertans today and tomorrow, we must invest in and support postsecondary education. Our future depends on it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Front-line Public Service Workers

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm standing in this House to recognize the exhausting and often thankless work of teachers, nurses, and other front-line public service workers in this province, many of whom live and work in my constituency. These people are unsung heroes among us. They may never get accolades, awards, or even a simple thank you, but everyone in this room should think of a front-line worker they know who deserves all of that and more.

This is why I'm committed to our government's mandate of ensuring that taxpayer dollars are spent wisely. We must be confident in taxpayer investments equalling improved services that are accessible to all. Finding the balance between fiscal prudence and delivery of world-class public services is no easy task but one that is absolutely necessary to ensuring that Albertans receive the best possible value for investment in their public services.

You see, Mr. Speaker, as we move into a position where we must make difficult fiscal decisions, I have no doubt that my colleagues on this side of the House recognize the value brought by our public service workers. The opposition often misdirects the focus from this absolute responsibility of budgetary realities, but in my view it is this requirement that shows true respect to teachers and nurses across our province and ensures the best outcomes for our children and patients.

Currently we are spending $2.5 million an hour on our health care in this province. That's not $2.5 million a week or even a day; that is $2.5 million per hour. Mr. Speaker, I'm not saying that our expenditure isn't worth it or that it doesn't help people, but should it not be one of our most urgent responsibilities to make sure that every single cent of that $2.5 million is spent in the most effective, transparent, and responsible way possible? We owe it to our valued public-sector workers to make the right financial decisions that will lead to the effective provision of world-class services for all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

South Sudanese Community Round-table

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend in Calgary members of Calgary's South Sudanese community held a youth emergency crisis round-table on Saturday. The round-table was to discuss recent tragedies among the members of the community and included mental health experts and government leaders, with the goal to encourage the discussion of mental health wellness and addiction recovery within families.

Mr. Speaker, this community is suffering and needs supports. As many as six young people in the community have died due to overdose or suicide since September. That is more than one a week. The mothers in this community are desperate to find solutions to this crisis, to save their children. They ran away from their war-torn countries to find a better, safe life for their families and children, only to face a different enemy. The mothers at the round-table made it very clear that they know that the desperately needed supports are out there, and they want to see action taken to help them.

The associate minister of mental health said that his presence at the round-table demonstrated how seriously they are addressing the issue, that his government supports a full continuum, from prevention, intervention, treatment, and recovery. But, Mr. Speaker, these aren't answers for these mothers. They need concrete action, not empty words. The minister needs to step up and support the mental health issues being faced in this community and communities across this province by ensuring that the funding necessary is in place to meet the needs of Albertans. To fail to do so will put lives at risk. When this happens, he should explain to mothers across this province why their children will have to pay for the $4.5 billion giveaway to corporations instead of the supports that they need.

Thank you.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, in the last election the Premier promised over and over again that he wouldn't cut education and that students wouldn't have to pay for his 4 and a half billion dollar corporate handout. In January he said that he didn't need to cut 20 per cent or even 10 per cent to balance the books against his corporate giveaway, but now we have internal memos from Mount Royal University showing that every department is planning for a 25 per cent cut over three years. To the Premier: why did folks over there choose to mislead students and their families in the last election?

Mr. Nicolaidis: Mr. Speaker, of course, at the moment we're working through the details of the MacKinnon panel report and taking a close look at our finances. An important point to note: when it comes to spending in postsecondary education, over the past decade there's been over a 106 per cent increase, far outpacing inflationary growths and enrolment growths. We're working very closely with our institutions to ensure that we can get the most bang for our buck when it comes to postsecondary delivery.

Ms Notley: Well, the misrepresentation does not stop there. The UCP platform said that he would “maintain operating spending at current levels . . . to balance the [books] . . . without compromising core services.” Now, Mr. Speaker, I don’t know about you, but a 25 per cent cut does not sound like maintaining spending, but it does sound like severely compromised core services to me. To the Premier. It’s election day. Should Canadians from coast to coast expect the same demonstration of dishonesty from your pal Andrew Scheer in Ottawa?

The Speaker: The hon. the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, it’s well known that we will be rolling a budget out this coming week, this Thursday, and we will be rolling a budget out that Albertans elected us to deliver on. It will work to clean up the irresponsibility that we inherited from the previous government around financial management in this province.

Ms Notley: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the problem with misrepresentation is that Albertans voted for them to maintain operational spending and not cut core services, so that’s not what they voted for. This Premier’s Advanced Education minister had the nerve to tell this House that students didn’t want the tuition freeze, but the Council of Alberta University Students disagrees. Instead, they say that the freeze continues to save students and their families thousands and has made their education more affordable. To the Premier. Explain this to students: why should their tuition go up just to pay for your 4 and a half billion dollar corporate handout?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans voted for was a government that would stand up for them. This hon. member, the leader of the NDP, admitted over the weekend that in advance polls she voted for the NDP, who are led by a leader who said, and I quote: when it came to TMX, I am firmly opposed to the pipeline; I’ve been opposed to it; I will continue to fight against it, and that is absolutely one of my priorities. So the question is this: how many times is the NDP, whether in opposition or in government, going to sell out Albertans to their eastern socialist overlords?

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: At least, I know that when I vote for Heather McPherson, she’s going to fight for Alberta, and she is not going to go to Alberta and make a bunch of cuts that she misrepresented to the people of Alberta or Canada.

Alberta Energy Regulator Funding

Ms Notley: Now, the Premier promised Albertans he would review the AER to speed up approvals. What he didn’t say is that he would be gutting the regulator, sacrificing crucial oversight and quality. The AER’s president says that they’re anticipating making cuts of 18 per cent in just one year. The Premier can’t have it both ways. He can’t speed up approvals and slash funding by almost 20 per cent. To the Premier. Your platform promised responsible energy development. Why did you mislead Albertans?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again, that hon. member belongs to a party who – she confirmed that she voted for a leader who said, when referring to the TMX: I definitely don’t believe in expanding it; I’m clear on that; I don’t believe in expanding TMX. The hon. leader of the NDP has just confirmed yet again that she will not condemn her leader federally in his attack on this province and, instead, went and voted for him. She voted for him again. So again my question to them is: how many times is the NDP going to sell out Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to protecting the energy industry, this Premier’s promises always seem to be at odds with his actions. With massive cuts of 18 per cent, he’s practically begging the regulator to cut corners, roll the dice in our largest industry, and brutalize our international reputation. This means sacrificing landowners, letting workers do unsafe work, and letting down all those who depend on higher environmental standards. Again to the Premier: why did the people over there misrepresent their plans to Albertans?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, why does the NDP continue to misrepresent themselves to Albertans? They say one moment that they’re for pipelines, and then the leader of the NDP admits she voted for a leader who said of a project like Trans Mountain: I’ve been very clear that that’s a project I don’t think should go ahead. That is a quote from their very leader. So are they for Trans Mountain, or are they standing with their leader and they’re against it? It’s a very simple question: are they for Trans Mountain, or are they against it? The fact that the hon. member admitted that she voted for a leader who is anti Trans Mountain, anti-Alberta is shameful. Again to them: how many times are they going to sell out Albertans?

Ms Notley: Nine years of a Conservative government in Ottawa, a Conservative government in Edmonton, a Conservative government in Victoria, and no pipeline under construction. Four years under our leadership, and the pipeline is under way. I know what I stand for. I know what I worked for this whole time. I know I got shovels in the ground. Those folks over there sat around dithering for nine years with nothing standing in the way. But now what they’re going to do is undercut our international representation by gutting the AER. Why, Mr. Speaker? Why?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy has risen.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For four years the NDP did not defend our energy sector. Instead, they spent four years in pursuit of a so-called social licence. But their social licence turned out to be nothing more than a one-and-done deal with Justin Trudeau, a deal that saw one pipeline approved but not built and, in return, a deal that saw Energy East killed, Northern Gateway killed, a carbon tax, Bill C-69, Bill C-48. That is the NDP legacy, a failed social licence and a one-and-done deal with Justin Trudeau. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has risen with a question.

Commercial Driver Training and Testing Standards

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transportation changes course every day when it comes to whether or not he’s committing to listening to the parents of the Humboldt bus tragedy and taking real action to make our roads safe. His office told the Globe and Mail they would no longer exempt 6,800 school bus drivers and truck drivers that earned a class 1 or class 2 licence while new testing standards were being introduced, but the minister said the exact opposite in a letter to the Edmonton Journal. To the Premier. Maybe you can sort out your minister’s mess. Are you exempting drivers or not?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've told the hon. member several times – but I'll say it again because he's not getting the message – MELT is here to stay. Of course, we're giving a little more time to qualify for MELT to the agriculture industry and a little more time to the school bus drivers, actually an exemption that that member's government put in place and that we extended because of the mess that they left with driver examiners. But the higher standards are here to stay for safety.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have continued to talk to the families of the Humboldt bus tragedy in recent days, and they have said that they won't stop until all school bus and truck drivers undergo the more strict testing that comes with the new, mandatory entry-level training program. But this Premier and this minister continue to hedge. To the Premier. We know you love giving billions in political favours to big corporations, but are you really willing to listen to lobbyists over the families of people that were lost in the Humboldt bus tragedy?

2:00

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, unlike the past NDP government, we actually listen to all Albertans. We have a special spot in our heart for the families of the Humboldt tragedy, and we did listen to them. Some of the decisions that we made were as a direct result of conversations that I had with them, and I'm happy about that. I'm actually pleased that they took the time to talk to our government, and I would say to them that our government listened carefully. We pointed out where we made changes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister did meet with the Humboldt families that travelled to this Legislature last Wednesday, and I thank him for that. But Shauna Nordstrom, who lost her son Logan in the tragedy, left the meeting feeling even more frustrated. On Friday she sent us the following: "We are not stopping this battle. Today is my day to cry and wish my son was here and not gone because of this corruption." Minister, you need to answer this grieving mother. Are you going to immediately end the corruption in the trucking industry with stricter training and testing? Yes or no?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's sad that the hon. member won't acknowledge that the tragedy that happened was under their government, but the fact is that it's more important that these were systemic problems that needed to be solved. One of the solutions is to institute the MELT program, mandatory entry-level training, that came out of the United States of America. What I told the Humboldt families, which is what I've told this member in this House many times, is that, yes, those standards will be implemented. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-City Centre has the call and no one else.

Education Funding

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, among the hundreds of Albertans I had the opportunity to meet during our opposition's budget town halls this fall was 12-year-old Ricky McCoshen. He came to our budget town hall in Grande Prairie amid fears that this UCP government would make, I quote, the same Conservative cuts, end quote, to education as those imposed by the Doug Ford government in Ontario. To the Premier: Ricky is here today with his mother, Katherine. Will you promise him and all Alberta youth that you will not make cuts like Doug Ford did in Ontario in this Thursday's budget?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has risen.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We were very transparent in our platform during the election that we were not going to cut K to 12 education funding. We will be rolling out a budget this Thursday that honours that commitment to Albertans. More importantly, it will be a budget that is responsible and a budget that will bring this province back to balance within four years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, Ricky is right to be worried. The Financial Accountability Officer in Ontario estimates that that province will lose about 10,000 teachers over the next five years due to the cuts from Doug Ford. School councils in Ontario have also taken a cut, and it was announced yesterday that their Catholic teachers will vote on a province-wide strike action next month. To the Premier: is this really the type of chaos that you want to bring to Alberta and to classrooms where students like Ricky are trying to learn?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you for that. Again, I've been clear with Albertans that we will honour our commitment to maintain education funding. My question would be, through you to the member across the way: does the member have any ambitions to run for office in Ontario as those Ontario issues seem to be of great concern to that member?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I dare say that members of government have spent a great deal more time in Ontario in the last while than I have. Thank you.

Now, Ricky attended our budget town hall, 1 of 8 that we held across this province while repeatedly calling on this government to consult with Albertans, too. Their response: a 90-minute, heavily controlled telephone town hall and a UCP postbudget fundraiser that's exclusive to their donors. Now, I imagine they will say again that the election was their consultation, but to the Premier: will you point me to when during that election you explained to Albertans why a 4 and a half billion dollar corporate handout is more important than teachers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was a privilege to actually reach out to Albertans not only during those two telephone town halls but also throughout this whole summer as I travelled around to communities.

In terms of the job-creation tax cut, which we are absolutely confident will return investment to this province, while the opposition does not believe us, perhaps they'll believe economists who say this. I quote Kevin Milligan, Maclean's. "All taxes harm the economy in some way, so the job of raising taxes involves a choice among bad options. Most economists agree that corporate taxes are the most harmful . . ." [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will have order. You might not like the answer, but he does have the opportunity to provide it.

You have 10 seconds remaining.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I'll say it again. From Kevin Milligan in Maclean's: "Most economists agree that corporate taxes are the most harmful among [all] choices" in the tax category.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Municipal Funding and Autonomy

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many municipalities, large and small, serving the people of the constituency of Central Peace-Notley, which I serve. I've heard from numerous municipal officials about the previous feast-or-famine nature of municipal funding and their lack of ability to plan ahead in their budgets. Can the Minister of Municipal Affairs please tell this House how our government intends to provide efficient and sustainable infrastructure funding to municipalities so that they can make long-term budgets and plan for the services and projects they provide the people in their jurisdictions?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has risen.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government is committed to ensuring that all municipalities have predictable, long-term funding. The NDP had time to get a long-term funding deal done with the two big cities, but it left everybody else in the dark. They picked winners and losers. We are not going to do that. We spent the entire summer consulting with municipalities. We have done the hard work. I will look forward to updating this House on how we are going to bring stability to municipal funding when we table our budget later this week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that this government wishes to work with municipalities in reducing red tape and to streamline regulatory approvals and decision-making so they can officially accomplish the work they do on behalf of their residents and given that this government has amended the Municipal Government Act to allow municipalities to offer property tax incentives to attract investment and development, can the minister please comment on how these changes to provincial regulation and paperwork for Alberta's municipalities will allow them to pass on those savings to taxpayers?

Mr. Madu: Mr. Speaker, we have made tremendous efforts to cut red tape and reduce regulatory bottlenecks, that will save our municipal officials time and money. In fact, we are one of the leading departments on this front. I was proud to announce the following changes at the AUMA conference. I was also proud to defend Bill 7, which will empower our municipalities to offer property tax incentives and create jobs. We ran on a platform that puts jobs and the economy first, and we are keeping our promises.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for the answer. Given that positive partnerships between municipalities and the provincial government allow for long-range planning of community priorities and given that municipal governments are on the front lines for the people they serve for the needs of their communities, can the minister explain how this government will provide municipalities with more autonomy while ensuring transparency and accountability to all Albertans?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and once again to the member for the question. Municipalities are indeed the closest level of government to all people. We are continuing to work on the municipal measurement index, which will provide transparency for everyday Albertans and municipal officials. We also are strengthening municipal autonomy by listening and taking action to reduce red tape, advancing MSI funds, and working with Treasury Board on a long-term, predictable funding model.

The Speaker: I recognize the Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Rural Police Service

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Justice minister may claim that rural municipalities aren't concerned about his plan to change the funding formula for rural policing, but I'm going to quote directly from a submission of the Rural Municipalities of Alberta: if anything, it will reduce the level of policing in rural areas if municipalities must reallocate funds used for enhanced policing or other public safety services to pay their share of front-line police costs. End quote. To the minister: are you really trying to claim that RMA is onside with your rural police cut?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, last week we wrapped up our consultation with municipalities across Alberta. We've been listening, and we've been very, very clear that we're talking about more policing. If we do review the model, it will result in additional money coming into policing.

Also, concerns have been raised by the mayors of Brooks, Wetaskiwin, and Lacombe about the comments of the leader of that party over there and the misrepresentation of the facts for political theatre. When are they going to apologize to Albertans for their misrepresentation about rural policing?

Ms Ganley: When is the minister going to apologize for misrepresenting RMA's position?

Given that RMA's submission is being backed up by a number of rural counties and given that a Northern Sunrise county councillor said that the proposal from the minister is just, quote, a clear downloading, point-blank, and given that the government rushed to hand over $4.5 billion to big corporations but Northern Sunrise county is getting nothing but a tax burden for its residents, to the minister: won't you admit that rural counties will have to raise taxes on their residents to maintain police services, or do you not understand your own proposal?

The Speaker: Hon. members will know that preambles aren't allowed after question 4, and that was a perfect example of what is not allowed.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, it's like we're in an alternate reality here where the NDP is passionate about rural crime after being silent for four years. Weeks ago I invited that exact member to come to a rural crime town hall and hear from Albertans about their NDP legacy on rural crime. Come to Rocky Mountain House. I'll even pay the transportation costs personally for that member to come to Rocky Mountain House and hear about their legacy on rural crime and their absolute failure to deal with this issue.

Ms Ganley: Given that the minister continues to deflect instead of answering questions about rural policing and given that the reeve of the municipal district of Smoky River was quoted in the local paper as stating that the province's plan to download policing costs could eat up "15 to 20 per cent" of the district's budget and that those numbers were "crazy," to the minister: will you finally answer the question? Are taxes in places like Smoky River going to go up to pay for your rural policing cut?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we're still waiting to hear if that member is willing to come and hear about their legacy on rural crime. Again, I'm willing to personally pay for her transportation costs to get to Rocky Mountain House. Come and hear about your legacy. Albertans are living in fear. One thing that I've heard – we've met with over a thousand people in our town halls. We've had over 5,000 submissions about rural crime. We're at a crisis point on rural crime. That is that member's legacy. That is the former government's legacy on rural crime. We are listening. We are making sure that we are dedicated to fully implementing our campaign commitments on rural crime. [interjections]

The Speaker: One thing I can hear is the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Perhaps when he doesn't have the call, he would prefer to remain silent.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Education Funding (continued)

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many MLAs participated in Read In Week, including the Minister of Education. I think that's great. The teachers and principals that the minister met shared their most pressing needs for their schools and students. Will the minister please share with this Assembly what they told her she could do to help them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. What I hear constantly from our students and from our staff is that they want a world-class education system, and that's what we're going to deliver.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Given that perhaps more specifically the minister was told that they need more resources, more educational assistants, and more teachers and given that the minister has been priming us for cuts to education, saying don't worry, that she'll fix the formula, will the minister please tell this House who she believes is overfunded and why she couldn't vote fast enough for a $4.5 billion no-jobs corporate handout but has nothing to give to teachers and students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. When I spoke with students and staff, they continually shared their dreams for what education is. What they said was that they want a world-class, high-quality education, and that is what we're going to deliver on. If I can go on to say, it's just another example of the constant NDP fear tactics, and they're continually wrong. We said we're going to maintain funding for education. There are no cuts to education. That's where it's going to be at.

Ms Hoffman: Given that when I asked the minister what she heard and she starts reading from a binder, I don't think that shows a very deep level of understanding of that conversation that was happening, Mr. Speaker, and given that students like Ricky shouldn't have to be in a class of 40 students and that the ATA president believes that 42 will become the norm and given that the Minister of Education and Minister of Finance can't keep their stories straight, claiming that they will fund enrolment out of one side of their mouth and then claiming that they'll freeze funding out the other, will the minister admit that while she may fund enrolment in this Thursday's budget – I emphasize the word "may"; she may fund enrolment – she will be taking deep cuts from other areas of the budget to pay for it?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, complaining about the minister looking at her binder at the same time as the hon. member is looking at a piece of paper to ask the question is very, very rich.

But, again, I have a question for the hon. member. Her leader of her party says that he is firmly opposed to the TMX pipeline. He says he's been opposed to it. He will continue to fight against it; it's absolutely one of his priorities. Then her leader . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Hon. members, we will have order.
The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Then her leader . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member from Edmonton-Glenora, immediately post me asking for order, you chose to create disorder. It is not appreciated by the House, including not appreciated by Ricky, likely.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Then her leader admitted that she voted for her federal leader even though he is against TMX. Mr. Speaker, we know how the leader of the NDP in this House voted. I'm curious. How did the acting leader of the NDP vote? Did she vote against pipelines? Did she sell out Albertans yet again?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Rural Health Care

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural Alberta has unique challenges in the delivery of health care. Due to the costliness of delivering medical services, many have to travel hundreds of kilometres to find a hospital or to see a specialist. These challenges were and are currently exacerbated by the previous government's desire to centralize services and structure, preventing appropriate and timely local care from developing. To the minister: is our government working to enable local service providers such as HALO air ambulance in my riding so that solutions can be developed for local matters?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, our government believes very strongly in working with our community partners. Certainly, it's an issue for the AHS review, how to balance the efficiency of province-wide services with the ability to make the right kinds of decisions locally. As I've said before, HALO is a great community partnership, and I expect it to continue. AHS is going to review all of the helicopter partners to make sure that they're funded fairly based on their distinct roles.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the reply. Given that emergency department wait times have increased and given that in rural Alberta there is already often a lengthy drive, over an hour in some parts of my riding, just to get to a hospital and given that these distances force people to wait even longer for important treatment, what is our government doing to get on track in order to improve ER wait times and accessibility for rural Albertans?

Mr. Shandro: I share the member's concern, Mr. Speaker. We campaigned on improving access to the health system, and that means the system as a whole. To reduce delays in emergency, we need to free up hospital beds for patients who are waiting to be admitted. To do that, we're bringing back the successful ASLI partnership to build more continuing care beds. This is the program, of course, that was cancelled by the NDP. We also need to do more care outside of emergency through approaches like telehealth so that patients can get more care without going to the hospital, including advance services like stroke care and rehab.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that rural constituents must often travel long distances to the nearest doctor or hospital and given our government's commitment to expanding the role of nurse practitioners in Alberta so that they can take on more jobs that used to require a doctor and given that in September our government made a commitment to spend $3 million on nurse practitioners in rural Alberta, can the minister comment on how this investment will improve access to rural health care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great question. Thank you to the hon. member for it. I want to emphasize that we designed the nurse practitioner initiative to increase access in rural areas, and it will make a real difference. The 30 new nurse practitioners are targeted to primary care, an area where they haven't been working traditionally, in places that are currently underserved, almost all outside of Calgary and Edmonton. We're also looking at other ways to increase access to primary care. For example, we're planning to increase midwifery services, and we're looking at alternative payment plans for physicians to build on the team approach for our primary care networks.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, we all remember when the Premier handed out earplugs in this House to drown out the concerns of Albertans, and we remember when this government put posters in the windows of the Legislature offices to troll people at a rally calling for action on climate change. Then on Friday, with the largest rally in history here on the steps of the Legislature, this government's staff refused to attend and shut their blinds. To whichever minister is allowed to answer this question: do you feel that the actions you and your staff have taken to drown out Albertans are appropriate, and will you apologize to the thousands gathered Friday on the steps of the Legislature?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I see the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar continues to want to distract from what the real question of the day is, and that is the federal election and the fact that his leader has admitted that she voted for a federal leader who is antipipeline and anti-Alberta oil and gas, who has a platform that only mentioned this province once, so we know that the provincial NDP leader sold out Albertans yet again. My question to that hon. member: is he standing with Alberta in this election, or is he selling out to his overlords in eastern Canada?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that we continually get lectured on backing winners and losers and given that they're clearly backing the loser, Andrew Scheer, and given that this Premier was quoted as saying that the Legislature was the people's house, can he answer the question? Which people was he referring to, those asking for a $4.5 billion corporate handout?

Mr. Jason Nixon: This side of the House stands up for Alberta oil and gas, stands up for our province, stands up for our constitutional rights. That member and his former government sold out Albertans at every corner. In fact, their leader said: we would also specifically assure Quebec that there would be no pipelines imposed on Quebec. That's who their leader voted for. That's who their party leader stands for. She stands with Quebec, not with this province. So answer the question. Mr. Speaker, through you to him: is he voting for Alberta, or is he voting for his eastern overlords?

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, given that the member opposite couldn't build a pipeline with a welding torch and a flashlight in his own hand and given that this Finance minister is going to have a budget town hall with only party fundraisers, to the Premier: how much do the protesters demanding action on climate change have to donate to his political party in order to be heard?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this side of the House is taking concrete action when it comes to climate change. I look forward to tabling TIER in just a few days, unlike the former government . . .

Mr. Feehan: Tell that to the crowds of indigenous people leading that protest.*

Mr. Jason Nixon: . . . who was all economic pain and no environmental gain with their tax. But here is what's even more appalling. Their federal leader described Alberta as a bargaining chip in a potential coalition federally.

Mr. Feehan: You don't care about the indigenous people or . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we will have order.

Mr. Hunter: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order is noted.

The Government House Leader still has the call.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Their leader described Alberta as a bargaining chip in a potential federal negotiation, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is much more than a bargaining chip. It is offensive that they've done that. Will they apologize for voting for him and apologize for selling out Albertans once again?

Greta Thunberg's Visit to Alberta

Ms Renaud: Albertans are friendly, welcoming, and courteous. We are excited when visitors come to our beautiful and vibrant province. Thousands of Albertans came to the Legislature to meet 16-year-old Greta Thunberg and to join her in the call for action on climate change. But the night before an employee of Rebel media harassed Greta and followed her to her hotel room. To the Minister of Status of Women, do you think it was okay for a man to harass Greta, and will you condemn this terrible action here and now?

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much for the question. As always, and I would agree with the member that Alberta is welcoming and Alberta is very gracious. We have such a wonderful opportunity to show what we're made of here, that we are the best producers of the most ethical oil and the most wonderful opportunity to be able to get those products to pipeline and to make sure that we stand up for Albertans in this province. We welcome all people. We would welcome anybody who has the opportunity to come and speak to us about our incredible opportunities here.

Ms Renaud: Given that in this House we should take steps to ensure that everyone, whether residing or visiting, feels safe in Alberta and given that the Minister of Community and Social Services introduced a bill just last week that she says will provide more support and protection to women, to the minister: will you please take action today and make sure that Rebel media is barred from all government press conferences and government interviews until they apologize for their employee's disgusting harassment of Greta Thunberg?

Mrs. Aheer: I would like to again state for the record, Mr. Speaker, that this province has welcomed various people from all over the world to be able to share the message of what it is that we do in this province, the most ethical oil. The fact is that we are standing up for our province and for human rights issues while there are members in this House who actively work every single day against every single Albertan in this province to make sure that not only our products don't make it to tidewater, but on top of that, making sure that we get our ethical products to other countries to help them out.

Ms Renaud: You can't condemn Rebel media.

Given that we also saw a mural of Thunberg painted near this Legislature defaced over the weekend and given that I haven't seen anyone from the government of Alberta condemn this act and given that the world is watching as she toured our province, to the Minister of Community and Social Services: do you worry that the tone that your government set about Thunberg's visit is encouraging these disgusting acts?

Mrs. Aheer: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the fact that the opposition would use this despicable act to link in any way to government is absolutely ridiculous. The fact that . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Hon. members, I understand that this is a very passionate issue, but we've heard the question; we must be able to hear the answer.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Of course, we condemn that act. Of course, everybody in this House should condemn that act, but the fact that the opposition would use that opportunity, especially a 16-year-old little girl, use that little girl to make it somehow linked to government or everyday Albertans in this House is absolutely ludicrous. We condemn the act, absolutely.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod has risen to ask a question.

Red Tape Reduction

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the previous government Alberta was given a failing grade from the CFIB on their red tape report card. Our government has made it clear that reduction of red tape is priority. As part of this initiative we created the Associate Ministry of Red Tape Reduction and appointed his honour, the associate minister, to this role; however, there is still much yet to be accomplished. My question to the associate minister: with January approaching, how can we be certain that we will be able to obtain more than a failing grade on our red tape report card next time around?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we are actually doing something about it, unlike the NDP did in the past four years. Our job creators have been feeling for the past years that they are being crushed by what they call death by a thousand cuts. The NDP added a 20 per cent increase to corporate taxes, they added over a hundred pages of legislation to the Occupational Health and Safety Act, and numerous other measures that sent a strong message to our job creators and innovators that Alberta was not open for business. Within the first six months of our mandate we sent a new message to those hard-working men and women that put it all on the line: we are open for business.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Associate Minister. Given that the associate minister can confirm that important red tape reductions are indeed taking place, particularly for the many small, independent businesses that drive the economies of ridings like Livingstone-Macleod, to the same minister: when will we be able to see evidence that the Associate Ministry of Red Tape Reduction is making a difference for every Albertan?

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, we're already seeing lots of evidence, but the first thing we did was start by counting all of the red tape in government. By measuring and identifying where those regulatory pinch points are, we can fix legislation and regulations so that our job creators can do what they do best, create jobs and jump-start the economy. It is with them that our job crisis will be fixed, so we need to get out of their way. The next thing we did was that we set up a website. To date we have received over 3,800 submissions to cutredtape.alberta.ca. If anyone has an idea, we invite them to submit it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the associate minister stays firm in his commitment to reduce red tape in Alberta and given that constituencies such as Livingstone-Macleod would significantly benefit from such a reduction, once again to the same minister: is the goal to reduce red tape by one-third realistic, and what measures and steps are being taken to ensure that Albertans won't see any further increases going forward?

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, it's a very realistic approach. We need to change the culture of our government. Businesses aren't the problem; they are the solution. And we need to start treating them like the partners in prosperity that they are. Red tape disproportionately affects small businesses as they don't have the economies of scale to hire compliance officers like larger businesses do. Our red tape reduction strategy is really about fighting for the little guy. Two out of every 3 new jobs come from small businesses, so it only makes sense that any strategy to get Albertans back to work has to be that of red tape reduction.

Canadian Energy Centre Oversight

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are quite worried about what the government is doing with $30 million for the so-called energy war room. This weekend I was out and about quite a bit, and I was approached by several constituents who were unhappy with the level of answers that they were getting from the government. To the Minister of Finance. Just a piece of friendly advice: drop the politics; just give my constituents who stopped me in the grocery store this weekend a straight answer. Will the minister commit that the name of every single war room contract vendor will be publicly disclosed by the government?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, I was very clear last week about the transparency level of the Canadian Energy Centre, and it all is subject to transparency. But what I'm not done speaking about is the one-and-done pipeline deal from that side of the House, a deal that saw one pipeline approved in return for every other one cancelled. That's extremely important today because tonight in the election that one pipeline is at peril, and that side of the House voted for the one party and Jagmeet Singh who's putting it at peril. That's why we have the energy war room.

Ms Phillips: So I'm hearing that the names of each vendor will not be disclosed.

Given that we have rules governing sole-sourcing to deal with Conservatives giving sole-source contracts to their friends and insiders, which is what happened before our government took over, will this government commit that their $30 million war room, designed to make war on political enemies, will be in compliance with the government of Alberta's sole-source contracting rules? It's a simple question. I need a simple answer.

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, there are multiple measures to ensure accountability in the Canadian Energy Centre, including the Auditor General. It's subject to Auditor General reports. We have the Canadian Energy Centre precisely because the other side of the House did not stand up and defend our energy sector for four years. That led to a narrative being developed by those opposed to our oil and gas sector, that they did not dispute. We are in the situation that we are in this province right now because of the one-and-done deal that the former . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Did the Minister of Finance or any other minister discuss with the Auditor General the role that his office would play in the audit of the $30 million and the contracts being given out by the energy war room prior to establishing this very unusual situation of three ministers being the directors of a corporation? Yes or no? Spare us the partisanship.

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, as with any other provincial corporation, it is subject to audit by the Auditor General. Of course, it's a matter of legislation. It's in the rules. It's transparent. It's subject to audit by the Auditor General.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has a question.

Rural Police Service (continued)

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Municipalities from across Alberta are warning this government about their failed policy to download police costs onto them. Reports from presentations made by the government of Alberta to rural municipalities estimate that the changes they are pushing could result in property tax increases by as much as $400 per year for residents. To the associate minister of red tape: what steps are you taking to combat the mass accumulation of municipal red tape being driven by this Justice minister?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, again, maybe I'll extend the invite to that member as well. Come on down to Rocky Mountain House to hear about the NDP legacy on rural crime. You know what? I'll make the same offer; I'll even pay for the transportation. They can both come together. We've been clear. We're going to implement our rural crime commitments to Albertans. We're consulting right now with municipalities. Every additional dollar, if we proceed, will go back into more policing right now. More policing.

Mr. Nielsen: They don't need more politicians there; they need more police.

Given the associate minister's apparent mandate to reduce red tape and given his pledge to eliminate old regulations for new regulations created but given this UCP government's growing interest in downloading red tape and costs onto municipalities, to the associate minister: what issues of red tape have you eliminated to cope with the massive new costs being dumped on municipalities by the Justice minister? Please be specific about the government's intentions rather than misleading.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, you know, we've actually posted the stuff that we've done on our website, and all the member has to do is go on our website to get that information. What is interesting is that that member sat in the government for four years and did absolutely nothing on this file. In fact, what they actually took all their time to do was to give a whole bunch of taxes to Albertans, a 20 per cent increase in corporate taxes. This is the sort of thing that they have a legacy for. Our legacy is going to be able to get Albertans back to work.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, given, I guess, that municipalities can't expect this associate minister to rescue them from the red tape that the Justice minister is insisting on downloading on them and given that the end result of this policy could be rising property taxes, utility rates, and reduced services, to the associate minister: do you think forcing Alberta residents to deal with higher property taxes, higher utility rates, and more red tape is a fair trade for a $4.5 billion corporate giveaway that hasn't created a single job yet?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has risen.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is rich coming from the members opposite. This is the political party that, when they were in office, imposed the biggest tax hike in Alberta's history, multibillion dollars in taxes and the carbon tax. These are the members opposite that, you know, were led to pursue policies that devastated all of our communities. These are the same members opposite that went, I mean, around the country campaigning against our oil and gas sector. We will not be lectured by that side of the aisle.

The Speaker: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Agricultural Concerns

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's agricultural sector has plummeted under the previous government. It's unacceptable that employment in the field has dropped 19 per cent in four years; 11,300 jobs have been lost. Under the previous administration Alberta farmers were put through tough times dealing with skyrocketing government-driven costs simply to make a living. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: how is this government working to revitalize this important staple of Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture has risen.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for the question. Actually, I'd like to start off by saying that I was pleasantly surprised to hear that the deputy NDP leader is actually spending time in her riding of Lethbridge-West. That is a great thing to hear.

Under Alberta's one-and-done NDP government there were 11,000 job losses in agriculture, investment plummeted by 7 per cent, and the ag sector felt attacked or ignored at best. But, Mr. Speaker, we are working with farmers. We had consultations that went out across the summer at 25 different stops for the repeal and replacement of Bill 6.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, given that the previous government made it mandatory to have farm worker WCB coverage for their employees and given that WCB insurance premiums are rising and costing more money annually for employers, to the same minister. Over the summer you had the opportunity to talk with many farmers and ranchers. What did you hear from the consultations regarding employee insurance, and what will you be attempting to implement with upcoming legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We did hear that mandatory choice in insurance was something that farmers wanted. It's something that we're committed to. Our farmers compete on a global stage. We need to be able to have regulations and rules in place so they can actually get their products to market, which are primarily export-oriented in nature.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that small farms are often hit hard by regulatory and tax changes and given that small farms do not have the same financial flexibility as larger agricultural operations, so the annual cash flow management challenges are often huge, to the minister: how will this government work with our federal counterparts to reduce regulatory and tax burdens on small farms?

2:40

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, I'm very hopeful that tonight Canadians across the country will elect a strong, stable, national majority Conservative government which this government will be able to work with to help our farmers compete on a global stage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis has a question.

Tourism Development in Banff-Kananaskis

Ms Rosin: Yes, I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tourism is vital to the success of this province. It is one of the largest employers in Banff-Kananaskis and is accountable for 89 per cent of Banff's GDP. This industry significantly contributes to the province's economy and vibrant well-being. We need to continue to put our province on the map by attracting visitors from around the world, so can the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism please tell us what she's doing to encourage tourism growth in my riding?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We will be developing a 10-year tourism strategy, where we will be consulting closely with many stakeholders in your riding, led by Travel Alberta. The strategy will have a bold and ambitious target for tourism investment in our province, and the member's riding of Banff-Kananaskis will be a big part of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that many tourism companies cite their inability to secure long-term funding as a barrier to their ability to build new tourism ventures and, further, given that we must assure potential investors that Alberta is a place to invest in tourism development, can the minister please outline what she has already done to address this concern?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development and tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for the question. It is true that the tourism industry has been mired in regulatory burden and red tape that has stifled growth. My colleague the hon. Government House Leader actually took action on this very issue, and our government has increased the maximum tenure on public lands for tourism operators from 25 to 60 years, which will allow the securing of long-term financing.

The Speaker: I'll provide the Member for Banff-Kananaskis the opportunity to ask her second supplemental.

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that red tape regulations around investment and entrepreneurship are a serious burden on our economy and given that this burden is particularly onerous when trying to invest in our tourism industry, our beautiful provincial parks and our world-renowned attractions, what is the ministry doing to ensure that the concerns of red tape raised by tourism operators at the round-tables held in my riding are heard?

The Speaker: The hon. minister is answering.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for the question. As I mentioned, we have already taken action to reduce some red tape for tourism, and we are continuing to do so. My colleague the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction has also already held a round-table for the tourism and hospitality sectors. I also attended a red tape consultation hosted by the Member for Banff-Kananaskis, where we heard great discussions about the future of tourism.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will proceed to Members' Statements.

Hon. members, please leave quickly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie is rising to make a statement.

Election Day

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across the country Canadians are casting their votes to influence the future of our country. In my riding, Calgary-Currie, many of my constituents come from war-torn countries where any vote is already fraudulently predetermined. Not here, though. Not in Canada.

In recent days I've spoken to several new Canadian constituents, and this is their first opportunity to vote, and they value that right. Every Canadian who can vote should; therefore, it stands to reason that every voter should educate themselves on the issues.

For me, I voted for the only party that is standing up in support of the Alberta economy.

I voted for the only party that recognizes that we are a global leader in environmental stewardship, labour standards, and ethical and social principles in the production of oil and gas.

I voted for the only party that wants Canada to stop importing oil and gas from dictators and totalitarian regimes like Venezuela and Russia. In those countries regular citizens are scared to come out and simply be themselves for fear of imprisonment or death.

I voted for the only party that knows that supporting our energy industry means keeping our standard of living and being able to build new roads, new schools, and new hospitals, not only here in Alberta but across all of Canada, because we give the rest of Canada tens of billions of dollars each year through equalization payments. Without our economy that all goes away.

Therefore, I had one choice. I voted for Andrew Scheer and the Conservative Party of Canada.

In conclusion, to every voter living in a province that has benefited from our equalization payments to you, such as the Atlantic provinces, historically Ontario, et puis aussi le Québec: these equalization payments contributed to your roads, your kids' education, and your health care. Therefore, if you haven't voted yet and if you value your standards of living, then vote the way that I did because you have one viable choice, and that choice is Conservative.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: I see the hon. Government House Leader has risen.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to advise the Assembly that pursuant to Standing Order 3(1.2) there shall be no morning sittings on the following dates: Tuesday, October 22, 2019, and Thursday, October 24, 2019.

I further wish to advise that pursuant to Government Motion 31 there shall be no evening sitting tonight.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has caught my eye.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a report by the Conference Board of Canada, which I referred to in my question last week, titled Ready for Life: A Socio-Economic Analysis of Early Childhood Education and Care. This report concludes that given the substantial potential benefits to society and the economy, there's a strong case for universal child care and early childhood education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has caught my eye.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite five copies of a document from the South Peace News entitled If You Want Us to Pay, We Should Have a Say, that I referenced in my question earlier today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A new session, so I thought I would not miss the opportunity to table five copies of the NDP's anti-oil Leap Manifesto. Clearly, the opposition has voted against Alberta again.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite copies of a document called Abortion Bans Strip People of Their Human Rights: Here's Why We Must Stand in Solidarity against Them. There you go.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first one is from Women's Studies International Forum, Spatial Disparities and Travel to Freestanding Abortion Clinics in Canada, by Christabelle Sethna and Marion Doull.

The second one is "Job Intensive": Study Says Clean Energy Fast Track to Employment Growth, by Canadian Press.

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to table five copies of a report. Thank you.

The Speaker: To the Minister of Service Alberta: typically speaking, you would provide some context of what the report is.

Mr. Glubish: It's the 2018 report on the act to protect against predatory lending.

The Speaker: Very well tabled. Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of hon. Mr. Schweitzer, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, pursuant to the Legal Profession Act the Law Society of Alberta 2018 annual report; on behalf of hon. Mr. Toews, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Securities Act the Alberta Securities Commission 2019 annual report; on behalf of hon. Mr. Shandro, Minister of Health, pursuant to the Health Disciplines Act the Health Disciplines Board 2018 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. I see the government whip has risen.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much. I am very proud to stand up here on behalf of the point of order that was noted by the associate minister of red tape at approximately 2:24 this afternoon. Mr. Speaker, as you are fully aware, there was a very robust question period, full of debate and back and forth. I think there were a number of times where you certainly had to calm the House down, and I know that it is very much appreciated, I believe, on both sides of this House.

However, during one of the exchanges a question was posed that our Government House Leader was attempting to answer, and what could be heard from across the room from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was, quote: that member doesn't care about indigenous people. Unquote. Really, under 23(h), (i), and (j) – of course, “makes allegations against another Member” and “imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member” or even “uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder” – I would argue that, in fact, it did create disorder. Hence, you actually had to single out that particular member to get him from not speaking not only in a tone – but, obviously, from what we heard on this side of the House through the associate minister, what he had actually heard, I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that this is indeed a point of order. I would ask that that member or somebody on his behalf apologize to the Government House Leader.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. the Official Opposition House Leader has risen to defend a point of order.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, this is not a point of order. I did not hear clearly the same thing that the member opposite thought he heard. You know, for that reason, this is really a difference of opinion. I’m sitting on this side, mere feet away from the member who was accused of uttering comments that possibly would have been or could have been a point of order, but that’s not what I heard. There is clearly a difference of opinion between the government whip and our side, and for that reason, there is no point of order.

The Speaker: Are there others wishing to join the debate?

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware, due to the volume at which the member was speaking quite often throughout this debate, you didn’t have to sit mere feet away to be able to hear what he said. There was no doubt in my mind that that is exactly what he said, and this should be definitely a point of order.

The Speaker: I hesitate to recognize the member, particularly if he is only going to add his viewpoint on what we’ve already heard, but if he has something new to add, I’ll hear it.

Mr. Hanson: Just to confirm, Mr. Speaker, that I actually heard the same thing, too. It was quite clear in the House.

Thanks.

The Speaker: I hesitated to recognize you unless you had something new to add, and unfortunately you didn’t add anything new.

Does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford have any desire to add to the statement today?

Perfect. Hon. members, I do recognize that today the House was particularly rambunctious. The Speaker certainly did hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford quite loudly, and he was called out. I certainly did hear him make comments around indigenous people. Whether or not, in fact, he said, “You don’t care about indigenous people,” which, if he did do, certainly would be a point of order and he would be required to apologize for and withdraw – having said that, without the benefit of the Blues or knowing exactly what he did say, it would not be appropriate for me to ask him to apologize for something that I am not a hundred per cent certain that he did say.

What I would remind all members of the Assembly: we are responsible for the tone and tenor of the debate, and certainly . . . [A cellphone rang] I’m sure he wants to apologize for his cellphone ringing now. Certainly, yelling out in such a manner that the Speaker can hear a member over all other members’ raucous debate would not be appreciated by the Speaker.

But on this point, I am not certain that that is, in fact, what he said. As such, there is no point of order, and I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

Hon. members, we are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Motions for Concurrence in Committee Reports on Public Bills Other than Government Bills

Bill 203

An Act to Protect Public Health Care

The Speaker: Hon. members, on June 27, 2019, the chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members’ Public Bills presented the report of that committee on Bill 203, An Act to Protect Public Health Care, and requested concurrence of the Assembly in the report, which recommended that the bill not proceed.

As this is the first time a motion to concur in the report of the committee has been debated during this Legislature, I’ll briefly outline the procedure that we’ll follow. Under Standing Order 7(5.1)(c) if a member other than the mover rises to speak during daily Routine to a motion to concur in the report of a committee on public bills other than government bills, debate on that motion is called under Orders of the Day on the Monday after. The speaking times: Standing Order 29(3) provides for the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition to have 20 minutes speaking time and all other members to have 10 minutes. Under Standing Order 8(7)(a.1) up to 55 minutes are allotted for debate on the motion. The mover of the concurrence motion, in this case the Member for Calgary-West, has an additional five minutes to close debate. As a member other than the mover rose to speak on June 27, 2019, debate on the motion will proceed today, which is the first Monday on which the Assembly has sat since that date.

As the motion to concur in the committee report on Bill 203 has already been moved, I now wish to recognize any additional members who wish to speak. Are there members wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has risen.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity. Just to confirm with the table, as the representative for the leader, do I have 20 minutes to speak at this time or 10?

The Acting Speaker: It’s my understanding that you have 10 minutes to speak.

Mr. Feehan: Ten. Okay. Just wanted to be absolutely clear. Then I’ll divide my time roughly in half because there are two issues here. One of them, of course, is the issue that’s inherent in Bill 203, which is the protection of public health care services in this province. Of course, the other one is the deep concern about the antidemocratic stance of this government and their demagoguery in designing this system to ensure that only their bills arrive in the House. I’ll speak to both of these pieces as we go along, I gather, giving about five minutes to each.

The first one is that it is ultimately critical that we spend time in this House talking about the importance of protecting public health care services in this country. As I mentioned earlier today in my member’s statement, it is one of the identifying characteristics of people’s pride in Canada that we have such a public system and that any person in this House can go to receive medical care not having to worry about whether or not they can afford to pay for that care when they’re in the midst of crisis, family trauma, and perhaps even the grieving of a death in a family. Yet what I’m finding is that members opposite have simply begun to engage in a practice of snubbing the protections that are necessary for public health care in this province.

Now, in the committee at hand, that we addressed on this issue, I brought forward numerous incidents of studies that have been done about the existence of public health care and what happens when you start to introduce private health care.

3:00

I can tell you that studies done across Canada by people such as Tuohy, which I will introduce in the House later for the record, and others across Britain and Australia and New Zealand have all indicated that when you introduce private medical care into the public health care system, you begin to undermine the effectiveness of the public health care system and you begin to create a system where only people with substantial money can receive the benefits of the larger system.

In fact, in Tuohy's report they suggest that systems allowing for parallel publicly- and privately-financed sectors raise the question of whether a parallel private system can reduce pressure on the public system. Our review suggests that it does not: public-sector waiting lists and times are longer in nations with parallel private sectors, such as Britain and New Zealand, than in nations that draw the public-private boundary in other ways.

That's the primary issue. The government does not want to protect the citizens of the province of Alberta from longer wait times because there seems to be some benefit for this government, which I suggest has something to do with their coffers at election time.

Moving past the evidence, because I know I presented evidence from research studies – as you know, prior to arriving in this House, I was an academic, so I often go to research literature to develop my opinion. I presented evidence on a variety of things like that trickle-down economics doesn't work, and of course the government ignored me. I provided evidence on issues such as climate change, and of course the government ignored me. It seems to be a very clear trend that any time academia spends thousands of dollars and thousands of years of man-hours to determine some greater understanding of our world, this government is sure to ignore it on behalf of something their buddy said to them in the coffee shop last week. Given that I think that that's the nature of their decision-making, there's not much point in speaking about that.

What I do want to say today is that this decision by this committee, if this government were to accept this decision, would be an assault on democracy. This is an attempt to quiet the voice on the other side simply because you disagree with them. Nobody is saying that the committee had to ask the government to accept the bill. We are just asking them to debate the bill, and they won't even do that. They won't even have the fortitude to stand up and defend their own position in the House because they know it's indefensible. They know that their only hope of getting their way is to actually undercut democracy and make sure that the opposition does not have a voice, the same way they've done by reducing our time in the House, by reducing our chance to introduce our constituents when they come in here, and now they're reducing our chance to bring bills into this House.

I notice that a hundred per cent of the bills presented by government members who are not part of the cabinet have been presented into this House, and now a hundred per cent of the bills presented by opposition members have been denied. I can tell you what this is all about. This is about putting earplugs in permanently in this House and preventing people in this House, who were elected to represent their citizens, from actually speaking to the issues that they were elected on.

That is a disgrace in a Westminster democracy. The very point of our having this nature of a democratic government is to hear from the people. If you don't like it, you vote it down, but if you come in with your jackboots on and step on the necks of the opposition so that you don't even have to hear them or you put earplugs into your ears, then you have learned nothing from 300 years of democratic growth in western democracies. It's a shame that you find yourself here in this House saying that you want to represent people in a democratic way and then use every trick you possibly can to deny us the right to engage you in that democracy. This is the most shameful act that I've seen this government conduct since they got in six months ago, and that's after quite a list of shameful acts.

I would like to be able to say, "Let's look at the evidence, and let's look at whether or not it's important to protect health care," but I know they don't care about evidence. Instead, I would ask this House to take the moment to realize how important it is that we actually have the opportunity to stand in this House and talk to the issues.

If you won't even give us that, if you put the earplugs in permanently in terms of the structures of the House, then we have a serious problem of moving toward a nondemocratic state in the province of Alberta, and that's something that I will stand in this House and fight against. When my kids get older and look at what's happened in this House, I want them to know that I stood against them, that I stood against their attempts to shut everyone down who doesn't agree with them and prevent them from having a voice in this House, that when they tried to move in the direction of dictatorial policy-making on the part of the government, I was here to say that that is unacceptable.

I'm proud to be a person who is not afraid to look the government and the government members in the eye and say: what you are doing is wrong. All you have to do is accept this bill into the House to talk about it and then vote it out. You have a majority. So what is it that you don't even want to hear from the opposition? The level of cowardice in that, not even wanting to sit and be part of a normal democratic process when you know you have the ultimate power to defeat the bill, tells me that you're afraid of something. What it tells me you're afraid of is that you are on the fast march to destroying public health care, that you're going to make sure that in the next few years the average person in society is going to have less access to public health care because your wealthy donor friends want private, elite access to health care. And that is unacceptable.

You can't even stand up and defend yourself on this, and that tells me something. You could have said, "Sure, we'll have a conversation about it, and I'll stand up and I'll defend my point of view," but you've chosen not to do that through this committee, and you've set up this structure to ensure that whenever the opposition brings an idea forward, you will be able to squelch it before it arrives in this House. That's the kind of demagoguery that is completely unacceptable in a Westminster democracy and one that should make you feel ashamed for what you're doing.

Go back to your constituents and tell them: yeah, the opposition tried to bring something forward and tried to suggest a bill that we could work on.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Looking to see other individuals looking to speak to Bill 203, I saw the hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to this motion of concurrence. Like, wow, that was a rambling mess of anger and misplaced thoughts, most certainly, but that seems to be consistent with messaging coming from the NDP this day and age.

First off, I appreciate having this opportunity to speak to this bill called An Act to Protect Public Health Care. I'm not actually speaking to the bill. I know that we're on the motion of concurrence. I think one of the reasons why it was never successful going through a committee is because it's actually a bill to stifle innovation in our health care system. What we are doing with health care right now is not working. What the NDP did with health care for the last four years by throwing money at it is not working. In fact, we are seeing that we have worse health care outcomes at the end of the day, yet the NDP are committed to protecting that kind of system. Good job. That's great. That's what Albertans voted for.

No. Albertans actually voted for the opposite of that. Albertans voted for hope in the health care system. They voted to bring down wait times, and that's exactly what this government is doing. I'm so proud to be moving forward on that with my colleagues alongside Albertans, who are so hopeful for the changes and the hope that is before them.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford stood up and said that public health care is under attack. I haven't really heard that. Oh, no. Wait. I have heard that. I've heard that, again, from the messaging machine of the NDP. The NDP are using this fear and smear campaign amongst Albertans. They're using our health care system. They're creating fear in families, in parents.

The UCP is not attacking the health care system. We are doing everything that we possibly can to do the exact opposite of what the NDP did and failed in our health care system. I'm so proud to be moving forward with our government.

Mr. Speaker, the member who brought this ill-thought-out bill forward in the first place said that there are so many studies on public health care, and they presented all of these studies: it's been done; you know, the science is settled on public health care, and we can't change a stinking thing. What they should have been presenting are studies on how to make our health care system better, how to make it work, how to make it work for families that are stuck in the waiting rooms in hospitals, riddled with fear because their child is sick, studies on how to make it better for families in our communities. We should be spending time on innovation, not studies that keep producing the same failed results over and over again.

So, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people that I represent in the riding of Airdrie-East, who are as a community working on policies and thoughts and ideas to make healthier communities and to make the health care system work better, we are ashamed that the NDP would even think that this is something that Albertans are excited about or looking forward to. Again I just say big kudos to the platform commitments, which our government will be carrying through with, enhancing and strengthening our health care system. We are so proud.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly be voting this down.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has risen.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, that was entertaining.

Work hard, stay humble, and earn every vote: that was apparently the credo of this government, Mr. Speaker, that they have claimed again and again and then turned around in this House and basically wiped their feet on. They claim one thing in words, but their actions are clearly very different. Whatever diatribe the members of this government want to get up and make in this House in protestation about their mandate from Albertans and how they got the support of all Albertans for every last little thing that they're going to plan to do, they at no point during their campaign ran on reducing the voice of opposition.

They at no point ran on increasing a dictatorial mandate for the government of Alberta, on shutting down debate in this House, or indeed on making the kind of changes they made in the standing orders to do what they would have screamed about if our government had ever tried to do when they sat in these seats in this House, and they know that full well, Mr. Speaker, because they took every opportunity, when they felt that our government was not allowing one of their private members' bills to move forward, to make a good deal of noise about it.

I do not see in the behaviour of this government, Mr. Speaker, that they are living up to those words that were put forward by their Premier. Indeed, that Premier does not live up to his own words. Humility is the furthest thing from this government, as we saw again and again during question period today, as we just heard from the Member for Airdrie-East, as we see demonstrated by the members of this government that sat and laughed and yawned and heckled my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford as he spoke about his bill being stifled by this government, which does not have the courage to even stand and debate it in this House. They make every effort to hide it behind closed doors, to keep it at committee, and then refuse to actually let it come forward, where Albertans could actually have the opportunity to hear about and learn about the particular issue. That is not working hard; that's the utmost in laziness. That is not staying humble; that is the utmost in arrogance. That is not earning Albertans' votes; that is spitting on them.

Things have gotten rather quiet in the House now, I notice. Members don't see fit to laugh at me like they did my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford.

Respectfully, Mr. Speaker, this government has made a number of changes – and these members well know it; they've each voted in favour of it – to reduce the opportunity for members of the opposition to raise concerns and legitimate points in this House.

They actively participated, a number of them, in accepting earplugs from the Premier and placing them in their ears during a debate in this House, exercising the precise same tools that their own colleagues exercised when they sat in this position in this House. Democracy, Mr. Speaker, is not meant to be convenient. It is not meant to put members of government at ease. It is intended to allow for debate. It is intended to be uncomfortable. It is intended at times to slow down the work of government to ensure we have proper checks and balances and consideration of all ideas that members wish to bring forward.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that at times I've listened to some incredibly vacuous and unintelligent debate in this House, absolutely ridiculous conspiracy theory, but I sat and listened because that is the right of members in this House, to bring forward whatever thoughts they wish to in this place. We, when we were in government, did not attempt to take steps to stifle that debate. Even when it might have been advisedly wiser for some of those members to perhaps not make some of the comments they chose to make on the record, we allowed them to do it.

What we have here, Mr. Speaker, is once again this government demonstrating arrogance, the type of arrogance that they claim they displaced from former Conservative governments in this province. Let's be clear. They did not get to Alison Redford in a year or even in four years. That was the accumulation of 40 years of decisions like this, backed by members who felt that they had to back up a Premier or a government. In order to get some things done, they were willing to fudge the lines a little bit, willing to allow that little extra step over the line of decency or ethics or democracy, and that builds up like mud on your shoes. I can only imagine how much this government is going to be carrying around and, with it, each one of these private members and ministers who continue to support this kind of behaviour and decision by the end of their four years and, indeed, what that may cost them with Albertans.

Indeed, that's what we have in this bill, Mr. Speaker. We have a bill looking at how this has been allowed to continue in our health care system, how certain health organizations are fudging the rules and are blurring the lines between what is a publicly covered service and what is a privately covered service, through things like block billing, so you can't tell where one dollar starts and where it ends as to which services it's being applied to. And if this government does not want to debate that in this House, if they feel that they have to go to these kinds of extreme measures, I can only assume that they're okay with that. Indeed, we've seen that in many cases.

This is a Premier, after all, whose own leadership campaign is under investigation for precisely that, blurring the lines of ethics, fudging the rules, skirting around the boundaries, shady money moving back and forth, members sitting in this House that were part of those actions and part of those conspiracies. So, indeed, it's no surprise, Mr. Speaker, that members of this government do not want to debate a bill on the record that talks about that kind of behaviour occurring in parts of our health care system.

They can stand, and they can express their outrage. They can stand and try to make claims that they are doing this for the betterment of Albertans. We know they are doing this to cover their own selves because they want to streamline their ability to ram through whatever legislation they wish, to silence the voice of opposition, and to reduce democracy in this House. They feel that that is what the electoral mandate they received back in April allows them to do. Mr. Speaker, that is not what they told Albertans they were going to bring to this House. But by their actions here today it is precisely what they are demonstrating they are going to do.

Why, Mr. Speaker, should we trust them on any other part of their platform and, indeed, on their plans for health care in this province when it's clear they are willing to bend and change and break the rules whenever it is convenient for them to maintain power and to do what they wish for themselves and their friends? That is what this government does, and that is the legacy of each of the members in this House that chooses to vote against allowing this bill to be debated in the House, who voted in favour of the standing orders that made the changes that allowed this to occur, who took part in that committee that chose to recommend that this bill not have the opportunity to move forward.

That's not why I was sent to this House, Mr. Speaker. I was sent to this House originally in 2015. I ran because I wanted to see better, because I saw the arrogance of previous Conservative governments, and I wanted to work to change that. I have worked in my community to uphold that standard, and that is what I was re-elected for back in April, and that is why I stand in this House and decry this action by this government today. This is not what my constituents voted for in 2015 or in 2019.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I believe that I saw the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It wasn't very long ago that this side of the House was given a resounding mandate by the people of Alberta. The people of Alberta chose a government that would get our province back on track, including putting its people back to work and getting our fiscal house in order. Completing this mandate requires hard decisions and difficult conversations, but none of these conversations should be a surprise or a slight to anyone. We were elected on clear and explicit platform promises to this province and its people. Today I'm standing in this House to remind everyone of the commitments we have made and the promises we will be keeping. These promises are clear and emphatic, and they are the reason why I am unable to support this bill.

As a member of the private members' bills committee – we were asked for a recommendation, and we brought one to the House, democratically debating the bill right now. We also allowed for every moment of debate and expert presentation available during that committee time, and we allowed the opposition to bring forward their arguments.

It is in this government's platform, however, to maintain or increase health spending and maintain a universally accessible, publicly funded health care system. Increasing access and decreasing wait times are paramount in that plan. This commitment is undeniable. We know that we must take care of one another, including through providing an accessible public health care system. There is no doubt in my mind that we agree with this statement on this side of the House. What we cannot agree on, Mr. Speaker, is the accusation of the other side, that the opportunity for innovation equals cuts to availability and equal access.

After much personal research I have found that I agree with the position of the Alberta Medical Association. In their letter, as submitted on June 24, 2019, to the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills, the Alberta Medical Association states:

Bill 203 does not make substantive changes to the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act . . . [and] The adoption of Bill 203 would not, for example, change what the AMA already advises its members in terms of their provision . . . and payment of uninsured medical services.

In fact, according to the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta's letter, also submitted on June 24, 2019, to the standing committee, paraphrased: insured medical services are clearly identified in the schedule of medical benefits as outlined in the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. Physicians may charge privately for health services that are not included in the schedule. For example, they may charge for travel advice, immunizations, precare, nutrition, and when patients are uninsured. When charging privately, physicians must follow CPSA's standard of practice on charging for uninsured services. The standard of practice is based on their core principles, including clear principles such as a patient's ability to pay, adequate notice and transparency, equal access for all, professional obligation to provide urgently required services regardless of whether or not payment is possible.

Through reading these two letters and hearing from the professionals themselves, who are experts in their industries, we are left with only one conclusion, that this bill, in essence, does not achieve the key objectives of increasing access to services or decreasing wait times. I find it perplexing that this wasn't brought forward in the four years that that member sat as part of the government, instead bringing it forward now. It addresses fee structures related to block billing and membership fees to boutique clinics, of which there seem to be only 10 operating in Alberta, based on the presentation of the Parkland Institute representative. This represents an overwhelmingly small minority of services in our health care system. It is not, then, able to increase access to services or effectively combat wait times. Rather, this bill is a prime example of ideologically driven policy-pushing that does little to effectively address the issues that Albertans care about. This government has already made the standing commitment to public health care that Albertans needed to see in order to elect us seven months ago.

Bill 203 seems to be an excessive response in an attempt to address a problem that, again in the words of the Parkland Institute representative – I quote directly – may or may not even be a problem; we just don't know. Unquote. Therefore, we now have a bill that ostensibly introduces additional red tape to the health care system. Red tape, by definition, is the excessive bureaucracy or adherence to rules and formalities, especially in public business, with no added benefit. From what we've heard today and read today, I think we've found a new project for the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction should this bill be passed.

What we do know is that Alberta's population is changing, the demographics are changing, medical technology is changing, and the demand for access and availability of new treatments is changing. Given this dynamic and shifting expectation, we need legislation that increases the flexibility and responsiveness of our public system so that more people get seen sooner. These are everyday Albertans' top objectives, and they must be ours. We cannot be deterred from that primary aim. We have kept our commitments to Albertans first and continue to serve their very best interests rather than pushing ideological issues in this House that may or may not exist.

Further than that, we must respect and acknowledge the input of professionals who work directly in Alberta's health care field. Their recommendations, suggestions, and experiences need to be the driving force behind our policies, not theoretical situations and what-if scenarios built around a different perception of the reality we face in this province as Albertans. The main thing here is to keep the main thing the main thing, and this requires our absolute discipline and focus in any health care legislation brought forward in this House. That is why it is my recommendation and will be my vote not to proceed with Bill 203.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West has the call.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to go back to the reason why we are in the House right now. On a motion for concurrence, which allows the bill to go forward – for the benefit of the dozens of people watching at home, I'm just going to explain a little bit about how this process is supposed to work. That is to say, private members can put forward their priority outside of the normal workings of Executive Council, Mr. Speaker. What's Executive Council? It's the cabinet. Generally speaking, the cabinet priorities are set by the cabinet Agenda and Priorities Committee or some semblance of that in concert with the Premier's office. What private members' business allows people to do is that people who are not in cabinet on both sides of the House can put forward their priorities and their ideas. We do this through both motions and through actual bills.

Now, back in the day – and get ready for, you know, an old-timey lecture because I've been around this place a long time – Ralph Klein did a lot of things that a lot of people decried as undemocratic. He cancelled one year, in 1997, the fall sitting, and a lot of people lost their minds. I remember being pretty young and attending a protest about that. But he always let private members' business go forward. Always. Why? Because Klein was always managing his caucus. Not everyone can be in cabinet. He had a number of pretty powerful, especially rural, MLAs that were not necessarily in cabinet, and he had to manage their priorities, too. Certainly, we saw private members' business come forward, and that was one of the ways that he sort of let the air out of the balloon and allowed caucus to express itself and allowed caucus some power instead of concentrating everything in the Premier's office.

But, you know, this new Premier comes from a very different management style, learned at the feet of Stephen Harper, where the boys in short pants in the centre control everything. That's where we're at right now, and I think it's an interesting point, that taking away that voice of private members takes away a valuable political tool for the Premier's office. If I were a private member on the other side, I would be worried that I was not able to put forward my own priorities and the priorities of my constituents.

3:30

You know, sometimes, Mr. Speaker, back in the day the parties used to even sometimes agree on private members' business. I know that's a wild assertion, but I remember once the New Democrat opposition bringing forward a private member's bill on flaring. At that time there were a bunch of technological changes that had taken place, and the companies and the ERCB at the time also in the main concurred that we could have new regulatory limits on flaring. The government actually adopted that, the New Democrat opposition private member's bill, as a government business bill. That is also the kind of stuff that can happen, and we can actually do what oftentimes our constituents want us to do, which is not yell at each other all the time. But that is also being taken away.

I think what's interesting about this manoeuvre – and we're talking about the motion for concurrence here; we're not talking about the substance of the bill, so I think it's really interesting that the members of the government caucus have focused on the substance of the bill. That's why they're not voting on the motion for concurrence. If they don't like the bill, they should let it come to the floor of this House and vote it down like PC governments since time immemorial did with the opposition business. This is a very straightforward process, and it happens on Monday afternoons. Welcome to the Legislature. This isn't difficult.

They could do that, but this isn't about, actually – and here I will even just add to what my colleagues from Edmonton-Centre and Edmonton-Rutherford talked about. This actually isn't necessarily about managing the opposition. This isn't necessarily, in the first instance, about stifling this side of the House. It has that practical effect. But in the first instance – here's the thing. On public health care I will still leave this Chamber and at every available opportunity express my support for a single-payer medicare system that is consistent with the principles of the Canada Health Act. The same cannot be said for many of the backbenchers in this House on the government side. I will still, after I leave this debate, at every available opportunity stand up for a woman's right to choose. At every available opportunity I will stand up for reproductive freedom, for individual liberty, and for women across this province and indeed across this country. I have no problem doing that. I'll do it here. I'll do it there. I'll go everywhere that anyone will have me. I will make that pro-choice argument.

It is not so on the government side of the House that necessarily that is an opinion that is even in the majority held. Certainly, their opinions, which are offside of mainstream opinion in this province: the Premier's office probably does not want those sorts of views aired via private members' business, and that is why they have made the changes that they have so that all private members' business gets stifled. This particular process and the point at which in the process we find ourselves now is not about controlling the opposition; it's about controlling the government side of the caucus and the Premier's office controlling their own MLAs. If I were a private member, I would be worried about this. I would worry about the arrogance, the hubris that this implies because, in fact, it is stunning. It is breathtaking. Even the massive majorities enjoyed by Ralph Klein did not have to undertake this level of control of the backbench.

At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, this is in the long line of other changes that we've made to this House that essentially are used to control members. It has the practical effect of, of course, controlling the opposition, but it is in the main about controlling their own caucus. It will be up to private members on the other side of the House to consider over time whether their own privilege as a member is being curtailed by power being controlled in such a centralized fashion by the Premier's office.

These sorts of things have a way of cracking over time, and I will make the prediction today that that level of control will not always be enjoyed by this Premier's office and not always be enjoyed by a small group of staffers and insiders who are directing the government's agenda. At some point backbenchers, private members, in this government caucus will want to stand up because their local priorities will not be met through such an approach and the local voices that they were sent here to reflect will not have expression in this House.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka has risen to speak.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief here. First of all, let me say that I will be supporting the motion for concurrence. This bill has been sent to committee. It was researched. It was studied. This motion to somehow take health care to somewhere else that the NDP wanted is not something that the committee recommended that we support.

Quite frankly, I find it tiring that the NDP continually wrap themselves in some kind of mantle as if they're the champions of health care. They aren't, and history proves that. They really don't tell the full truth when it comes to this story. They were not the first to bring comprehensive health care to this province or to this country, for that matter, and although they want to claim that all the time, the truth is that they weren't. Like everything else that socialists – the left never lets the truth matter in reconstructing history or twisting a story for their own purpose. The UFA introduced comprehensive health care to Alberta long before Saskatchewan did, long before the NDP were in existence.

I'd just like to quote a bit of a paragraph from the Legislative Assembly produced The Centennial Series, The Mantle of Leadership, page 392.

... The Alberta Health Insurance Act, which established a Health Insurance Commission.

This, by the way, was under the premiership of Premier Reid of the United Farmers of Alberta.

The Commission established local medical districts and collected health-insurance funding from municipalities, employers and private citizens in order to cover the costs of medical, dental and prescription services for Albertans. Notably, this Act represented the first government-legislated insurance program devoted exclusively to health [care] and entitled every resident of a medical district to "receive without charge" necessary health-service benefits, including hospitalization, nursing services, surgery, dental treatment, laboratory services and medicines.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the NDP act as if they're the only ones who care about health care in this province. They act as if they were the originators and the creators of it. The truth of the matter is that they copied what the United Farmers of Alberta already had in place many years before they actually got onboard to do it. Just like they claim to be supporters of pipelines and, in fact, they aren't, they claim to be the champions of health care. The truth of the matter is that Albertans actually had this vision a long time before they arrived, before they started showing up, and Albertans don't really need the NDP claiming some sort of superior righteousness just because they copied a good idea that Albertans introduced way before them. I suspect that the NDP actually got the idea from the United Farmers of Alberta.

Here's a party, the United Farmers of Alberta, that was opposed to the colonial, liberal powers of Ottawa continually trying to take from our province and give nothing back. The biggest challenge of the day was to get our resources under Alberta's control, which the same Premier did, Premier Reid. He's the one who also introduced health care in a comprehensive sense to Canada. The United Farmers of Alberta stood up for this, stood up for Albertans. They cared for the health care of their people. They cared for Albertans. The United Conservatives of today also represent united Albertans, and we're going to do the same regardless of what these members say.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

3:40

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to indicate why I will not be supporting this motion that this bill, private member's Bill 203, not be debated in the House. I want to go back to what Bill 203, introduced by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, actually says because we've heard some comments from the members on the government side that seem to reflect that they have not read the bill and are not actually familiar with what the content of the bill is about. The bill was intended to prohibit the charging of block fees, and the reason for this is because there are a number of I believe they're referred to as concierge clinics that are currently operating in Alberta that charge block membership fees to individuals seeking service from that clinic. Now, these clinics offer a combination of both insured and uninsured services. The concern, of course, is that it is a violation of our health care act as well as the Canada Health Act for physicians to charge for insured services. The concern is that these block fees run in different amounts, usually multiple thousands of dollars, for an individual to be charged a membership fee to even access services from the clinic.

The concern is that in obtaining those services from that clinic, that individual may receive both uninsured and insured services. By charging a block fee, it's difficult, actually impossible, to tell whether or not what's being charged for is insured or uninsured services. Of course, one is a violation of our legislation, and the other is not. It was actually raised quite well by the stakeholders that were invited to speak to the committee on this matter. In fact, one of those stakeholders, who was representing the Parkland Institute, the executive director of the Parkland Institute, gave a very good explanation as to why this is a concern, because there actually is very little information that is accessible and is transparent about how those fees are being charged and who is charging for them.

Now, we did also have a member from the ministry, the legal counsel for the ministry, speak to the fact that, yes, there is – I note that the Member for Lethbridge-East did raise this – a standard that the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta has which says they cannot charge for insured services. The problem is that there's no information as to whether or not any physician has been held accountable under those standards for actually charging for insured services. In fact, what actually came out during our discussion in the committee was that it's very clear that not only can they not be told who is charging them, but really who is charging those fees is often the accounting departments of those concierge clinics. The concern, of course, is that those people are not held accountable to the standards set by the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta for charging for insured services.

The reason I bring all of this up is because Bill 203 is meant to address an actual problem. There is an actual problem that is being addressed by this bill, which is that by setting up an upfront membership fee for individuals who are seeking access from the clinic, they are – and it's right now not transparent. It can't be determined whether or not those clinics are actually charging for insured services, which we don't support in this province. Now, we can get into rhetoric about whether they should or should not, but when, for example, the Member for Airdrie-East stands up and talks about how this is stifling innovation, it shows to me that she actually hasn't read the bill because the bill has nothing to do with innovation. It has to do about when these fees can be charged. Really, the intent of the bill is to say that charging for uninsured services should only happen after the fact, should only happen after it has been determined that the individual who has sought service from the clinic has received an uninsured service and therefore should be and can be charged for it. This bill was actually intended to address a very real problem, and we had information from the stakeholders who presented to the committee about that problem.

Now, certainly, we could have a debate about whether or not this bill adequately addresses that issue, if more information is necessary, but the point is that that should be a debate before this Assembly. The merits of the bill should be open for debate by the members. By not even allowing for a debate on the merits of the bill to take place in this Assembly, essentially what my colleagues on this side of the House have been saying is true: we are stifling democracy.

Now, I actually just came from attending a three-day seminar in Victoria with a couple of my colleagues here from the House. The Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville was there as well as the Speaker, and we had an excellent conversation about debate in the House and how we can improve the quality, decorum, and civility of debate in the House. One of the things we discussed was how that works differently in situations where there might be a minority government, a majority government, however the case may be. One of the comments I made while I was there, which was that when we're in a situation – and it was actually quite interesting to hear the experiences of parliamentarians from other jurisdictions talk about how the situation is different when it's a minority versus majority government and how that somehow affects the quality of the debate. One of the comments that I made was that we are in a situation in Alberta where there is a clear majority, and we see that. It's obvious in the numbers that there are many more members on the government side than there are on the opposition side.

What that means is that we know that on matters of votes, we are going to lose. We know that. The members on the opposition are aware of that. But we also still have an obligation to the constituents that we represent because each of us members here do reflect the majority of the constituents in our ridings, and we have an obligation to still stand up and express those views. Because we live in a democracy where majority gets to form government, it does not mean that the minority is silenced and does not mean that those who have differing views do not have a right to have those views expressed. That is our obligation, and that is the obligation of every member: to express the views of their constituents. So when we get into this House, yes, we are very aware that the government members have a majority and will either vote down whatever the opposition brings forward or will vote in support of what they bring forward, but that is not the sole purpose of our Assembly. It is not simply to outnumber each other and have winners and losers; it is also actually to debate the merits of things and to express those ideas.

We have no doubt on this side of the House that when the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford brought forward this very valid and legitimate bill, it would likely be voted down because we don't have the numbers. Absolutely, that's true. Nobody is disputing that. But that doesn't mean that there's no validity to bringing those views forward. In fact, if we think of democracy as beyond just a winner-take-all situation – which is what we should be doing, which is why we have the Westminster system of democracy – to have that exchange of ideas and to find out opportunities to improve the legislation and improve our policies, we should be taking that. That is also the purpose of this Assembly, to have that fulsome debate about the ideas and about the issues. Would we win? Of course we wouldn't. We don't have the numbers. But that doesn't mean that we can't still have that debate, and we should still feel obligated when we're in this House to have that debate.

When we were in committee on this matter in the summer session, I recall that there were a number of comments from the government members around the fact that Bill 203 as proposed by my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford wouldn't solve all the woes in our health care system, wouldn't solve the wait times situation, wouldn't solve queue-jumping. But we also were aware that our health care system has a lot of challenges. No government to date has been able to fix all of those challenges. But to say that we won't make efforts to improve it simply because it won't erase all problems with it would be an exercise in futility in our government. For example, we see a lot of bills that we actually support on this opposition side that are being brought forward by government that won't fix the problems, but they will certainly address some of the weaknesses or noted gaps in our system.

I will give an example of even a couple of bills that have been brought up in this session. I mean, we have private member's Bill 202 around the changes to the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, allowing individuals to report to police if there is a situation of child abuse. That's not going to end child abuse in this province, but we support it. We believe that that is a measure that could improve the situation, so we support it. We still consider that, and we still give light to it. We still debate it. We still discuss it because it will hopefully make the system better. Similarly, this government has recently introduced what's known as Clare's law, Bill 17, I believe. That's going to allow survivors of violence to be able to get information about their partner's criminal history, perhaps to help inform them. It might help them make decisions about whether or not they need to take some action in their personal relationship. Is that going to solve the problem of domestic violence? No, unfortunately, it's not. I wish there was one piece of legislation that could do that. But it still is a valid and important action to take, to take some improvement measures on the very serious issue of domestic violence.

I was disheartened when I was in committee to hear government members say that we shouldn't go forward with Bill 203 simply because it wouldn't resolve all problems with our health care system. It is intended to and would resolve one obvious problem which has been identified by stakeholders.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

I see the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler with about three minutes to go.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to have this opportunity to rise and speak today to Bill 203, An Act to Protect Public Health Care. I think the name of this bill itself would seem to suggest that public health care is somewhat in jeopardy in Alberta, and I just would say that's certainly not the case. We're bound by the Canada Health Act: universal, accessible, and publicly funded.

I guess we're kind of running out of time, Mr. Speaker. I would say that what Albertans told us at the doors when we were campaigning is that we need to do better. Wait times have gone up for cataracts, for knees, for hip replacements under the opposition's watch the last four years, and we need to focus on outcomes.

I'd leave the members here with a quote from the Auditor General from 2017.

Albertans already pay for the most expensive health system of any province in Canada . . . Yet they receive results that lag the results being achieved by the best-performing health systems in other jurisdictions.

Albertans are paying for the best. Why would they not demand the best?

It's time for this House to focus on real-world health care outcomes. That's what Albertans expect and deserve. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? There is about a minute left. The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's interesting here. I know there's not a lot of time left, but it's interesting how obsessed the government members are with not listening to Albertans, not listening to the opposition, not debating the issues, and defending American-style health care. They could have that opportunity.

In a couple of minutes here they could have the opportunity to defend American-style health care all they want. They could get up and debate that. All they have to do is vote against concurrence. Let us do our jobs and talk about why we want or don't want American-style health care here in this province.

The government members have done quite a bit of talking about American-style health care already today, so I know they have opinions about it. I know that they have thoughts about it and thoughts about how using these American-style systems and American-style health care is going to benefit Alberta, so they have that opportunity to get up and speak to those right now. They can vote with the opposition. They can vote to debate these issues, and we could have what we were sent here to do: debate under the parliamentary system.

We can have what our jobs are to actually do, to stand here and talk about why the government believes in American-style health care. That's what we're sent here to do. That's why we're all sitting in this Chamber right now. That's why thousands of Albertans in every single one of our ridings, tens of thousands of Albertans voted for every single one of us, so we can talk about why this government loves American-style health care, Mr. Speaker.

I hope that the members are going to be bold enough, brave enough, strong and free enough, Mr. Speaker, to get up and talk about the American-style health care that they love so much, the American-style health care that they are trying to bring here to this province, because they won't even get up and stand and let the opposition speak about the issues. That's something that I'm hopeful government members will be willing to get up and defend, because it is their baby. It is their intent.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-South, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides for up to five minutes for the mover to close debate, I would invite the chair of the Standing Committee on Public Bills and Private Members' Public Bills, the hon. Member for Calgary-West, to close debate on the motion to concur on the committee report on Bill 203.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, certainly, I would say, with robust debate between the opposition members and the government members, it certainly was great to see how some of the members on the government side, who were members of that standing committee, were able to certainly provide their perspective as to why they voted in the way that they did.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank everyone for their participation in this discussion and move forward to the vote. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for concurrence carried]

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 202

Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? I see the hon. Minister of Justice and Deputy Government House Leader has risen.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Chair, I move that we rise and report.

The Deputy Chair: Prior to that – going forward, perhaps.

Are there any members, though, who do wish to debate at this time?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The clauses of Bill 202 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Any opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader and Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Now I'd like to move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 202. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Schweitzer: Well, Mr. Speaker, somebody can always throw a shoe at me if I mess up some of the procedural stuff on this. It wouldn't be the first time. I'd like to ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 8 in order to proceed to immediate consideration of third reading for Bill 202.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 202

Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak on this?

I'm looking to the hon. Member for Calgary-West to move third reading of Bill 202.

Mr. Ellis: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I guess you start third reading; is that correct, sir?

The Acting Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Ellis: Yes. Okay. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker, it certainly has been an honour and a privilege. This has been a long – it certainly feels like a couple of years, to be honest with you, that I've been working on this. I mean, this particular case is, you know, what sort of started this whole process in regard to Bill 202: poor young Serenity. Sadly, her life was taken from us.

Just to, I guess, talk a little bit historically, Mr. Speaker, I certainly sat in this Chamber, and I think everybody here would agree that when we're talking about children, it would be considered nonpartisan. Certainly, the allegations, shall we say, the medical report that came out of this particular case: I don't think anybody can argue that they weren't horrific, and they're certainly something that we wouldn't wish upon anyone, let alone a small child.

I know that there was a committee that was formed and recommendations that came out of the committee. I consider that – we'll call it a positive step forward. I look at Bill 202 as something that is tangible, that can have an actual, immediate impact. We talk about a bill that – you've got to forgive me, Mr. Speaker; I'm somewhat paraphrasing. When we're talking about a child whose life might possibly be at risk, we're not talking about a child that might be in the backyard or something like that of some home. We're talking about cases where these children are on, literally, the verge of death. I think it's important to know that the current process was that you're to report the situation to a director. I think that we've been able to articulate that. Certainly, for me, in the past – and I think many of the members in here in second reading were also able to articulate that – that's not as simple as it sounds, the question of: "How do I contact the director? Who is the director? How could that be enforced if you didn't call a director?"

Obviously, with my consultation with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police at the time and certainly stakeholders – I've talked to defence attorneys, as an example, and, of course, the family that was involved in the Serenity case, meaning the mom and her family members, about that if we do of course pass this through third reading, it will let everyone in Alberta know, or every adult, should I say, that no longer can anyone turn a blind eye to a child that might possibly be at risk, that indeed you have a fiduciary responsibility to let the police know about that child at risk. It may come across to many as a small change, but it's actually a fundamentally huge change, and it allows a level of accountability that, sadly, was never there before. I think it was somewhat implied in the legislation, but, like I said, the ability to certainly apply the reasonable and probable grounds, let alone prove beyond a reasonable doubt, was certainly challenging and, I would say, very unlikely, hence why no charge had ever been laid under that particular act in circumstances that most of the public would think would be warranted. This, again, allows a whole level of accountability and, again, lets everyone, every adult in Alberta, know that no longer can you turn a blind eye to a child at risk.

Mr. Speaker, this journey has gone on for, again, quite some time, and I don't think it's important to rehash the highs and the lows and the left turns and the right turns, but for me it's important to – where are we today? I'm very optimistic where we are today. I thank everyone in the House, including the opposition, for allowing the unanimous consent to even go to third reading on this. I sincerely do thank you, and it's certainly not my intent to point fingers. To me, that's not what politics is about. I mean, I look at when I got involved in this five years ago, if not longer. I looked at: how is it that we can make positive changes for our community and actually have an impact on the community? I was very fortunate to be able to do that with Bill 205.

Certainly, talking to my friends and my former colleagues in the Calgary Police Service, talking to doctors, they've indicated that possibly Bill 205, certainly using it to take opioids off the streets and get the pill presses off the streets has actually likely saved a lot of lives, probably lives that we may never know about. Here we are again with this particular bill to let everyone in Alberta know that you cannot turn a blind eye to a child at risk. Again, maybe it allows that voice, we'll say, in the back of someone's mind to say: "You know what? I'm going to have to let the authorities know about a particular case." I'll make the same argument that I made under Bill 205 several years ago, which was that if we can save even just one life – right? – I mean, it makes it worth it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that many of my colleagues that I'm very fortunate to have worked with have some very kind words that they would like to say. I know that Serenity's family – you know, I've had an opportunity to even talk to them not that long ago, actually, out front on the steps of this Legislature as we were supporting children in care in these types of situations. Whether they get the justice that they would like – I mean, that obviously is debatable, and that's certainly something that's going to be up to the justice system in the courts. But through the conversations that I've had with them, I would argue that what isn't debatable is the fact that this family doesn't want to see anything like this happen again to another child in a similar type of circumstance. I think that was a message that they were very, very clear to me about. We'll call it a bit of a legacy that they would like to leave. I'm very proud that Bill 202 is commonly referred to as Serenity's law because I think that this is something that Serenity's mother can look at and be proud of.

In my conversations with her, Mr. Speaker, she's the first one to admit that she's not perfect – I don't think there's anybody that's in this Chamber that is perfect; I don't think that there's anybody that I've ever met that is perfect – but I can tell you that this is a lady who's very smart. She had overcome addictions and other, I would say, posttraumatic issues that she faced in her life. That's part of the reason why Serenity and her two siblings were taken from her. But I can tell you that in the conversations that I've had with her, whether it be on the phone or in person, I've seen nothing but a loving, caring mother who has other children, more than three. She actually has several children. She wants nothing but the best for them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Just a small procedural note. I believe I missed it, so I apologize for that. I just wanted to confirm that you're moving third reading of Bill 202.

Mr. Ellis: Yes.

The Acting Speaker: Yes. Okay.

Are there any members wishing to speak to third reading of Bill 202? I see that the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville has risen.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm honoured to rise in the House and speak on Bill 202, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019. Children are the leaders of tomorrow. They should be loved, cared for, and given a safe home to grow up in. I believe children are the greatest gift that life can provide. They bring us innocence and joy to our daily lives. Today our tragic reality is that many children end up in a situation that exposes them to being abused, being taken advantage of, or affected by violence. This is a situation that I would hope no child would experience. However, this seems to be, unfortunately, the reality that some vulnerable children in Alberta are faced with.

Bill 202 will make necessary changes to existing legislation in order to protect children and youth who are affected by abuse and acts of violence. It will make adults more accountable to the children who desperately need help. A world where individuals would prefer to be bystanders instead of standing up for a child in distress is disappointing. I cannot understand as to why someone would not jump in and stand up for a child who could not stand up for themselves. This legislation will penalize those bystanders who witness a child's distress and choose to turn a blind eye. Further, this bill will add that adults are required to contact police and will create more substantial penalties for failing to report. This will make a difference in children's and youths' lives. Having a requirement to report these situations can give a child a chance before it's too late.

It will amend legislation in order to promote our best efforts to protect Alberta's children and youth thoroughly, effectively addressing the prosecution of those who commit these unthinkable acts. By having stronger penalties, it will further our stance that this is not a crime that will be taken lightly and that there are consequences. Bill 202 will be a large step forward in keeping adults accountable for their actions.

To stand up for vulnerable youth is a tremendous task. I stand here today being the voice of those who have fallen victim to acts of violence and abuse, to stand up for those who cannot stand up for themselves, who are scared and young. We can promise children and youth of this province that we are taking steps to be their voice and that we care about them. They do not deserve these cruel acts committed upon them. Worse, they especially do not deserve anyone not standing up for them afterwards. Our young people need to be encouraged and to feel valued, not neglected and abused.

Legislation like this is important in promoting a stronger and safer Alberta. It is dear to me that the young people of Alberta are treated fairly and respectfully. No child should be a victim of abuse and violence. We as a government need to be accountable to the children who have been exposed to these hideous acts. We need to stand strong to show Albertans that these acts of violence towards our young people will not be tolerated. It is unacceptable for anyone to turn a blind eye to children in danger.

This bill will ensure children do not get left behind and neglected in their desperate times of need. It will be clear to Albertans that there are considerable consequences for their abuse towards children. This legislation has the potential to save children's lives. Together we can give them a safer today so that they can prosper tomorrow. After all, extending a helping hand to those who cannot help themselves is what adults should be doing for children all the time.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon has risen.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to be able to rise today and speak to Bill 202, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-West for bringing this to the attention of this Legislature. Child protection has been a core commitment of all Canadian governments, including our federal government, for a great deal of time. I think that we can see historically that this has been a bipartisan effort to improve child protection. It does not know a left wing or a right wing. We all understand the need to protect our children.

We have passed legislation and signed agreements both provincially and internationally. We signed the United Nations convention on the rights of the child in 1990, and with the ratification of this convention by our Parliament in 1991 and by almost the rest of the entire world, child safety has been brought into the public awareness and has become a major issue. This is a good thing. Article 19 of that convention requires that parties take appropriate legislative action to protect children from abuse, neglect, violence, and other dangerous situations. Article 19 specifically includes protective measures which should be implemented to ensure the necessary protection of children in dangerous situations.

Mr. Speaker, specifically, this convention requires countries to adopt measures that will support the identification and the reporting and the referral of children in cases of mistreatment and abuse.

Although Canada certainly has more stringent standards than are found in some places around the world, we should and are continuing to strive to improve and to fill the gaps in our current legal framework and to ensure that our legislation reflects real-world circumstances and instances.

There have been several high-profile cases, which have been brought up by many of our colleagues as we've debated this bill, which show that the reporting requirements within our current legislation could use some enhancement. We need to send the message that failing to report child abuse is unacceptable in Alberta. If there is a child who needs help, it must be reported, and we need to ensure that it is clear to Albertans to whom they can report these cases.

Mr. Speaker, as a teacher I learned very early in my career that nothing – absolutely nothing – was more important than the safety and the security of the children that we taught. This piece of legislation dovetails very nicely with what we were taught as professionals, as educators. Curriculum was important. Doing all the things, the myriad of jobs, that I as an educator had to do every day was important, but nothing was more important than the safety and the security of the children. If it ever came to my attention that a child was at risk, I had no choice, rightfully so, but to make sure that the appropriate authorities were informed.

This bill simply adds clarity to the existing reporting process that Albertans can use to ensure that children are safe within our province. It clarifies the process by allowing Albertans to report children who are in danger to police and by requiring those police officers to report the case to a director, and it will toughen the existing punitive measures for those individuals who are aware of a child in danger and who choose not to report that situation. The importance of reporting when children are in a dangerous situation cannot be overstated. It truly cannot.

Albert Einstein once said: the world is a dangerous place, not because of those who do evil but because of those who look on and do nothing. Mr. Speaker, I can remember being in my classroom and looking at the rise of the Holocaust and looking at some absolutely terrible historical examples of how people have had their rights taken away from them and where they have ultimately paid the ultimate price, their lives, and I had a quote very similar to this on my wall. You know, it's one thing for people who are evil to do evil; it's another thing for good people to stand on the sidelines and say nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to be able to speak to this bill today, that makes it very clear – it sets a standard for Albertans – that when we are confronted with children that are in danger, we do not have a choice. We must intervene, and there is a clear process for doing so. If we do not know who a director is, then we simply need to pick up the phone and call the local police. By doing that, we can get the process kicked into gear. When Albertans see children in dangerous situations and when they report these situations, they save lives.

Mr. Speaker, I can remember reading in the newspaper about a babysitter in 2017 who did exactly that. She was asked to babysit, and when she went into the home, she realized that the children that were there were living in a dangerous situation, that they faced neglect, and that they were abused. This babysitter had the courage to inform the authorities about this situation. This babysitter reported the conditions that led to five children receiving treatment at the Stollery children's hospital. The accused pleaded guilty to two counts of aggravated assault and to a count of forcible confinement. Without the report from this babysitter, these children may have been left in that situation.

It's simple. Reporting saves lives, saves the lives of our children, and this bill makes it easier for Albertans to report. With the standards in this bill, more people will look on and will take action instead of remaining bystanders, and that will make Alberta a less dangerous place for our children.

Mr. Speaker, today we work to change the existing legislation. It's one of the privileges that we have in this House. There are 87 of us in this House, 87 people that have been enshrined by our constituents with the privilege of being able to speak to the laws of this province and to be able to make changes to the laws of this province. This is a bill today that deserves the support of this Legislature. We have the capacity today by our votes and by our talk to be able to make lives better for the children of this province. With the standards in this bill, people will be able to identify how to take action.

Today we change the existing legislation, or at least we have that opportunity to, so that when Albertans are aware that children are in danger, they know exactly where they can report them. They can go directly to the police. This bill doesn't take away the option to report to the director, but it adds a very clear alternative, and that alternative is reporting to the police. Every Albertan knows how to contact the police. I believe that it's a reasonable thing to say that not every Albertan would necessarily know how to contact a director, whoever that happens to be.

Thank you.

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, it is a complete honour to rise in this House today to speak to Bill 202, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-West for bringing this very important piece of legislation forward. In the past I've had a very unique opportunity to have many discussions with the Member for Calgary-West about this piece of legislation, and I'm very happy to stand up and support this bill. I also want to say that his passion for protecting our province's most vulnerable is really humbling, and I'm really happy to be able to contribute to this very important debate.

This bill really should mean something to each and every one of us. We've all seen the consequences of inaction, and we've all seen some of the most vulnerable in our communities fall through the cracks. I think that with this bill, inherently it's our responsibility to do everything we can to make sure that we don't have our most vulnerable falling through those cracks.

It never gets easier to witness new cases come forward or to remember old cases like Serenity's, that shook, in a lot of ways, the very foundation of our communities. It's our job as Albertans to take care of each other. We are generous, we are kind, and we're here to fight for our most vulnerable, and I believe that Bill 202 does exactly that. It helps us fight for our vulnerable.

It will never get easier seeing vulnerable children abused or mistreated, and I feel that we must act now if we wish to stop it. Acting now means knowing what abuse looks like. I think we're all aware of the most extreme forms of abuse and what it looks like. I think most everyone here would intervene immediately if they witnessed any such abuse, but in a lot of cases abuse rarely takes place in public. Children are taken advantage of and assaulted by those closest to them and in private, and it's a compounded tragedy that those who are trusted the most by children are sometimes the most likely to take advantage of that trust.

We need to be more aware of how abused children appear and behave as a result of that abuse. Beyond the obvious signs of physical abuse, children can become withdrawn, anxious, fearful. Physically abused children can change the way they dress to hide their injuries. They can be overdressed for the weather. Neglected children will have clothing that is ripped or torn or doesn't fit right or is dirty.

This bill is really important because it can stop and help stop the pattern of abusive behaviour for so many children. It empowers all Albertans to be able to say something. It empowers us to take responsibility for children who may be at risk, and that is a responsibility we all need to take very, very seriously.

It is heart-wrenching to think that families have had to experience this, that they put their trust into the system and in some cases for it to fail. We need to stand here today and do everything to make this right. We need to make sure that everyone is responsible for the care of the most vulnerable in our society. People need to act when they see children in danger.

I am pleased to see that this bill focuses on making it perfectly clear that we all have a responsibility to report this behaviour by increasing the penalty from $2,000 to $10,000 and with up to six months in prison, or both. I think this sends a very clear message. All Albertans need to know how serious this is and that we all have a part to take in this. They need to know that we have a duty to protect those who cannot protect themselves, and that is exactly what this bill aims to do. It says that we will not look away when we see these atrocities. It means that we will no longer be able to shrug off the responsibility to someone else.

Now, I would like to think that nobody would neglect to report if a child was in danger, so maybe there's something that we need to consider a little bit more, and I think that the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon kind of touched on that. We need to look at the system and why possibly in the past individuals wouldn't report or had difficulties reporting if a child was in need of intervention. Could the hesitation to report be due to a lack of knowledge on just how to do this?

When speaking to constituents from my area – I went home and actually had this conversation – and when I was talking to the Member for Calgary-West, we went through it and talked about who the director is. It wasn't really clear. Just talking to everybody in my area – friends, family, teachers, doctors – I asked them: do you know who the director is here? Most of them were confused. They were lost. They didn't know who the director was. They didn't realize that when it came to intervention, they had to report to a director.

If they're unaware of who a director is or how to get in touch with one, we're kind of putting barriers up on how to report. It kind of is restricting and slowing down the system. In a lot of ways, when a child is in need of intervention, they're in immediate danger, and I think that that is where the strength in this bill really is. It's making the information and the accessibility of reporting so much easier by clarification. It allows Albertans to report to those that they are already aware of and trust: police officers. That's simple. This legislation is allowing for another option to report to those that society already relies on in a time of danger.

I also think that by allowing people to report to police officers, we're really underlining the importance and the gravity of the situation itself as well. Police are here to protect us from danger. They're here through the most dangerous and life-threatening situations, which is exactly the point. These children are in hard situations. This is a situation of emergency for those children. Their lives could essentially be in danger, and we must treat it as such. It is an emergency.

This legislation has the potential to save lives. It has the potential to stop the trauma that rips through families, friends, and our communities when we fail to protect the most vulnerable in our province. This bill sends a powerful message to all Albertans that we are in this together, that we must rely on each other to protect the children in our communities, because it takes a community to raise a child.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I see the hon. Member for Airdrie-East has risen to speak.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise here today in third reading on Bill 202, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019. I don't have a lot to add to this conversation, but I just wanted to be on the record in third reading. I'm certain I've spoken in favour of this in second, and I would like to commend my hon. colleague from Calgary-West for pushing so hard on this issue over the last almost four and a half years that we've been in this Legislature. It's commendable, the amount of effort that the member continually puts into protecting children in this province.

One of the most unfortunate things about being in this position for the last number of years is hearing some of the worst cases of neglect, that most people never hear about, but we do in this Chamber, and we do in our constituency offices. They're sometimes so hopeless. Sometimes it's hard to be in a position where people think that you're able to actually make a difference and change the way that child abuse is viewed in this province and how we can go about sending a message for people to continue to report these things.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the reality is that everyone – everyone – if you ever asked them, "Hey, if you knew about a child being abused, would you report it?" they would say yes. But the reality is that that's not actually the case. I watched a video the other day. I was in this antibullying program that our swim club puts on for parents, and one of the videos that they put on was the Burger King commercial. Some of you might have seen it. There's a bunch of kids that are bullying this one kid in the Burger King, and nobody, no adult steps in to stand up for this child that's being bullied. Near the end there was one adult – one adult – I think, out of 10 that actually intervened and said, "Hey, are you okay, and can I help you?" and sort of scared away the bullying kids.

[The Speaker in the chair]

That's the reality that we're in, so it's so essential to make sure that you have to report. It's now a crime – if you've seen that, if you've witnessed that, you have to report this. It's so important to have this piece of legislation and to compel those to do the right thing. Sometimes you're just not sure: like, maybe you didn't see that, or maybe you're looking at this the wrong way. Well, guess what? That's not for you to decide anymore. That's for the authorities to do.

Mr. Speaker, that's all I have to add to this debate. I thank you for the opportunity to participate and to all my colleagues that have lent their voice to this cause and, hopefully, will write about this in their local papers to their constituents and send this out in their newsletters and just let people know that what we're doing in here are sometimes really great things. We're not just, you know, yelling at each other and disagreeing with one another. I think that all members in this House think this is an important piece of legislation that we're all going to be in favour of for our kids. It's one small piece, but it's one really, really big piece for a child who is in a situation that they have no control over.

With that, I will take my seat. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I see the hon. minister for the status of women rising to speak.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to again thank everyone who has spoken on this amendment and on the legislation, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019. I especially, again, would like to thank the Member for Calgary-West for his incredible work on this. All of us lived and breathed in this House during some of the hardest days when we heard some of the material that was happening when it came to Serenity. As a mom I found the discussions at that time to be life altering. I found that I looked at things differently very, very quickly. But, more than that, I found that it's very difficult, as we all know, when we're in crisis, when anybody you know is in crisis, in that situation. You could have literally the entire gamut of what you're supposed to do, who you're supposed to phone and who you're supposed to talk to, laid out directly in front of you, but because of the moment and the crisis and the situation it's very hard to even see straight at that moment.

When we talk about children especially, we have to have some very, very strong lines in the sand when it comes to prevention. I really think that this bill lays out a very, very strong sense of prevention, and the clarification with this amendment goes further to make sure that – because normally the first phone call will be to Children's Services, but we also have the opportunity to engage our police and our whole front line.

One of the things that I think is probably most profound in this legislation – and the member has actually already said this – is that this is a call of duty. All adults in the province and anybody who is a mentor or an advocate or anybody who works with children is on notice that we have a larger responsibility in the grand scheme of things.

You know, I've been very blessed in my lifetime. I've worked with a lot of children. I've been teaching music for probably 25, 26 years. You have all sorts of munchkins come to your studio, all sorts of different age groups, from different socioeconomic backgrounds, various families and everything, and after a little while you start to be able to see the way that kids develop. Music is one of those really personal things that's a beautiful way to be able to interact with young people, but it also is a very personal experience in a lesson. You're really, really entrusting your teacher to show your voice and to sing and to breathe. One of the most nerve-wracking things for a young person to do is to sing in front of somebody else. If any of you have ever tried to do that in front of people, or if you were asked to stand up and sing right now in front of somebody, you'd probably say no – right? – unless you're the Speaker of the House. He sings for us all the time. It's actually really nerve-wracking, and it's very, very personal.

A lot of emotions come out during those discussions. I know you wouldn't think that that's where it happens, but it does. A lot of what kids are going through and what they're feeling in that 45 minutes to an hour that I had the privilege of having them in my studio – you learn a lot about a kid. You learn a lot about a teenager. You learn a lot about what's going on in their families, and quite often they're very, very willing to share that information.

Fortunately, in the many years that I've been teaching, there have only been a couple of incidents where I've had to report, and I have had to report. It's a terrifying experience. It's terrifying to think that you are interpreting what it is that you think you're interpreting, and I think that for most of us, when we're in that situation, we want to believe the best in people and the best in parents and the caregivers and the people that are in charge of these kids, but in the few situations where I found myself in that situation, I really had to think about it. I had to think, like: "Am I doing the right thing? Am I intervening in a family situation where I don't belong?" All of those questions, even though I know better, were there. This clarification will explain.

As the Member for Airdrie-East has said, not only are we putting the adults in the province on notice that we have this responsibility, but actually as legislators we have this responsibility. We have the responsibility of sharing what we learn in here, how we legislate. We've done this all together in here, in opposition and in government, to make this legislation come to life, but more than that is that we're reporting on a regular basis not only the great work that we're doing but the immense responsibility that comes with a piece of legislation like this.

We have the opportunity to say to a perpetrator, to say to a person: "This is not going to happen. We see you. We see the kids. We see what's going on here. There will be consequences, and we will follow through." For a child that is in a situation of crisis like that, for a child that cannot speak up for himself or herself, this is a game changer, knowing, for families, that we are paying attention and that there will be consequences.

There's just no place for this abuse, for this level of cruelty, for neglect, for emotional abuse. There is no place for it. We cannot deviate from the fact that what we learned in some of the cases that we heard – and many of us are impacted by this in our constituency offices. To the Member for Airdrie-East I just wanted to say that I know how hard it is for her. She has a beautiful heart, and I know it's really hard for her to talk about these things. I know, for many of us in our areas, especially some of us who have some pretty remote rural areas, how difficult it is for people to come and report on these things. They need to know that we have the ability to make sure that we're making differences in people's lives.

To every parent and every adult: we are all on notice. We are all being given the opportunity to do right by the children of this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the time for consideration of this matter has concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Abortion and Reproductive Health Services

506. Ms Renaud moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to conduct a thorough review of access to abortion services and reproductive health services in Alberta, take action to remove barriers to these services, and ensure access to safe, timely, and equitable services in all communities across the province.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and to talk about Motion 506. It's hardly a surprise that sales of Margaret Atwood's 1985 dystopian book, The Handmaid's Tale, have spiked in recent years. In an interview she recently said that she believes the re-emergence and success of her novel is due to the bubbling up of regressive attitudes towards women, further adding that control of women and children has been a feature of every repressive political regime on the planet and throughout history.

The right of every human being to control their body is the most basic of human rights, yet we're surrounded by wealthy special-interest groups intent on removing and restricting those rights. By my count we have 28 UCP antichoice MLAs that have been elected. Let me rephrase that: 28 anti human rights MLAs. I'm sure that each of your offices has been bombarded by targeted e-mail campaigns from organized groups right across the country because that's what they do. Although we're not Alabama yet, the focus is clear. We now have a rabid antichoice Minister of Education and a Premier who's been fighting to remove and restrict the right of women to exercise freedom and control over their bodies and lives for decades. This new reality in Alberta is why I'm introducing this private member's motion.

In 1988 the Supreme Court of Canada recognized that a woman's right to continue or terminate a pregnancy is protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Let me be very clear here. Abortion is legally treated like any other medical procedure. Under the Canada Health Act health care must be accessible, portable, comprehensive, and publicly administered nation-wide, the key here being accessible and public. However, access to reproductive health care or abortion is restricted in Alberta due to extralegal factors, which are institutional policies – I'll talk about that a little bit later – the imposition of gestational limits; most importantly for me antichoice harassment and violence; the location of services.

I think we can all agree that there are cases in which our provincial government provides financial assistance to patients who must travel outside of their communities to access medical services. It's not that uncommon. I'm sure that if you looked around your own constituencies, you would find examples of that. Yet similar support does not exist for women forced to travel a great distance for reproductive health care. When I talk about reproductive health care, I'm not simply talking about abortion services or the prescription of Mifegymiso. Women are being forced to travel great distances, so unless they live in large urban centres like Edmonton or Calgary, their reality is very different. I would suggest that the support is not readily available to women because religious ideology, which has no place in our health care system or service delivery system, has been allowed to override that very same delivery system.

Here are some other disturbing facts. We know that access to reproductive health services such as abortion or birth control has declined in recent years because of harassment of practitioners. One example that was recently shared with me was a physician practising in the Grande Prairie area, and this particular physician had difficulty getting her patients time in the local hospital. Doctors are actually experiencing difficulty prescribing the medication because they need to have a backup plan – should that medication not work, they would need to go into the hospital – and they are not being given free, clear access. Unfortunately, sometimes women are showing up at these facilities and just lying and saying that they had a miscarriage. The lack of access to needed resources such as operating spaces is very problematic.

As of 2013 under 16 per cent of publicly funded hospitals provide procedures directly related to reproductive health care. That's dismal. In Alberta access to abortion is largely restricted to Calgary and Edmonton. In Edmonton we have Woman's Health Options, which is on 124th Street. What is really disturbing about that particular clinic is that kitty-corner to it on the very same street there is another clinic, and the signage out front is very much put there to trick people. People will literally go into that clinic. It is not a clinic that supports a woman's right to choose. In fact, it's a religiously driven, ideologically driven clinic that, in my opinion, shares information that is incorrect with women and urges them in one particular direction as opposed to offering them choices. In Calgary there are two providers: the Kensington clinic, and services are offered at the Peter Lougheed Centre.

Surgical abortion as a regular service is not offered at any other location in this province. That should worry us, all 87 of us in this place. Health care facilities in Cold Lake, Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, High Level, Hinton, Peace River, Slave Lake, and Whitecourt have the ob-gyn capacity to offer abortion services but choose not to.

In 2017 the NDP government took action to cover the cost of a Mifegymiso, a two-stage drug combination that induces medical abortion, but currently only two providers are listed by Alberta Health Services, and those are the Edmonton and Calgary clinics. Access to this drug is not universal, again underlining the failure of our delivery system. You might be interested to know that in 2018 Mifegymiso has been used, or was prescribed and used, 1,528 times.

Access to reproductive health services in rural and remote communities in Alberta is dismal, with virtually zero access in rural north. The limitations of access to reproductive health services has a greater and potentially much more harmful impact on women in rural and remote communities. Interestingly, in 2015 polling data from Lethbridge College suggested that there is a supermajority of support across all demographic groups in Alberta for abortion as a personal choice, with 80.5 per cent overall support and 56.3 per cent among religious Albertans.

So why am I bringing forward this motion? I'm bringing it forward because I believe in human rights, and I believe the right of a woman to control her body and her future is the most fundamental and important right that she has. It doesn't matter why women make those choices, and women should never be forced to share those stories, those very personal stories about why they did. Whether it was about their health, whether it was about economics, whether it was about their age, it really doesn't matter. Chances are you know somebody that has had an abortion: your mom, your sister, your daughter, your wife, your grandmother.

I am urging this government to put their religious ideology aside and examine how we can all ensure that women have equal access to the broad range of reproductive health services. As lawmakers we need to look at the facts and the laws within which we operate. The Canada Health Act states that health care must be accessible, portable, comprehensive, and publicly administered. Each one of us represents thousands of constituents. Their safety and access must trump your personal religious beliefs. It's your responsibility to protect the most basic human rights of your constituents. I look forward to the debate, and I look forward to hearing what everyone has to say.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak against the motion proposed by the Member for St. Albert, not only due to my own personal convictions but also because the motion is unnecessary and only seeks to create division. I am not here today to debate the merits or morality of abortion. That would involve a very lengthy, convoluted, and emotional discussion. It is my personal conviction that all human life is sacred and should be protected. I am unapologetically and unreservedly pro life and my constituents were aware of this when they sent me to this place.

I imagine that everyone here has their own opinion on abortion and for their own unique reasons, but I'm not here to criticize the opinions of others. In fact, I'm proud to be a member of a caucus that recognizes the myriad of ways that one can approach this topic. We are all entitled to our own beliefs. I respect the Member for St. Albert's right to her opinion, and in return I hope that she and her colleagues would respect mine. That is democracy after all. But my hopes that the hon. member will do that, Mr. Speaker, are quite low because time and time again I have seen her and her colleagues take aim at me and my other colleagues for not falling in lockstep with their ideology.

Over the course of the provincial election I was made a target time and time again by the NDP and their proxy groups simply for associating with individuals who are openly pro life. They took aim at my Christian faith and tried to imply that I would be an unfit legislator because of it. NDP candidates actively took shots at me on Twitter for my own personal views on this matter, and after we leave this Chamber, they'll likely continue their campaign of fear and smear. If they do, that would just be par for the course, I'm afraid. In fact, they'll probably advocate that I can't be an advocate for women because I refuse to subscribe to their ideology.

This past weekend we proudly celebrated Persons Day and a woman's right to vote for who represents her in this House. Now, correct me if I'm wrong, but there's no caveat in there about what kind of women ought to be allowed to run based on their personal moral convictions. It is simply recognized that women have a voice that is needed in public discourse and consequently deserves to be heard. To assume that a woman elected to this House cannot act in the best interest of the public and at arm's length of their own personal convictions is reductionist, and it actually runs counter to the feminist narrative that they so aptly will claim as their own. It undermines the mandate that Albertans granted this government, and it calls into question the competence of women who have fought very hard to be here today.

I stand here today to not only give a voice to the voiceless, the unborn, but also to the many Albertans and Albertan women who do not fall in lockstep with that former government's ideology. During the election and in my nomination I met with countless young families, women, girls, men, and everyone in between. Many of them hold similar views like the ones that I do. These Albertans are compassionate. They give generously to agencies for mothers experiencing a crisis pregnancy. They support families. They objectively and without judgment counsel young women, praying for them and giving them shelter and other necessities. They set up programs and centres that help young mothers get back on their feet no matter their choice. They work to make life better for women and families in times of great need. These Albertans do not deserve to be vilified, Mr. Speaker; they deserve to be heard.

I'm a young woman, and as such I do take women's health very seriously. Many women struggle with real reproductive health-related issues, many of which go undiagnosed or are dismissed by medical practitioners entirely. Endometriosis, for example, impacts 10 to 15 per cent of women of reproductive age, yet it is one of the most commonly misdiagnosed or underdiagnosed gynecological conditions. The same is true for polycystic ovary syndrome. In fact, 6 to 10 per cent of women are expected to suffer from this disease, and one of those women is me.

The symptoms of PCOS are somewhat of a mystery, which lends itself to underdiagnosis, and many doctors don't know how to treat it. Some of the symptoms are physical and visible, but many of them are not. Many of these symptoms in combination can actually end up resulting in infertility. For someone like me, who has always dreamed of becoming a mother of a not yet determined but hopefully very large gaggle of kids, the thought of infertility is absolutely crippling. There have been instances where my concerns weren't taken seriously, where I've been told to tough out my pain or that I was making things sound worse than they actually were.

Mr. Speaker, I want women to access health care. I want them to be taken seriously. I believe that women's health is paramount to the longevity of a thriving Alberta. Imagine a couple who is trying to conceive but are having no luck, so they decide to pursue the costly procedure of IVF, except it takes months to get an appointment with a specialist. In 2018 the Royal Alexandra hospital right here in Edmonton decided to stop providing IVF services, causing hundreds of patients to seek new referrals to specialists at other clinics. To imply that I or any other member on this side of the House does not care about women or their health, that would be a grave mistake.

This motion also calls for safe, timely, and equitable services across all communities in the province. You know, Mr. Speaker, I would relish the opportunity to talk about equity and health care services. As the MLA for Brooks-Medicine Hat I understand the struggles that exist when it comes to accessing these services. Rural Albertans often experience long wait times for surgeries. They often have limited access to specialists. In the south zone doctors asked the previous government repeatedly for a cardiac catheterization lab, but they chose to centre their funding on urban centres. This left roughly 3,000 patients each year to be transferred to Calgary when they had a serious cardiac incident.

Another example of inequity in health care is ambulance services. In my riding ambulance services are scarce. Thankfully, we have HALO air ambulance, but not every area in the province has such a wonderful service available to them.

It's quite rich for the NDP to talk about wanting to ensure equitable access to a certain service across this province, when they directed most of the funds for their capital plan towards urban centres, neglecting the health care of rural Albertans and my constituents entirely. For example, in 2017 they closed the Medicine Hat diagnostic laboratory, a privately owned lab that served the towns of Brooks and Foremost and Medicine Hat as well. The issues of health equity across this province are about all forms of care, but the NDP just want to make it about a single topic, thereby ignoring all of the other pressing issues with health care that rural Albertans have raised, just like when they were in government. We shouldn't be playing games with people's health, Mr. Speaker. That's why our government is already examining the issue of health equity through the review of AHS.

Mr. Speaker, this motion isn't about making sure that women's health services are taken seriously or anyone's health, for that matter. It's about dividing Albertans, reopening a debate that our government committed to keeping closed, and silencing Albertans who do not agree with their agenda. You know how I know that's true? Because if the NDP wanted to achieve the aims outlined in this motion, they would have done so while they were in government, but they didn't. The Member for St. Albert tried to pass a similar motion last year, but it was never even debated. She was obviously vocal about this issue when her party was in power, so why didn't they act on it then? They had the entire government and all of its bureaucracy at their disposal, and they did nothing.

So is this about women's health, Mr. Speaker? No. It's about stoking the fire and fanning the flames of division in this province. Still palpably bitter about their party's defeat in the last election, the NDP are trying to find something, literally anything, to create more baseless controversy. They're trying to buy more time in the news cycle in an attempt to distract Albertans from their government's disastrous record and from how hard this side of the House is working to make life better for all Albertans. They've used this tactic over and over again while they were in government and again during the election. Neither time did it prove to be successful, and it appears they have not learned.

The NDP also loves to tout that it's the party of Tommy Douglas and the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, but what many Canadians might not know is that Tommy Douglas was a proponent of eugenics and believed in forced sterilization of those with what he called subnormal intelligence and morality. That should be appalling no matter what side of the House you sit on.

Mr. Speaker, I am pro life because I believe that all life is precious and worthy of dignity and respect. It is not something that I am ashamed of. It is a conviction that I and countless Albertans hold deeply and defend fervently. We are not a marginal portion of the population. The members opposite have been scowling at me this whole time, and if history is any indicator, the nastiness has only begun, but quite frankly I don't care. I have been open and transparent about my views from day one. My constituents know where my conscience is on this, and many voted for me because of it. While the NDP turn inside out and feign outrage any time the words "free" and "speech" are used in the same sentence, I am proud to be in a party that celebrates and encourages diversity, a party that allows me to speak and vote my conscience on matters such as these. Regardless of my own personal beliefs, which I believe I made pretty clear, the motion solely seeks to stir up more fear and division rather than allowing for productive discussions about how we can make life better for Albertans.

At the end of the day, I represent all constituents, not just those who hold the same personal beliefs as I do, so my rationale for voting against this extends far beyond my own personal views on morality. Mr. Speaker, I am done playing the NDP's games, and I won't allow their attacks to silence me. I will be voting against this motion not only because I am pro life. I am voting against this motion because it is divisive, and we need to move on and do the work that we were elected to do; that is, unite Albertans and advocate for what matters to them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has the call.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the critic for status of women I've heard from countless Albertans about the importance of access to safe, affordable health care for all. This motion from my colleague the Member for St. Albert is so critical. I must also just take this moment to mention that as the critic as well for LGBTQ2S-plus issues, it's important to remind folks that reproductive health access is not just for women. We must be mindful of our language as trans and gender-diverse folks, who do not identify as women, often face barriers to health care access as well.

This is a human rights issue, and it's also an economic issue, which I'll speak about shortly. Fundamentally, any person seeking reproductive health services in Alberta should be able to do so in a safe and timely manner. For those saying that this is about dividing Albertans, like the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat has just noted, it's not. This is more than a discussion about abortion. If you read the motion, "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to conduct a thorough review of access to abortion services and reproductive health services in Alberta," reproductive health services include access to birth control, in vitro fertilization, fertility treatments, midwifery, and other services. This is not just about abortion.

I'm so proud that my NDP colleagues, when they were in government, fought hard to ensure access to abortion and reproductive health services. However, as we can see from the comments already today, that work is in jeopardy of being rolled back. That work must be continued as we are talking about health care supports for so many of our neighbours. We still hear reports from all over this province from folks who cannot access Mifegymiso prescriptions in their communities, health providers who are harassed for providing any sorts of services, and earlier today we heard from that same Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat as she asked about access to rural health services. I appreciated that question because that's exactly what this motion seeks to ensure: health services for all Albertans – all Albertans.

I grew up in rural Alberta. I spent much of my life in rural Alberta. I was a teacher, and I saw first-hand from some of my high school students the struggles that they experienced trying to access health services such as these. It's likely no surprise to folks in this House that reproductive health services are concentrated quite heavily in cities. In fact, the folks from pro choice Edmonton tell me that there's virtually no access for people outside Edmonton and Calgary, especially if "they're young, poor, they can't take time off of work or school." Alberta Pro-Choice tells me that even in cities with major hospitals there's no access outside of those two big major cities. People in rural Alberta deserve the same access to these necessary health services, and that's why I'm so proud to support my colleague from St. Albert's motion. Regardless of personal opinions, every member should support every Albertan having access to safe, affordable health care, just as the member asked about earlier.

As I said, it's not just a social issue, not just a human rights issue; it's an economic issue as well. There are significant costs associated with forcing folks to travel long distances to receive the health care that they so desperately need, and the wait times are long. I heard from one person today who noted that a friend of hers was trying to access such services, and the wait-list was over three weeks for an Edmonton clinic. She pointed out: listen; we need to consider those folks who don't have the capacity to even travel.

This shouldn't be controversial because, again, it's about more than just abortion, but I ask you to not take just my word for it. I have actually a number of statements from folks, various stakeholders who work directly in the field, and I'll table some of these statements tomorrow. The first person that I'd like to point out is Joyce Arthur. She's the executive director of the Abortion Rights Coalition of Canada. She says:

The timing of the vote on this motion is significant, coming in the same week as the federal election. Advocates across Canada have been asking the federal party leaders, that if elected, will they commit to working with the provinces to improve access to abortion and other reproductive health services?

Unsurprisingly, not all the federal leaders are clear in their support of such a motion.

Alberta's services do not meet Canada Health Act standards because there are so few access points. The Alberta government needs to pass this motion as a first step to meeting its obligations under federal law.

Melanie Anderson, who's a board member with the Alberta Pro-Choice Coalition, says:

The lack of abortion access is in the spotlight across Canada and this motion is very important for Albertans. Access to reproductive health and abortion services has been very limited in Alberta for many years with people living outside Calgary and Edmonton being denied these services in their own communities. Surgical abortion services, in particular, are restricted to clinics in Edmonton and Calgary and although any doctor who prescribes contraception can also prescribe Mifegymiso [which is] medical abortion, this medication is all but inaccessible to many living outside these two [major] centres, [Edmonton and Calgary].

And she says:

We look forward to our elected representatives addressing the reproductive health needs of women and gender diverse people by supporting this important initiative.

I think it's important that we hear from somebody who is in one of those major centres that's not Edmonton and Calgary. Lauren Lagoutte is with Red Deer & Area Pro Choice. She says:

We are in need of more access in Red Deer, not only do we not have places within our hospitals, but currently we have no doctors who are willing to prescribe [Mifegymiso]. We aren't even rural, we have over 150,000 people who use our hospital and services, and I spend my time as an abortion doula referring to Calgary. We are forgotten. Our pregnant people are forgotten. This can't happen anymore.

I've heard from her before. She's got some very heart-wrenching stories of folks who've not been able to access services in communities across Alberta, and she's travelled hundreds and hundreds of kilometres trying to support those women and gender-diverse folks who need those services.

Fort McMurray, a huge city. This is from Melissa McIntyre from Fort McMurray pro choice.

Fort McMurray being a remote city means that abortion being inaccessible is detrimentally the same as being illegal. We can't utilize services out of our reach.

We're talking about a huge population of folks who don't have access to those basic reproductive services.

Lethbridge, another huge city in our province. The Pro-choice Society of Lethbridge & Southern Alberta notes that access to reproductive health and the erosion of hard-fought for rights to bodily autonomy and choice is a major concern for many Albertans. We would like to see [political parties] be clear on where they stand on these issues, and we support efforts to bring problems of access to services and information to the forefront.

I like this point.

This issue is entwined with so many others, with social supports, transportation, addictions, education, and basic health care to name a few. These challenges are not going away and need to be addressed.

Again, such a multifaceted issue. I can't say it enough. It's not just about access to abortion. It's the connections. It's how it's inextricably linked to so many other issues that we need to be addressing.

Deb Tomlinson, the CEO of the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services, notes the following.

Central to [our] mandate is to enhance access to services and supports for all Albertans impacted by sexual violence. When someone sexually assaults another person, they are abusing power and taking bodily control away from the person they are assaulting. Therefore every effort to return choice and control through access to reproductive health care is of the utmost importance. Given the connection between sexual assault, unplanned pregnancy and sexually transmitted infections, easy access to reproductive health services (including abortion) is a key factor for survivors in coping with the many negative after effects of experiencing sexual assault. Sexual assault centres in Alberta would also like to stress that when access to reproductive health services is restricted, this most adversely affects those who are marginalized in our communities, particularly racialized and trans folks, as well as those from our rural communities.

I'm going to end on that statement from Deb because, again, I think this points out something so crucial. We're talking about access for folks who are often the most vulnerable, someone who's just been sexually violated in a rural or remote community in Alberta and needing access to services and having nowhere to go. She talks about access for racialized and trans folks as well. Again, we're talking about some of the most vulnerable folks in our communities.

I'd like to just end by urging the members opposite to think about some of those folks – I mean, a number of people in this Legislature represent rural and remote communities – and to broaden your perspective to really recognize that this is not just about abortion. This is about critically important reproductive health services for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Motion 506, put forward by the hon. Member for St. Albert. I'd like to begin this conversation with what we can all agree on. That is what is most important, and that is a conversation about women's health in this province. It's a conversation about access to services. This conversation is extremely emotional for many Albertans, and when we engage in this, we must do it with the utmost respect and sensitivity. This is a discussion that is deeply personal for many and often one of the most difficult things that a woman can experience.

Let's have these conversations and do so in a way that is respectful of the differing views that exist. We have conversations in this Chamber that impact the lives of many, many Albertans, and I think we all know as members that debates in this House can go beyond the issues and can become political theatre. I hope, especially today, this debate can be one that does not just merely descend into that political theatre. Politicizing this issue does a huge disservice to the very real people that are impacted by it. We must look at the facts that impact this issue to ensure that our decisions are based upon details and information as opposed to supporting a politically motivated narrative. It's way too important.

Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to serve here alongside 25 incredible women from both parties, and I was so excited to see a record number of women run for office in the last election, women of all political stripes, points of view, and backgrounds. As the minister that is responsible for multiculturalism I've met many, many Albertans who come from a multitude of diverse backgrounds and faiths. My job as minister is to learn about all of these cultures and beliefs and ways of life without judgment or preconceived notions.

This is a very, very sensitive conversation, and we must remember that. I am personally pro choice and, moreover, extremely grateful and proud to be a part of a caucus that welcomes and celebrates a diversity of opinions, including those of my very dear friends in our caucus who are pro life. We have caucus MLAs, party members, and everyday supporters with a wide variety of views on various subjects, including this issue that is at the centre of this motion, of the opposition motion, that being abortion. I welcome and respect all of these views, even those I may personally disagree with, and I hope that every member of this Assembly applies that same approach, particularly, Mr. Speaker, when we are debating such sensitive topics like that which is presented in this opposition motion.

In 1969 the Criminal Law Amendment Act legalized abortion. This was based upon the approval of a committee of doctors, and it was required that they sign off that it was necessary for the physical and mental well-being of the mother. In the 50 years, Mr. Speaker, since that time we've made immense advancements in women's health services. Fifty years ago this decision would not have been in the hands of the woman, and now it is a woman's right to make this decision that is protected by federal law.

This motion calls on the government to review access to abortion services and remove barriers to those services. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to touch on what I understand to be the current landscape for access to abortion services. In Alberta, women can access abortion services up to the 24-week mark, which is longer than most provinces. Abortion services, both at hospitals and clinics, are covered by the provincial health care plan. There are three nonhospital abortion clinics in Alberta, and they provide surgical abortions. Two are in Calgary, and one is in Edmonton, as has been previously mentioned. However, surgical obstetricians are able to perform these services.

The access to Mifegymiso: Mifegymiso is a pill that can be taken at home which actually can medically induce an abortion up to nine weeks' gestation and has been expanded. It also can be used past the nine-week point but also does require further medical supervision. The pill can actually be prescribed by any doctor or any nurse practitioner registered in the province and dispensed at pharmacies. A possible outcome of this option is that it may decrease the number of surgical procedures required. The medication already has been and will continue to be critically important in making sure, hopefully, that women have to undergo fewer invasive surgical procedures. This is along with being able to access services.

Expanding access to the option to independently go through this process to abort a pregnancy at home has given many women, especially those who are in rural areas, the opportunity to decide what the best option is for them. They can choose to remain at home, perhaps to be surrounded by their support systems or the space that they feel most comfortable in. They can also choose to utilize the services, Mr. Speaker, offered by women's health centres that provide services.

Women across the province can access numerous options when it comes to services. Mr. Speaker, I do believe that it's imperative that women have access to safe abortion services. It is due to options that I've actually just shared today that I simply – I don't see a scarcity of the access that is implied in this motion, in this opposition motion. In fact, we had the opportunity to speak with the Ministry of Health. I was informed that Alberta Health Services, which is actually responsible for the delivery of abortion services, has not seen an increase in demand, and that would be required in order to initiate increased access to services.

In the four years – and I think this is probably the most problematic – that the NDP was in government, they had every opportunity to expand services and create more bricks-and-mortar centres across the province. I guess the question all of us have is why they didn't do that. My guess is that they were advised, as our government has been, by Alberta Health Services that further expansion is not required at this time.

Furthermore, our government – and I'm so proud to say this – is making a huge priority in health care. The Minister of Health has recently announced, of course, the expansion of the scope of practice of the 16,000 licensed practical nurses, which will alleviate pressure on other caregivers, obviously, Mr. Speaker, like registered nurses, nurse practitioners, and doctors. The addition of 30 new nurse practitioners in rural and remote areas is actually what we're talking about here, is making sure that access to services is available. If you recall earlier in my statement, they're also able to prescribe Mifegymiso.

Further, our government is prioritizing health care access in general. Alberta Health Services is conducting a review, and our government is taking steps to ensure that wait times for surgical procedures decrease. We take, Mr. Speaker, the commitments that we have made to Albertans very seriously, and our record, in our very short time in government, speaks for itself. We will continue.

We will continue to honour our commitments to Albertans, including our commitment – as was said by the hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, we are committed to not reopening this issue. I think we've said it at least 150 times. We'll continue to repeat this message over and over and over again.

Furthermore, I think what is most glaring is that it's become apparent that this issue is being weaponized in a partisan way. We are dealing with vulnerable populations, as the member said. This is not how we focus on people in this province. We do not weaponize issues like this for our own political gain. It's a profound disservice to the women who have and may require these particular services, to the care providers, and actually, Mr. Speaker, to the unity of our province as a whole.

I do support a woman's right to choose in what happens to her body, and having these conversations is very important. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore should time allow.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today in support of the motion brought forward by my colleague the Member for St. Albert, which seeks a review of access to abortion services and reproductive health services in Alberta and to take action to remove barriers to access to those services.

I've been listening very carefully to the comments from both my colleagues but also from the members from the other side. There are a few things I'd like to just mention. The first is that I really want to highlight that this motion is about access to reproductive health services as well as abortion services. In fact, I believe that on this point we are actually in agreement because what I was hearing from both the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women as well as the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat is that all Albertans should have access to health services that they require. The Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat gave great examples of the kinds of reproductive health services that women and anybody who identifies as a woman and trans people require.

The issue here is that abortion has been decided in terms of federal law, as the minister for status of women said. It is a right, but nobody is here to dispute that. We're simply saying that in order for a right to have meaning, it must be accessible. Again, the members from the other side have highlighted that; in fact, the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, even today in question period, raised the issue of access in rural areas to medical services. In this province women have rights to access reproductive health services, including abortion services. But if those services are not accessible and are not available and are not safe, then it's a hollow right. There is no right to it.

We're simply stating with this motion that we conduct that review to see whether that right is fully accessible by all Albertans who require it and, if there are barriers, to remove those barriers, because that is actually the fulfillment of our obligation, under the charter of human rights, to the safety and security that all people have, to make sure that there is access to those rights.

Certainly, the Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women stood and alluded to perhaps some information from Alberta Health Services which may indicate that there is not a problem with access to reproductive health rights. I don't know if that's the case. I have not been privy to that information. I have not seen that. If that's the case, then it should be no problem to fulfill this motion, which is that – maybe the review has already been conducted. That may be the case. But I think we can all stand in agreement – we've repeatedly talked about it – that access to health care services in rural areas is a problem. I would be interested to see if there is actually a report that indicates that there is not a problem with access to reproductive health services and abortion services in rural areas because I don't think that that has been the experience or understanding of most people. If that's the case, by all means bring that information forward, and we'll be able to fulfill what's set out in this motion.

I also want to highlight again – we did talk about it – reproductive health services. My colleague the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and myself had an opportunity over the summer to meet with a doctor in Calgary, Dr. Rupinder Toor, who operates an IUD clinic there. She serves vulnerable newcomer communities, and we would talk very much about access to safe contraception, access to safe reproductive health rights, and how the most vulnerable and, particularly, newcomers, I would say, indigenous communities – certainly, if we're talking about there not being great access in northern Alberta, that has to include a lot of our indigenous communities. Access to those reproductive health services – contraception is not available. We know that if that is available, that affects the quality of life of Albertans in so many ways.

I agree that we should not be weaponizing this discussion. I actually take great issue with that characterization of this motion because it's not just about abortion services. We've been very careful and, I think, clear in our discussions on this side of the House that this is about access to what all women are entitled to have in this province, which is reproductive health services.

I also want to mention that I'm not in disagreement with the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat about all of us having our personal views. We all do have our personal views. Whether they be religious, ideological, whatever the reasons are, our opinions and our personal beliefs about access to abortion: we are all entitled to those beliefs. Certainly, if somebody has an ideological or religious belief that would prohibit them from seeking abortion services, whether it be a surgical abortion or Mifegymiso, that is completely appropriate. If an individual does not believe in that, do not access that. Do not seek that access.

The problem is when not all people have access to those services because of where they live. They're not having an opportunity to exercise their own personal beliefs or to exercise the right to safe and accessible health care to which they are entitled as part of their security of the person, protected under the charter of human rights and freedoms. Certainly, we are not in disagreement. If an individual has personal views against it, by all means, nobody is forcing anybody to use those services.

But if an individual, whether by personal belief or by need, because there are many situations where a woman perhaps would never conceive of a situation where they would want to access it, but they may find themselves in a situation where they need to access either reproductive services or abortion services – and they are entitled to have access to that. I think that that's really important to mention. I think it's very important that we say: this is not about imposing one set of beliefs on another. The law has already decided that issue. The law has already decided that there is access to abortion rights. That is what every woman in this country and in this province is entitled to access, but that access must be meaningful. If you don't have access because of where you live or how far away you are from a centre or a service or a clinic that provides it, then you don't have access.

Again, the facts of this situation are that in Alberta we have centralized reproductive services and abortion services. Compared to our population and if you look at what's happening in other provinces, in B.C., for example, they have a very interconnected network of services and recommendations for people in remote areas to have access to those services.

That's simply what we're talking about here. We're talking about reviewing our existing system, identifying where there are opportunities – and there should be meaningful access – for women who need those reproductive and abortion services and making sure that they have them and, if there are barriers, to make sure that those barriers are taken down so that they can access their rights.

I am standing here saying that, of course, I have my personal views. I have very strongly held personal views. But this isn't about my views, and it isn't about individual views. It is about the law. It is about that there is a legal entitlement to those services in this country. If you don't believe in it, don't access it, but you should not be prohibited from accessing it because it's not available to you, because it's not accessible.

That is simply what this motion is about. I am proud to stand up and say that I believe that everybody should have the opportunity to fulfill their own personal beliefs and to seek medical supports that they need. I have a number of constituents in my community – and I'm sure they exist all over – for whom infertility is a problem, and it's something where people deserve the services needed to address it all over the province. That is not an Edmonton and a Calgary need. That is a need of families and individuals across this province. They are entitled to get those services wherever they live, and that's what this motion is about. I am proud to stand up and support it because I believe it entitles everybody to fully exercise the rights and views that they all hold and that are constitutionally protected in this country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore has the call and will be followed by the Member for Edmonton-City Centre should time allow.

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak to Motion 506. I want this debate to be respectful. Reproductive health is important. It's an important topic. So is the issue of access to health services in rural and remote parts of the province. I want to make sure that these issues are treated with the importance and the respect they deserve, and I really hope that this motion and the debate around it are not actually an attempt to weaponize the issue of abortion for partisan purposes. I really hope that we are not here to discuss abortion services only because the members opposite wish to score political points, especially after the dog-whistle politics that pro-choice women like myself had to endure in the last campaign. I will pass on another attempt at wedge politics. I, for one, am sick and tired of women's rights being treated as a political football.

Outside of this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, Albertans have told me that on this subject they are tired of polarization. They do not appreciate all-or-nothing propositions. Like me, most of my constituents support the proposition of a woman's right to choose. The government should not make that decision. They also believe that women should have access to safe termination services. I do not think anyone is in favour of the desperate, life-threatening measures that women undertook so many years ago. Most of my constituents, like me, respect the views of those who consider themselves to be pro life. These are deeply held, personal convictions, and they should be respected. In fact, many, many people hold personal pro-life beliefs and also support a woman's right to choose.

So, Mr. Speaker, I really hope that this motion is not another attempt at wedge politics, raising a hot-button issue to get headlines, because what happens is that when the extremes on both sides take their one hundred per cent for or one hundred per cent against positions, the majority in the middle are essentially silenced, left out of the discussion altogether. Research actually shows that this is particularly true for women, especially women under the age of 35.

That brings me to the motion itself, which reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to conduct a thorough review of access to abortion services and reproductive health services in Alberta, take action to remove barriers to these services, and ensure access to safe, timely, and equitable services in all communities across the province.

Mr. Speaker, the motion tabled by the Member for St. Albert talks about women's reproductive health, which I do believe is an important topic for discussion, but I think that the narrow scope of the text in this motion limits the broader conversation that we need to have about women's health as a whole. While abortion is largely discussed as a women's health issue, it is not the only women's health issue.

There are 26 women elected in this Chamber, including myself. Statistically three of us will get breast cancer, and I'm sure that everybody in this Chamber knows someone who's been impacted by breast cancer at some point in their life, and their families have also been impacted. We need to have that conversation, Mr. Speaker, about how we can support those who have received a breast cancer diagnosis and help them also support their families.

There are other gynecological conditions that don't get a lot of attention, Mr. Speaker, conditions like endometriosis, which is a painful, sometimes debilitating condition and one of the most commonly misdiagnosed gynecological conditions. And guess what? Roughly four of us in this Assembly will suffer from it.

Another 10 per cent of us will struggle with fertility issues. In 2017 the previous government closed a fertility clinic right here in Edmonton which was operated by Alberta Health Services, forcing couples to go and seek care at private clinics. The clinic served families from all over northern Alberta. Many families waited months to see a specialist, only to be told that they had to start the process all over again. Some couples now go to other provinces to see a specialist. The opposition repeatedly claims that our government is going to limit access to reproductive health care, including the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, who during her tenure did not act on the content of anything in this motion.

That brings us to the issue of access to health care in rural and remote areas. There is a vast disparity in access to health care that exists between rural communities and urban centres. The previous government did little to help bridge these gaps in care. They diverted funds from their capital plan, actually, away from rural communities and back towards urban centres. Honestly, Mr. Speaker, if the members opposite really wanted to rectify health inequity, they would have addressed that which is already existent between rural and urban Alberta.

Just a quick example of another women's health issue. The average wait time for a hysterectomy in July 2019 in Fort McMurray was 14.9 weeks compared to a provincial average of 12.7 weeks, which is a very long time. In that same month in the Edmonton zone the wait time was 11.3 weeks. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the previous government had four years to address the very issues that are discussed in this motion.

I understand and appreciate that this is an issue that the Member for St. Albert cares about. It's an incredibly emotional issue for many in this Chamber. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I fear that regardless of how I or my colleagues end up voting on this motion, there's very little hope that the opposition will ever be satisfied. I really hope that this is not just an example, another example, of the opposition seeking to weaponize a sensitive topic for political purposes. Women's health is an incredibly important topic, one that we should all be willing to talk about, but this motion doesn't allow for the broad, holistic discussion that needs to be had.

So, Mr. Speaker, I simply can't vote for this motion today. I'm focused on addressing issues through meaningful action, not through platitudes. Should the member opposite choose to come back with a motion that will allow for co-operation, discussion, and mutual understanding, then perhaps I'll reconsider.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre, and there are approximately two minutes remaining in debate.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that my time is brief, so first I'll start by just correcting a bit of information that I'm sure was just accidentally overlooked by the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, since she did declare that she was not here to create any sort of division. She simply forgot to mention – and I'm quoting from the Canadian Encyclopedia – that “by the time [Tommy] Douglas became Premier of Saskatchewan in 1944 . . . he had abandoned his support for eugenic policies,” and when he received two reports that recommended legalizing sexual sterilization in that province, he rejected the idea, having progressed in his moral views, Mr. Speaker, as many people do.

As the opposition critic for Health it's my pleasure to rise in support of this motion. As many have noted, we continue to have issues of access to health care in rural Alberta, some of which our government sought to meet, providing improved dialysis services in rural Alberta – a Conservative government had chosen to leave people receiving dialysis on a bus, Mr. Speaker – and other investments which our government made. On this, we recognize that women across the province have the right to access health services.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre, but under Standing Order 8(3) it provides for the mover of the motion to have five minutes to close debate at 5:55.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to clear up a couple of things. There are some basic facts.

One, we understand that the Supreme Court of Canada recognized a woman's right to continue or terminate a pregnancy. This is a protected right under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That's already been determined.

Now, under the Canada Health Act health care must be accessible, portable, comprehensive, and publicly administered nation-wide. That's really what this is about. This is about access. What we know is that access to reproductive health services is primarily available in large urban centres: two in Calgary, one in Edmonton. That leaves people that live in rural and remote communities without access, particularly in the north. That is a problem.

This isn't just about abortion services. This is about reproductive health services, so it's also an economic issue for women that live in rural, remote communities if they are unable to take time off work, if they can't afford it, if they can't find child care, if transportation is sketchy. All of these things are important to consider. This is a motion that encourages the government to look at removing barriers. This isn't about weaponizing anything.

I'd also like to clear the record for some of the organized groups that are sending e-mails about this all over the place. This is my third time doing this, and the reason I got to do it again is because it's a lottery. You all know this. Private members, all of us: our names get put into a lottery, and we have a chance. Certainly, would I like to bring it up again and maybe change the wording so that people would vote on it? Sure. Is that likely to happen? Probably not.

I'm doing this today because I'm asking the people in this House to consider the reproductive health care of women and trans people in this province to be a priority, particularly people that live in rural and remote communities who are forced to travel to urban centres for things like having an intrauterine device put inside of them. They shouldn't have to take time off work to come to a clinic here in Edmonton or Calgary to get that done. Doctors have told us that they are having trouble even prescribing this because there are problems in their community based on some kind of religious ideology.

This isn't about religion. I don't care about your religion. I don't even care about your stance on this particular issue. This is about the law. This is a protected human right – a protected human right – and this is about health care: health care for women and access to health care for women, safe health care. If it's not safe, it's still going to happen. It's just going to be dangerous, as it was before. This is about urging the government to look at: what can we do to increase access for people in Alberta that don't readily have those clinics or doctors available to them? There are many thousands that do not, that don't have the ability to pay for child care, transportation, hotels, time off work to go to Edmonton or Calgary to receive the services that they need. I'm encouraging each member: put aside your ideology, and look at access to health care services in this province.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, October 22, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, recognizing that there are many faith or not-faith backgrounds, I invite all of you to join me in a moment of quiet reflection or prayer should you choose to do so.

The prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are pleased to have two schools joining us this afternoon. I'd like to welcome St. Benedict Catholic school from Edmonton-West Henday and Vanier community Catholic school from the constituency of West Yellowhead.

Also joining us this afternoon in the galleries are guests of the Minister of Seniors and Housing: Dave and Joan Kimmel.

Also joining us in the gallery, members, are guests of the Minister of Advanced Education from the University of Calgary Students' Union: Marcus Patel, Jessica Revington, and Sadiya Nazir.

Please welcome all these members to the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-McCall has a statement to make.

Doug O'Halloran

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to rise today and pay tribute to a great man and Albertan, Doug O'Halloran. Sadly, Doug passed away on the Thanksgiving weekend after a long and intense battle with cancer. As his family, friends, and my colleagues gather to remember him in Calgary, I wanted to take this opportunity for this House to pay their respects.

Mr. Speaker, as president of the United Food and Commercial Workers union 401 Doug was a furious defender of working people's rights across Alberta and beyond. He represented 32,000 members, the largest private union in Alberta. Doug was the real deal, a leader who started on the shop floor and rose through the rank and file on the strength of his sheer tenacity and commitment. Doug simply never backed down from a fight. His most famous fight might be Lakeside Packers in 2005. After a decade of struggle and three weeks of intense job action, 2,400 meat packers had a union that would stand up for them.

Whether it was on the shop floor, at the barbecue, or on the picket lines, Doug was always there. He knew everyone, and everyone knew him. Indeed, Doug fought for the people whose fight is the hardest. He lifted up working people by fighting for a fair wage, the right to bargain, and a society that values caring for one another. In his 30 years as president he touched the lives of thousands of working families, who enjoy a higher quality of life today, and his memory lives on in the positive change he brought to their lives.

I ask the House to join me in honouring the life of this great Albertan and to take up the challenge he left for us: "I challenge you all to keep making the changes, and fighting the fights, that make the world better."

Thank you.

Health Care in Central Alberta

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, a 75-year-old constituent was admitted to Red Deer hospital for bowel surgery having not eaten for 24 hours. Staff inserted a tube to keep her stomach pumped. She could eat a little ice. For four days she waited. The hospital was in overcapacity protocol. She lost 10 pounds and much more strength and energy, already weak from previous leukemia. Recovery at 75 is slow. Overcapacity, one, puts patients in halls and tub rooms; two, sends patients home; three, sends them to other hospitals. This is the routine reality at Red Deer hospital.

For years capital spending has been egregiously underfunded, at only 20 per cent of the capital funding of other regions. For 2008 the central region received $227 per capita while every other region received over $1,100. Numerous AHS plans highlight the need, but nothing happens. Central AHS leaders affirm the need, but these are political decisions. For years government has taken our taxes and sent them elsewhere.

Central region patients are second-class citizens for real health care. They are 60 per cent more likely to die from heart attacks. Standards of care are, in real time, not the same as urban areas'. The number of surgeries postponed in all Alberta hospitals is .45 per cent, but Red Deer is 10 times that much, at 4 and a half plus per cent. Seventy-five per cent of Red Deer's surgeries are out of window, longer than the window of best results. This also decreases the capacity of medical professionals without the equipment or teams to function at optimal levels.

Telling central Albertans that they can get care in Edmonton when they have a heart attack or any other health issue is just wrong. Previous governments ignored the crisis of central region health care; this government must do better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein has a statement to make.

Balancing the Budget

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I was at the Mustard Seed, I remember a young girl no older than my own daughters coming in and emptying her piggy bank out. She was giving all her money to the poor. At that moment it struck me as to the gravity of our responsibility to her as a donor and to our mission.

This same philosophy has to be applied to our provincial government as we dive into budget season and discuss a plan for getting back to balance. We must also consider that we need to get value for the taxpayer and, more than that, how to value the taxpayer, how to value all citizens, recognizing that we are the stewards of their contribution. Albertans contribute so much to this province, all of them, not just the rich but everyday people, some living day to day to make ends meet. Still, at the end of the year they all fill out their tax returns and they give to the prosperity of Alberta, to be used in the best interest of Alberta.

The reality is that we need to do things differently. We want to provide quality front-line services. Simply cutting along the periphery will land us back in the same spot 10 years down the road.

Albertans from all walks of life have given so much to this province. Why? So it can be used to make sure that this is the best place to live, raise a family, and give their neighbour a chance to live life well. We need to make sure that as we approach this budget, we consider every corner of this province – rural, urban, wealthy, poor – but more than that, we need to remember that this budget needs to be a collaboration with everyday Albertans to fulfill their dream and respect all of their contributions.

Let us be committed to an open dialogue and genuine commitment to getting Alberta back to balance, eliminating this debt, and safeguarding our children's future. And let us be the good steward that Albertans are asking us to be.

Diwali

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise in the House today to mark this year's festivities for Diwali, Bandi Chhor Divas, Deepavali, and Ashok Vijaya Dashami. On October 27, 2019, families of Hindu, Sikh, Jain, and Buddhist communities in Canada, India, and all across the globe will celebrate the festivals of lights.

This day is celebrated by Hindus as Diwali, which coincides with the Hindu new year, and is celebrated to honour Lord Ramachandra, the seventh avatar. It is believed that on this day Lord Ramachandra returned to his kingdom after 14 years of exile, during which he fought and won battles against the demons and the demons' king, Ravana.

Mr. Speaker, this day is also celebrated as Bandi Chhor Divas by Sikhs across the globe, which signifies the release of Sixth Guru Hargobind Singh from prison along with another 52 Hindu kings.

On the very same day, the Jain community around the world celebrates the attainment of Moksha by Mahavira.

1:40

This day is also celebrated as Ashok Vijaya Dashami by the Buddhist community as it is considered that, on this day, Emperor Ashoka was converted to Buddhism.

These celebrations symbolize the victory of light over darkness, good over evil, knowledge over ignorance, and hope over despair. During this time of reflection marked by compassion and love for the world around us, family and friends gather to light diyas, attend religious ceremonies, share meals, and exchange gifts.

In my riding of Edmonton-Meadows I will be joining many of our constituents in various temples and gurdwaras to be part of these celebrations along with my fellow caucus members. Occasions like these showcase our shared values of freedom, inclusion, equality. As Canadians we all can take a moment to celebrate.

On behalf of all New Democrats I wish everyone a joyous Diwali, Bandi Chhor Divas, Deepavali and Ashok Vijaya Dashami. Thank you.

The Speaker: A happy Diwali to you, sir, and may the light always reign.

The hon. Member for Camrose.

Daycare Subsidies

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the summer I embarked on a door-knocking campaign through the towns of my constituency of Camrose. This allowed me to thank my constituents for sending me to Edmonton and ensure that they had contact information for my office should they have need to be in touch with me.

As I door-knocked, I had many interesting conversations and met many people that I hadn't met through the previous year's campaigning. In particular, I met one gentleman who told me that he and his wife had enrolled in the $25-per-day daycare in our community. He shared that it was a good thing for their family, allowing them to save money. He also shared that given his profession, his family really did not need the discounted daycare, and he was sure that others in the community could have benefited much more from the subsidized daycare program. He felt guilty for taking something that his family didn't need when there were so many Albertans struggling to make ends meet in a tough economy.

Further down the street I met another constituent, who told me that their family was struggling financially. The father had lost his job in the oil field, and the family was barely getting by on just the mother's income. The pain on this woman's face was obvious, and I saw that their family was experiencing true hardship, like so many Albertans over the last four years.

I would think that if anyone should receive subsidized daycare, it should be those in true financial need. The NDP's pilot program didn't track parents' incomes or employment status and can't tell us who may really need this program. It's people who are down on their luck, struggling to pay their basic bills and need a hand up: those are the ones that need it. Unfortunately, many of these people in my riding are not able to access the $25-per-day daycare due to the way that the pilot was set up.

I know that with careful study and consideration our Minister of Children's Services and our UCP government will ensure that our most vulnerable citizens receive the support that they deserve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has the call.

Technology Industry Development

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the A100, a nonprofit group of investors and entrepreneurs who support the next generation of tech in our province, offered their views on what tech companies need to succeed here.

Currently over 13,000 tech companies in our province employ more than 110,000 Albertans and generate $15.6 billion in revenue. These companies, along with developing their own products and services, are helping to create and drive efficiencies in other core industries like energy, petrochemicals, agriculture, transportation, manufacturing, and public services like health care, and they're just getting started.

What do they need to grow? Well, as the A100 notes, what makes Alberta a competitive environment for tech is different than what's required for other industries. A100 argues that we need an environment that is not only supportive but competitive with other markets, especially those in Quebec, Ontario, and B.C., to attract investors and other companies to Alberta. However, and I quote, low corporate taxes aren't sufficient. Investment tax credits are a more powerful tool to spur growth, like the Alberta investor and interactive digital media tax credits that, before being frozen by this government, leveraged $94 million in investment in Alberta businesses. And tech needs talent: engineers, software developers, data scientists, experts in AI and machine learning, like those that could be trained in the 3,000 additional postsecondary spaces our government committed to funding.

That's what tech entrepreneurs and investors both in and outside of Alberta will be watching for in this government's first budget on Thursday. Will this government show the leadership of Peter Lougheed, who invested billions of public dollars to develop the technology to pull oil out of sand and launch our province's biggest industry, or will they simply double down on giving 4 and a half billion dollars away to big corporations and turn their backs on this opportunity to capitalize on our new raw resources and lay the foundations for another economic juggernaut, that can carry us into a carbon-constrained future? The choice is theirs, and Albertans will be watching.

Foster and Kinship Caregiver Week

Mrs. Allard: It's my pleasure to rise in the House today to say thank you. Thank you to families that care for vulnerable children in their time of need. I rise to mark Foster and Kinship Caregiver Week and to offer my thanks to those generous Albertans across the province who provide stable and loving homes to vulnerable children and youth in care.

Mr. Speaker, as we look to the future of this province, we know that so much of it depends on supporting children, youth, and families to be strong and resilient. We want to give children the best start in life, and I am grateful for loving families that step up and say yes to caring for children and providing them with a safe home when needed, even if only for a short time. Foster and kinship caregivers in Alberta play a key role in building strong communities. They welcome children into their home and give them everything they can to help prepare them for a successful future. We know that stability is critical to a child's development, and I want to recognize these caregivers that offer stability to vulnerable children. Much is asked of them. Foster parents welcome children they've never met, and kinship caregivers welcome children they may not have known they would care for, all while working to keep children connected to their home communities and cultures.

My sister Carolyn is a teacher. Early in her career she chose to foster a young student who was in crisis. At the time, her colleagues said that she couldn't change the world, so why try? Mr. Speaker, my sister may not have changed the whole world, but she certainly changed the world for that student.

That is the power of foster and kinship caregivers, to step in and provide love, stability, support, and safety for children at a time when they need it the very most. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing more important than ensuring that children are safe and nurtured so that they can develop to their full potential and lead happy, meaningful lives.

To mark this special week and on behalf of my colleagues in this House, it is my great pleasure to express my gratitude to these kind and caring people who serve as Alberta's foster and kinship caregivers and to acknowledge the critical contribution they make to our society and especially to the children they care for.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the House will hear from the Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Elevate Aviation

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend I have the honour of attending a fundraiser put on by Elevate Aviation, an inspiring organization that works tirelessly to involve women in Canada's aviation industry by igniting passion and opening a world of possibilities. Their goal is to create a shift in the aviation industry that "promotes gender balance by connecting women with a network of support."

They have recently started a learning centre that provides unique opportunities for high school students and women to explore diverse careers in the aviation industry, from flight attendants and pilots to engineers and a career with the Canadian Armed Forces. They also provide opportunities for students and women to get behind the scenes with the Edmonton International Airport, Nav Canada, the Edmonton Flying Club, Canadian North, North Cariboo Air, and the Royal Canadian Air Force.

On top of the educational opportunities they provide, Elevate Aviation also provides four bursaries aimed at reducing barriers for women to join the aviation industry. The extensive training needed for a career in aviation takes a tremendous amount of effort and can be costly. Elevate Aviation has identified this barrier and has taken steps to make it more affordable. They have focused their resources on women that need it and therefore rely predominately on the support of volunteers to provide these services.

I would also like to give a special thank you to the incredible woman that has worked so hard to inspire so many women to join the aviation industry. Kendra Kincade, the founder of Elevate Aviation, is an inspiring community leader that continues to provide support and her experience to other women. She has made it her mission to show others the potential of a career within Canada's aviation industry and to give them a way to achieve their dreams. I look forward to continuing to support my friend and this very important organization, that work tirelessly to empower women and to educate our youth on a world of opportunity.

Thank you.

Advocacy for Alberta's Energy Industries

Mr. Loewen: Alberta has been supporting the energy needs of Canada and many other countries for generations. Canada has become a more prosperous country on the whole because of this. Because our humble, hard-working nature is part of the culture here in Alberta, we have asked for no accolades, just an opportunity to do what we do best. That's why I'm thrilled that our Premier and Minister of Energy have been working to form constructive, collaborative relationships with other Premiers as well as some of our American counterparts. These efforts, combined with our government's fight-back strategy, will help set the record straight on why Alberta oil and gas is not only integral for economic growth but also for social progress.

I want to mention another ambassador for our message, Chris Kitchen, a student from Queen's University in Ontario. Recently Queen's undergraduate student government decided to divest all of its holdings in any company that produces, transports, or dispenses fossil fuels. In response to this move Chris wrote a piece in the student newspaper about why we should instead be celebrating and encouraging oil and gas development here in Canada. He notes:

The oil and gas industry is the largest national spender in Canada on environmental protection. Many of Canada's successful clean tech projects – including research and development around solar, wind, geothermal or carbon capture technologies – are supported by oil and gas players like Enbridge, Suncor, and CNRL.

The idea that we can fix climate change by abandoning oil and gas simply isn't logically sound. Our oil and gas producers are the innovators that are going to help us address climate change, end energy poverty, and improve the quality of life for Canadians as well as others across the globe. People like Chris have the ideas and passion to implement meaningful solutions to the environmental challenges we face in concert with our oil and gas industry, not in spite of it. The first step is setting the record straight.

If federal parties, who are supposed to represent all Canadians, allow one province to veto projects crossing their territory, we descend into attitudes that hamstringing the economy at the local, provincial, and federal levels. Calm, level-headed discussion will be tossed out the window if provinces, backed by federal parties, have a veto on interprovincial projects.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has the first question.

Husky Energy Layoffs

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government rushed to give a $4.5 billion handout to the largest and most profitable corporations in Alberta. The Premier promised that this huge giveaway would create jobs, particularly in the energy sector. Today we learned that Husky Energy is laying off Albertans. Some reports say that hundreds are out of work. Can the Premier please confirm how many people lost their jobs today and explain why your so-called plan failed them?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we sympathize with anybody who has lost their job in this province. I'm sure that this side of the House and that side of the House would agree on that. The problem is that, unfortunately, we have inherited a terrible situation from the NDP, the NDP who have worked against the oil and gas industry their entire time in office and have continued to do it in opposition. This is what we've been talking about, how important this is to the people of Alberta. Last night, when the NDP sided with their federal leader, the antipipeline, anti oil and gas NDP federal party, they sided against Albertans. It's shameful. I'm sure that the people of Husky agree. This side of the House will continue to fight for them.

Mr. Sabir: It's about people and their jobs. Husky made a quarter of a billion dollars from the Premier's handout, but it's cutting jobs, not creating them. The Premier ran on a promise to create jobs. It's been six months. There have been no jobs. In fact, the resource sector lost 13,000 jobs; that was before today's announcement. To the Premier: before you gave companies like Husky a multibillion-dollar gift, why didn't you make sure that they would use the money to actually create the jobs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy has the call.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What this demonstrates is a critical need for pipelines and market access. The NDP legacy on pipelines over four years was a dismal failure, that saw zero kilometres of pipelines built. What we saw under the NDP was a failed social licence and a one-and-done deal with Justin Trudeau that saw one pipeline approved, approved but not built. In return, every other pipeline was sacrificed – sacrificed – and one pipeline that was approved, the one-and-done deal, was not built. We are at a jobs crisis because of failure for four years by the NDP.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We warned this government that their corporate handout wouldn't work, but they didn't listen. They are not listening now, and Albertans in the energy sector are paying the price. Premier, Alberta workers, most of them based in my hometown of Calgary, went home from Husky today to tell their families that they lost their jobs. They are in pain. Do you have anything to offer them other than looking for scapegoats to blame for your failed corporate giveaway?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I reject the entire premise of that question. We will not be lectured by the NDP. That member was part of an NDP government in this province that oversaw the largest job loss in the history of this province, that brought us on track to $100 billion in debt, that brought deficit after deficit after deficit, and, shockingly, that over and over sided with people that were anti our largest industry, which is why we see the problems that we face inside this province today. This side of the House will side with Albertans just like we did yesterday, just like we will do every day going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has the second set of questions.

Premier's Travel

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The sad news from Husky we are seeing today confirms that Albertans need a full-time government with its attention focused on Alberta. Albertans will not be served by a Premier with one eye in Edmonton and one eye in Ottawa. To the Premier: will you commit to this House that you will stay here in Alberta and actually serve as a Premier for your full term?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it is so rich coming from a member whose leader, for hundreds of days, despite the opposition begging her and her cabinet to get on a plane and go down and fight the federal government on Bill C-69, sat in this Chamber and never fought for us. I'm proud to have a leader, I'm proud to have a Premier who fights each and every day for this province, whether it's in Ontario or here, fighting every day for Alberta. Their leader voted for an antipipeline leader last night in the election, voted against Albertans, stood with her socialist overlords, and stood against Alberta. Shame on them.

Ms Sweet: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess that would be: no, he's not planning on staying for his full term.

There is a lot of work to do in Alberta, a lot. As Husky prepared to lay off hundreds of workers this week, the Premier jetted off on a campaign trip to Winnipeg to stump for his federal hopefuls. We need someone here taking the wheel. This Premier promised to create jobs for Albertans, and instead we lost 27,000 and counting. To the Premier: will you commit today that you will no longer campaign in other provinces while serving as Premier regardless of what happens with our new minority government in Ottawa?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, that side of the House has a leader who voted for her leader, the NDP federal leader, who said: I am firmly opposed to the pipeline; I have been opposed to it; I will continue to fight against it, and it's absolutely one of my priorities to stop the pipeline. This side of the House will not be lectured by that side of the House, who has sided against Albertans. They sided against Albertans. They've made it clear. Shame on them. It's appalling to Albertans. It's ridiculous, their behaviour. Albertans can rest assured that this side of the House will stand with them each and every day.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I guess that would be: no, he's not going to leave Alberta.

Albertans, again, have lost 27,000 jobs and counting. The Premier needs to acknowledge that he cannot build support for our economy and our energy sector across this country by ignoring problems and waging war across Canada. Will the Premier dial back the rhetoric, stop gazing longingly at the Prime Minister's chair, and finally focus on getting real solutions for Albertans?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, you want to talk about parties and how they've acted with federal parties? That side of the House, when they were in government, made an alliance with Justin
