Given that the board includes Jack Royal, chairman of the Indian Business Corporation, and Chairman Sheila O'Brien, an experienced energy senior executive, and given that the new government is best served by the expertise and experience of their officials and given that the job of the AER is to make sure that we develop our natural resources responsibly, can the minister please explain what he has against all of these individuals, and was he simply planning to fire them to avoid criticism for not having a real plan to deal with climate change?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will have a very different approach when it comes to the AER. We'll be working with the AER to help work with our industry. This side of the House is proud of the oil and gas industry. I can tell you what will not be happening. We will not be having people like Ed Whittingham, who the NDP put on the Alberta Energy Regulator during their time, who is anti oil and gas, anti energy industry, as the NDP was. Our focus, again, will be on working with our energy industry. We're proud of our energy industry. We're proud of our record, and that's where we'll be headed when we work with the AER.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that the work of the AER includes allocating and conserving water, managing public lands, monitoring industry activity, assessing environmental risk of proposed energy projects, and much more, to the minister: which of these responsibilities most offends you?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, all of those issues are important. None of them offend me. What offends me, again, was the NDP when they were in power putting people like Ed Whittingham onto the AER. That's what offends Albertans. The NDP's record when it comes to defending our oil and gas industry is also what offends me. Luckily and fortunately, on April 16 Albertans chose a government that will stand for the oil and gas industry, that will stand with the people that work inside the industry. It's a big contrast to what we saw with the NDP government when they were in power.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-McCall.

Electricity Market Review

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I noted with interest that late Friday afternoon the government decided to pass the transition to a capacity electricity market. Fridays are not usually when government announces things they are most proud of. I wonder if this is yet another example of the government finding ways to pay for the big corporate tax giveaways out of the wallets of Alberta families. To the minister: how will spending your summer with industry insiders make electricity affordable and predictable for regular Alberta families?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We committed to a 90-day review of the electricity market, whether we stay with an energy market or go to a capacity market. Unlike the previous government, we are taking this time to consult with Albertans, to listen to Albertans, and to find the right balance and make sure we have an energy sector that is reliable, affordable, and is something that serves Albertans and their best interests.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are other opportunities to consult.

Given that the transition to a capacity market was proposed by the Alberta Electric System Operator and given that substantial work has already been done to ensure a smooth and orderly transition to a capacity market by 2021, can the minister explain why she is engaging in this last-minute political interference?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, we are taking the time to consult with all Albertans, to consult with generators, to consult with distributors, and we are asking for an electricity system that is reliable, affordable, and attracts investment. We will take our time to get it right because we know that on many things the previous government took an ideological approach that was not in the best interests of Albertans.

The Speaker: The member.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was AESO who recommended that transition.

Given that the transition to a capacity market will ensure that Albertans have stable access to electricity and will increase our capacity to renewables and given that Albertans need access to affordable electricity, not a return to the chaos of deregulation, will the minister commit here and now to maintaining the electricity price cap?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, the previous government cost Albertans billions of dollars in mismanaged electricity. We are taking our time to ask the right questions, to set up a framework that will serve Albertans best in the future based on affordability, reliability, and the ability to attract investment in electricity.

Support for the Energy Industry

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our United Conservative government campaigned on rebuilding the Alberta economy and on getting Albertans back to work. The NDP's record of mismanagement has led to a 10.6 per cent unemployment rate amongst my constituents. Drayton Valley-Devon was once a leader for Alberta's modern oil and gas industry but now suffers from economic devastation. My constituents want to see oil and gas workers back to work, the completion of pipelines to tidewater, and the chance for small, family-oriented companies to once again flourish. To the minister: can you outline for my constituents your short-term goals to revitalize our energy sector?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, we have nearly 200,000 oil and gas workers out of work in our province. We have staggering decline in investment in our energy sector. In 2018 we had drilling activity decline in Alberta by 8 per cent whereas it grew in the United States by 18 per cent. We have a problem. Since taking office a little over a month ago, we have been relentless in taking steps to attract investment back with our job-creation tax cut, open for business, red tape reduction, and we're working with . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many hard-working Albertans such as drillers, truck drivers, and mechanics, just to name a few professions, want to get back to work, the work that they love, and given that the innovation in energy sources like geothermal technologies is a big topic of conversation in my constituency, to the minister: is our government willing to take these innovative ideas into consideration as potential solutions for my constituents, and what steps are you taking to develop additional energy sources like geothermal?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, we're excited about the potential for geothermal in Alberta. It's innovative technologies like geothermal that'll help diversify our natural resource potential. There are several companies here in Alberta that have expressed interest in developing this potential. Alberta is already a leader in drilling technology, and we know that we can be leaders in geothermal, and we are happy to work with any company that wants to invest here.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that Alberta is an energy province and given that one form of energy that is becoming increasingly important in the world is the production of lithium and given that Alberta has underground salt lakes from which lithium can be harvested, can the minister explain how this government can encourage a new industry such as lithium and help put people in my constituency back to work drilling for another Alberta energy product?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, we're also very excited about the potential for lithium here in Alberta and understand that we have some very rich lithium brines in the Devonian formations near Fox Creek, Leduc, and Swan Hills. Encouraging investment in geothermal and lithium production is important for Alberta and important to diversifying our economy, and that's why we are taking steps to make Alberta the most competitive jurisdiction in all of North America to attract companies and innovation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mobile-home Owner Consumer Protection

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For years mobile-home owners have come to me with stories of sky-high lot rents and unaccountable management bodies. There are more than 30,000 Albertans living in mobile-home communities across our province. People purchase a mobile home with the belief that it will be an affordable way in to home ownership. However, the sad reality is that people are being priced out of their own homes because they can't afford to pay lot fees, which climb to upwards of $1,000 a month. To the Minister of Service Alberta: will you commit today to launch a review of the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta is rising.

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. Thank you to the member opposite for bringing up this important topic. We know that mobile-home tenants and landlords have different concerns than do those living in and owning other residential property. We are hearing Albertans' concerns and are taking their concerns seriously. We are continuing to consult and encourage mobile-home site tenants and landlords to forward suggestions for amendments to the current legislation to rta@gov.ab.ca.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that mobile-home residents do not have any recourse against their management bodies and given that in many cases their lot rents have become higher than the mortgage payments for the home itself and given that these residents want access to the residential tenancy dispute resolution service, to the minister: will you consider giving the residents some form of recourse that allows them to avoid the costs, intimidation, and time commitment of taking these matters to court?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we have heard some concerns from the public, and we are listening to those concerns. I want to remind all Albertans, including the member opposite, that my door is open and I welcome discussions on this very important issue. It is also good to note that if someone wants to be added to the stakeholder list, they can also send an e-mail to the address I mentioned earlier, rta@gov.ab.ca. Our government is committed to ensuring the safety and security of all Albertans, so we will continue to meet with stakeholders and those with concerns to better understand this issue.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many of the residents living in mobile homes are seniors and given that I've actually heard from seniors who were trapped in their homes because snow and ice wasn't cleared by the responsible management bodies and given that many seniors living on fixed incomes are asking how they are supposed to afford the rising costs with no way to pay for them, to the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what are doing to assist these residents, and do you believe they deserve a review of the act to ensure that their concerns are heard and addressed?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to remind the member opposite that they had four years to act on this file, and if he's not happy with the current status, he should speak with his caucus colleagues. While he's doing that, our government will continue to meet and consult because we are committed to ensuring the safety and security of Albertans, including seniors. If the member has specific concerns, I would be pleased to meet with him outside of this Chamber to discuss this very important matter.

Bill 7 Consultation

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, last week I asked the Minister of Municipal Affairs why he failed to consult with Alberta's municipalities on Bill 7. His response was that he had given municipalities "a heads-up on the priorities of our ministry." Simply telling people what you're going to do to them is not consultation. Now, my caucus and I have been doing the consultation this minister skipped, and we're hearing that his priorities are creating a race to the bottom for municipalities. To the minister: why won't you actually start listening to municipalities and stop your race-to-the-bottom bill?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. In the last election municipalities asked us to give them more powers when it comes to offering tax incentives. We ran on this, and we were given a record mandate from Albertans to implement it. Since introducing Bill 7, we have had a lot of positive feedback from municipalities and business leaders.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much. Given that municipalities have expressed concerns to us about not being consulted and given that municipalities have raised concerns about how this might impact industry in places like the Industrial Heartland, which rely on regional co-operation between municipalities, co-operation that could be impacted negatively by this bill, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: did you avoid consulting because you don't understand how important regional co-operation is, or is it that you simply don't care?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Once again, we have heard from a few municipalities. This is coming from the Fort Saskatchewan mayor, Gale Katchur. She said: municipalities have been lobbying the provincial government to improve the competitive landscape for investments through an incentive program; the city of Fort Saskatchewan looks forward to working with the provincial government and our regional partners to develop this overall Alberta-based approaches to attract investment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Member Ceci: Well, seeing as there are 342 municipalities, Mr. Speaker, it'd be interesting to hear the complete list. Given that we've heard from municipalities who weren't consulted on this legislation and given that we've heard from municipalities who weren't asking for this legislation and given that we heard from municipalities who are worried about how this legislation might impact their municipalities, their ratepayers, and their industries, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will the minister today table a complete list of everyone who has been consulted about this legislation and their feedback? If he won't, is it because . . .

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The one thing we will not take from the NDP is lecturing us on how to create a viable environment for our businesses to do well. We ran on the promise to reignite our economy, give our municipalities the tools that they need to make sure they attract businesses. That is what we have done. It's a promise made, a promise kept.

The Speaker: The Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Pipeline Development

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 24 the people of Alberta won. They won because the B.C. Court of Appeal ruled that British Columbia's ideological NDP government cannot impose environmental laws aimed at killing the Trans Mountain pipeline. Alberta has continuously been attacked by other jurisdictions and interest groups, and it's nice to see a change. With this win and a new government that is committed to building pipelines, Alberta's hopes of getting a pipeline to tidewater grow. To the minister. There is still a lot of work to do. How do you intend on getting pipelines built when we still face so much opposition?

Mrs. Savage: Thank you for that question. I would like to point out that it was exactly exactly five years ago today, on June 17, 2014, when the federal cabinet approved the Northern Gateway pipeline. The Northern Gateway pipeline, much like the Trans Mountain pipeline, at the time had the support of the majority of Canadians, not only Albertans but Canadians and British Columbians. But we know that that's not always enough to get a pipeline built, and that's why our government is taking a stronger approach to stand up and fight for pipelines.

The Speaker: The Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's obvious that Alberta needs new pipelines in order for our energy sector to thrive. Given that numerous foreign interest groups sink millions of dollars into land-locking Alberta energy and given that the Alberta government has pledged to create an energy war room to take the fight to them and given that social media platforms these foreign interest groups use have been proven to be an uncontrollable platform of both good and bad information, how exactly does the minister plan to combat the barrage of negative attacks and the spreading of misinformation?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy has the call.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is exactly why we're setting up the energy war room, to dispel the myths and lies about our energy sector. Governments have been far too complacent for far too long. We've already started to fight back, and we started that with the Trans Mountain Yes to TMX ad campaign. We launched our more assertive approach to fighting against C-69 and C-48. More recently I sent a letter to National Geographic dispelling the myths and the lies that were in their article, and we're setting up a public inquiry into foreign sources of foreign funding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's our hope, of course, that new pipelines are in our future. Given that these pipelines are largely supported by the vast majority of communities in Alberta and British Columbia and given that a majority of First Nations have also shown their support and wish to be a partner in the development of our resources, how does the minister plan to work with indigenous groups who are in opposition to the development of pipelines?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the majority of indigenous people support the Trans Mountain pipeline. There are over 130 First Nations who want to be participants and want to purchase and have an equity stake in the pipeline, so we are taking steps to support these groups, to support indigenous groups that are pro development. We're doing that through things like our indigenous opportunity corporation, that will help them buy equity, and through helping to fund pro-development groups to litigate with our $10 million litigation fund.

Artificial Intelligence Industry

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is ranked third in the world for artificial intelligence and machine learning, and because of this, companies such as Google DeepMind have opened their first facility outside of the U.K. here in Edmonton, Alberta. Our NDP government recognized the critical timing of investing in AI, committing $100 million over five years to ensure that Alberta remains a world leader. We clearly put a stake in the ground, sending a message to the world that Alberta is open for business when it comes to high tech and AI. To the minister of economic development: are you pulling that stake out of the ground, or will you commit to fully supporting the AI commitment we made?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fixing Alberta's fiscal and economic problems is job number one. We support programs to get Albertans back to work, but Albertans deserve fair return for their money. Programs such as the Alberta investor tax credit is a program that we are taking a close look at to determine whether it's a good program for Albertans.

Mr. Bilous: I appreciate that the minister is not just cutting that program.

Given that talent is the most important element in determining where tech companies like Apple, Google, and Facebook will go and given that low taxes are not a factor in their decision without a talent pipeline, they will go elsewhere and given that our NDP government made a $50 million investment in high-tech seats at postsecondary institutions, resulting in 6,000 more grads, to the same minister: what steps have you taken to ensure that we will continue to develop talent to attract these tech giants?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government will not take economic lessons from the previous government. What we are doing to attract investment in artificial intelligence to this province is attracting all sorts of investment through reducing red tape, scrapping the carbon tax, and introducing our job-creation tax cut. That will continue to attract all types of investment to our province. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll have order.

Mr. Bilous: Clearly, the minister has not met with these companies.

Given that under our NDP government we put Alberta boots on the ground in Silicon Valley to attract investment back home and to support Alberta companies and given that our government worked with Air Canada, EIA, city of Edmonton, and the business community to secure a direct flight from Edmonton to San Francisco, will the minister commit to continuing the incredible work we started or will she tell Apple, Google, Facebook, and Microsoft that Alberta is closed for business because this UCP government doesn't understand the tech industry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The incredible work the previous government did of driving us on a path towards $100 billion in debt, mortgaging the future of our children and grandchildren – the NDP drove Alberta into a jobs crisis. They drove investment out of Alberta. That's why Albertans elected this government, to get Albertans working again and attract investment to this province.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Manning is rising with a question.

Out-of-province Health Services

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A constituent of mine, Rajdeep, was on his way back to Alberta when he began to experience cognitive issues during a layover in Vancouver. He was moved to a B.C. hospital, but his condition became worse, and he is currently in a coma. Rajdeep's family requested assistance from this Health minister on May 15 to have Rajdeep transferred to Alberta. It is unacceptable that when Rajdeep's family asked this government for help, the Health minister's office said that they were unwilling to pay for an air ambulance or provide any assistance. To the Minister of Health: why didn't you do more to bring Rajdeep home to his family?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for the question. I thank the member for the e-mail that was forwarded to me. I am happy to continue to try to get answers for her constituent on that issue.

Ms Sweet: Well, given that one can only imagine the distress that Rajdeep's family was in, being away from him during this difficult time, and that there is precedence for governments to help cover the costs of helping Albertans to get home to be with their families and to get the care and support that they need and given that the compassionate thing to do was just to help this family in their time of need, without delay, again to the Minister of Health: will you do what you should have done from the very start and cover the $16,705 bill that the family had to pay out of pocket to get Rajdeep home?

Mr. Shandro: I think, Mr. Speaker, what I'm being asked to do is adjudicate a specific claim here on the floor of this Chamber, and I don't think that's responsible. I'm happy to take the concerns of the constituent of the hon. member and to get answers for that constituent so that they can understand what happened.

Ms Sweet: Well, unfortunately, Minister, that's not good enough.

Given that the Health minister's office was made aware again of this issue on May 15 through my office and took eight full days to get back to my constituent's family, only then to decline them assistance, and given that I again personally followed up with the minister last Monday, again asking for assistance for this family, to the Minister of Health: will you at least apologize to this family for the undue stress that you have caused given your inadequate and irresponsible response to this family?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, a process is in place in the ministry and within AHS to decide on these types of issues. I don't think it's responsible for a minister to be adjudicating on a case-by-case basis here on the floor of the Chamber. I'm happy to try and find the answers for this constituent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland is rising.

Highway 60 Overpass

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The impacts of the economic downturn have affected all Albertans. In our area the largest impacts have been to the energy sector and also in the mining industry, a direct result of the NDP's premature phase-out of coal-generated power. The accelerated coal phase-out is not only killing jobs but it's also destroyed the tax base in the county of Parkland. Before the election there was an announcement for the construction of a highway 60 overpass, which would alleviate the traffic issues where a CN Rail line meets highway traffic. This overpass is vital to the industrial park's expansion, local businesses as well as fire and ambulance service in our area. To the Minister of Transportation: are you able to advise that the plans for the highway 60 overpass are proceeding?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question and his advocacy. I'd like him to know that the planning and design are completed for the twinning project. There are about 15,000 vehicles that travel this stretch of highway 60 every day, and 25 per cent of that is trucks. I understand it's a high-priority project for the area. As you know, our government is currently reviewing all projects to determine funding alongside other priorities. I will report this project when we get done the budget and capital planning process.

Mr. Getson: Given that the former government ignored how large a local impact the accelerated, premature closure of those coal mines would be and given that the overpass would at minimum reduce the severity of the economic impact of that decision on the business community and serve as a much-needed access for those vehicles, will the minister confirm that projects such as the overpass that assist in the generation of revenue will take priority over the feel-good, cash-hole projects promised by the province's government on their way out the door?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the thoughtlessness of the NDP government has caused needless pain all across Alberta but especially in coal-producing areas. I understand that this project is a high priority for the member and his constituents and that it has a positive effect on the vitality of the region. My department is working on securing the necessary lands for this project as well as relocating utilities before we can proceed further. I urge the hon. member to stay in touch on this one as we go.

Mr. Getson: Well, the minister has pretty much answered my question here, but this may be a little extra . . .

The Speaker: You can take a pass.

Mr. Getson: I might have to take a pass.

I really appreciate your answers, sir, and we'll get back to our constituencies. I want to ask if you would be willing to meet with the business owners out in the area as well as the county of Parkland to just bring them up to speed as well?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. You don't usually get reviews that good, so thank you. I will say, to answer the hon. member's question, that it would be my pleasure, at a time that you and I mutually arrange, to schedule a meeting with the good people from Parkland county and the good people from the Acheson Business Association, and we could talk about this further.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Corporate Taxation and Job Creation

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 16, 2019, Albertans overwhelmingly chose to elect a UCP government on a mandate of reversing the damages caused by negligent and harmful NDP socialist policies. Will the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance explain how the job-creation tax cut will benefit my constituents in Sherwood Park and all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Sherwood Park chamber of commerce executive director, Todd Banks, recently expressed optimism about the government's business-friendly policies. He said, and I quote: in the past four weeks just talking to our membership, there's a feeling of optimism by members and their businesses that will trickle down into jobs. Our commitment to Sherwood Park and to all Alberta is to make Alberta one of the most competitive places in North America, attracting new businesses and bringing thousands of jobs back into this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wow. That's great news.

Back to the minister. Given that government revenues declined when the NDP increased taxes, causing reduced competitiveness of small Alberta businesses, and given that their reduced competitiveness affected the ability of these small Alberta companies to gainfully employ young people and given that youth unemployment rose to staggering levels under the NDP, can the minister please expound on how the job-creation tax cut will bring opportunity back to our next generation of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member was correct. In fact, when the members opposite were in government, when they raised corporate taxes, they actually collected less corporate tax revenue the next year. Under the NDP government youth unemployment rose to its highest levels in recent memory. The real minimum wage for far too many youth is zero dollars per hour. Bill 2 and Bill 3 will create opportunity and bring back employment and get our youth the much-needed jobs they need.

The Speaker: The Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given our promise that we will honour our platform commitment to get Albertans back to work and given that Alberta must compete nationally and globally to ensure prosperity here at home, will the minister please explain how the job-creation tax cut will make Alberta competitive again, nationally and globally?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the midst of one of the worst recessions in this province's history the members opposite, when they were in government, implemented a 20 per cent increase in corporate taxes and the largest tax increase in the province's history without advising Albertans, the job-killing carbon tax. Our government is reversing those policies. We will bring employment and opportunity back into this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will move to the introduction of bills. Those of you that may have other engagements, I encourage you to exit the Chamber expeditiously.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Does anyone have a document to table? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of an e-mail from a family in my riding concerned that the Premier and the government are headed down the wrong path about the environment, and they want to know what the plan actually is.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: Hon. members, ordres du jour.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is rising.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill 201.

Someone can have a life-threatening allergy and not know it until they have a severe reaction. This was my experience with myself and my children. While I knew my allergies and their severity, I had no idea they had passed on to my children. Bill 201 was inspired by my own experience as someone who suffers from life-threatening allergies and as a mother of two children with life-threatening allergies.

My personal story is what drove me to create Bill 201. The first is my children's allergies, which developed at ages two and five, and the other is as an adult with a life-threatening allergy. I've had accidental contacts with allergens that have given me anaphylactic reactions. An incident that happened to me as an adult: I had eaten a small piece of chicken, thinking it was coated in bread crumbs, but it was actually coated in pecans. It was one of my worst allergies. I went into severe anaphylactic shock; unable to breathe, eyes and throat were swelling, and, very confused, was unable to give myself my own EpiPen. I relied on a stranger to help me.

Bill 201 will do two things. One, it will mandate the presence of EpiPens in our schools. This would be the first in Canada. Two, it would mirror many of the great policies from Ontario's Sabrina's Law.

The bill applies to schools governed by the School Act and the Northland School Division Act.

An EpiPen is a standard dosage of epinephrine. When someone has a life-threatening reaction, epinephrine is the only medication that can save someone's life.

The primary responsibility for a student's allergy is the student's and their parents'. I don't want anyone to think that there's a shift in responsibility from families to schools. One reason for schools to have EpiPens on hand is in the case that someone doesn't know they have an allergy and then has a life-threatening reaction. Another reason is for those students with an EpiPen at school that cannot reach it during a crisis. Sabrina's Law was named after a child who had an EpiPen in their locker but could not reach it in time.

The other part of my bill will follow Ontario's Sabrina's Law. It mandates that schools have anaphylactic policies to reduce exposure to allergens. It also mandates that schools have a communication policy to distribute information about life-threatening allergies. Additionally, schools will need to keep a plan for children with life-threatening allergies on hand. Parents are responsible for supplying the key medical information and keeping it up to date. Schools must have regular training for their employees. Food Allergy Canada has a free 30-minute online course for educators and for the general public. I think this would be sufficient as far as the bill is concerned.

Boards will have the freedom to develop what they consider to be the appropriate level of training. Some have been concerned about the level of training, but an EpiPen is a standard dosage and is generally self-administered. Anyone who has ever used an EpiPen knows that it's orange to the thigh, blue to the sky. Training should be enough that an employee could help a student with a life-threatening allergic reaction without taking time away from other classroom initiatives. Employees will have liability protection when helping a student. They will have peace of mind knowing they can help a child and maybe save a life without fear of legal consequences.

Consultation was done with groups such as the Alberta Teachers' Association, the Alberta School Boards Association, Food Allergy Canada, and the College of Alberta School Superintendents. The Alberta Teachers' Association is supportive of the bill. We are on the same page with training being sufficient for teachers to help a child in need without taking away from other classroom priorities. The ATA also appreciates the fact that EpiPens are standard doses and are autoinjectors. They do not need to be medical professionals to offer students assistance.

Superintendents and boards have some concerns, which we think we've addressed. There are concerns about liability for boards and staff, but Bill 201 provides liability protection for employees that help save a child's life. As requested, boards will have the freedom to acquire EpiPens in their own way. There are concerns about the costs of EpiPens, but many schools have had EpiPens on hand. I've donated to my school in the past, as many other parents have. We will be working with nonprofits to help lower the costs as much as possible.

I've been delighted with the feedback from the education community. I've received letters of support from school boards, administrators, teachers, and parents across Canada. The feedback has been supportive because they feel that this is the right approach to making our schools safer for children. Many of our schools already have policies in place and are proactively looking after kids.

We just want to make sure that there is a standard across the province.

When my daughter was two years old, she had spent the day with her grandparents. We had no idea she had any allergies. She had never even had an allergic reaction in her life. On that fateful day my daughter was visiting her grandparents, and like many grandparents, they'd left candies and nuts out on the table. I picked her up in the afternoon, went home, and then came back in the evening for another visit. She ate one peanut that she found on the floor, and went into severe anaphylactic shock.

Luckily, because of my own allergies, I recognized the signs of anaphylactic reaction. I gave her medication, but she got worse. Repeated shots of epinephrine did nothing to stabilize her, and she began the fight of her life. We took her to the hospital. They gave her more medication to save her life as we went by ambulance from Vegreville to Edmonton. Her condition was so severe that at one point STARS was hovering above us, just in case we needed them for a traffic jam. None of the medication was working, and at one point I decided to hold her straight up in the air so that she could breathe easier. She was blue and limp. Her eyes and face were swollen beyond recognition. But by a miracle, the peanut left her system, and she started to get better.

I made a promise that day to my God that I would advocate for children with life-threatening allergies. In 2007 I joined an ASBA advisory panel for anaphylaxis. I worked with a parent who is anaphylactic and has children who are anaphylactic. I worked with administrators, teachers, and anaphylaxis Canada to make our schools safer for children with life-threatening allergies. This bill will help families avoid reliving my own personal experience.

I hope that the House finds this bill in the best interest of these children and that it will support it. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 201? The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak in support of Bill 201, Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act. I want to thank my colleague the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing forward this important piece of legislation. As someone who personally suffers from allergies, I understand the importance of being diligent about exposure to allergens and the critical need for EpiPens in the event of an anaphylactic reaction.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 is a common-sense piece of legislation. At the core of this bill is the protection of our children when they're at school. My hon. colleague from Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville has already shared with us the tragic events involving 13-year-old Sabrina Shannon in 2004. While it took that terrible event for Ontario to act, we do not want or need it to be the case here in Alberta.

Bill 201 has two key components, prevention and treatment. In terms of prevention measures, this bill requires all schools to put anaphylactic policies in place. This requirement ensures that steps are taken to reduce exposure to allergens from the outset. Parents must also provide schools with current and accurate information about their children's allergies. In turn, schools must put a plan in place for each affected student. This plan will include the nature of the allergy, avoidance strategies, and how to treat the allergy if needed.

The second critical component of this bill relates to the last point, treatment. This bill mandates the presence of an EpiPen in all publicly funded schools. While students with life-threatening allergies tend to have their own EpiPens, they may not always be able to find or use them in an emergency. For example, Sabrina's EpiPen was in her locker when she needed it the most. As we know, the consequences were fatal. The availability of EpiPens in schools will ensure that teachers and staff are able to respond decisively to a suspected anaphylactic reaction.

EpiPens are simple tools that have the power to save lives. As mentioned previously, it's blue to the sky, orange to the thigh. We anticipate that training on the use of EpiPens will be straightforward, and we're giving school boards the discretion to set up training for their schools.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The bill will also protect staff from liability if they administer the EpiPen in good faith. As a parent myself I know the joy of parenthood also comes with a fair share of worry. Every day parents across Alberta drop their kids off at school. For parents of children with life-threatening allergies their worries are compounded by the lack of reliable treatment options if their children experiences an anaphylactic reaction. This does not have to be the case. Madam Speaker, advances in modern technology have ensured that our children should not die from an anaphylactic reaction. We know how to prevent them and, when necessary, treat them. It is unthinkable to me that a child living in Canada in 2019 could be at risk of dying from an allergic reaction in school. I imagine that this tragic reality is unthinkable to other members of the Assembly.

This is why I urge all of us to vote in favour of this common-sense and potentially life-saving bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and take part in the first debate of the week on this bill from the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, the Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act. I'd like to thank that member for bringing this bill forward. I think this is an important discussion for us to have. Indeed, I guess, probably over the last decade, even a couple of decades, we've seen a rising number of allergies that children seem to develop early on in life. People can develop them later in life.

The severity of an anaphylactic reaction: I can only imagine what that experience is like. I've been fortunate, Madam Speaker, in that while I have a wide variety of food intolerances and a few medication allergies, I've yet to encounter any that for me has caused any form of an anaphylactic reaction. I can only imagine the fear and the anxiety that would come with that: feeling your throat beginning to close, beginning to lose your breath, not being able to breathe, not knowing why, and potentially not having anything on hand to reverse or stop that reaction. Certainly, we've heard some tragic stories of children and others who have lost their lives because they were unable to get treatment in time, so I think it's quite reasonable to sit down and have this discussion today and talk about how we can ensure that our schools at least may be a safer place.

Of course, as others have noted, Madam Speaker, and as has been discussed, we recognize that schools are places where children can be very easily accidentally exposed to a large number of things. Certainly, over the years we've developed a wide variety of protocols and other things in place by which schools try to protect students. We've seen some great advances in the food-production industry in labelling all products that contain nuts, trying to find a way to make products that do not in fact contain nuts. We've seen a wide variety of alternatives that have come forward to provide for children. Of course, schools have introduced a wide variety of policies and approaches to try to minimize the opportunities for students who may be allergic to be exposed.

Even with that being the case, there are still opportunities and there are still occasions, as we've heard, where things can slip through the cracks and students can potentially be accidentally exposed to something to which they are allergic and find themselves in that situation of medical crisis. I think it's, again, appropriate that we look at ways that we can ensure that our schools are equipped, that teachers and other staff are informed, have a clear understanding of the dangers, how they can be averted, how they can be addressed if an allergic reaction occurs and, indeed, have a plan in place.

That may even be one of the more important parts, Madam Speaker. My understanding is that many schools have already taken this step. Indeed, we know that a lot of our schools are proactive. Our boards are proactive. They think ahead, so they plan for these sorts of circumstances. We know that there are schools existing now and boards that have already put procedures in place. They have procedures, and they know what steps to take if a child has an anaphylactic reaction. However, we recognize that that is not universal at this point, so it makes sense that we would put a system in place to ensure that all schools would take that prudent step and so that all parents can rest assured knowing that when their child goes to school, if they should be caught in that situation, there is a plan in place to address it. It makes sense. When you're dealing with a problem, you want to sit down, carefully think out the possibilities of the circumstances, and you want to carefully plan out, "What would be the best way for us to move forward?" and make sure you're putting a good and robust system in place.

As part of that, it seems reasonable as well to look at having each school have an epinephrine autoinjection device. Now, EpiPen is the common colloquial that's used. We recognize, of course, that that is a particular product name. There are some others, so I appreciate that the bill refers simply to the more generic so that, of course, the schools would have the opportunity to seek out what would be the most cost-effective epinephrine autoinjector to have on hand. That may be the EpiPen. It may be another brand.

Again, it makes sense that we look at working with schools to ensure that they would have at least one of these devices on-site so that, as has been noted by the member and by others, if a student should happen to forget theirs at home, if it's been misplaced, if it's in a locker and they're not able to give the combination because they're not able to breathe, not able to speak, the school would have something on-site to be able to assist them.

Now, when the last member was speaking, the Member for Camrose, I did note that she talked about one situation where a young girl died because her EpiPen was in her locker and that led to her death. Is that correct? The one thought that did occur to me on hearing that, Madam Speaker, is that it's also possible, I would imagine, that if the EpiPen in the school is at a location that is not close enough to where the student might be or if there's some fumbling or difficulty in accessing it, that also might not be able to occur, then, in time. Of course, I don't know the specific circumstances and how quickly it led to that situation for the young woman. That said, even if that is the case, the fact that the school has an EpiPen on-site would likely make it far more likely that that child would be able to be treated than not. Again, I don't think that would be any reason not to move forward with this.

But there are a couple of things that I have been thinking about with this, Madam Speaker. It's my understanding that there was not necessarily a great deal of consultation that went into bringing this bill forward. In many respects, I understand, this is what appears on the surface to be a common-sense solution. Indeed, I think it is, as I said, a reasonable direction to move in. But what I always recognize and indeed I've recognized, you know, particularly in my work here but in some of my other lines of work that I've had before, is that often what appears to be a very simple thing on the surface may have complications to it that we don't necessarily understand or recognize. I think it's valuable in these situations where we have a proposal as legislators, where we say that this seems a reasonable step and this is something that we would like to see all schools implement, that we take at least a moment in some part of bringing this bill forward, in moving forward – perhaps if it doesn't happen before this bill passes in this House, assuming that it does, that even within the regulatory process there would be the opportunity to sit down with teachers, with school administrators, with medical professionals who work in schools, to talk with them about how best to implement this.

Of course, as I mentioned, we have schools that have already introduced processes and they already have protocols in place. So it would be worth while, perhaps, to sit down and do a review of those and be able to make a good recommendation to schools, then, on how they implement their own, or indeed to be sure that we structure it so the things that we are requiring schools to do are going to have the effect that we want them to have.

The other concern that I would bring forward, Madam Speaker, is that there's no provision for or discussion of, really, the cost of this in this bill. Ideally, in my view, if this is something that we as legislators are going to require schools to have and if it is indeed something that is there for student safety and it is there for the public good, then it makes sense to me that the government should provide the funding to cover it. You know, I've heard members talk about how they don't want to see that as a barrier, and I agree. I'd hate to see that be the reason for this not to be able to go forward.

I would note that in the discussions around this, the Member for Lethbridge-East did a quick calculation at the committee based on, I think – with numbers of about 200 students per school, 3,300, 3,400 schools, he estimated that it'd be roughly half a million dollars across the province. He termed that "a fairly minor cost." Respectfully, I think, yeah. I would agree with that in terms of something that's providing coverage for every school in the province, but that could, you know, be an unfair burden on some schools versus others, a school that has a thousand students versus a school that has a few hundred; that's a difference in cost and certainly a difference in funding that they receive from the province. Again, if we are imposing additional costs on schools, however small those may be, I think it's reasonable that the government then step up and provide funding.

Indeed, I've heard members talk about, you know, doing fund raising or nonprofits being able to step up and help, but we must remember, Madam Speaker, that many of those nonprofits also come back to government for funding and support because they are doing important and good work in the community. Unfortunately, in many cases I think nonprofits are having to step up to do work that government should have been doing in the first place. These are investments that previous governments have chosen not to make, whether that be around issues with housing, homelessness, mental health, addictions, and substance use. So I would prefer not to put another burden on nonprofits that are already doing important work in the community. I would prefer not to put parents in the situation where they have to do yet another fundraiser for their school. One of the things our government did was reduce school fees by 25 per cent, which is a very important step, and I'd hate to see further fees and costs being imposed on parents because of something we brought forward in this Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-City Centre for his comments with regard to this bill and for his support for this bill. Maybe just to comment on those for a second. I do know that in the last four years I did have several conversations with people, one with a young lady by the name of Mrs. Nicole Borsato, who brought this to my attention. In the process of hearing that the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville was putting this private member's bill forward, I took all of the information and all of the comments that she had provided to me and made sure that she had them. So there was at least some consultation that I know that went to the member.

You know, as a teacher for 30 years I'm glad to be able to speak to this bill, to Bill 201, the Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act. I believe that it's an important bill. Now, I know that as a teacher one of the things I believed was that in many ways I was not very well prepared to handle some of the medical issues that my students would sometimes be faced with in school, and over a 30-year period of time there were many. I can remember having a student that would, on a fairly regular basis, go through petite mal seizures in the middle of class. I can remember one day a student in panic knocking on my door, bursting through the door, and saying that somebody was dying in the parking lot, and it was a student having a grand mal seizure. I can remember one of the first subbing incidents that I ever had, a student sliding down ice and falling and a piece of ice literally slicing the leg all the way up the thigh. Basketball injuries galore from knees to ankles to ACLs to you name it to concussions. It wasn't until the last five years of my 30-year teaching career that we actually had to go through concussion protocol as coaches. I can remember one student having been hit by a car and other students running the student into the hallway, literally dragging her, and me having to say: "Whoa, whoa. Stop. You could be doing some real damage here."

I'm very pleased to be able to stand here today and speak to Bill 201 because I believe that it addresses one of those issues that as a teacher we knew existed, and that was that students with severe allergies could potentially die from anaphylactic shock. We knew as teachers that many of our students had allergies and that they could have a severe allergic reaction and that that could, at the end of day, you know, restrict their airways to the point where they really could not breathe and could face very severe consequences. As the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville pointed out, children with allergies struggle not only with the physical realities of having these allergies but with sometimes being teased and even bullied, so I believe that this is a bill that is well worth being brought before this House. It's aimed at protecting children with allergies.

By mandating the creation of policies and procedures to react to anaphylactic reactions within the school, I believe that it does a good job of balancing the various responsibilities of parents, who are their guardians, and teachers and school boards and school board officials with trying to make sure that when we have these children under our care that they have the capacity to be taken care of and that they are safe at school. Under this bill families will still bear the primary responsibility for making sure that schools know what is happening in their children's lives and know that this could be a problem and that they have the responsibility of communicating that to the school, that the communication of information pertaining to life-threatening allergies will allow for the schools to be able to better respond should anaphylactic reactions occur at the school.

I can remember starting every year off with a staff meeting where we would go through a list of the students that had various issues in their lives, where one of them would be allergies, and where we would have to make sure that as teachers we knew who in our classroom had allergic reactions and could have an anaphylactic reaction and where the EpiPens were in the school and those kinds of issues.

Parents would bear the responsibility under this bill for communicating this to the school, and the schools will therefore bear the responsibility of making sure that they have the capacity to respond to specific students, and they would have the responsibility to maintain a file for each of these students detailing pertinent information like instructions from health professionals that may be attached to these reports. They'd have the responsibility imposed on the school that they would ensure that parents supply the allergy information upon enrolment. We know that in many schools, at least in schools that I talked with in Drayton Valley, these were common practices. I don't think it's asking schools, necessarily, to go too far down what they're already doing in many cases.

School boards would bear the responsibility under this act to make sure that they maintain an anaphylaxis policy and to ensure that each school has at least one EpiPen. I think that's a very important thing if they haven't done so already. While many school boards have, I believe if they haven't done it, that they need to do that. You know, this bill leaves enough latitude to the school boards to be able to prepare for this if they haven't been ready to do that yet. I think it's January of 2020 that it gives the school boards notice to be prepared to be able to deal with this issue so that they're not caught off guard by a sudden change of policy.

Anaphylaxis can be extremely serious. We know that. It's a potentially life-threatening allergic reaction. Much in this law is going to mirror a law that was in Ontario called Sabrina's Law that was passed in 2005. Sabrina's Law was passed and improved prevention and recognition and then intervention in order to save students from suffering the same fate as an Ontario student by the name of Sabrina Shannon, who died of an anaphylactic reaction.

Sabrina's Law covers the following kind of things in this law. It was the first piece of legislation in the world aimed at ensuring that children who suffered from anaphylactic reactions were actually protected while they were at school. It was named after Sabrina, a 13-year-old who died of an anaphylactic reaction while at school. It's been copied in over 10 American states and, I believe, in one Australian state. In Alberta we are following suit with these examples.

It mandates the creation of an exposure prevention strategy. Schools will have to consider who in their school has the capacity to have a reaction, an anaphylactic reaction, and maybe have the discussions about whether they're going to be a peanut-free zone or how they're going to deal with these kinds of issues. It mandates anaphylaxis management training for school personnel so that the teachers within the school or the aides or the administrators would have some understanding about how to recognize an anaphylactic reaction as well as how to deal with it, where the EpiPen is, and those kinds of things.

It requires establishment of individual anaphylaxis emergency management plans so that every teacher would have an understanding of what those processes are, what the steps are that have to be taken should they encounter this in their classroom or out on the field.

Sabrina's Law provides immunity from lawsuits for acts done in good faith. As professionals we have to understand that they're teachers primarily, first and foremost, but because they have a duty of care and a duty of protection, they would be expected to intervene. They shouldn't be worried about whether or not there's going to be a lawsuit should they try to take action.

Bill 201, the Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act, mirrors these elements within Sabrina's Law. With various elements from the Ontario law being mirrored, our students can have similar protection to the students in Ontario.

In addition to the provisions which mirror Sabrina's Law, Bill 201 mandates that all publicly funded schools have an EpiPen on-site. Now, I think, probably, for most school districts and for most schools this is already being done. As a teacher of 30 years I know that for probably the last 15 years of my teaching career, at least the last 15 years, I believe that every school in the Wild Rose school division, especially in Drayton Valley that I'm aware of, had an EpiPen. We are all told where the EpiPen is stored, where we can find it if we need it. These were things that we just did as a matter of practice, a common practice at the beginning of the school year, so that we knew where everything was. We had that management plan so that we could work through it. I believe that probably for most school boards and for most schools in Alberta this is something that's already being done, but if it isn't, we now know that it's going to be mandated with this law.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very proud to stand and offer my support to the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for her bill, Bill 201. I'm very proud to have sat in on the Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills Committee, subbing in for another member, and to have heard her very passionate defence of why she wanted to put this bill forward and what it means to her.

This bill really hits home for me personally as I, too, was a three-year-old going into anaphylactic shock at one point in my life. My very first time that I reacted to cashews, I was three years old, and I, too, was at my grandma's house. If there's one thing we can rely on grandmas for, it's that they always have really, really good snacks out. Unfortunately, I was allergic to what was on the table. Obviously, we didn't have an EpiPen available. I was three years old, and we didn't know. My grandma actually had to drive across town with a little girl in the back because she had no idea what was going on. Obviously, the regular signs of anaphylaxis were showing, but she didn't really know what she was getting herself into because I had never reacted before. Had she had an EpiPen, obviously everything would be much, much different. We weren't travelling from Vegreville to Edmonton, but we were definitely travelling from one end of town to the other. I continued to react a couple of other times, and what the doctors kept telling my family was that it will progressively get worse. You will have less and less time to administer an EpiPen or an injectable of epinephrine at any point. You will have less and less time because of the severity of the reaction getting stronger.

This bill is, I think, just integral within our schools. It's so important because, you know, if this is, say, the second or third time someone has reacted, you will have less time, and it's good to have one on hand. Now I, obviously, carry an EpiPen with me everywhere I go because, Lord knows, you don't want to react at any time. The nature of the job is that you're at different events, and you never know what you're going to come across. Now I carry my EpiPen in my purse, which is a lot more attractive than carrying it in a Winnie the Pooh fanny pack when I was in elementary school. Now I giggle about it because it was in all my school pictures. It was bright yellow and didn't really go with what I was wearing ever, but, hey, I was safe.

I was also bullied for that. When I was in school, I was known as the kid with the allergy: Michaela from whoever's class has a nut allergy. I'm sorry I used my own name in the Chamber, Madam Speaker, but you don't want to be known as the nut allergy kid. I also think that this would reduce that stigma that's associated with allergies because in addition to that, the other parents weren't as kind to my parents either. This was a newer thing, anaphylaxis in schools, and some parents really took issue that they, you know, were asked not to send nuts to school. We're kids, we touch everything, we're not exactly the cleanest, and you don't want to send somebody else into anaphylactic shock because of crosscontamination. I'm very thankful to have had a wonderful secretary at my school who actually sat down with me at St. Michael's elementary school in Medicine Hat because she, too, has an allergy. She had an EpiPen, and she always kind of had my back. Actually, while I was door-knocking in the last election, I knocked on her door, and she said: hey, you're the kid with the nut allergy. So it still follows me today, but that's okay.

This bill would give many parents, grandparents, and people like the people in my family, I think, peace of mind sending their kids to school. This is a really relatively easy response. We face so many difficult decisions in this Legislature on the lines of partisanship, on the lines of what our constituents want versus what interest groups want. You never really know how to balance those things, but I think that in this instance this is very clear cut, common sense, and what I think the Member for Highwood in committee said, a no-brainer. I couldn't actually agree with that more because this is a very simple solution. Given that most of these schools already have EpiPens on hand, this is just legislation and a little bit of backup and peace of mind for those parents and grandparents and everybody else in between who maybe doesn't.

I actually had my most recent reaction a couple of days before our party policy convention in May. I will say that you do have less time. It was the night before. I had just finished some door-knocking for my nomination. I stopped to grab my favourite butter chicken, and all of a sudden, lo and behold, they had started putting cashew butter in their butter chicken. I didn't know that, so I took it home. I was eating it, thinking, "This tastes better than usual," not to know that, honestly, a couple of minutes later I would start to blow up like a balloon, with all the regular signs: ears running, nose running, sick, and could not breathe. I then drove myself to the hospital, which was not the best decision I've ever made. I didn't give myself my EpiPen because I thought: well, I'm still breathing.

This takes out that middleman. This takes the onus off the person having the reaction and makes it available to teachers, to support staff, to people who know, you know, that it's blue to the sky, orange to the thigh, whatever it is, that can administer that EpiPen and takes the stress off the student, who likely is very young, because they're still school aged. They wouldn't have to administer that themselves or be able to tell somebody else they were having an allergic reaction.

Like I said, I think this is a no-brainer. I mean, we're going to hear a lot of things in committee, in this House that are partisan and heated. This is one that's just in the best interests of Alberta students, Madam Speaker, and I really commend the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing this forward and bringing us something that really will impact kids the day it's implemented.

Once again, you know, we talk about consultation a lot in this House, and I know, myself included, we ran on being a party that values consultation. I think the real stakeholders in this bill, in this particular legislation, are kids. They're kids like me. They're kids like the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville's children. They're kids that we all know and love and appreciate. Those are the kids that would ultimately be better off knowing that there's an EpiPen in their classroom or down the hall.

So I would just encourage all members of this House to put partisanship aside, to think about this from a parent's perspective, from my perspective, from the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville's perspective, and to vote yes to Bill 201. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill, private member's Bill 201, Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act. I'll start by thanking the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing forward an act to protect students as I think that that's a fundamental responsibility we have in this House as legislators, to pay attention and to do a good analysis of the needs of our constituents. That, of course, requires us to pay particular attention to the most vulnerable amongst us, in this case students, and to enact policies that will protect them, which I think are all very important socialist qualities. I'm very glad to see that they're bringing forward this kind of legislation in the House and speaking about, you know, the acts to protect and to seek out the vulnerabilities of the people who live in the province of Alberta and to make sure that the legislation supports the work that is being done for those vulnerable people.

I have some experience, as many of the members do, with, you know, dealing with people with allergies and the very serious and dramatic consequences of mistakenly being exposed to whatever allergen is there. I know that this is particularly often talked about with regard to peanuts, but many people know that epinephrine is very important for people with other kinds of allergies; for example, bee stings and so on. It's a very important medical device to have available in a school setting.

It really speaks to the values that we have here in the House, particularly on this side, where we seek to provide wide-ranging preventative health care services available to all Albertans. The fact that it's being particularly extended in this one narrow circumstance is quite positive, but I'd like to see it extended a little bit beyond that in time. But for the meantime I'm happy to support an act that at least takes a good step in the right direction with regard to, you know, universally available public health care in this province.

I worked for many years at Camp He Ho Ha, Camp Health, Hope & Happiness, just west of the city, and I had an opportunity in my adolescence to learn a lot about people with fragile health conditions. That included, of course, people with severe allergic reactions. Of course, being in a rural setting, in a camp setting, you know, it was not as carefully arranged as homes are in the sense that once you learn your child has an allergy, you can clear out your home for that. In a camp setting, of course, there are many different kinds of allergies and things are not necessarily taken care of in a way that is as safe. Peanuts or insects or other kinds of things are sometimes present whether you try to work in a preventative manner or not. As a result, we did definitely have a number of students who had very serious anaphylactic reactions to things out at Camp He Ho Ha and had to learn to provide injections on an emergency basis. I'm very happy to know that this is now being required in the schools.

I know that going through an anaphylactic reaction is both physically, medically dangerous and also emotionally draining. It's very scary to find yourself not being able to breathe and not being able to take care of yourself because of your own shock reaction. It's very important to have someone else around you who can engage in the preventative health care that you require. I think that that's something that I very much would like to support in this act. I'm very happy that this act has been brought forward.

It does raise a couple of questions for me, however. Not in a negative sense; it provokes positively further thinking about the issue of: how do we protect the vulnerable amongst us, the children amongst us who have particular needs that may not be universal needs but are very important and specific to an individual? It speaks to a couple of things, I think, which are very important. The idea that we need to act as a society on behalf of others even when they may not affect us ourselves, I think, is a very important aspect of this kind of legislation.

I don't have any particular food allergies. I am clearly an omnivore. That's lucky for me. Just through some kind of genetic benevolence I don't have to worry about these kinds of things, yet I think it's very important that people like me are given the opportunity to act on behalf of others who do not have that kind of luck when it comes to their lives. Of course, I would love to see this government take on that kind of philosophical stance in general, where those of us who have the benefits of society and wealth and goodness of our biology are invited to and actually, in fact, through legislation are required to take care of others who do not have that level of luck in their lives.

I know, for example, that at Camp He Ho Ha we had on a regular basis kids come out who were learning to deal with their own type 1 diabetes and had been through a program at the Glenrose hospital, typically, and were now at a camp learning not simply to take their medications but how to do that when their life is not so structured and controlled as it often is at home, when suddenly they're at a camp where their exercise levels are very different, their access to foods is very different, where they're engaged in activities, staying up later than they might normally do or getting up very early or camping outside, where they're not sleeping very well, all of those kinds of things. They would frequently have reactions to either high blood sugar or low blood sugar requiring either some insulin or perhaps glucose on an emergency basis.

It speaks to me, again, about: how do we move this kind of a bill from being a bill about a particular approach to being a bill about a general approach to caring for others in society? This will be great for people with anaphylactic reactions. It does nothing for kids with diabetes. Now, that means I'm still in favour of the bill. Of course, I care about the kids with anaphylactic reactions. But it also speaks to the fact that we should be thinking broader. We should move up a level of analysis when we think of these things and not simply say: "I have a personal experience, and I need to have a drug. Therefore, we should make that drug available." We should go to that next level that says, "People need drugs, and they need drugs for various reasons, and as a society we should meet all of those levels of need" and not simply go on, "My personal experience has taught me I need a particular thing," moving away from the personal to the general.

I think it's important that we realize that this bill moves in the right direction and invites us to do the same thing with a variety of other things, for example, as I've mentioned, with diabetes. We have a great policy here for schools that will be required to actually have a policy and have implements necessary, medications and tools necessary, to respond to anaphylactic shock, but do we have the same kind of policy in schools with regard to kids who have diabetes? Do all the schools have glucose available? Do all the schools have insulin available? Are they teaching school personnel how to deal with those issues? Do we require them to have some kind of policy around these issues? That's the kind of moving up to the next level that we have to talk about and not simply go on the basis of personalized experience to teach us what we have to do. We need to move to thinking about: what does this help us to understand?

I was very interested to see that in this bill there are a number of things that the government has made a decision to do. They have made a decision to require – it's very clear – every school and school board, including private and charter schools, to obey this law, which is very interesting because when it comes to GSAs, they're trying to work to not require the implementation.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Feehan: I'm speaking to the principle here as opposed to the act. The principle underlying it is that we are making decisions about requiring schools to follow good policy.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my privilege to rise today and outline my support for Bill 201, introduced by the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. The intent of the bill is simple. It is to ensure that schools have the resources they need to prevent and treat allergic reactions and, by extension, to protect the lives of children who suffer from life-threatening allergies.

To contextualize this bill, I want to provide some key statistics about food allergies in Canada. According to the government of Canada 1.2 million Canadians may be experiencing food allergies, and they believe that this number is growing. They estimate that 6 per cent of children experience food allergies. These statistics put into perspective how prevalent food allergies are in our society. Given this prevalence we must ensure that we are doing whatever we can to protect our children from the risks associated with allergies. Intuitively, then, one of the first places we should address are schools.

This bill does three things to protect students with life-threatening allergies. The first and most obvious, it requires all publicly funded schools to have an EpiPen. These include francophone, private, and charter schools under the School Act and schools under the Northland School Division Act. As I'm sure members of this Assembly know, individuals can be allergic to a myriad of things. Worse than that, however, is that many are unaware that they have allergies in the first place. An EpiPen is proven as an effective tool to save the life of a person experiencing anaphylaxis. This is why it is so critical to have EpiPens in schools not only for the students who know about their allergies but especially for those who do not.

The second is that Bill 201 requires that parents work together with schools and create plans for students with severe allergies. The third is that teachers or staff who administer an EpiPen will not be liable to punishment if they do so in good faith. Parents are in the best position to communicate critical information about their children's allergies directly to schools, and given that children must spend much of their week under the supervision of teachers and school staff, those individuals are well positioned to prevent and respond to allergic reactions. To state the obvious, Madam Speaker, a child's allergies are with them wherever they go. Plans to prevent and respond to these allergies should be in place at schools, where children spend much of their time. To summarize, this bill ensures that schools will have an effective and available treatment option in an emergency, that plans will be made to avoid emergency situations to begin with, and that teachers can be free from fear when taking action during an emergency. The challenges of managing an allergy are difficult enough for adults, let alone children. Here in Alberta we want our children to go to school and be focused on what they learn. Our government wants them to be free to work hard and play hard. The last thing we want them to be worried about is whether or not their allergies will flare up and whether anybody will be able to help them if they do.

Ninety-eight per cent of deaths occur when epinephrine is not administered within 15 minutes of an allergic reaction. Imagine, Madam Speaker, if your child was having difficulty breathing and their airways were swelling. Imagine then that they could be saved by a quick reaction and availability of an EpiPen. I am sure that everyone in this Assembly would be willing to do anything to save a child's life, and this bill will ensure teachers and staff can do exactly that. That is why I urge all members of this Assembly to vote in favour of Bill 201.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. As many have already done, I will just share some of my thoughts on this bill and also acknowledge the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing this forward. Certainly, you know, her personal experience with her own allergies and the allergies of her children: obviously, that's a pretty scary circumstance for any mom, any parent. I really commend her for making a difference, bringing forward some important legislation that could absolutely save lives.

I just want to speak also, being a mom myself. I have three boys, and two of them don't have allergies, but my eldest does. Although EpiPens aren't sort of what he needs to be healthy, he does have very severe allergies. Certainly, when he was a young child, he would go outside and play in the grass and climb in the trees. Then he'd come in and his face would be all blown up, and he was having trouble breathing. We'd rush to emergency. It's kind of hard in the summer, when it's a beautiful day like today, to keep your kid indoors. As a person myself with no allergies, at first I didn't understand at all what was going on, so it was a scary time for me as a young mom. Unfortunately, we spent a lot of time in emergency throughout his childhood.

Mostly he just got oxygen because he had allergies to environmental things like grass and snow mould, to flowers, to trees plus to all sorts of animals: dogs, cats, birds, everything. So he really had a lot of challenges as a kid, and these kinds of allergens were triggers for him with his asthma. Of course, he was treated for asthma. Mostly the kind of treatment was different than this bill brings forward. He often needed to be on oxygen. Obviously, the allergen needed to be removed from his environment. Even though it's different, I certainly appreciate the challenges you face when your child is not breathing properly. It's a serious situation. So I certainly have some understanding and empathy for the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville as a mom myself who had a child with some severe allergies although in a different area.

Just to clarify – some folks know this – we have two brothers in this Assembly, but we also have a mom and a son. I'm the mom. I'm the MLA for Edmonton-Riverview, and my son is a page. It's not that son I'm talking about, just to clarify – he's my baby; this guy is much older – just so people aren't confusing them or asking him about his allergies, because he doesn't have any.

I guess I just want to also talk a little bit about: we know that private members' bills are not money bills, right? The government is not going to be paying for EpiPens in schools across our province. You know, they can't have money in them. So I guess I do have some questions just about that. I know that it doesn't seem like much. It's, like, $150, $100. I mean, there are a few different approximations for how much an EpiPen costs. But who would bear the costs? That is a question about this bill. You know, a board may have several schools. You need one for each school. Of course, these pens do expire, so if it's not used in a year or so, then they have to be replaced. Then that means an annual cost. Of course, if they're used, they have to be replaced. These are just some of the questions I have about, you know, who is going to bear the cost for these EpiPens in every school in our province.

Just another question I do have, too, on one of the things I feel is a little bit unfortunate. Even though I certainly support it and think this private member's bill is important, it's always great to hear from people who have, you know, front-line experience working in schools across the province. Unfortunately, we weren't given the opportunity to have any consultation with any of these people. We could have spoken to school boards or even the Alberta School Boards Association, which is the umbrella organization for school boards across our province, or the Alberta Teachers' Association. They have an understanding of sort of what they do across all sorts of jurisdictions and about having best practices, you know, knowing what has worked.

In some areas, perhaps, this isn't in place, but in a lot of jurisdictions it is. So what is working well for that community that has these policies in place? It's just somewhat unfortunate that we're not having any consultations on this bill. There could be, you know, things that we wouldn't have even thought of yet that people may be able to have awareness of, and then that could be sort of dealt with, and some of the best practices could then be implemented across our province.

Of course, Alberta isn't the only province who has done some previous work on this. This has happened across our country. People have referred to Sabrina's Law. Many other jurisdictions, other provinces have brought that in. So I just want to, you know, be on record indicating that it would have been helpful because there are things that we may not know.

It could have made the implementation easier for the schools. You know, our schools, our staff are often very busy people. Having them develop a policy in a different way when maybe their existing policy actually fulfills a lot of what this bill says, so making sure that we're not making people do double work, that it's not redundant: these are just some things that I think would have helped if we did have some consultation, just to make it streamlined and smooth sailing and also to respect the professionals that are already involved in this, you know, for years, perhaps, understanding how these things work. There could be learning processes for other people who aren't having it.

Beyond just what's happening in the schools, through the boards and the Alberta Teachers' Association, is Food Allergy Canada or the Canadian Society of Allergy and Clinical Immunology. That also could have been a stakeholder that we consulted with that I would just recommend. I think that that, again, could have made it a smoother implementation.

But as I've said at the outset, certainly, I stand in support of this bill. We want to make sure that all students have access to whatever medical care they need. This is kind of a dramatic situation, of course, as we know that if children don't have an EpiPen or there's not one available, it could end their lives, and we don't want that to happen. So I certainly want to make clear that that is really crucial, that these EpiPens be made available in all the school systems, but just to reiterate, wanting to understand a bit more about, you know, who's paying for this. Are these the individual schools, the individual school boards, or how is that going to be managed?

Then just some best practices, like, what's the best way to implement this, because, of course, we can always learn from many others. It's just a wise step for the consultation process.

I just want to say, then, that certainly this protection of students with life-threatening allergies makes a lot of sense. It's just that those consultations would have been helpful, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much. Madam Speaker, I rise to speak in support of this. I think it's a bill that's a very good idea. I think I have some lingering questions around it. As you'll no doubt be aware, it's often the case that when we do something, it can seem sort of obvious. On its face this seems like a really good thing, but the devil is always in the details, so it's always a question of implementation and how best to implement that and whether it has any further consequences, I think.

I think that probably the most important thing to note about this is that whatever the amount of money, the life of your child is inevitably worth considerably more than that, so I think that this is a great idea. I do know that there's a cost associated with EpiPens, but I think that that cost is probably going to be relatively minor, especially compared to – I mean, even the cost for every EpiPen in every school. If you can save even one life, I think it's worth it.

I think the question is going to be one of sort of training and implementation. For instance, in Calgary, certainly, there are some very large elementary schools. Up until recently there were some that were almost bursting at the seams, and the question is: "Say that you have an elementary school with 400 or 500 children in it. Do you just get one? What if that gets deployed?" Like, I don't know that we know how long it takes to order a new one, so do you have two in the school just in case there's a second allergy? I think some policies around that would probably be useful, some sort of conversations with teachers, with students, with staff at schools, and with parents about how this would be implemented. I think that, unfortunately, when things go wrong, they tend to seem to go very wrong all at once. You know, if you have these and they're available, it's worth having a policy about: "How are teachers trained? How are staff trained? What's said to the students?"

You know, for instance, I know that when I went to school, they used to have lots and lots of lunch supervisors, but we've sort of over time cut back on that to a certain degree, so you don't have as many of those folks around. So if a student sees another student have an allergic reaction to something on the field, say, at recess, when kids may be sharing snacks – even though I understand that these days they're not supposed to do that, I suspect it sometimes happens anyway – are all the kids ready to run and tell a teacher that this is what's needed? Even right down to sort of: where are you storing it, right? You could store it in the central office, but the question is: how long would it take someone? The furthest classroom from the office: how long would it take someone to get from there to the office and back again or to make a phone call? Do you have an emergency line that sort of supersedes? These are all just questions of implementation. Again, I think it's generally a good idea.

I think it'd probably be worth looking to other jurisdictions. Certainly, when we were in government and we were making policy, it was probably one of the first things that was always asked for, a crossjurisdictional scan. What do they have in other places in terms of legislation, regulation, and policy, and how is it working, right? What was the feedback there? Often you can get a lot of public official records about this or even news stories that sort of cover how it was implemented and how it worked and what problems have arisen. A lot of times when you go to implement something like this, it's entirely possible that no matter how well you think it through, something may arise that perhaps you've not thought of.

You know, even right down to questions of, "Who's in charge of ensuring that it's replaced every year?" my understanding is that you have to replace an EpiPen every year, and presumably they don't look materially different than each other. So who's in charge of getting a new one, making sure the old one got disposed of, that sort of thing? I mean, the last thing you'd want is to think that you've helped a student by administering something which doesn't work anymore.

I'm not really sure what happens to expired medication, whether it, like, immediately sort of ceases to have any impact at all or whether it's just sort of a declining trajectory over time. That's probably a question worth having an answer to, I think, too, just in terms of employees, in terms of them sort of knowing what's going on. You can be very well intentioned, and certainly I know we had this conversation around injectable versus nasal spray naloxone with respect to first responders. There are certain required trainings and procedures around anything that's injectable. You can certainly be intending to help someone, and you could somehow injure them. So what happens to the liability from that, right?

If teachers are being asked to take on this additional role, which, again, I think is a good thing, you know, what happens if they go to perform an injection and there's a bruise or the needle breaks or any number of implementation sort of usage errors, I guess, occur? Who bears the liability for that, right? I think it's an open question. The staff is obviously trying to do their best, but what if the individual student is injured or not helped as a result of that error? Who is responsible for that? I think that's certainly a question that remains to be done. I think that, as with anything you're using in an emergency, it's better to overplan and never need to use it than it is to have potentially missed something in your plan, so I think ensuring that everyone has those conversations around: "Who's responsible for what? Who's responsible for administering, in what zone, at what time?"

In schools it's often the case that if a teacher becomes ill, you can have a substitute teacher, and they may come in on fairly short notice. So do you ensure that all of your substitutes are trained as well? They probably don't do this anymore either, but when I was a kid, if they went through the trained substitute teachers and no one was available, some of our parents who stayed home essentially sort of showed up as, like, the interim substitute teacher. That's probably not a thing that happens anymore, but how do you ensure that someone like that, who may be involved, would be trained?

On a field trip where children are possibly going to encounter substances that are new to their systems, how do you make sure that your parent volunteers are properly trained? Who is in charge of ensuring that, on a field trip, the EpiPen comes with you? Or does it come with you? I think that, yeah, there are a lot of interesting questions in ensuring that we implement this in the best and most effective way in terms of going forward.

But, again, I just want to make it clear – sometimes when you sort of raise questions about things, people are, like: oh, are you really against it? I'm not really against it; I'm really for it. I just think that there are a lot of steps that will need to be taken to ensure that it's implemented in the best possible way. That's pretty usual, right?

You know, members of this place will be familiar: normally we pass the legislation, the legislation surely gives you the umbrella, and it leaves to regulation those sorts of details. Or if there are very fine-grain details, it even leaves it to policy. But I think that because we're talking about schools and because we're talking about school boards, there's an open question of: do we have one policy for the province, or do we have policies for different school boards? There are pros and cons, right?

You know, I think this is likely to be most important in more sort of rural and remote locations. They're farther from a hospital, so this becomes all that more likely to save a life. But, potentially, those are smaller schools, so the cost of maintaining the program per capita becomes relatively higher. I think that the cost is something that's worth investing in. I think my fear would be that if we're talking about the cost in terms of, like, parents having to fund raise for it or something, you'd wind up with a situation where your access to a potentially life-saving procedure is based on the ability of your local school to fund raise. That's a big concern. We see this with playgrounds all the time. That's why we took the step of saying that playgrounds will be included with schools, because schools are told: well, you'll fund raise for your playground. Well, in Calgary, a scenario that I can think of, there are some schools that are in a much stronger position to be able to fund raise for a playground for their students because the parents in the area are very affluent, so they have money to give to that sort of fundraising effort.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 201, Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act. Like my colleague, I absolutely do support this legislation, but I do have a few questions and comments. Obviously, I wholeheartedly support any kind of life-saving pharmacare initiatives. I think our record has been pretty good on that. We have supported that. But I do have a few questions, and hopefully the member or somebody will be able to answer some of them.

Bill 201 requires that every school board, including private, charter, and boards of the School Act or Northland school division, establish and maintain an anaphylaxis policy, and then it goes on to say, you know, all of the things that each of the school boards must do. I guess my question sort of backs up a little bit and looks at the larger picture. Absolutely, there are far too many people, young people in particular, vulnerable people in school that do present with absolutely life-threatening allergies, and lack of access to appropriate medication or intervention can definitely mean the end of their lives. However, I think that is sort of one piece of a larger problem.

I'll give you a little bit of an example. I know that likely a lot of members in this House are not super fans of David Suzuki, who is with The Nature of Things, for a variety of reasons, but I actually am a fan and became a fan in October 2015, actually. There was a piece that aired called The Allergy Fix, and what that looked at was severe allergies.

My niece – her name is Elizabeth Waggoner – at the time was in, I think, the third grade, and she has life-threatening allergies. I'll give you an example of how life threatening. She had dishes that were assigned to her just so that they were clean because she couldn't have any residue, even milk residue, on those dishes or it could threaten her life. One morning I guess somebody didn't clean her dish properly, or maybe something spilled onto the bowl. She went to have breakfast, and there was enough leftover residue on that bowl that it caused a serious reaction. She was given the epinephrine. That didn't really help. Of course, the protocol is to always call 911 immediately, so she was transported to hospital, and this, sadly, had not been the first time that that happened. That's just an example of how severe her allergies are.

When she went to school, my sister actually became a full-time, stay-at-home/lunch lady mom, and part of the reason was that there wasn't enough staffing and there wasn't enough support for her to spend free time at school and be supervised to the extent that she needed supervision. She needed to be sure that she wasn't exposed to any milk products or things like that because even some touching her, in some cases, was enough to cause a problem.

So going back to David Suzuki and The Nature of Things, he actually did a piece called The Allergy Fix and shared some stats that currently, at the time – and this was in October 2015 – there were 2.5 million Canadians with significant, serious food allergies. Obviously, peanuts and milk are some of the allergies that we're very familiar with. He talked a lot about the germ theory, so, you know, obviously looking at how there's something serious going on with our immune systems, and oddly enough he looked at a lot of the kids that grew up on dairy farms, for example. They had stronger immune systems in this area because potentially they were exposed to more germs or bacteria.

That was the premise of this study that my niece was involved in at the time. What they did over many years was to try to introduce this product to her at just minuscule rates, and it was always done in the doctor's office because, again, she has a life-threatening allergy. What they did is that they started – I can't even remember what the fraction was, but let's say that it was one-twentieth – with a drop diluted, put into water. She would drink and ingest it and then wait. They would always give her medication before, you know, just in case, and then be ready with epinephrine in case things got worse.

They did this over many, many years. I think she probably went once a week to get used to this, just to introduce this, and it was successful. She's in high school now, actually. She still has a severe allergy, but if it touches her or if there's residue on her dishes or, let's say, in something she's eating – someone has cut something with a knife that touched something – it's not life threatening to her. This was introduced years ago, you know, and I think it has been somewhat successful.

The reason I bring this up is that her severe allergy – certainly, she went everywhere with an EpiPen, which is, you know, the name that we use. I've had them at my place. I know that she always had them everywhere. What this was is that it was more than just this intervention. It required a lot of support in her school life and in her life after school.

Let's say that she wanted to play soccer with her sister. She could not play soccer without the coaches having some training, without her mom or dad being there, without her teammates knowing what to recognize. It required a whole community to support a really severe allergy like she has. My sister really did have to come at lunch. They kind of made fun of her. She was the lunch lady, and all of the kids, of course, loved her – she's really awesome – but what that required was for her to just change gears to be there, to be with her daughter every single lunch hour, every single recess so that she knew that her daughter with life-threatening allergies was safe.

While I completely support whatever funds are required or whatever policy is required to make this life-saving medication available to all students, I think that you have to step back and look at the larger picture so that when we do have students with life-threatening allergies, seriously life-threatening allergies, not just accidentally maybe eating a peanut or smelling a peanut – I mean, I'm talking about, like, a fraction of milk in water with residue on a dish that's been washed that has the potential to end your life if you don't have access to help.

The reason, again, that I'm sharing this example and the story about my niece is that I think it is really important to look at the larger picture. It is one thing for a school board to say: "Okay. Everybody will have one EpiPen. You'll replace it every year. You'll have a backup EpiPen." You know, like my colleague brought up, when you go on a field trip, you've got to make sure that you take the EpiPen among the other things that you take. Maybe it's in a first-aid kit. I don't know. But these are all things that are important.

The other thing – as I was reading some of the notes about the school boards, it made me think of another issue, and this goes, again, to the larger picture – is that one of the school boards that was mentioned is the Northland school division. This triggered something for me, a good trigger. I remember the Auditor General and being a part of the Public Accounts Committee when we reviewed a report about chronic absenteeism in the Northland school division. Of course, there are, as you can imagine, a number of reasons why chronic absenteeism is a huge problem there, from the inappropriate housing for teachers to inappropriate support for communities and for students to hunger to just the legacy of residential schools and all of those things. It's a really compelling report, believe it or not, from the Auditor General.

One of the things it talked about was all of the ways that we can as a province, as a government support our students. The fact that this was mentioned just sort of reminded me that, yes, it's important to have EpiPens, but it's important to look at the larger picture. We do have students that present in our schools, in different school boards, in different areas of the province that do have significant life-threatening illnesses and risks, if you will, to them being able to learn. Allergies are certainly one of them, but there are many. There are many.

I think this is important enough for us to invest this time in this Chamber and the money that will be required by the school boards in terms of training, debriefing with people if they're required to use an EpiPen. I don't know if you've ever used one. It's kind of a big deal, and it's pretty frightening. If you've ever had to give CPR to someone, it's the same thing. It is pretty intense. It is quite frightening, especially if it's a child. So we have resources to invest in training, in debriefing.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and to speak to Bill 201, Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act. I want to begin by thanking the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing forward this piece of legislation. I also want to thank all the members who contributed to the debate today and, in particular, for sharing their own stories, sharing their own life experience, sharing their experiences in schools, sharing their family experiences. That certainly adds to the importance of this piece of legislation.

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

Earlier my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was speaking, and he said, I guess, that the principle behind this piece of legislation is how we provide best supports or how we support the most vulnerable among ourselves. Clearly, the preamble to the legislation also states that students with life-threatening allergies should feel safe and supported at school. On this side of the House I think I can say that we believe that our students deserve cutting-edge education facilities and that they deserve a safe and supportive environment, be it this piece of legislation that protects those with allergies, be it those kids who don't have enough wherewithal to have meals, be it those students who have a different sexual identity and need GSAs.

In every respect I think this side of the House is in favour of supporting students and making sure that students are safe and have the best supports available to them to facilitate learning, to provide them with the best learning experience and opportunity. Certainly, that's the reason that we are speaking in favour of this piece of legislation. We heard from members of this House on how these allergies can be life threatening and how these kinds of supports – having epinephrine, how to inject an EpiPen, which I guess was the word that was used, having those at hand – are critical in saving lives. Certainly, that's a step towards the right direction. However, nothing against the legislation, but I think there are still some questions.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

When the standing orders were changed and, I guess, the process was designed to send private members' bills to committee, one thing we heard was the idea that at the committee stage we would be able to hear from all concerned, we would be able to hear from stakeholders, we would be able to develop a common understanding on different pieces of legislation, and that that process would certainly add to the debate in this House. However, in this case, I do not believe that there was an opportunity for stakeholders, that there was an opportunity for school boards, the Alberta School Boards Association, families, students, teachers, teacher assistants, all those who deal with students on a daily basis and certainly would have meaningful insight to share with us.

We do know that there are school boards who have policies in place. Maybe not every school board, but there are school boards – the Calgary board of education, the Edmonton public school board – and there were also some guidelines that the Alberta School Boards Association released. I think that would have been an opportunity to look at those different guidelines, to look at those policy documents released by the Alberta School Boards Association and align all that into a more comprehensive policy.

My understanding is that this piece of legislation is based on legislation from Ontario, Sabrina's Law. As the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon mentioned, in 2003 there was an unfortunate incident in a school in Ontario, and a student died as a result. They brought forward a similar piece of legislation, and it's hoped that this piece of legislation will help us save lives and help us avoid similar incidents from happening in our school system.

As I mentioned, some school boards do have those policies, and having the opportunity to hear from the school boards, hearing from families and students, hearing from teachers and assistants: that's something that would have certainly improved our understanding of this issue and would have certainly helped us improve the piece of legislation. Again, as I've said, this has been tried before in Ontario, and our hope is that this will help us avoid similar incidents from happening in the future.

One other thing. There are, I guess, some details that would help us understand this legislation better on how it will be operationalized. As mentioned, like my colleagues, I'm supporting this piece of legislation, I'm in support of these policies, but at the same time we do know that school boards these days – I can speak for the Calgary school board in particular – are projecting shortfalls in their budgets. Like, the Calgary school board alone is projecting $40 million in their budget, and they are still waiting to hear from this government on whether or not they will be provided funding. We have been pushing the government on that. We still don't have a clear answer about whether school boards will be getting that funding.

There is certainly a concern there that this piece of legislation will result in additional costs, on how much those costs will be, and on whether this government will be providing those costs or not. Will they be provided separately, or will they be included in per-student funding, or will schools be expected to bear those costs? That's certainly something where if the member or anybody from the government side would explain, that would be helpful for the purpose of debate here, for those who have a vested interest in getting this legislation passed, to see how that will be operationalized. Students, parents: all of them would be happy to, I guess, hear about that as well.

Also, I think it prescribes what policies must include, which is that it also prescribes that school boards should have policies with some strategies to reduce the risk of exposure to anaphylactic agents in the classroom and school common areas. I guess: what strategies? Will it be left to the school boards? Will there be further direction from the government to the school boards? I do know that if there are too many policies, the minister of red tape may not like it because we are adding more red tape on it. This is a good policy. I don't see it as red tape.

Also, there is a communication plan that will need to be shared with the parents. Will it be the same kind of communication plan that will be shared all across Alberta or will it be school boards that will be creating that? Similarly, there is mandatory regular training dealing with these allergies. How will that training be operationalized, and what kind of support will school boards be getting?

At the same time, we do know that it's a medical condition, and I think there is always room for more collaboration, that school boards, teachers, parents can work with the health regions and health authorities to make sure that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to start by thanking the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for her work on this bill. You know, as others have spoken in this House, I'm a former teacher and school administrator as well, so this is an important issue to me and to many of us who've worked in the education system. I appreciate how many members here have shared their own personal stories with allergies, food allergies, and so on.

We know that according to Food Allergy Canada, about 2.6 million Canadians, including half a million children, have food allergies. They've gone on the record saying that – you know what? – actually legislation is probably the best route to protect children because it sends an important signal to school leaders, to the entire school community, that they need to take that issue seriously and that staff need to be prepared and that all in the school environment need to have a strong understanding of what the consequences can be if we don't take such issues seriously. Of course, we saw this with Sabrina's Law in Ontario, and we know that since Sabrina's Law has been enacted, there haven't been any food allergy deaths reported in Ontario schools. I appreciate that there's a lot of concrete evidence that we can draw upon in approaching our response to this bill.

We know, as well, as the Member for Calgary-Mountain View talked about, that there needs to be a strong understanding at the school level of how this is going to be enacted. For instance, the clear location of the EpiPens, of the management packages: again, everyone needs to know exactly how we are going to approach this.

I was reading one article. It's Dr. Harold Kim, who's the – I don't want to get his title wrong – president of the Canadian Society of Allergy and Clinical Immunology. He said that you need to ensure that there's an obvious unlocked location for these, just like an AED. I think that's one thing we just need to really impress upon folks, that consistent understanding needs to be there.

But what I want to speak mostly about is the consultative piece and the importance of taking a very co-operative approach. As other members have said, on both sides, you know, I appreciate the consultation, that there has been some that has taken place, but I do wonder just the extent to which consultation has been undertaken. Again, I know the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon talked about that there was some consultation that happened at his school division and, again, he's got that school of experience. I appreciate that. As the Member for Edmonton-City Centre talked about, consultation is critical. We'd hoped that this government would be consistent in the consultative approach that they take across the board when it comes to all bills that they are proposing.

I know that two of the boards that fall within the member's riding, parts of it anyway, have policies in place, so I would be curious to just hear what some of the feedback was that came from those boards. For instance, in the case of Elk Island public, in doing a little bit of a review of their policy, they actually have a pretty comprehensive policy in place that's available on their website. It gives a lot of background on ensuring the safety and well-being of all students and staff, the procedures for the safe administration of medication, personal care, severe, life-threatening medical situations, and they give a clear definition of allergies, of anaphylaxis, of what medication means, about what self-administering means, about significant health concerns.

It goes on to talk about the specific procedures. For instance, in this case of Elk Island public the Division expects principals, central service administrators, and Student Transportation staff . . . to implement site procedures for the administration of medication, delivery of personal care, and for dealing with significant health concerns.

As has been mentioned already in this Chamber, I do wonder if we're already duplicating a lot of processes that have been in place. I will admit to not having done an entire survey of all school board policies, but I did try to dig into a few, including the school division at which I taught, Battle River, and I saw that in a lot of those school divisions, again, there are quite comprehensive policies. It's actually quite, I guess, reassuring to see how much work and thought has been put into these local policies. I was quite pleased to see that. In many cases, as well, you could see that the policies had been updated quite recently, which is, again, a very promising sign. You're not having any sort of stale policies in place. I gave one example there, of Elk Island specifically. Again, they've got a very comprehensive policy, but they're not alone in that.

Now, I do want to ask, though – you know, we've got some feedback from the boards. I know that the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville said that she'd also heard from a few other significant education stakeholders, the ATA being one. One of the things that the member said was that the ATA are supportive, but I want to just dig a little bit more into that. The Alberta Teachers' Association is generally supportive of Bill 201, their spokesperson, Jonathan Teghtmeyer, said last week, but they would like to see allergy response plans kept as part of one central school emergency plan rather than as individual records. He goes on to note that school boards should bear the legal responsibility for those plans rather than individual principals. The bill as written means that each principal must develop an individual plan. It reads as follows:

every principal or designate [must]

- (i) develop an individual plan for each student who has an anaphylactic allergy,
- (ii) ensure that, upon enrollment, parents and students are asked to supply information on life-threatening allergies, if any, and
- (iii) maintain a file for each anaphylactic student including any current treatments, copies of any prescriptions, any instructions from health professionals and a current emergency contact list.

Just at first blush, I mean, this doesn't seem overly burdensome, and in a lot of cases I know that this would already be happening at the school level, but I do have to ask, and to the spokesperson for the Alberta Teachers' Association's point, if perhaps elevating that to the board level would be a better approach. I think about the schools where I taught. Again, these were kindergarten to grade 12 schools. You know, they were fairly small. As a vice-principal at one K to 12 school, Forestburg school, it would not have been a huge onus on me to take that on. However, if I were teaching here in Edmonton at one of our large, urban high schools that has, you know, 2,000 to 2,500 students, that is a lot to ask of a site-based administrator, to have to keep track of individual plans for each of those students in detail, as outlined in this bill.

Again, something to think about. We've got incredible school administrators. We've got incredible teachers across this province. I'm not saying that they couldn't do it and they wouldn't do it, but just let's think about elevating that to the board level so that it takes a little bit of the burden off those administrators.

Obviously, you know, as an administrator you want to know. You want to have a really firm grasp. I would want to know exactly which students in my school from kindergarten to grade 12 are dealing with any sort of severe food allergies, any other medical conditions. I would want to know so that when I see those little ones walking in the hallway, I'd be able to say, you know: so-and-so has an anaphylactic allergy; so-and-so has a whatever allergy. It's really important to have that understanding.

Again, I just want to clarify that I'm not saying that they wouldn't do that. It's just thinking about having it at the board level. I know the member also talked about just the consistency, right? Having it at the board level, as well, would ensure better consistency in how those plans are executed at each school, and there can also be conversations at the board level to just ensure that it is being enacted in a consistent way.

Again, just as other members have said, I want to be quite clear that I'm quite supportive of this and I'm quite appreciative of the work that the member did in proposing this bill, but when we do think about the consultative process and moving forward, if we could please consider a consistent approach to consultation and not just picking and choosing depending on the nature of the bill.

The other thing I just wanted to touch on briefly before I finish – and I know a few other folks have spoken to this – again, is just the cost piece. It was, in fact, the Member for Lethbridge-East who in committee talked about the fact that on basic numbers it's about half a million dollars, which he says is a fairly minor cost. I can speak to my experience in a rural board, where every dollar does make a difference. So I would think about asking the government to consider taking on that cost or at least, again, being consistent in how they approach the way in which it's paid for.

I think, on that, I've shared most of my points. Again, I just want to finally reiterate the piece on consultation.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, what a great day of debate we're having here today. I know everyone is listening intently online and in this House, including the third brother from the brothers of this Assembly family, who's joining us in the gallery today.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 201, Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act. I would like to thank the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing this forward and all the members that have shared their stories. Allergies are not uncommon and very scary when you're dealing with something like anaphylaxis.

I just want to say to the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat that I really understood where you were coming from when you talked about what it was like to be a child with an allergy. I'm younger than you, and I was a child that had an allergy, an anaphylactic reaction. What I had when I was a kid was an actual needle syringe. It was embarrassing to carry it around. It wasn't in a nice package, and it wasn't child friendly. I didn't want to talk to my teachers or my dance instructors or coaches or anybody about the fact that I had an allergy that required this really big, scary needle because I was afraid of it as a little girl. The fact that there's just been progress with that is really impressive, that the medical advances have occurred.

I'm also, not surprisingly, a mom to a child that has anaphylactic reactions. My daughter was nine months old when we introduced milk to her for the first time, and she had an anaphylactic reaction. I was terrified. We called 911, and the fire department came. The shock on their faces when they saw that she was nine months old, not nine years old as their file had indicated, caused me even more stress. Immediately they administered epinephrine, and we went straight to the hospital. At that moment I made sure that my child had epinephrine at all times. Her life as a tiny human was educating the grown-ups in her life about what that meant. So we made sure that daycare knew, we made sure that every single adult where she had a sleepover knew, and we went through the instruction process with them.

Initially in school it was a bit of a challenge. Sometimes the school wasn't comfortable with having an epinephrine needle on a child, and they would kind of advocate that maybe it should be stored in the school office. That, as a mom, was absolutely not negotiable. It was on her, she was trained how to do it, and I made sure that as a mom I had one-on-one meetings with all of her teachers and all the grown-ups in her life to make sure that she had access to that. Because we had experienced it and knowing how terrifying that is and how life-needing it is, that was part of our process. As she got older, she was able to engage in the school's policy-making and what that looked like in the schools. Fortunately, as a mom, we had great teachers, principals, educators that were onboard with creating really extensive policy for not just my daughter but for the schools that she attended and all of the kids.

As an advocate for this I'm in full support of it, but I do have some questions, Madam Speaker. I know that the bill talks about individual anaphylaxis plans. Again, it's making sure that the schools have the best policies related to all of their students. Section 5 talks about stocking epinephrine autoinjectors. I have a question about that because it says, "a minimum of one epinephrine auto-injector is maintained." As a child my daughter has gone through two different types of epinephrine injectors simply because of her weight. As a smaller child she used an EpiPen Jr. As she grew, she then switched to the adult version. I would hope that it would be injectable for both categories, the children and the older children that weigh a little bit more.

I also had some questions about what it means when a school goes on a field trip and they're leaving the school property. If their policy is to have one, does that stay in the office? What about the kids that are travelling outside of the school? We know – we see this here almost every day, Madam Speaker – that we have students come on field trips. They leave the school. Sometimes it's close; they're from Edmonton. Sometimes they come from all over the province, so they're quite a ways from home and quite a ways from their school. Just some clarifying questions about the stocking of it.

Then we've heard members in the House talk about the cost of it. Who is going to pay for that? I would hope that the government would look at covering the cost for that, because we ask so much of our schools, and to put that on them seems to be a bit much. I would imagine that the majority of the schools are onboard with this if not already doing some sort of policy, but when it comes to actually having the epinephrine injectors, I would think that we could ask government to help support them with that.

It's a bit concerning that there wasn't a lot of consultation that happened. Perhaps the schools would have said that if they had been talked to about what their needs were. We can all agree that this is absolutely essential – and I am supporting it, Madam Speaker – but I think that having that input from the schools, from the trustees, from parents and our young people about what would make sense for them would have been helpful and maybe made this a little bit more extensive in the legislation.

The other piece that I would like to mention is that families are paying attention to this, which is incredible. I have a really engaged constituency. I had a family reach out. They didn't have such a wonderful experience. They've indicated that they've been struggling to manage their daughter's life-threatening allergies with the schools and believe that this legislation is absolutely essential and is going to help. I couldn't agree more, Madam Speaker. I think that it would be wonderful if every single school board had clear policy about what to do in the case of a child having an anaphylactic reaction, because we can talk about it, but until you do training and those types of things, it's scary as a grown-up and especially as that young person going through it. Just making sure that there's ongoing training and support for our teachers and support staff that work out of the schools if that ever does occur in the school.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I think, really, that's all I have to say on this. I am supportive of this. I think that – again, a thank you to the member for bringing this forward. It is very much appreciated. I hope that all members in the House will support this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any others wishing to join the debate this afternoon on Bill 201? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows rising.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising in the House to actually speak in favour of the bill. I do support this bill. Members in the House have already shared their personal experience in support of this bill. I really wanted to thank you, all those members on both sides of the House as, you know, they stood up and have spoken in favour of this bill.

I, too, come with the first-hand experience of someone in regard to what this bill is trying to address in the House. My son, at the age of 18, a very healthy young fellow, professional soccer player, all of a sudden, four years back developed something called celiac disease. That is the age, as an hon. member in the House already shared the experience, when kids really don't want to talk about it.

Kids don't really want to share what's going on with their bodies and what's going on with their health. They don't really want to talk to their friends, they don't really want to be named for something, and at this age sometimes they don't even really want to take it seriously and mention it to their parents.

You know, we were lucky to have a diagnosis in a timely manner, I would say. It was an experience he was going through. He would probably have one apple, one pear, so he didn't know what was going on with his body and the kind of reaction. On top of this, he would not only spend time in school, but he would end up playing two games but not having eaten anything. Whatever he would eat, he was not able to have proper digestion. So he extensively lost weight, as I said, a healthy six-foot six-inch tall soccer player. We were able to notice that he extensively lost weight. What the heck was going on with his health? He was referred to the University of Alberta hospital and diagnosed with celiac disease. Right now he's on the strictest diet. Thank God he's been taken care of.

Myself, you know, developing allergies from dust mites – I don't know – to other allergies: every single time, something new coming up, I know, changes my habits and my tastes, developing from the lactose-intolerant person. They can really have a huge effect on your life. I really want to thank the hon. member who brought this bill forward. This bill is really going to help Albertan students, children and save their lives in school.

On the allergies, as I already mentioned, you know, someone can be born with allergies, and allergies can be developed at any age. This is something really, really important, to have the program in place so people can be helped if they develop something like this. People could have known allergies, or people could have, like, suddenly something exposed to them, and they never had an experience before this. Having this kind of program in place surely is going to help lives in school and help students, parents and, I would say, help everyone – teachers, staff – keep them all off the hook. They can diligently deliver their responsibilities in school.

One of the aspects that I think most members have already actually elaborated or emphasized in the House in speaking on this bill: I would really like to also stress the consultation part of this bill. Definitely, you know, there is always room for . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt, but 115 minutes of debate have passed.

Under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville to close debate on Bill 201.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The bill is a common-sense bill, protecting the lives of our most vulnerable. I think all of us want to be able to look parents in the eye and tell them that we're making Alberta safer for our children. All of us should be committed to this goal, so I thank you all for your support on Bill 201.

With that, I close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a second time]

Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you so much. I move second reading of Bill 202.

Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to speak on Bill 202. It brings me great joy to rise and speak to Bill 202, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement (Protecting Alberta's Children) Amendment Act, 2019. Some members of this House will recall Bill 216, which I introduced in December of 2017. Unfortunately, that bill did not subsequently get debated before the session ended.

Now, being able to introduce and, hopefully, pass a private member's bill is a rare and incredible opportunity. You know, I was fortunate enough to do this under Bill 205, the pill press bill, which was the first of its kind to deal with the opioid crisis in Canada. So I'm very pleased to have this opportunity to present my bill once again, this time under Bill 202.

I'm grateful for our new Minister of Children's Services, who took the time to listen and understand what I am trying to accomplish with this piece of legislation and offered her support. It is clear to me that she and her office are working very hard to truly have the best interests of Alberta's children at heart. They're willing to put the efforts in to find solutions, not delay tactics but actually concrete action, and that is important to recognize. I also appreciate the recommendation of the standing committee on private bills for this bill to continue making its way through the House.

This bill is not about front-line workers. This bill is about the children of Alberta, full stop, and making it easier and simpler for the public to report child abuse to Children's Services. It is about accountability. This bill amends the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act to reinforce that all adult Albertans are responsible for contacting the authorities if they are aware of a child in need of intervention.

Currently the legislation stipulates that a person is to contact a director to report a child in danger, but it is not at all clear to people who a director is. When I asked the previous minister how to do this, it wasn't meant to embarrass her, but it was to prove a point, especially when she could not answer the question of how to contact a director. Let me read the definition of director in the current legislation.

... a person designated by the Minister as a director for the purposes of this Act and the Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act and without limiting the generality of the foregoing includes a person designated as a director in accordance with an agreement under section 122(2) of this Act.

Even having read this definition, I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that it is still very confusing to the average person on who a director is or how a person goes about reporting this to a director.

This bill would add that a person can instead report their concerns to a police officer. They can contact either a police officer or a director and be in compliance with the act. Let me be clear. People have always been able to contact the police to report abuse. That hasn't changed. This is about accountability and society saying that one can no longer turn a blind eye to a child in need of intervention.

Under the law Albertans are already obligated to report children who are at risk, in need of intervention, to a director. While this amendment is a fairly simple concept and change, I would argue that this is a very significant amendment that would strengthen the legislation, would give it teeth, provide accountability. With this amendment there is no excuse for turning a blind eye to a child in need. Nobody can say, "I didn't know how to contact a director," when they know or ought to have known that a child was in need of intervention. That excuse can no longer be used. Everybody who observes any form of child abuse can contact a police officer, and it is certainly common to know to contact the police when you are in need of help or you know that somebody else is in need of help. Children in Alberta have died under inhumane circumstances that could have been prevented if an adult who knew or ought to have known the child was in need of intervention had spoken up.

Mr. Speaker, every member of this House who served last term is familiar with the story of little Serenity. Her case led to the establishment of the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention, which met over the span of a year. Several of my colleagues on both sides of this House participated on this panel in good faith. I do believe that every member in this House wants all children in Alberta to be safe and loved.

For the new members of this House who may not be familiar, Serenity is the subject of an investigation report published by the Child and Youth Advocate in October 2016. The advocate is restricted from publishing the real names of children and had titled the report 4-Year-Old Marie. Former journalist and now Senator Paula Simons dug a little bit deeper into the case and published a harrowing account of Serenity's short life that outraged the public and, I think, outraged every single person in Alberta who was aware of this story. In September 2014 Serenity arrived at a hospital suffering from hypothermia and a suspected head injury, weighing just 18 pounds, the weight of a typical nine-month-old baby. She had multiple bruises all over her body, including strong indications of sexual abuse.

There were more adults residing in that home other than her two legal guardians, and that is the point of this bill. There are other adults who knew or ought to have known that Serenity and her two siblings, who suffered equal amounts of abuse, were being abused, and through an investigation, if they did know, then people like them would be held accountable under this change in this act. Historian Yehuda Bauer forgave me the pronunciation, Mr. Speaker said, quote: thou shalt not be a victim, thou shalt not be a perpetrator, but, above all, thou shalt not be a bystander. Unquote. It fills me with anguish knowing that Serenity might still be here today if someone who knew or ought to have known that she was being abused and in serious danger, if they had actually done something about it before it was too late.

Serenity and her family inspired this bill. I know her mother. I know her mother is watching. I cannot use her name. She has sat in these halls, watched as the opposition said no to this bill at one point.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Ellis: Shame. Shame is right.

As a tribute to her, as a tribute to Serenity, I hope that this Assembly will take this step to prevent future deaths by sending a clear message to Albertans that if they see a child who needs help, they need to take action and report it to the police or to Children's Services. From my experience, Mr. Speaker, the truth is that there are children, as we speak right here, that are in need of intervention. We cannot delay this change any longer, and if we can save one child, then this piece of legislation is worth it.

There are more examples where people ignored children in dire situations and the worst possible outcome happened: the child died. In 2013 seven-year-old little Ryan from Calgary died after contracting a strep infection that kept him bedridden for 10 days. A friend of the mother testified that he was a child in the state of supreme suffering and that there was no routine at home. Ryan had little access to food. This person said that Ryan and his mom were, quote, living in a different reality. Unquote. They urged the mother to take him to the doctor, but she would not. People that are aware of children like Ryan, who are in danger, must inform Children's Services or a police officer, full stop, Mr. Speaker. It is the law, and as the government we need to reinforce that.

Thank you for your time, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-West.

I see that the hon. Member for Airdrie-East was in fact on her feet first, but I think in the long-standing tradition of the House of going from the government side to the opposition side, I will see the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First off, just before I get into Bill 202, I would like to acknowledge Serenity's family and the tragedy of Serenity's death. I think many of us were impacted by the family's story, and we worked on the panel to try to address some of the concerns that are being discussed with that.

I will be supporting Bill 202 with caution. I was a child protection worker for many years before being elected, and it's not a job that people can put into black and white categories around whether or not someone is able to report, whether or not the issues are going to just automatically be resolved within that one call. We know that families have histories of being involved with Children's Services repeatedly through generations, through different struggles. When you're looking at mental health and you're looking at addictions and you're looking at poverty issues and you're looking at a variety of different things that impact families and the reasons why Children's Services becomes involved, it's just not that black and white. So although I appreciate the bill and I appreciate the member and the intention of the bill, just because someone makes a call, it's not necessarily going to prevent these things from happening. I hate to say that, but that is the truth.

Now, in speaking to why people should report and, you know, looking at the consequences of not reporting and different things like that, when I worked for Children's Services, people did call the police. People did call 911. They did call the 780.422.2001 phone number. The police did respond. I went out with police on responses when I worked as part of my crisis work.

The problem that we also have with just reporting and saying to people, "Well, report it to the police" is that the other piece that comes with that is that there were also weeks on end where all of a sudden I would get a report on my desk that said that someone had called the police two weeks ago for an issue that was impacting a child in care or a child that may be in need of supports, and I didn't see the report for two weeks because it wasn't deemed urgent enough. Then I would go out, and I would look at doing the assessment. What happens is that the police officer has to do the report, the report has to then go through their system, then it has to go to Children's Services, it has to go through the Children's Services system, and then it gets put on a desk of a worker. It doesn't mean that if it's urgent like, let's be clear. If there is an urgent call where it is very, very clear that a child is in immediate danger, automatically one of us goes, the police respond, all of those things that happen happen.

People do report. It doesn't mean that if someone picks up the phone and calls that day, someone goes out that day unless there's a very clear urgency attached to it, unless we know that there are dangerous people in the home or if the reporter is able to give a ton of detail about what is actually happening in that situation. There are a variety of different mechanisms in place to screen whether or not it is deemed urgent because, unfortunately, there are a lot of calls that come into Children's Services on a daily basis. It is a very, very, very busy department. So I appreciate the intention of this. I understand it.

The other struggle that we have is that you're right people don't report. People are scared to report. When it's a family member, they're worried that if they report, the family member is going to know it's them, and if you're dealing with criminal activity, gang members, a different variety of things, people are scared. So, yes, it does limit their willingness to come forward sometimes and report.

To be clear, though, when there are the extreme situations that the member opposite is discussing around the severe neglect that could potentially harm a child to the point of death, there are mechanisms in place within two different systems. Under CYFE, the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act, there are charges that can be placed. It rarely rarely happens, but you can press charges towards someone for either failure to report or failure to protect. That can happen. That already exists. It already exists under the Criminal Code to be able to charge someone if they have a failure to protect or if they're negligent towards a child. Those mechanisms already do exist as well.

I appreciate what the member is trying to do. I totally do. But to say that those mechanisms don't exist when they do, to say that people have to report only to the director to have any type of action placed on them for being negligent is not necessarily the case. You can always call 911. Anybody can call 911. If you think a child is at risk, please call 911. If you think that there's something going on, you can always call the police. The police can arrive, the police can do an assessment, and they can call the crisis unit or they can call a worker, and a worker can come out and do the assessment. There are mechanisms.

I guess the part that I caution about is when we start getting into financial penalties for people's failure to report. When you live in an apartment building and Children's Services shows up at your neighbour's, it doesn't necessarily mean you knew. So for me the question would be: how do you determine when someone is willingly refusing to report? How do you determine that they were aware of the situation enough to say that they were negligent? If you're looking at those extreme cases, then fair enough, Member. In those extreme cases, absolutely people should be charged and people should be held to account. No child should ever be put in that situation. I didn't work in child protection for 12 years to say that it's okay, but I also understand the complexity of working with families, and I understand the complexity of working with children in care, and I understand the complexity of working in a multisystem where child protection is one cog in a wheel when it comes to the criminal justice system and when it comes to family law and when it comes to a variety of different things. None of these files are ever black and white.

There are always questions, even as workers, about whether or not what we did was in the best interests of the child in the moment that we had to make the decision about whether or not to apprehend or to keep that child at home or to have that child go to another family member. You are living in moments where you are literally, like, sitting in a room or standing in a room trying to make a decision with limited knowledge, having to make an immediate decision about this child and this person's life with very, very limited information. It is extremely difficult to say that people should be punished for not necessarily being what we would like to see as engaged or reporting when they should be reporting. Whether or not they report to the director, it doesn't matter if they report to the director as long as they report to somebody. It could be a police officer. I mean, it could be your friend the social worker. It could be a teacher. It could be a variety of different people. As long as Children's Services is aware of the situation, they will become involved if they deem it to be appropriate for them to be involved.

The struggle with that as well is that there were many times when I was a worker where people would be, like: "I can't believe you didn't open a file on that family. I can't believe you didn't apprehend that child out of that home." It's easy to look at a file and read a piece of paper and say: "Well, this is what it says. Therefore, the workers didn't do their job."

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. However, the time for consideration of this matter has concluded. You have approximately one minute remaining should you wish to continue when this item of business is called at a future date.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has the call.

Springbank Dam and Upstream Flood Mitigation

504. Ms Ganley moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to fully commit to the Springbank dam and upstream flood mitigation plans along the Bow River in order to protect Calgarians, their homes, and their livelihoods and, to ensure construction proceeds without delay, that the government commit to replacing any funding that would be lost if the climate leadership plan is cancelled.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, this was written before the climate leadership plan was cancelled.

Saturday we celebrated Neighbour Day in Calgary, a day when we remember the way the city pulled together after the 2013 floods. While it was great to see the way our city worked together at that time, rebuilding and carrying on, I think we can all agree that it would be much better to never have such an experience again. Unfortunately, we know that such weather events are bound to become more frequent as a result of climate change, and wishful thinking is not a strategy. I therefore bring forward this motion to continue to push the government to ensure that they invest in the necessary flood protection for the city of Calgary.

I'm very happy to see that this little motion has had an impact already. Having notice that the motion was coming forward, the government moved to get out in front of it, announcing on Friday their submission to the federal environmental review process on the Springbank dam. I doubt the timing was a coincidence, and I could not be more pleased. However, I do have some lingering concerns because a commitment to continue a regulatory process and a commitment to fund something are not quite the same thing. This motion calls on the government to commit to and fund the best option for upstream mitigation on both the Bow River and the Elbow River. In the case of the Elbow River, we already know what that is, and in the case of the Bow River we're still deliberating through three different options, which I'll discuss later.

Turning first to the Springbank dry dam, Springbank is the best, fastest, and most effective option for Calgary, and that was before we had spent four years already moving the process forward. Stopping to re-evaluate at this point could significantly jeopardize progress. There are hard questions in politics, Mr. Speaker. This is not one of them. I was very heartened to see the announcement from the government just this Friday that they would submit the answers to the questions arising from the federal environmental review. I believe it was almost 8,000 pages. The process has been a long one. I know that has been very, very frustrating for many Calgary communities, but it's important to see that it is moving forward. I would like to see a firm commitment on funding as well. I do recognize that the option isn't perfect. Unfortunately, in life there is almost never a perfect option, and all that can be done is to pick the best one based on the information available. This is easily the best option. It was four years ago, it is now, and, like I said, it's not a hard question, particularly several years into a lengthy environmental assessment process, that would have to be started over with any other project.

Mr. Speaker, one thing that really bears saying on this project is that it is not a political toy, and I hope that the government is done using it as such. I hope that this announcement represents a final word on the matter because a lot of people in Calgary were very deeply traumatized by this experience, and they deserve to know that the government is moving forward as quickly as possible.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Above all, we in this place must care about honesty and integrity. During the election, while the now Premier waffled back and forth, the then candidate and now Member for Banff-Kananaskis was more than willing to say whatever it took to win. That member took advantage of the confusion to gain whatever advantage she could, with seemingly no concern for the truth. I hope that it was just one member. I hope that it doesn't represent the views of the government as a whole. I hope that they know how important this is to the people of Calgary and how important it is to get a truthful and honest and firm response. I sincerely hope this represents the final word because these people deserve to have a sense of safety and security in our homes restored. So I'd ask the government to be clear and to commit funding. I do see this as a positive step.

I'd now like to move to upstream mitigation on the Bow. Of course, the previous government, which was us, has done a lot of work in securing a contract with TransAlta to ensure that the current Ghost reservoir could be used as available capacity rather than filled earlier in the season. In addition, the upper plateau separation project, which separated the Sunnyside-Hillhurst water system to prevent backflow in that community due to a flood; the downtown and west Eau Claire flood barriers; the pump station 1 and 2 improvements; and the Inglewood Bridge among many, many others have been incredibly important steps.

I do however think that it is clear that there will be a need for upstream mitigation. The Bow River working group worked very hard to identify three main options: a new Glenbow reservoir, a new Morley reservoir, or expanding storage at the Ghost reservoir. Each of these options has possible options within them.

It's a complex task moving this file forward. There are facts to weigh, different considerations, different interests, but at the end of the day a decision must be made. There are so many incredible things about governing, but it definitely comes with a lot of tough decisions. I sincerely hope that this new government is committed to moving forward with the decisions as soon as possible. It's incredibly important to many Calgarians and to the whole province.

As with all major projects, it will require funding, funding which was previously committed, like the Springbank dry dam, from the climate leadership fund, which at this point no longer exists. I would like to see a commitment from the government on this project as well. Basically, in this instance what I'm asking for is a commitment to make the decisions as soon as possible when they come forward and then to commit the funds and start funding as soon as the regulatory process is complete and construction can begin.

Calgary cannot wait. I emphasize this because for years previous Conservative governments dilly-dallied on schools, hospitals, roads, pretty much every infrastructure build you could imagine. Conservatives tend to be about those short-term gains. They balance the books at the cost of infrastructure maintenance, which ultimately costs us more in the long run. Calgary can't wait. This is a commitment that needs to be made. They can't wonder if they will be protected when oil prices go up.

I suppose, in short, you could call this the no-more-dithering motion. Yes, things take time. Yes, there are regulatory processes. Yes, there are options to evaluate on the Bow. But what I'm asking today is for a strong commitment to action. On the Elbow, it should be easy. All we need is a firm yes to immediate funding as soon as the approval is granted. On the Bow, I'm asking for a commitment to proceed as quickly as possible and, again, to immediate funding. This is one of those circumstances where an infrastructure debt carries far more trouble and far more risk than a financial debt ever could. So I'm asking the government to please just say yes, not just for me but for all the people of Calgary. The decision to invest can be hard. There are always more good ideas than dollars to fund them, but I think that this is an incredibly important project, and I think that we need to move it forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, according to Standing Order 29(3)(c) all members have 10 minutes to speak to the motion. I see the hon. Minister of Transportation rising.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. I'm pleased to rise today to speak on Motion 504: unfortunately, the NDP's revision-of-history motion. I was interested to hear the comments from the hon. member just now. They were somewhat inconsistent with what has happened in the past.

Let me start off, Madam Speaker, by being perfectly clear. Our government is committed to providing flood mitigation for the city of Calgary and surrounding areas. Without effective flood mitigation, public safety, extensive property damage, and billions of dollars in economic activity are at risk. We are committed to doing what is necessary to complete the regulatory process for the Springbank reservoir and will ensure that there are no delays under our control to the regulatory review.

Now, Madam Speaker, since day one our government has taken action to ensure that the Springbank environmental review moves forward in a timely manner. In fact, one of our very first actions, as promised in the election, was to appoint an independent expert to review the regulatory process to date and to provide advice on the path forward. The expert will conclude his work shortly, and we will make the report public. Additionally, just last Friday Alberta Transportation submitted over 8,000 pages of information to the federal and provincial environmental regulators in response to almost 700 information requests left unanswered by the previous government. The submission marks a significant step in the regulatory process for the Springbank reservoir and demonstrates our commitment to doing what is necessary to complete the regulatory review as soon as possible.

Now, Springbank is a complex infrastructure project undergoing very intense regulatory review. The government is taking time to consult impacted communities and people, including the Tsuut'ina and the Stoney First Nations, Rocky View county, the citizens of Calgary, industry associations, and many other groups, who will continue to be consulted as the project moves forward. Consultation will ensure that our government takes the time to do it properly. Our goal is to make sure we have a full understanding of the concerns people may have and how they can be addressed. We will ensure there are no delays that are under our control to the regulatory review of the Springbank reservoir and are committed to doing what is necessary to complete the regulatory process.

Madam Speaker, the next flood is coming. The fact of the sixth anniversary of the last flood, the devastating floods of 2013, is not lost on me or on our government. We know that every time the river has risen since, many people became nervous and anxious about it, and we want to alleviate this concern.

What doesn't help alleviate the concern is the partisan games by the opposition, who are trying to circumvent the environmental review by asking the Assembly to issue a decision on a project that is still under review. They're asking the Assembly to fully commit to something that the environmental assessment isn't done on. These are the people that actually claim that they care about environmental issues and try to hold themselves up as the champions of these issues today and asking us to shortcut those very issues. Those are partisan games.

The opposition want to prejudge a project's success or failure before it has completed the environmental review. This is not only irresponsible, but it may slow things down. Regulators don't like it much when you try to sneak things through or rush projects without completing them properly. The past government should know this. The NDP actually had their first EIA, environmental impact assessment, sent back because it wasn't done right, and they had to do a second one, which slowed down the process.

It's disingenuous to the many communities and nations that need to be properly consulted, the motion that's before us on the table today. I'm not sure how the NDP could approach the Tsuut'ina Nation, for example, to hear and understand their concerns on the Springbank project if the NDP had already decided they were going to go full steam ahead. Fortunately, they're not in government, so they don't get to make that decision. Fortunately, I hope we'll be able to talk to the Tsuut'ina Nation, the Stoney Nation, and other interested parties in a spirit of trust based on the fact that we are not prejudging an environmental assessment program that they care very much about and saying that we're going to go ahead without actually completing that process, as this motion would suggest we would do. It's clear to me that the NDP's concern for the city of Calgary, the surrounding communities, and the indigenous people is lip service, based on the motion here today. [interjection]

Oh, I see that the former Finance minister can't quite be quiet and listen to this, but let me remind the opposition of how they handled some things. Bill 6 was shoved through this Assembly by the previous government with little consultation of farmers and those impacted, and when people tried to voice their concerns, the NDP insisted that they knew best. Why? Simply because people disagreed with the NDP government. The NDP always feels like they know best.

Our government does not think that. We actually think that we need to engage with Albertans and find out what matters to them. I also remember the NDP carbon tax, once again, shoved through this Assembly by the previous government with little consultation of Albertans. It wasn't in their platform, it wasn't something they campaigned on, but the NDP determined that it needed to be done: "So why listen to anybody? Let's just make it happen."

In contrast, Madam Speaker, our mandate has been clear from the beginning. I challenge any member to examine the provenances of this government. Go back and take a look at how many times the Premier described our platform and what his government said they would do in the first 100 days. Now, shockingly, at least for the opposition, we're doing what we campaigned on and what Albertans elected us to do. In stark contrast to the previous government, the main bills before this Assembly were in our platform, vetted by Albertans, and were endorsed by over a million voters on April 16.

Because we believe in following the proper process and ensuring that people affected by our decisions are consulted and heard, it would be irresponsible, as this motion suggests, to commit to this project before the review process is complete, before the consultation process is complete, and before the project has received the environmental authority from both the provincial and federal regulators. Again, the NDP claim to be champions of the environment, but before this House today they come with a motion to actually circumvent and go around the environmental approval process. Shameful.

The review process took a significant step forward last Friday when we submitted answers to those 700 responses. There are still, we believe, potentially many months ahead before the review process is complete. The review process could be closer to completion if the previous government did not drag their feet for the best part of four years. The NDP claimed to be champions of the Springbank reservoir in the 2019 election campaign. That was after they criticized the government on Springbank in the past, and their speeches today demonstrate a commitment to the project and flood mitigation in general. It's funny, though, the opposition is taking that position now, but it's exactly the opposite position they took in 2015, where they campaigned against this particular project.

This is what they said at that time: "Alberta's NDP would not support this project. Some of the core complaints about the project ring true for us, and it does not provide an adequate degree of protection for many of the communities in the surrounding areas." They won government and then the world looked a little bit different and they changed their minds. They campaigned against it and then changed their minds. You know what? I'm going to give them credit for one thing: when people get new information, at least it is okay sometimes to change their minds. However, they're a little bit disingenuous when they talk about being consistent and moving forward on this because they moved pretty slow from that point forward. Their attempt this afternoon, by the mover of the motion, to erase the history leaves us with the simple fact that our government is once again left to clean up the mess of the NDP, because it is a mess.

Again, I will remind the Assembly that the decision to proceed with flood mitigation was made in early 2015. The NDP had four full years of control over the government. It didn't make it happen. In contrast, three days after taking office our government hired an independent expert to review the regulatory process and provide input on a path forward to ensure the project moved ahead to a decision without any delay that we could avoid. On Friday, less than two months after taking office, we gave the answers to the 700 questions, the 8,000 pages. It's a little rich for the opposition to criticize the government for failing to take action. Our government is on track to do more for this project and for flood mitigation in southern Alberta in four months than the NDP got done in four years.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Ms Issik: Madam Speaker, I am happy to rise and speak to this motion today. I want to thank the hon. member for putting it forward because it gives me a chance to touch on a key theme: delay. Looking at this motion, "delay" is the word that jumps out at me the most. Those across the aisle would like to tack it onto us like we're playing pin the tail on the donkey, but I think it's more fitting to describe the previous government because it fits their four years oh so well.

Now, since we're talking about Springbank, let me set the tone by going back to 2013. Calgary experienced 248 millimetres of rain. The surrounding area reported almost 400 millimetres. With the massive ice packs that year we had a disaster of epic proportions, a 1-in-100-year event that, I'm sure, most Calgarians and Albertans won't forget for a thousand years. Over 100,000 Calgarians were forced from their homes, the largest evacuation across Canada in more than 60 years. It wasn't just Calgarians; it was Albertans in smaller towns as well, over $6 billion in total damages, the most costly disaster in Canadian history until Fort McMurray in 2016, and, sadly, five people dead. Even one death hits deep for all of us, and I'll say that my continued prayers are with those families of those five people and for all Albertans that were impacted.

Material loss matters, but some of the deepest scars come from the traumas that are unseen: losing a family member, losing property, those pictures of your grandparents, your child's first tooth. Experiencing such damaging devastation leaves lasting effects. For these reasons we will not delay, Madam Speaker, and we haven't. So I think it's rich for those on the other side to use that language when their government did delay. They had four years to do something about the billions of dollars lost by Albertans in Calgary and the surrounding area, four years to consult with First Nations groups, four years to engage with stakeholders, four years to help Albertans recover and provide them with peace of mind for the future. Yet they didn't get it done. Delay.

Now they want to sit on the other side of the aisle and delay some more while they filibuster our bills and try to prevent us on this side of the Legislature from bringing the change that over one million Albertans tasked us with. Well, Madam Speaker, our government won't delay on flood mitigation or any other project that protects Albertans.

Let me tell you what we didn't delay on. We didn't delay on hiring an independent expert to review the application for Springbank and provide us with feedback. We did that three days after our mandate, and we are eagerly waiting to share his results and findings with the public. We didn't delay on consulting with stakeholders and First Nations groups. We have met with them numerous times and will meet with them as much as is needed in order to make sure that they are listened to and treated with respect. They were even the first to know about our announcement that came out last Friday.

We didn't delay on answering all the questions from the regulators that previous governments delayed on. The questions that the regulators asked were unprecedented in number and scope, but we were happy to answer them and are happy to answer any more questions they may come at us with. I will also add, Madam Speaker, that we will not delay in working with the regulators and the regulations to get the flood mitigation that Albertans need and deserve.

What I find confusing is that members across the aisle want to act like they're so supportive of this project when they actually opposed it in 2015. During that year's election the city of Calgary conducted a survey of the provincial parties and their policies, and here's what the NDP said when asked about the Springbank dam:

Alberta's NDP would not support this project. Some of the core complaints about the project ring true for us, and it does not provide an adequate degree of protection for many of the communities in the surrounding areas. If a project this size is to be undertaken, it needs to ensure that as many communities as possible are protected.

Where did these feelings go? Perhaps we'll never know, but as you can see, the NDP are no friend of this project, just like they were never friends to pipelines, but I'll touch on that in a bit.

The previous government didn't delay on everything, though, to be fair. They didn't delay on bringing in the carbon tax even though they didn't promise it in 2015. They didn't delay on costing the province over 100,000 jobs, which I think is something they should apologize for. They didn't delay in driving billions of dollars of investment away from the province, and they did not delay on making promises they couldn't deliver on.

Where is the social licence that the climate leadership plan was supposed to get us? Where are the pipelines they promised to build? If so much money was going to come from the climate leadership plan, then why are we in the financial mess that we are in now? Where are all the green jobs that the previous government said we would get? And let's not get into how they botched the relationship with the federal government and British Columbia.

The reality, Madam Speaker, is that the NDP have misled Albertans by falsely claiming that the carbon tax under their failed plan would give Albertans the world and more. But it didn't help them follow through with anything they set out to do, and it certainly can't pay for the infrastructure they think it will. But I have good news for Alberta. The infrastructure that Albertans need and deserve will be built. I can assure you of that. The idea that the carbon tax and the climate leadership plan offered anything but economic pain with no environmental gain is laughable. If that were remotely true, we would not have been headed to $100 billion in debt under the previous government.

To build the infrastructure, we have to be responsible and we must follow the processes and the regulations. I know my colleagues on the other side of the aisle would like it if the government got to dictate everything with no input from anyone else, but Albertans didn't agree with that ideological approach. We have to work with the regulators, we have to work with the First Nations groups, and we have to work with other jurisdictions and all stakeholders involved. This is the way to protect Albertans. This is the way without delay.

The NDP hurt Albertans by dragging their heels on projects like SR 1 while rushing to implement failed plans like the climate leadership plan that raised everyone's taxes. Madam Speaker, we passed Bill 1, we scrapped the carbon tax, like we promised, without delay, and Albertans are better for it. We are building infrastructure and going through the processes without delay, and Albertans will be better for it.

With that, I believe this motion is misguided, misinformed, and attempts to defend the failures of the previous government. I'm not going to defend delay. I'm not going to defend hurting Albertans. I am not going to defend making and breaking promises, but luckily I don't have to because that's not what our government is here for. We are moving quickly to undo the damage of the previous government, and we are getting results for Albertans.

We have already passed Bill 1, An Act to Repeal the Carbon Tax, which has already led to savings for Alberta. Just look at the pumps. Promise made, promise kept. We have bills 2, 3, and 4, which are all designed to open Alberta for business again, stop the punishment to job creators, and reduce the red tape in our great province. That's what we promised Albertans we would do. It was in our platform, it's what we campaigned on, and it's what Albertans elected us to do. We are grateful for the overwhelming mandate Albertans gave to this government in April this year, and we will deliver on our promises.

In closing, I can say with confidence that our government is committed to working with regulators to provide effective flood mitigation. We are committed to building infrastructure that Albertans deserve, and that is infrastructure that they are going to get regardless of the carbon tax. We are committed to passing legislation that Albertans need to get back to work and to usher in prosperity to the province that was lost in the one-two punch of the 2013 floods and the four years of NDP failures, and we will do it all without delay. We will not commit to giving in to the NDP's misinformation, we will not commit to defending their previous failures as a government, and we will not let them get off that easy.

Albertans demanded something different. They gave us a mandate to right the wrongs of the previous government.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, I guess 650,000 Albertans voting for this side, this opposition, is chopped liver in your mind, but there still are 650,000 Albertans who gave us a mandate to not just roll over.

I'm surprised, Madam Speaker, that a motion put forward by my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View – if, you know, the Member for Calgary-Hays was listening and the Member for Calgary-Glenmore was listening, she talked about the regulatory process. She didn't say: do away with the regulatory process. This motion is all contingent upon regulatory approval going through. It's not shortcutting anything. What it really wants to know is if this government is committed to following through with the Springbank dam, SR 1, and upstream flood mitigation should the regulator say: we're good to go here. That's what this is really about. We're not trying to say that anything should be shortcut.

I, too, went to Neighbour Day in Calgary, as I'm sure many other members of this House did on the weekend. The 16th of June is in recognition of the significant efforts that Calgarians put in and people outside of Calgary as well in supporting each other through the 2013 flood, which was pretty significant in the area of Cliff Bungalow-Mission, which I represent, Madam Speaker, on the Elbow River. That area, of course, had been flooded in 2005. The flood wasn't as significant in terms of all of the downtown, as it had affected all of downtown in 2013, but it was still significant and caused a great deal of damage.

Madam Speaker, it is necessary that we work as quickly as possible for SR1 for the Elbow River and, of course, the Bow River upstream mitigation. I'm really pleased to see the work that's been done on the Bow River in the communities of Sunnyside, Bowness, and Inglewood and the zoo to better armour and protect people from the flood waters that were damaging and destroying basements, houses, other public installations. We need those things to occur, and we need the government to follow through with the consultations it's undertaking, the government to follow through with the regulatory efforts that they're undertaking. We need to see where money is going to come from for all those things. It is a significant amount of money.

I remember $400 million, $500 million being talked about for this kind of improvement along the upstream of the Bow, so we need to see that happen, Madam Speaker. The Calgary centre, of course, was affected significantly. There was, over a week of that centre being shut down, billions of dollars lost, as was talked about by Calgary-Glenmore. Six billion dollars was the insurance impact and other things that happened as a result of that.

Madam Speaker, Calgary has not dithered in its efforts to do as much as they could to protect residents of their community and businesses. In fact, when I was first elected in 1995, the most challenging issue that was put on my plate immediately as the area alderman was to say yea or nay to Inglewood being protected, armouring itself with a raised flood wall along the new street backyards of 17 homes in that community. I can tell you that that divided the community, so I well understand why there are some people who believe that these things aren't needed, and there are some people who believe it's needed.

There were many people who stood up in '95-'96 in the community that I represented and said: "Let's not do this. Let's not raise the rear yards of Inglewood because rivers flood. It's a natural thing, and we should just sort of understand that with the flood we can try and put temporary barriers in place." But I can tell you that that wasn't good enough for a substantial portion of the population.

Just like in this case, where there are some who believe that we shouldn't do anything – the Member for Banff-Kananaskis believes that nothing should be done, that we should, really, just pray and hope that another disastrous flood doesn't occur, but as the Member for Calgary-Hays said Friday and said again today, you know, we shouldn't think that floods won't happen. It will happen. We have to be prepared. I agree with him on that point. That's about the only point that I do agree with that member on.

This side, when we were government, did not delay and think that it wasn't important to put flood mitigation in place, Madam Speaker. That was always our plan. It was always my plan as a young alderman back in 1996 when there were many, many people who didn't want that to happen. Being protected and being prepared and putting flood walls or other things in place is what we need to do to be responsible. That's what legislators and elected representatives need to be able to stand up and say: I believe this is necessary because it's in the best interests of safety; it's in the best interest of protection of property. This side understood that just as much as the people on the other side.

It wasn't under my direct responsibility as a minister, but certainly making sure the funds were in place was under my responsibility. The Minister of Transportation was the point person for us in that regard, not unlike the current government and the Minister of Transportation being the point person with regard to SR 1, Madam Speaker. We found that the regulatory process that was put in place was not adequate, so we had to reload in that regard, and we did. It took time to get all of that work back together, but we were moving forward. As well, we were moving forward with engagement with property owners and talking with those and negotiating with those individuals who would negotiate with us with regard to buying property for this purpose. There was a significant interest. There was a significant importance placed on this issue. While we, campaigning for government in 2015, didn't know all the where and wherefores of this issue, once we became apprised of it and reviewed the file, we were firmly in support of moving forward with the necessary flood mitigations not only for Calgary but for communities downriver from the Bow River and Calgary.

In the meantime, while we were organizing, working with the regulator, outreaching to property owners who would work with us for the purchase of their properties, we were taking steps to put in place emergency responses for Calgary and to make sure that the things that could be done with proper approvals both from the environment and the federal regulators that were identified by my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View with respect to separations of the upper plateau from the lower parts of the valley in the Sunnyside area and above Sunnyside in Crescentwood took place and were funded. We took initiative to work with city of Calgary around Downtown West and Eau Claire to make sure that those projects would go forward so that there was better mitigation in the downtown part of Calgary.

All that, as well as continuing to work on moving SR 1 forward, was what we were doing, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members. The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased today to speak to Motion 504, referencing, among other things, the Springbank dam, the Bow River, and the climate leadership plan.

I'm going to address the motion in a few parts: first, our position on flood mitigation; second, the NDP's record on flood mitigation; and third, throughout my speech, the climate leadership plan.

Before I do that, I want to acknowledge that the motion references a project that is currently undergoing a critical and comprehensive assessment by two regulatory agencies, the provincial Natural Resources Conservation Board and the federal Canadian Environmental Assessment Agency. This process takes several years and has many components. It primarily involves the proponent of the project, in this case Alberta Transportation, and the regulatory agencies going back and forth to review the viability of the project and its impacts on the environment. At the end of the review process the agencies will issue a recommendation, the NRCB to the provincial government and the CEAA to federal environment minister.

I am mentioning all of this information on process because I want to note that this motion attempts to go around the environmental process. The NDP want to ignore the work of the environmental review process and have the Assembly issue a directive that a project currently under review be committed to. That's not only a reckless approach to a massive infrastructure project, but it's a dangerous approach to take on impacted communities for consultation. You can't have a meaningful dialogue with something that you have already predetermined. You just can't do that, but that's typical of the NDP approach. When they brought forward far-reaching farm legislation, they neglected to properly consult stakeholders as radical as farmers. Even when protesters hounded the Legislature demanding simply that they be heard, the NDP refused to listen. This approach continued for the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, which, among other things, brought the carbon tax to Alberta. The NDP's 2015 campaign platform mentioned the carbon tax exactly zero times. They once again refused to take the time to properly consult Albertans.

The NDP attempted to sell the carbon tax on the argument that it would buy our province social licence to build a pipeline. You can tell by all the excellent new pipelines we have that that worked out quite well. Northern Gateway, approved by the Harper government, was immediately axed by the Trudeau Liberals. The Keystone XL pipeline was vetoed by the Obama White House. The Energy East pipeline was abandoned because of regulatory uncertainty caused by several levels of government in Canada. Now Albertans' last hope, the Trans Mountain pipeline, hangs by a thread. It became so precarious and uncertain that the federal government had to buy the pipeline in order to bring some sense of stability, not the carbon tax. No, the carbon tax brought economic pain to Alberta families. The opposition leader herself admitted that she had no idea what the environmental gain would be when asked just a few short months ago.

It's been clear from the beginning that the climate leadership plan was not really a plan and didn't include much in the way of leadership. Instead, Albertans got taxed for heating their homes and driving their cars. In our cold northern climate with long, dark winters Albertans were punished by the NDP simply for trying to live. The climate leadership plan was always a bad idea and is still a bad idea today, which is too bad because climate change is an important issue, and we need to consider all of our options. Our platform, in contrast to the NDP, made it clear that we're committed to creating programs that achieve real outcomes through an entrepreneurial approach, not the creation of slush funds. The NDP didn't run on the carbon tax, rammed it through the Assembly without regard for the opinions of Albertans, and refused to listen to anyone who had concerns with their approach. Now they want to commit to a project before it has completed the environmental assessment process. It's an irresponsible approach to the environmental review but, again, not surprising that the NDP would like to skip through the proper process.

On we go to flood mitigation. Our government's position is clear. We are committed to providing flood mitigation for Calgary and the surrounding areas. We are committed to getting the Springbank reservoir project through the regulatory process to a decision. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View has talked about honesty in government, claiming that our government is conflicted. It's true that there's a healthy debate in our caucus on the issues, among many. Our caucus believes in representing our constituents to the best of our knowledge. That's called doing our job and a big reason why I ran underneath the UCP banner in the last election. The previous government may have believed in centralization and, indeed, they were routinely criticized for doing so, but ours believes that members must represent their constituents' beliefs first.

Additionally, in making such an argument about our caucus, the members opposite seem to forget that they not only had conflicting opinions about the Springbank and flood mitigation in Calgary, but they actively campaigned against the project in 2015. In response to a question from the city of Calgary, "The Springbank off-stream diversion and storage site . . . do you favour?" the NDP answered, "Alberta's NDP would not support this project." So it's ironic now to hear their resolute support for the Springbank considering their similar resolute opposition.

Now, it's healthy in a democracy to be open to changing your mind. That's important. When you get new information, you re-evaluate what you know. That's fair.

I'm not criticizing the NDP for supporting the project they campaigned against. What I do wish the members opposite would acknowledge is that their dithering led to four years of delay and inaction on flood mitigation, leaving our communities at risk. Four years later we are no further forward, only four years further behind.

What's the cost of that inaction? Let's go back to 2013 and what the city of Calgary experienced: a 1-in-100-year flood event that Calgary is still recovering from; over 100,000 Albertans forced from their homes, the largest evacuation in Canada in over 60 years; the costliest natural disaster at the time, over $6 billion in total damages; sadly, five people lost their lives. These are the consequences. Every spring when the water rises, Calgarians like myself sit on edge, hoping and praying that we won't flood again. We've been lucky for six years, but next year or the year after we might not be so lucky.

It's important to do this project right to make sure that those who are impacted by this complex infrastructure project are properly consulted and feel heard. That is our government's goal, and we will ensure that we properly oversee this project. What does not help to move this project forward is motions, like this one today, which seek to prejudice the outcome of a review process before the review is completed.

What does help is a government that takes action. Let me remind this Assembly that our government has been committed to flood mitigation since day one, and I'm pretty proud of our minister for how quickly he got on top of this. Shortly after being sworn in, our government hired an independent expert to examine the review process to date and provide input on the process moving forward. Just last week the Minister of Transportation announced that his department had taken a significant step forward toward completing the regulatory process for the Springbank reservoir by submitting over 8,000 pages of information to the provincial and federal environmental regulators. These are concrete steps that we have done in the last six weeks. It's more than the NDP did in the last four years.

You don't hear the opposition talk much about their record on this file; it's because they have no record to defend. We campaigned on doing projects properly, engaging Albertans, and ensuring that we're taking a smart approach moving forward. That's what we promised Albertans we would do. It was in our platform. It's what Albertans elected us to do. We are grateful for the overwhelming mandate Albertans gave to this government in April this year, and we will deliver on our promises. I can say that the Minister of Transportation and our government are committed to providing effective flood mitigation for the city of Calgary and surrounding areas. We will continue to consult with affected Albertans to understand their concerns and how they can be addressed. We will take action where the NDP did not. We will not rush through a review, however, and ignore necessary processes simply because the opposition suddenly thinks it's expedient to do so.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, would the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View like to close debate?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased for the opportunity to close debate on this matter, and I will make my own comments, unlike the previous speaker, who read identical notes to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore's.

The Minister of Transportation certainly likes to take shots about what our government did or didn't do. They have no basis in fact, but I don't think that that's the important thing to get into at this moment. What's important is that we move forward to protect the people of Calgary. What's important is getting it done.

The question on Springbank was quite clear. It was: will you commit funding once it makes it through the regulatory process? That's a pretty clear question, I think, and that's all we're asking the government to commit to. I know it's possible to do because our government did it. I think that it's rather rich for them to stand up and say: oh, well, this circumvents the regulatory process. No, of course, it doesn't. The regulatory process is associated with all sorts of things that have committed funding. When we commit to build a school, there are still, sometimes, environmental assessments that need to be done. There are geological assessments that need to be done. When you commit to build a road in certain places, there are environmental assessments that need to be done. You can make the commitment without circumventing the process. What we're saying here is: they should fully commit to following through on the process and to funding the dam.

What I think frustrates me most is that in the rather extensive and repetitive comments we heard, there was no mention of flood mitigation on the Bow. That is a real frustration for me because we were clear in it that we wanted, you know, to go through, to assess the options, to do the necessary work, but what we were looking for was a commitment to continue moving that forward. There are a lot of people that live along the Bow River. There are people in downtown, there are people in Eau Claire, there are people in west downtown, in Inglewood and in Sunnyside, Hillhurst in my riding, and many other people as well. I think that the fact that it didn't even bear mentioning is very, very troubling to me.

You know, during the campaign we heard commitments going back and forth, and that's fine. You get into government, sometimes you see the facts, and you make a different decision. I think that's how good governance works, and I'm fine with that. But what I'm asking is – now that they've had the opportunity to see the facts, to see a commitment, and I'm not hearing a commitment, and that's really, really troubling to me. The government likes to talk about their huge mandate, a little like a 14-year-old boy, but I think, Madam Speaker, that at the end of the day, what's important is not how we got here but what we do now that we're here. I think that ultimately what will reflect us and what will reflect on us is what we accomplish in the time that we're here.

What I'm asking for in this motion is for the government to commit to moving both of these projects forward. I'm really, really troubled that we didn't hear more about flood mitigation on the Bow because I think it's still in process, and I think there are a lot of people who would like to continue to get information about that process. I think that the government owes to Albertans an answer on flood mitigation on the Bow. Are they going to go forward? Are they going to continue to assess the options?

We of all people know that regulatory processes can take an incredibly long time, a frustratingly long time. The most important thing you can do is to continue to communicate back and forth. I've had the opportunity to work with the Calgary River Communities Action Group and a number of other groups on these files, and we had ongoing conversations on the Springbank dam and where we were in the regulatory process and what was going on, likewise with flood mitigation on the Bow. What I would like to see is that continued conversation back and forth in order to ensure that we can make progress on this.

They're welcome to take shots at me, Madam Speaker. I'm just hopeful that they will commit to Calgarians. They don't need to commit to it for my sake. What I'm asking for is a commitment for the sake of not just my residents but the residents throughout Calgary.

With that, I will close debate. Thank you very much.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, June 17, 2019

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from Her Honour the Administrator, which I now transmit to you. This message will stand in the place of the messages tabled on June 11, 2019.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Administrator transmits interim supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and certain sums required for the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2020, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the 2019-2020 interim supply estimates. These interim supply estimates will provide spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and the government for the period of April 1, 2019, to November 30, 2019. This interim funding authority will ensure continuity in the business of the province while our government assesses the province's finances before introducing a budget in the fall of 2019. When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $107 million for the Legislative Assembly, $27.8 billion in expense funding, $2.4 billion in capital investment funding, $786 million in financial transactions funding for the government, and $943 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund.

Government Motions

19. Mr. Toews moved:

Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Administrator, the 2019-20 interim supply estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this government motion is debatable according to Standing Order 18(1)(i). Are there any wishing to speak?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Finance to close debate.

Mr. Toews: I waive, sir.

[Government Motion 19 carried]

20. Mr. Toews moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2019-20 interim supply estimates for three hours on Tuesday, June 18, 2019.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a nondebatable motion according to Standing Order 61(2).

[Government Motion 20 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2019

Mr. Toews: I move second reading of Bill 10.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is focused on amendments to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. The changes are largely technical and bring our legislation in line with how the Canada Revenue Agency is already administering Alberta's tax system. We need to do this because the federal government made legislative changes last year that affected how some of Alberta's personal tax credits are calculated. Our legislation needs to reflect these federal changes.

The previous NDP government failed to bring forward the legislative changes required to support the proper administration of Alberta's personal income taxes. However, they did ask Canada Revenue Agency to administer the changes when people filed their 2018 tax returns, with the promise that they would make the proper legislative changes or updates at the next available opportunity. Since that opportunity never presented itself for the previous government, I rise to bring forward these changes so Alberta's tax system can continue to function efficiently. If we don't implement these amendments to the act, Canada Revenue Agency's ability to administer the tax system on our behalf could be jeopardized. If that were to happen, it would increase confusion for taxpayers and raise taxes on the dividend income received by some small-business owners.

Having said that, I will now go over these three important amendments. First, we will ensure that a taxpayer's entire income is included in the calculation of certain credits. Second, we will ensure that certain benefits for Canadian Forces' members and veterans are eligible for a pension credit. This may mean some veterans will get a higher pension income credit. It also guarantees alignment with what is considered pension income when calculating Alberta income tax. Lastly, the amendments adjust the provincial dividend tax credit rate so that federal tax changes do not have a negative impact on Alberta taxpayers. Without this change, some small-business owners would face a slight tax increase on their dividend income.

Mr. Speaker, as I've stated, these amendments will properly maintain Alberta's tax system and are needed to support Canada Revenue Agency's administration of Alberta's 2018 tax system, taxes that have already been filed by the majority of Albertans. Their passage ensures that taxpayers are treated consistently compared to the previous year and protects taxpayers from any potential tax reassessments that could result from the misalignment of provincial and federal systems.

I now move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate lost]

The Speaker: Is there anyone wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverley-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] I will thank my caucus colleagues now for their warm round of applause although what I'm about to share is probably not as riveting as they might hope.

I do want to start off by just clarifying for the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance that – I always find it interesting when the government, at every opportunity, says: this is something the NDP said they were going to do and didn't. Well, let's look at why it wasn't done until this moment: because we couldn't. I appreciate the fact that the government is bringing this in. You know, I can assure the Minister of Finance that had we formed government in the 2019 election, we would have brought this forward, but we accept the fact that the minister and this government are bringing it in, recognizing again that whenever there are federal changes, the province obviously needs to make amendments to ensure that we're in sync with the federal tax regulations and legislation.

I appreciate what these small changes do, again, especially for our Canadian Armed Forces. I mean, I think every member in this House recognizes the sacrifice that the men and women who serve our country make each and every day for all of us so that we may stand in this Legislature and debate. I also appreciate the fact that there's an amendment here for the small-business rate, which will impact our small businesses, so it's important that this is done speedily or expeditiously.

As my colleague the Member for Edmonton-North West said, you know, had we formed government, we might have brought this in as bill 3 or 4, so it's a little frustrating that the government had to wait until Bill 10 to bring this in. But we do support these changes and recognize that this is more of an administrative change. But I wanted to stand up and clarify on the record, Mr. Speaker, that this wasn't done by our government because our government never had the opportunity.

Ms Hoffman: Promise made, promise kept.

Mr. Bilous: That's right. According to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora: promise made, promise kept.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any others wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is rising to add to the debate.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I felt that this was a bill I just really wanted to speak to. I just wanted to say that there are few opportunities in this House where we can be all in consensus and have unanimous support, but I would like to share as well our support for this bill. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview just said, this seems like very straightforward changes. I'm glad that the government members are willing to follow through on something that the NDP government committed to do. We appreciate that very much. It seems like very straightforward changes to align our income tax system with the federal system. I'm sure there will be other opportunities where we will find that if we don't align with the federal regulations, they will impose them upon us. I think we might see that shortly, January 1, I believe. In any event, this seems very straightforward.

I'm glad to rise in support and to see this opportunity for all members of the House to come together unanimously and support what will only make – they may be administrative, but they will have benefits, particularly for our veterans, and that's a very important thing. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise in support of this bill.

The Speaker: Well, teamwork does make the dream work.

Are there any others wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)? Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there any others wishing to speak to Bill 10 at second reading?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board to close debate.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and hear pretty unanimous support for this housekeeping bill, that really needs to get accomplished by this Legislature in order to serve Alberta taxpayers well for not only the upcoming year but, in fact, for 2018.

With that, I move to close debate.

The Speaker: Well done.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

Education Amendment Act, 2019

Mr. Bilous moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 8, Education Amendment Act, 2019, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 8, Education Amendment Act, 2019, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that further time is necessary to enable school boards to adjust their policies to comply with the proposed legislation and regulations.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment June 12: Mr. Dang]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are on an amendment to Bill 8. Anyone wishing to add to the debate this evening? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Just to clarify, Mr. Speaker, the amendment on Bill 8, correct?

The Speaker: Correct.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleagues for this opportunity to rise in this House and speak to why it's so important that we move forward on this referral amendment that is being proposed before this Assembly.

I have to say that it is with great sadness that we're here considering Bill Hate tonight. I think that my colleagues earlier today did an excellent job of walking through some of the legal history and background. I, too, was there at the time when we were considering this originally. I know that ATA members were brought forward. I know that parents were brought forward. I know that a lot of consultation happened around the province around high school completion rates – that was primarily the focus that I recall at many of the working group sessions that I went to – high school completion rates that were certainly among the lower portion of provinces in the country and not at a stage that I think we wanted to see moving forward. That's why I think the consultation that took place did in such a fulsome way.

I have to say that most of the amendments that were being proposed to the School Act – and then subsequently they came up with an act they called the Education Act – were done, again, with this focus on high school completion. The main thrust of that was around increasing access from 19 to 20 years of age, well, to 21, essentially, as of September 1. It would have meant that many more students would have access to that K to 12 school system in an attempt to support high school completion.

Many of the students who would have benefited from that in particular were students with disabilities and students who had a lot of other pressures outside of the regular K to 12 school day. At the time when I was on the school board and there was consultation in this area, I know that I represented students who attended Braemar school, which we heard about just a couple of weeks ago. Braemar is in the riding of Edmonton-Gold Bar. It's the name of the neighbourhood. The elementary school used to be there. It's the name that was in Ottewell for that neighbourhood at the time.

The programming that's available there is focused specifically on pregnant and parenting teen moms. It's those moms who, when I met with them and discussed the changes, said: it would make a big difference for me if I felt like I could take an extra year or even two years. Most of the moms are only away from school for one to two weeks after they've given birth and usually bring their babies with them back to school. They said: you know, this is a change, if it was extended to 21, that would help me and my family and put some ease on some of the pressures that I face.

That's not what this bill is actually going to do. This bill is going to keep the age limits as they were, at 19. I understand that there are financial pressures that come with expanding the age of completion by two years and that the decision has been made not to move forward on that, but that, to me, was the main thrust of why the Education Act consultation took place.

I have spoken with many school board chairs, and when I spoke with my former colleague and, I guess, once-again colleague Mary Martin, the chair of Calgary Catholic, the piece in the Education Act that she was most excited about was the work to increase high school completion rates. She talked about how some of the consultation included going to prisons and talking to educators in prisons as well as inmates about what their experiences were in the school system. I've had many friends who've taught at the remand, for example, here in Edmonton, and they said that most of the folks who are there haven't completed high school. What a difference it would make if high school completion opportunities were more available for them in their earlier years, in their younger life.

Again, that was the original intent, I believe, of many of these conversations as well as aligning ages of entry, having more consistency and certainty for families so that it didn't matter, you know, if they lived on one boundary or another or if they chose Catholic or public but that they have greater certainty and consistency around age of entry and age of access. These were given to us in this decade-old consultation as the main reasons why the Education Act was being considered.

So this title still is here, Education Act, but certainly the focus of what this bill is is very different than what was proposed. I believe my colleague from Edmonton-Whitemud talked about a transformative educational opportunity. I think that anywhere, anyplace, any time was one of the taglines that was used. It kind of reminds me of: right care, right place, right time, right provider. Interesting. Anywhere, anyplace, any time education: again, this act doesn't do that. It doesn't, I would say, do much to address high school completion at all.

Good news, Mr. Speaker. Over the last four years, with an NDP government that really focused on trying to make sure that schools had the supports they needed and that youth had an increase to their minimum wage and felt possibly less pressure to have to try to cram in as many hours of work and with a number of other initiatives, high school completion has increased. Is it where we want it to be? I imagine the Education minister would say no, that she wants it to continue to grow, and I do, too. I think it's important for every student to have the opportunity to benefit from an excellent public education, whether that be provided in a public school or otherwise, but with the idea that one of the components of public education is: free from fees. Right? That's what this purpose of considering the age of access is.

Okay. It doesn't do the things that were originally set out in consultation as the main focuses of the bill. Well, then, why do it? I think that the truth is – and I think we've unpacked it over the last sort of two weeks and will continue to unpack it over the coming days – that this is a backdoor way, some might say, to undo the important work that was done with Bill 24 and other legislation brought forward by our fantastic MLA for Edmonton-North West, the former Minister of Education under the previous government, legislation that was brought forward because students and staff regularly said: we need greater clarity; we need greater certainty.

Some might say, the Education minister might say, and others might say: "Well, we have PIPA. We have FOIP. That's good enough. There's lots of privacy legislation." Actually, PIPA and FOIP have very clear assumptions that parents have a right to information, including section 85 . . .

Ms Pancholi: Section 84.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. I was one section off.

Section 84 very clearly says that parents are entitled to have information about their children in the school system: their school records, these types of things. It has been argued that therefore parents should have the right to know about any extracurricular club or activity that their children are engaged in. That is exactly how this debate really started, when the Education minister at the time said: we're going to make sure that nobody is outed before they're ready, that students have the ability to be safe and protected and supported in their schools and have an ability to access a support group without having the risk of it putting them in a social situation that they themselves aren't ready for.

Honestly, Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that no one – no one – should ever be outed before they are in a position where they feel confident in doing so. Sometimes it's hard, because sometimes people say: hey, there are people around you, people close to you who, like, come on, you know are probably gay. I say, you know, that I live my value of not outing anyone before they're ready to make that decision for themselves. I think that it's an important principle, and I think it applies to all, whether you are somebody who has lived for many, many decades or whether you are a youth. I think that those rights to have privacy and dignity should apply to all. Sometimes it's hard. I know that sometimes we feel pressure and that sometimes people feel compelled to try to disclose somebody else's orientation, but I think that that's an important value and principle. I think that people should be allowed to make their own decisions about talking about who and how they love if they ever choose to do so.

It was really clear that some schools said: "You know, I feel a lot of pressure when I'm acting in the role of guardian to disclose. FOIP has clause 84. I should probably disclose this to the parents. I don't feel like I'm in the best position to do that, and I worry that if I do and it does result in harm, I will have to live with that on my conscience."

So we, with the Education minister, entered into discussion with youth, primarily, as well as those who work with them, including teachers and others through the school system and so forth, and it was very clear that they wanted that clarity that they were not to out somebody. Sometimes we say: other duties as assigned. Outing kids would not be assigned. That would not be a duty where any educator would have to be put in a position to make that decision.

Many educators who support GSAs work with youth on how to have those conversations with their families, how to put themselves in a position where they're feeling strong enough to be able to have those conversations, and to have contingency plans if they need them, of course. But many of them are supported in a proactive way in having their own voice and making their own decision about their own orientation and on how, if, and when to share that.

Given that this is going to undo that piece of legislation that was brought forward, I think it is very damaging. I've said in the House previously that we will have experiences in this House, experiences that are going to be very difficult, where people have to rise and answer for why something terrible happened. There will be ministers, primarily, that stand up and say: one child dying is one child too many. And they're right. One child dying is one child too many. One child being forced into homelessness is one child too many.

If you go to the youth emergency shelter here in Edmonton, a fantastic place on Whyte Avenue, or if you go to other homeless shelters for youth in your own ridings, you will talk to those case workers, and they will say that statistically there is significant overrepresentation of youth who are LGBTQ. Significant overrepresentation. One of the ways that we can prevent that is by making sure that they have some say over how their story is shared and with whom rather than by creating increased opportunities through existing legislation to put these kids in vulnerable positions. So that's one.

The other one is the timeliness piece. I am deeply concerned by the lack of commitment. I want to say that in the Education Act that's being proposed today, there are many things that we did through the School Act that the now government has taken and said, you know, that that was important. Like school fees: that was important; we're going to carry that on. Like a trustee code of conduct: that was important; we're going to carry that on. Like superintendent compensation: that was important; we're going to carry it on. But timeliness on creating support groups for vulnerable kids: "No. Not important. We're going to shelve that. We're going to shelve that. We're not going to create opportunities for these kids," who are often at their most vulnerable when they're asking for GSAs.

I'm going to back up for a second. I think of the fact that we even have to ask for GSAs, that you're saying to kids who are vulnerable, "Hey, put up your hand if you want us to create a support group." I talked to a number of youth who said: "You know, by the time I put up my hand, it's already a month or two into the school year. Then it takes a little while to set it up even if it was timely, and then the next year I have to ask all over again to have it created." There should just be one automatically, and if nobody shows up Wednesdays at lunch, so be it, you know. The teacher will eat their sandwich in their classroom, and that's that. But not only are we going to fail to make it easier for kids to set up, but we're actually going to remove that "immediately" clause so that it can be prolonged so that kids are asking, often in times of crisis: "Hey, I need a support group. I need somebody to talk to. I need a safe place at lunch. I need a bathroom where I can go without being worried that I'm going to be harassed."

I talked to an ATA member just last weekend who talked about how in all the years that his son rushed home and used the bathroom immediately as soon as he got home, he never thought, "Why aren't you using the bathroom at school?" Well, three years later, when his son did come out, he said, "Is that why you rushed home to use the bathroom?" He said: "Yeah. I didn't want to be in the bathroom. I was nervous. I was around all these guys. I didn't want them to see me. I didn't want them to harass me. I certainly didn't want to get beat up. There was already speculation that I was gay. I didn't want to have to put myself in that position, so I held it all day, and, yes, as soon as I got home, the first thing I did was that I ran into the bathroom."

If there had been a GSA at the school at that time, these are the kinds of things that can be discussed, and people can come up with plans around which bathroom you can use, when you can use it, and how we can make sure that you can focus on learning math instead of focusing on: how quickly can I get home so I don't pee my pants. Right?

It's pretty basic. Kids should be able to go to school, hang up their coat, put their books in their locker, go to class, and focus. Most of the kids that are benefiting from having GSAs can do that once they have some additional structures in place to give them opportunities to strategize and work with their classmates and work with other caring adults at that school. By saying that we're going to remove the obligation for it to be immediate, we're going to create an opportunity to sort of rag the puck a little bit longer for kids who are already in a position of significant vulnerability, and that, I think, is an injustice.

So, again, changes that we made in other areas of the School Act – superintendent compensation, board code of conduct, school fees – are being picked up and implemented into Bill Hate, but the protections around youth: "No. We're not going to do those." Okay. So that's actually going to also have a negative impact on high school completion rates. I'll tell you that I went to many outreach graduations over the years, and many of the students at those outreach graduations – you probably have some in your ridings too, hon. Speaker and colleagues.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre rising to ask a brief question or comment.

Mr. Shepherd: Indeed, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was greatly enjoying the remarks from my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora. I think she has some deep knowledge and expertise on this subject, having served as the chair of the Edmonton public school board, and I would appreciate it if she would like to share any final thoughts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has the call.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

They would say: "I'm at outreach school, and I'm really proud that I'm completing now. One of the reasons why I ended up here is because I didn't feel safe in my neighbourhood high school. I didn't feel safe in the high school I was attending originally." If we can create opportunities for kids to feel safe, kids who are these vulnerable, marginalized youth, in their schools so that they don't have to end up going to an outreach school – I'm glad that outreach is there, but nobody should end up there because they felt that they weren't safe going to their regular neighbourhood school that they chose. I think we owe it to those kids.

Also, research, which are surveys that are done by Alberta Education and by others, is very clear that GSAs and the creation of LGBTQ stand-alone policies, not inclusion policies but LGBTQ stand-alone policies, in schools that have them, the sense of safety and the sense of inclusion for students who don't identify as LGBTQ also goes up because you create a culture where discrimination, harassment, bullying, and specifically naming out for sexual orientation and gender identity minority youth is unacceptable. To me you're keeping vulnerable kids safe, and you're also creating heightened opportunities for safety for others.

These are a few of the pieces why I feel that Bill 8 in its current form has nothing to do with the original intention of the Education Act and everything to do with hate: outing kids, timing them out, and creating more risk and opportunities for harm for these youth who certainly didn't ask for it, certainly didn't ask to be different, certainly didn't ask to be harassed, and certainly don't deserve to be treated in the way that they are. I know that we will probably hear people say: we spoke to all the stakeholders. I will tell you that there are hundreds of kids who have reached out to me – and I will have opportunities, I imagine, to share some of their thoughts and words on this in the days to come – and said: “No, I didn't. I finally feel safe at my school. No, I didn't ask for my rights to be balanced against somebody else's rights. My rights are my rights, my human rights, and they aren't out of balance. They should be protected, and I deserve to have my voice and my rights respected.”

Again, during the election – and members opposite will talk about it – pipelines, economy, jobs. I remember those big words on placards up behind the now Premier. This wasn't put out there as one of the top three things that were proposed to be done, hon. members. This wasn't: “Hey, this is what we're really going to focus on. We're going to focus on finding new ways to out gay kids.”

Actually, I think when we said that there was a long history of the now Premier working to create unsafe situations for LGBTQ men and women in San Francisco in particular and for lack of equal marriage opportunities, then we got: “Oh, no, no, no. The now Premier says that he supports civil unions.” Well, that was in the face of losing challenges around equal marriage, right? Saying that your rights aren't equal rights, that we will have a subset of rights for another group of humans or class of individuals is wrong.

That's what these youth told me, and that's what I will continue to fight for. I will fight for their voices to be heard and for the changes that were implemented, under thoughtful consultation, to keep kids safe and save their lives not withheld as we continue to move forward. Somebody said, you know: well, don't you think it would be nice to have a few evenings off? I'm sure there are many people who want evenings off, but I would not bank on anyone having any evenings off until we have assurances that our kids will not be outed, our kids will have timely access, and that they will be supported and respected in their schools.

It's quite easy. Either pick up the same sections from the amended School Act and other pieces of legislation and move them over into this ed act, or shelve this ed act altogether. Let's be clear again. This isn't the implementation plan that original consultation a decade ago set out to achieve. There are a couple of choices on how we can get to a better outcome, where we actually do have the strongest protections in the country, because we have them today. We have them today, and nobody said that we need to move backwards. I doubt that anyone when we were door-knocking – and if people did, when you were door-knocking, say that we need to move backwards on protections for LGBTQ, I certainly welcome my hon. colleagues to stand up and say so because I will tell you that I heard not a lot about GSAs, and when I did, it was: thank you for the work you did to keep me safe.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone else wishing to join the debate this evening? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise. This is my first opportunity to speak in this House with respect to Bill 8. I suspect it will not be my last opportunity, and I promise you that I think I have enough material here to speak many, many, many times on Bill 8.

I'm pleased to rise today to voice my significant concerns regarding Bill Hate, the Education Amendment Act, 2019. It is a privilege to speak on this bill right after my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, after her expertise as a board chair for the Edmonton public school board, one of the largest school boards in the province, and also to sit on this side of the aisle with some excellent advocates for education such as the MLA for Edmonton-North West, David Eggen – pardon me – who was the former Minister of Education, who made some significant progress in bringing the School Act up to date.

I spoke today, Mr. Speaker, about my experience because I have significant and substantial experience with the Education Act, which this government is now bringing forward in an amended form. I was privileged to serve in the public service of this provincial government from 2006 to 2014. The last five years of that period of time I spent significant time working with three different Education ministers – Minister David Hancock, Minister Thomas Lukaszuk, and Minister Jeff Johnson – on three different versions of the Education Act, which was the result of, I think, some very good intentions, actually.

You know, I think it was in 2009, I believe, that the province underwent a significant consultation on the education system as a whole. That consultation was called Inspiring Education. It was also connected with a review of what was then called special education. We don't use that terminology anymore, but that was called Setting the Direction for Special Education in Alberta. I applaud those previous governments for doing significant consultation work with stakeholders, with parents, with students, to try to see a vision forward for education in this province.

The School Act has been in place since 1988; however, it is important to note that it has undergone a number of changes and amendments, in particular in the last four years. However, it was 1988 when that piece of legislation was formed.

I worked as part of the legislative services team within Alberta Education, working closely with colleagues in Alberta Justice, to try to put into legislative form some of the feedback that was heard throughout that consultation period and responding, of course, to the ministers with which I worked. What I can tell you is that there were very high ambitions with respect to overhauling and reforming and modernizing our education system, and there were some pieces within the Education Act which were intended to be transformative.

However, as somebody who literally spent hours and hours and hours reading every word of the School Act and rewriting every word of the Education Act, I can tell you that there was a little bit of a sense – actually more than a little bit; there was a significant sense of disappointment that where we landed with respect to the Education Act was actually not transformative.

What we had heard in the consultations, what the government had heard in the consultations was about removing sort of the bricks and mortar of schools and having a real way for students to learn any time, any place, any pace, and the idea was to support kids. At that time the main objective of that government was actually to increase high school completion. The goal was to think about education in a different way that would support all kids to be able to finish their high school diploma. Unfortunately, for various reasons, what we ended up with in terms of the Education Act was primarily a cleaned up version, some changes but, really, just a cleaned up version of the School Act.

There were some key pieces, though, that I think many of us who believed in the idea of any time, any place, any pace were excited about. There were some provisions in the Education Act that were going to really encourage kids to stay in school, to finish school, and learn at a pace that worked for them but that also allowed them to achieve success. What I am most disappointed about is that there were a couple of pieces that were transformative, and those are the pieces that this government has decided not to go forward with in the Education Act. Those are the pieces that they're actually choosing to repeal from the Education Act.

Specifically, those are the pieces around increasing the age of access from the age of 19 to the age of 21, increasing the age of compulsory attendance at school, which means you can't drop out of school, to the age of 17 from the age of 16, and it was about basing residency of the student, which determines which school board is responsible for delivering education programs to that student, to be based on where the student lived, not where the student's parents lived. That was significant because, like many other services, health services in particular, services follow the recipient of the services. Where that person who's getting the services goes, that's where they get to receive it, and the thinking was that we have situations – we have many situations – where students unfortunately are not living with their parents, and they should not be denied access to the resident school board that they reside in simply because their parent does not live in the same school district. The idea was that kids, no matter where they are, should have access to the same high quality of education. Those were the changes that were probably the most transformative in terms of actually implementing the vision of Inspiring Education and Setting the Direction, which was focusing on: any time, any place, any place. Unfortunately, those are the provisions that Bill 8 chooses to repeal. So they're not going forward with it.

I actually appreciate very much the comments from my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora as well as, I know, the expertise of the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West of why those changes. They are difficult to implement, and I'm sympathetic towards that. There is a dollar figure attached to making those changes because if you're going to be requiring school boards to provide access to education to kids to the age of 21, yeah, that means kids are in school longer. Now, it does give them more opportunity to succeed and to complete their education, but it costs money.

I do want to point out, however – this is part of the privilege of having worked in public service and being a detail person. Our current education system – and this has been the case for quite some time – actually currently funds kids till the age of 20. Even though the legislation and the School Act says access till the age of 19, we actually provide funding up to the age of 20, so at the very least I think this government could have chosen to still increase the age of access to the age of 20. That is consistent with funding practice already as it is.

However, I want to speak a little bit more about the amendment that's before us today. It is talking about providing the opportunity for consultation, and I can tell you that there are a few reasons why. This legislation actually passed in 2012 originally. As a public servant who worked many long hours and weeks and days on that legislation, I can tell you that I was actually thrilled to see that Education Act finally pass, the work of many, many, many public servants who put in a lot of time and energy. However, there are a few things that – that was now almost seven years ago, and I can tell you that in that time two things have happened.

There was a reason why the Progressive Conservative government at the time did not proclaim that act right away. Let's remember. It passed in 2012. Government did not change until 2015, three years later. The reason why they didn't proclaim it was because the devil is in the details, because a significant amount of work under the Education Act was in the regulations. It's true of the School Act now, and I can tell you again that this is why it's not that much different than the Education Act. If you look at the Education Act right now, there are a number of opportunities where regulations need to be developed, and those regulations are the meat and bones of the operations of school boards and private schools and charter schools in their system. Transportation, school fees, all of those things are set out in regulation. There was a significant amount of work that needed to be done before school boards, private schools, charter schools, parents, students were ready to operationalize the Education Act.

I can go through and I can identify that there is – for the lawyers, yeah. We like lots of regulations. That's what we do. We read that stuff all the time, but it's really important in the education system. I've worked in a number of different areas where we never look at the regulations. I can tell you that in the education world – and I worked in the provincial government and then I worked for school boards for five years – we look at those regulations a lot. We look at them a lot because the details are really set out. It's a process by which charter schools are approved. It's a process by which private schools are approved. It's a process by which home education is delivered by parents. It's a process by which transportation fees are set, school fees are set, school councils function, separate school establishments happen, student evaluations, student records, requirements that school boards have to have about what information they need to keep about their students. It's all in the regulations. So when we're sitting here today and we're talking about this reasoned amendment, which is to wait and consult, the reason is because this is not an act that we can simply snap our fingers and it will be implemented.

There is a lot of work that needs to be done, that school boards need to know, private school operators, charter school operators, home educators, those parents need to know to be able to implement this regulation. To date we do not know what those regulations are. It's a long process because I can tell you each piece of those regulations require as much – we've got stakeholders who are just as invested in those regulations as they are in the legislation. They want to be part of it. They want to be heard. They want to be consulted. They're important details. All you'll see in the act is very general: the minister may make regulations about this. But what's actually going to be in there requires discussion with those stakeholders in our education system.

I sit here and I remember thinking back in 2012 when the Education Act passed in this House: "I don't know how we are ever going to be able to get regulations, which almost each one is a mini-piece of legislation. How are we going to be able to get this done so that school boards know how to operate? Private schools, home educators: how are they going to do that?" It took years and next to no progress was made on that, and that was by the previous Progressive Conservative government.

We still don't know what those regulations will look like. As we draw to the end of the 2018-19 school year and we are a mere two months away from the beginning of the 2019-2020 school year, I can tell you, those school boards, those operators, need to know those details. There is simply no time to prepare over the two months when, let's be honest, for school boards, just like a lot of our students, they're quieter times. We don't even know what those regulations are going to look like, so to expect them to be implementing them is a significant administrative burden. I think it's preparing ourselves for a real administrative nightmare come September 1, 2019.

I think the amendment before us is important because it's really talking about: "Let's talk about what those regulations will look like. Let's give an opportunity for the actors in our system to know what those are going to look like so that they can operationalize them." I think it's a very responsible thing to do because the other reason – and I know this has come up in the House before – is more than 50 per cent of the current sitting school board trustees were elected in 2017, five years after the School Act passed. They were not involved in the consultations. They don't know what's in this act. The regulations were not going forward. There is no understanding for almost half of this province's school board trustees, very little understanding about what is actually going to be meant by implementation.

I can tell you that it's really easy. It is actually easy in this House as government to simply say: "Here's the law. Go follow it." Who it's really hard for are the actors in our system who are responsible for putting it into place. The amendment here today is a reasonable amendment because they are the people who are going to actually have to implement what's being proposed here today. I think we owe them a duty to speak to them, to prepare them, to talk to them, and to get their feedback. Otherwise, I can tell you what I anticipate is going to happen. I anticipate that this government is simply going to put forward the same regulations that currently exist under the School Act. That's what I anticipate is going to happen – and why? – because there's absolutely no time to do appropriate work and to actually develop strong regulations. What's going to happen is we're going to see regulations that look very close to what's currently in the School Act.

That goes to my other point, which is that this is really not transformative legislation. I talked already that there was a sense of disappointment about what actually came out of Inspiring Education with respect to the Education Act. The only really transformative pieces about it were those changes to the age of access, age of compulsory education, and residency based on the student. This government has taken those provisions out. I can tell you that – and we see it in Bill 8 – Bill 8 actively goes and looks at what this NDP government did, and it actually adopts those changes. It adopts the changes that NDP government made to the School Act because those were the good pieces from the Education Act: the piece about trustee code of conduct, the pieces about superintendent compensation.

The pieces actually that I think are really great – my husband is an assistant principal – are the establishment of leadership certificates and standards for superintendents. Those are great pieces, and I can tell the government agrees because they have also adopted those changes in Bill Hate to the Education Act. The good stuff that was in the Education Act has already been put into the School Act.

All that Bill Hate proposes to do right now is to take out what was great and was potentially transformative about the Education Act that was passed in 2012. It scraps that and it takes on all the good work that the NDP government did to amend the School Act. The only difference, the one outrageous outlier, the one piece of work that the NDP government did to amend the School Act, it amended the School Act with respect to GSAs. And that is the one piece.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore is rising to ask a brief question or make a comment.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. Her comments very, very eloquently gave us a bit of a history lesson on how this all worked, getting to the point around some of the reasons why it is so necessary for these consultations. I was hoping that maybe she might give us a few more thoughts about who she thinks might be best served by these consultations and maybe talk about some of the others that we could be reaching out to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore for the question. As I was saying, one of the big outliers with respect to the provisions that this government has not taken from the School Act is the piece around GSAs. When we talk about consultation, that is key.

Unfortunately, what is being proposed in Bill Hate is going to affect kids. It's going to affect students. And those are the people whose voices that we most need to hear from, and those are the people whose voices are most difficult to hear from, especially if you're government and you're not opening your hearts and your minds to those conversations. I think it's very important.

I attended an event this past weekend with some fabulous teachers and administrators from Edmonton Catholic and Edmonton public schools who are part of their GSAs, and they've done great work to establish GSAs in their schools. What they said is: "We are teachers. We are not here to out kids. We are not here to be put in the middle between parents and students. We are here to simply support our kids and we want their voices to be heard. That's who we need to be talking to. We need to be talking to the kids."

I've heard the comments from the hon. Minister of Education. Unfortunately, I don't think she's talking to the same kids that we are talking to. Actually, the kids that we are talking to are the kids who are most likely to have their voices silenced, and we see that right now and we need to provide them – it is our duty. I take it very seriously. I think it's our duty to hear the voices of the most vulnerable, and that is who we really need to hear their comments on. I don't believe that this government has a mandate to roll back GSA protections to LGBTQ students. I promise you that I have a lot more to say about all of these issues. I could go into great detail in particular – and I will – but I will save that for, I'm sure, another opportunity to debate about why these GSA protections are weaker, substantially weaker.

The only thing I want to comment about, I want to come back to the fact that I was involved in this legislation. I've been asked the question, I have said that I'm proud of the work we did on the Education Act up until 2012, but I was not part of the public service for the last five years when this NDP government brought in the changes to Bill 24 and strengthened the protections for GSAs. Back when I was working on the Education Act, we weren't talking about GSAs. That was not part of it. When I say that I'm proud of it, I'm proud of what we did back then, but I see now, very clearly, that based on what we know about GSAs, based on what we hear from kids who are vulnerable and who need those GSAs to have a safe and secure place to be, that what we had in the Education Act was not adequate.

While I can speak to the great work of my colleagues in Alberta Education who worked very hard to develop that piece of legislation, I can say with absolute certainty: we did not know what we were talking about when it came to GSAs because we were not talking about GSAs. We had a lot to learn and a lot has been learned in the last five years. I can't see how it is a benefit to any Albertan to roll back. Why are we trying to forget what we've learned? We're trying to move forward and one of the conversations I've had with teachers about this, they said that there's still work we needed to do with respect to GSAs. There was more work about training trustees. One of the teachers mentioned that she knows that her local trustee is really interested in learning more about GSAs. They said that's the next step that they saw, was establish the protections, make sure

GSAs can be established in a timely and effective way and respond to the kids' needs. Then let's educate. Let's talk more at the principal level, at the superintendent level, at the school board level, and let's go further. She said: we were really looking forward to what was next in terms of protecting and supporting our LGBTQ students; instead, we're now fighting to just keep things from being rolled back.

I can say with an absolute clear conscience that we did great work on the Education Act, but what is in the School Act right now, particularly with respect to GSAs, is much better, is much stronger, is much more effective, and much more important. It is transformative, and I really think that if we are talking about modernizing our school system and really taking our school system forward, that is where we were going. What we're seeing by Bill Hate is really just regression. It's moving backwards in time. It's pretending that we don't know what we do know.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been pleased to speak to Bill 8, and I will speak to it again, for sure.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone else wishing to speak to Bill 8? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about Bill Hate and the amendment that this bill should not be now read a second time.

I've reviewed this legislation – and it's quite extensive – and I have lots of questions, Mr. Speaker, about what the intention of some of this is and what the real benefit of some of these pieces are. I know that one of the things that they're talking about is having no board for private schools. I know, as a mom, having the ability to advocate for something that may not be going right for my kids at school, whether it's with other students or whether it's with staff, if they don't have a board that reviews spending or best practices or decisions or disputes, how can parents solve disputes objectively? It seems that this would take away the rights of a parent to have some of those questions answered or the possibility of having a mediation.

I know that I used to work as a mediator with the city of Edmonton, specifically in schools, to talk about disputes, sometimes between kids and staff, sometimes between some of the students and students. Sometimes it was a parent conflict that had come into the school system. When you have another level such as a board, that gives the opportunity for more rights for parents. They have more of a voice. It's not just the staff. It gives them an opportunity to have their concerns expressed. It's not an absolute no, Mr. Speaker. If there is a concern that's happening, it gives that parent an extra venue to discuss concerns or anything of the sort.

I've had many constituents come to my office with questions and concerns about this. I have great working relationships with the school trustees in my area, and thankfully because of those working relationships, when there have been concerns that have been brought forward to my office, I've been able to work with the families as well as the trustees to get some resolutions to some of the concerns.

Sometimes it's not a resolution that the parent might be appreciative of. However, some of them have been positive. But in the moments where it wasn't perhaps the exact resolution that a parent had hoped for, having that opportunity to sit down and to talk about it can be a really wonderful process in just the talking, just being able to express their concern, feeling validated, feeling heard, because sometimes there's that power dynamic between the school and the family, and they just don't feel like they have the authority to come in. When there's that third person that's a part of that process, just sometimes being heard and feeling like there's someone that's a real neutral party can have a huge impact on the outcome of a resolution.

There are sometimes concerns when a family is advocating for special services within their school. They might feel that their child deserves an aide, perhaps, and if the school says no, what is the parents' recourse? Are they able to appeal that decision? Are they able to have someone advocate on their behalf to assist with maybe what's not being seen as important in that school setting? I think by having a board and someone that you can talk to, it would perhaps alleviate some of those things when you have a child that's struggling and could use a little bit of help in the classroom. Having that extra person onside with you to listen and help advocate might help, Mr. Speaker. That's one of the concerns I have.

One of the changes says that all references to the "director" under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act are changed to "child intervention worker." Under CYFEA the director is clearly defined. It says:

- (j) "director" means a person designated by the Minister as a director for the purposes of this Act and the Protection of Sexually Exploited Children Act and without limiting the generality of the foregoing includes a person designated as a director in accordance with an agreement under section 122(2) of this Act.

8:30

Mr. Speaker, they're suggesting to take the word "director" out of CYFEA and replace it with "child intervention worker." Unfortunately, the words "child intervention worker" do not appear in CYFEA. So they're suggesting that you take a word that is clearly defined in CYFEA, replace it with a new term, and it's not defined. I'm curious what the intention of removing the director is because the director under CYFEA has the ability to delegate authority to different workers. They can deem whom they see as appropriate. Whether you're an assessor or a front-line worker or whatever the director has deemed your authority to be, they can provide that. If you take the word "director" out and delegate someone who is not even named under CYFEA, I'm confused about what that does.

I'm also confused about what the motivation behind it is. Notwithstanding that there is no such term in CYFEA, what's the intention of taking away the authority from the director to a child intervention worker? I know as a front-line worker myself under Children's Services that there's a lot of pressure on those front-line workers. I'm wondering: is this adding more work onto the front line without considering what the director would deem as appropriate? Right now under CYFEA the director decides who has the authority to do what. This would imply that it's just putting it directly onto a child intervention worker. Has there been any consideration into the pressures that that would put on the front line? Does this mean more paperwork directly to that front-line worker? Is it more red tape, perhaps, that they're adding to this legislation?

It is completely unnecessary because CYFEA already has a clear definition. It feels like it could be giving more responsibilities to front-line workers without actually talking to front-line workers about what their job is and what their day-to-day activities are. By changing this one piece of legislation, it could have a huge impact on front-line staff. I know as part of the child intervention panel that when we talked to front-line workers on their caseloads and concerns, this wasn't something they said that they would like to be identified and have specified in other pieces of legislation. So I'm curious if they've actually spoken to anyone from the Ministry of Children's Services to see about what this impact would be. I know that our front-line workers are struggling right now with the amount of casework that they have on them. It's a little bit frustrating to see that there's this term in there that doesn't even exist, Mr. Speaker. So that tells me that they didn't consult with Children's Services.

The piece that I think is the most upsetting to me, Mr. Speaker, is everything around our GSAs. We know that when Bill 10 was originally introduced, we discovered that it was only somewhat of a shell of legislation with very little intention to ever be enforced. That's why we introduced legislation that took further steps to make sure that we were protecting our vulnerable children and our youth to create safe spaces. We know that GSAs save lives, that these are important to our children and youth. It's somewhere in their school, in their space where they spend most of their day, where they feel safe. The staff that support these GSAs, the other kids that are part of it can surround a youth and give them that one space in their school where they feel that they belong, where they feel that they can thrive, not just somewhere safe but somewhere where they can actually feel good about themselves. They have positive reinforcing messages.

I'm just confused why they would want to roll back that legislation in Bill Hate and put, literally, our little ones' lives at risk. It's concerning. It will allow staff to out students. We heard from the Alberta Teachers' Association that it was not in their job description to out children. They felt that that was something that they were not comfortable doing, and we heard that. We listened to them, and we felt that they should absolutely not be put in that position. It's a horrible situation for a teacher or staff to be put in. We heard that loud and clear from the teachers, and I'm confused about why this government would ignore teachers. If they spoke to teachers. They're saying that they need to support students to be in a healthy space and that they need Bill 24 to remain in place. I know that when I talk to parents whose kids attend a school with a GSA, whether their children are attending the GSA or not, they are supportive of that GSA. They know that there are kids at their child's school that feel supported.

I'm concerned that also under Bill Hate the GSAs are weakened for different schools. Private schools will no longer need to submit policies at all, and I'm curious, Mr. Speaker, why this would be allowed, other than an assumption that the intention would be that they do not have to do it. If there's no policy, there would be no expectation for them to actually have a GSA.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The fact that they don't have to have the word "gay" in the title: I've heard from the LGBTQ-plus community that it's like a slap in the face. It's a gay-straight alliance, or it's whatever the students want to call it, not the administration, not the principal, not the teachers. It's just really sad. It doesn't speak to inclusivity and support when they're not even allowed to say the word "gay," Madam Speaker.

It is concerning, too, that the timely establishment of a GSA, after students request it, would be removed. There's no time expectation that's put on the school. When a student comes forward, we heard several stories about students being fearful. Finally coming up with the courage to ask some of the grown-ups in their life for support, and then not having a timeline in place, Madam Speaker, is concerning. We know that some of the intention could be to just take the request and never look at it again. That's devastating to a student who has finally got the courage to come forward and say, "I would like the support of a gay-straight alliance in my school," to have a grown-up take that request and just sit on it and do nothing with it. It's concerning.

We know that when kids come forward and they speak their truth, it's important we listen. It's important that we support them and that we provide leadership to our young people when they're being brave and coming forward and asking for support and asking for help. We can't turn our backs on them, Madam Speaker. I don't understand what the point is of having the legislation say that they can have a GSA if there's actually no time limit allotted for them to do it. Again, it makes me question what the intention of this bill is if it's not clearly identified that there's a timeline in place for it to be implemented for the students.

It just, again, reinforces that this government does not see value in GSAs. We continue to hear from the community that there's concern about this government, that they feel that they're being attacked, and when you look at the legislation and what it's allowing to happen in schools, I can't disagree with them. It feels like an attack on the LGBTQ-plus community. It's clear that they're trying to not encourage GSAs. They're making it difficult for young people to come forward and to get the support that they're bravely asking for. It's devastating. As a young person it's hard to necessarily express what you need and what your supports are, and to know that there was legislation in place that allowed that to happen, to know that it's now being taken away is terrifying. It gives a strong message to youth that they don't matter, Madam Speaker. To me, as a mom, as someone who sits in this Chamber to be the voice of all of my constituents regardless of age that's concerning.

I question what this government is doing regarding the GSAs. I mean, simply put, if you value our children and you value lives – we know that GSAs save lives. Children have said, "I felt alone; I felt isolated; I was depressed; I felt suicidal," and then knowing that there was a GSA available saved lives. They were able to come forward and sit in a group of people where they could openly express who they were in a safe environment without being judged, without being ridiculed. Taking that away is very, very frightening to me, Madam Speaker.

We know that the enforcement mechanism for school boards and private schools not complying with GSA legislation will be removed. I just again question: what is the government trying to do with this stipulation? They want to allow those who do not want to keep the safety and protections of LGBTQ-plus students at the top of mind. They want to support those who are not supportive of this community. That's what it feels like, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for, I think, perhaps helping to touch on something that we haven't talked about here in regard to GSAs and the former legislation and this current one. You were, I think, channelling some of your experience as a social worker in regard to students and offering those protections to the confidentiality if a student does choose to be in a GSA as a protection, as a safe place. Of course, Bill 24 does not exclude the intervention of a social worker for, you know, potentially criminal purposes or self-harm and so forth. I mean, that was already built into that very strong and, I think, coherent law that we have in place now, that seems to be under attack.

I was just hoping that maybe you could tell us a bit more about that because, you know, this was one of the false arguments that was brought forward on Bill 24, that someone would not have the confidentiality regardless of if they were in the potential for either self-harm or other criminal activities and so forth, which categorically wasn't true. But, I mean, it's always good to cast the clear light of day on what is confusing and help to clarify that for everybody if you could.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that's a valid point, in that there were some mistruths that were being spread around Bill 24. There was concern about things not being reported, when that is absolutely not true.

As a professional who works with children and youth, you have an obligation to report when there is a threat of harm to self, when there is a threat of harm to others, or when there's a threat of some sort of criminal activity or an awareness of a criminal activity. You are ethically responsible and, under most professions, legally responsible to report that. If a child involved in any activity at school, whether they're part of the chess club, whether they're part of the soccer team, or GSA, if that child discloses that they are considering self-harm, absolutely the school would be in contact with the authorities and the parents to ensure that that child is safe. But the simple fact of belonging to a GSA doesn't mean that that child is at risk and that that child is at harm of anything.

When my kids were involved in some of their extracurricular, I wasn't phoned as a mom to say: "Hey, guess what; your child just joined the glee club" or "Your child just joined soccer." It wasn't important for the school to reach out. As a parent I didn't feel that my rights were being infringed on because my child was participating in an activity that they felt they needed at that time, whether that's expression of drama or working on their sports skills or going somewhere where they feel safe and included.

As a mom I want my children to be able to access supports and services. If my children choose to tell me what those are, I think that's great. If they don't, I trust that the grown-ups at the schools have my children's best interests. And I know that ethically they have to report if there is something that is happening that is criminal or self-harm or hurting somebody else, Madam Speaker. I think that saying that that wouldn't happen under a GSA is inaccurate. It puts fear into parents, and it makes people wonder what's actually happening in these GSAs.

I can say that I've personally attended the GSA in my riding and met with the kids, met with the staff, and they are a great group of people. They bring speakers in. They talk about things that they're interested in. We had been asked to come in and talk about politics, Madam Speaker. To some that might be something that nobody wants to talk about at the dinner table. This group brought us in, so I brought myself and the former Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, Estefania Cortes-Vargas. They wanted to come in and give their experience of being a minority, young, LGBTQ-plus member, to talk about what it was like for them in the Legislature, and give them someone to look up to and someone to ask questions of about if they chose a career in politics.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the reasoned amendment? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment on Bill 8, commonly known as Bill Hate. One of the things I just wanted to touch on or, again, just underline some of the things my colleagues have said, is that I think the members opposite have reminded us time and again about how important consultation is. Well, actually, I think they reminded us quite a bit before the election, not so much afterwards. But I do think that consultation is important and, I think, particularly as it relates to this bill.

Here are some important facts to think about. Nearly half of Alberta school board trustees are serving in their first term. I think the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud mentioned that also. They've not participated in any consultations on the Education Act. I think that's pretty important. Should school boards need to update their policies to comply with the Education Act, they will need to do the work via emergency meetings over the next three months. That doesn't seem reasonable to me. I don't know what the big rush is, actually. Why not give some thoughtful time to these elected people to do their jobs properly? Bill 28 and 24 both provided more than six months notice before coming into force to give school boards time to prepare. Some portions of Bill 28, the new professional practice standards, have had over a year lead time.

The last major consultation on the Education Act occurred in 2012, and for context students born in 2012 are in grade 2 now. The 2017 consultations on proposed amendments to the School Act addressed topics that Bill 83 doesn't even address such as age of access, as we've heard earlier. At the recent general meeting – I think this is important – school boards voted overwhelmingly to ask the government to delay the proclamation of the Education Act. Trustees have pointed out that the new legislation is concerning if it does not come with additional funding, and of course we know how that goes. We haven't heard exactly what that is and we will not until the fall, so why not delay? This government won't even confirm for school boards whether or not they will fund existing commitments such as the school nutrition program and class improvement fund.

I think there are ample reasons, Madam Speaker, to delay this in order to give all of the people that really have a vested interest in this to consult, to really consult, not just some people but wide consultation so that all stakeholders, particularly elected stakeholders, have a chance to weigh in on this important legislation. I've said this before; what I find quite disturbing is that throughout the election period all we heard was Jobs, Economy, Pipeline, or whichever order that went in, and what's really concerning is – it feels like a bait and switch – that this is what was sold, this is what was advertised as the focus of this new government, and suddenly we've just gone off the rails.

I don't really understand how folks across the way are okay with this. One of the very first things that you've done – and it's not that we don't realize that the changes you've made to this legislation will do the very thing that we were afraid that you were going to do. That is what you're doing. And it's really sort of – I mean, I don't want to give you credit for being sneaky, but it's really sneaky the way that you've done this. You've made this . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Ms Renaud: Yup. Madam Speaker, I will.

I think it's really sneaky, Madam Speaker, that you are saying one thing, that you are moving us forward, that this is about progress, this is about making life better for people when, in fact, we're hearing from the very people that this will impact: elected school board trustees, teachers, and educators. We're hearing from the children themselves, we're hearing from people that did not have the benefit of GSAs that this is going to set them backwards, and that's really concerning.

Last week, I think it was, Madam Speaker, I read a portion of the letters that I received. I received 60 letters on May 3, before we even started having this discussion, from junior high students in St. Albert. They're upset about a few things, but they were primarily upset about GSAs. They were concerned that there would be chipping away of the rights of students that relied on GSAs. Let's be clear, this legislation is chipping away by taking out provisions that give a definite timeline that principals have to respond to this request.

I can remember what it was like being a student. You know, if you're focused on something and you want to get it done but you're repeatedly told, "It's not possible; you have to wait," it gets put on the back burner. Life has a way of getting away from you, and it just goes on and on and doesn't happen. That is a really sort of backhanded way to reduce the strength of the legislation that was, really, put in place, Madam Speaker, to address the need when students are brave enough to say, "I would like a GSA or a QSA," or whatever they choose to call it. "I would like it right now, and here's why."

The legislation that we had before, the protection that we had sort of forced administrators to take the request seriously and to act on it immediately. I think that if a child in school is brave enough and recognizes that that is something that they need to be successful in school, we have a responsibility as legislators and as administrators to act as quickly as possible. I think it's important.

I also want to go back. I heard the Minister of Education – well, I think she did actually say the words "gay" and "queer" and some other words last week. I think she continues to refer to this particular support group as an inclusion group. While I appreciate the sentiment – you know, I have no problem with the word. I think it's a great word, particularly when it's used as an action, Madam Speaker, because "inclusion" isn't just a label that you attach to something. There has to be concentrated effort and resources put into inclusion. Inclusion to me is more than celebrating diversity or putting a stamp on something. It's actually understanding what that means and hearing from the people who require or would like inclusion who do not feel included, to hear from them, specifically: what does that mean to them?

I think that when you ask students who identify as part of the LGBTQ community, when they tell you, "I want a GSA," or "I want a QSA," or "I want a peer support group in my school. I know that I'm fully protected. I do not have to worry that anybody will tell my family until I'm ready," that's what they need to feel included. They need to feel supported. While I appreciate the sentiment of using the word "inclusion," I think it's important that we call GSAs or QSAs exactly what they are. They aren't inclusion groups; they're peer support groups that are requested by the people that need them.

One of my constituents that I'm sure people in this Chamber have heard of – his name is Dr. Kris Wells. He now, I believe, teaches at MacEwan University and was previously at the University of Alberta. I think he's a very knowledgeable man. He's obviously a leader when it comes to GSAs, and he constantly reminds me – and I think he likely reminds many of us – of the importance of GSAs. I was going back and reading some of the things he had said, and I think it's a really good reminder. Some of his words are a really good reminder. He himself is part of that community, and I think he speaks with a lot of authority. He reminds us to, first and foremost, remember that GSAs save lives. And that's what they do. They're about supporting the health and the safety of students, helping them thrive in their school environment and to live up to their potential, but I think what is most important is that GSAs save lives.

If you can remove any barriers to creating a GSA, if you could remove a barrier to a time delay to create a GSA, I think that that's worth while, just like earlier today when we voted in favour of second reading of a private member's bill to ensure that some medication was available in schools for students with life-threatening allergies. I feel the same way about this legislation, that the way it is right now does not provide the best protection and response to a student at risk who wants and needs a GSA. All of us in this Chamber were in support of that legislation earlier, yet we have a very stark division right now about GSAs.

We're hearing from children and from educators and from trustees that are telling us: the legislation that you put forward is not the best it can be. It creates delays. It creates loopholes, and it is not the best it can be. It is not the best legislation to save lives, and we know that GSAs save lives.

Kids that are part of the LGBTQ community are four times more likely to attempt suicide than their peers. I mean, that's a stark number. They are at risk for substance abuse, absenteeism, and, you know – we all know – that all of these things lead to far more harm and far more risk in their adult lives. We know that that risk continues should they then go on to become parents or make whatever choices that they're making in their lives. This will impact that. So this is also about prevention. If you knowingly turn away from protection and prevention that you know will have a direct impact on the lives of students and the lives of young people, why would you knowingly not take every possible step that you could to protect and prevent problems?

Dr. Wells actually quoted a leading medical journal that referenced the likelihood of people in the LGBTQ community – their likelihood of suicide attempts. This leading medical journal called The Lancet called it "a mental health crisis." I think we all recognize what a mental health crisis is. I hope we all recognize what a mental health crisis is. So if we have a medical journal, contributors to this medical journal, telling us that this is a mental health crisis from the rate of attempted suicide – and I would suggest that the successful suicide rate is very high as well – I would suggest that it's time to act. This legislation doesn't get us the place that we need to be. If we honestly . . .

Point of Order Quorum

Mr. Bilous: Point of order, 5(2), quorum.

The Deputy Speaker: Ring the bells.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 5 the division bell was rung at 8:58 p.m., and the Deputy Speaker confirmed that a quorum was present]

Debate Continued

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, for that little break. Back at it.

Again, I'm just going to remind the members that perhaps weren't in the Chamber that GSAs are about supporting the health and safety of students and helping them thrive in their school environment and live up to their potential.

As I said earlier, people in the LGBTQ community are four times more likely to attempt suicide than their peers. They are also often struggling with substance abuse and absenteeism while in school. Again, going back to my point, if you knew as a legislator, just like we did earlier today with all of us supporting legislation to ensure that children or students with severe, life-threatening allergies had access to support that they needed, intervention that they needed to live, to survive, to thrive, why would you knowingly, after we've told you, after elected trustees have told you, after students have told you, after other students that have used GSAs have told you that this legislation will cause problems – that is why we fixed the loopholes that we did when we were in government. Why would you knowingly not work to amend the legislation that doesn't do the best that it could do to protect students, to ensure that they are not subjected to some of the things described? This is a mental health crisis. I'm not calling it that. Leading medical journal The Lancet is calling it that, a mental health crisis. I think a mental health crisis deserves intervention, intervention like a GSA.

For those of you that haven't ever visited a GSA or chatted with students who belong to a GSA, I guess I really don't understand what the big ...

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you so much for the insightful comments by the Member for St. Albert. I think that one thing that certainly caught my attention was talking about the larger societal impacts of an attack on GSAs here in the province of Alberta. As you mentioned, you know, of course, this is a relatively new protection that is being afforded young people in schools across the province, and lo and behold there are generations of people in the very same situation that were completely exposed with no protections whatsoever.

You know, when you talk about a larger mental health issue or crisis, as you said, as you referenced from The Lancet magazine, GSAs and QSAs and what they represent to not just kids in school but to LGBTQ2S-plus people and their allies in general – right? – because let's remember that GSA, the last word in that acronym is ally. What we have managed to achieve through the GSA and QSA fight here in the province of Alberta over the last number of years has helped to embolden and create confidence, a sense of security amongst thousands of other people besides the people that are actually involved in GSAs. You know, if you can just perhaps elaborate on that a bit.

One thing I saw that struck me last fall when we were at the Calgary Pride Parade and there were probably 70,000 people, and for the GSAs of Calgary we're the marshals – it was very emotional. Part of what I realized when people were often tearing up as they came through, and it caused me to do the same, is that there was a generation of these adults that saw kids in their own shoes 20 years before and didn't have those protections, and here they were, this new generation with this new-found empowerment and support from society. Perhaps if you could just elaborate more on that aspect of mental health and inclusion of all of us as Albertans, I would be grateful.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Okay. Well, thank you for the question. We've all gone to school. I think we all understand the difference between feeling like you're part of something and you're included and when you're not. I actually had never heard of a GSA or a QSA until I started doing this job. I certainly was aware that support clubs were available, but I never really understood the value until I spoke with students that were a part of that group and I spoke with allies. What I heard from them was really quite simple, and it was kind of beautiful in the simplicity of it, that it was just a place that was free from labels. It was just private. You just knew that you could say what you needed to say. You could be with your friends. You could be with people that maybe you identified with, maybe people you didn't know yet. It was a place to feel safe and to know that your privacy would be respected. That was key, that your privacy would be respected.

Then you hear about the activities, and they were really no different from any other club, whether it was a bake sale that people were having or a pizza party or a movie night or that somebody was talking about, you know, how awful their older siblings or their parents were. It was just a safe place to be. I suppose I always go to: why is it that people have such a problem with this club as opposed to – I don't know; the member earlier said the chess club – any other kind of club?

It boils right down to the premise of equality. Do you believe that students who are part of this community and their allies deserve the same rights and protection and access as every other student? I think they do, and I think that we need to listen to these students. It's not taking away from their education at all. In fact, I think the members before me have clearly explained that all of the protection is in place already, so if there is a danger to a student, that is taken care of. This is about ensuring that students get the GSA or QSA as quickly as possible when they request it, that their privacy is of utmost concern, and that they feel safe and secure in the knowledge that nobody is going to call their parents.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any more speakers to the reasoned amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate you recognizing me this evening to speak to Bill 8. As some of our speakers have already talked about this evening – you know, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud spoke very eloquently this evening about some of the history around how we got to where we are with regard to the legislation and some of the stories that we've heard. As you can imagine, I'm standing in full support of this amendment that we have before us to hit the pause button. Quite honestly, I think we need to do more than just hit the pause button. We need to drop anchor, we need to hit engines full reverse, and I think we need to tie a rope to the piano and throw that overboard, too, to stop this.

I know that Edmonton-Decore is home to 26 very fabulous schools. All three of the high schools in north Edmonton call Edmonton-Decore home, and in those schools I have some pretty fantastic students that attend as well as some GSAs that are absolutely amazing. One of the things that I learned when I very first had the opportunity to visit a GSA – you know, I'd heard some stories out there. I'd heard some positions out there. I'd heard some innuendo out there about what's going in these GSAs, what's happening in these GSAs, and how our students are somehow being – I don't know – corrupted, misled, uninformed. So what better way to find out than to go there and visit one and see what happens with your very own eyes?

I have to say, Madam Speaker, that what I saw was not what I was hearing. Some of the conversations that I had that day surprised me. We talked about things like: what are appropriate toppings on pizza? I tried to throw out there, of course, that maybe anchovies aren't one of the best, but a couple of the students there disagreed with me; they thought that was a great idea. We talked about, you know, what students are listening to in terms of music. They mentioned a couple of bands that I hadn't heard of, so clearly I need to do some homework around there. We even got into talking politics a little bit, actually quite a robust conversation around students being legislated so that they would get their birthday off school. There was quite a robust conversation around there.

The bottom line is that I'm starting to see a trend now with this government. I'm seeing a trend that is targeting young people, our young emerging leaders, the ones that will be taking over from us. I don't know if it's a mentality that's out there that we have to put our thumb down on them. I'm not too sure what it is. I've heard members opposite go at this almost ad nauseam, about how: “We won the election. We got a mandate from Albertans. This is what we were elected to do.” I don’t remember this being in your platform, to take out GSAs. The funny thing that I’ve noticed about this: the ones that can’t vote in this election seem to be the ones with the crosshairs on them. We’re taking away their pay. We’re taking away their GSAs. I’m starting to wonder what’s next.

My concerns with this – and I’m not even going to begin to try to go into some of the details that I saw the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud go into, but I’m very laser-focused right now on what’s going on around this attempt to destroy GSAs. That may sound like some harsh language to some of the folks across the way, but that’s what the students think it is right now, Madam Speaker. They are out to destroy GSAs, the one place where they just want to feel like they belong. The Member for St. Albert was talking a little bit about that, a safe place to go where they can just, you know, be a youngster, be just part of the team, part of the group. Nobody is judging. Nobody is putting labels on. Nobody is, you know, coming up with some names to call them.

Because of the number of schools I have and because of the number of times I get to interact with these kids, I take what they say very, very seriously, and I really think that the government needs to start doing the same because our young emerging leaders happen to have some really great ideas, Madam Speaker. I think that the members of the government – you know how we say we’ve got two ears, two eyes, but only one mouth. They need to listen and watch them and take what our young emerging leaders are saying very, very seriously.

The number of concerns that I have had – my gosh, I mean, I’m in the grocery store and I run into one of my students: “Hey, Mr. Nielsen, can I talk to you for a second?” “Sure. I can probably direct you to the chip aisle.” “No, no, no. It’s this thing around Bill 8 and GSAs. I’ve got a friend that I really care about that belongs to a GSA. Why does the government want to take it away?” This is what’s going on out there, and you guys need to hear this.

I’ve had teachers express significant concerns around the positions that they might be placed in because the only thing that they are focused on is those kids. How do we teach those kids so that they grow up with what they need to go out into the world, lead on the world stage, have successful lives, and just have some fun? No. We’re going to take a safe space away from them because of – I don’t know – some ideology out there. I seem to remember, at great length in the 29th Legislature, Madam Speaker, being told about my ideology: it’s your ideology this, and it’s because of your ideology that.

An Hon. Member: It is.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, I hate to tell you this, Member, but if you’ve got to keep explaining to me about my ideology, maybe you have one of your own, and our kids notice it. Our kids notice it.

When I have rules requiring that the detailed policies to support GSAs are weakened within public schools and not even in existence in private schools and there are claims that we’re here to represent all Albertans: sounds like only a very small few, Madam Speaker.

No policy is allowed to use the word “gay.” That’s what this is about, gay-straight alliances, queer-straight alliances. Listen to the kids. I’ve learned some pretty incredible things from them.

Timelines. That’s all great. I remember the Minister of Education standing up here saying: “It says right here. Kids are allowed to ask for a GSA.” Great. They can ask. Then what? I don’t know. Maybe we’ll start giving them the answer: yeah; well, we’ll get back to you on that in due course.

We need to take a very long second sober thought on this, Madam Speaker. We need to hit the pause button. We need to go out. We need to talk to our young emerging leaders that are affected by this. You know what? It’s not even GSAs that I’ve heard from that say: whoa, whoa, whoa, slow down here. It’s other organizations that have come to me and said: “Can you come visit us? We’ve got some people that would really like to talk to you about protecting these clubs, these organizations that provide just a nice, caring, safe atmosphere so you can come in and – well, let’s talk about what’s appropriate to put on pizza.”

So I stand here imploring with the members opposite. I don’t know. I’m probably even willing to get down and beg because what I am hearing is scaring these kids. They’re worried they’re going to get outed before they’ve gotten to the point where they’re comfortable to do that.

I remember having a discussion with somebody around this, and they said, “Well, this infringes on my right to know what’s going on with my child.” I said, “Well, wouldn’t you agree that if you have the relationship with your child that’s open and caring and honest, they’re probably going to tell you?” Then I couldn’t help but ask. I said, “You know, if you think back to when you were a kid, did you tell your parents absolutely every single detail of what was going on in your life?” The person paused for a moment, two, three, five moments. I said: “I didn’t think so. Don’t worry. Neither did I. I just thought there were a couple of little details here and there that I didn’t need to share with them. They didn’t need to know.” Believe me, Madam Speaker, they weren’t actually that big a deal.

But for these kids it is a big deal. It is a huge deal. We’ve all agreed in this House, on many different things, that if that happens to one child, that’s one too many. Explain to me, then. I saw a tweet one time where supposedly a father tweeted out: I would rather have a dead son than a gay son. Is that one too many? Do we need 10 of those? Do we need 100, 1,000? I don’t know. At what point do we say: maybe we made a mistake; maybe we shouldn’t have done that.

I’m very adamant to stand here. I will not support this bill as presented, but we have a chance to change it. We have a chance to put on the brakes. We have a chance to go back. We have a chance to change it, put in the protections that we had in Bill 24. I very clearly heard that everybody was happy with those changes. It was, like: “Yeah. That’s exactly what we’re looking for. This will provide us with the atmospheres that we need to feel safe, to feel a part of, and be able to flourish.” But for some reason here, we seem to think: the bicycle is broken; we need to fix it. Again maybe I’ll pose a bit of a challenge here, Madam Speaker – it’s like with another amendment we proposed – to go back and to rethink this. Go back, rethink it, prove me wrong. I will be more than happy to eat humble pie. I’ll do it right here in the House.

The Deputy Speaker: 29(2)(a) is available. Any comments or question? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for his comments. I appreciate him talking with passion. Clearly, he has shared many a passionate speech in this place as well as through other channels. Your focus is appreciated, hon. member. I was hoping that the member could talk a little bit about some of his experiences, perhaps, as a dad and how his kids helped him get to a place of understanding over the years. Sometimes I think we do our best learning when we are in a position where we think that we’re there to instill wisdom but sometimes it comes back to us instead. I thought maybe he could talk about parallels he’d experienced through his own parenting or that he's heard other youth talk about in how they've helped their parents come to greater understanding with regard to who they are.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that question. You know, it's always funny. As a parent, no matter how hard you look, there never seems to be an instruction manual that comes with your children for how you can best interact with them. I can easily look back and say: maybe I haven't made all of the best decisions around that. Certainly, as my daughter has gotten older, we've had conversations about things that, quite honestly, I was surprised that she shared with me, surprised in a very good way because I finally managed to build that relationship, that trust so that she felt it was okay to share with me that piece of information. I never at one time felt: "Well, jeez. My rights are being taken away. Why isn't my child talking to me about these things?" Because I didn't create the relationship for her to feel like there was an avenue there, I'm hoping that as we move forward and she gets older, into her adult years here now, there will be more that she'll share with me.

One of the other experiences. I have a friend from high school, and I follow him quite regularly on Facebook. He lives out in B.C. He's become a rather successful actor. One of his children approached him one day and said, you know, essentially: Dad, I feel like I should be a girl. To watch her journey – because he was incredibly supportive. I mean, she travels now; she speaks about her experiences. My gosh, the pride that I see that he shows for her journey is so, so inspiring. My gosh, I hope that one day I'll just get a chance to meet her and shake her hand. Hopefully, some of that energy that makes her who she is will – I don't know – maybe rub off, and I'll be a better person for it.

I've also seen experiences that didn't go so well. Those relationships deteriorated very, very quickly. That's when we start seeing our youth become homeless. We've seen some very, very staggering statistics around our homeless youth and the percentage of them that identify with the LGBTQ2S-plus community. You just can't ignore those figures – you can't – unless, of course, you're blindfolding yourself, turning your back, which, of course, is a whole other problem.

We need to pass this amendment. We need to pause. We need to take a sober second thought, Madam Speaker. We need to talk to the ones this most affects, our young emerging leaders. They are the future. We have a responsibility to set them up for success. I can tell you right now that Bill 8 the way it is set up right now will not set them up for success. It will set them up for failure, and I for one will not stand here and allow that to happen.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to be able to rise to speak to the amendment to refer the so-named Bill Hate to more consultation, something that I strongly, strongly support because it is my view that insufficient consultation has taken place. Throughout the debate in the 30th Legislature, of which we are a part, on multiple bills many, many members of the government caucus have stood to talk in this House about the mandate that they achieved in the recently held election.

When it comes to the debate on this topic, I would really like the members to question whether or not there has been adequate consultation, because in the previous election the slogan of the governing party – Jobs, Economy, Pipelines – resoundingly resonated with Albertans. But how does rolling back protections for GSAs add jobs? How does rolling back protections for youth in GSAs help the economy? How does rolling back protections for youth in GSAs build pipelines? The government, who loves to talk about the mandate that the election gave them, was elected to focus on these issues. Rolling back protections for youth in GSAs was not the agenda you told Albertans you would work on. In fact, your party, the governing party, the then leader of the UCP, now our Premier, specifically avoided talking about policies like rolling back protections for youth in GSAs. This is not the agenda you told Albertans you would focus on.

I would suggest that if you had, if you had included this in your door-knocking script, particularly many of the members here from Calgary, you may not be sitting here, because I can tell you that Albertans do not support a socially conservative agenda. Albertans do not want to revisit these issues yet again. You will see that on the signs at rallies. They do not support rolling back the protections for youth in GSAs.

Now I do not say this out of opinion, Madam Speaker. We know that Albertans do not support socially conservative ideas, and we know that because during the election almost 74,000 people shared their thoughts using the CBC's Vote Compass online questionnaire. This is just one survey. But when most Albertans are asked, "Should parents be notified when their children join a gay-straight alliance group at school?" the overwhelming majority say that they disagree with that statement, 63 per cent of Albertans. In fact, 54 per cent of the voters in Calgary think parents should not be told about their child's participation in a GSA. To be clear, Bill Hate will allow parental notification when a child joins a GSA, as many of my colleagues have mentioned in this debate over and over because it is important and because it matters, particularly to these young people.

We know that Albertans do not support a policy that will allow young members of a GSA to be outed to their parents. We know, based on the polling, based on the conversations at the doorstep that we had – although members opposite may not have wanted to raise these social issues at the doors – that when students want to form a GSA, having that happen in a timely way is meaningful, that enforcement and administration of these powers are critically important, and that Bill Hate removes that "immediately" clause, that language that says that it shouldn't be a fight, that it shouldn't take somebody who is already likely in a vulnerable position having to argue to get a GSA started in their school, that it shouldn't be a fight to use the word "gay" when they get a GSA started in their school. As often as the members of the governing party like to refer to their mandate, like to refer to the results of the election, Albertans did not elect you to out gay students, and I will continue to repeat that as we discuss why this deserves more consultation.

Now, Madam Speaker, I have had the opportunity to speak to Bill Hate once before, and during that earlier address there were a couple of things that I was able to raise that I think really speak to the need for more consultation. I'd like to just touch on them very briefly without repeating myself. I talked about, from the LGBTQ2S Youth Housing and Shelter Guidelines, some of the shocking, horrifying statistics that members of the LGBTQ2S communities face.

- Nearly one in three homeless youth in Canada identify as LGBTQ2S.
- [These] youth identify the primary reason for homelessness as family rejection due to gender identity or sexual orientation.

So 1 in 3 homeless youth are homeless because of family rejection due to gender identity or sexual orientation, which means that outing kids to their families before they are ready poses a very, very real risk to a good number of those students.

- LGBTQ2S homeless youth face higher rates of discrimination, violence and abuse . . .
- [They] are at a higher risk of mental health concerns and self-harm and exhibit higher rates of suicidality than the general [populace].

And all of this paints what is, obviously, a very difficult picture for students going through high school or junior high.

Upon hearing that, I know it because I have had conversations with members of our society who think this way, that the higher rates of homelessness and the higher rates of mental health issues are connected to the fact that these youth are gay or are part of the LGBTQ2S society. But, fortunately, we just had a new study released, and I've already had the opportunity to table this, Madam Speaker. I realize most members will have already read it because we all read all of the tablings, but just in case somebody missed it, I really wanted to emphasize this important document, that I had the chance to table last week, titled 1 in 5 Queer Young Adults Attempted Suicide in the Past Year, Study Shows.

Mental health should be taken seriously no matter what, but a new study shows it's . . . especially pressing . . . in the queer community.

A suicide prevention and crisis intervention organization for LGBTQ youth released a report on the mental health of queer young adults. The results are pretty horrifying: Nearly 1 in 5 LGBTQ people ages 13 to 24, and 1 in 3 transgender and nonbinary young people in the same age group, attempted suicide in the past 12 months. Approximately 39% of LGBTQ youth surveyed had seriously considered suicide in the past year.

When we are talking about youth who belong to the LGBTQ2S community, I would love for the members in this House to hold in their heads the image of a young person that you may know, if you know any members of the LGBTQ2S community in your life, and then think that there might be a 40 per cent chance that that person, whom you know and love, may have contemplated suicide. That's the reality of what is happening.

Now, the really critical piece to this report, Madam Speaker, is that these mental health issues are not widespread because of identity or orientation. They are there because of discrimination. They are there because of the barriers that members of the LGBTQ2S community face when people they know and love try to change their sexual orientation or gender identity or when they are stigmatized or when they are misunderstood or feel alone. Each of these factors is critically important, and the creators of this study hoped that the results would be "a wake-up call for mental health professionals and loved ones of queer individuals." I hope that it might be a wake-up call for the legislators who sit in this Chamber and talk about lessening the protections for young people wanting to start and join a GSA: "We'll still have nearly the best or kind of the best or, you know, among the top. Wouldn't that be good enough?" Let's remember who we're talking about. We are talking about vulnerable youth who already face barriers.

I'd like to speak a little bit more about the impact of those barriers on the lives of these young people. We know that LGBTQ2S students routinely experience harassment in their schools but that GSAs and other support clubs provide social supports. We know that students can hear homophobic remarks from students and, unfortunately, instructors at times. We know this from the history, from talking to members of the community. The more harassment students have reported, the more likely the student is to report higher levels of depression, lower self-esteem. But LGBTQ2S students attending a school with a GSA reported hearing fewer homophobic expressions, experienced less victimization than LGBTQ2S students attending a high school without a GSA. They also had more positive outcomes when it came to high school belonging, school victimization, and whatnot.

Now, this was interesting to me. I spoke in my first remarks regarding Bill Hate about knowing that there was some good information and research out there about GSAs and wanting to bring that back into this discussion in lieu of proper consultation, which, with the acceptance of this amendment, we could do instead. But understanding that the government is not in favour of more consultation, I would really like to speak a little bit more about the different impacts when LGBTQ2S students are not properly supported through a GSA.

For example, there was a study that actually found that two-thirds of LGBTQ2S students reported feeling unsafe at school, so unsafe that they were missing school for safety concerns. It's not uncommon for a student who is struggling, who feels unsupported, to miss school, impacting their performance. That same study found that the GPA for LGBTQ2S students, children, was on average a half grade lower than for straight students. That could be an indicator that LGBTQ2S youth face different barriers to education than straight youth. LGBTQ youth in high school were less likely to report that they wanted to pursue further education than straight youth, and can you blame them? If they are in an unsupportive environment, if going through high school has been hell and they haven't been able to have the support networks that all of us need, going on to postsecondary and continuing to do more schooling is probably not at the top of their list.

But I think it's really important to remember that by having a supportive school, GSAs, the people there available to support a student, you can be impacting that student's future performance. Now, having an active GSA on a high school campus has been associated with better academic outcomes, so in this case, Madam Speaker, I'm identifying the problem but also the solution. LGBTQ2S students tend to have slightly lower grades, tend not to go on to postsecondary as often. But if they have a GSA, all of a sudden their outcomes improve, and all of a sudden they have a supportive school community. That is what we are talking about. That is what we are fighting about. Having to fight against school administration because the word "immediately" has been removed, having to fight with school administration because the administration is not required to allow the word "gay": these are the challenges that will prevent a GSA from being formed.

GSAs are also associated with better mental health outcomes for LGBTQ2S students. For a lot of those mental health challenges that I talked about earlier, in many ways the students can be supported with a GSA. Students with a GSA in their high school reported less depression, less general psychological distress, higher self-esteem than students without a GSA at their high school as well as less truancy. So those kids skipping school because they didn't feel safe: that starts to happen less and less, helping their academic performance.

LGBTQ2S students with a support club in their school also reported lower levels of victimization and suicide attempts in comparison to schools without a support group. This touches on another article I was already able to table last week, Madam Speaker, which was an opinion piece titled UCP's Education Bill Plays Games with Students' Lives. It says, "The truth is simple: GSAs reduce teen suicide – LGBTQ and straight alike."

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, any comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm wondering. I've been really enjoying the comments from my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods about the importance that GSAs play in the lives of an identified vulnerable group in our schools, particularly the LGBTQ2S community of students. I wanted to know if she would mind sharing some of her insight as a member of the NDP government over the last four years, when the strongest protections for GSAs were introduced by this government to protect these students. I'm wondering if she can share some of the stories or information that she heard during her time with that government that led to the government of the time's decision to bring in Bill 24.

She's spoken very eloquently about the personal and direct impact that these GSAs have on these kids' lives, how important they are with respect to providing them safety and security and making them feel welcome in their community. My understanding is that those Bill 24 provisions were brought in because there was an identified need for them, that voices were heard from many students, from teachers, from administrators about how the previous provisions, under what was Bill 10, were inadequate. I'm wondering if perhaps the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods could share some of the information that she received in her time as a cabinet minister within the government when Bill 24 protections were brought in.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. Well, Madam Speaker, when I think about Bill 24 and the changes that were implemented with Bill 24, they are essentially the direct opposite of what the government is doing now. Making sure that there was that enforcement and support, enabling legislation was an important first step. But then making sure that schools, school districts, principals, all members of the school community were adhering to and following that legislation and creating those safe and supportive communities was critically important.

Bill 24 was something that not only teachers were asking for to clear up confusion about outing LGBTQ2S students, but it was also something that the students themselves were asking for after running into difficulties forming GSAs. It is my opinion that by removing some of those protections, those enforcement provisions that were introduced through Bill 24, which is essentially what Bill Hate is all about, as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has talked about now at length and other members of my caucus, all of the meat of that old Education Act, all of its intended purposes have been removed, and it is now just the dusky cloak that the removal of protections for youth in GSAs is now kind of hiding under so that it can get passed. It's an anti-GSA bill.

One thing I would like to just remark on is that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud in her remarks was talking about how the old Education Act was really focused on high school completion rates and getting kids to stay in school, and I just think it's so interesting that the version they've brought forward has lost that focus entirely. Instead, we have a government that is reducing the minimum wage for youth, but if they drop out of school, they'll get $2 an hour more. Really, if we're talking about a pendulum, we're swinging all the way over. We're not worried about high school completion anymore. In fact, we're encouraging kids through a financial incentive to drop out, to make more money because they might need to support their families. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that it's not the well-supported youth that are going to do that. It's the vulnerable youth. It's the vulnerable youth that need that money to support themselves, possibly to support their own family. Making sure that we have more time to consult, to consider what these youth and these students may be experiencing, and to talk to all members of school communities is really important.

In my research for my remarks today, Madam Speaker, one very interesting thing I found was that the mere presence of a GSA, whether or not students participated in it – you could just have attended a school that happened to have a GSA – is actually related to students' attitudes towards LGBTQ-plus people in their time in high school. We actually saw that university students who reported having a GSA in their high school were more likely to report positive attitudes towards LGBTQ2S individuals in general when attending university. I think that's important.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, shall I call the question?

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 8 lost]

The Speaker: We are now back on the main bill. Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise tonight to speak to the main bill, which in our discussion of the bill our side of the House and indeed many Albertans have chosen to dub Bill Hate.

A quote, Madam Speaker: Albertans may not want “political agendas” in the classroom, but for the Premier education policy is all about ideology; his comments reflect an ambition to steer the province's K to 12 system toward a more socially conservative and market-oriented underpinning, even to encourage more Albertans to educate outside the traditional public system, and the fastest way for him to do that, critics say, is to undermine the public system itself. That is from an article about the Premier's vision for K to 12. That is what we are here talking about tonight: Bill 8, Bill Hate, the thinnest of fig leaves attempting to cover this Premier's attempt to make a socially conservative revision to schools in the province of Alberta.

Now, members of the government, Madam Speaker, have been very defensive on this point though not very verbally, at least not during debate on the bill. They've been relatively silent on that point. But in question period and at other times and certainly in talking to the media, they have tried to portray the Education Act as being about modernizing the education system here in the province of Alberta. I think several of my colleagues have quite capably disassembled that argument; they've taken it apart. It's quite clear, as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud laid out, having herself been one of the main drafters of this very piece of legislation, that the bill we have in front of us today barely resembles and is but a pale shadow of what the Education Act actually was. It is thin, it is flimsy, and the majority of Albertans are not fooled.

You know, we talk about what the Education Act was originally intended to do. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that the only time in my first four years in office that I ever had a constituent talk to me about the Education Act and express an interest in seeing it proclaimed was when I visited with folks at the Boyle Street Education Centre, which is a charter school here in my constituency that works with high-risk and marginalized youth. It's a fantastic institution. It's been running for, I think, over 20 years. It's changed the lives and given new opportunity to many, many young people.

They spoke to me, and they said that one thing that they liked about the Education Act was that it was extending the age to 21. They have many students who come to them after having gone through significant trauma or had real struggles in their life, and for them to be cut off, you know, at the age of 18 often meant that those students would not complete their high school education. But if they had the opportunity to extend that to 21, for many of these youth who went through difficult times and came back to school a little later in their teenage years, that would give them the opportunity to complete it. That's the only time I had any constituent in my many conversations with teachers, schools, administrators, students, all kinds of stakeholders, ask for that bill to be resurrected. Even that, Madam Speaker, is being stripped out because this government felt that it would be too hasty to move forward on that now. Indeed, if they're looking to cut costs, they recognize that making that kind of a change would definitely increase costs in the system, so they're choosing to not act on that.

As we've discussed, the most important changes, the actual transformative pieces of the Education Act, have all been stripped out. In the meantime, as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud noted, this government has been quick to adopt many of the changes we had already made to the School Act and implement them here. We thank them for the compliment.

However, on this one point, on the issue of students participating in a peer support group called a gay-straight or queer-straight alliance, this government is doubling down on ideology. It is clear, Madam Speaker, that the only reason we have this piece of legislation in front of us in this House today, the only reason that it was mentioned in the UCP platform – indeed in the UCP platform there was no detail provided. All that was said was: we will proclaim the Education Act. That was a big document. It was thick. It laid out all kinds of promises, but this government did not see fit to actually discuss any of the detail of why it wanted to proclaim the Education Act or how it would actually do it or what it actually intended to do with it. Indeed we did not hear a peep from a single member of this government as they canvassed at the doors, or at least none that were really out in the public. Perhaps they did have this conversation with some, but I think, as my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Mill Woods noted, they were probably not at the doors talking to people about the changes they wanted to make to GSAs in the province of Alberta.

I can tell you though, Madam Speaker, that when I was out knocking on the doors and talking to people and when I was out attending events and indeed when I was at forums in my community here, I did hear from a number of constituents who were very concerned, based on the record of comments that were previously made by this Premier in the press and in many other places, sometimes in private at some of the conferences he attended and to other members of this Legislature. As I discussed when I had the chance to speak to this bill last week, intentionally spreading misinformation about what a gay-straight alliance is, what a queer-straight alliance is, what it is meant to accomplish, claiming that these were ideological sex clubs, that these were groups that were intending to smuggle in teaching on sexual education that wouldn't be allowed otherwise, that these were groups that were intended for a political purpose – I can think of no other reason that this government would be bringing forward these changes, bringing forward this bill unless at some level they fundamentally believe that to be the case.

That's unfortunate, Madam Speaker. That's regrettable because this is a government that likes to be very proud of many things about our province and indeed insists that we must as a province have the best of everything. We must have the lowest corporate tax.

Ms Hoffman: By far.

We must give employers the chance to pay a lower wage so that they can have that opportunity to grow their business, or so they claim. But when it comes to GSAs, when it comes to protecting vulnerable LGBTQ students, this government is content with good enough.

The only reason, Madam Speaker, to step back and to roll things back from the protections that we brought in for students, ensuring that when they ask to form a GSA, it must be provided immediately and cannot be indefinitely delayed by administration – they are removing that and leaving that ambiguous. Stating that a school must allow students, if they so wish, to use the words “gay” or “queer” in naming their club: they are removing that. Having the clarity laid out in a very simple statement that the only person who has the right to decide when a youth comes out is that youth themselves: they are removing that. The only reason to remove those simple protections, those simple provisions is because they do not believe that GSAs are what they are. They do not believe that they are simply clubs for youth to support each other.

They are believing in the conspiracy theories, the false information, some of the most foul suggestions about LGBTQ youth and not only about those youth, Madam Speaker. They are truly, to some extent, believing that there are adults that are coming in and interfering and looking to corrupt their youth. They believe that there is a gay agenda. That is the only reason to go in and make these changes, and no member of this government has stood up and given any other defence. The best they can do is an ambiguous comment about balance, but they will not define what that balance is or who they are trying to balance this for. They dare not speak it because they know that if they put that on the record, Albertans are not going to support them.

You know, it strikes me as strange, Madam Speaker, how this government decides what balance means. We have heard from the Minister of Advanced Education about his intentions for our postsecondary institutions here in the province of Alberta. He intends to bring in policies to have those institutions be forced to introduce policies that will guarantee free speech on their campus.

When it comes to postsecondary institutions, the rule of this government is that the rights of students to express themselves hold higher place than the values or standards of a particular institution. That's a clear statement. That's the policy they're going to bring forward.

But when it comes to GSAs, all of a sudden they stand their ethics on its head, they flip it upside down, and they insist that the purported values of an institution must be allowed to override the rights of a student to express themselves. They are twisting themselves in knots to try to justify what we recognize is this Premier's payoff to a very particular, socially conservative segment of his base. That is the only reason this government is proclaiming this Education Act, this gutted Education Act, this shell of its former self, and it's disappointing, Madam Speaker. It's disappointing that this government feels it is so important that they must move on it immediately, but they don't have the guts to stand and admit what it is that they are doing.

I had the chance to attend several events last week, Madam Speaker, for Pride Week. Let me tell you that we have an incredible community here in Edmonton, the LGBTQ2S-plus community, their allies. It was wonderful to see people of all ages out celebrating at these events. I can tell you again that at every event I went to, when I spoke to individuals, they said: "Thank you for holding this government to account. Thank you for speaking up against Bill Hate." They see and they recognize what this government is doing, and I think that you will see many of them here on Wednesday night.

As my colleagues have noted, Madam Speaker, this government did not have the courage to actually run on this significant change. I hope that suggests that maybe there is at least some sense of shame, though on the part of this Premier on this particular issue, I don't think there is. I think that's been demonstrated quite adequately over and over again.

Frankly, I don't envy members of the government who are sitting here now through this debate and having to put themselves in the position where, I think, many recognize what it is that they're doing here. They are making the choice, out of political expediency, to sit and remain silent, to not speak up on social media, to not speak in this House, to not go to their constituents and speak to them clearly about what it is that they are wishing to do. They will stand and they will vote for this bill to get that corporate tax cut, to maintain that solidarity with the caucus that they were elected with.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is in effect. Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was so riveted to hear the comments from the Member for Edmonton-City Centre. I know that his experience and the diversity in his area bring a lot to this debate. Perhaps he would like to enlighten us a bit more on some of what the government should be ashamed of, and if they aren't, perhaps we can hear more from the member about why they should be.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think I've been pretty clear on what my thoughts are on this bill and on members of the government that choose to support it.

What I will say is that I understand from whence this comes. I grew up in a very conservative, religious family. I myself held many of these views for many, many years. What shifted it for me, Madam Speaker, is when the bottom fell out of my own life and when I had a severe struggle with my mental health. I found out that just like members of the LGBTQ community, who at that time in my life I would have said were rightfully shut out from that community that I had grown up in and been part of, all of a sudden there was no place for me there. I didn't fit the ideology. I didn't fit that picture of faith and that world view, so I found myself on the outside. That was the beginning of a transformation for me. It took many more years for me to make that journey, but that's where it began.

I'll tell you, Madam Speaker, that that is what this bill is trying to codify again. It is trying to say to these students: "Well, okay. We recognize that we can't just shut you down all the way anymore, but we're going to put in a few things just to make sure you know your place. We're going to put in a few things just to make sure we can keep you enough in line that we don't have to challenge our world view or our personal values and we don't have to reconcile the fact that you are real and living human beings and that this is, in fact, who you are with the fact that my beliefs tell me otherwise." That's, I guess, the preacher in me coming out again.

But I can tell you that if there's anything that I have carried forward from what I learned of faith, if there was anything that I learned from the gospels and watching the life of Jesus and the way he treated people, it's that he did not make outsiders. He bent the rules, he broke the rules, he broke the social mores to recognize people as real human beings. The people he questioned were the religious authorities. Those were the people he challenged, and those were the systems he worked to tear down. That is not the spirit of this bill, Madam Speaker. That is not the spirit of those who pressed this Premier to make these changes, who fought and currently have their case in our courts, trying to defeat this support for students in our schools.

That's why it's incredibly important for me to stand and make my voice heard in this Legislature. I cannot stop this government from moving this bill, but I will speak my piece on behalf of my constituents, and I will work to make sure as many Albertans as possible know what this government is choosing to do, the impact that it is going to have on countless LGBTQ youth across this province and what that says about the character of this Premier and what that says about the priorities of this government. This bill is a betrayal of Albertans, Madam Speaker. It is a shameful thing.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is always a pleasure to rise in this Assembly and to debate at any hour. However, I wish that today we didn't have to stand here and debate Bill Hate, an act to destroy gay-straight alliances. I wish that we didn't have to stand here and explain to the government why what they are doing is going to hurt so many vulnerable students. I wish that we didn't have to stand here and explain why this is the wrong thing to do, because that should be self-evident. It should be clear when students are walking out of their classrooms to tell the government that they do not want this. It should be clear that when we look back to when Bill 10 was originally introduced, the revisions that are being rolled back today – the students are lined up in these hallways and in these galleries. It should be clear that what is being proposed in Bill Hate absolutely hurts the protections for vulnerable youth.

These are things that this Assembly should be ashamed of. We should be ashamed that we even have to stand here and defend these rights, because LGBTQ2S-plus rights are human rights. It is not something that we should have to debate in this Assembly. It is not something that we should be playing with because it is the will of the Premier or the Minister of Education. These are rights that we should be looking out to protect for every single Albertan and every single one of our constituents. We know very clearly that the Premier is planning to roll back protections for students, and we know very clearly that this puts us behind the pack in Canada for protections for LGBTQ2S-plus youth. That is something that is going to be threatening for lives and for students, Madam Speaker. These are students who need these protections.

When we say things like “gay-straight alliances” and “queer-straight alliances,” those words matter. I know it took weeks before the Education minister had the courage to say those words. But I’ll let you know that students and the vulnerable young Albertans that we are fighting for, the opposition here on this side of the House, understand that those words matter. They understand how important it is that we recognize their identity and that we fight for their identity, Madam Speaker. If government members don’t understand how important that is, then I hope that in this debate they would open their eyes and perhaps open their ears, and they could learn, because this is something that, absolutely, Albertans can learn and, absolutely, we have the opportunity to teach.

I would hope that we’d be able to have a discussion on why these are important protections for young people. When we look at the priorities of this government – Jobs, Economy, Pipelines: I heard it time and time again in the campaign – the priorities of what this government set out to do, nowhere did I see: target young people; attack vulnerable youth. Those were not the priorities that I heard, Madam Speaker, and those were not the priorities that I was sent here to uphold.

Mr. Speaker, welcome back.

It is something that I absolutely will have to stand against because these vulnerable Albertans need a voice in this Assembly. They need a voice because this government does not understand or does not care about the harm that they are going to do to families. They do not understand or they do not care about the impact that taking out protections like mandatory acceptance of the word “gay” in these GSAs will have.

We can have many opportunities to bring forward witnesses, we can have many opportunities to bring forward experts in this area who can speak to how important it is, or we can listen to the people who have spoken before us on why this bill was changed so many times in the past and why there were so many protests just on the steps of this very Legislature not that long ago. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I know that students will be just as concerned today as they were years ago. That is something that our opposition will always stand with. We will always stand with the young Albertans who are being targeted by this government. They are being singled out and attacked, and I don’t understand why because members of the government and private members of the government caucus simply will not explain why they think it is okay to roll back these protections, that were some of the strongest protections in the country, and go back to protections that were fought against, basically, by every single student in this province, something that really does not go far enough and something that absolutely will endanger the lives of Alberta’s most vulnerable youth. These are the youth that absolutely need someone to recognize their identity, absolutely need somebody to help protect their identity and make sure that they are accepted in a loving manner.

I understand that the Minister of Education has said many times that she supports inclusion groups, Mr. Speaker, but that’s not good enough because when you use the words “inclusion group,” what you are intentionally doing is excluding their identities. You are specifically trying to not say gay-straight alliance, you are specifically trying to not say queer-straight alliance, and you are specifically trying to move the message box away from gay kids. That’s what we are talking about in Bill Hate. That is what this bill does. It destroys gay-straight alliances, it attacks queer youth, and that is something that every single member of this Assembly should be concerned about. If they aren’t, this is their opportunity to learn about why they should be concerned because GSAs and QSAs are proven to help reduce the risk of things like teen suicide, to help improve teen mental health. This is just the tip of the iceberg. It is something that is essential for our school system to be able to protect these young people.

It is essential that we understand the damage this bill will do because this bill, I believe, actually goes against the mandate of the Education minister. It actually goes against the mandate of the Education minister because it puts students that are under her care at risk. It actually encourages students under her care to not have the safe spaces they need, and that is something the Education minister should be concerned about, that she was asked to put forward a bill that would actually harm the students under her care. That is something that all members of this Assembly should be concerned about.

If the Premier wants to push forward with that, that is the Premier’s prerogative, but I would hope that members of the government caucus and the government front bench here would understand what the ramifications of that will actually be, that they would understand how they would actually go in and hurt children where they are the most vulnerable, right in their classrooms.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I’m quite a bit younger than many members of this Assembly, and one of the things that I had in my high school was actually a GSA. I know that for a lot of members who perhaps went to school a few years before me, they maybe did not yet have GSAs, gay-straight alliances, established in their schools. One of the things I remember about GSAs was that I would go visit on occasion, and it was usually – I think they hosted it on a Thursday night. We’d walk into one of the film studies rooms, and they’d screen a movie, and for about 50 cents you’d get a little paper bag of popcorn. They had a popcorn machine in the corner. That was the extent of their activity that week. That was what a GSA was. A GSA was intended to create a safe space that every single student in the school could go to, have their little bag of popcorn, hang out, and speak to each other like real human beings.

It wasn’t something that you put your name on a list and decided whether you were going to be gay that day or not. It wasn’t something that you put your name on a list and decided which parents to send it home to. It wasn’t something that the teachers came to and recorded everyone who was there and said: okay; well, we’re going to be monitoring all these kids to see what they do in the next week or two or if they’re a mental health risk or anything like that, Mr. Speaker. No. A GSA is a social club for students to be able to have a safe, inclusive space so that people can broaden their horizons and understand what people from different backgrounds and different identities have in common with them.

I would encourage members of the government, who perhaps did not have the same opportunity to have those experiences as I did in school, to go out and actually talk to students in GSAs. If they actually went and talked to students in GSAs and QSAs, talked to actual gay kids and consulted with actual gay and queer students, they would understand what GSAs are and how GSAs work. What they would actually find out is that these groups are loving, caring spaces that create opportunity for students, that work and have strong supports.

These support systems are shown to reduce the risk of teen suicide, to reduce the risk of youth mental health issues. It's something as simple as that movie night every single Thursday, Mr. Speaker. It's that simple. But the government doesn't understand that, or they don't care. They either don't understand or they don't care that these simple clubs or gatherings of students are what saves lives, what actually makes a difference in saving the lives of students right here in our province, right here in our schools, right here in our neighbourhoods. That's something that I think all members of the government should take a deep look at and find out for themselves what that means.

These are our kids. These are the kids that go to school with your children. These may be your children themselves. Mr. Speaker, that is something that we should fight for every single day in this Assembly. We should fight for their protections because we understand that they are the ones that matter when we talk about education, when we talk about an education system. We are doing this to make sure that our students have the best possible place to learn and the safest and most loving environment, and GSAs and QSAs provide that. But when Bill Hate is introduced and when this bill goes in and destroys the protections for GSAs to call themselves that, for QSAs to call themselves that, that is all put at risk. The lives of these students are put at risk.

That is something that the government should be ashamed of, Mr. Speaker. It's something that they should be concerned about. Really, it's something that the Minister of Education should be deeply concerned about because those are her students. Her students are the ones that are going to suffer the most because in this province we used to have these protections, and now, very clearly, we will not. Now, very clearly, this Assembly and this government will vote to put those lives at risk.

That is something that the government should either be concerned about or, if they're not, they should be ashamed about. They should be aware of what they are doing, and if they are not, they should perhaps take the earphones out, and they should perhaps just start listening because these are the voices of students all across the province. These are the voices of young people who understand how important these spaces are for them, who understand the importance of being able to say that they attend a gay-straight alliance or that they are gay or bisexual or queer or two spirited, whatever the term is, Mr. Speaker, that they wish to self-identify as. That is so important.

We can see very clearly that the government did not run on this. They ran on jobs, the economy, and pipelines. Now what they've done instead is that they have shifted their tactics to attacking young people. On one hand, Mr. Speaker, they've said that they won't focus on social issues, and on the other, they've gone right in and then started to directly destroy the protections in place for vulnerable Albertans, and that is something that is very concerning. That is something that this entire Assembly should be extremely concerned about.

Now, I understand that this is very new for a lot of these members. Perhaps even when the protections were in place, in a lot of the schools that are in their areas GSAs never did exist or GSAs were not established. But, Mr. Speaker, ignorance is not an excuse. Just because there was no evidence of this in the past, just because there was no experience with this in the past does not mean that these students do not need protection today. It does not mean that these students do not need that protection. Just because in one school there is no GSA and things appear to be okay does not mean that we still do not need to protect those students if they so choose in the future, and that is what is being rolled back in this bill.

What is being rolled back in this bill is all of the protections that have been researched and understood to help save lives, and the government needs to understand that. If they don't, then they need to listen. If they do and they don't care, then that is something that all Albertans should be extremely concerned about, Mr. Speaker, because these are the things that Albertans understand.

It's their families and the safety of their families that are under attack by this bill. It's that this bill goes into classrooms and goes into schools and attacks students. It attacks young vulnerable Albertans. It attacks all of the people who are fighting to protect their identities, and that's something that all members of this Assembly should be extremely concerned about.

I would urge everybody to take a deep listen and a deep look and vote against this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see that the hon. Government House Leader has risen.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you. I appreciate an opportunity to rise under 29(2)(a). I'd like to address a couple of things raised by the hon. member. The very first thing I'd like to raise is some of his comments towards my friend the hon. Education minister, who was my friend long before we came to this Chamber and, I assure you, will be my friend long after we leave this Chamber, who's done a great job. I want to assure the entire Chamber that this caucus, this cabinet, and the Premier, for that matter, have nothing but utmost faith in the Education minister, who is working extremely hard. In all the years that I've known her and as you have, Mr. Speaker, she has done nothing but work very hard for the education system, has dedicated much of her life to the children of this province, and I'm proud of her for that. It's disappointing to continue to see members of the opposition misrepresent the hon. member's integrity and dedication to that fact.

I'd like to also just draw the hon. member's attention to page 60 of the United Conservative Party's platform, the Strong and Free platform, in which we make the following promise: to "proclaim the Education Act (2012)" – it's been around since 2012 – "taking effect on September 1, 2019." It then goes on to say that "a UCP government will trust the hard work done by those who created the 2012 Education Act, and proclaim that legislation, already passed by the Legislature, unlike the NDP's curriculum review," which was done largely in secret and without widespread consultation.

That is the difference between these two parties, and the hon. Education minister is following the platform promises that were made to Albertans and that were voted on by record numbers as the NDP were completely and utterly rejected by the people of this province and went on their way to become the only one-term government in the history of this province.

It's also disappointing to continue to watch the opposition members rise in this House, misrepresent facts, Mr. Speaker, and continue to use LGBTQ children as props in a political push about a bill, a fairly thick bill – I have it right here – a 41-page bill that does not address GSAs. In fact, Bill 10 was supported by both the legacy parties that make up the United Conservative Party and by the NDP when they were in opposition. That bill remains in place, Bill 10.

Mr. Speaker, do you know what will happen when a student or group of students wishes to create a gay-straight alliance right now even after this new bill passes? Do you know what'll happen? Well, step 1, the student or students will ask a staff member at a school to start a GSA. Well, that seems okay. It's seems a lot different than what the opposition is presenting. Step 2, the principal will permit the GSA, the complete opposite again of what the opposition is presenting. Step 3, the principal designates a staff liaison to support the GSA, very different than what the opposition is presenting. Step 4, the students select a group name. My friends, my friends inside this Chamber, the students select the name of the group. Step 5, if the principal cannot find a staff liaison, the principal informs both the board and the minister, and the minister appoints a responsible adult. Step 6, as a student-led group the students with support from their staff liaison plan the next steps such as meeting dates, times, and activities. The final step: a GSA is formed. A gay-straight alliance is formed.

Nothing changes in Bill 8. The rules and the legislation that passed this very Chamber with the support of almost every member of the Legislature at the time and the majority of members of all parties that were in the Legislature remain in place.

Ms Pancholi: Then why are you changing it?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Now, the question that is being heckled at me, Madam – or Mr. Speaker. I thought you had left for the evening. Great to see you back.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are all very aware that you would never refer to the absence or the presence of a member in the Chamber. I'm sure the Government House Leader is happy to withdraw and apologize to the Speaker.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Not at all. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to withdraw and apologize if I referred to your absence, but you were here in the Chamber.

The Speaker: That's what I thought.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Of course, that's what I referred to the entire time.

My point is: why we would bring forward the education bill that we brought forward is because this is what was promised Albertans. While the NDP cannot defend the fact to speak against . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, is anyone else wishing to speak to . . .

Mr. Dang: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order has been called. The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Dang: The hon. member to my right from Calgary-Klein here has just actually stated through a heckle, Mr. Speaker – I'm sure you can check the microphones if you'd like – “because you keep lying to them,” referring to myself and the hon. member right behind me. I believe that is actually an affront to this House, and it is clearly in the standing orders under 23(h), (i), and (j). Also, very clearly we know it is unparliamentary to refer to any individual member and say that they have lied to this House or to anybody else. I would ask him to withdraw and apologize.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, did you hear the comments because I certainly . . .

The Speaker: Whoa. Whoa. The hon. Government House Leader is rising to defend the point of order.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought you had already recognized me.

I did not hear any such comments. I think it's pretty rich, though, for the hon. member to want to be talking about who's misrepresenting things inside this House. I won't use the unparliamentary term, but it's pretty clear what's been happening here this evening, and certainly I will not withdraw and apologize for that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, while I appreciate the withdrawal from the Government House Leader, I would say that it's a fairly long-standing parliamentary tradition that when the member is present and eligible or able to withdraw and apologize, the member would do that on their own behalf. Having said that . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: I never said that he said it.

The Speaker: It's okay. Let's wait . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Hang on. How about you wait to find out what my decision is before you disagree with my decision under Standing Order 13(2).

Mr. Jason Nixon: I'm looking forward to it.

The Speaker: Me too.

I would ask that while the Speaker is on his feet, the Government House Leader – as much humour as he'd like to try to interject into this particular decision, perhaps he would keep his humour to himself while the Speaker is on his feet.

What I would say is that from time to time members will make comments from their seats that may or may not be heard by the Speaker. There have been other cases where I have heard members make comments that are certainly not parliamentary, and I have encouraged them to withdraw and apologize. Without the benefit of the Blues or the opportunity to hear what was said, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-South has quite rightly pointed out, if in fact the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein did make the accusation that someone was lying, it would be appropriate for him to stand, withdraw, and apologize for making that remark. I did not hear that remark, so it would be up to the hon. member to determine whether or not he chooses to do so.

Having said that, I would encourage all members of the Assembly, no matter the time of day, hour of night or early morning, that we would create an environment that promotes rigorous debate but without the use of unparliamentary language.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader is rising.

Mr. Jason Nixon: On the bill.

The Speaker: You'd like to add to debate on Bill 8?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yes. Awesome. Thank you. I'd like to just finish a few of my comments on debate. You get to step 6 and there's a GSA that is formed. Now, you saw or you heard – I see them; you didn't see them – all of those steps. Where in all of those steps, Mr. Speaker, through you to all of the hon. members of the Chamber, does it call with this act to stop GSAs? For days we've listened to it in the Chamber from the NDP as they misrepresent those facts, clear facts, to this very Chamber and continue to use LGBTQ kids as a political prop rather than to debate this important piece of legislation. It's disappointing because they continue to basically fearmonger with the LGBTQ community. They continue to tell the LGBTQ community that there will not be gay-straight alliances, that this legislation will stop that. They go so far as to tell the hon. members of this place that if they support this bill, that means that they don't support LGBTQ kids, but the problem is that the legislation actually does that.

Mr. Speaker, I know you were here in these buildings. At the time you were not an hon. member, I know, but you were here staffing one of the opposition caucuses. You were here for the historical debates that would go on to create Bill 10. The reality is that the majority of this Chamber established Bill 10 as law and this party, the United Conservative Party, who now has the privilege of being Her Majesty's government in this province, has always supported that since our conception. We've made that clear. We supported GSAs during the entire campaign, we will continue to support GSAs inside this Chamber, and the hon. the Education minister continues to support them with her education bill that is before this House by making sure that they will take place.

It's disappointing because it takes away from the real debate that should be happening about a bill that is 41 pages long. We've heard no comments from the opposition except for about a topic which, Mr. Speaker, I would submit to you and to all the Chamber, is an important topic. GSAs and standing up for LGBTQ youth and any child, for that matter, who is being bullied inside our schools is something that's important to us in this Chamber and should be important to us in this Chamber. But the issue that they're raising is not part of this bill. Instead of talking on behalf of their constituents about the actual legislation before this House, they continue to fearmonger and tell the LGBTQ community that GSAs will not exist.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein, who we were just talking about earlier, Mr. Speaker, dedicated much of his life to working with LGBTQ youth, much of his life. I know him well. He would not stand and support anything that would say what the hon. members from the opposition continue to say.

Now, I understand the members opposite are having trouble understanding this, but again I want to be clear. The Education Act is clear. The legislation guarantees students are entitled to create groups including GSAs and QSAs, complete opposite of what the hon. members across the way continue to say day in and day out, complete disservice to the people of Alberta. They have a job to do, a very important job to do. I've had the privilege, as you have, Mr. Speaker, to serve in opposition. I respect the opposition's role inside our parliamentary democracy. I think it's an important role. I think they should speak on behalf of their constituents. I will always encourage them to do that. But they should focus on what are actual facts inside the legislation instead of misrepresenting facts for their political gain inside this place. They do a disservice to the debate by doing that. They do a disservice to this legislation. It is our responsibility to get out of this Chamber the best bill that we can, but the hon. opposition, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, in this place won't even talk about the bill that's before the House. Instead, they continue to talk about misrepresented facts inside this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to clarify some additional misconceptions that have been raised by members of the opposition as I think it's important for us as legislators to set the record straight as we debate this very important bill. Now, last week during question period the Leader of the Opposition highlighted a policy for Nova Scotia. What she failed to clearly outline is that Nova Scotia has no overarching provincial statutes protecting GSAs. Unlike the policies for Nova Scotia, the protection provided by the Education Amendment Act, 2019, Bill 8, right here, that we are debating, and Alberta's already robust privacy legislations will all be enshrined in law, as this side of the House has been saying for days, the best statutory protection in all of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the hon. members, if they truly believe that it is their job as the Official Opposition to make legislation better, to stand up for constituents, that they come here with facts, show us the ways that bills could change, come up with good, concrete ideas on behalf of Albertans, bring forward amendments that we could do to make this legislation stronger, but don't stand up in the House and misrepresent facts over and over and over. Don't stand up in the House and attempt to bully an Education minister, who, by the way, ain't going to blink. I've known her a long time. She ain't going to blink, and nor should she because we committed to the people of Alberta that we would bring Bill 8, the Education Amendment Act, 2019, to this Chamber. We brought it to this Chamber. We're going to pass it through this Chamber, I suspect. I know I'm looking forward to voting for it because it's a promise made and a promise kept. That's what we are focused on in this spring legislation.

The opposition should take a little bit of humility finally and maybe go back and look in the mirror and ask what has taken place for them to have to sit on that side of the House. I know, Mr. Speaker, I heard you speak about it much when you were in opposition, warning the then government that if they continued down the path that they have, ignoring Albertans, continued with fear and smear and attacking people, they would end up on that very side of the House. Shockingly, now that they're there, they still have not taken the time to sit down and reflect on what got them there. Instead, they have continued with the exact same tactics that put them inside those benches.

I see the Opposition House Leader shaking his head, but he knows deep down in his heart that I'm right. He knows. See, Mr. Speaker, he agrees. Sometimes when you get to a spot like that, that's when we could finally get some productive debate inside this Chamber.

I will close with this, Mr. Speaker, because I know that you're on the edge of your seat. The reality is this. The facts that are being presented by the opposition when it comes to Bill 8 are not factual. They are misrepresenting the facts. They are debating it from a position of attempting to score political points by using LGBTQ youth as a political prop, an important group of people that they should not be using as a political prop, and instead of making sure that we end up with the best Bill 8, the best Education Act that this province could ask for, they're spending their time trying to score cheap political points.

Mr. Speaker, I will assure, through you to all the LGBTQ youth of our province, that this government remains committed to protecting GSAs. We remain committed to Bill 10 – we've been clear on that – again, a bill that was supported by that opposition's legacy parties. Some of the members in that opposition party voted for Bill 10 at the time, voted for Bill 10. That will remain in place despite what the opposition continues to want to do, and when we're done here, whenever we finally can push the opposition to allow this to be voted on, we will go through with what Albertans have instructed us to do. We will pass Bill 8, the Education Amendment Act, 2019, and you know what? We're not going to stop there. We're going to keep moving through the legislation we promised Albertans despite the fact that the NDP want to play games.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for brief questions or comments. I see the hon. Opposition House Leader rising to ask a brief question or make a comment.

Mr. Bilous: Sure, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for this opportunity. I mean, I need to clarify some of the mistruths that were recently just said about our government although first I want to start off by reminding all members of this House that regardless of what side of this House we sit on, for the UCP and for the Government House Leader, every single Albertan in his riding did not vote for him. There's no member in this House who collected or earned every single vote from every Albertan. So I find it a little rich considering the arrogance that we are seeing in this Chamber. I did not get every single vote in my riding. There were people who voted for the UCP, just as for every member in this House, including members who won under the UCP banner. They did not get every single vote in their riding. There are New Democrats around this province who didn't vote for them, just as there are members of the UCP around the province who didn't vote for us.

You know, I want to take a moment to remind members that we are here to serve all Albertans and that the government is – honestly, this current government is reminding me a lot of the government pre-2015 election as far as the level of arrogance: we were voted a majority; ergo, we can do whatever we want because Albertans gave us carte blanche to ram whatever legislation we want down their throats. Well, the reality is that they did not. The purpose of the opposition is to debate bills and legislation, and if the Government House Leader is tired of listening to the opposition, well, I'm sorry; you're going to have to listen for quite a while longer because I think we have a lot to say.

I heard our Member for Edmonton-Whitemud asking the Government House Leader to name some other amendments that this bill makes as far as changes to the other acts. I think what's fascinating is that when you listen to, for example, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud – she worked on the last few iterations of different education bills. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I was teaching at Inner City High School when Inspiring Education came around. I remember Dave Hancock coming to the school to talk to students and teachers and support staff about their vision for changing the Education Act back then.

But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there was, you know, no consultation on what this government is bringing in. Yes, they won a majority, but I don't think Albertans sent them here with a mandate to attack gay-straight alliances and attack the LGBTQ community, quite frankly. I don't remember that in the slogan of the UCP. So it's just a little rich getting lectured from the Government House Leader on the role of opposition, on what we are doing and how somehow by presenting facts, tabling reports that that is somehow spreading mistruths.

The Government House Leader tried to talk about Nova Scotia and the fact that theirs isn't enshrined in legislation. They still have stronger protections for their youth. Whether the tool is through legislation or through a ministerial order or through regulations is not relevant, Mr. Speaker; it's what protections are in place for our students. And I can tell you that Alberta, until Bill Hate passes, has the strongest protections for LGBTQ2-plus students in the country.

If the government thinks that theirs is stronger, again, I would encourage them to look at what this bill does and doesn't do. It actually makes it more difficult for students to create a GSA, and in fact there's no guarantee it will even be called a GSA. There are many schools that will refuse that. What the Government House Leader failed to point out is that a principal can indefinitely delay a decision to students; therefore, they will just outwait a student wanting to create a GSA.

The protections that are currently in place are much stronger than what this bill is proposing, Mr. Speaker, so I look forward to having more conversations with the government.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Prior to proceeding to other potential speakers on Bill 8 if I may, and I almost interjected after the remarks from the Government House Leader but, frankly, thought we may be adjourning debate so didn't. But if I could just say – and I think the Opposition House Leader proved my point – that if we, the rest of the evening, could perhaps do our best to do everything possible to not say “mistruths,” “you're not telling the truth,” “you are playing fast and loose with the facts,” if we could do everything that we can to refrain from implying that one side of the House or the other is lying about a particular issue, perhaps that would help decorum this evening as we move later into the evening. I think the Speaker has taken a fairly broad swath on allowing both sides of the House to imply that both sides of the House are spreading mistruths, but perhaps we might move the debate in another direction.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's actually my honour, and I'm so humbled and proud to be here. I will try to get the debate back to the original issue we were on. If I can move it from the election-style rhetoric.

Mr. Speaker, by saying this, I just wanted to say, first of all, that let's see how privileged we are, like, on both sides of the House. On behalf of our constituents and ridings, you know, on behalf of all Albertans we can sit together and we can discuss their issues. We can not only discuss their issues, but we can address their issues. One thing I'm sure that everybody on both sides of this House will agree on is that we have some collective responsibilities, basically, when it comes to protecting the fundamental rights of Albertans. The reason I just stand up to give my input on this bill, on what I see and feel, is that the matter this bill takes in hand is reflecting something totally opposite.

I remember that my colleagues from this side of the House raised concern last week, if I'm not forgetting, to test if we are really on the same page when we are defining inclusion. Under this Bill 8 what do we really see moving forward? I will call the government's type of inclusion the same as like what we have seen, you know, happening in the name of secularism in Bill 21 in Quebec. What do we do?

The series of acts we are seeing through the different bills – it's also reflected in this bill – is that we are seeing that we are identifying people based on their age, gender, beliefs, sexual orientation, not to help them but to attack their fundamental rights by compromising their security to the fundamental protections that they deserve. This bill, Bill 8, failed to guarantee the rights to form a GSA and QSA. What does this GSA and QSA do? As has been said many times, these are just social clubs that serve the purpose to save lives and to provide a secure environment to the most vulnerable. Is that what offends this government? Was this exactly their platform in the election?

If this bill is passed, it will not only be a failure to provide a guarantee of fundamental rights to live safely and be free from harm but also a violation of the right to education in a safe environment. Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about who this government is trying to serve through this bill. We didn't really see a consultation report or something backed by facts, so what is the motivation the government has behind this bill?

We have already seen the students, you know, walk out in support of GSAs and QSAs. That wasn't long ago, so we can't say that we can't really remember. It's not even been two weeks or three weeks since all those students in Alberta walked out in support of GSAs and QSAs and against the proposed bill of the government, Bill 8. Not only this, but the Alberta Teachers' Association has mostly complete support for Bill 24, saying that teachers were put in a horrible situation under provisions of previous legislation.

We have seen the government leader, you know, blaming the opposition, saying that the opposition in the House is trying to prop up, use the GSAs and QSAs for their political purpose. What this bill will do with the kinds of changes it's enforcing is that school staff will be allowed to out students participating in GSAs. It weakens it for the public schools, and private schools will no longer need to submit policies at all on this. Those policies no longer require the explicit use of the word "gay." These are the kinds of changes you are proposing in the bill.

The provisions requiring the timely establishment of GSAs after it's requested by students would be removed if this bill is passed. Enforcement mechanisms for school boards and private schools not complying with GSA legislation will also be removed. These are the kinds of changes that are going forward in this bill, what we are showing everybody. The students of Alberta are walking out in support of GSAs and QSAs.

Some of the other areas are, you know, the Government House Leader says that this bill is quite long. We know it's quite a long bill, but we're trying to emphasize one of the most important parts of this bill. Yes, we are also aware and we are also concerned with the other changes this bill is proposing.

The government is already saying very little to commit to providing funding to public education. Moving forward, it's also enhancing audit requirements for school boards, creating even a recall mechanism for publicly elected trustees. We are bringing these kinds of changes through Bill 8. On the contrary, the proposal is that it will remove the cap on charter schools. It changes the requirements for establishing a charter school and extends rules and fees to charter schools. Mr. Speaker, we can see the clear direction the government is going in on opening up competition. We are not against competition but on how we are opening up competition. Competition might weaken the public education system.

I remember speaking at an event during my election campaign. A person came to me saying that I should have put more emphasis on our government's campaign of freezing tuition fees and how we are making education affordable. Mr. Speaker, you know who this person was? He was a teacher in one of the private schools. I just wanted to remind that this is how the people in my riding, this is how the people in Alberta value affordable education. By passing this bill, this bill attacks the affordability of education as well.

Mr. Speaker, I oppose this bill because I understand that I do come from a very conservative family. It was mentioned earlier by my fellow colleagues how hard it is for vulnerable children, vulnerable people to come out and seek support when they need it the most and before it gets too late. We're living in the 21st century, and we expect to move forward, and we should move forward. In this case, it looks like we're moving a step backwards. We need to look around at how the world around us is progressing on these issues or the competent codes they're intervening in. It's our collective responsibility: we should create a safe environment, not spread the politics of fear.

Mr. Speaker, I oppose the bill, and I ask my fellow members on both sides of the House, for the sake of, you know, protection of the most vulnerable, to please oppose the bill.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for brief questions or comments. I see that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora has risen.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows for his thoughtful comments and feedback. I also want to take this opportunity to connect what he said to what a previous speaker was discussing. A previous speaker said: you know, this is what we ran on; this is what we said that we were going to do. Actually, what the government, today when they were campaigning, talked about was proclaiming the ed act, so this is very different than that.

Nonetheless, this is the situation we're in. They definitely didn't talk about: we're going to bring in a massive new bill, and we're going to do some of the things the NDP did but not other things the NDP did. I think that they did say that they thought that the protections we brought in were an overreach, that they thought that they were negative, and that's one of the reasons why we're spending so much time talking about why they aren't an overreach, why they're actually life saving and life fulfilling, and why it's so important that we do stand up for those who are vulnerable in our society, I think.

Many of us would say that – I know the Government House Leader said something about using children as props, and I would say that it's shameful to see government use children as punching bags. I really feel that that is – when I talked to the kids at the rallies in Calgary, they said: we are being attacked personally for what club we choose to become a part of. That, to me, is the shameful part, Mr. Speaker. That, to me, is a complete disrespect of what our sole obligation is.

I also heard the member say: well, in 2012 this Chamber passed a bill, and therefore we need to follow it by going back to the bill of 2012. Well, if you use that same logic – oh, it wasn't 2000 – in the early 1900s there were laws in place in this place, people in this place who passed bills saying that women shouldn't vote. Bills were passed 100 years ago saying that women shouldn't vote, so we shouldn't update the laws today and therefore have women voting.

Well, a bill that was passed in 2012 that kids said clearly was an infringement of their rights, that wasn't actually fulfilling the intended purpose of the day: I don't care how many legacy parties voted for it, hon. members, through you, Mr. Speaker. I don't care how many legacy parties voted for it. If it doesn't meet the needs of today, then that law needs to be updated, and that's what our Education minister did. That's why our Education minister worked swiftly to make sure that our kids, all of our kids, everyone's kids had the protections that they asked for in this province. You know, yes, a bunch of people voted on something a number of years ago and, yes, it passed then, but that doesn't mean that we should go back to what was in place in then. That is one of the first things I wanted to say.

There were other things that, certainly, the majority of people in this place passed that, certainly, the government has no intention to keep in place, and that is their right, but they should own that. If they're going to go back in time and if they're going to go to previous legislation that kids told us wasn't effective, that staff told us wasn't clear, and that we worked to improve – because that's absolutely what's happening here. I know that there are 40 pages to this bill, but the main purpose of this bill is to destroy GSAs, and that's why we're spending so much time talking about it.

There are many, many pages that take good things that our Education minister brought in like TQS and LQS, teacher quality standards and leadership quality standards, and put into legislation. That's good. We don't need to keep talking about that. We proposed that, it passed, it got put into the School Act, it's getting moved over to the Education Act.

We need to talk about what this Education Act is undoing, and what the clear covert intention of it is, Mr. Speaker. That's why we're not going to stop talking. That's why, when these kids tell us to be their voice and to keep fighting for them and to make sure they have the right to be respected and loved and have some privacy when they're going through something that's so difficult, we won't stop fighting for them.

Mr. Speaker, I had to sort of make that part clear. Certainly, there are some people who think that we are doing this because of ulterior motives. I will tell you that my motive is simple: I want kids to live, I want kids to learn, and I want kids to feel love. That's it. That's my motive: live, learn, love.

Mr. Eggen: Busted.

Ms Hoffman: Busted.

That's my motive. That's my agenda. I know some people think there's another agenda, but that's my agenda. I want kids to have the opportunity to live their fullest lives and to feel love and to learn, Mr. Speaker. We have an opportunity in this place to discuss things that will help that, or we have the ability to hurt that. I feel very strongly that all members need to be aware that this is an act to destroy GSAs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others wishing to speak to Bill 8? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise again today to speak to Bill 8 and to express my deep concerns with what is being proposed here. I've been privileged. One of the privileges of being in this House actually is to hear the debate around it. I've been very moved and affected by the comments from my colleagues, many colleagues. In particular, I was very affected by the comments by the Member for Edmonton-City Centre. He spoke very eloquently and passionately about his own journey, and I think it's something that we can all learn from. I am so honoured to hear the comments from my colleagues on this side of the aisle.

But what I continue to be troubled by is the lack of comments from the members on the other side setting out precisely why they're bringing forward this bill and why they're seeking to proclaim the Education Act. I've given a bit of a background and my history with this act. I admit, because of my work, because of my background as a lawyer, to knowing probably more detail about this act and the current act than probably most people care to know. My concern is that I believe that the members on the opposite side are counting on the fact that Albertans haven't read this bill, haven't read the Education Act, which is 300 sections long, don't know what's currently in the School Act. I think that to support that, the Government House Leader rose and spoke about and cited from the UCP platform, that they set out, that their intent was to proclaim the Education Act from 2012. That was coded very specifically in that language because they were counting on the fact that people don't know what's in the Education Act.

But the great thing is that I do. One of my concerns, particularly when we've seen the Minister of Education stand up and give what can only be called these talking points about why they're bringing forward the Education Act: they lack any detail or any specifics about the legislation. I think it's really important to know that there is a lot of detail and specifics in the Education Act, and we're not hearing about that content because we believe – and I think it is accurate – that there is only one, sole purpose behind bringing forward the Education Act, and that is to roll back the provisions on GSAs. One of the things I'd like to talk about – and I think this may be educational and informative for the members on the opposite side as well – is what's actually in the Education Act, because I don't believe they know. We have not heard any of the comments. We've heard very little debate.

One of the challenges of being an opposition party is that we stand up here, and we actually have to know the legislation. We actually have to know what we're talking about because we have to carry the debate and we have to talk about it. We have to make sure that Albertans get the opportunity to hear about it. Unfortunately, the members on the other side have not shown the depth of knowledge and understanding. I have to say, unfortunately, that I don't believe the Minister of Education has demonstrated the depth of knowledge and understanding of the legislation that she's bringing forward.

As I mentioned in my earlier comments today, Mr. Speaker, there were a number of provisions that were supposed to be transformative, that were supposed to provide greater opportunity for students in this province to complete high school and the opportunity to recognize that students are mobile – they move from jurisdiction to jurisdiction – they have different needs, they have different challenges, and therefore sometimes the opportunity must be provided to them to complete high school in a flexible manner. That was why the Education Act brought forward provisions around age of access in compulsory education.

In fact, going back to Hansard discussions, Mr. Speaker, on the original Bill 18, the hon. Minister Dave Hancock, who, might I add, I think, was a great minister and cared very deeply about children in this province – I do think he was an excellent human being. He was also my predecessor as an MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud. I do believe he had the best intentions in mind when he brought forward a desire to overhaul the education system. I think he faced significant challenges, however, for financial reasons, for political will reasons. But one of the things that he was proud of – and I recall that very clearly – was the provisions around increasing the age of access in compulsory education.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I'd like to quote from when Minister Hancock, on April 28, 2011, at page 966 of Hansard, spoke to the introduction of the Education Act. He talked about:

One significant change [under] the Education Act that will also affect students is the school leaving age being changed to age 17.

He said:

This change sends a clear message about the importance of education and the need to complete high school if one is to take full advantage of the opportunities Alberta has to offer, and it implements a portion of a private member's bill [that was] brought forward [earlier] . . .

He was very proud of that, yet this government has chosen not to implement that.

He was also very proud of the provisions around raising the age of access to age 21. This government has chosen not to implement that. He was very proud of the changes to change residency to be based on where students live, not where their parents live. Again, this government has chosen not to bring that forward. The original intent of this bill is not being reflected in what we see today as what's brought forward in Bill 8 under this current government.

The Minister of Education has stood up in this House, has done, you know, lots of statements in the media and commented about how this is going to modernize our education system. Mr. Speaker, I wish that were the case, but even putting aside the provisions on GSAs, it's simply not the case. It's simply not the case that the Education Act does really anything more than just tinker with the details of the School Act. I say that as somebody who did that tinkering, who did that looking at those provisions, saying: well, how can we just . . .

Ms Hoffman: She's a tinkerer.

Ms Pancholi: I was a tinkerer.

. . . clean up those provisions? Unfortunately, there was not even a mandate back then. In the three times this bill came forward to this House, there was not the political will to do significant changes.

Mr. Speaker, one of my activities on the weekend – again, this is part of my lawyerly background – is that I actually went through all of the sections of the current Education Act, that's been proposed and amended today by the government. I went through. There are 300 sections in the Education Act. I can tell you that substantive changes are being made to 25 of them. That is less than 10 per cent of the act. That means 90 per cent of the Education Act reflects substantively exactly what's in the School Act. This is not a modernization. This is not transformational. This is simply about bringing forward, in an undercover kind of way, one change – one change – that this government wants to do.

But they were not forthcoming about that in their platform. What was put forward in their platform was proclaiming the Education Act. People might have presumed: "Oh, Education Act. That sounds new. That's probably got to be updated and modern." But it isn't, because the only thing that they want to do is to roll back the provisions on GSAs.

Again, going back to my legal training, one of the things, when we're drafting briefs or preparing factums or standing up in court to try to determine how to interpret and apply legislation, one of the key tools that any lawyer does – the first thing they do is that they look at the legislation, they look at previous forms of the legislation, they look at the debate in Hansard, and they say: "What was the intent? What was the intent behind the change?" And I can tell you that when we have a current School Act in place that provides really robust protections for GSAs, for LGBTQ students, and then they look at what was proposed and what is being put forward in the new legislation, they'll see that it is different. And how is it different? It is weaker. What the conclusion is that will be drawn, from lawyers, from everybody else who'll be looking at it, is that the intent of this government was to weaken protections for GSAs. Let's be honest.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I mean, the Government House Leader rose and went through the steps that are there for GSAs under the Education Act, yet what he failed to say is that what we currently have in the School Act is the same. It sets up a process, but it's better. It still provides the establishment of GSAs, it still provides that kids can be protected in a safe and secure environment, but it does it better. How does it do it better? The NDP government listened to the concerns that were brought forward from students, from administrators, and realized there was a problem, realized that there were schools, there were administrators who were using some of those provisions that this government is now trying to put back in place, they were using them to stall. They were using it to shame students. They were using it to scare students out of joining GSAs.

If this government is committed to GSAs, why would they have a problem with what's currently in the School Act? If they were truly committed to protecting the most vulnerable kids – I hesitate that we even stop to talk about this. My colleagues have done a fantastic job of laying out how statistically and factually accurate it is that LGBTQ students in this province, and actually in any province, are our most vulnerable kids, the most at risk kids – and truly committed to having GSAs and protecting these kids, they should have no problem with carrying over the provisions in the School Act into the Education Act.

They had no problem carrying over the changes that the NDP government made around the separate school establishment process. They had no problems bringing over from the School Act the provisions around trustee code of conduct. They had no problem bringing over the provisions around establishing leadership certificates and superintendent certificates to make sure that all school administrators are held to a high standard of practice. They had no problem doing that. The only problem, the only section of the School Act that they seemed to have a problem with bringing over was the provisions around protections for GSAs and LGBTQ students.

This government might stand up, the Government House Leader might stand up and say, "Look, it's not factual that we're weakening it." But it is factual because if it wasn't, just keep it the way it is. I think it's really important to highlight once again that there are other changes provided in the Education Act. The reason why that doesn't get attention is because they're tinkering, because they're small. There are things that could easily be done to the School Act, and they would not have the impact of affecting the most vulnerable group of kids in our system.

I don't see any of the members from the other side rising up, you know, fiercely in defence of the Education Act provision that establishes an audit committee for school boards. I don't see them standing up and saying: "That's really important. It's going to transform our system. It's what we're hearing from our constituents. It's what we're hearing from our stakeholders that we really need." Hey, I actually think that's a great change. It's a good change.

Ms Hoffman: A lot of boards already do it.

Ms Pancholi: Exactly. It's not necessarily a necessary change because most boards already do it. Guess what? It would take about two seconds and two lines to amend the School Act to provide that.

I don't see the members from the other side standing up in fierce protection of the fact that the student advisory council is going to be legislated because one already exists. What we see is silence, and that's my concern. This government is proposing bringing in significant change to legislation. [interjection] I realize that the Government House Leader seems to have a high desire for attention right now, but I do have the floor, so I will continue to speak. I don't see that there is a lot of content to this act, but I feel like the members on the other side need to be familiar with and need to know what they're bringing forward. I think they're all just hoping that people won't know what's happening. I think they were counting on that.

I can tell you that when I was out door-knocking in my constituency – I've been quite forthcoming in this House about the fact that my constituency is not a very highly partisan group of voters; they don't stick to one party or the other; they want to hear reasonable, rational discussions about issues that they care about – there were a lot of members in my riding who were previously Progressive Conservatives, maybe voted UCP this time as well. But one of the things that I consistently heard around the time that this platform piece was being discussed during the campaign was that they knew what was going on. They knew that this was an intent without the government being forthcoming and saying that this was what they wanted to do. They knew that this is what they were trying to do, that they were trying to roll back protections for GSAs. I would have people at their door saying: "You know what? I voted Progressive Conservative before. I've done that before. I can't get behind this, though. I cannot get behind this. I can't get behind the idea that this government would move forward with legislation that's going to make the most vulnerable kids more vulnerable again."

We have to show that we have moved forward, that we have progressed. This is the human rights issue of our generation right now. You know, it's coming forward because this is a serious need that's coming forward from kids. It's been brought forward because they are speaking out. They need us as their advocates in this House to pass legislation and to pass laws that protect them. That is our ultimate responsibility. When they're saying, "We need these protections," when they came forward to the NDP and said, "This is what we believe we need; we are still feeling vulnerable; we're still feeling threatened about being outed to our parents; we're still feeling like we're not safe and secure in our schools; we need further action," this government took action.

I am still not hearing a good explanation or rationale from this government as to why those protections need to be weakened. The most we've heard is the Minister of Education talking about balance, but what she's talking about there is balance between, you know, protections for vulnerable kids and ostensibly the parents' right to know.

I want to highlight – because the Minister of Education has mentioned numerous times: oh, there's FOIP, and that protects privacy. As the Member for Edmonton-Glenora mentioned, it's really important to know, for everybody to understand how privacy legislation really works in this province. Absolutely I believe that parents should be able to know some personal information. They should, and the FOIP Act actually protects that, but the FOIP Act creates the right for a parent to have access to the personal information of their child. In most cases that is absolutely one hundred per cent appropriate.

We know that, of course, there's personal information at schools that all kinds of public bodies keep about children, and of course their parents should have a right to that information. There's no doubt about that. I'm a parent of two children, one who has just entered the school system . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, comments or questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Of course, I've been riveted quite literally all evening with the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud's comments. They've been very, very insightful, very, very thorough, you know, giving us not only a history lesson of how we even got here but some of the background as to why those decisions were made. I know that the member was probably getting very close to wrapping up. I think that we need to hear those comments because we all need to be able to make a very informed decision in this House, and that information is crucial. I hope that she would continue to share that.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Decore. I'm pleased to continue my comments.

I was speaking about the balance of privacy and that I believe, of course, as a parent that I should have access to my children's personal information. Nothing in Bill 24 or in the School Act prevents that from happening. The only thing it said is that principals should be limited in the information that they share of the fact that a GSA has been established in the school. It does not prevent a teacher or school administrator, when a child is in need of support, is in need of services, from involving the parent. Nothing about that does that. The fallacy about the argument is that somehow the fact that a child has joined a GSA is personal information that a parent requires to know.

No. What they might need to know is that a child might be struggling with some mental health issues. What they might need to know is that their child is struggling in school, that the child is being bullied, that the child is being affected. That's information that nothing in Bill 24 or in the School Act provisions would prevent a teacher, a responsible, professional teacher, which all of our educators are, from actually speaking out and providing the supports and contacting a parent and saying: we believe your child is in need of supports. What this says is that it's not necessary to convey to parents that their child has joined a GSA because that's actually not in and of itself personal information that's sharing anything significant. What it is is a tactic that's being used to scare kids from joining GSAs.

I want to advocate again. I'm a mother, as many people in this House are parents. We want what's best for our kids. We want to know that if our child is in need of support, in need of help, that we will be notified. I'm married to a teacher. I have teachers in my family and my friends group. I've spoken to many teachers. They are professionals. Their job is not – they would not notify a parent about membership in a GSA because that in and of itself is not the important information. What they need to know is if their child is in need of supports and in need of help. That's what they will do. They're professionals.

When I spoke to a teacher with Edmonton Catholic schools this past weekend, she said: I don't see how in any way Bill 24 hampers me from doing my job. What it does is it just provides those children a means of security and safety to know that if they want to seek supports from a peer support group – because that's what we're talking about. GSAs are kids coming together to support each other. She said: "That's a support system that they're seeking out, and I want to encourage them to do that, but if a child is in need of help, I will absolutely – I'm bound by a code of conduct. I'm bound by professional standards, and we are bound by laws. We are bound by laws, as anybody who works with children is, to notify if a child is in need of help."

But the FOIP provisions, as they currently are, give a right of access to personal information. That is not an answer to the question of protecting kids who are trying to join GSAs. To say that we've got privacy legislation: that's true, but that's not the point. The point is that these kids need to be able to seek out these support groups in safety and security. If they choose to come out to their parents, if they choose to come out to their peers, if they choose to come out to school administrators, that is their choice. Nothing will prevent these kids from getting the support they need from their teachers, from their counsellors, from their parents. I feel it is a disregard and a disrespect for the professional standards of teachers and school administrators to think that they don't know or they won't step forward and talk to a parent when a child is in need, because that's what they do every day.

You know, I come back to – we can talk about the Education Act and what it is. I can go on ad nauseam about all the detailed provisions, but at the end of the day we know that the sole intent for proclaiming the Education Act is to roll back GSAs. If that wasn't the case, the government wouldn't be doing it, because they're taking a number of provisions from the School Act that the NDP passed. This is not a partisan issue because they certainly liked some of the provisions that the NDP government brought in, protections that they brought in in the School Act, but this is the one that they won't. They're going to need to answer for why because if they are true about their commitment to protecting vulnerable kids, to GSA protections, there's no reason why they wouldn't keep the provisions that are in the School Act.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 9

Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board is rising to debate.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move second reading on Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act.

Bill 9 will postpone wage reopen arbitration hearings until after October 31, 2019. This will mean a postponement of hearings that have already begun as well as the temporary delay of hearings that are scheduled for early this fall. The legislation would affect 24 public-sector collective agreements. Mr. Speaker, we're simply asking for more time to consider Alberta's economic situation and make informed decisions. Public-sector workers make lives better for Albertans every day, and we want to be clear to all of those affected that we have not yet made any decisions regarding a future position.

Mr. Speaker, public-sector compensation is the largest government expenditure making up over half of the government's operating expenses. It would be fiscally irresponsible to have these discussions and make decisions without having the full picture of the province's economic situation. It would also be irresponsible and unfair to public-sector workers if we came to the table without being able to make informed decisions. Government needs time to consider our position and to review recommendations from the MacKinnon panel.

Mr. Speaker, I also think it's important to bring into context the time pressures we've been working under. Prior to the introduction of this bill we scheduled a number of face-to-face meetings and phone calls with employers and unions to explain our situation. The groups were also asked for written submissions so that everyone could adequately articulate their concerns. After receiving this feedback and considering our options, we decided that legislation was needed as time is needed to consider the impacts of our economic situation.

This legislation must be passed expeditiously in order to ensure that we, in fact, are able to defer public-sector wage arbitration processes that are currently in play. Mr. Speaker, we have committed to balancing the budget by 2022-23. We're committed to working in good faith in our arbitration discussions. We just need time to better understand our economic situation and plan a path forward. Let me be clear. This legislation is not a removal of right; it is simply a postponement of process.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods is rising for debate.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to Bill 9 at second reading. I'm afraid that the Minister of Finance, who has moved this, may not get this legislation passed as expeditiously as he referred to in his speech because he seems to not understand how unprecedented and insulting this piece of legislation is to our public servants. The risky path that he is setting our province on by disrespecting the workers of our province not only by not participating in good-faith bargaining – we will have a chat about what good-faith bargaining means – but by claiming that he consulted with the workers involved prior to bringing in this legislation when what happened can only be described as threatening letters and some meetings with members of the public service and not the minister himself. The government did not make adequate attempts to even consider bargaining in good faith with our public-sector unions.

In the end, we now have this bill, which is breaking the law. It is breaking contracts. It is breaking the collective bargaining process, something that is constitutionally protected, something that we already know, should this bill be passed and then proclaimed, will immediately be challenged in the courts. We had several members of our labour organizations here upon introduction for first reading, and they said as much to the media as they were in our rotunda. Anyone who was in the building probably noticed them there. Mr. Speaker, you yourself may have heard either directly or indirectly an earful about the gathering in the rotunda, which is just the start of the reaction that we will hear from Albertans should this continue and proceed.

This is an abuse of power and an assault on front-line workers, many of whom have taken zeros for years, many of whom spend their working lives supporting Alberta by delivering the services that we all rely on and by doing a high-quality job. Now this government won't even sit down to negotiate with them. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not a labour relations expert, but I have learned a few things about this. I certainly would like to share my perspective from what I've learned, having had many, many conversations and consultations with both the employer side and the worker side of the labour relations sphere. It can be boiled down very simply to say that collective bargaining and our labour relations system that we have today have developed from a very real need for systems and processes to balance out the difficulty that can arise when there are disagreements on how things proceed.

We have here a group of people who want to be employed, who want to provide a service, and we have a group of people who need workers to provide their services. Workers need employers; employers need workers. Seems like everyone should just be able to get along, but that's not what's happened historically. We just had the 100-year anniversary of the Winnipeg strikes, a key pivotal moment in Canadian history and one that impacted other provinces. In fact, Alberta has stories to tell about how we participated and supported workers 100 years ago. The system of labour relations that we have today has been developed over decades of finding ways to balance the needs of employers and the needs of workers and respecting the fact that both have power. They use and exercise that power in very different ways, but I can tell you that one of the ways that workers can exercise power is through withdrawing their labour, through striking. When workers feel disrespected, when workers feel that they do not have a voice, those types of decisions and actions are what start to happen. All workers want is to be respected for the hard work that they do each and every day on behalf of Albertans. This early move from a very new government taking action – even during the height of labour disputes and discord in the '90s Premier Klein never broke contracts, never reached in this way – is shocking. Workers should not have a government that is using legislation to delay their negotiated Supreme Court protected rights.

Now, how did we get to the point where arbitration was already beginning? I appreciate that the Minister of Finance recognized that this is directly impacting many groups of workers who were actively in the process of working with the government. This was a solution that was achieved through mediation, by sitting down with workers and working with them to develop a path forward. So it's very disrespectful to tear that up and throw that away and introduce legislation as this government has done. It can lead, as I've already mentioned, to labour unrest, compromised services, and more costly settlements. In fact, many governments that have tried to attack workers in similar ways have found that it has actually cost the government more money in the long run. I'm certain that I and my colleagues will be talking a little bit more about the history of collective bargaining in this province. Having a government that is using the law to abuse their power and to do this to workers is unfortunate, shocking, but not wholly unexpected given the platform that this government did run on.

I know that the workers that are being attacked and are feeling attacked right now will not take it lying down – they are upset; they are angry – after having worked with a government that treated workers with respect, bargained with them fairly, talked to them about the fiscal challenges in the province, and worked with them to find solutions, which I would suggest is a good-faith way of approaching bargaining and something I would recommend to this government.

Now, one of the narratives that is developing through all of the pieces of legislation that this government is bringing forward – Bill 2, Bill 9 – is that they are picking the pockets of workers, going after overtime, stat holiday pay, collective agreements. At the same time we have Bill 3, which was a very big tax giveaway to corporations. We have a government that has given itself a $4.5 billion hole in its budget, one that, as we discussed thoroughly during our Bill 3 debate, does not begin to even remotely pay off in the form of higher tax revenues or other benefits for the first two years, putting themselves in a situation where now workers are worried that the government is going to try to balance the budget on workers' backs, workers who have done nothing but deliver high-quality public services to this province day in and day out: by being sheriffs, who protect this building; by being firefighters, who are fighting fires right now; by being nurses, who are caring for the sick; by being anyone within the public service, the drafters who are drafting all the ridiculous legislation that's coming in. We appreciate them, too, all of the workers.

Making sure that they are protected is incredibly important, so I will be standing in opposition to the introduction of Bill 9 and speaking to stand up for the workers of this province because this is an egregious act against them and really spits in the face of the collective bargaining process, that agreement, that negotiated partnership. We recognize the fact that workers need an employer, an employer needs workers, but we need to balance how we negotiate, and that's the collective bargaining process.

Now, I need to speak about another piece of Bill 9 that is very concerning. In his introductory remarks the hon. minister made clear an intention, the intention to simply delay to get a handle on the finances and then proceed. What he didn't say is that this bill also includes section 5(c), that gives the government the power to write regulations for anything within the intent of this act. Now, these are broad and sweeping powers: "respecting any other matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable for carrying out the intent of this Act." Well, what is the intent of this act? The intent of any act can be seen as defined in the preamble. When we look to the preamble we see:

Whereas the Government of Alberta is committed to balancing its budget by the 2022-2023 fiscal year;

Whereas public sector compensation is the largest government expenditure, constituting over half of the Government of Alberta's operating expense.

Just with those two sections, Mr. Speaker, it's clear to me that the case could be made that regulations in keeping with the intent of this act could be wage rollbacks, could be freezes, could be interfering even more with the collective bargaining process rather than just delaying. Why, if this is so wholesome and so simple as to delay, has the government seen fit to include vast regulation-making powers limited only by the intent of the act, and the intent of the act is public-sector workers cost too much? I'm concerned. Public-sector workers watching this debate are concerned. It's clear that this government is attacking workers.

Yes, the government is saying: "Thank you, public servants. We appreciate your hard work." They're saying those words. The Minister of Finance has said in good faith they are doing this. He's used the term "good faith" over and over and over, but I would suggest to you that he does not understand what good-faith bargaining would look like or what it should mean in this context given the crowd of angry workers in the rotunda who were chanting when this bill got introduced. This is not the normal way to do things. This is breaking the law. This is going against contracts. If the government broke contracts with businesses, well, that wouldn't be right. But breaking contracts with workers: it must be done. It doesn't have to be done, Mr. Speaker.

We need to reject these types of tactics from our government because it sends a terrible message to valuable public servants. It's not right, and we already know that we're getting very strong reactions from workers. People are tuning in because this isn't how it's supposed to work. Everyone is supposed to come to the table. We are all Albertans. We all are working for Alberta's success, each playing our own roles. Together we can get there, but attacking one another is not about it. Some of the leaders who came out referred to this as an egregious attack on workers' rights and legally binding collective agreements. They called it authoritarian, ideological, and something that would create labour unrest. They said very clearly that all Albertans should be concerned when a new government uses the power and authority of the state to crush basic rights.

In case someone missed it, I want to make it very, very clear that the Supreme Court through multiple rulings has protected the right to collectively bargain. This is not a little thing. This is a big thing. That right to collectively bargain and that right to be treated fairly, the system of labour relations that has grown and evolved over decades, has the goal of having labour peace, having strong delivery of services. We do not want disrespected public-sector workers to feel they need to begin withdrawing services, to feel that they need to start going on wildcat strikes. Mr. Speaker, if you google Alberta wildcat strikes, you'll get lots of articles. Our province has a history of workers withdrawing their services when employers are not treating them reasonably and fairly.

We are now moving into a new potential era of relationship with our public-sector workers, and I worry about the approach this government is taking when we know from four years of history that a government that respects workers and sits down at the bargaining table to bargain fairly and freely can get wonderful, productive conversations out of that process. We were able to create some excellent agreements with our public-sector workers that took into account the financial realities our province was in.

But we also need to take into account the financial realities of public-sector workers. I know I heard at least one person say that there are some workers who've had zeros for six years, no increases. We know inflation hasn't been zero for six years. I'm not going to get into bargaining specifics and estimating what people deserve or what's happening, but I don't think we should go into this assuming that these are all workers who are just in it to get rich, that are in there to make a profit, make a buck. These are people who are dedicated public servants who do important jobs for our province, and this government is angering them. This government is disrespecting them and is disappointing a lot of people.

Again, at the start I said that I am not a labour relations expert. I've never taught a labour relations class. But what I do know is that our province has a history of contentious labour relations when governments have been disrespectful. I know that because, although I was not a member of any caucus at the time, in the fall of 2013, when the Conservative government introduced bills 45 and 46, everybody who was of age probably heard about that. It created a lot of noise. It created a lot of disorder: huge protests outside of the Legislature. In the end, the government needed to back down. They needed to back down because in that time, in that place they were bullying workers.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that several stakeholders have already called this a bullying bill, being used to attack workers and their constitutionally protected right to collectively bargain by tearing up legal contracts and including the clause that allows the government to create regulations "respecting any other matter . . . advisable for carrying out the intent of this Act." The intent of this act makes clear that wage rollbacks and freezes are on the table, especially because it talks about the blue-ribbon panel. The chair of the blue-ribbon panel has been given a very tough job, to only talk about spending reductions, to not talk about anything on the revenue side. The chair of that panel has historically made comments about the possibility of wage rollbacks and, in fact, the recommendations of wage rollbacks to fix the Alberta economy.

With this preamble that we have here in Bill 9, with the vast regulation-making authority granted under section 5(c), you can see where the concern is coming in from our public-sector workers and those who are on the front lines delivering the services.

Now, if there was to be a withdrawal of services, what could that look like? Mr. Speaker, I don't want to contemplate that. We want to have strong, stable public services for all citizens because they are critical, because we rely on them, and because we value the workers who are providing those services. They are our friends and our neighbours. They are our family members. The public service workers in our province deserve to be respected, and that is not what they are getting from this government, and that is not what they are getting from Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act.

When the Minister of Finance stands in this House and talks about how this is simply a deferral, I don't believe that he's being genuine, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone else wishing to join the debate this evening on Bill 9? The hon. Government House Leader is rising to add to the debate.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 49(2) I move that this question be now put. By moving the previous question, we're ensuring the most effective management of House proceedings. With a robust agenda and soon to be eight bills and three motions currently under consideration, it's important we give enough time for members to debate each piece of legislation. This motion allows for over nine hours to the Official Opposition alone just on second reading for a three-page bill that simply defers arbitration by four months, which, I think, is entirely reasonable.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) will be available in just a couple of moments to anyone that has a brief question or comment for the Government House Leader.

As there are a number of new members in the Chamber, I think it would be reasonable to just provide a little bit of guidance from the chair. I'm certain that all of you are following along, but the hon. Government House Leader did make mention of Standing Order 49, which is a standing order which he has just used to put the previous question. What that essentially translates to is that all members of the Assembly will have one opportunity, subsequently or ongoing, to speak to the motion. It does not limit your ability to provide content, be it to the fact that the Government House Leader has just put the question or if you choose to speak to the content of the bill. Should the previous question pass in the affirmative, then we would move as a House immediately to the vote on second reading for Bill 9.

The other thing that I might just note is that "the previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendment of the main [motion]." This would prevent any dilatory amendments from now being moved at second reading.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for brief questions or comments if anyone has any.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, I spoke earlier this evening about this government being shameful. Well, this takes the cake. One member of the Official Opposition spoke, a single member, and this government steps forward to invoke closure. My colleagues spoke earlier this evening of the arrogance of previous governments. Well, the level of arrogance that we are seeing here tonight from this government on a bill by which they are breaking contracts and breaking good faith to force unions back from the table at the barrel of legislation – and on that bill, after a single speaker, they are going to invoke closure and force us back from debate.

This is where we've come to in terms of democracy in our province, Mr. Speaker. This is the level of commitment of this government to democratic debate. This is the level of class and integrity. If the public sector, if public servants at this point weren't already disturbed enough by this bill, they can just take a look at the behaviour of this government here tonight. They can take from this that it's pretty clear what they are going to be looking at in terms of how willing this government is going to be to have legitimate debate, to genuinely sit down at the table and bargain in good faith. I mean, I recognize that this government has a penchant already for this. They like to pick fights: they're setting up their war room, they're preparing to go and waste Albertans' money on a constitutional challenge, and indeed they're inviting yet another by introducing this bill and moving this legislation forward. I suppose that perhaps even their intent tonight was to try to provoke us.

Well, that's fine. We recognize that the government has the power to do this. They have the power to be this petty, to be this cheap if they so choose. We will answer it in kind. We will take the opportunities that we have to stand up and debate this bill. We will take the opportunities to put this before Albertans and let them have the opportunity to judge the character and behaviour of this government. I don't think this sets quite the precedent that they hope, Mr. Speaker. I don't think this is going to be quite the success they seem to think it will be.

As my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods noted, Albertans have a deep-rooted history in standing up to governments that attempt to bully their workers. Indeed, our caucus has a long history of standing up to governments that attempt to bully their way through this Legislature. I would note, Mr. Speaker, that in our time in government, to the best of my recollection, we invoked closure on a single bill, Bill 6. We never moved the previous motion. We never used such a cheap tactic on the opposition.

I recognize that members here may perhaps be getting a bit tired of doing their job. They may be getting a bit tired of listening to the opposition talk and provide our views on these particular bills, but I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I have fond and not-so-fond memories of listening to many of these members who now sit across the aisle do precisely that, with far more disingenuity than I have heard from any of my colleagues on this side of the House. Now this government apparently doesn't have the stomach to actually sit and debate legislation that it brings forward in this House. It is too cowardly to actually engage in direct debate. They need to resort to cheap trickery. They need to resort to shutting down the voices of people who were voted here by Albertans to represent their voice and their perspective.

Mr. Speaker, again, that's their prerogative, and I suppose that if that's the standard they want to set, well, then I imagine that in going forward, in our continuing to work with them, and in our bargaining with them, we'll treat them with as much trust as I imagine most public servants do by the time this bill is done, which is not much. I think we owe it to Albertans to at least have a modicum of respect for how we approach things in this House, how we approach legislation. This government is cowardly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone wishing to debate this evening? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West is rising.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I rise this evening, this morning, to speak on Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act. I've seen a lot in this House, but I've certainly never seen the level of audacity and use and abuse of raw majority power to invoke this sort of closure at this stage of debate on any bill. Certainly, to do this on a bill that's as contentious as this one is just inviting discord and trouble, not just in this House but across the province in general.

More than 180,000 public-sector workers are affected by this potential bill. These are people that include front-line nurses, social workers, teachers, librarians, food inspectors, child mental health therapists, long-term care workers, correctional officers, sheriffs, indeed the guards that are guarding us here this evening. All of these people are under collective bargaining contracts that are legal documents, Mr. Speaker. They are legal documents that have been signed between the government and the workers that provide those services.

To undermine that process by bringing in legislation – and let's not pretend that this is just legislation for pause, as the President of the Treasury Board likes to very not truthfully point out. This is enabling legislation to move through each of the contracts that the nurses and the long-term care workers and teachers and so forth have to honour their work and to run roughshod through each one of those contracts.

We know that the panel that this government chose has a predisposition to an outcome that would cut the wages and benefits of those people that serve us in our public sector here in the province of Alberta. Anyone who would suggest that making a direct attack on those essential services is anything but irresponsible and destructive and contentious and divisive is not reading the writing on the wall.

Here we are with another exclamation put onto that sentence that this government does not bargain in good faith, that it does not trust the essential service workers that we are responsible to through collective bargaining. What just happened here in this Legislature, I think, pretty much can educate the rest of the population on what the true intentions of this government are. This is not a pause, Madam Speaker. It is a direct attack on the collective bargaining process that all of our public service workers here in the province do work through.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that when you do bargain in good faith, you're not just doing it for the wages and for the bottom line and the extra 25 cents an hour. You are bargaining for the good faith of the delivery of those services that we need from each of those 180,000-plus workers to run the province. The public sector is a very important element of what makes this province a great place to live and to work, to make sure that health care is there for you and your family when you need it, to make sure that you have an education for your kids, to make sure that this whole public service, from finance to social services to roads and infrastructure, functions to meet the needs of the population. You're not just negotiating nickels and dimes on wages; you're negotiating for the confidence of the population of this province to make sure that we're getting the services we need to raise our families and to run a just and equitable society.

Undermining all of those basic tenets of the responsibility that we are invested with here in the Legislature is profoundly irresponsible, Madam Speaker. It is profoundly short sighted and, as I say, strikes a discord that will take a great deal of time to hope to resolve. Just by when this was chosen to do so, to evoke closure after two speakers on perhaps one of the most important bills this government will debate, once again is setting a tone for a new government that's only a month old that declares war on the public service. I find that to be underhanded. I find it to be despicable. It is not something that will go unchallenged by any means.

You can't underdescribe what exactly the Bill 9 does do because it doesn't just say, "Okay; we're going to put a pause until we get a blue-ribbon panel result" and all of those kinds of things. It provides enabling legislation to wipe clean all of the contracts that all of our public service have and are currently due for negotiation. It undermines the process of negotiating those things. Some people say: well, that's just the cost of doing business, and we have to get our finances in order. These are people who actually provide the medical services that you need for your family – ambulances, EMS, firefighters, environment, parks and wildlife people – literally the largest employer in the province of Alberta. The services that they provide and the cost of that is not just a cost on a balance sheet. It's not just: oh, we can move a few numbers over from the red to the black and everything is put right.

I'm getting a sense of what this government is up to now. The last time something like this happened here in the province of Alberta, it took us a generation to recover, if we ever did, in regard to education and class size and building schools. I had to build 244 schools in the last four years because you know what? The last time the government chose to try to attack the public service through austerity, they didn't build schools. They didn't build hospitals. They didn't build the roads. We ended up with a generational deficit of capital investment, and that's just capital investment. You have to have the people that actually build those things and populate those schools and provide those long-term care services. The list goes on and on and on.

So if people thought, "Oh, well; let's always think of the best," you know, I think that tonight we got a strong dose of preparing for the worst, expecting the best from this new government but then with solemn preparation for the worst, of which we can see the first salvo being fired here tonight by invoking closure on this important bill.

There are a lot of contracts that are up, for sure. You know, over the last four years when you're dealing with public service workers, they know that there's a shortage of money. They know that there's a recession on. It's not like you live in a bubble. Their wives and husbands, sisters and brothers working in oil and gas and so forth saw the economic recession due to a downturn in the price of energy, and they really negotiated responsibly. It was tough but fair negotiations that we invoked and that we engaged in over the last four years as government, and we did so in partnership with the good faith of sitting at a table as equals and looking each other in the eye and saying: okay; this is what we've got to do for the sake of the public good and for the sake of the integrity of the services which we are responsible to deliver for the people of Alberta.

When you undermine that level of good faith, Madam Speaker, that's when you really are showing your true colours. That's what we're seeing here tonight – right? – not sitting equally at a table, not looking each other in the eye and looking for what's best but, rather, for a short-sighted attack, I would dare say for ideological reasons, to demonstrate power and raw aggression towards the public service. I know. I was a teacher for 20 years in this province. I know very well what the Conservative government did in 1993 to undermine that profession, to undermine the integrity of class size, of teaching, and so forth, and it was a hard blow. It was part of the reason that I ended up where I am here today, making a choice as a teacher to become more politically active, because I saw that the attack on education, on health care, on my children's education – they were very small elementary students at the time – and for all of the students whom I was responsible for as a teacher was compromised by an ideological attack on the public service. I fear we're seeing the dark clouds forming again in a similar vein.

When we take responsibility to represent each of our individual constituencies and collectively the entire province, we must take that responsibility with a solemn oath to serve and to ensure that we provide the services that our people need regardless. You have to make adjustments for economic circumstances, but the basic investment that you make cannot be compromised.

When we formed government in 2015, at the beginning of the worst economic crisis around energy that we've seen in a generation, we chose to make a choice. Do we double down on the job losses, on the trouble that was associated with that economic recession, or do we make sure that we are still making investments in our kids, investments in education, investments in infrastructure that can provide for a growing population and can see us through an economic downturn? I think it was a difficult decision, but we made that difficult decision to ensure that we provided, for example, the education that our children needed. We didn't compromise that based on the price of oil and energy that happened to be trading on the world stage. I was proud of that decision. It wasn't easy to do. We made sacrifices in other areas to make sure that that whole new generation of seven-year-olds and six-year-olds and five-year-olds who were showing up in our public schools were getting that education that they needed, and we would find a way to make it happen.

You can dig deep and find a way for it to happen. You can dig deep and make innovative solutions, and the first place you look for those innovative solutions to try to solve the problem during an economic downturn is with the partnerships that you have with the public service. You don't go to the table with all guns drawn and say: okay; look, we're going to legislate your wages and your services now. You go there and ask for solutions together with those people. If you do it with aggression, if you do it through legislation, then you are only making the situation worse, quite frankly. You know, fair warning. That's just the way things can unfold if we don't try to look for a more co-operative, collaborative solution to ensuring that our public services are met and that we're meeting the responsibilities as a government.

With that, Madam Speaker, certainly, there are lots of things that we need to talk about in regard to Bill 9. I think that a lot of people are going to wake up in the morning and realize that the strength that they have to ensure the integrity of the services to which they are responsible like teaching, nurses, law enforcement, and so forth, the integrity of the responsibilities to each of those teachers, nurses, police officers, and so forth depends on them to stand together in solidarity to make sure they fight for what's right.

A contract isn't just wages on a paper as well; it's working conditions, and when you talk about working conditions, you talk about the conditions of the people you are serving as well. Working conditions means having proper staffing levels in the hospital for the patients as well as the nurses. It's to make sure that you have enough support staff and teachers and custodial staff in a school to ensure that the working conditions for those children are met and the learning conditions for those children are met as well. So it's not just about dollars in people's pockets, as I'm sure this government will be tempted to do – right? – but, rather, it's around the integrity of those essential services for which we all depend on.

So think hard about it. Think hard about where you stand in regard to these things. I know that each of the individuals around us in this Legislature must be thinking hard. I'm thinking hard right now. It was a surprise and a shock to see this government invoke closure right from the beginning on a very important bill that reflects the future of where we're going as a province here and where this new government is going, too. It sends a bad message, but worse than that, it'll send confusion and fear as well, which I don't think anybody deserves in this province, especially after everybody worked so hard over the last four years to come out of this economic downturn.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for his comments. I can't help but reflect on the fact that I think he is either the longest or second-longest serving member.

Mr. Eggen: Second.

Ms Hoffman: Second-longest serving member of this Assembly right now. I imagine he can probably count on his hands the number of times he's had to deal with closure because it is something that happens very rarely in this place, very rarely in this place, I'd say, for a few reasons. The number one reason is that we all were elected to make decisions and to debate and to engage in thorough representation of our constituents. By moving closure, the House leader is telling all the members of this Assembly that, you know, the voices of the entire Assembly don't matter. I imagine he's probably said to some of his colleagues, maybe all of his colleagues, you know, to just sit in there, keep your head down, vote this through, and that this is what people want.

Well, I doubt many people heard on the doorsteps, Madam Speaker, "I want you to stymie debate. I want you to end debate. I want you to amend the standing orders so that you can abstain. I want you to do all of these things" that I think most people in this Chamber would probably say are an affront to democracy, an affront to having respectful discourse in this place where all voices matter. Not just the Government House Leader's voice matters. All voices matter in this place because all of us were elected to represent our constituents and have our voices heard.

So I'm hoping my hon. colleague the Member for Edmonton-North West would elaborate a little bit on the rarity of closure as well as why he might believe that the Government House Leader has brought it in tonight and how he expects people might respond in the morning when they learn this news.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank very much. Yeah, I mean, I certainly have seen closure being invoked in the past, but usually during the course of the process, almost always, it's after the government is going through some levels of debate, and it feels like there's an impasse somehow. But that's completely logically and physically impossible here because we just had Bill 9 brought forward, with the Treasury Board minister and then the one critic, and then closure, boom, dropped right in. So there's no testing for the tone or the weather in the House as to whether there's going to be productive debate or if it's just going to be stalling.

Not to make excuses for when I did see Conservative governments use it, but, you know, they saw that the legislation maybe was spinning its wheels, and they've got to move it on because maybe there's an imminent problem if that legislation doesn't pass and so forth, right? But here we are after about – I don't know – maybe 15 minutes of debate or 20 minutes of debate, and, boom, they drop it like a lead balloon on top of this democratic Chamber. Again, sending a message and a tone with that, besides the actual legislation, which I think is derivative and not productive, is just, like, layering on this sense of aggression – right? – and definitely not respecting the workers that this represents, more than 180,000 individuals, but also not respecting this Chamber and the democratic institution which it serves.

Yeah. Thank you for asking me about that, because that's usually the way it goes. Bringing it in straight away – you know, I'm not going to try to get inside the heads of the members opposite because that could be a scary place to be, right? – I think demonstrates fear, quite frankly, fear and a very thin skin, fear of the strength and the capacity of one's own caucus in government to actually bring through something like this in a reasonable manner; rather, just drop in closure, watch the debate happen in the middle of the night, and batten down the hatches. I think that's kind of the overriding message that's being sent here.

Quite frankly, I am a little bit worried about that because when people do hear about this in the morning, they are going to ask a lot of questions. We certainly will use our platform here in the Legislature to ask those questions for them as well. You know, democracy is a funny thing. You can't just depend on the numbers that come out of any given election. Rather, it's a dynamic, living thing that reflects the performance of a government every step of the way, and if you don't perform, you will lose.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other speakers? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate you recognizing me in the wee hours of the evening here while we, I guess, very briefly now, start to debate Bill 9. I must say that I guess I shouldn't be surprised by invoking closure here. There's been a very clear – right from the outset the Premier said: well, we just want to blast forward with lightning speed; we want to limit opposition. Well, I guess this is you guys limiting opposition. It should be interesting to see what things are like in the morning, when people find out that the opposition that they've brought to this House to debate bills, to propose amendments, things like that, has been taken away from them.

Maybe we should probably have, for those folks that may play this back later on so they understand what happened, a little bit of history, possibly, about this government. To bring a bill like this forward and then close debate after one speaker: if I may borrow a quick phrase from the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs – trigger warning: I'm about to say the word “union” – this is union busting at its finest, Madam Speaker. We've seen members of this current government, when they were in opposition, taking runs at trying to limit, make life harder for, stop, whatever the case may be, unions. It started with such things as, if you remember, the debate about the Rand formula. I mean, gosh, I even heard heckles from the other side: well, the Rand formula; that's never really been settled. You know, it's Chief Justice Rand. So that one was kind of settled. All the different names that I've heard being flung across the House: “big union bosses” and “cronies” and “thugs” and some other very interesting descriptions of unions.

I wonder what kind of descriptions might be coming out of this because, as I said, this is, very, very clearly, union busting, all under the guise of wanting to review Alberta's finances. The problem with that statement, Madam Speaker, is that the Minister of Treasury Board forgot – I can only guess – to give a mandate to this special blue-ribbon panel to not only check about the expenses, but maybe they should have checked about the finances, too. It would only seem to make sense. It would be prudent, fiscally prudent. I figured that word would maybe resonate a little bit more with some of the members on the other side, but I guess not. We're too focused on trying to ram an agenda down over 180,000 people's throats. You know, one minute we're praising them for this job that we so dearly love them doing, and the next minute it's, like: it's going to be our way or the highway. Unbelievable.

The Member for Edmonton-North West was talking about how a move like this is unprecedented; my fear is that we are now about to see more of these unprecedented moves in an attempt to limit or even silence opposition, to be able to move at lightning speed so that we can get our agenda passed, which a big majority of Albertans voted for. Well, it's funny because if you start to actually look at some of the numbers on how that breaks down – you know, kudos: it's a very impressive number – a little over 1.04 million Albertans definitely voted for the UCP. The problem is that as of January 1, 2019, there were 4.345 million voters in this province who didn't vote for you, okay? Now, I know you always love to throw that number around, 55 per cent, 56 per cent. Actually, out of the entire, total population of those that either didn't vote or didn't vote for you, that's only less than a quarter.

And here you are invoking closure after one speaker and making them accept legislation. Quite honestly, I don't know if it's reckless, disrespectful, or just that you haven't even thought this through. When I hear words, Madam Speaker, like “good-faith bargaining,” I can tell you right now that this does not come under the dictionary explanation of good-faith bargaining.

Mr. Nielsen: Probably it would come under bad-faith bargaining.

I've seen a few of those little manoeuvres in my – here comes that trigger word again, “union”; again, kudos to the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for providing that. In my union world I've seen these kinds of things, and it usually results in a lot of workers being really angry because they showed up to the table actually trying to bargain. You want to slow down the process: why didn't you just go to the bargaining table and ask? Pretty simple.

But no. Here we are at 20 to 1 in the morning on a beautiful Monday evening, and after one speaker we're going to shut it down. I don't know if I would necessarily want to be watching your social media feeds come early this morning because I have a feeling they're going to blow up. I wouldn't be surprised if we ended up seeing some more fine, hard-working Albertans come to this Legislature and let us know what their feelings are about this. I'm going to take a wild guess that it's not going to be very favourable because, rightfully so, they're going to start to wonder: what's next? We're already seeing language that's available on how we can roll back their wages without so much as even saying: guess what's coming? It's just going to happen. Very, very dangerous, unprecedented movements being made by this government, Madam Speaker.

I seem to remember getting lectured at length about the fiasco, supposedly, that we created with Bill 6. Well, heads up, folks. You might be facing your own on this one, yet all you had to do was go to the bargaining table, say: "Hey, this is our situation. What can you do to help us out?" You bargain it out. That's good-faith bargaining. This is bad-faith bargaining at its finest – at its finest – and it usually results in a whole lot of labour unrest. There are a lot of Albertans that are counting on services to be provided by these hard-working public-sector workers, and this is the way we're going to thank them, this is the way we're going to commend them for all their hard work? Absolutely unbelievable.

As you can imagine, Madam Speaker, I will most definitely not be supporting this in any way, shape, or form. I'm going to have a very, very hard time going back to my constituents and explaining to them how this piece of legislation has been ramrodded through. I believe I've heard that term several times in the last Legislature, too, around some of the things that we were doing. But as the Member for Edmonton-North West had said, even on some of the contentious ones we at least had some debate around it, not a whole whopping – what was it? – 10 minutes, 15 minutes, and already we're hitting the ejection button here.

I think this government will be placing itself in a very, very difficult position going forward here. I would not be surprised. I guess maybe the labour minister can bring in all kinds of just quick little bits of red tape to try to smooth things out here. I don't know. Maybe we can just ramrod some more legislation if people go on strike: hey, let's just order them back. Why not? It's not a big deal.

Mr. Carson: Don't give them any ideas.

Mr. Nielsen: I probably shouldn't give them any ideas, should I? Yeah. That's probably some good advice.

Madam Speaker, I would very highly suggest to the members in the House here right now that you reconsider this position very, very seriously. You want things to move smoothly in this government. You want this province to prosper. I can tell you right now that this is not the way to go about it. This is going to come back to bite you. But I guess that at the end of the day, when this debate is over, all I'll really be able to say is: I told you so.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. Are there members with comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has expressed, I think, quite an emotive reaction, as I did just previously, not expecting this sort of heavy-handed use of parliamentary procedure to invoke closure on a debate that just started.

You know, still thinking about that, I know that the Member for Edmonton-Decore has watched labour action over time, and I was just curious if he could perhaps think back to a good example of using a bargaining table to develop constructive contracts and perhaps a bad example of collective bargaining that didn't turn out so good.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank the Member for Edmonton-North West for the question. Well, one of the very first things that comes to mind around the bad legislation: some will remember back to when the former PC government introduced bills 45 and 46, which resulted in a wildcat strike over at the remand centre. For members to get to such a point where they feel they have to, you know, break the rules around how strikes are supposed to be conducted, that's getting very, very serious. My concern is that we might be heading down the same path here. You know, that was probably a very, very easy question to answer around what not to do.

I've seen some very good examples of what to do, which can result in very favourable ways to go here. Now, it didn't start off so well, but before I was an MLA, my own union, UFCW, tried to talk with one of the large grocery stores. They ended up going out on strike for three days, at which point the company realized: maybe we were off base; let's try to work this out. In the past many, many times we've seen the UFCW go out on strike, and they've lasted very significant amounts of time. In this case, because the company came back and said, "Okay; look, we made a mistake; we didn't do things right," they managed to shorten that. After only three days they had an agreement, they were back on track, and people were getting their services: going to the grocery store, being able to get greeted by a very friendly face.

I'm a little concerned that what we might start to see is some of our public-sector workers going to deal with members of the public with this looming over them, and it's going to affect the service that members of the public are going to get. Of course, that's always going to end up snowballing because when people do get that sort of bad customer experience, they usually end up going out and telling a whole bunch of people versus, of course, that when they get a good experience, they maybe tell one or two.

I'm very concerned that we're starting to repeat history here a little bit around, you know, bills 45 and 46, possibly causing wildcat strikes here. Again, if somebody is getting to that point, where they're willing to take those risks, you have to step back for a second and go: "Okay. Whoa. How is it that we're getting to this point?" You can't just point at them and say: "It's all your fault. It's all you. Everything is on you." You might have to point back and go . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other speakers to the bill? Hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre, I believe you've already spoken to . . .

Mr. Shepherd: No. Not since the question was put, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: All right. The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This government can play tricks, but they will not silence me. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak after some cowardly actions by this government, who apparently don't have the guts to actually stand and debate this bill, much as they didn't have the guts to actually put this in their platform or discuss this in any way with Albertans or be in any way open and honest about the fact that they intended to immediately, on becoming government, come into this House and break contracts with public-sector workers, to make that assault on constitutional rights for workers in the province of Alberta. They wanted to hide it then, and they want to hide it now, so we will sit here, approaching 1 a.m., and we will have this debate, which I see all members of the government are engaged in with great interest.

You know, Madam Speaker, we've been down this road before. This is a familiar story here in the province of Alberta. Time and time again Conservative governments have decided that their way forward, their way to fiscal balance is to attack public-sector workers in the province of Alberta, to try to make villains out of the unions that represent them, to try to turn Albertans against each other, to try to make us feel resentful towards those who earn their living as doctors or nurses or teachers, social workers, paramedics, or sheriffs here at the Legislature. That is what we see here again with this bill, which is being brought forward to break collective agreements, to force them back from their legal right to be at the bargaining table until such time as this government feels they've generated sufficient cover, thrown enough flak in the air to begin their plans for wage rollbacks.

As I said, Madam Speaker, we've been down this road before. Indeed, not that long ago, a few weeks ago, I had the opportunity to attend the state of the city address with Edmonton's mayor. Members of this House were there. I see some who were there. You know, the mayor spoke about the history that we have seen in this province before with decisions that have been made by previous Conservative governments. He talked about how back in the '90s Edmonton was gutted. Under Premier Klein, as I mentioned the other day during one of my questions during question period, we saw a direct attack on the public service. We saw drastic cuts that led to the loss of many jobs. And the mayor noted that as a result of that, here in the city of Edmonton we saw our economy hit hard.

Unlike the narrative that Conservative governments and, you know, their friends in particular parts of the media or with particular political organizations like to paint, the fact is that public-sector workers contribute back. The wages they earn go to support local businesses. The wages they earn go to pay for their children's daycare. The wages that they earn they pay taxes on, that go back to support your municipality, to support the provincial government. They are part of the community. They are our friends. They are our neighbours. They are our family.

So when Premier Klein targeted those public-sector workers, we saw those cuts, we saw those layoffs here in Edmonton. We saw a significant chunk of purchasing power that got pulled out of our economy. As a result, we saw a real stagnation here in Edmonton. Indeed, not only did we lose those people from our economy; we lost those people from our province and our city. I remember my own family doctor: in the late '90s he picked up and left. It wasn't worth working in Alberta anymore. Countless nurses, countless other health care workers, teachers, educators did the same.

Frankly, if your employer isn't going to respect you, if they are not going to think that you're worth while, well, then, people, like capital, are mobile. They'll go and they'll find someplace where they will. The impact that had on our city and indeed on much of our province is that we found ourselves with an incredible deficit. So when the boom came back, that being through no action of that particular government but by happenstance of chance – the price of natural gas rose; we had money again – it was: okay; well, now that royalties are up, we can invest back in health care and education. Well, at that point we had skills shortages because so many of the people that had those skills, that were doing those jobs, had left the province. As the mayor noted in his state of the city address, because of that, it cost us 40 to 50 per cent more to rebuild everything that the government had just spent the last few years chopping down.

Now, the mayor went on to say that, you know, although he recognized that that had been the pattern before, he was still willing to work with this government. He figured there were opportunities for collaboration and chances to move forward and do some good work together, and I respect that. But I have to say that when I see a piece of legislation like this, when I see actions like the government's tonight, I have to seriously question what opportunities there are for any form of good-faith bargaining with this government, for genuine collaboration. We saw, with the introduction of this bill, how they approached discussion with the public sector: send a few threatening letters, have a couple of your department staff maybe meet with a couple of people, and then – boom – bring in legislation to force them back from that table. That's what this government considers collaboration. That's what they consider discussion.

At the first opportunity tonight the minister rises, he introduces and opens up the debate for second reading. Our critic for labour has the opportunity to speak, and no sooner is she done than this government invokes closure and says: "Yeah. That's it."

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Hear, hear.

Mr. Shepherd: "Hear, hear," says one of their members. That's his commitment to democracy. Thank you, Member for Calgary-Klein. Glad to know that that's how you feel about democracy in this province. I'm sure your constituents will be proud.

Madam Speaker, another thing I noted when I asked my questions the other day regarding this bill that was being brought forward was that we need the co-operation of our public servants. This government claims that they can take 4 and a half billion dollars out of the budget, that they can go on to make other cuts – they have their blue-ribbon panel determining just where those are going to be – and that somehow they will balance the budget, and they will still be able to improve the delivery of public services. I certainly hope that's the case, Madam Speaker. It is not going to be a pretty scene if they're wrong.

I will say that if they want to achieve that goal, if they want to pull that rabbit out of the hat, they are going to need the co-operation, the goodwill of those workers on the front line, of those people who know the systems, of those people who understand where things can be changed, how we can improve delivery. But so far this government is showing that they have no intention of listening to those people. No. This government knows better, so best to just force everyone back, shut down debate, get rid of discussion. They've got all the answers.

This government likes to claim a lot of things about what it's doing and why, but when it comes down to it, very little of it often seems to be factual. They claim: this is only about a brief pause, just going to take a moment, just need to catch our breath, and then we'll sit down and we'll talk about this real promise. But then they slip in a clause which says, "But just in case, we are going to grant ourselves the opportunity to do anything that we feel we need to do to accomplish our goal," not through legislation, not through debate in this House, because we've clearly seen tonight how much they value that, but simply by regulation.

Again, it seems clear that this government is too cowardly to actually bring their agenda, their true agenda, to Albertans. They're not willing to have that discussion in the light of day. They want to have the opportunity at every turn to do this through the back door, under cover of darkness, with utter disrespect for our public service workers and indeed for those who were elected alongside them to serve as the opposition in this House.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that I've had the opportunity to speak with many people on the front lines already, had the opportunity to post the questions that I posed to the minister online, and I can tell you that workers are not happy: nurses, teachers, paramedics, these folks that we depend on for these incredibly important public services; people, again, who are our friends, our family, our neighbours; for those of you that run businesses, your customers, your clients, your constituents. This is the level of disrespect with which you are treating them. This is the precedent you're setting for how we're going to move forward as a province over the next four years. This is not the way to move our province forward.

During our time in government we had an almost unprecedented era of labour peace. I had great respect for the work, the incredible work, that my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, when she served as Minister of Health, did going forward, sitting down with doctors in this province and negotiating a new payment system that would save us $500 million. She did not have to do that at the barrel of legislation. She didn't have to pull any legislative trickery. She sat down at the table and had actual good-faith bargaining, as we did with every other public-sector union in this province, and now this government is going to take that goodwill and throw it away. They've already begun the process of doing so. It's not the best way to open a relationship, Madam Speaker. This is not the way to find balance in how we deliver our public services. This is not the way to approach democracy in our Legislature.

I know there will be other opportunities to speak to this bill. This will be my only opportunity at second reading thanks again to this government's choice to shut down debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments or questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the hon. member for the comments that he's raised thus far. I really do appreciate him talking about the good faith that we entered into with physicians, actually, not just at the time when we were up for contract negotiations; rather, to the contrary, actually. Contracts were signed under the former Conservative government that were so out of step with the realities of Albertans. What we did is that we sat down, and we showed the books. Lo and behold, we were able to have the physicians come back to the table far earlier than what was required by their collective agreement and renegotiate to have those funds turned back to the people of Alberta to be put to use in other areas. So I appreciate that the member brought that up.

I guess this was exceptional given the history with contract negotiations with physicians and what they asked for in places, that there be fair, good-faith bargaining moving forward, that they always be welcome to the table, that they always have an opportunity to engage in debate, and that they always be given an opportunity to reach an agreement before it be mandated upon them. I can't help but think about the contrast between what they asked for and what this government is pushing on them.

I wanted to say that and certainly welcome any further reflection from my hon. colleague with regard to collective agreements with public services. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate those reflections from my colleague and those comments and those thoughts. Indeed, it troubles me: the low regard in which I have seen so many who profess to be Conservatives hold their public-sector workers in the democratic institutions that are their unions, which serve to protect them for precisely this reason, from the tyranny of government that would choose to make them a scapegoat. It's unfortunate when I hear people talk about public-sector workers and say things like: well, they didn't have to feel the pain the last four years when other people were losing their jobs or having their wages cut. Indeed, they were the people that were helping keep their families going during that time when perhaps their spouse had lost their job. They were the ones that were still patronizing the businesses in their communities. This is not something to begrudge. The work they do and the compensation they receive for it is something to be thankful for. That's something for which we should treat them with respect, at least to have the respect to honour the contracts that have been signed with them. But this government is not choosing to do that.

So, again, the path forward is going to be that much more difficult for all of us, for these workers, for this government. I certainly intend to make this intended path of this government as difficult as possible because the decisions they are making, the direction they are heading is going to harm my constituents. It is going to do real damage to real people, both those who work in the public service and provide those key public services that people depend on and those who depend on those services.

The bill that this government has brought forward, as I said earlier, as much as the actions it has taken tonight, are both cowardly. They are shameful. They are without honour. Members can try to rationalize this, but again this is another thing that they did not run on. This is another thing that they did not campaign on to their constituents, that they did not discuss at the doors, for which they have no elected mandate.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to my colleagues for this exciting, very public debate at 1:10 a.m. Just before the motion for closure was brought in, or the notice of closure because, of course, we don't have an opportunity to even debate whether or not it's appropriate to close – thanks for that standing order – I was looking at the AHS North Zone Twitter and saw that due to wildfires in the La Crête area, residents are being evacuated from the long-term care facility and relocated to other health facilities in Alberta. I wanted to start by saying how those folks are on our minds; the folks that are doing the evacuation and, of course, the folks who are being evacuated. These are some of the folks that will be impacted by the proposal to break the law, the proposal to breach their collective bargaining, but here they are. At the same time, the government is bringing in a motion to limit debate on whether or not they should rightfully be entitled to the collective bargaining process that they already agreed to and, yeah, we're calling them to go above and beyond. I know that there are, I think, just under 100,000 AHS employees alone in this province – that's about the size of Red Deer – working for that one employer that will certainly be impacted by this proposal should it move through.

It seems like the Government House Leader, anyway – I don't know if the whole government – seems dead set to move forward with this, full speed ahead, bringing in closure. Again, I want all members of this House, because it is the entire Assembly that makes these decisions – it's maybe direction from one – all of you were asked to stand and vote at some point, and when you stand and vote, that's on the record, right? That's there for your constituents to call on and say, you know: when it came time to attacking my rights, how did the person that I elected to represent me vote on that issue?

Not to sharpen that point too much, just to reinforce that it's, you know – I think I said this the other day, and I really want to say it again. We will all be asked by people, whether they're our constituents, our bosses, or our friends, or our family: why did you do what you did? It's going to happen. It happens to us all the time, I'm sure. There are one of two answers to that question; it's either I did what I was told, or I did what I thought was right. And there will be times, maybe not yet, maybe so far everything that you were told is what you thought was right, but there are definitely going to be times when that isn't the case, and I will say that there will probably be, seeing the tone that has been set by the Government House Leader, many of them.

It seems like the Government House Leader is intent on running roughshod over this place and making sure he drives through his agenda as aggressively as he sees fit. I don't think that's becoming of a House leader, and I don't think it's becoming of the party that campaigned on doing things differently than its legacy parties. It certainly didn't campaign on building sky palaces and having among the most secretive history of governments in Alberta. I think it's important that I sort of frame it in that way.

I also think of the fact that we've shown over that last four years that you can absolutely have fair and reasonable collective agreements. People say: but our costs are the highest in the country when it comes to staffing. Sure. Yeah. And when did that happen? I'll tell you my experiences of training to be a teacher as well as of an employer of ATA members when I was with the Edmonton public school board. It was the AWE agreement. That was an agreement that was reached I believe it was with Premier Stelmach at the time. I think it was maybe Minister Liepert who sat down and negotiated with teachers: we'll tie your increase to the average weekly earnings. It sounds reasonable, right? If average weekly earnings in Alberta go up, then your pay will go up. It was a collective agreement that they reached.

As a result, teacher pay went up significantly because the price of oil had gone up. While not everyone was seeing the benefits, certainly the average weekly earnings in Alberta were out of step with the rest of the country, so teachers saw a big increase over those years of that agreement. But the government of the day didn't say, "We're going to tear up the agreement," because they knew that they had sat down at the table and they had reached that agreement.

It probably wasn't the best measure to use. They probably should have had something like zeros and a wage reopener, brought to you by the NDP. Everyone says: oh, the NDP is aligned with labour. And a lot of the times we are aligned with working people. But, you know, we certainly didn't write the kinds of agreements that resulted in the kinds of substantial increases that we saw under a former Conservative government. We saw zeros, many zeros, and a wage reopener, which means: we'll come back to the table, and we'll sit down, and we'll talk to you.

Except now, after they take those zeros, the government doesn't want to talk to them. The government brings in a bill that says: "No. We absolutely don't need to fulfill our legal requirements, the law that says that we will sit down and talk to you. We're going to delay that until we get a bunch of reports by somebody who has already said that our wages are out of line. Then, oh, PS: we'll incorporate a clause, a little omnibus clause, that allows us to indeed not even have a negotiated contract. We can set our own conditions, and we can implement them."

That's what we're being asked to do here tonight, colleagues, through you, of course, Mr. Speaker. We're being asked to give, essentially, a blank cheque to the minister of labour or a designate to write whatever collective agreement, which isn't actually a collective agreement if it isn't agreed upon, to dictate the terms of employment to a lot of folks who, frankly, probably voted for you. Some voted for us; some voted for you. And you're being asked to rip up their contract, take away their rights, and bring that in at midnight so that nine hours later, maybe, whether it's today or another day, after only nine hours of debate, with only one speaker having gone previously, it will all be done and hidden away under the darkness of night.

It does not sit well with me, and I don't think it probably sits well with many members. I doubt that many members got up this morning – like, my favourite thing to always say to my team when I was Minister of Health and still in my constituency office to a smaller team but a mighty team is: we're going to get up today, and we're going to do something to make life better for the people we work for. I doubt that when you got up this morning, you thought: I can't wait to bring in closure, end debate, and legislate contracts. I doubt that that was what equated to you as getting up in the morning and doing something to make life better for the people we work for. So that's frustrating.

There are many, many, many Albertans – I mentioned the roughly 100,000 that work for AHS, but this bill, arguably, will impact almost double that, including, of course, many front-line workers, as were mentioned. I know that we have people who were employed in the public service in previous lives who would have definitely been impacted by this.

I'll tell you that when people ask me, "What inspired you to get into politics?" I usually start with the very first inspiration, which was the 5 per cent rollbacks that both of my parents got when they were teachers in the '90s, which I guess means that Ralph Klein helped to inspire me to get into politics. Certainly, if we hadn't have taken both of those rollbacks, neither of them probably would have talked about politics as much at the dinner table, but it definitely personally impacted our family.

When my dad was dying a few years after that, about a week before he died he said: "You know what? It wasn't just our income for those years. It was my pension." Because your pension is based on your five highest income-earning years, and his weren't the last five years. Those weren't his highest wage-earning years. I said: "Yeah. I'm really sorry about that." He said: "I'm not mad for me. I'm mad for your mom because my pension is what's going to pay her bills. Here I am, knowing I'm going to leave." Because there were legislated rollbacks in the '90s, that's what he was thinking about on his deathbed in 2007.

The decisions we make in this place have lasting impacts on families. Certainly, I know that probably many of you are being told to be good cheerleaders. Nobody runs for office to be a cheerleader. You run to be on the field, right? You run to be part of the action. You run to make decisions. You want to carry the ball, and you want to help take Alberta from where we are today to a better place. I remember many maiden speeches talking about that. Sitting in this place being good, quiet soldiers and voting to take away something that is put in law, something that has been negotiated and something the Supreme Court has ruled on, I don't think is leaving this place better than the way we found it. I think it's highly problematic.

I think that with regard to front-line workers, they deserve our respect. I think that you can stand in this place and you can say that we respect them, but when you do stuff like this, when you bring in bills, laws, that impact their ability to provide for their families, I think that that is a new level of honesty, let's say. You can say all the members' statements that you want, but people are going to judge you by what you do as well. They're going to judge you by what they know impacts them in their own personal lives.

We've seen an act to pick your pockets, and I would argue that this is probably another variation on that. Certainly, people took zeros for many years, knowing that it was the right thing to do and that they were in this together with government, that they weren't one set of Albertans that has different rights than another set of Albertans, that we are all Albertans, that we are all going to do our part, and they said: "Yeah. We will take all our zeros, and then we want to sit down at the table again." They didn't say, "Then we want a big increase." They said, "Then we want to sit down at the table," and that's what's being taken away.

I would tell you that if I were sitting down at that table the next time negotiations happened, I would have a very, very, very bad taste in my mouth about what I'd already experienced, and it would impact the tone in which I entered the discussion. You know, fool me once, shame on you; fool me twice, shame on me. If I was planning on entering into these discussions in good faith on the other side of the table and I saw this happen, I would probably be wanting to come to the table in more of an adversarial and aggressive way.

That is a little bit of what I wanted to say about that. I think that, again, when asked, "Why are we doing this?" many people will probably be told to say, "To get our fiscal house in order." I again say to you: when did it get out of order? How did it get out of order? Can you trust the same people who made the mistakes of bringing in AWE to make a decision today about how best to have fair compensation?

I think that all that working people want is to be able to sit down at the table and have a fair and reasonable conversation with their employer. When we talk about minimum wage or when we talk about overtime, the labour minister is very quick to say: well, people can negotiate. They can come in and they can say: "Hey, I know I'm making $15 now. The law will say that I can make $13 later. Would you please consider maybe letting me continue to make $15?" We're saying that it's okay for them to come in and negotiate, but we're saying that it's not okay for the public sector to come in and negotiate? Like, you can't talk out of both sides of your mouth saying different things at the same time. It makes no sense, and that's what this is.

If you say that you want people to come in and negotiate with their employer, then you do that as the employer. You lead by example, and you say: absolutely, we welcome you to the table. And guess what? Sometimes you might get more out of that discussion than you anticipated because the people of this province who elected you are the people who are asking to sit at the table. Shutting them out of that discussion, I think, is really, really disrespectful.

I don't think it's becoming of the responsibilities that we entered into this line of work wanting to do: wanting to get up in the morning and make life better for our bosses – right? – the people of this province; wanting to make life better for the families that are counting on that pension payment; wanting to make life better for folks who know that they don't always have the most glamorous jobs, but they can do them with pride, and they feel respected working for a respected institution. When you disrespect those workers, no matter what lip service you pay, it's going to come back at you, and it's not going to be fun. I certainly wouldn't want to be sitting down at the table to negotiate after something like this got pushed, somebody ran roughshod over the law, over the legally negotiated terms and conditions of those contracts.

I think that this is a betrayal of what the government said that they were going to do when they were campaigning. I think that they said that they were going to be fair and reasonable. I think bringing in a bill like this is not fair. It's not reasonable. It is certainly a way of squeezing power. Really, not just power from the folks that are going to be impacted by this, but it's squeezing power from caucus, to be quite frank. I doubt that a bunch of you went into your first caucus meeting and said: I think we should bring in closure and talk about potentially rolling back public-sector contracts.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Bilous: Seeing the time and the healthy debate that's happened this evening, I move that we adjourn for the evening until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members. Hon. members, the Speaker is on his feet. Hon. members. [interjection] Member for Edmonton-North West, surely we wouldn't be making such inappropriate comments.

Bill 9 Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act (continued)

Mr. Dang: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Dang: Under 13(2), Mr. Speaker, to explain a ruling of the Speaker. I believe the Assembly had just decided to actually adjourn debate on this bill. I'd like to know why the Assembly is allowed to then return immediately. The decision has already been made by the Assembly, and you would not be able to retract the decision of the Assembly without unanimous consent.

The Speaker: I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-South. However, the Speaker didn't make a ruling. The government sets the order in which we are debating, and as such the table has called Bill 9.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has one minute of debate remaining should she choose to continue.

Ms Hoffman: Oh. All sorts of transformational things I'm sure can be said in that one minute. Let me start by saying how much I appreciate the last few seconds there, seeing how the Government House Leader is treating the caucus that's made a decision to adjourn debate on this item.

That being said, I'd like to move that we adjourn debate on this motion since I still seem to have 30 seconds. Can we reconsider that, Mr. Speaker? I think it's probably in order.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 1:29 a.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Speaker's Ruling

Debate on Second Reading

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I might just add a brief Speaker's comment with respect to the procedural activities of the last 20 minutes or so and with respect to the Member for Edmonton-South's question. One of the reasons why we were able to continue debate on Bill 9 without moving to another piece of legislation that would be before the Assembly is that the Assembly considered an additional question in the intervening time period. We had initially adjourned debate, and then we considered the question on adjourning the House. That question was defeated, and as such, it would be reasonable to call Bill 9 again. That is exactly where we find ourselves.

Debate Continued

The Speaker: Is there anyone wishing to debate? The hon. member.

Mr. Dang: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I do see a point of order being called.

Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm seeing all kinds of procedural things that I've never ever seen before. I'm writing a journal, and it's going to be great.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, I think, had some interesting insights in regard to negotiating in good faith, and the key to that – and it's a lesson that I learned as well in the previous four years – is that you move with the presumption of full disclosure and without any presumption besides what is being brought to the table. You know, when negotiating in good faith like that, you can get all kinds of interesting insights on how to improve the quality of the work that's being done in any given workplace, be it a hospital, a long-term care facility, a school, working in almost any part of the public sector. The workers, who know best – they have their ears to the ground and are actually executing the job every day – will have all sorts of high-quality suggestions, that you can even potentially put into a contract, that make life better for everyone who is using a hospital or a school and so forth.

So I just wanted, you know, to perhaps jog the memory of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora about some of those things that you can negotiate for and that we have negotiated for and that have actually improved the service that the workers and the government are responsible for when we enter into these agreements, thus doing your job better as a government and with people feeling happier about the jobs that they're doing and their quality service for the kids or the people that might be in a hospital, for example. If you could perhaps enlighten us as to some of those things that you've seen, I would be grateful.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I'm actually going to start on one that I saw under his leadership because I happen to sit on the public-sector compensation committee. He brought forward a recommendation around the classroom improvement fund. [interjection] What? What a great, brilliant idea: let's create a fund. Teachers sat down and said, "You know, we'd like to create a fund to increase opportunities for things like split classes or increased educational assistant support or increased technology, other things that will improve our classroom working conditions," because teachers' working conditions are kids' learning conditions. That was certainly an example of something that I think was creative. It certainly didn't have a net individual benefit to teachers' pockets, but it definitely did have a benefit to their working conditions and kids' learning conditions. That is one example.

Another one I'll mention: in working with physicians, we developed what used to be RPAP. It was the rural physician action plan, and we expanded it to be the rural health practitioner action plan, expanding the mandate from not just being about one profession. Of course, attracting physicians is great, but if you don't have all the other allied health and nursing supports and complementary health supports, you aren't going to be able to keep those doctors for very long. That was something that we discussed at the table, and we came up with a strategy to expand the mandate for RPAP, and RPAP was certainly willing to pick up that cause and carry it forward with us.

Also, we had negotiations, of course, with nurses, registered nurses as well as LPNs, as well as with exempt hospital staff. Some of the people who are exempt, for example, are the folks who are usually in the basement of hospitals. Medical device reprocessing they call it; they're cleaning the equipment that's used in that hospital to ensure the safety of patients. We saw years ago – it was in Vegreville, actually – where the equipment wasn't maintained, and there ended up being a terrible situation that resulted in putting patients at risk. We, through those conversations with folks that are exempt, made it a priority to invest in helping to bring those medical device reprocessing units, their equipment and their workspaces, up to an appropriate standard. Of course, it was important for patient safety, but it also is important for showing respect and supporting the morale of the people working in those areas as well, certainly areas that you don't always think about in the hospital as being important, but absolutely every member of that team is, and they deserve to have an opportunity to reach an agreement with their employer.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others wishing to speak? I see the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise tonight, or this morning, depending on how you look at it, to talk on Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining bill. I'm just really disappointed at kind of what's been going on in the House tonight. Having the government invoke closure to stop debate on this legislation after one speaker is just one more way that they are coming after front-line workers in the province. Not only are they breaking the law with this legislation, but they're abusing their power, and that's something that we continue to see over and over from this government.

I can speak to it first-hand when we found out through the media that they were stopping the working of the Conversion Therapy Working Group, a decision that had been made. Then when the media reported on this, the minister had said: no; that's not accurate. So, you know, there was some hope that perhaps the government was going to go back on that bad decision and consider the working group. That didn't happen, Mr. Speaker. They made a decision. They didn't consult with people on that decision. They just came forward and said: no; this is what we're doing. Again, this is something that we see this government doing. They make decisions based on what they want to do, without consultation.

Some other things that they've done in the House because they wanted to was all of the standing order changes, Mr. Speaker. They've taken tradition in this Assembly and just disregarded it. Why? Because they could. They have the power, and they're showing us and Albertans that they're going to use it.

When we look at this legislation, it's quite concerning that they are taking this away from the unions, the right to bargain. We've heard from several union leaders, Mr. Speaker, about their feelings on this legislation, and I would just like to share with you some of the things that are being said. We've heard words like "egregious," "disrespectful," "authoritarian," and "the biggest betrayal by government that I have ever seen." It's concerning.

We have leaders in our province who would enter into bargaining in good faith with the hopes that they would be able to sit down and come up with an agreement. Unfortunately, that's not happening, Mr. Speaker. They're using this legislation to break legally binding contracts, and that's simply bargaining in bad faith.

We have over 180,000 workers that this is going to impact. Who are those workers, Mr. Speaker? Front-line nurses, social workers, teachers, librarians, food inspectors, child mental health therapists, long-term care workers, corrections officers, sheriffs, and so many more. The fact that they're bringing back this old Conservative bullying tactic is just so disrespectful to our front-line workers. I'm not sure what the fear is around sitting around a table with a bunch of big, bad social workers or, you know, those terrifying child mental health therapists, long-term care workers, but what they're doing is that they're creating just an unsettling feeling right now in labour.

Our labour leaders are speaking out about their concerns. Gil McGowan, the president of the Alberta Federation of Labour, said: raving mad reviews as public-sector union leaders call Jason Kenney – sorry – and the UCP's Bill 9 one of the most egregious abuses of power by a government ever seen in Alberta's history. Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining bill, will see Alberta break its own laws by overriding 24 collective agreements, representing 180,000 public-sector workers, and delaying wage talks until October 31, 2019. This is not about postponing the process; this is a bully bill. They are using the power of their majority in government to break legally binding contracts. It's unfair, inappropriate, and illegal.

Guy Smith, the president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees – that was my union, Mr. Speaker – says that this is an egregious attack on workers' rights and legally binding collective agreements. This is authoritarian. This is ideological, and it does nothing but create labour unrest. Albertans should be very concerned when a new government uses the power and authority of the state to crush basic rights. That is exactly what's happening with this legislation, and the fact that closure has been invoked and is preventing full debate of this is really concerning.

Heather Smith, the president of the United Nurses of Alberta, says: I'm not terribly surprised, but I'm very, very disappointed; even Ralph Klein in the depths and darkness of the '90s didn't use legislation to reach in and violate workers' contracts; this is incredibly unprecedented and incredibly disappointing; it's the biggest betrayal by a government I have ever seen.

These are words of our leadership in our unions that are representing our workers, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to just go through some of these collective agreements that are being affected, Mr. Speaker, to maybe put a face to some of these workers that they are bringing this heavy hammer down on. I'm not sure if that's going to have an impact on the government or not, but maybe if they can identify who some of these people are that they haven't consulted with, it'll have an impact. I know, members of the government, that some of these people are in your communities.

The Alberta College of Art and Design and AUPE: a collective agreement between the board of governors of the Alberta College of Art and Design and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, local 071/006, July 1, 2017, to June 30, 2020.

Another AUPE and Alberta Health Services, Lamont health care centre, Allen Gray continuing care centre: a collective agreement between the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees – that's auxiliary nursing – and Alberta Health Services and Lamont health care centre and Allen Gray continuing care centre, April 1, 2017, to March 31, 2020.

AUPE again and Alberta Health Services: the collective agreement between Alberta Health Services and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, general support services, April 1, 2017, to March 31, 2020.

HSAA and Alberta Health Services, Covenant Health, Lamont centre: a collective agreement between the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, paramedical professional and technical employees, and the Bethany nursing home of Camrose, Alberta, and the Lamont health care centre and Alberta Health Services, April 1, 2017, to March 31, 2020.

UNA, Alberta Health Services: collective agreement between Alberta Health Services, Covenant Health, Lamont health care centre, the Bethany Group out of Camrose, and the United Nurses of Alberta, April 1, 2017, to March 31, 2020.

2:00

AUPE, Alberta Innovates: collective agreement between Alberta Innovates and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, local 060, October 1, 2017, to September 30, 2020.

Athabasca University, AUPE: collective agreement between the governors of Athabasca University and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees on behalf of local 069, July 1, 2017, to June 30, 2020.

Bow Valley College, Bow Valley College Faculty Association: collective agreement between the board of governors of Bow Valley College and the Bow Valley College Faculty Association, July 1, 2017, to June 30, 2020.

CUPE, a union that I belonged to. It was my very first union, Mr. Speaker, that I was involved with. It was a union that was brought in while I was working in a nonprofit. Unfortunately, we've heard stories in this House before about employers trying to stop unions, and there were definitely some bullying tactics that went on to try and prevent us from bringing the union in. A staff member got fired, actually, for bringing that legislation in. I can say that she went from working as a child support worker to now being a labour law lawyer because of how she was treated by the employer when she tried to bring in a union.

It's just devastating to know that this government is attacking unions. They're doing the same thing that employers do when they feel that there's a threat or they feel that they're doing something they don't want. They just come in, use their power, and try and make workers' lives as miserable and uncomfortable as possible, and that's exactly what's happening right now. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that workers all across this province are feeling really unsettled and just distressed about what's happening right now. But I digress.

I'd like to continue to try and talk about some of the other agreements that are being impacted. The Calgary board of education, CUPE: Calgary board of education agreement between the board of trustees of the Calgary board of education and the Canadian Union of Public Employees, local 040, September 1, 2017, to August 31, 2020.

Fort McMurray Catholic board of education, CUPE: collective agreement between the Fort McMurray Catholic board of education and the Canadian Union of Public Employees, local 2559, September 1, 2017, to August 31, 2020.

AUPE, the government of the province of Alberta, which I was a member of, Mr. Speaker: master agreement between the government of the province of Alberta and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, November 4, 2018, to March 31, 2020.

InnoTech Alberta, AUPE: collective agreement between InnoTech Alberta and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, local 060, October 1, 2017, to September 30, 2020.

Keyano College, Keyano College Faculty Association: collective agreement between the board of governors of Keyano College and the Keyano College Faculty Association, July 1, 2017, to June 30, 2020.

Lethbridge College, AUPE: collective agreement between the board of governors of Lethbridge College and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees on behalf of local 071/001, July 1, 2017, to June 30, 2020.

Olds College, AUPE: collective agreement between the board of governors of Olds College and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, local 071, chapter 002, July 1, 2017, to June 30, 2020.

Southern Alberta Institute of Technology, SAIT Academic Faculty Association: collective agreement between the board of governors of the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology (SAIT) and the SAIT Academic Faculty Association, July 1, 2017, to June 30, 2020.

With that, I move that we adjourn the House. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn lost]

The Speaker: We are on the bill. Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anyone wishing to make a brief comment or question. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora rising.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to say how excited I am for your next instalment of procedural video. I'm sure there will be much to say about the situation here tonight. Of course, one thing could be explaining to Albertans how government brings in closure or calls the previous question or the differences between closure and call the previous question. That certainly would be a stimulating conversation, I'm sure, for a video.

The Speaker: Hon. member, while I appreciate your enthusiasm for the videos, I'm not entirely sure how that particular question or comment is relevant to the matter before the Assembly.

Ms Hoffman: Oh, I'll get there, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much. Certainly, I think understanding and explaining to the general public about some of the procedures that the Government House Leader chose to bring in tonight to try to make sure that this be time limited, of course, and stopping after just one speaker – I appreciate that the speaker for Edmonton-Castle Downs was going through some of the various collective agreements that are set to be impacted by the bad-faith bargaining bill, a bill to run roughshod to break the law. Mr. Speaker, I know that when she was going through it, I was thinking about some of the people I know who studied at ACAD and worked at ACAD. One was in the Minister of Advanced Education's riding, I believe. I remember going to a restaurant and the person who was serving the table talking about how she was a prof at ACAD and was so excited that we were moving it towards university status. So I want to thank the member for bringing up that example. It's interesting that not only is her pay likely going to be impacted by this piece of legislation but could very well be impacted by other pieces of legislation that the government is talking about bringing forward, potentially, around server wages and those types of things.

You know, these are, as the member said, not usually people that you expect a government to be scared to sit down and talk to, right?

This was a very pleasant, fantastic server who taught art by day and served tables by night. She is represented by a bargaining unit that made a deal in good faith to take zeros for many years in return for being able to sit back down at the table, no commitment to there being necessarily an increase but a commitment to sitting back down at the table. What's being proposed here tonight, of course, is to take away her right to fair representation and good-faith bargaining. So very troubling. I want to thank the member for mentioning that one example.

I wonder if there are any other collective agreements. It seems like most of them as well, I want to say, expire in about a year. These are collective agreements that aren't, you know, going on indefinitely throughout the term of this government and into another government. This is the term. Most of them are up in about a year. I wonder if the hon. member could share any other examples and if there are any other trends that she's noticing from going through these collective agreements.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm disappointed that we didn't win that vote. I thought we were close, but we were not. I am delighted, however, to continue to share some of the other collective agreements that are going to be impacted by this legislation, the public sector bad-faith bargaining bill, Bill 9.

I believe that I started to talk about SAIT and their academic faculty association. The collective agreement between the board of governors of the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology, also known as SAIT, and the SAIT Academic Faculty Association: July 1, 2017, to June 30, 2020.

The ATA, Mr. Speaker, which is across the entire province, and the Teachers' Employer Bargaining Association. The central agreement between the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Teachers' Employer Bargaining Association: September 1, 2018, to August 31, 2020.

The University of Calgary and the Faculty Association of the University of Calgary. Collective agreement between the Faculty Association of the University of Calgary and the governors of the University of Calgary: July 1, 2019, to June 20, 2020.

The University of Lethbridge, Mr. Speaker, and the AUPE. Collective agreement between the governors of the University of Lethbridge and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees on behalf of local 53: July 1, 2017, to June 30, 2020.

Mr. Speaker, those are the hard-working Albertans that are going to be impacted. Like I've said and so many other members in the House, that's 180,000 workers – front-line nurses, social workers, teachers, librarians – that are all going to be impacted. I hope that we do not support this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I do share the opinion of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora when she highlighted the fact that there are lots of procedural activities that have taken place here, and perhaps a video by the Speaker identifying the tools that the government has as well as maybe some that the opposition has also used this evening or procedural tools at everyone's disposal for each of their advantage.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is rising.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is my first time being in the House when closure has been invoked, and I have to admit – it's now been about two and a half hours since that took place – as I imagine was the intent behind the action by the Government House Leader, that I was quite shocked. I was quite surprised.

I remember having a conversation with a constituent recently where they asked me about debates and filibustering and how it works, and I said: oh, you know, there's always the option for a government to shut down debate by invoking closure, but that rarely happens because that is the antithesis of the democratic process. I actually just had that conversation, and now, well, I guess we're seeing how the next four years are going to look because this government brought in closure after hearing one member of the opposition caucus speak in opposition to this bill.

I admit to having – like many of the members in this House, I'm a new member, and I'm learning the ropes, and I'm watching what's going on. I'm relying on my colleagues who are more experienced and are veterans, but I think I'm learning. I came in and I thought: I have a pretty good understanding of how the Legislature works. I've had the privilege of working in public service. I've had the privilege of supporting, working on bills that have gone through this House. I worked in a constituency office before. I've read Hansard. By all accounts I'm a pretty knowledgeable person about the process of what happens in this Legislature, yet I have been completely astounded by what I can only describe as an absolute contempt for the democratic process from this government. From the beginning I kept thinking: "Well, this is just one thing. This is just one thing. This is just one thing." But a pattern is clearly established.

More than anything, when I came in here two and a half hours ago, when closure was invoked by this government, I sat here and I felt like I was looking at the members on the opposite side, wondering if they felt the same shock that I did. Maybe they knew it was coming; maybe they didn't. But at the end of the day, this is setting a tone once again about the rights and privileges that we as members in this House have. We have already seen those rights as members be chipped away. We no longer get to introduce our families in the House. Private members' bills automatically get diverted to a committee first.

We've seen the opportunity – well, frankly, I haven't heard from most of my colleagues on the other side of the House. They certainly don't feel compelled to speak to the legislation that's been introduced by their government. They don't stand up and debate. We've seen many occasions where many members on the other side who sit in the cabinet, on the front bench, don't answer the questions they're asked. Other people answer them for them. Frankly, I don't really know a lot about a lot of the members on the other side because we don't hear them speak very much, and now we're finding out that this government is actually, clearly invoking closure and thinking that, I guess, maybe the very act of democratic debate is no longer necessary in this House.

I certainly found it amusing to hear that the Government House Leader's rationale was because this is only delaying, you know, the implementation of the arbitration hearings and these collective agreements by four months, right? Therefore, breaking collective agreements, breaking the law, bargaining in bad faith: that's no big deal; we don't need to debate that. What I'm actually sensing more and more is that there is a real contempt for the process but also for other views in this House, and I'm deeply troubled by that.

I think that we've made some statements in this House already about how there appears to be a sense from the members on the other side that because they won an election – by the way, this party won an election four years ago as well. Nobody holds the righteousness on being government. Most importantly, what happens is that you don't have 87 seats in this House. You don't. That's actually just – I think you're supposed to be good at math.

You're supposed to be good at crunching the numbers. If you had won all 87 seats, you wouldn't be listening to us tonight.

I already know that some of the members are pretty irritated about having to listen to us tonight. I know that we saw – two weeks ago, when this opposition caucus stood up to defend workers, particularly young workers but a lot of workers who are not having their voice heard, on Bill 2, all we heard was a lot of complaining about the filibuster. Again, I thought this was a government party and a caucus that are supposed to be about hard work, but when they actually have to do their jobs, we hear complaints. Well, I have a job, and I know what my job is, and I stand up here to do it.

But I think that even when I'm doing what I'm supposed to be doing, the government is trying to silence my voice, trying to silence your voices, because that's been the theme. That has been the theme. There is one mandate that's going around, and that's what the Government House Leader and – I don't know who makes the decisions over there; I can only guess. But the theme is: let's shut down the democratic process. Frankly, I'm quite shocked.

I was hoping, when I came in and looked at the members on the other side, that some of them would be a little bit shocked by what happened as well. I'm not sure if that's the case. Like I said, I don't feel like I have a sense that I know a lot of the members on the other side because I haven't heard them speak a lot. I think you're getting a good sense of who all of us are because we're talking an awful lot. I don't know if you're shocked, but you should be. At the end of the day, you were elected by voters to do a job, and that job is to actually debate – it's not to impose, it's not to bring in a fiat, it's not to just simply say that this is the way it's going to happen – because you don't have 87 seats.

Even if you're not in the opposition and you don't have to debate it, I sure hope you know it. I sure hope you know what your government is doing. I sure hope you know the bills that you're passing, that you're imposing. I don't know if you know it because, frankly, I hear nothing. That's just my shock about what's happened tonight in terms of the democratic process. I'm happy to stay up all night and do the work that's important, that I've been elected to do, and to debate, and I'm shocked to hear that the members on the other side don't even feel that that's important. More importantly, I think Albertans will be shocked. They will hear about it. We know that they're already hearing about it, and they'll have their say about that.

Now, on to Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining act. I do want to say that I think the most important thing to keep in mind, that this government has been doing effectively – and I think they laid the groundwork for this even early on in the campaign – is that they're trying to paint unions and people who are union members as something other than what they are, which is Albertans. People who are part of unions are Albertan workers, and I don't know why their jobs and their work is so undervalued by this government.

I've talked about this before in this House. When I was door-knocking in my riding, a lot of people were two-income families. One member might have been affected by the drop in oil prices – they were in oil and gas or related industries somehow, and they were affected – and the other member of that household was often a public-sector worker. I'm sure that many of your families and many of your friends are public-sector workers. They are not a monolithic union. They are individual employees. They are Albertans who are doing work. For some reason this government seems to have an incredible lack of value for the work that they do.

When the economy went down, when international oil prices dropped – that's why the economy went down, and you should know that because it happened to previous Conservative governments before. When that happened, this government made a choice. The Member for Edmonton-North West did a fantastic job of talking about the decision. It was a difficult decision to make, but the decision was made by the NDP government to not also further punish Albertans by destroying their public services.

We've already seen that this government seems to be taking an approach of devaluing the service, the public services themselves, by cutting the revenue sources to provide those services at a high quality, whether it be education or health care. Now they've made it abundantly clear, if they haven't already, that they also do not value the Albertans who provide those services.

I'm just completely astounded, because we've got to remember that these are human beings. We're talking about collective agreements. We're talking about wage arbitrations. It can get very easy to get caught up in the rhetoric around that, but these are people who already have not taken an increase for more than four years. They are people who still continue to provide high-quality services to our families, to all of us during an economic downturn. They are sometimes people who were responsible for continuing to support their households when somebody else in the household was affected by the drop in oil prices. These are people who are – we've gone through the list: 180,000 workers, nurses, teachers. These are people we know. These are people who provide things, services that we desperately value and need.

There's such a cavalier approach from this government to negotiations with them. You know, I can put on my labour lawyer hat and say: this is the very definition of bad-faith bargaining. Basically, the bargaining process is driven into the ground when one party doesn't play by the rules. And you know what the rules are? The rules are the collective agreement. These were binding collective agreements on all the parties. There were provisions in there for a reason. If the parties can't trust each other, then it's going to collapse and we're going to see labour unrest.

That doesn't serve anybody because not only, again, does it hurt the workers; it also hurts the provision of services to Albertans. I'm just astounded by why this government seems just laser focused on destroying public services and the people who provide them. Don't we all benefit from those services? Don't we all benefit by having labour stability to make sure that those services are provided when we need them? This is already a shocking action, I believe, to undermine that good-faith relationship in bargaining, which is just going to cause more trouble for Albertans, but to do it in a such a way that it really undermines the democratic process: you know, it really disheartens me.

This is not why I ran for office. I ran for office because I wanted to represent the views of my constituents, and this government is trying to stop me from doing that. I think that's shameful, and I hope Albertans will hold this government to task for that because that's not what our jobs are. Maybe it's time, when you talk about your laser focus on jobs, that you worry about your own jobs, that you worry about how you're doing your job, because I know that we on this side of the House are standing up every day and doing our jobs really well. We are listening, we're doing the work, we're doing the research, we're representing people who are bringing their concerns to us, and we're talking about the other side of the issue. That's the job that we've been elected to do.

I don't see the other side doing their job. In fact, I see them trying to undermine their jobs. I wish you paid as much attention to your work as you do to trying to undermine the work of public-sector employees in this province, who are delivering the services we need and value.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone has a question or comment for the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Seeing none, is there anyone else wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for St. Albert has risen.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand up and talk about Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining act. Obviously, as my other colleagues have said, this bill is a gross abuse of power and an attack on front-line workers. Although I'm hugely disappointed, I'm not terribly shocked that this government has invoked closure.

I think back to all of the rhetoric before and during the election, and one of the things that always made me laugh a little bit was the frequency that some of the members and, particularly, our now Premier were boasting about how important it was to be humble, just stay humble. Humble. You know, we're going to focus on democracy, do what's best for Alberta. This isn't what democracy looks like. You don't use your numbers and throw your weight around and shut people down and shut them up just so that you can manipulate what happens in this place. I keep count a little bit because every day people are talking about the size of their mandate, as mentioned before. Again, it's not really the size of the mandate but what you do with it. What you've done with it is really lame. You've shut it down because you are unwilling to hear what we're saying.

Let me talk a little bit about St. Albert. That's the community that I represent. Oddly enough, it is actually a fairly established community. It's a really old community. It's a community that invests in a lot of local services, and 1 in 4 St. Albertans are public-sector workers. They are workers like nurses, social workers, teachers, food inspectors, child mental health therapists, long-term care workers, correction officers, sheriffs, and so much more, disability workers. These are people that are the foundation of this province. These are the people that provide essential services to us every single day. These are the people that we rely on every single day.

This is the group that is squarely under attack. I mean, you can say that you're not, but all of the steps that you're taking, all of the things that you're introducing are very, very clear that that is exactly what you are doing. I guess I don't really understand when we're coming out of a time that we're recovering from a recession, when we are facing all kinds of challenges, and one of the first things that this government does is actually attack the workers that are the people that we rely on.

Let's talk about some of those people. There are all kinds of people that I'm talking about tonight. I'd just like to name them, actually, and talk about some of the workers that we rely on, that our kids rely on to provide services. I'd like to mention some of the staff that will be impacted at Albert Lacombe school. These are some of the folks that are going to be impacted, and I apologize in advance if I don't get their names quite right: the principal of Albert Lacombe, Ms Charlene Kushniruk; vice-principal, Mr. Duane Hayes. He's going to be impacted. You've invoked closure, so we don't get to debate fully this legislation that has the ability to impact their lives and our communities. Some of the admin support staff: Mrs. Jocelyn Sigurdson, Mrs. Karen Watts, also admin staff for Albert Lacombe. We have learning services: learning support facilitator Mrs. Leisa Michael.

Our school counsellor here at Albert Lacombe – school counsellors provide essential services, and they're going to be particularly important because of the legislation that this government is going to jam through, that will reduce the effectiveness and the privacy afforded kids that choose to join or form QSAs and GSAs. School counsellors are really important. Ms Donna Nelson at Albert Lacombe school is going to be impacted.

Let's talk about the sports academy facilitator, Mr. Geoff Giacobbo, and sports academy staff: soccer, Mr. Marc Loiselle; health and fitness, Mr. Massimo Provenzano.

Performing arts: Miss Kimberly Kaplar.

Prekindergarten. Who doesn't think prekindergarten is vitally important? These teachers and these staff are going to be impacted: teacher, Ms Melissa Gibb; educational assistant Ms Heather Cummings.

Occupational therapists. Occupational therapy is vitally important in schools. Mrs. Susan Patterson and speech language pathologist Mrs. Nicole McDougall: really important. Speech language pathology is an incredibly important skill, and these are incredibly important support staff to have.

Then we've got kindergarten; so important: Mrs. Christine Field. I actually met her. She's amazing.

Grade 1: Mrs. Kristie Brahim, Miss Lesley Kenyon. Grade 1 is a really difficult grade to teach. Although I've never myself taught grade 1, I hear it is very difficult. These are people that are going to be impacted.

Grade 2: Mrs. Kerrie Fedunyk. Grade 3: K.T. Jacula, Mrs. Cynthia Osicki. Grade 4: Mrs. Lindsey Pratt. Grade 4 and 5 – I can imagine the challenge of a blended classroom, not easy – Ms Leah Kres. Grade 5: Mrs. Caitlin Nobert. Grade 5/6 split – another very challenging class, I'm sure, as the hormones are raging at that time; I'm assuming they're starting – Mrs. Brianne Tworek, Miss Kim Kaplar. Grade 6, Miss Candace Leis.

Then the librarian – vitally important; kids need librarians – Mrs. Catherine Crothers.

Educational assistants. Now, these are particularly important. Although we have not seen this government's budget yet, we can only imagine. When school boards make cuts because of cuts passed on to them by the government, it is very often things like educational assistants that are the first to go. In a classroom that is packed because perhaps the government is not funding it adequately, educational assistants are not only important to support students that don't have challenges, but in order for inclusive classrooms to really be functional, educational assistants are vital. Especially in Albert Lacombe school they're incredibly vital. Educational assistants in that school currently are Mrs. Rhonda Armstrong, Miss Megan Atkinson, Mrs. Lynne Clayton Newton, Ms Heather Cummings, Mrs. Catherine Crothers, Mrs. Alison Giesbrecht, Mrs. Anna Wallace, and Mrs. Karen Webb. This is a group that will be directly impacted by changes.

I guess one of the other things that really is so funny to me – well, not funny; it's really weird, actually – is that this is a government that's so willing to take big risks and just plunge right in to do something like blow a $4.5 billion hole in our budget so that they can give already-profitable corporations a huge tax break, yet they want to slow everything else down because they're not quite sure. They're not quite sure what their little panel is going to decide to cut, and they want to really look at where they're going to save. Let's be honest; we all know where that's going. That's going to be cuts to public-sector workers. That's fairly clear. This invoking closure is just one more signal to this group that, yeah, that's going to happen. If we didn't have enough hints already, this is a pretty good hint. First it was about how we're not allowed to introduce our own guests in this place. Then it was: well, no, we don't want you thumping; we'd rather have you clap. And then private members' bills: we don't want to discuss them here without a committee dealing with them, so let's introduce more delays. If we didn't have enough signs, we do now.

An Hon. Member: More consultation.

Ms Renaud: Excuse me? You should stand up and speak if you have – yeah.

Let's look at another school: Bertha Kennedy, which is a St. Albert Catholic school. You guys will like this . . .

Speaker's Ruling
Repetition
Relevance

The Speaker: Member, I might just provide some brief commentary, as I would imagine that we are very close to the end of the evening. I think it is important that we are reminded about the rule of repetition and also the rule of relevance. I'm happy to provide some significant citations around that, but given the hour perhaps the member will just take my word for it and maybe not read significant lists to make your point. I'm happy to provide the context if you want, which is very clear here, but in the name of saving some time here, perhaps we might move on.

Ms Renaud: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that 1 in 4 in St. Albert, in my constituency, are public-sector workers, I just felt that it was really important to name some of those people. Not that I can prove that they live there, but they do work there.

I'd like to talk about Bertha Kennedy Catholic school, some of the administration staff. Clearly, these are people that work really hard and don't get a lot of glory. Goodness knows they don't get a lot of pay, contrary to what this government might think, but these are important staff members. Let's talk about Mrs. Anna-Lisa Doll, Mrs. Cindy Pereira, and then of course there is office support staff, librarians, learning support facilitators, and of course the ever-important counsellor. We've got Mrs. Shelley Sadownyk, Miss Maria Pearson, Mrs. Kristi Sware, Mrs. Josie Cancian, Ms Donna Nelson. These are all vital support staff at Bertha Kennedy.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Agreed. Very important.

Ms Renaud: Some of our teachers – which is really interesting. I hear from the other side agreeing that these are really important people, yet they've invoked closure on a bill that has the potential to cause a lot of harm and a lot of damage. This is not in good faith. Not at all. We understand what you're doing.

Let's talk about those teachers that are going to be impacted. Mrs. Kelly Raypold; she's prekindergarten in the a.m., which is not an easy class to do, and kindergarten; p.m. kindergarten is Miss Katherine Watson. Again, not an easy class. We've got the second a.m. kindergarten: Miss Laura Van Hoof. Full-day progressive kindergarten – twice as difficult – Mrs. Julie Bolduc. We've got grade 1B: Mr. Raphael Bonot. We've got grade 2A: Mrs. Dolores Andressen. I might add that Mrs. Dolores Andressen is a woman who also lives in St. Albert, just walking distance from Bertha Kennedy, and she and her husband are quite lovely. I just wanted to add that. Grade 2F: we've got Miss Kylie Field. Mrs. Heather Flynn is doing grade 3R. Mrs. Nina Rawcliffe: grade 4R. Grade 4/5 split – again, not an easy class – Miss Karen Armitage. Grades 5 and 6: Mrs. Debra Kaplar. Grade 6, just straight grade 6: Mr. Curt McDougall; nice to see a nice blend there, male and female. And then we've got the ever-important music teacher, Mrs. Elaine Groenenboom.

Educational assistants. Once more let me say that these educational assistants are absolutely vital to the health of any classroom and, of course, to the success of inclusion. Contrary to what people might think, inclusion just doesn't happen in clubs. Inclusion takes a lot of effort, and it requires appropriate staffing. That requires appropriate funding, and appropriate funding requires some security to know that you can count on that funding being there. Let me tell you that this kind of work as an educational assistant, particularly in a class where you perhaps have students with disabilities, is not an easy job whatsoever, and it requires a lot of skill. More than anything, you don't want to lose the staff that are doing this job, so retention is always key.

One of the things that I learned when I managed an organization that had a couple of hundred staff was that we had to work at retention. We had to do everything that we could to ensure that we would keep the staff, the good staff, the great staff, that were dedicating themselves to their jobs. We had to do everything that we could to retain them. One of the most important things, contrary to what people might think, was that pay was close to the top but it was job security. It was knowing that they would have a job, that they would be able to count on perhaps a small cost-of-living increase, that they would have good benefits, that they would know their colleagues would also be there, but it was about retention and about security and safety.

I'm sorry. When you have a government that comes barging in – of course, they do talk a lot about their large mandate and their ability to just blow through all kinds of legislation. When they look at this government and they see instantly that although they campaigned on jobs, pipeline, economy, what they're actually doing is taking an aim at working people. These are the people that actually need our protection and our thanks and our support, not to target them because they're public-sector workers. You know, we've heard all kinds of rhetoric from the other side about public-sector workers.

The Speaker: Before we proceed to 29(2)(a), I might just caution the hon. Member for St. Albert. Finally, the rule against repetition has been used by Speakers in various other ways to assist the House in making effective use of its time. Speakers have ruled against the tenuous reading of letters or lists even when they're used in support of their argument. Perhaps she might heed my advice in the future.

Hon members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, is there anyone else wishing to speak to debate of Bill 9? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is rising.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, thank you to all members of the House. Another good day. Progress all over the place. I love it. As such, I will adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow, where I anticipate we'll get more progress.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 2:59 a.m. on Tuesday]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, June 18, 2019

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government and to all Members of the Legislative Assembly and to all in positions of power and responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, there are a number of guests joining us today in a wide variety of the galleries. Please welcome to the Legislative Assembly a school group from Greystone Centennial middle school, joining us from the constituency of Spruce Grove-Stony Plain. As well, at 2 o'clock in the gallery will be Norwood elementary school from the constituency of Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin. I invite all those students to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you, hon. members.

In the Speaker's gallery today we have several guests with us this afternoon. First, a constituent of the Associate Minister of Natural Gas, Master Warrant Officer Mike Vollick. He has been deployed in Croatia, Bosnia, Kosovo, and Afghanistan throughout his military career and currently serves as the quartermaster senior instructor of the First Battalion of Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. I invite members to welcome him.

We will welcome the rest of the members at the conclusion of their introduction.

Visiting us from the United Kingdom this afternoon and seated in the Speaker's gallery is Mr. Robert John Pooley, MBE. Mr. Pooley provides swords for the British and Commonwealth forces and is the official supplier of the swords to our very own Sergeant-at-Arms. Welcome, Mr. Pooley.

Also in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon are a number of dedicated individuals from the Calgary and Edmonton Salvation Army advisory board, including Major Margaret McLeod and Major Al Hoeft.

Last but certainly not least, in the Speaker's gallery today is a very familiar face to this Chamber, Mr. Pat Nixon, of course, the father of not only one but two hon. members.

Go ahead if you want, now that we're here. [applause]

Also today we have guests of the Minister of Seniors and Housing, Jamie Leong-Huxley, and the constituency manager of Calgary-Fish Creek, Christina Steed, and a guest of the hon. Deputy Speaker, Mary-Lou Stacey. Members, please welcome them to the Assembly.

Members' Statements

Property Rights Legislation

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the UCP campaign platform directly commits to enhancing property rights for all Albertans. The UCP's commitment to establishing an Alberta property rights preservation act, enshrining property rights for Alberta in the Canadian Constitution, establishing adverse-effects legislation, and providing compensation for property owners being negatively affected by regulations is not only fair and just, but it will also ensure Alberta is a secure and more certain place to invest.

Currently, under Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, and Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, we continue to see uncertainty as well as limited access to courts and timely and fair compensation. We also need to be considering the positive economic and social impacts of how a free market for environmental goods and services would impact our province. It would allow our top-shelf environmentally conscious farmers and ranchers the ability to promote and capitalize on the carbon they sequester and their ability to provide and enhance first-rate soil regeneration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have always wondered why property rights resonate more in rural Alberta than in our cities. Perhaps it is because rural Alberta is huge, diverse, and pristine. Perhaps it is because rural Albertans face more encroachments on their title covenants, for which compensation may be owed.

Speaking of fencelines, as a teenager I spent many a summer night playing touch football in a friend's backyard because it was as big as Commonwealth Stadium. Twenty years later I sold the house during my real estate career. Oh my; an up-to-date real property report showed that not only were we playing football on my friend's neighbour's property all that time, but even his garage had been built on the neighbour's yard 30 years earlier. Mr. Speaker, it took all my negotiating skills to sort out that one fairly and according to property rights.

Mr. Speaker, good fences make good neighbours, and strong property rights provide . . .

Education Act GSA Provision Enforcement

Ms Ganley: Imagine, Mr. Speaker, if you were required to pay taxes, but there was no deadline. Would you still pay them on time, and would you count on everyone else to do the same? Have you ever tried to make a child apologize without a content requirement? It doesn't always go exactly as you were hoping. Imagine if we were to prohibit speeding but didn't say what the punishment was. Certainly, in all these cases most people would follow the rules, but it's hard to believe that everyone would. That's why we have laws, to make sure that everyone plays by the same rules. When you make a rule, you need to make more than just the rule. There needs to be a consequence, there needs to be content on how you comply, and there needs to be a timeline.

These are just a few examples, yet this is exactly the sort of thing the government expects us to take on faith with Bill Hate. The bill takes us back in time to a previous version of the legislation, that had problems with enforceability. We know that there were problems because students came forward to complain about schools dragging their heels. We know that schools tried to prevent students from calling a GSA and a QSA exactly that. We know that when schools produced discriminatory inclusivity policies, we had to change the law, exactly the same law that's proposed now, in order to enforce the spirit and intent.

Mr. Speaker, words matter, especially words in law. Now, it remains possible that all these questions will be answered in regulations. But if the government intended to do all that, the larger question arises: why change it at all? We have solved these problems. We have enforceability now. We have protection for our LGBTQ students now. So why go back to a law with less protection unless that was exactly the intent?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is rising to make a statement.

Skilled Trades Caucus

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise in the Assembly today and celebrate the creation of the first-ever skilled trades caucus, for which I was elected chair. It is a pleasure to serve on this committee with my fellow caucus members the hon. members from Spruce Grove-Stony Plain, Peace River, Lesser Slave Lake, Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul, Lethbridge-East, Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, and Highwood.

The government and skilled trades caucus believes that apprenticeship learning and the skilled trades have every bit as much value and worth and merit as a university education. That's why we are committed to creating opportunities for young Albertans to learn practical job skills that meet the demands of the labour market and that will help them succeed and build prosperity for all of Alberta.

Alberta faces the dual challenge of retirement among skilled workers and the worst youth employment in decades. The department of labour predicts that from now until 2025 more than 3,000 skilled workers will retire every year, creating a steady demand for apprentices and skilled workers. We need to get ahead of these trends. Our government is committed to enhancing and expanding the apprenticeship model and the skilled trades by increasing the focus on skills for jobs, from high school through postsecondary and into the workplace.

I personally want to take this opportunity to recognize that there are more trades than just the typical construction trades that are most commonly thought of. I have a journeyman certificate as a beautician, which can be just as rewarding and provides a good living as well. I've worked in this profession for over 30 years.

The government has a strong plan to get Albertans back to work and rebuild our economy to make life better for all Albertans. By showing the world that we are open for business again, we will generate the economic growth we need to bring back balance to our province's finances, create jobs, and make life better for Albertans. The task before us is more than a promise; it's an obligation.

Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to stand alongside my colleagues in fighting for skilled trades and apprenticeship learning.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has risen.

Support for Young Parents

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week when I asked the Minister of Children's Services if she consulted with foster children affected by the minimum wage rollback, the Government House Leader got up instead to deflect the question and claimed that my question was "ridiculous" and unreasonable. As someone who has fought for social justice my entire life, this was truly disheartening.

Last week I attended Terra Centre's Promising Futures breakfast along with the Minister of Children's Services. This is an amazing breakfast, that helps raise funds to enable young parents to complete their high school education and gain parenting skills. We heard that many of these teens who get services from Terra come from poverty and have had past involvement with Children's Services. We also heard of how many of these young parents rely on the minimum wage and $25-per-day child care programming provided at Braemar school.

Hearing the stories of these young people was truly moving, but it was also disheartening given the policies of this government. This government claims to care about young people, but they implement a youth minimum wage so that they will earn less money to support themselves and have an incentive to drop out of school. This government refuses to answer my questions about vulnerable young people in this province but also refuses to implement a long-term affordable child care strategy that will help young parents.

If the minister won't answer my questions in this House, it begs the question of whether the minister is even raising these issues with her cabinet colleagues. Or does the minister stand with the Government House Leader, who believes that these questions are unreasonable and ridiculous?

Mr. Speaker, vulnerable youth in our province deserve a champion. They deserve a minister who is not afraid to stand up for what is right, even when it is tough. As the NDP critic for Children's Services I will continue to stand up for all youth in this province and hold this minister accountable. I will continue to urge her to speak truth to power even when it is difficult.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Skilled Trades Training

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I had the opportunity to tour the local 1325 carpenters' and millwrights' facility right here in Edmonton with my hon. colleagues the Minister of Labour and Immigration and the Minister of Advanced Education. As a 20-year member of local 1325 it was wonderful to see the training offered through one of these training centres and the positive effect it has had on people entering the workforce. I'm a dual-ticketed tradesperson myself, having earned my journeyman carpentry ticket from NAIT in 2004 and having earned my journeyman scaffolder's ticket from this very same training centre we had the pleasure of touring last week. Employers and contractors here in Alberta and across Canada and around the world recognize the need for a trained, professional, and safe workforce. Organizations like the Alberta Carpenters Training Centre allow Albertans to be among the best in the business, leading the field not just in performance but in safety as well.

I understand the importance that trades play in Alberta, and I'm excited to see the support being offered to our tradespeople and trades schools by this government. A source of great pride to my constituents, Mr. Speaker, is that NAIT has opened a satellite campus in Spruce Grove, allowing constituents of my riding greater access to apprenticeship training. Trades must become an option that is seen more highly by our high school students. Skilled trades should have every bit as much merit, weight, value, and worth as a university degree. I look forward to seeing what advances this government will make in apprenticeship and trades availability to small cities like mine, whether that be in high school programs or further postsecondary opportunities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

LGBTQ2S-plus Youth and Bill 8

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. LGBTQ youth are four times more likely to attempt suicide than their peers. Adolescent LGBTQ youth who have been rejected by their families because of their sexual orientation or gender identity are over eight times more likely to attempt suicide. One study indicates that 28 per cent of trans and two-spirit people had attempted suicide at least once. LGBTQ youth need a safe space.

Another study found that 49 per cent of trans students, 33 per cent of lesbian students, and 40 per cent of gay male students had experienced sexual harassment in school in the last year. Twenty per cent of LGBTQ students reported being physically harassed or assaulted about their perceived gender identity or sexual orientation. That is why LGBTQ youth need a safe space.

According to the Child and Youth Advocate, LGBTQ2S-plus young people have specific vulnerabilities, needs, and circumstances that require particular attention. He made five specific recommendations to the government just this year, including the need to revise policy and practices to support LGBTQ2S-plus young people. Mr. Speaker, Bill 8 is actually altering policy and practices to lessen supports for these vulnerable youth, the opposite of the recommendations of the Child and Youth Advocate. The Child and Youth Advocate releases special reports when there are systemic issues affecting children and youth that need to be addressed by government, and 50 per cent of the reports in the last six years have been about LGBTQ2S-plus youth.

I cannot stress it enough. LGBTQ youth need a safe space. This is literally a matter of life and death. Bill 8, no matter how many times the members opposite deny it, will harm LGBTQ youth. It has so many loopholes in it so big that you could drive a Sunday school bus through it.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader is rising.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to provide oral notice of the following motions. First, Government Motion 22.

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in second reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Second, Government Motion 23. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Jason Nixon:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, is resumed, not more than six hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will have order while the Government House Leader is providing notice of his motion. We certainly will have lots of opportunity for debate, at which point in time I encourage the opposition to engage in it.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Government Motion 24, Mr. Speaker.

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has a tabling today.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to table two articles. One is entitled Hansen Brothers Hockey, and the other one is called The Real Hansen Brothers from Camrose, Alberta and Augsburg College, Minneapolis, Minnesota. These articles detail the interesting lives of the Hansen brothers of Camrose, who comprised the Augsburg college hockey team during the late 1920s and almost represented the United States in the 1928 Olympics. They are composed by Gary Zeman, who is a constituent of mine. I have the appropriate . . .

The Speaker: I, too, look forward to reading the articles.

Is there anyone else who has a tabling? The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with the requisite number of copies of documentation: an advisory issued by the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner which clarifies the protections afforded to students participating in GSAs under privacy legislation.

The Speaker: Are there any other tablings? The Member for St. Albert is rising to table a document.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table a story. It's part of a CBC news series entitled In Our Backyard, which looks at the effects climate change is having in Canada, from extreme weather events to how it's reshaping our economy. This one is called 'It's a Problem for Society': Climate Change Is Making Some Homes Uninsurable.

Oral Question Period

Bill 9 Debate Time

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I imagine that some of the youth in the audience were wondering what that horrific response was. The response was to the fact that the Government House Leader last night brought in a motion to limit debate, and today he brings in closure because he's trying to stymie voices. Students learned that how a bill becomes a law is supposed to be a fair process with democratic debate and representation. Why won't the Premier allow that to happen? Why won't he stand up and face the workers that he's trying to take the rights away from?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, no one is taking anybody's rights away. We're proposing a bill to defer arbitration by four months to ensure that the government has adequate information on the fiscal state of the province. There will be ample debate. I've been advised by the Government House Leader that there will be somewhere between 25 and 30 hours of debate. That's more than one hour for every member of the opposition for a three-page bill on a four-month deferral.

Ms Hoffman: Minutes after midnight last night the government moved to shut down debate on its bad-faith bargaining bill. This is a bill that gives the government heavy-handed authority to delay legally mandated contracts, to break the law, to impose contracts on nurses, teachers, paramedics, the first responders who were evacuating the north last night. It's cowardly, and this Premier deserves to face the people he's rolling back the rights and protections for. Why won't he? Why won't he stand in this House and defend his bill?

Mr. Kenney: I am rising in the House and defending the bill, but, Mr. Speaker, I'm getting worried the member opposite is getting so agitated she might call the government sewer rats soon because she did it before. You know what? Conservatives and Albertans are not sewer rats. This government was elected with the largest democratic mandate in Alberta electoral history on a mandate to restore balance to our province's finances. That means proceeding with collective bargaining agreements in an informed and responsible way. That's exactly what we're doing with a mere four-month deferral on a couple of agreements.

Ms Hoffman: I don't call bullying teachers, nurses, and paramedics balance, Mr. Speaker. I call that an injustice.

I think it's rich for members who may have been in their bed last night while they had their cabinet do their dirty work to come into this House and say that they're bringing in balance. That is far from what's happening in this place. It's an embarrassment. This Premier knows better. Why won't he act better?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to bullying and incivility, we see a master class on that from the opposition in this place every day at question period.

This government has been entrusted with a mandate from the largest democratic vote in Alberta history to restore balance to the province's finances. We're going to do exactly that, in part by ensuring that we get all of the necessary information from the MacKinnon panel, chaired by a former New Democrat finance minister, before we can proceed in a responsible way with the wage reopeners and these collective bargaining agreements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What the Premier is pushing his cabinet and caucus to do is cowardly. It is the epitome of unconstitutional, law-breaking infringement on the rights of teachers, nurses, paramedics, and front-line public service members. I am embarrassed that this Premier thinks he can come in here and say that it's simply a delay until after the federal election, because he doesn't want his numbers to tank the same way his friend Doug Ford's numbers are tanking. Will the Premier admit that he – will he promise, let's try that. Will he promise to sit in this House for every stage of Bill 9 debate, or is he going to run away?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we can see the lack of respect that the NDP has for this Chamber, for the traditions of this institution, for basic civility and public discourse. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I heard the question. We will hear the answer.

Mr. Kenney: Shouting, heckling, attacking, fear and smear: Mr. Speaker, that's why they ended up with a historic repudiation from Alberta voters, voters who told us to act responsibly, to get our finances under control. That means we need all of the information necessary, and that is exactly why this is a modest, four-month deferral. While we fully respect collective bargaining agreements, we want to proceed in a responsible way.

Ms Hoffman: Forty per cent of Albertans voted for us, and even if they didn't, Mr. Speaker, they deserve to have their voices heard in this place. Shutting down debate, bringing in time limitation, and pretending that there's nothing to see here when clearly there is, the Government House Leader bumbled through some rationale for why he thought the House no longer needed to debate it, and then he says: we'll bring in further closure. That is the epitome of bullying. Will the Government House Leader admit it, and will he stop bullying around his own caucus? They deserve to speak on this.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Premier has said, there will be over 30 hours of debate, over one hour for each member of the opposition if they want it. But you know what was very, very disappointing last night? You were sitting in the chair. I bet you were shocked to see it, as over and over the opposition used their time to debate on this bill to try adjourn debate and make sure that they could go home last night instead of being in here and working, not focusing on the legislation. We will give the time that is needed to debate this bill. [interjection]

Mr. Ellis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I suggest the opposition take the opportunity to do it.

An Hon. Member: Absolute liars.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I wasn't mistaken, I heard someone from the opposition bench say: absolute liars. Of course, that wouldn't have happened because that would have been wildly inappropriate. It seems to me by the sheepish look from someone in the middle row there that perhaps that is what I heard.

I do note the point of order at 1:55 or so.

Ms Hoffman: An act to impose bad-faith bargaining practices that steamroll over legal, constitutional rights, Mr. Speaker, is nothing to be rushed. Absolutely. I'd be happy to inform the House leader that actually when you call a division, it doesn't count against debate time. It actually does bring attention to the fact that this should be debated in front of the public instead of under the darkness of night. Why won't the Government House Leader, why won't the Premier, look the workers that he's steamrolling over in the eye? Why did he send his caucus in here to do his dirty work?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, first of all, that member just magically inflated the NDP's popular vote by about a quarter. That party was repudiated by Albertans for many reasons, one of which is the exact incivility and anger that they are demonstrating in this place today. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kenney: Another reason that they were repudiated, Mr. Speaker, was their gross fiscal irresponsibility, driving this province towards $100 billion of debt. This government takes seriously our mandate to restore balance to the finances. We'll do that in a responsible way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora for the third question.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Ms Hoffman: Hundreds of Albertans are planning to come to this Legislature tomorrow night for a nonpartisan rally to save gay-straight alliances. This event is called pride as protest. It's a direct response to this government's Bill Hate, which will destroy GSAs and allow . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: . . . students to be outed, Mr. Speaker. I will be attending this rally, and I know all members of our opposition caucus will. My question is to the Premier: will you be attending the rally tomorrow night, and if not, why not?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Bill 8 constitutes part of our commitment to Albertans presented in our platform to bring into force the Education Act, the very same act that the NDP committed to bring into force in 2015. With respect to gay-straight alliances it simply re-establishes the law that the NDP voted for in 2014, which would be the strongest statutory protections for gay-straight alliances in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, as the Privacy Commissioner has confirmed today, the privacy law will continue apply, as it always has, to the participation of students in extracurricular activities.

Ms Hoffman: Well, perhaps when the Premier is gallivanting across Canada campaigning for his friends, he missed his own minister's memo on Friday, which admits that the law that they are proposing to bring in in no way is the strongest in Canada, Mr. Speaker. His own minister admitted that. She also indicated that she would continue to consult, but she said that she already had talked to everybody. My question to the minister is: will you join me at the rally tomorrow and allow me to introduce you to the folks who are here to protest against Bill Hate because they are terrified you are destroying their right to GSAs?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the law that the NDP is attacking was the law for the first three years of their government. It was the law they voted for in 2014. It was the law, the Education Act, they ran on proclaiming in 2015. I am proud to have last week been attracting a major international investment to this province and standing up and defending this province, defending our energy industry and jobs and building alliances to support our vital economic interests, something that the NDP never did.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, today we have the strongest laws in Canada to protect gay kids and their allies. Should this government move forward with John Carpay crafted amendments to make sure that they bring in Bill Hate ...

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: ... that will no longer be the case. Will the minister rise in this House and admit that the bill she is bringing forward is a rollback, is an attack on gay-straight alliances and the kids who are a part of them?

Mr. Kenney: Of course, it's not, Mr. Speaker, and no amount of these kinds of absurd charges from the NDP makes it any more true. It's essentially re-establishing a law that existed for three years under the NDP government, with which they were perfectly satisfied until they decided to try cynically to use this issue to divide Albertans, but Albertans rejected that. You know when they rejected it? They rejected it on election day in giving this government the largest democratic mandate in Alberta history on an explicit commitment to bring into force the Education Act. That's exactly what Bill 8 facilitates.

The Speaker: I would just note the points of order that have been identified by the Government House Leader as well as the government whip in the first supplemental on the second question and in the third set of questions.

Energy and Environmental Policies

Ms Hoffman: Alberta is expecting good news today, Mr. Speaker. Let me tell you, the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline is a victory for our leader and for all Albertans. We proved that a balancing approach, where you protect the environment and the economy, can produce real results for Alberta's energy sector. Decades of dithering by Conservative governments in Ottawa and Edmonton couldn't get a pipeline to tidewater. Will the Premier tell this House what he is planning to do to ensure that the approval of our pipeline isn't threatened by lack of adequate environmental protection and consultation with indigenous leaders, which, of course, is the reason why he failed for so many years in Ottawa?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it is astonishing to see how little the NDP learned from the humiliation delivered to them by Alberta voters, who were understandably outraged with the total failure of the NDP to make any progress on pipelines or on oil and gas, the NDP ...

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

Mr. Kenney: ... that surrendered to the killing of Northern Gateway, that surrendered to a U.S. veto on Keystone, that surrendered to the Prime Minister killing Energy East. You know why, Mr. Speaker? We all know why. It's because the NDP has always been against our oil and gas industry. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members. [interjections] Hon. members. A point of order is noted, but I would encourage all members to acknowledge the need for decorum inside the Chamber. In particular, when asking or answering a question, it is important that the chair can hear both of those occasions.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, our government introduced a 100-megatonne emissions cap because it was endorsed by industry, indigenous groups, First Nations, and environmentalists alike. Industry told us that they got the oil out of the sand ...

Mr. Dang: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: ... and they could get the carbon out of the barrel, and with that cap in place Alberta is in a stronger position to protect our constitutional authority as owner and regulator of our natural resources against attacks like Bill C-69. To the Premier. You've been wishy-washy on this. Will you keep the 100-megatonne cap that helped us get this pipeline approval?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I understand why the NDP heckle so much. It's because they're angry. They're angry with Albertans for rejecting their failed economic policies. They're angry with Albertans for giving this government a mandate to repeal their job-killing carbon tax. They're angry with Albertans for wanting a government that will, without apology and relent, stand up and defend our oil and gas sector and jobs. We will take no lessons from the party that drove us into the longest period of economic decline and stagnation since the Great Depression. They were rejected for good reason on election day.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy. I'm happy that we are going to be one step closer to ensuring we get a fair price for our resource that Albertans own. The Premier is planning his victory lap, no doubt, with regard to TMX. I'm happy. He should be happy. All Albertans should be happy. What I fear is that he will use this approval of the pipeline to justify attacking those who care about both the economy and the planet. To the Premier. We got a pipeline; we need more. Will you admit that we must protect both the economy and the environment to protect our access to future markets?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the socialists still don't get it. They talk about victory laps. They talk about it because they don't actually understand these issues. Every time there was some minor, putative step forward, you would have a rally with the NDP and high-fiving. You know what? Nobody should be high-fiving. Nobody should be doing any victory laps until oil flows through that pipe, until we see the repeal of things like Bill C-69 because we need multiple avenues of egress. One of the terrible mistakes of the NDP was to put all of their eggs in the one basket of TMX. This government is going to fight for multiple points of access to get fair price for our oil.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'll note the point of order at 2:04 from the Member for Edmonton-South.

Crime Rates and the Criminal Justice System

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, under the NDP's watch Alberta witnessed a dramatic increase in crime. Police services across the province are reporting significantly higher robberies, assaults, sexual assaults, and property damage compared to five years ago today. This increase in part can be tied to the poor economic situation and job-killing NDP policies. Minister, my constituents want to know: what is the new government doing to ensure that Albertans are protected, and what is our plan to combat these increases in crime?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans deserve to feel safe in their homes and communities. Unlike past governments that didn't have their priorities straight when it came to the Justice file, we're making sure that programs like ALERT have the funding that they need to disrupt gang activity, to disrupt the opioid trade that's going on in our province right now. We're also taking proactive steps. Just this last week we met with community leaders. Three cabinet ministers, a local MLA, and Calgary police met with community leaders to talk about gang violence in the northeast of Calgary. We're not going to delay. We're not going to wait for these galleries to be filled, like previous governments, to take action.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has the call.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in a recent 2009 Maclean's report called Canada's 20 Most Dangerous Places, 7 of the 10 with the worst increases in crime over the last five years were right here in Alberta and given that too many Albertans are being victimized and too many criminals are going through a revolving-door justice system, getting back out on the streets and claiming new victims, can the minister tell my constituents and all Albertans: how will this government stop the revolving door and ensure that we have a more effective criminal justice system?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we had what they called a triage system in our prosecution branch in this province before, under the previous government. Triage: that's a hospital type of term, not a justice term. We're going to be making sure that we hire the prosecutors we need. Fifty new prosecutors is our commitment under our platform. We're going to deliver to make sure our law enforcement officials have the tools and resources they need to make sure all Albertans feel safe in their communities, to make sure we put the criminals behind bars.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. For clarification, that was a 2019 report.

Given that Alberta prosecutors are drowning in their caseloads, particularly in rural ridings, while repeat offenders are bogged down in the justice system and given that in order to get dangerous offenders off the streets, we need prosecutors to work these cases, Minister: can you please update all Albertans on what the government is doing to improve caseloads and ensure our criminal justice system functions properly?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to thank the hon. member, who actually has a long history in recruitment in legal services and in hiring lawyers. We're going to be making sure that we work with all the different stakeholders in the legal system to make sure that we can recruit prosecutors. I'm going to be meeting later this week with the dean of the University of Calgary law school and talking to him about how we can engage students in future careers, how we can engage lawyers at different stages of their careers and taking a look and making sure that they want to become prosecutors in our province. We need to get this done for Albertans. We need to reduce the caseload on our prosecutors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Public Service Wage Arbitration Postponement

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is breaking the law. They want to rip up contracts and prompt court challenges from public-sector unions. In the end Albertans will pay the price for poor management from this Premier and this Minister of Finance. We know that legal challenges are expected. To the Premier. We know legislation like this has cost provinces big in the past. How can you be sure we won't pay much more after judges weigh in on your costly and unconstitutional legislation?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, again, Bill 9 is about simply seeking a delay in arbitration so this government can better understand a pathway forward, a path to fiscal balance. We committed to Albertans during the election campaign that we would bring this province to balance. We're committed to that. This delay in arbitration is about being responsible and prudent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in 2002 the B.C. government imposed contracts that stripped away the ability of teachers to bargain collectively and given that it took the Supreme Court less than 20 minutes to rule against the government and in favour of teachers and given that it appears that this Premier and this Finance minister are attempting to run down the same path as that B.C. government, to the Premier: is booking us a date with the Supreme Court really part of your plan to help pay for your $4.5 billion tax giveaway to corporations?

Mr. Toews: Again, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate and this government greatly appreciates the tremendous work our public sector does day after day on behalf of Albertans. Again, this legislation is simply just delaying arbitration so that we can develop a responsible path forward, a responsible path forward that will ensure that we can continue to deliver high-quality services to Albertans today and into the next generation.

Ms Gray: Given that showing respect is a great way to show your appreciation and given that our government worked in good faith with public-sector unions and negotiated contracts that worked for all sides and given that in just a month and a half this government has ruined all that hard work and potentially caused permanent damage between these workers and their relationship with government and given that real leadership doesn't involve sneaking in measures in the dead of night to shut down debate in the House, to the Premier: how much will this fool's errand cost us in high-priced lawyers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll tell you that what would cost Albertans is this particular opposition who, when they were in government, had us on a trajectory for a hundred billion dollars in accumulated debt. That would have guaranteed that future generations would not have a first-class, world-class education system or health care system. We are going to put this province back on a track to balance. We're committed to that.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, no one has ever seen this kind of undemocratic behaviour before, but no one has ever seen a Premier so preoccupied with politics outside the province. This is a Premier who cares far more about Ottawa than he does Onaway. Everyone can see that the Premier is deferring his wage war until after the federal election. This is so he can campaign in his happy place, which is Ontario, but do so before he's become as unpopular as Doug Ford. Will the Premier now admit he's planning to take thousands of dollars out of nurses' and others' pockets but not until he's done with the federal election, which is his real priority?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, again, we are simply seeking to delay arbitration so that this government can make prudent, thoughtful decisions on a path to balance for Albertans, decisions that will ensure that we can continue to deliver high-quality services to Albertans. We have a Premier who's been advocating for the people of this province every day since he's been on the job.

Ms Phillips: Given that the government wants to cruelly seize take-home pay from corrections workers, conservation officers, nurses, lab techs, paramedics, tens of thousands of others, but given that this government doesn't want the wage war to inconvenience the dear leader, who is paying his way back to 24 Sussex, will the Premier now admit he is deferring his wage war on working people until October 31 just to buy time until after the federal election on October 22, at which time he will pick paramedics' pockets as soon as the ballots are counted?

Mr. Toews: Again, Mr. Speaker, this opposition has no idea how to ensure that finances are dealt with responsibly. They have no idea how to properly and respectfully deal with taxpayers' hard-earned dollars. We're about deliberating, ensuring we have time to make thoughtful, prudent decisions on behalf of Albertans and on behalf of the public sector.

Ms Phillips: Given that while the Premier might fancy himself a master Machiavellian, it is quite possible that tooting around Canada, campaigning on Albertans' time and dime, might just be too clever by half and given that Albertans have limited patience for entitled, out-of-touch Conservatives flying around everywhere but here, will the Premier commit to spending his time in Alberta until October 22, or will the siren call of spending our money on interfering in the federal election campaign be too much for him to resist?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what a ridiculous question. The opposition should try a lot harder. Let me be very clear. This side of the House and Albertans can be very proud of their Premier. I'm proud of our Premier, who has been working for years to campaign, to stand up for our province, who is travelling across and building a coalition that will stand up to Justin Trudeau and the federal Liberals for our provincial interests. That is in sharp contrast to that side of the House when they were in government, who spent their time shoring up Justin Trudeau, who spent their time going out of their way to help the federal Liberals work against Albertans. I'm proud of our Premier, and I want to thank him very much for his hard work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Calgary Ring Road Completion

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every day in Calgary-Glenmore we face a sea of orange cones on our roadways, with virtually every major thoroughfare undergoing road construction, much of which on the west and north sides of the constituency is related to the construction of the southwest ring road. Further, many are subjected to the incessant song of the beeping of backup signals and the rhythm of piledriving. Most understand that we cannot continue to drive the north-south trade route for Alberta through the middle of Calgary, but they're frustrated. To the Minister of Transportation: when will the southwest portion of the ring road be completed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The southwest Calgary ring road project was actually approved in 2013 and started construction in 2016, and the hon. member can actually blame me for that approval if the hon. member chooses to. I would say that the whole southwest portion of the ring road is scheduled to be complete and open by the end of 2022. Currently the projects are on schedule. When it's complete, there will be a hundred kilometres of continuous road around the city of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that progress on the Calgary ring road has been arduous and is still expected to continue for some time and given the vital need for this roadway in Calgary for regular commuting purposes and also to support and sustain economic growth in Calgary and neighbouring regions, can the Minister of Transportation explain how this government will ensure that the project is kept on schedule?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for advocating on behalf of her constituents. I would have her know that the southwest portion of the road is more than 60 per cent complete today. It is on schedule to open for traffic by the fall of 2021, the southwest portion. Our contractor is working quickly, with an aggressive schedule. We have actually allowed them extended working hours and other considerations to help them stay on schedule, which they are currently.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that an agreement to transfer land for the project was completed with the Tsuut'ina First Nation back in 2013 and given that the final sections of the ring road, the west and southwest sections, are not expected to be completed for a while, to the Minister of Transportation: how will this government ensure that the mistakes of previous governments are not repeated and that future projects do not take a decade to go from land acquisition to completion?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I respect the hon. member's impatience. I will just say that the land transfer with the Tsuut'ina First Nation was finalized in 2015 after federal government approval, which, actually, the Premier helped out with when he was a federal minister. A contractor was selected in 2016, and construction began that year. A number of detours are under way right now. I will say to the hon. member that we are working hard to learn from our past experiences, both good and bad, and apply those lessons.

Oil Transportation

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we are hoping to have Alberta's first pipeline to tidewater in more than 60 years approved, thanks to the hard work put in by the former Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition. Still, TMX will not fix the oil backlog overnight, and it will take years to build this pipeline. To the Minister of Energy: what will you do to move our resources to market while we wait for TMX to be built? Surely, your strategy includes much more than just social media posts from the much-hyped war room.

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, November 29, 2016, is a date that we all remember. It was that date that the federal Liberals approved Trans Mountain for the first time. On that date the former Premier was in Ottawa, and at the same time they cancelled Northern Gateway. That's the legacy of that party opposite in getting pipelines built. In the meantime we are standing up for Alberta, and we will get pipelines built.

Mr. Sabir: I think we can talk about that pipeline some other day, but today we are talking about TMX.

Given that on May 22 the Premier's second-favourite columnist wrote in the Calgary Herald that this government would cancel oil-by-rail contracts that our government signed even if it took legislation to do so and given that the Premier himself said that he would move the 120,000 barrels of oil that we planned to ship per day to the private sector, can the minister please tell this House exactly how many barrels they have successfully moved to a private company?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The oil-by-rail contracts signed by the previous government were a boondoggle. They were absolutely devastating for this province. They were not on commercially responsible terms. We made a commitment in the election. We were very clear that we would not be in the business of competing with the private sector and we would not be honouring contracts signed by that government on the eve of an election campaign that were wrong for Albertans.

Mr. Sabir: And your answer was zero barrels.

Given that nearly a month after the Herald column ran, this House has heard no progress from this government on oil by rail and given that moving oil by rail is a medium-term strategy to protect jobs and generate $2 billion in revenue for the provincial treasury, to the minister. Come clean to this House. Are you going to legislate away the oil-by-rail contracts this session and put countless jobs at risk, all to fulfill your Premier's ideological fantasies?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, we will be taking steps that are in the best interests of all Albertans. I reviewed those contracts, and those contracts that were signed would cause a $1.5 billion loss to Albertans. The profits that they were talking about were some artificial numbers on potential income tax returns and upticks to royalties. I would note that that would . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have no problem, as I think we have seen, with heckling inside the Chamber. However, when the volume reaches a level that I am unable to hear the minister, you leave me no choice but to intervene.

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, those contracts were at a $1.5 billion loss to Alberta taxpayers. We're taking the best interests of taxpayers and Albertans in mind, and we will not be proceeding with those contracts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows is rising to ask a question.

Racism and Religious Discrimination

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Quebec has pushed through a disturbing piece of legislation that bans Muslim and Sikh teachers, lawyers, police officers, and judges from wearing turbans and hijabs at work. Albertans and Canadians have been horrified by this attack on religious and ethnic minorities, but our Premier hasn't said a peep. So to the Premier: will you break your silence and condemn this racist bill?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the first freedom mentioned in our Constitution is the freedom of religion. Our party has always stood for protecting Albertans' freedom of religion. We are for treating all Albertans equally no matter what their background, no matter who they are, no matter who they love, no matter their faith. We have always stood by that. We will continue to stand by that, and we encourage all provinces in this country to do the same.

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, given that this past week our Premier had dinner with the Premier of Quebec and given that it has been known for some time that Quebec would be pursuing its racist Bill 21, to the Premier: did you raise concerns about this bill during dinner with the Premier of Quebec?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, let me be clear for the hon. member. We condemn all forms of racism, full stop. No exceptions. Every time. Having said that, I'll admit that I haven't read the Quebec bill. But we absolutely are against all forms of racism, period.

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, given that we have seen the government repeatedly protect racist white supremacists and Islamophobic candidates and party members and given that this is totally out of step with Albertans' values of freedom, tolerance, and openness, to the Premier: will you commit to antiracism training for all members of your government?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member ought to look around and see our diverse caucus from across this great province. We stand against racism in all its forms. We always have, and we always will. The hon. member should be happy to know that. I believe that should more than answer his question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Road Construction and Wetland Conservation

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent years Calgarians have raised concerns about the environmental impacts of the ring road, especially on the wetlands. Some concerned citizens even appeared before the Environmental Appeals Board in 2017. They obtained a decision forcing a former minister to release an order protecting several key wetlands. Now, ironically, the previous government, who hold themselves as heroic defenders of the environment, failed to enforce its own environmental protection measures. Can the Minister of Environment and Parks please update us on the status of this enforcement?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. The former government delayed many things when it came to the environment and really went out of their way not to work with the people of Alberta. Specifically to the issue that he's referring to, I'm going to have to get back to him on that issue.

But I think it's important to recognize the different approach you'll see in the Alberta Environment and Parks file going forward compared to the former government, an approach that will focus on balance, working with recreation users, economic users, and making sure that we conserve our important environment as well as working with all the different agencies looking for approvals.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that it is our understanding that the ministerial order was not enforced and that the designated wetlands are significantly important to the residents in the area, can the Minister of Environment and Parks please share what our government is doing to address their concerns?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not aware of the ministerial order that the hon. member is referring to. But, again, we have heard often over the last few weeks about hard times that Albertans have had being able to contact the former environment minister as well as the former department. That's something that we're working very, very hard on for his constituents and all constituents, not just from the government caucus but as well from the opposition caucus. We'll continue to work to provide improvements to be able to make sure that there is better access to the department so that these types of questions can be answered better in the future.

The Speaker: Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the previous NDP government failed to implement its own ministerial order to protect these wetlands and that we are now in a situation where the damage to these wetlands is irreversible, can the minister please share what our government's approach will be to these kinds of concerns in the future?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's another good example of what was taking place under the NDP as they continued to delay talking about these important issues, not providing confirmation, either approval or nonapproval, of certain issues so that people knew which way to go forward. It was a pretty common approach of the NDP, of course, to not even reach out to anybody.

We know how bad the former minister failed when it came to consultation, for example in the Bighorn, by not even consulting the three First Nation communities that were there. This government will have a different approach that's much more focused on working with Albertans and finding the proper balances as we go forward.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has a question.

2:30 Health Care User Fees and Wait Times

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was proud to stand in this House and introduce Bill 203, An Act to Protect Public Health Care. This bill, if passed, will amend the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act to prohibit extra-billing for insurance services and to prevent fee-based private clinics from billing individuals for insured services. Now, this Premier seems to be rather elusive as he jet-sets around the country, so I will try this question. Do you support, Mr. Premier, Bill 203? Do you support a prohibition on extra-billing and preventing fee-based private clinics?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take the opportunity to talk about, again, what the opposition wants to keep talking about, our Premier travelling and working to build a coalition with like-minded Premiers across the country, and how refreshing it is to see that. This side of the House is proud of it. Albertans are proud of it. I hope that the Premier continues to do that. We're now going to have a solid coalition across this country, something that we've never had before because the NDP would not try to stand up to Justin Trudeau. Instead, as you know, they went out of their way each and every time that they could to vote with Justin Trudeau, to shore him up, and to stand with the Trudeau Liberals against Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. It's quite clear that this Premier is evading Alberta so he can open the door for private health care, which is very disturbing to me. Given that I worry that this government will never allow my Bill 203 to return from committee to a debate in this House and given that I believe the reason they would avoid debating my bill in this House is so they can avoid taking a position in support of universal public health care, to the Minister of Health: will you stand today in support of Bill 203? One way or the other, will you ensure that the contents of this bill are brought forward as legislation to this Chamber?

The Speaker: I would remind the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford that that was a very good use of a preamble. Unfortunately, after question 4 they are not allowed.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The quick answer is no. I, at least, will not be supporting Bill 203, not as it's written. I think that as we're looking at the 50 to 80 physicians in this province that this bill would actually affect – we see the previous government completely ignoring the rest of the system, ignoring their record for four years and wait times going up and patients seeing worse service and the costs in Alberta Health Services increasing astronomically. We're going to be focusing as a government on patients.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Feehan: And there it is: American health care right on the doorstep.

Given that the Premier has stumped for the Cambie surgeries corporation and its assembly-line approach to health care and given that the CEO of Cambie is currently leading the charge in court to destroy Canada's public health care system and given that the Premier, while touting Cambie, also implied that surgeons in our current system are lazy, can the Premier or the minister explain why this UCP government feels the need to constantly insult hard-working men and women who are literally saving lives in Alberta hospitals as we speak?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While we're talking about people and Albertans who are being insulted, let's talk about everybody who is waiting for open-heart surgery in this province. Let's talk about all the Albertans who had a 50 per cent increase in their wait for open-heart surgery. That's an insult to those patients, insults that that member's party totally forgot. The cataract surgery wait times increased nearly 30 per cent, and hip replacement wait times increased nearly 30 per cent in the four years that that government was in power.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: I would just remind the... [interjections] Hon. members. I would remind the Minister of Health: direct your comments through the chair. You might make reference to that organization, but certainly you wouldn't make reference to that member.

Edmonton-Riverview has the call.

Support for Seniors

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seniors built this province and deserve to live in dignity, close to their family and friends. Our government invested significantly in housing and other programs to support seniors. So far this UCP government has described our commitment to vulnerable Albertans as reckless spending and poor fiscal planning. These comments are shameful. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: since you don't like the commitment we've made to seniors, what parts of it do you plan on cutting?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We, this government, care about seniors. We are looking at all program services, particularly for seniors, to make sure we continue to provide high-quality services and programs to all Alberta seniors, and we do it carefully.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that despite the minister's assurances that seniors will receive "all the funding [seniors] need and want," her government repeatedly says that there is much government waste and given that perhaps she's referring to the elder abuse programs, which serve extremely vulnerable seniors in tragic situations – sadly, the prevalence of elder abuse in Alberta is about 10 per cent of the senior population – to the minister: will you commit the funding for these programs, or are they part of what you consider waste?

Ms Pon: As I mentioned, again, Mr. Speaker, we care about the seniors. I was on a road trip for eight days and visited 16 communities and over 1,000 senior stakeholders to listen to the concerns and consult on what is the best way to serve our seniors and how to care for them. That's what we're going to do and use our taxpayer money carefully to plan for our seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, given that we have over 600,000 seniors living in our province currently and given that over the next couple of decades that number will double and given that seniors deserve to live in dignity and the programs that serve them are not government waste, what is the UCP government doing to prepare for this growth? How are you going to cut this apparent waste and still support seniors?

The Speaker: The minister.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be clear, if we continue to implement the NDP programs and policies from before, we will be running almost $100 billion in deficit. Instead, this government is doing careful line-by-line analysis of the priorities to make life better for seniors and for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis has a question.

Trade Mission to Asia and Agricultural Exports

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The constituents of Banff-Kananaskis know the importance of international competition and attracting international investment first-hand through our history of competing on the international stage. Our agriculture industry is a key economic driver, and our farmers work very hard every day to feed the world. Given that Alberta's agricultural industry has been facing challenges due to international trade restrictions on beef and canola, can the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism tell us how her trade mission to Japan and South Korea addressed industry concerns?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It was a great privilege to attend this trade mission on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and promote Alberta's canola, beef, wheat, and pork sectors. We met with many businesses that are using Alberta's canola and beef products either in a processing or front-line sales capacity. This government is proud of Alberta, and we worked hard to spread the word that we are open for business.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that Banff-Kananaskis is home to many hard-working farmers and ranchers and given that the success of our agricultural sector directly impacts the livelihood of Alberta's economy as a whole and given that Canada recently signed on to the comprehensive and progressive agreement for trans-Pacific partnership, also known as the CPTPP, to pursue market success and further given that Japan recently lifted their restriction on Canadian beef after 16 years of restrictions, can the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism tell us how her time in Japan benefited our beef sector?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for the question. While in Japan I had the privilege of meeting with dozens of industry and business officials who are eager to sell Alberta's beef in supermarkets across Japan. We were happy to promote our sector as safe, reliable, and of the highest quality. These included entities such as COSCO Japan and many other businesses and front-line sales entities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that South Korea is an emerging market for our agriculture sector and a new frontier for international trade development and given that Alberta is seeking to diversify our international trade markets in order to achieve a competitive edge that everyone in our province can be proud of, can the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism show how her time in South Korea served our agricultural sector overall?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. While in South Korea I met with Korean businesses that are planning on investments in Alberta's agricultural industry, including Canada's beef and potato industry. The member will be happy to know that we were also able to add several meetings with the tourism and oil and gas sectors, that were strictly for our delegation, in order to take full advantage of the mission from an Alberta perspective.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will move to the most anticipated portion of the day, points of order. I encourage you to exit the Chamber expeditiously if possible.

Hey, McIver.

Mr. McIver: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you to the hon. Minister of Transportation. Obviously, it would be inappropriate to use the name of any member in the Chamber, and if I did that, I sincerely apologize and withdraw.

Hon. members, we are at points of order. The first point of order was raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly rise under 23(h), (i), and (j). At approximately 1:56, while the hon. Government House Leader was responding to questions being given by the hon. opposition members, in one of the responses it was even difficult for me, as close as I am to the Government House Leader, to hear his response. I noticed that you even heard it as well, but it directly came from the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West, when he said directly in his comments, which appeared to be towards the Government House Leader, "You are such a liar," which, as you know, are very unparliamentary words and under (h), "makes [false] allegations against another Member; (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member"; and (j) are certainly unparliamentary. I would say, without having the benefit of the Blues, sir, that it was certainly loud enough to not only catch your attention but something that could even have been picked up by Hansard. I would ask that that member certainly apologize to the Government House Leader and to this House and withdraw any sort of comments in the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West is rising.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I think the point of order was indeed in order. You know, I was perhaps getting a little excited about all this closure business. I think I said it probably the first time, and then the fourth and the fifth and the sixth times I think everybody heard. I do apologize to the hon. Government House Leader and ask that I could withdraw my comments.

The Speaker: I consider the matter concluded.

Points of order 2, 3, and 4 raised by the hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Epithets

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I can – if it works for you and, of course, the Opposition House Leader, I'd be happy to roll all three of these into one in the interests of time.

Last week, Mr. Speaker, in your ruling, which can be found on page 799 of Alberta Hansard, June 13, 2019, edition – I know you read them all every night – about the opposition referring to Bill 8 as "Hate," your comments were:

I ask members, as we move forward, to choose their language carefully. Ask yourself whether your intention is to insult or to inflame debate or to levy an accusation against a member opposite or – and perhaps this is the important part – to knowingly cause disorder. If so, I would suggest that you find another means to make your case.

You further remarked:

However, this ruling should not be considered carte blanche to proceed with using the mock bill title Bill Hate on a regular basis.

I think it's quite clear that the intention of the members opposite is to insult or inflame debate on what is a sensitive and very important topic. I think we are headed to a point where any use of the term "Bill Hate" in this Chamber will lead to points of order being called, which will disrupt question period – we already saw it today – and could very well lead to a point where order cannot be maintained in this Chamber. Again, Mr. Speaker, I think the opposition has reached that stage that you referred to and that you should instruct them to stop using Bill Hate inside question period, which is not a time for debate. It's a time for questions and answers.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is not a point of order. I appreciate what you had said last week. I will note that on the three occasions that the Government House Leader reports that our member used the term "Bill Hate," there wasn't a peep in this House. It's not when the House was raucous. There wasn't noise. There wasn't heckling. People weren't jumping up and down. In fact, it was dead quiet in here except for the Government House Leader jumping up on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker, I'll remind you that for years members of the opposition, while we were government, referred to the job-killing carbon tax over and over and over and over. They did that to try to cause disorder. We didn't call it a point of order. It wasn't ruled as a point of order.

This is not a point of order; it's a difference in opinion. It did not cause disorder in this House. I can tell you that there were other words today that caused disorder, but that wasn't one of them. Again, this place has a history of the opposition naming bills or nicknaming bills. In fact, the opposition even did it to my title when I was minister of economic development and trade. There are numerous examples in Hansard for many, many years, including the Government House Leader himself using a variety of different names to name bills when we were government. Those were not ruled as points of order, Mr. Speaker.

I think that if the Government House Leader doesn't want to waste the House's time, he should stop jumping up on a point of order when there isn't one to jump up on.

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you for your interjections.

I, too, have the benefit of the ruling from June 13, 2019, on page 799. I also would just like to provide some context with respect to that ruling as well as with respect to other debate that has taken place here in the Chamber over the last number of days. I would also make a comment that it sounds to me like the Official Opposition House Leader is asking me to rule on things that may or may not have been ruled on in the past by previous Speakers. Of course, I am hesitant to make a comment on what may or may not have happened in other situations.

Although we do have the benefit of precedent on our side and precedent has ruled on a number of different occasions on this particular issue, what I will say is that in the ruling from June 13 I provided some significant commentary around the times in which it may or may be likely to cause disorder. Specifically, in that ruling I referenced the use of Bill Hate during question period, which is an opportunity for questions and answers, not an opportunity for debate.

I would conclude by saying that I am yet hesitant to rule Bill Hate out of order during question period. I would say again that I will be listening closely, that it would be hard to imagine another time or a scenario where Bill Hate used during question period would be unlikely to cause disorder. As such, I will be left with very little option but to deliver a similar ruling to that of Speaker Zwozdesky in 2013 when he ruled "climate change denier" as something that is likely to create disorder. At this point, the point of order is not well taken but noted.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, is there still an opportunity to seek clarification on your ruling?

The Speaker: There is no opportunity under – I suppose there is an opportunity under Standing Order 13(2), or you might question the chair. But I can tell you – perhaps you should have a seat while I'm speaking – that what the chair is likely to rule is that I have just gone through a thorough explanation of why I ruled, in which case I consider that point of order to be dealt with. But if you want to try me, feel free to do so.

Point of order 5, raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(h), (i), (j). Around 2:05, I believe it was, the Premier in his comments, in his response to one of the questions, talked about how the NDP is against the oil and gas sector. I rise on a point of order because, again, it is, I think, imperative in this House that members speak the truth when they are speaking in this place, and there's nothing that could be further from the truth. That comment clearly was intended to cause disorder, to paint a very false picture, which for me is concerning. Again, for those that may have tuned into question period for that moment to hear the Premier say, "Well, yes, the NDP is against the oil and gas sector," I can tell you that if you look at the history of the modernized royalty review, making us more competitive, introducing the capital investment tax credit, other means, including fighting for pipelines, promoting our oil and gas sector, getting federal dollars for orphaned wells to put people back to work, investing in different programs to use wells that were already drilled for geothermal . . . [interjections] I think I have the floor, Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Speaker, the comment and the reason I stand up on a point of order: that was clearly done to cause disorder. It is completely false. This isn't a difference of opinion. It is patently false, and for that I ask that the Premier or the House leader on his behalf withdraw and apologize.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader is rising.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's pretty rich for the Opposition House Leader to rise on this point of order given that the member that sits behind him has been seen all over videotapes on the steps of this very building chanting, "No more approvals" at antipipeline rallies. It's pretty rich when that member's leader stood by as Energy East was killed, supported Northern Gateway being killed. Their federal party, who they belong to – they are the same party, as you know – has a leader that travels across this country protesting and saying that they want to shut down our oil and gas industry. It is utterly ridiculous.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would submit to you that what the Premier said is true, but that is also irrelevant. This is a matter of debate.

The Speaker: If there has ever been an example of a matter for debate, I think that point of order has proved it. I consider it dealt with and not well taken.

The Opposition House Leader on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-South.

Point of Order

Remarks off the Record

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(h), (i), (j). It was around 2:05 or 2:06. The Member for Edmonton-Glenora was asking a question and referred to the 100-megatonne cap, that was mentioned, at which point in time the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka used expletives and said: yeah; it did bleep all. That kind of language in this House is not only unparliamentary; it's unbecoming of members, especially used in this Chamber. I think what's important here is that members are aware of what they say, whether the microphone is on or off, that there are people and often children in the galleries listening. That unparliamentary language is, first of all, unparliamentary, but second of all, it was used to cause disorder and successfully did that. So I would ask that the Government House Leader or the member apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the Opposition House Leader is worried about decorum and how this place looks,

I suggest that he take some time this evening to go back and watch question period and watch the ridiculous behaviour of him and his colleagues inside this place.

As for this point of order, it's not a point of order. I don't have the benefit of the Blues. I don't know what he's referring to, and I will leave it at that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity just to add a bit of my own observation. I do sit next to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, and I did indeed overhear that particular remark. Indeed, we're exposed to some colourful commentary from that member quite often during question period and at times during debate. I referenced it during my own debate on Bill 8. While I recognize that you may not have heard that comment and it may not be contained in the Blues, I would suggest that that member give some due consideration to his own leader's admonition: work hard, stay humble, and earn every vote.

The Speaker: I am prepared to rule. [interjection] I'm prepared to rule. I'm happy to hear from the hon. member. I think that it would be reasonable and prudent for me to make reference to Beauchesne's 486(4), that says:

Remarks [that] do not appear on the public record and are therefore private conversations not heard by the Chair do not invite the intervention of the Speaker, although Members have apologized for hurtful remarks uttered in such circumstances.

What I would say is that if, in fact, members are using coarse language that is certainly unparliamentary, they do take the opportunity to apologize to the House should that be warranted. However, in the current circumstances I am unable to rule that that is or was not a point of order as I did not hear that. However, I will be interested to listen and see. I do have the benefit of the Blues, and it isn't recorded in the Blues, but I will have the opportunity to review that later as I'd like to encourage all members to use language as parliamentary as humanly possible.

Point of order 8, raised by the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, those were rolled into the point of order we already addressed.

The Speaker: Wonderful. Thank you.

Orders of the Day Committee of Supply

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call Committee of Supply to order.

Interim Supply Estimates 2019-20 General Revenue Fund and Lottery Fund

The Chair: Hon. members, before we commence consideration of interim supply, I would like to review briefly the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak ...

- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the minister's behalf, may speak, and
- (f) for the time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses [(a), (b), and] (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

During the first rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the first rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes. Provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking times, with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period.

Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 20, approved by the Assembly yesterday, the time allotted for consideration is three hours.

I will now recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move the estimates.

Mr. Toews: Sure. Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move the 2019-2020 interim supply estimates for the Legislative Assembly and government.

I'm privileged to rise in the House to present the interim supply estimates. I would like to begin my remarks today by talking a little bit about what I've learned from my first month in this role. First of all, I've learned from day 1 about the dedication and incredible hard work of the officials I'm privileged to serve beside in Treasury Board and the Ministry of Finance. From the very first day on the job they've demonstrated the most important tenet of the public service, and that is fearless advice and loyal implementation. I know they provided the same high standard of professional advice, insight, and policy analysis that the members opposite had access to when they were privileged to sit on this side of the House.

Now, I cannot speak to the extent to which members opposite were prepared to take that advice. I say that because what I have found to date is that there is a great deal of work for this government to do to return Alberta's government to a high standard of fiscal prudence, to meticulous budget management, and ultimately to the demonstration of respect for the money that Albertans send to us through their tax contributions. I can speak for all of my colleagues on this side of the House when I say that the administration of Alberta's taxpayers' dollars is a serious and solemn endeavour.

When our fellow citizens go to work every day, they are providing for their families, and they are working hard to give their children every advantage. Like every one of us, they are working to make their life better and better for their families and to give their children advantages that they did not have, and when they go to work every day, they send a portion of their earnings to us. So I say to every Albertan, whether they are working in our oil fields, in a restaurant, in an office, or whether they are out on a farm or a ranch: thank you. When you make that incredible effort for yourself and your families, you're also building Alberta and helping to provide services and programs that lift up everyone.

I also know that many Albertans have suffered over the past four years from the severe economic downturn overseen by the previous government. I'm keenly aware of that effort and those sacrifices as I stand before this Chamber today to ask for funding that will continue to provide services and programs while we, in turn, work very hard on behalf of Albertans to build a prudent budget, a budget that fulfills the promises that we made to Albertans when we sought their votes and the ability to form government. It is because of our respect and admiration for that effort that we are taking a careful approach to how we spend every one of those hard-earned dollars. We've undergone an extensive process to ensure that we are securing the funding necessary to continue to provide the services and programs that Albertans have come to expect, and we've also paid careful attention to the work that is required to ensure that our campaign commitments will be implemented. Of course, we have very high expectations of the work of the MacKinnon panel, expectations that we are confident they will deliver on.

What needs to be understood is that this is not a budget. These are supply estimates to continue providing quality services to Albertans until we table a full budget in the fall. These interim supply estimates represent the work we have undertaken in my ministry and across all ministries to ensure that government has the funding required to continue to operate while we prepare our first budget. This will allow the business of our province to continue until the full 2019-2020 estimates are approved before the end of November. When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $107 million for the Legislative Assembly, $27.8 billion in expense funding, $2.4 billion in capital investment funding, $786 million in financial transactions funding for the government, and $943 million for the transfer from the lottery fund to the general revenue fund. These estimates will be fully debated when the budget documents are tabled in the fall. Approval of interim supply estimates pending the release and approval of the budget will allow the Assembly the time it needs to review and debate those plans.

Now, my colleagues and I will be pleased to answer questions from Members of the Assembly. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

We'll now move to the opposition members of caucus for your first 20-minute block. Hon. Member for St. Albert, would you like to go back and forth with the minister?

Ms Renaud: Yes, I would if that's acceptable to the minister.

The Chair: Minister, do you agree?

Okay. Member, please proceed.

Ms Renaud: Great. Thank you. I'd like to focus right now on Community and Social Services. First, I'd like to talk a little about AISH, which is assured income for the severely handicapped. The AISH budget for 2018 is approximately $1.133 billion, an $85 million increase over budget 2017, which is approximately a 9 per cent increase. February 2019 saw 62,745 AISH recipients, with approximately 50 new applications received across Alberta each day. What are the projections for the number of new AISH recipients for the next budget year or interim?

Mr. Toews: Could I politely ask the hon. member just to repeat the last part of that question?

Ms Renaud: I'd be happy to. What are the projections for the number of new AISH recipients for the next budget year or interim? Maybe I'll just add a little bit to that. Was this projection influenced by the AISH intake process changes, that being centralized intake, digital upgrades, that sort of thing?

The Chair: The minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this point in time I don't have that detailed data in front of us. I'll look forward to providing that and advising the minister to provide that information. What I can say is that, again, with Community and Social Services, as with all ministries, this is not a budget. Interim supply is simply the resources required to fund government services between April 1 and the time we roll out the budget. In this case, funding is available until November 30.

Ms Renaud: Yes, I do understand what this is. Because applications have continued to come in, it's important that we understand where they're coming from and how many are coming.

Changes to intake processes have been implemented in the large urban centres, the Calgary and Edmonton regions, and have reduced decision wait time, which has a financial implication by approximately two weeks. What are the plans to extend this work, to streamline AISH processes – again, deficiencies were pointed out by the Auditor General – in communities outside of Calgary and Edmonton, so in rural communities that are also really struggling with the number of AISH applications they receive?

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will commit to the member opposite that we will take those concerns and pass them on to the minister and provide any response that's appropriate.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. Just on that theme, will the centralized AISH intake process, which reduces the time to get to the eligibility decision, be implemented in areas outside of Calgary and Edmonton? I guess I'm asking: is this the plan? Will these processes, these digital upgrades that have been introduced to the large urban centres like Calgary and Edmonton, be expanded to rural communities? If the minister doesn't have that answer, could he commit to us that he will give us those answers in writing?

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Pon: Madam Chair, thank you for the questions. Yes, it's in the plan. We've been working on it. I've been working with our deputy's office. The mixture that we're working on will make it streamlined, more or less, easier for the seniors and for the AISH program. It is planned, and it's making progress.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just for clarification, AISH doesn't extend beyond 65 years of age. I just wanted to go back and ask about the projected cost savings or if there's, I guess, a thought to looking at this when the government will be budgeting for these added pressures, the projected cost savings of a reduced number of appeals due to difficult AISH application processes.

Again, going back to my earlier comment, The Auditor General spent a great deal of time informing the previous Legislature about the difficulties in that AISH application process. There has been a fair amount of work done under previous governments to streamline that, and I guess we're seeing these shorter wait times for eligibility decisions. Can the government let us know about their work or the work they'll undertake around projecting cost savings for those processes?

Thank you.

3:10

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. We will provide a response to the member opposite. Again, there will be complete details when this government rolls out a budget, but in the meantime we will provide a response.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister. I'd like to switch over to another area, which is PDD, persons with developmental disabilities. In the fall of 2018 it was noted that there were approximately 60 to 80 people on wait-lists for PDD supports, with average wait times of 377 days. Edmonton and the south region had the highest number of people on wait-lists by far. What are the projected increases to address these wait-lists? Are the regions in most need being targeted? If the minister doesn't have that information readily available, if he could commit to giving us those answers in writing, that would be most appreciated.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. We will certainly provide a response to the member opposite. I think it's probably appropriate to note that every ministry and certainly the Ministry of Community and Social Services will be working to find efficiencies during the weeks and months ahead up until the time that we prepare our budget. Again, we're committed to Albertans to deliver the services that they expect during this time, really between April 1 and the time that we roll out a budget this fall, and at the same time look for efficiencies and improved methodologies to continue to deliver these services.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Minister. Currently under PDD funding there are two main streams. One is that the families or people with disabilities can contract service providers, whether they're nonprofit or private, and that is how they are funded. There's also family-managed support, which is that the family undertakes the care of their family member and hires staff and all of that. There are only two right now – two – family-managed resource centres in Calgary and Edmonton. Those centres assist families to co-ordinate the work that is required to undertake those services, whether that's helping with remittances, staff training, staff hiring, and that exists to support people with disabilities to manage the funding that they receive. It's a great deal of work.

The UCP platform clearly described a commitment to increase the capacity of FMS, which is family-managed supports. Now, that is certainly great, that families will be allowed to choose how they want to support their family members. However, it's really important to address the need to support families that are undertaking this funding mechanism. What are the cost projections of the number of people who will choose the route of funding with additional support? Obviously, there's been some thought given to this stream of funding if it was in the UCP platform. I'd just like to know if there are any projections that sort of pushed that issue to the front to cause it to be on the platform document, and will we see this reflected in interim supply?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will just respond to the member opposite that those details will be forthcoming during the budget process. Again, I'll just add that I know our Minister of Community and Social Services is actively looking for efficiencies and at the same time committed to delivering the services that Albertans expect during this time. I think within every ministry we're going to be looking for increased efficiencies, removing redundancies wherever possible, and every minister of every department and certainly the government as a whole will look forward to presenting a budget with detail this fall.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Thank you to the minister. Just a word of caution that this sector, people with disabilities, has certainly been the target of efficiencies in the past. With the incredible wait-lists and the volume of people that are involved, just a word of caution on what that looks like.

I'd just like to go back again to PDD funding. One of the things that the previous government, our government, undertook was a PDD review. It was really quite a different review. It involved stakeholders from across the province and multiple different methods. One of the discussion points in the what-we-heard document from communities all over Alberta addressed PDD eligibility.

One of those old eligibility requirements focused on IQ, currently people under an IQ score of 70, which is – let's be honest – an old standardized test that is hardly relevant anymore. To the minister: will this government commit to introducing the results of that review and also costing out what the difference is in terms of people needing supports and cost if the PDD eligibility criteria are changed, specifically the removal of IQ measure, and will the minister commit to these answers in writing?

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will pass that request on to our Minister of Community and Social Services. Again, there will be full details rolling out as we roll the budget out this fall.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. Another question. There is a line under this ministry called specialized community supports. Those typically include behavioural consultation services, professional assessment services, and counselling. They are regularly oversubscribed. I've heard of people being on wait-lists for that service for well over a year. Given the projected intake into PDD, what will this be expanded to?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. My responses may sound a little bit repetitive, but we're excited to deliver a full, detailed budget this fall that will lay out the priorities and fiscal plans of every department. We look forward to doing it.

Ms Renaud: Thank you to the minister. Currently persons with developmental disabilities does not support people with disabilities who live on-reserve. People are forced to leave the reserve to obtain services. PDD policy states that services are not delivered on-reserve, yet the PDD program is an in-scope program of the agreement for the funding and administration of social services, the ARA. PDD has not yet accessed this funding source and is not currently part of the bill-back process. The 2017-2018 number of indigenous people served is 553: on-reserve six, off-reserve 547. Can the government describe or explain to us if there is work focusing on this change to allow people to stay in their homes, stay in their communities, and receive the support they need?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. We can, again, certainly pass that question on to the minister. I would just pose this question back to members opposite. When you were in government, which was not many weeks ago, was there a reason why you didn't move forward with that initiative at that time?

Ms Renaud: Well, thank you to the minister. I'm going to switch gears a little bit – actually, I just wanted to respond to that. One of the reasons that we undertook the PDD review was to address these really serious concerns that we'd been hearing for years, not just four years but decades. I am anxiously awaiting this government's release of that review, and if indeed the review requires more work to get to the place where there are robust recommendations, then I look forward to hearing that.

Now I'm going to switch gears a little bit and talk about the disability advocate. In reference to I think it was page 1, after consulting with Albertans with disabilities, our government was proud to announce the first-ever disability advocate in Alberta's history. Can you confirm if the funding for this office will remain protected, and what are your plans for this office in the future? I would also like to add – actually, no. I'll go back. I'll stop and let you answer.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, we'll refer that question to the minister for a response. I think I'm happy to say that we look forward to delivering a full budget with the full details of our plans to go forward in each department.

Ms Renaud: Thank you to the minister. In terms of income support, which is another program in reference to page 1, how many more Albertans are you expecting on the expected-to-work caseload, and what are you going to do about it?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, we will refer that question to the minister, and we'll look forward to rolling out full details upon the delivery of a budget.

Ms Renaud: Focusing on sexual assault survivors' funding, we know that the previous government committed $8.1 million in increased funding for sexual assault survivors. Do these interim supply numbers include an ongoing annual commitment to SAS? Is this an increase from the previous government?

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. The cash resources that are reflected in the interim supply certainly reflect the resources required to deliver services, high-quality services, to Albertans until the time we roll out the budget.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Okay. Thank you. I want to just skip back a little bit to persons with developmental disabilities. Certainly, with over 12,000, I believe the number is, receiving supports from PDD, there is a significant percentage, certainly not all, but there is percentage, of people on that list who are able and willing to work but are unable to work or do not have jobs for a variety of reasons. The previous government, our government, undertook some steps, I think, that were quite important. One of those, when we looked at changes for AISH, is increasing the amount that people with disabilities could earn while on AISH without their AISH being impacted, sort of encouraging that transition. We also introduced an internship program. I guess my question is: can the minister talk a little bit about the thought around employment for persons with disabilities and how that will impact future funding? Do you see that as a way to find efficiencies?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll refer this, the detailed question regarding program spending and rollout, to the minister, but I would like to talk a little bit about job creation and the importance of and dignity of a job. I think that it's very clear that one of the greatest dignities that we can have is the dignity of a job, dignity to provide for ourselves and for our families. So it's a great priority of this government to create additional job opportunities for all Albertans, including for Albertans with disabilities. Of course, we have rolled out a series of measures to get that accomplished. As you know, we've rolled out the job-creation tax cut, which is a key plank in terms of attracting investment into this province and providing jobs and opportunities as businesses come into this province and invest again. We know that that is a prerequisite to providing a sustainable job growth for Albertans. Many, many Albertans at this point in time are out of work. We find that unacceptable, and it's been a priority for this government to reverse that trend.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Thank you for that. Just to follow up, I can't think of unemployed people with disabilities that are going to benefit from a large corporate tax cut, but okay.

Can the minister talk to us a little bit about that one of the things the previous government did was that we got rid of some regulation that allowed employers to apply for a minimum-wage exemption for people with disabilities? Now this government has introduced legislation to pay people under 18 less than minimum wage. Can the minister tell us if people with disabilities who are under 18 will also receive a wage decrease?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. The reality is that in this province we have an incredibly underemployed demographic, and that is the youth in this province. You know, we've taken measures, multiple measures, to ensure that there are additional opportunities for all Albertans, including young Albertans, including Albertans with disabilities. Just to respond, I think, to the member opposite regarding the job-creation tax cut, individuals that are looking for a job, that want to be employed, individuals who will benefit from the dignity of a job and providing for themselves, will be benefited from this government creating a more competitive business environment, which will then attract investment and attract jobs for all Albertans.

The Chair: The hon. member. Go ahead.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I recognize that we have but a few seconds left in this 20-minute segment.

The Chair: Hon. member, are you wishing to go back and forth with the minister?

Mr. Shepherd: Yes, I would, if that's okay with the minister.

The Chair: Minister, is that agreeable?

Mr. Shepherd: Okay. I recognize that we have but a few seconds left in this 20-minute block, but I look forward to having the opportunity to continue afterwards.

I'd like to begin with talking a bit about continuing care. Now, we recognize, Madam Chair, that the percentage of population aged 65 or older in our province is expected to grow by about 3 per cent during this government's first term, about 5 per cent over the next 10 years. That's nearly 300,000 new seniors here in our province. With that are certainly going to come some particular cost pressures, and it's my hope that this government, as ours did, is making some investments in planning.

The Chair: Hon. members, we are now on our second 20-minute block. I assume the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre will continue with the hon. Minister of Health. Do you wish to go back and forth?

Mr. Shepherd: If that's all right.

The Chair: Yes, it is.

All right. Member, please proceed.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. As I was saying, there are going to be some increased costs that will come with this. Our government had planned for that and had sort of made some increases in funds going forward. Now, the total amount for continuing care, excluding capital, in 2018-19 was about $2 billion. To the minister. Just wondering about this amount that we have here for health, just under $14 billion. In that, what portion is set aside, then, for total continuing care under the Ministry of Health, and does that include any amounts to plan for expected growth?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, just to add a little bit and to echo comments that the hon. Minister of Finance had said, this is our interim supply requirement for Health, and it reflects our commitment to maintaining our health care spending. The quick answer regarding continuing care: yes, we will be increasing capacity for long-term care through bringing back the ASLI grants and allowing that to be the method by which we bring further capacity in the system.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do recognize that this document is not a budget, but I would ask that we do have this time here to have this discussion. It's my job on behalf of my constituents to ask questions about the numbers that have been brought forward. When I have a single expense of $14 billion, I think it makes sense to ask some questions, and if the minister is able to provide any additional detail, I'd appreciate if he could do so in writing.

Moving along on that, Madam Chair, recognizing that there are also some other areas that are directly impacted by the expected growth in the population of seniors in the province of Alberta, one of those being the coverage for seniors in terms of pharmaceuticals and drugs, we know that we have an expected growth estimated of about 4.28 per cent on that coming up, so a total cost over the next 10 years likely of about $8 billion. I'm just wondering, then, for this minister, recognizing that in these cases we're also not only talking about seniors but in some cases they may be having their dependents: while I recognize that it can be difficult to estimate precisely, within this $14 billion can the minister provide any clarity on what amounts are intended to plan for growth in coverage for seniors and drugs?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, I can appreciate the hon. member's concerns about being given the three numbers in the interim supply. But this is interim supply. This is not a budget. This is, rather, about our cash-flow requirements to fund health care services until the full budget is presented in the fall. The NDP were quite clear when they introduced their interim supply last year.

Going back to the hon. member's question about seniors' drug benefits, I have to admit that the number doesn't sound familiar to me, Madam Chair. I think the correct number is $576 million, which is based on the number that was spent last year, I believe. So to the hon. member's question about what is going to be happening, I guess, until we get to the fall budget: the amount that we're spending is going to be based on the previous year's budget.

Mr. Shepherd: I thank the minister for that answer, and I apologize if I was unclear. The figure that I mentioned was an expected cost over 10 years, projected cost over a decade. That's why it was a little bit higher. But thank you to the minister. I appreciate the clarity on that.

Now, of course, also one of the other things that we provide for seniors is dental assistance. Again, that similarly has a projected expected growth of about 4.28 per cent. Within this interim supply have there been any plans, then, for dental and optical assistance for seniors in terms of anticipated growth and coverage for existing?

Mr. Shandro: Madam Chair, just to go back to our campaign commitment for our government during the last campaign, our campaign commitment was to maintain or increase spending. How that was interpreted as we go through this interim supply – just a quick answer for every program for the hon. member as he asks these questions – is that every program will be maintained.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate that answer from the minister. Indeed, that's good news, in a way, that they intend to maintain spending in all these areas. But, again, as I noted, particularly in the area of seniors, we can anticipate some significant growth in the population. With that is going to come growth in expectations and demand on each of these programs and these supports that we provide for seniors. That's not even counting the costs of inflation. So while I appreciate the minister's commitment to maintain funding, we need to recognize that if that is all this government will commit to doing, we are going to see a reduction in the amounts that are available to look after seniors in this province. Of course, I look forward to seeing what the overall plan is when they introduce their budget this fall.

Lastly, I did want to ask, then, just about the Alberta aids to daily living. I recognize that that is a program that does impact more than just seniors. It certainly impacts many of the people that my colleague the MLA for St. Albert had been discussing earlier. Just on that note, to the minister: would it be the same, then, for this particular program, with expected growth of about 4.28 per cent, that your intent at this time through this interim supply is to maintain spending from last year?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Madam Chair. A couple of questions to unpack there. I suppose the first one would be about increased pressures. To also highlight another one of our campaign commitments, for the first time in Alberta Health Services' 10-year history we have begun a review of their processes, of their policies, of their structure, to be able to find efficiencies. We are also finding efficiencies and working with our partners in the health care system, including AHS; for example, AHS continuing their work with organizational best practices to be able to find efficiencies throughout the system and be able to use that money to be able to reinvest in our front line.

Regarding the second question that the hon. member had regarding AADL, my memory is that this is a budget of $156 million. I may have to be reminded of what the question was about, but I can confirm that there would be maintaining of that budget, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate that, Minister. I appreciate having that additional clarity now.

Let's move on, then. Again, we have the larger number here of just under $14 billion. Now, we have had the introduction in this House of Bill 9, which is looking to force our public-sector workers back from the table in terms of having the opportunity to engage in the wage negotiations that they had duly negotiated and contracted. I imagine that ministers at the cabinet table may have been aware that this legislation was coming and the intentions of their government to break these contracts. I just wanted to ask the minister, then, in terms of the budgeted amount that we have here, is there any anticipation within this number of changes to salaries for nurses or other health care workers that are part of the groups with whom they are choosing not to follow through on the duly negotiated negotiations? Or are they anticipating that they aren't going to be looking at any of these wage rollbacks until after their budget is presented in the fall?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Madam Chair. First, because this is one of the first opportunities for me to be able to speak and reply to some of the rhetoric that we've heard from our friends on the other side when it comes to Bill 9, I reject all the premises that were proposed by the hon. member; for example, the rhetoric regarding forcing the front-line workers back to the negotiating table, that this is breaking some kind of a contract. I reject all those premises. But what I would say, if the hon. member is asking these questions, is to just to go back to that this isn't a budget. This is interim supply. This is our cash requirements to be able to get to a fall budget. This is not a budget.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I suppose we can have a discussion of what words mean and language, but I say that if you're passing a law to tell someone they can't do something, you are forcing them. That being the case, anyway, I appreciate the minister's clarity. I recognize again that this is not a budget, that this is interim supply. But this is an opportunity for me and my constituents to try to get a sense of the direction this government is headed. I realize we have some fairly broad platitudes from their platform, and I appreciate some of the clarification that the minister has been able to provide.

One other thing I would just ask about at this point, before I hand things off to one of my hon. colleagues, is in terms of EMS. Our government committed an additional $29 million last year to support EMS here in the province of Alberta. That included funds for new front-line staff, for some new ambulances, a few other pieces there. Within this $14 billion I'm just wondering, then, if this government is intending at this point to simply continue the amounts that we had put forward and continue on the level of spending we had set for EMS from last year, or if they're anticipating within this $14 billion any additional investment to address a growing need.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just to reiterate, interim supply, at least for this ministry, is based on the previous year's budget, so just a very easy answer for the hon. member.

As well, before that, I think the previous question might have been for me, and that is a question about the direction where this government is headed. The answer, quite simply, Madam Chair, from our campaign commitment is to maintain or increase health care spending. That's our direction. That's the direction where this government is heading, and that's what we are doing.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this point I think I'll cede the remaining time to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

The Chair: Member for Edmonton-Glenora, would you like to share your time with the minister and go back and forth?

Ms Hoffman: I would be very happy to. All of my questions are about education, but if either the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Education want to respond, I'm fine with either.

The Chair: Minister, do you agree to go back and forth?

Please proceed, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Mostly I understand that this is an interim supply bill not a budget, but with the information in the interim supply bill school jurisdictions are being asked to set their budgets, and most have already done that back in May. They're trying to figure out whether or not they have sufficient funds to deliver their planned programming. I'm hopeful we'll have answers today. If not, I'm fine with responses in writing.

My first question would be around the classroom improvement fund. Will school jurisdictions, boards, or individual charter or private schools be seeing funds directed to them to fund the classroom improvement fund?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you. As you did say, it is not a budget. Rather, it is the cash flow to fund government services until the fall budget is presented this fall. This is very similar to when you presented yours last year. The only thing I can say about the classroom improvement fund is that it did have an end date of August 31 of this year.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I think the point that many school authorities have been making to me is that they're making a plan now for the next school year. They can't – well, I guess they could – fire a bunch of teachers in the fall or hire a bunch in the fall. It certainly wouldn't be responsible planning for those kids. I think the clarity I heard is that there won't be funding passed on to boards for the classroom improvement fund when they receive their funding allocations at the end of September. I imagine that the budget will come after the end of September, but of course school jurisdictions receive their funding based on enrolment on September 30 and their funds thereafter. If I could just have that clarity, that would be great, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you for the question. I can just reiterate what we have already expressed to boards. They're very well aware that we are funding enrolment growth. It's been accounted for, and it's going to be funded, and we're going to continue building schools. They're very much aware of that. The rest will come forward in the budget when it comes.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. What about the school nutrition program? Is there any money through this interim supply allocation going towards funding for the school nutrition program?

Member LaGrange: Well, again, this is the cash that takes us to the budget time, and anything that was promised up until that point in time is covered through the interim fund.

Ms Hoffman: The question that school authorities are asking me is: "Are we feeding kids lunch in the fall? Are we going to get money to do that or not?" I just would appreciate some clarity about whether or not they should keep employing those folks and buying the bread to make sandwiches or if they should cancel those programs until after the fall budget and at that time determine whether or not they're in a position to rehire folks through the school nutrition program. It was an individual line item before, so I'm wondering: are they going to receive a transfer to fund that line item?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Again, thank you for the question. I certainly understand. I was a trustee for 11-plus years, so I know the challenges. But at this point in time we have given them all the information we can. Once the budget comes out, we'll be able to share more, for sure.

Ms Hoffman: Okay. What about the per-pupil funding? Are there any changes to the existing formula? I know that there has been messaging from the Finance minister and now the Education minister around funding enrolment growth, but is it going to be the same base funding for enrolment growth that people had previously? Is the per-pupil funding level being maintained, or are there changes to the existing formula? How many new students are they anticipating?

Member LaGrange: As far as the number of students that will be funded on enrolment growth, it will be all the new students, and we anticipate that being between 14,000 and 15,000 new students, or 2.2 per cent. As far as the actual per-student funding, that will be something that will come forward in the budget, as you well know how those things work.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. Through you, Madam Chair, I guess the challenge is that I do know how those things work and that usually staffing is done by this point in the year, most people are getting ready for holidays, and most teachers would know whether or not they have a job for the fall before a delayed fall budget, which is one of the reasons why I think it's so important to give that clarity at this point. There are hundreds of teachers across this province that I've heard from – and there are probably others that I haven't – through their leadership, that have said that they're cutting positions because of the lack of clarity. So I'm seeking that clarity. Is the funding formula changing for the per-pupil enrolment?

Member LaGrange: Once again, this is interim supply – it's not a budget – so I can't share that information. I've been meeting with boards, and they have not expressed that as a major concern for them at this point in time, the ones that I've met with thus far. They are very pleased with what we have brought forward, and they're very pleased to know that we will be funding enrolment growth.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Chair. Bill 8 proposes to remove – I think it has already actually been done under a previous School Act and then grandparented over – the transportation minimum kilometre requirement for receiving transportation funding. I know that that's moving into regulations that will be determined at a later point, but of course you set school bus routes, probably already, to determine how people are going to be picked up and transported to school. So I'm just wondering: can we get some clarity on school transportation, on how much will be allocated to different jurisdictions, so that they can have that certainty when they're setting their bus routes so that kids don't have chaos halfway through the fall?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you again for the question. Very much we had indicated with Bill 8 that it is to keep the system whole, that there is no real change to what is already currently happening because we did realize that challenge to parents. As I've said, this is interim supply. We will continue with things as they are at the moment, and more details will come in the budget.

Ms Hoffman: My next couple of questions relate to the construction season. I guess my first one is that I get that this isn't the budget, that this is interim supply, but the construction season is happening now. It's happening between now and when the budget is anticipated to come in. So how is this interim supply bill going to ensure that we're taking advantage of the summer construction season and that no existing school builds will be delayed by, arguably, a year? This isn't a budget – this is interim supply – but the construction season is today, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you for the question. We will continue with the building that has already been allocated. Right now in process we have numerous, numerous schools or modernizations going on. Those will continue. As far as what the priorities are in the fall, when we get the allocation for fall capital, then we will release those around the same time as the budget.

Ms Hoffman: Would the minister be willing to table in this House a list of the projects that are moving forward this summer with anticipated timelines and clarity for this House?

Mr. McIver: I can safely say that the projects coming forward are similar between Transportation and Infrastructure. It's part of the capital planning and budget process. I recognize why the hon. member is asking, but that is . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, we have now completed our second 20-minute block.

We will start with the third. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, are you the first speaker?

Ms Hoffman: Yes.

The Chair: Would you like to just continue the questioning?

Ms Hoffman: Maybe I'll give the clarity, because I think it's missing from this.

The Chair: Sorry. Hold on. We need permission to proceed. Would you like to go back and forth?

Ms Hoffman: Yes.

The Chair: Do you agree to go back and forth, Minister? All right. Member, please proceed.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. My question. I think the first answer was that all of the projects that have already started will continue to move forward throughout the summer, and there won't be delays. I'm not asking about new capital announcements. I'm asking for a commitment from the minister to table in this House which projects are continuing, where they're at in the process, and what the anticipated timeline is given that we're in the midst of the construction season right now and the new capital plan won't come out until the fall. I think I heard the minister say that construction that was anticipated to begin will have already begun. I'm just hoping that we can have a commitment to have that tabled in this House.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yeah, our platform did commit that we would follow the capital plan that was in place. We're committed to doing that in the interim supply that we're discussing and debating in this House today. We'll accommodate that.

Ms Hoffman: Maybe I'll do it through a written question, Madam Chair, to get further clarity just specifically around the school projects, because I know there are many throughout the province that are anticipating construction right now, that have signs up. They just, I think, need to know if those projects that were anticipated to happen this summer are continuing. That is the thrust of my question. I'm happy to have one more shot at an answer, and then I'll move on to something else.

Member LaGrange: I've communicated that those that are moving forward have already been approved, and they've all been contacted, so their boards will have been notified as the usual process in building is going forward. There's nothing new. We've committed to doing it. They're going forward. As you said, the new budget will come in the fall.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for that clarity. I guess, then, we're safe to infer that if you didn't get a letter, it means that your project isn't going forward. I imagine that's, hopefully, not the case. I think it would be easier for the public – I appreciate that boards have been contacted individually – to just have tabled in the House which projects are moving forward or not. I'm not asking for anything that the minister hasn't said is already happening.

Member LaGrange: Again, the Minister of Infrastructure takes care of – you know how it works. Once we put things forward, then the Minister of Infrastructure takes on the building of it, so that would have to be communicated through him.

Ms Hoffman: Yeah. I'm just communicating through the opposition to the government: these are the things that would help us feel confident in voting for the interim supply that's been brought forward. To the government, whoever wants to convey that back to the Infrastructure minister: I'm wanting confirmation about which projects are moving forward or not. If they aren't able to give that, I think it causes some uncertainty in the public about those projects, especially that we're in the midst of the construction season right now.

I'll ask about two specific projects. One is the new high school in south Edmonton. Then, of course, there was planning funding for a northeast Calgary high school previously approved, and that funding, the planning work, I understand, is nearly complete. I'm just hoping for clarity about those two projects specifically. If it's not possible to have all of them tabled – I would prefer to have all of them tabled in this House – then certainly clarity on at least these two fundamentally important projects would be very helpful unless the minister wants to give that clarity today verbally. That would be fine as well.

Mr. McIver: Well, Madam Chair, I understand that the hon. member is looking for a report tabled, but I would suggest, and I hope politely, that since school starts in September and that now we're at the end of June, if there's a school project going to be ready for September, the hon. member will be able to see it. If she can't see it, it won't be ready for September, and I'm pretty sure all the school boards will be aware of what they can see and what they can't. With all due respect, I think it's going to be probably painfully obvious by now which school projects will be ready for September and which ones will not.

Ms Hoffman: My question wasn't about: ready for September. My question was about the construction season and which schools are going to be under construction this summer. I appreciate the attempt to get to the September question, but my question was just about the construction season. I imagine there are probably schools in many hon. members' ridings that are due to have either major renovations or construction done this summer. I just think that the people who plan on sending their kids to them, even if it's three years down the road, deserve that clarity that these projects are being delayed because the government isn't in a position to present a budget right now; they're presenting interim supply. The people I talk to just want to know that there's certainty and that there's a plan and which projects are moving forward. That's what I think would give greater clarity.

The other things I'm asking for – and certainly it doesn't need to be tabled. They can be provided verbally here right now. I'll certainly welcome that. I would love information, and if it's not available verbally now, then I'm happy to receive it in another form. How much are the transfers to each of our public, our Catholic, and our francophone school boards, broken down by jurisdiction, as well as to private, charter, and parents who receive direct payment for home-schooling? I think that there has been some uncertainty about whether or not they're going to have the funds that they need, so I think that knowing now how much the projected transfers will be – I know that numbers aren't solidified until September 30, but staffing happens before that because kids show up before that. I would appreciate knowing how much those transfers are to each of those jurisdictions.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. We can provide that information in terms of specific amounts that will be going out. I think that information can be provided once it's assembled.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Of course, if we could have that before we're asked to vote on the final decision about interim supply, I think that would be helpful, but I appreciate the commitment to get it. That would be my goal, that that be the target line.

With that, Madam Chair, I'm happy to cede the remainder of my time to my colleagues.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-North West, would you like to go back and forth with the minister?

Mr. Eggen: Sure. That would be great if it pleases the minister.

The Chair: Minister, agreed?

Mr. Eggen: I'm here to ask some questions about Advanced Education, but I actually have one around Treasury Board and Finance as well, so maybe I'll start with that because that's kind of your gig, and then we can move from there to Advanced Education. I had a question. I was just looking through interim supply, and I noticed that there was quite a substantial increase in transfer of funds from the lottery funds. It seemed to be more than what had been done in the past in regard to the transference of funds, so I just wanted to ask the President of Treasury Board if he could explain why there's quite a substantial increase in transferring of lottery funds into the interim supply budget. Of course, if you don't have an answer straight away, you could always send me one in writing later.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. We're just gathering up the amounts here. In interim supply, of course, the number that we've presented is $943,387,000, and I believe that for the year ended, 2018-2019, in total it was $1,439,443,000, or $1.4 billion. So if we did an eight-twelfths calculation on that, it's going to be very close, I believe.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thank you. So it's, in your view, a percentage difference that's in keeping with the adjustment we're making month by month. Yeah. Okay. Good. I just kind of felt like it was more than we had done before, and I will certainly pursue that further together with our Treasury Board and Finance critic.

I can now move to perhaps a couple of questions in regard to Advanced Education. Actually, maybe I'll move my questions around a little bit because the previous speaker, Edmonton-Glenora, I think, was pursuing something that is on the minds of a lot of different ministries, and that is capital projects. Again, with Advanced Education does this interim supply budget capture the necessary funds to move forward on the capital projects that had been committed to and started by our various postsecondary institutions here in the province of Alberta?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. For Advanced Education I think that in keeping with our platform commitment of following through with the existing capital plan, the interim supply will provide for the Advanced Education capital plan that's in existence.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you. Again, I did hear the minister of K to 12 education say that they were reassuring or sending, you know, comfort letters to schools and school boards around covering the funding for capital projects in K to 12. Would Advanced Education be pursuing the same strategy to ensure that the postsecondary institutions can feel that they can move with confidence on the capital projects that had been approved?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I can certainly pass this, perhaps, request on to the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you. Good.

My next question is around, you know, my understanding that executive warrants cover spending needs from June 30 of this year. I spent some time trying to figure out the comparisons for pro-rated expenses for Advanced Education, and there seems to be some discrepancy between last year and this year. I just wanted to know if this is a reflection of sending signals or projections as to funding reductions for postsecondary institutions for this next financial year. The discrepancies between the pro-rated interim supply, I think, might suggest that postsecondary institutions must brace themselves for cuts. I just wanted to get some clarification on that.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the question. Again, at this point I'll just reiterate that the interim supply is, as the member opposite knows, the resources required to get to budget time. Upon budget time we will roll out comprehensive details of the plan forward, and I'm confident that our Minister of Advanced Education will roll out a very detailed budget at that time.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you very much. You know, again, the next question I have is in regard to technology-related postsecondary programming spaces over the next I think at least five years. I know that this government has in their platform a commitment to trades and to technology, so just as a way by which I can probe into this interim supply – and you don't have to answer it now, but if I could get a written response, please – does this interim supply budget reflect the expanded technology-related postsecondary programming, which included, you know, 3,000 new spaces in institutions around the province?

It would give us some assurance that we were moving ahead with continuity to see that this funding has continued and is reflected in these interim estimates. I wouldn't expect you to answer that at this level of detail with the people you have here today, but I would ask if that could be forwarded to me in writing, please.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, I think we're really talking about a budget question, in fairness, and recognize the interest of the members opposite in the upcoming budget. What I can say today is that we are and will continue to be working hard on developing a comprehensive budget. We'll be pleased to roll out those details, and when we do, members opposite will have full opportunity to discuss.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Eggen: Okay. Thank you. My last question, then. Again, I would in no way expect this now. It kind of reflects the K to 12 question we asked, and that is if I could have in writing the funds that are being forwarded to our postsecondary institutions through this interim supply budget, detailing the monies that will be forwarded to each of our postsecondary institutions on an interim supply basis as soon as possible.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will pass that request along to the Minister of Advanced Education.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, would you like to go back and forth with the minister?

Ms Phillips: Yes, please.

The Chair: Minister, do you agree? Back and forth with the member?

Mr. Toews: Sure.

The Chair: All right. Member, please proceed.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister and his officials for joining us here this afternoon. I want to start with if the minister could confirm with the House that budget forecasts have been prepared in the fashion that they had been in previous years; that is to say, an average of private-sector forecasting and – well, essentially just that: private-sector forecasting firms with respect to the price of oil.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, in terms of interim supply, this isn't a budget at this point in time; this is determining the resources required between now and the time we roll out a budget this fall. This period is April 1 to November 30, and our interim supply amounts reflect, again, the cash or resources required to continue to deliver government services during that time to Albertans.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm wondering. So if it is to meet the demands between now and the end of October, mid-November, if the minister can confirm, though, with the House that funds forwarded, for example, for CFEP and CIP, which are, I think, on a quarterly intake basis or perhaps three times a year – I might be mistaken on that. If that intake period will be funded for the community facility enhancement program and the community investment program, if that can be confirmed, that those funds will be there for folks who are participating in application processes right now.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this point in time I can't confirm. We can get back to the member opposite with that information, again, relative to the interim supply period.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Thank you. Yeah, I think there are a lot of community groups who will be waiting and will be very interested to know that potentially the next intake period will be all for naught. These are nonprofits that make those applications, so we don't want them to waste their time.

Madam Chair, I'm wondering if the member can confirm. Certainly, I represent a very large university. I know that we had some back and forth with the Advanced Education critic, but I'm wondering if the member can confirm for us that the interim supply funds that are being forwarded for the beginning of the September academic year include a 2 per cent increase and backfilling of the tuition freeze, please.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again I would say this, that this is not a budget. Clearly, the Minister of Advanced Education will be rolling a budget out this fall. At this point in time, again, these are the resources required to get us to that point. In terms of budget details, they will be forthcoming later in this season.

The Chair: Hon. member, that concludes the last 20-minute block for opposition members.

We will now go to private government members for their first 20-minute block. Hon. Member for Red Deer-South, would you like to go back and forth with the minister?

Mr. Stephan: Yes, please, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Minister, do you agree?

Mr. Toews: Sure.

The Chair: All right. Member, please proceed.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, I appreciate the opportunity to ask some questions about the interim supply. I do enjoy numbers. I like numbers when they do well. Having said that, I know I'm a little bit unfamiliar with the process. As I understand it, this interim supply isn't a budget, and really the purpose of the interim supply is just to keep the day-to-day operating of government in an orderly manner to support the public interests of taxpayers.

I also understand, of course, that the reason we're having this interim supply is that the government is doing its careful due diligence, that we were elected on a platform and a commitment that we would live within our means, and that that allows for the sustainability of public services. Due diligence in this context means being in a position to make fully informed decisions, having the facts before you. I know that that's how things work in the real world. When you are entrusted with taxpayer funds, that is a sacred stewardship, and it's very important that this government has all the facts so that it can then act in a responsible way to support the public interest.

With that kind of preface in mind, I have about four questions I'd like to ask. The first question that I'd like to ask is going to be directed to the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board, and that is in respect of our financing costs that are in the interim supply.

I just want to provide a little bit of background to why I am concerned about this particular expense. Of course, our financing costs are a product of revenue less expenses. I've looked at the annual reports over the past couple of years that we have as this government. I note that the 2014-15 fiscal year was the last time that government reported a surplus. We had an operating surplus of $1.1 billion reported in '14-15 in the annual report. That was sort of the last time. That would have been March 31, 2015. That was the last surplus we had.

Of course, we had a change in government a little over a month later, on May 5, 2015, and our world somewhat changed, and our interest costs somewhat changed, which I am going to ask the minister to comment on. But it's quite profound and dramatic, actually, as I kind of looked at the annual reports. We went from a $1.1 billion surplus, and then the following year, just one year later, we had a $6.4 billion operating deficit.

So that was $6.4 billion. Then we went and we actually broke over $10 billion in an operating deficit in only one year. That was $10.7 billion, as I understand it. That was '16-17. Then from '17-18 I note that the operating deficit was over $8 billion. I don't know if that's a definition of success, but compared to the prior year, it did go down. As I understand it, the operating deficit this year: based on the third-quarter reporting, it looks like we're going to have a year-end deficit somewhat towards $6 billion.

So we have accumulated debt of over $31 billion. I know that we lost a significant amount of corporate income tax revenue from prior-year reports as well, so we have this growing debt issue. Of course, with that, we are confronted with substantial debt-servicing costs that we've been seeing grow every year in prior-year annual reports. Of course, we're faced in this year with our interim supply costs with the interest debts that we now have inherited as well.

I was wondering if the Minister of Finance could comment on the current costs that we are now paying on our accumulated debts, that have certainly been growing astronomically over the last couple of years.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. For the year ended March 31, 2019, the expectation is that this province will be spending approximately $2 billion in interest costs, in debt-servicing costs. That has risen, as the member noted, quite substantially in the last year. At this point in time it appears that over the last five years, again, this province will have basically moved in a negative financial way, basically lost approximately $40 billion or in that range over the last five years in terms of balance sheet strength. That's a great concern for this government, and that concern, we believe – in fact, we know it's a great concern not only for this government but for Albertans in general, so we've taken a series of steps or are in the process of taking a series of steps to reignite the economy. We know that by reigniting the economy, the long-term effect will be to in fact enhance sustainable government revenues.

At the same time as we're reigniting the economy with a series of measures such as repealing the carbon tax, implementing the job-creation tax cut, or corporate tax cut, along with reducing our regulatory burden, our red tape in this province and modernizing our regulatory system – along with those measures, of course, Madam Chair, we will be taking a very fiscally responsible approach to our spending. We recognize that in this province we have some due diligence. There's some necessity to provide some real prudence in the way we respect and spend taxpayers' dollars.

So that will be a major initiative, and we know that it's a major initiative for all the ministries at this point in time as we head towards delivering a budget this fall.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you for those answers, Minister. I appreciate that, and I appreciate the government's message and commitment to sustaining the important public services that I think everyone in this House values and, indeed, Albertans in general.

One of the important principles often currently in terms of fiscal stewardship is the relationship between population and inflation growth and operational spending. I'm going to be asking the Minister of Finance to comment on that in respect to the interim supply estimates. In terms of general principles many taxpayer advocates advocate for governments to try and manage their spending, of course, to take into account population realities, inflation growth.

Based on information that is available in the public domain, again having looked at and having the benefit of the annual reports over the past number of years since we had a change in government with the members opposite becoming the government, by my calculations if I look at how operational spending has grown year over year with the members opposite when they were in government and if I compared a baseline comparison to inflation and population growth during that period, what we have is a divergence, Madam Chair. We have a divergence in where we would be from kind of an operating base starting point with a current operating base standing point, in other words where they ended at, of billions of dollars in difference, actually. In other words, had the government over the past four years merely increased spending to match population and inflation growth, our operating budget that they would have finished at would be billions of dollars less.

What I have a question about in respect to the interim supply numbers is: did they increase spending above population and inflation growth similar to what has occurred in the past in terms of the budgeting that has been done?

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, with the interim supply concept, with the interim supply numbers that we are presenting before the House today, I think it would be difficult to extrapolate with a high degree of accuracy their correlation with population growth. We're confident that the interim supply amounts that are in front of this House will adequately fund this government until we roll out a budget. However, the member's question and comments I believe are quite pertinent, certainly pertinent as we go forward. I can take a look at population and inflation growth over the last few years, which have been, you know, for 2015-16, 2.7 per cent; 2016-17, 2.4 per cent; 2017-18, 2.8 per cent. Yet spending during those years on a percentage basis was materially higher at 3 per cent, 3.1 per cent, and 3.5 per cent.

I think going forward it will be very critical, as this government rolls out a budget, to be very mindful of the trajectory that we've been on under previous management and with the cost increases that have been materially beyond population growth and inflation. It will be incumbent upon this government to ensure that we are respecting taxpayers' dollars, that we are finding every efficiency possible within our departments so that we're delivering high-quality services in the most efficient, cost-effective manner, that we're reducing redundancies wherever possible, that we are conducting performance reviews to ensure, again, that government delivers at the highest level possible on behalf of Albertans.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Minister. I know that some of my questions were a little bit more big picture in nature, but I want to go a little bit more granular. I want to talk about the crude-by-rail costs that are embedded in the interim supply budget. My understanding is that this was a fairly significant line item cost that, unfortunately, this government inherited, Madam Chair, which we are now having to bear the burden of, some of the uncommercial decisions that may have occurred here. So if I could just get an understanding of the estimated quantum of those costs in the interim supply. What kinds of assurances do we have going forward that these costs can be managed as one-time extraordinary costs? Hopefully, this isn't sort of a residual cost that is borne over a number of years by the government through budget cycles. If I could have the minister share with the members here and provide some more information on that cost, that would be really appreciated. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Savage: Yeah. Sure. As you know, this was a deal on a series of contracts signed by the previous government that we are committed to getting out of. We made it very clear in the election platform and subsequent to that that we will not be in the business of competing with the private sector on crude by rail. We are doing everything we possibly can to mitigate any costs associated with that, and we're pretty confident that there will be a private-sector solution to it. There have been some costs incurred prior to our government coming in, you know, some pre start-up costs that were paid, and there are some costs we're anticipating to have to incur while we're unwinding and getting out of these contracts.

Mr. Stephan: Just a follow-up question on that. Do we actually have a number in the interim supply relating to the costs for these crude-by-rail contract costs? I'm just trying to get a sense of the magnitude of that.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I think that on a specific number on that project, we wouldn't normally divulge that at this point. But I think it's important the member knows that there is an amount in interim supply that reflects what we believe will be an obligation of this government to meet during this interim supply period for costs and liabilities committed to by the previous government but now to be paid by the current government on behalf of Albertans during the interim supply period.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you. Again, with it being an interim supply schedule, I know that like crude for rail there were certain costs that this government inherited essentially from the prior government, you know, that may be extraordinary one-line items. I'm wondering if it has come to their attention if there are any other material extraordinary one-time costs that are reflected in this interim supply that were inherited by this government due to decisions that were made by the previous government other than or in addition to the crude-by-rail contracts?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think it's fair to say that this government has inherited a number of challenges from the previous government in terms of the spend side. I think the crude-by-rail project is certainly one of those. I think every department has challenges that they've inherited. I think the commitment that we've made to Albertans is that we're going to very competently, responsibly work through those challenges and ensure that we're providing Albertans with maximum value for their hard-earned tax dollars.

The Chair: Hon. members, we will now move on to the 10-minute block portions. The opposition will lead us off. Member for Lethbridge-West, would you like to go back and forth with the minister?

Ms Phillips: Yes, please. I'd like to share my time, Madam Chair. Thank you.

The Chair: Minister, do you agree?
All right. Member, please proceed.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you. We just heard that, certainly, the previous government made some decisions with respect to projects. I couldn't agree more. One of those projects is, in fact, the Calgary cancer centre. We do see some funds being forwarded for capital investments within the interim supply. I would like the minister to confirm either in this House or in writing that the Calgary cancer centre capital investments and the timeline of the Calgary centre in terms of construction and other timelines will continue along the same timeline as previous and that there will be no change as a result of this interim supply.

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, yes. As far as I know, the funding will continue, the construction will go on, and the timelines will be maintained. Thank you.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Minister. I think an answer that says, "as far as I know," is probably not enough for Calgary and southern Alberta cancer patients, so I think I'd like to request an undertaking in writing, if I could, that the capital funds are going to be forwarded in the right way, whether it's planning funds or other construction funds, to ensure that that project remains on time.

Similarly, the minister just gave us a long speech about how he's worried about borrowing, and that is fine although we do maintain a very good debt-to-GDP ratio.

An Hon. Member: Unnecessary borrowing.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, hon. member, for the commentary over to my right there.

Anyway, with the cancellation of the carbon price, there is now no money for Springbank, the green line, the valley line, or the Bow River mitigation. So I'm wondering if the minister can confirm that the funds for the green line are going to continue along the same timelines with the same construction schedule and if the minister could confirm that he is in fact borrowing those funds for the green line C-Train project and the valley line LRT project.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. It was a campaign promise that the funding for the LRT lines, the green line in Calgary and the valley line in Edmonton, would remain in place, and so they shall.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Thank you. I think, again, I would like some confirmation that those projects will now in fact be borrowed for.

Similarly, I am wondering about the Bow River mitigation. Mitigation along the Bow is an integral part of responding to the 2013 flood event in Calgary, which we just passed the six-year anniversary of. Can the minister confirm that he will, in fact, either for the planning funds and the various studies that are going on or in the future capital plan, borrow for those projects?

4:30

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. In fact, the answer to that will come out of the budget and capital planning process. The answer is not available today, to the hon. member. Sorry that that will probably disappoint the hon. member, but that is indeed the fact today. As we get through that process, that will become more final.

Ms Phillips: Well, certainly, the lack of planning funds for the Bow mitigation won't disappoint me as much as it will the citizens of Bowness and elsewhere.

I would now like the minister to confirm. With the new funds being forwarded to the Department of Energy, will the minister confirm that requests for contracting disclosures, requests for proposals, disclosure of contracts in the blue book, disclosure of salaries for political staff will all remain in place given the public comments about how these funds will be expended; that is to say, with more of a risk tolerance? I'm wondering if the minister can confirm with me that the due diligence around disclosure, competitive procurement, and audit and all of the normal functions of government will continue for this project where the chair of Executive Council has confirmed with us that it's going to be a risky project. I want to make sure that it is not $30 million spent on friends, insiders, or a glorified Twitter account.

Thank you, Minister.

Mr. McIver: Madam Chair, I think the question was a little more rhetorical. There was quite a flourish at the end there, actually, a rhetorical flourish. I think that the hon. member was attempting to make some type of political statement, which, I suppose, based on our surroundings, is fair enough game. Again, based on the rhetorical flourish with that finish, I will say that when our government spends money on capital projects, we would intend to use that money in the best interests of Albertans and in getting the best deal that we can negotiate while delivering on those capital projects.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, a number of municipalities had a number of projects under the federal ICIP, and MSI was used as their matching component. Can the minister confirm that all of those provincial commitments for all of those projects will be honoured between now and September so that municipalities can continue their work on these important capital projects? Or are all those projects stalled?

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, our government was actually magnanimous in adopting the capital plan laid out by the previous government. We said that we will maintain the spending at that level, but when it comes to specific projects, we're going through them. If there are strong business cases for those projects, whether they are shovel ready, whether they have funding in place from partner ministries or in some cases private money through donations and all, how many jobs they create, how much economic activity they will create: those are the standards we are applying. We are reviewing all those projects, and they will be approved on that basis.

Ms Phillips: Okay. That's fine, but I think I'm looking a little deeper at what's going on with MSI capital. I'll just give an example: a new twin arena in Lethbridge. There is a provincial component through MSI that the city is using as the matching piece. I want to make sure on behalf of my constituents that that twin ice arena is not now going to lose its provincial share due to some decisions that are contained within this interim supply and that all of those commitments that have already been made are being made good upon. I do not want to return to my constituents that we've lost our twin ice arena, for example.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, we've committed to the capital plan that's in place. I think our hon. Infrastructure minister has noted that there is some review of some cost-shared projects that were in various stages, but certainly in general terms we're committed to the capital plan. There is funding available in interim supply consistent with that commitment.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, within Treasury Board and Finance I'm wondering: between now and September will the government continue the supports to small and local breweries and continue all of those various programs, or are they being cut in interim supply?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. We recognize some of the challenges, certainly, with our small brewers. I would suggest that we've inherited a bit of a rat's nest, so to speak, from the previous government on this file. We're looking at various options going forward. We're committed to options that are fair and equitable, options that as much as possible, I think, recognize market signals, and also options that are going to serve our brewers in the best and most sustainable way going forward. We're working with that sector right now to identify solutions.

The Chair: Member, five seconds.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair. Can the . . .

The Chair: Apologies, hon. member.

We will now move to private government members' time. Hon. Member for Calgary-Klein, would you like to share your time with the minister?

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Yes, please.

The Chair: Minister, do you agree?

Please proceed, Member.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Chair. I'm interested to hear conversation about debt and being worried about debt. Certainly, I'm worried about debt. I know that my constituents are worried about debt. I'm particularly happy to be able to stand here today and talk about spending and debt going forward for this government and making sure that we have adequate budgeting plans and that we're using the taxpayers' dollars wisely. Especially after campaigning on that for the last eight years, it's particularly satisfying to be here for that purpose. I would say that $2 billion in debt servicing is irresponsible. The other people that I know that are concerned about debt are my kids. I'm sure the members of this Assembly's kids are concerned for their future and making sure that we move forward and have a plan that doesn't leverage their future.

One of the things I wanted to start off talking a bit about, being a not-for-profit guy, is that we had to raise funds to do the work that we do. Every dollar was hard earned, not by us but by the people that donated that money to us. One of the stories that really stands out for me in my career was when a young lady came in and she poured out her piggy bank on the counter and asked us to use that money to help the poor. That's when it really hit me in regard to where this money was coming from and the importance that we exercise great fiscal stewardship of that money to make sure that it was used to the best purposes for that young lady and for the people that we were serving.

That struck home when I was door-knocking and talking to constituents in our communities as they were struggling under an increased tax burden in this community or job loss or other things, just thinking about how they worked so hard for their money and how we are going to use that money. Again, I think that we need to make sure that we frame any money conversations in that perspective, that this is hard-earned money by our constituents, by Albertans, and that we need to make sure that we're using those pennies to the best of our ability to serve Albertans and not put them into a risk situation. Certainly, hearing about the inherited risk from our previous government and hearing about the increased debt, those are all concerns and things that I think we need to make sure we're considering going forward.

I think part of that is making sure that we have realistic budgeting plans going forward and that we're using the money properly. I'm excited about the MacKinnon panel, that we're going to be fully digging into exactly how this money is being used and finding opportunities and ways to save the taxpayer and help the taxpayer get better value from that money. I'm excited to hear about those plans, that we're working towards getting all the information as we go into that process. I want to continue to be a voice for that, and I'm thankful for the minister and his hard work on this going forward.

You know, better managing our cash flow: I mean, we've talked a little bit about revenue staying relatively flat while we continue to increase government spending. Again, being a not-for-profit guy, I'll tell you that if I managed my shelter like that, I would lose my job. I guess that in a way the party to the left of me did lose their job. I'm thankful that we're here to get things back on track.

As one of the best examples of that, I think, just reading through this and being an Albertan for as long as I have been – you know, just seeing the Slave Lake fires, seeing the floods in Calgary, seeing the Fort McMurray fires – we know that emergency funding needs to be available for natural disasters. Just seeing that this was not included in this budget prepared by the previous government and seeing how much money was required in order to help support our communities that were at risk because of the fire, this shouldn't have been a surprise. One of the things I certainly want to advocate for going forward with any of this is that we are adequately preparing for emergencies in this province and that we have that money there. You know, the fact that this wasn't included or adequately planned for, knowing full well what our province has been dealing with year over year, I think is just poor planning and, frankly speaking, shameful. This is something that I think we need to make sure that we're prepared for going forward.

All that said, just within that context, I wanted to ask the minister to help me understand how delaying our budget is going to help us make better decisions in regard to our budgeting going forward.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. The Member for Calgary-Klein I think raised some excellent points. Certainly, his observations as he spoke with Albertans during the campaign would have been very consistent with mine. We have tens of thousands of Albertans concerned not only with, you know, the economic malaise in this province but, in fact, with the trajectory of our accumulated debt, the recognition and concern about that accumulated debt and the effect that it will have on the next generation, on their children and grandchildren.

To respond to one of the concerns raised by the Member for Calgary-Klein on our response to emergencies and disasters that may come upon us in this province, of course, we all are aware of the fires in northern Alberta, and we have included in this interim supply amounts required to cover emergency response for that event. I think it's important for Albertans to know that this government will be committed during this interim period to any emergency response that's required to ensure that Albertans' needs are looked after.

I think that to take a little forward look to future budgeting processes, I clearly heard the recommendation from the Member for Calgary-Klein that within our budget deliberation process we look to ensure that we have a realistic amount budgeted for emergency preparedness going forward. I accept that recommendation. That'll be a recommendation we'll consider as we head into budget development.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you. Thank you for the work in regard to dedicating resources. I'm sure Albertans' minds and hearts will be a little more at ease when they're thinking about that stuff, so I appreciate it.

An Hon. Member: When they're listening to interim supply debate.

The Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: When they're listening to interim supply. I appreciate the comment there.

A little more information just for our sake and for my constituents – obviously, we want to make sure that we're taking in all the information that we have, that we're properly planning moving forward in any budget process but also in this process. You know, the NDP, of course, is committed to certain spending, and I know that you've looked at that. I'd like to understand a little bit better about what has informed the decision to ask for this money to fund the government operations over the next eight months.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll respond maybe to a question that I didn't adequately respond to in the member's first line of questioning as well. The member asked, I think, in his first line of questioning about basically the value of the interim process relative to our fiscal management for this province. I think that's a good question. What benefit does this period have for us as a government going forward, looking to ensure that we can present a very responsible budget?

While an interim period has its challenges in terms of funding government – and that’s why we’re here today. I appreciate all the members here as we’re looking to pass a bill that will ensure that we have resources to fund government until we roll out a budget. I think one of the reasons, the chief reason, why we’ve delayed rolling out a budget until this fall is so that we can really understand our options going forward to achieve balance by 2022-23, of course, achieve balance and at the same time continue to deliver high-quality services to Albertans, which Albertans expect. Of course, we have initiated the MacKinnon panel, and they’re doing a deep dive into the finances of the province, particularly on the spend side, and we’re looking forward to those recommendations. We’re confident that they will produce some . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, we are now back to the opposition line of questioning. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: My apologies. Do you want to go back and forth?

Ms Pancholi: That’s right.

The Chair: Minister, do you agree?
All right. Please proceed.

Ms Pancholi: My questions are specifically with respect to the Ministry of Children’s Services. I don’t know if the minister would like to answer. I’m looking at page 1 of the interim supply, and I see that the budgeted amount or the amount for this interim period pretty much reflects what was in Budget 2018. My question for the minister is – as I know, the minister is very aware of the action plan coming out of the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention. There were a number of immediate, intermediate, and long-term action plans and goals. Now, the previous budget would have been, I guess, focused on achieving a lot of the immediate goals. My question for the minister, though, is: how does this reflect the work, which will be different from what had been done over the last year, to achieve the immediate goals? How does this reflect a commitment to the work that is being done on the intermediate and long-term action plan goals, and does it mean that there is still a commitment to meet the timeline set out in the action plan?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children’s Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I think the answers that I can provide the member opposite today are very similar to what I provided last week in this House. The funding, obviously, in interim is based on last year’s budget. We’re going to continue that. A number of the shorter term, immediate-term goals outlined within the action plan have already been undertaken, and a lot of the medium- and longer term goals will require ongoing work with our community stakeholders, First Nations, community partners. I’m happy to say that some of those conversations started to happen again last week, so we will look to see what that looks like going forward.

I can’t speak to what’s going to be in the budget. As my colleagues have mentioned, we are in a very difficult fiscal position, but I do think that the numbers that you’re referencing in terms of our interim funding show that our government does value the young people in this province and that we want to make sure that our children and families, especially those most vulnerable, are safe and supported.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister for her response. I guess my question a little bit more specifically is: the goals, the immediate goals, were different then, and some of them are related, but some of the immediate goals under the action plan had specific dollar amounts allocated to them whereas some of the intermediate and long-term goals were a bit more fluid and did not specify specific dollar amounts. Given that the work is going to be different – right? – because the nature of the goals and the work that needs to be done is different, I guess I’m questioning why the dollar figure amount is the same, because the work is different. I guess the question is – for some of the longer term goals you could imagine that the amount of work and investment in those would be maybe more substantial – does this figure represent that fewer funds are being allocated to the implementation of the intermediate and long-term goals or more? I’m open to hearing that. I’m just wondering how it breaks down in terms of the actual goals that are set out in the action plan.

Ms Schulz: There are, I think, two separate questions there. The first: speaking to numbers going forward, obviously, this is interim funding to get us through the time that we need to take to put forward a responsible budget that takes into account the fiscal position that we as a government are faced with but also recognizing that we have statutory requirements to take care of the children most vulnerable in our province, especially when we’re talking about child intervention. That’s what a lot of the actions outlined in the action plan and the panel work are focused on. Taking a step back, I think the member opposite is correct that not all of the mid- and long-term plans have dollar amounts allocated to them. I mean, a number of those pieces outline that we are going to begin work with stakeholders on certain things, and we are going to continue to do that work.

I also want to recognize that the work that the panel did was quite transformative in terms of changing practice. While we’ve certainly put dollars into that, one of the things that those conversations and that feedback and those recommendations that came forward had, taking into account feedback from our stakeholders, our indigenous leaders, indigenous communities, people with lived experience, was that real changes in practice needed to be made in terms of how we support children and families, trends in how we support children and families. Some of the things that we learned through that work was, ultimately, that we know that keeping children connected with their families and their communities and their culture is hugely important, especially for their longer term success. Certainly, those things have been changed in practice.

Then there are also different things that come up that do change some of our considerations for those action plans. Today we’re following closely what’s happening at the federal level with Bill C-92, and certainly that could have impact on the work that we do with our stakeholders. There were certainly things that were brought up by our indigenous leaders in the conversations that we had last week. I don’t want to presuppose any of that. More information will come on the actual spending when the government releases a budget this fall.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister. I agree with the minister’s characterization that the ministerial panel and the action plan are transformative, and I know that we share that commitment to implementing those changes because it will be very transformative for the children in this province if the action plan is fully implemented. Obviously, I thank the minister for her comments. There is ongoing work, the day-to-day work of the ministry, that's very important. I think the action plan sets out, quite honestly, a lot of work that is on top of the day-to-day work. It is transforming. It is working with the stakeholders. It is that work.

Having worked in public service, when there are new projects and new things, that does take a commitment of resources with respect to the people in the ministry who maybe were previously tasked with other work, are now doing other things, maybe bringing on new staff. I know a number of the action plan goals involve providing additional supports and services to indigenous communities. While I appreciate that the day-to-day work is critical and still needs to be done, I do think that the action plan calls on – and the previous government made a commitment to additional funding to support the implementation of the action plan. I just wanted to highlight that I think it's – we need to see that the dollars are reflecting that there is additional work that has been given to this ministry to fully implement these recommendations.

While I appreciate the comments that there will be a budget coming forward in the fall and there will be more details there, a number of the intermediate goals in the action plan set out a target completion date of 2020, which is just not that long after the fall budget will be tabled. That work must be being done now.

You know, we can't wait until a fall budget, and I'm not suggesting that that's what the minister is saying, but that work has to be happening now, not just when the budget is tabled in the fall. My hope is that on top of the additional work, the day-to-day work of the ministry, there is still a commitment to supporting the additional work related to the implementation of the action plan. So thank you to the minister for her comments.

I just wanted to ask a question with respect to indigenous services funding, both on-reserve and off-reserve. I'm wondering if the minister can comment on whether what we see in the interim supply includes additional resources to address the increasing disparity between on- and off-reserve services for children and whether or not this reflects a commitment to fill the gap between the federal government funding for on-reserve services, which we know is much weaker than the support that we provide. Do these estimates reflect a commitment to meet that gap?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Once again, the money outlined in these interim funds is based on last year's budget to get us through until our government puts forward a budget later this fall.

Ms Pancholi: Just a clarification. Does this mean that the band designate role will be fully funded by this government going forward as part of the commitment in the action plan? Just wondering if you can comment on that.

Ms Schulz: I can get back to the member opposite with a response to that question.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you. I'd appreciate if the minister could provide that response in writing. That would be appreciated.

Sort of the last area that I would like to address is the funding for the early learning child care centres. I know the minister has commented before that there is a continued – and I see, because the dollar figure is very similar to the previous budget for the three-year pilot project that began in 2017, which will end in 2020, that that commitment is still there to funding the early learning child care centres. But the question I'm going to continue to ask is: does this mean the government – you know, we don't see a change in dollar figures. Are they planning anything here in terms of investing in continuing that project beyond 2020? If the minister can comment on that.

The Chair: Hon. members, we will now go to private government members' questions.

Hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley, would you like to share your time with the minister and go back and forth?

Mr. Loewen: Yes, if that's acceptable to him.

The Chair: Minister, do you agree?

Member, please proceed.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to take the opportunity today to talk a little bit about Bill 6 and interim supply. Since the previous government didn't produce a budget, obviously, we're in the situation now where we need to do an interim supply, or some people call it interim appropriation. Obviously, it's to fund our government operations until we do get a budget together, which will be this fall. Obviously, we're dealing with kind of a huge – I shouldn't say kind of. We're dealing with a huge financial mess that this previous government left us, and obviously this is an opportunity to enable us to keep services running until this fall, when we have a budget together.

One of the probably most startling things that I think Albertans are concerned about – and, of course, it was a topic at the doors in the election – was the debt. Of course, the previous government had us on track to head to over $100 billion in debt. I guess I would maybe start with a little bit of a question here to the ministers. Where are we sitting at right now, or where will we be at, I guess, maybe at the end of this interim supply as far as total debt that the government is in?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. The member raises an excellent question and, I think, again, a question that I expect all of us encountered at the doors during this last election campaign, and that is a great concern with the trajectory of the previous government, a great concern with government accumulating debt to pay for services, to pay for programming that we're experiencing today. I think, again, consistent with the member's concerns, I personally had many constituents, many Albertans really communicate to me the importance of governments delivering services in a sustainable way, the importance of one generation not expecting the next generation to pay for programming that we were receiving today.

I think many of us are parents in this House, and some of us are fortunate enough to be grandparents, and as we look down the road, the thought of actually leaving our children and grandchildren with the kind of debt that we're looking at – in fact, again, the previous government put us on a track to $100 billion of accumulated debt. That's of great concern to Albertans. It's certainly of great concern to me.

I can certainly commit to the member that as we deliberate in our budgets going forward, we will in fact be developing a budget that's responsible and, again, responsible in a twofold way. It needs to be responsible in delivering high-quality services to Albertans. Governments have a responsibility to protect those most vulnerable amongst us. We take that responsibility, Madam Chair, very seriously. We also have a responsibility to ensure that we're being fiscally and financially prudent. I do commit to the member that as we go forward, we will be delivering a budget that will achieve balance by 2022-23 and will continue to deliver high-quality services to Albertans.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Minister. I appreciate that.

I appreciate the comments, too, about future generations. Of course, having children of my own, which are older children, and having grandchildren now, too, obviously that's a great concern as we look forward to their future and what we leave them. I think we can all agree that we should not leave them in a situation where they're paying for the mismanagement of funds of previous governments. I think that's great to hear. I think it's also good – you know, we're all looking forward to hearing from the MacKinnon panel and hearing what they bring forward to the table as far as the government's finances and what situation we're in.

Of course, when we talk about debt, we also have to be concerned a lot about the financing charges and debt-servicing charges that we put ourselves under. Those financing charges: that's money that's not being spent on services that Albertans need and rely on. Obviously, the faster we can get ourselves to a balanced budget so that we're not going further into debt and, of course, then the opportunity to pay down the debt so that we can relieve some of those financing charges – hopefully, with the new government and a new financial plan, maybe some of these rating agencies, that decide what interest we pay, will become a little more kind to us. With the previous government I think we had six credit downgrades in four years, and that leaves us in not as good a situation as we could be; that's for sure. I'm wondering if I could have the minister just talk a little bit more about financing charges, debt-servicing charges, where we're at with that, and how things are looking as far as going through this interim supply time period.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the question from the member. Again, for the year 2018-2019, interest or debt-servicing costs are going to be approaching $2 billion, and $2 billion is a lot of money that could be spent on education, health care. It could be left in Albertans' hands should we have adequate funds to fund those important programs – again, health care and education – and look after the most vulnerable amongst us. Should we have resources for those endeavours and other expectations of Albertans, I personally believe that the money after that is best left in Albertans' hands. Typically Albertans know best what to do with their funds.

We know from past experience that when Albertans have those funds, they very often reinvest them in this province, which generates economic activity, which, in fact, grows the economy of this province, creates job, opportunities, and, in the future, future government revenues. Debt-service costs are a great concern and, I think, no doubt have informed this government in terms of its goals of ensuring that we're fiscally and financially responsible and its goal of ensuring that we are on a path to balance by 2022-23.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Minister. Obviously, the situation we're in: this is a pretty difficult financial position to be in. The previous government, of course, seemed to have no problem spending and maybe a little tougher time trying to make good financial decisions. I think one thing that we've found ourselves in – you know, I guess, to maybe use a little bit of a pun, we could say that we're in a bit of a train wreck.

I guess I would like to maybe ask the minister a little bit about this situation we find ourselves in where the previous government, you know, during the actual campaign period made agreements with rail companies to lease railcars. Of course, that's incurred hundreds of millions of dollars of debt to Albertans. Of course, we know that this isn't in the best interests of Albertans. The return on investment on that is extremely poor, with a lot of risk there. Obviously, it was a desperate attempt to try to gain some sort of favour with the voters, but I think the voters saw through that desperate attempt. Any time that you're signing multibillion-dollar deals with large corporations, when the opportunity for return is very questionable and you do that during a campaign period, I think Albertans see that as a little bit disingenuous, to say the least.

I just want to see if the minister would want to comment on that just a little bit as far as where we are in that situation, the cost, and how we'll be moving forward there.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. minister . . . [A timer sounded] I'm going to cut you off.

It's time for opposition members. Hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, would you like to share your time with the minister and go back and forth?

Ms Ganley: Share my time.

The Chair: Minister?

Member, please proceed.

Ms Ganley: Fantastic. I'll apologize if the question is a tiny bit detailed. I'm a bit of a detail person. My question is obviously about the total number as that's the number we're provided. Just by way of a little bit of background, obviously this number is just one number, but we can see open documents: last year's budgets and the previous year's budgets. Last year the voted expense was about $1.38 billion, projected at Q3 to $1.464 billion. The difference, Madam Chair, tends to arise from nonvoted funding like the motor vehicle accident fund paying out and that sort of thing. Not everything in budgets is voted.

Interim supply is intended to cover roughly two-thirds of the year. Now, obviously, the budget doesn't roll out perfectly evenly. My recollection is that in Justice legal aid grants go twice a year and municipal policing grants go earlier, so this interim supply should represent slightly over two-thirds of the total budget. In this case, the amount is $844 million, which would make a total budget for the year of $1.267 billion. Depending on which number you compare that to, whether that's the voted supply or the general, that is between $113 million and $200 million less than it was last year.

Of that $1.4 billion from last year, now just under $1.3 billion, about $518 million is for public security. Now, I'm going to skip that in my questioning because the government has previously committed to increase funding, and public security is basically the contract with the RCMP. It's police grants to municipalities, ASIRT, ALERT, other sheriffs, fish and wildlife, other enforcement branches. So I'm taking it – and the minister can correct me if I'm wrong – that there wouldn't be a cut to that budget line.

About another $100 million is for prosecutions, which, I understand, is going to increase, and $287 million goes to corrections. Now, they've done fantastic work over the last four years to try to sort of bend that down, but the truth is that the inmate population is actually increasing faster than the population. So it's never been the case that that number has dropped. The Ministry of Justice and the minister actually have a bit of a tough job because there's no real way to get that cost down. When people are sent to jail, we are required to house them. That takes up about $900 million, from which basically no money can be removed. So that leaves at least $100 million in cuts coming from the $500 million that remain in the budget.

My question, then. The divisions which are left are the courts, which take up about $200 million and are primarily for judges and court clerks and those sorts of people, who, in light of Jordan, we probably ought not be cutting; legal services, which is about $58 million – and given this government's stance on things, I don't anticipate seeing those legal bills going down – justice services, which includes family support order services; the medical examiner, who, of course, we increased funds for recently for a lot of important reasons; legal aid; and the public guardian and trustee.

All of those things are very important things. I'm not saying that there are no efficiencies. I spent a long time parsing this budget, which is why I know it so well, for said efficiencies. But that's a lot. It's, like, almost 20 per cent of that remaining budget. So I'm just curious where we think these hypothetical $100 million in efficiencies are coming from. Like, are they coming from the courts? Are they coming from the medical examiner? Where are they coming from?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and keeper of the Great Seal.

Mr. Schweitzer: You like throwing that one in.

Madam Chair, as has been covered off many times over here today, this is not a budget. This is interim supply that we're seeking here to fund the operations of government for the duration of the period of time noted in the documentation. It's not a budget.

The hon. member, though, has gone through various parts of the department here in good detail, so just let me take a moment now to talk about the situation that we're in. Obviously, we're in the process of preparing a budget, that we'll be tabling in the fall. At that point in time we can go into great detail on what we're proposing to do at that stage. This is the situation, though, that we're inheriting, Madam Chair. Crime is up substantially across Alberta. In Edmonton alone, since 2015, assaults are up 11 per cent, property crimes are up 13 per cent, and sexual assaults are up 17 per cent. In Calgary over the last five years: a 6 per cent increase in property crimes, a 25 per cent increase in financial robberies, a 26.3 per cent increase in sex offences, a 27.6 per cent increase in robberies, and a 35.9 total increase in assault crimes . . .

Ms Ganley: I apologize. I'm willing to stipulate the fact that there are increased costs and that there are reasons to increase services. My question isn't about the fact that you will need to increase, potentially, a budget in some areas. My question is about the fact that this number is significantly lower than one would have expected it to be. My question is about what you're going to reduce services in.

Mr. Schweitzer: Madam Chair, I'd like to get to actually respond. It was a fulsome question. It was about three, four minutes long, I believe, before they actually got to the question. I'm just trying to frame some context in providing my response. I would like the same courtesy . . .

Ms Ganley: I'm just stipulating . . .

Mr. Schweitzer: No, no. I'd like the same courtesy that was provided in asking the question to be extended back to me as I provide my response.

Maclean's Canada, on the most dangerous places in 2019, says that seven out of 10 cities with the worst increases in crime are in Alberta. This is the situation that we inherited from the former minister. This is the situation that we inherited here in Alberta.

If you go out and talk to people in rural communities about the lack of trust in the justice system right now, we have to go out there and restore that confidence in Alberta. We have to restore that. These galleries were filled time after time after time by Albertans that were concerned about the future. They were concerned about their communities. We're making sure that we actually don't waste any time. We're making sure that we're going out there and engaging with them and talking to them about their priorities.

In the northeast of Calgary there was gang activity, increasing crime there. We made sure immediately to go and engage those community leaders here in Alberta so they knew that they have confidence not only that their Justice minister was there for them to hear them, to help make sure that he could address their concerns in an expedient manner but also made sure that the police were there as well to engage with them and build confidence in what's happening in Alberta.

We're going to be doing the same thing with rural crime, making sure we go out and hear their priorities, making sure we tour this entire province to make sure that the stakeholders are engaged in this process. We'll be talking to them about the priorities of this government, making sure that our budget fits with our commitments in our platform that we have, to make sure that Albertans, all Albertans, feel safe in their communities.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think the challenge that I'm having is that the questions that I'm asking are about the budget. I appreciate the minister's plan. It sounds like a fulsome plan. But my questions are not about consultation but specifically about the numbers that are before us today, and the purpose of this time is to discuss those numbers.

So I think the first question, then, I'll just ask. I guess for each division I'll just begin by asking whether you intend to maintain or increase funding. Certainly, the Education minister was willing to say this over and over again. With respect to public security, which was last year about $518 million in the budget, do you intend to maintain or increase that funding?

Mr. Schweitzer: Madam Chair, again, this is not a budget. We'll be tabling a full budget this fall, where we can answer questions relating to the future spending that would be there. This is to maintain government services in the interim period of time. If there are more detailed questions in the fall, once we've tabled a budget, we'll gladly answer their questions at that point in time. In the meantime we're going to continue to focus on the priorities of Albertans, making sure we engage in a fulsome way so they have confidence in our justice system.

Ms Ganley: Okay. I think my next question, then, would go with respect to prosecutions and the courts – those were about $103 million and $200 million respectively – and my question again is the same: in light of the fact that this funding would, annualized over the course of the year, represent over $100 million in cuts, can the minister commit to maintaining or increasing spending in those areas?

Mr. Schweitzer: Again, as has been said many times here in the last two hours and 15 minutes or so that we're into this, this is not a budget. This is interim supply that we're seeking here. I will note for the record that we're going to make sure that we tackle the issues that we have around Jordan issues and delays. We'll be making decisions to make sure that law enforcement officials have the resources that they need to get the job done. Many decisions, I would say . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, we will now move to government members wishing to speak.

Hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika, would you like to share your time and go back and forth with the minister?

Mr. Schow: If it pleases the chair and pleases the minister, I would like to share my time back and forth.

The Chair: The minister agrees. Member, please proceed.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Chair. I don't think it's a secret that we are dealing with a financial mess and potential catastrophe left to us by the previous government, and this interim supply will help enable us to keep services running until we can present a full budget in the fall after the results and recommendations are made from the MacKinnon panel.

I think about where we were heading over the last four years, and the immediate thought that comes to mind would be a fiscal cliff, one that has lasting effects for generations, potentially. That reminds me of a 1991 Hollywood classic where you find two women sitting in a 1966 Ford Thunderbird, staring at the Grand Canyon. Now, if I'm in that car – I'm in the passenger seat – and right as we begin going towards this Grand Canyon, I'm begging Louise not to do this, ultimately what do I do? I grab the steering wheel and I jerk it back around because that's the responsible thing to do, not to drive right off that fiscal cliff and make those promises that cannot be kept and put Alberta in a financial mess that will last and hurt our children and our grandchildren.

The previous government did have us on that path. They made promises they couldn't keep, and they used, say, interesting math. They made promises, for example, that were too high in their revenue projections for 2019-2020. They were $379 million over, according to Stokes. In 2020-2021 they were $2.9 billion over. In '21-22 they were $3.7 billion over and in '22-23 $1.6 billion over.

Now, I'm not sure. It's one of two things: these numbers are either bad math or maybe deliberately misleading the public. The previous government made three consecutive promises and broke each one of them. They promised to balance the budget in 2017-2018: epic fail. They promised to balance the budget in 2018-2019: same result. This year, 2019-2020: same thing. Why would electors believe them when they say they are going to balance the budget several years in advance?

The Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. Schow: I'm getting to my point if you would allow me, Madam Chair.

The point here is that there were some egregious mistakes made. I'm going to ask the minister if he could elaborate on what measures are being taken in the context of interim supply and also in future budgetary considerations to avoid a fiscal cliff and avoid the disaster that we were on until April 16 of this year?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member, for that question. Within the interim supply period, of course, ministries are going forward in a very responsible way. I think every ministry is looking for every efficiency that's available. They're looking at methodologies, where they need to be improved, to ensure that during this interim period we're delivering high-quality services but delivering them, again, in the most cost-effective manner. I think that as we head into the budget development process, it will be incredibly important for all ministries to take a very hard look at the way we deliver services and ensure that, again, we're delivering those services in the most efficient way.

Of course, we're waiting to hear from the MacKinnon panel. We're looking forward to the results of that panel. I think many in this House know that that panel has significant expertise, significant depth of experience, significant diversity and, I might add, is really a bipartisan panel. I'm confident that that panel will serve Albertans well, and they'll provide some very valuable recommendations in terms of a path to balance for this government and also, along the way, ensure again that we can deliver the services that Albertans expect from their government.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Schow: Thank you to the minister and to the chair.

Going back to this fiscal cliff that I referenced before, there were some problems, again, with the numbers leading up to when the former government planned on balancing the budget. Stokes Economics suggested that we would be somewhere in the ballpark of about $100 billion in debt by the time this previous government was done. Now, the debt is certainly a huge problem, but in addition to the debt we also experienced six credit downgrades over the last four years. While those downgrades were announced, to my astonishment we saw the former Finance minister smile and downplay this as if it wasn't a big deal.

The Chair: Hon. member, we are on interim supply. I assume you are talking about that at some point rather quickly.

Mr. Schow: I certainly am, Madam Speaker. I appreciate your patience with my intro here.

To the minister, I am hoping that he may help us understand a little bit about, in the context of interim supply and future budgets, the government's plan to get our credit back to where it once was before this financial train wreck that we were on for the last four years.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, relative to our efforts during this interim supply period we are working actively to bring a discipline and fiscal prudence to the delivery of services. We're not waiting to roll out a budget to do that. We're embarking on that immediately, so that is very relative to the interim supply period.

There's no doubt that the credit downgrades that the member spoke of were significant, and credit downgrades, of course, do increase the cost of borrowing for the province. From that standpoint, even during the interim supply period we believe that it's really critical to send a message out to the capital markets that we are being fiscally responsible as a government, to ensure that the markets understand that we have a path to balance and a realistic path to balance. I think it's critically important that as we develop projections, we develop them in a very responsible and realistic manner, recognizing the volatility that this province can have in terms of its revenues but, in that light, ensuring that we're using responsible and realistic forecasts.

I do believe that, again, the capital markets will look upon our measures as we exercise fiscal discipline and fiscal responsibility. I believe that the capital markets will recognize those efforts. As they take a look at our long-term initiatives to attract investment back into this province, create economic activity, jobs, and opportunities, I believe that, again, all of those things, the greater picture, will be considered by the capital markets, because I think, as many members have noted here today, excessive debt service costs are really untenable for Albertans. You know, to pay bondholders and creditors as opposed to teachers, nurses, and other recipients of program spending is really unacceptable in the long term for Albertans.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Schow: Thank you. I want to thank the hon. minister for his answer and for the incredible work that he is doing to ensure that this 1966 Ford Thunderbird does not go off a fiscal cliff but, rather, we right the ship. I also understand – in the context of interim supply, I'm hoping that the minister can update the committee on the status of the enterprise resource planning system going forward.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would also like to thank the Member for Cardston-Siksika for this question. I'd like to just say that, you know, with my background as a venture capital investor I do understand the value of a well-designed enterprise resource planning system.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt. The time is now in the hands of the opposition.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, would you like to share your time with the minister?

Ms Gray: I would, yes. Thank you.

The Chair: Minister, do you agree? Yes. Absolutely.

Member, please proceed.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. Thank you to the ministers for answering questions today. Understanding that we are only talking about the interim supply period and funding the operations of government, I wanted to ask about some of the delivery of services to Albertans because, particularly with knowing that employment standards and occupational health and safety hadn't been fully updated in 30 years, there was a significant amount of change over the last several years. One of the needs that was identified was additional front-line supports for the delivery of services, additional FTEs, that essentially were happening not through new hires but just moving resources around government. Within this interim supply, to make sure that there's still timely and efficient delivery of services when someone has an employment standards complaint or when there is an OH and S issue, I was wondering if you could just speak to if the continued support for those front-line workers and making sure those resources are there are part of the interim supply budget that's been put before us.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member opposite for the question. We're confident that the resources that we have in interim supply will ensure that government can deliver those services until we roll out a budget.

We recognize the importance of those services to Albertans, and we're confident that interim supply numbers will meet that need.

5:30

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. It's my hope that the plan to continue to kind of staff up in the areas where we needed to do that will continue. There was a very large backlog in complaints, particularly in employment standards. Making sure that when somebody hasn't gotten the paycheque that they were supposed to, that complaint can be dealt with in a really timely way I think continues to be important. It is a performance measure in the annual reports and budgets and so on. That's something we can continue to discuss in more depth with the actual budget, my concern being just the interim supply period and making sure that if there needs to be somebody hired or trained or moved, that can continue to happen, because there has been some language in the public about hiring freezes or job postings not being filled. Would you be able to speak to that? That's more of a government-wide question, but my concern is specifically front-line service delivery within the ministry of labour.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, to answer the question of the member opposite, we will be looking for efficiencies. We're going to be looking to do things better. By saying better, it's more efficiently. There may be instances where ministries may find an opportunity where they can deliver services with fewer resources. I think that's always the goal of government, to ensure that we're delivering a maximum service with the fewest resources possible. That is a big focus for our government during this time of interim supply, and it's certainly going to be a focus of our government as we head into budget preparation.

Madam Chair, with the consent of the member opposite I would like to make a request. There was a question by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora to our Education minister around capital expenditures, and I believe our Education minister has an answer. If I can indulge the member opposite, we'll ask the Education minister to deliver that into the record.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you. These are constructions and renovations that are currently ongoing. Ross Sheppard high school for Edmonton public school district No. 7 is in construction or renovation. I'm not sure which; it doesn't highlight it here. The Chair: Hon. minister, my apologies.

Member LaGrange: I've got four left to go.

The Chair: Okay. Please proceed, Minister.

Member LaGrange: Sorry.

Peerless Lake school, Kee Tas Kee Now Tribal Council education authority; Trout Lake K to 12 school, Kee Tas Kee Now Tribal Council education authority; South Lethbridge school, Lethbridge school district No. 51; and Sturgeon school, Sturgeon school division No. 24 is tendered. Those do not include the design phase ones.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. My questions start off – and I know I'm going to run out of time – to the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance on behalf of the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism. First question: is the amount that's estimated here higher or lower than our budget, what we had budgeted for interim? Have you increased it or decreased it? Well, I'll start with that quick, easy question.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: All right. Thank you, Madam Chair. In terms of the question relative to the budget, again, because interim supply is just the funding required and doesn't consider, you know, nonvoted amounts, doesn't consider amortization and other noncash amounts and because the spend is not linear, it's difficult to compare to budget. Again, I think what I can commit to the member opposite is that we're confident that the amounts here will take us to budget time, and we're going to look forward to rolling out a full budget.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Minister. I'm curious to know if the budgeted amounts or allotments in the current economic development and trade budget include monies for the investor tax credit, the capital investment tax credit, and the interactive digital media tax credit as well as if Alberta Innovates will continue to be funded or if you are changing their funding formula between now and November. I'm just grouping the questions. As well, for the artificial intelligence and high tech we committed $50 million over five years, and some of that would be coming through this interim supply.

The Chair: Ten seconds, hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this point in time those programs are under review. Again, we're confident that . . . [Mr. Toews's speaking time expired]

The Chair: Hon. members, the time goes to government members. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you.

The Chair: Sorry. My apologies. Would you like to go back and forth with the minister?

Mr. Rowswell: Yeah.

The Chair: Minister?

Okay. Please proceed.

Mr. Rowswell: My question is on some of the new associate ministries. The red tape ministry: like, there are lots of panels that are going to have to be started and funded. I know there are some specific things with the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and some of the issues he's working with in regard to linear assessment on dry gas and also the pipeline access for natural gas and what it's doing to the price of AECO gas.

I know that from the red tape side there are a lot of industry panels that are involved in there. When I was talking to Lakeland College in my constituency, I asked them if they are impacted by red tape, and they said yes. They had actually quantified it where it was going to cost them – the regulations that they felt they could get rid of would save them about $3 million a year. Then when I talked to municipalities, they were saying: well, we'd like to have a panel, too, because there's lots of red tape that we have to deal with in order to, you know, just operate more efficiently and save money. My question is that these are new ministries. My understanding of interim supply is that we're funding what's existing and carrying on. What things are you trying to accomplish between now and this fall with regard to the associate ministries, and how are they funded? Where do you get the money for them?

The Chair: The hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the question. As we've stated in the past, the associate ministries are going to be funded under the various ministries. For instance, my ministry will be under Finance, so it will be funded under Finance. We will not be actually increasing any cost or expense cost to Albertans. We would be just reallocating some of the resources within Finance to be able to fund this important endeavour. As you've already mentioned, the issue of regulatory burden affecting our job creators is substantial in this province, and it has been for many years. This government's commitment to being able to address this issue quickly and effectively is to put a specific associate minister responsible for this and centralize the efforts for all of the ministries. Now, that is going to be funded through Finance, and that's something that this government has been committed to and the Premier has been committed to. It was very clear in the mandate that we received from Albertans.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowswell: Yeah. If I could get the Associate Minister of Natural Gas to respond to that as well.

The Chair: The hon. Associate Minister of Natural Gas.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, to begin, we have to sort of understand where we came from. You can appreciate that when you have an accidental government staffed by paper candidates managing a $50 billion economy, it's going to create some neglect, and that neglect over four years became rot. We have an industry that is absolutely in dire straits right now.

I'll give you just one example, and it's one that's been in the news lately, the issue with the dry gas producers. The dry gas producers in this province are absolutely hurting. They are paying 60 per cent linear assessment. Now, I'll give a shout-out to the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who has done a stellar job of stepping forward and partnering with us to work on this, but it's a difficult situation.

I'll give you one example. It was actually in the Calgary Herald yesterday. There was a great article about the natural gas industry. They interviewed the president of Pine Cliff. Pine Cliff has an enterprise value of $120 million; unfortunately, they have an assessed value of $691 million, and that's because their linear assessment hasn't changed. Just imagine any business, Madam Chair, that is going to have 60 per cent off the top of their revenue before they even touch operating costs or labour or anything like that. That's what's happening right now, and it's creating tremendous pressure on that industry.

This, of course, was, you know, also demonstrated by the recent Trident bankruptcy. When Trident went bankrupt, Madam Chair, they left 4,700 abandoned wells that were turned over to the Orphan Well Association. Now, I understand that some of those are going to get picked up, but at the end of the day it just becomes a death spiral for that entire industry, and it has become extremely painful.

One of the things that we've been doing, to the member's point: I'm a brand new associate minister, and we are embedded in the energy industry. What that essentially means from a cost perspective is that it's about reallocating funds. It's about priorities. The previous administration did not make it a priority. They neglected natural gas producers for four years. We're making it a priority. We're moving those funds around so that we can staff, you know, just a skeleton crew, if you will, that's going to focus on this important business.

We're also doing some work with stakeholders. Presidents and VPs of some of our biggest natural gas producers are actually part of a working group and are actually doing some work for us, and they're doing it at their own expense, Madam Chair.

You've got to appreciate that this industry has been neglected for so long. They are thrilled just to participate in the solution-building process. So they're doing it at their own expense, and I have to give a shout-out to them as well.

Thank you for the question.

Mr. Rowswell: I'll focus a little bit on agriculture. I notice the minister of agriculture is not here, so maybe Finance? Can I do that?

The Chair: Please withdraw your comment.

Mr. Rowswell: What's that?

The Chair: If you can withdraw that comment.

Mr. Rowswell: Oh. Okay. All right.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Rowswell: Crop insurance is a very vital tool for farmers – I'm sure they're putting out those grain bins right now – and we share in the cost of that. Also, as a matter of fact, agricultural societies normally would have their funding by now, and they don't have it. So I'm wondering: do we have to wait until this interim supply bill passes before they can expect that money? How is the crop insurance dealt with, and how are ag societies going to be dealt with?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. In response to the question around the important programs for agriculture, there is a special warrant in place, and consequently there will be no disruptions to program spending or need relative to perhaps events of loss for the agriculture industry.

In terms of ag society funding, I will have to defer that question to the agriculture minister, and I expect that the minister can reply to the member on that directly.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowswell: Yeah. I'd just like to have the Minister of Service Alberta continue to speak from when he got cut off if he can remember.

Mr. Glubish: Well, thank you very much to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright for giving me an opportunity to expand a little bit on the topic of the ERP system upgrade, or the enterprise resource planning system upgrade. As I said before, with a background in venture capital, as an investor I certainly understand the value of a well-designed ERP system and the critical role that that plays in ensuring that large organizations run smoothly and efficiently. Certainly, the government of Alberta would qualify as a very, very large organization. I can assure the member and you, Madam Chair, that our plans for interim supply will allow us to continue with our upgrade to the ERP system as we continue to roll that out.

Again, as we've said before, this is not a budget. It is simply the cash flow to fund government services until a full budget is presented in the fall, very much in the same way as when the NDP presented an interim supply last year. But what I can tell you is that we are focused on bringing overdue discipline to government spending, cleaning up the mess from the previous administration that was left behind for Albertans.

And, to be clear, we are also working very hard with our department officials to develop...

The Chair: Hon. minister, I hate to interrupt.

The time goes to the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre is rising. Hon. member, would you like to share your time with the minister?

Mr. Shepherd: If that would be all right, yes.

The Chair: Minister, would you agree?

Please proceed, Member.

Mr. Shepherd: Okay. I assume a minister of some form will respond.

Thank you, Madam Chair. Just returning, then, to some of the areas that I've been looking at, again, I appreciate what we heard from the minister earlier, the Minister of Health, and his discussions on how the just under $14 billion that's allocated to his budget for the interim supply would be applied. I did have some additional questions.

In regard to the capital in particular, so looking at the $165 million that's set aside for capital in the interim supply period, there are a number of projects that we know have been under way. To begin, we know that this minister has chosen, for reasons that haven't really become clear yet, to put a pause on the construction of the Edmonton clinical lab hub. That was something that we had put forward funding for and was actually under construction. To the minister: can you clarify if those dollars are still included in the capital investment portion here under Health, and if so, how are they being allocated since they are clearly not being spent on construction of the lab?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think, you know, our concerns with the lab hub were clear in our platform. At this point in time I can say that this government, the Minister of Health, the Minister of Infrastructure are making some final decisions around that project. Again, I think we put that question out to Albertans in the platform. I think we were quite clear.

Mr. Shepherd: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. So there's no accounting currently for those dollars. Understood.

My next question, then, would be: do these capital commitments, then, include dollars for the completion of the Grande Prairie hospital? We know that that project has been under way. Individuals in that area have been awaiting the completion of that project. I just want to clarify, then, if the about $166 million here includes the funding for the completion of the Grande Prairie hospital.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Panda: Thank you for the question, Madam Chair, about the Grande Prairie hospital. The full funding is in place, actually. Myself and the Minister of Finance and our local MLAs from Grande Prairie and from Central Peace-Notley: all four of us have visited that hospital, reviewed the progress. There were some issues with the subtrades because the previous contractor, Graham, had some commercial disputes with the subcontractors there. But the new contractor, Clark Builders, actually mobilized. Now they've brought back 90 per cent of the previous trades, so the construction is going well. There is about 30 to 40 per cent of the work left but mostly interior work, so it's progressing really well. I think it will be completed next year.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you to the Minister of Infrastructure for that detailed answer. I appreciate that update. I'm glad to hear the project is going well and that those dollars are included here, then, in this figure.

While we have the Minister of Infrastructure here, actually, I'd be interested to ask this. I know there are a number of projects that had been approved or were in the process with the new federal government program, by which they provide funding for many different cultural institutions and projects but require that the provincial government submit a list of approved projects. I forget the name of the program off the top of my head, but I know that there were projects such as the Telus World of Science, the Winspear Centre, a completion project here in my own constituency, and several others that, unfortunately, due to some of the abundance of paperwork, shall we say, that was required by the federal government were not able to get completed before the election happened. To the minister: do you know if the capital amounts, then, that are included here for culture would include those projects or the funding that would go toward those projects which your government chooses to approve for that federal program?

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, the previous government had approved 17 projects before the election, and they announced those projects. Our government came in in the last few weeks, and we are reviewing that list of projects based on the cost-effectiveness of those projects, whether they're shovel ready or not, whether they would create economic activity in those areas where those projects are proposed, and whether the partner ministries have enough funding. We're looking at all those projects case by case, and very soon, probably in the next couple of weeks, we will let those stakeholders know which projects we are going ahead with.

Thank you.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Minister, and, again, I deeply appreciate the very clear answer and the update on that. I know that our stakeholders will be very happy to hear that they will have some sense of clarity on that soon. Thank you again for that.

I did wonder, then, also – there were a couple of other projects that were approved for planning stages: of course, the southwest Edmonton hospital, which was a significant commitment for the city of Edmonton, which has not seen a new hospital in some time, and, as the Member for Edmonton-South West well knows, his constituents in that area and others have been under quite some pressure for some time with relying on the aging Misericordia. I think many are quite excited to see that project move forward. We also have the child and youth mental health centre, that was committed to by our government, along with some funding from the Stollery foundation. To the minister: do you know if the capital amounts that are listed here for Health, just under $166 million, include the amounts that were committed for the planning on those projects?

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, all those projects are still happening. Money was allocated. I don't know the exact details, how much of it is for what stage. Some of them are in program planning and different stages. The money is allocated based on the progress the projects are making. If the member is interested, later on I can give him the project phase details. Currently I can say that those projects are all well funded.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you again to the Minister of Infrastructure. Indeed, Madam Chair, if I may say, I think this has probably been some of the most fruitful rounds of questions I've had the opportunity to take part in today. Thank you to the minister, who has clearly been doing his homework and has some good knowledge on his file.

Just looking through what opportunities I have here in the remaining minutes that we have, the one other question that I might have is to the Minister of Health. I know that there was funding that our government had committed for moving forward on supervised consumption sites in various jurisdictions across the province. This government has chosen at this time to put that funding on pause. I just wanted to clarify, while the government is conducting its review and considering whether or not it's going to fund these particular life-saving services...

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Government Motion 20, agreed to on June 17, 2019, the allotted time of three hours has elapsed.

I will allow a few minutes for the hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Do I really need to ask for unanimous consent to go to as much as five minutes here to get this done, or can we get this done by 6 o'clock, do you think?

The Chair: No. We will just proceed with the vote as long as we need. Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 9

Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act

[Adjourned debate on the motion for the previous question June 17: Mr. Neudorf]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has time remaining if he should like to use it.

Seeing that he wouldn't like to, is there anyone else wishing to join the debate today? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to Bill 9 for the first time, an important piece of legislation in the agenda of this new government, I imagine. You know, so far we've seen from this government a complete disrespect or a lack of respect for the working people of this province. This piece of legislation is no different than the bills before it, whether we're talking about reducing the minimum wage for youth workers, whether we're talking about reducing the ability for workers to collect overtime or bank their overtime. We've seen attacks on that in this House so far, in the few short weeks that we've been here. We're starting to see – well, we're getting a good picture – what this government feels is a priority. On one hand, we have them rushing to move forward with a $4.5 billion handout on the backs of everyday Albertans, taking taxpayers' dollars and handing them to the largest of corporations, with really no assurances that it will pay for itself in the near future. Their own platform budget showed that it doesn't do that.

Now, I have many concerns with this bill. Of course, as we sat here in the wee hours of the morning yesterday – or today, I suppose; excuse me – the government decided to force closure on this piece of legislation. They are very proud of that. We had members of the government saying: hear, hear. They're proud to take away our ability to continue debating this incredibly important piece of legislation, incredible in the way that it's going to undermine the workers of this province. It's going to undermine good-faith bargaining and undermine the process that public servants deserve to have when they're negotiating their contracts.

Now, really, this piece of legislation, I would say, is quite unprecedented. I have many concerns just moving back to the fact that we're moving towards closure on this legislation because the government doesn't feel that it is their responsibility to stand face to face with Albertans, stand face to face with the public servants that they stand in this House and say they support. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting way to show that you support those workers.

Now, on top of that, earlier today we saw a move by this government, a heavy-handed move once again to limit debate further. Closure wasn't enough. This government had to take it one step further and limit debate even more. Now, I'm not entirely sure why they decided to make this move. I imagine it's because they're afraid that this piece of legislation might see the light of day, that public servants might have the opportunity to really analyze and start to see the priorities of this government, which, hopefully, they've been watching so far: the killing of overtime or reduction of overtime, a reduction of wage for youth workers. Of course, it shouldn't be a surprise. We've seen this Premier, before he was our Premier, talk about having to work late hours, that if he was working with unionized people, you'd have to pay them extra, and he thought that that wasn't okay. We're starting to see the priorities of this Premier.

We've seen members of this Legislature stand up in the 29th Legislature and call democratically elected union representatives "union thugs" and "union bosses." Now, Mr. Speaker, if I were to stand in this House and say one of those words about the Premier, I imagine it might be unparliamentary, but somehow it's okay to call out people that were also democratically elected by the workers that they represent.

Now, when we talk about the closure that's been moved on this piece of legislation, it kind of reminds me of playing Monopoly with an unwilling participant. You know, you get somehow through the game, and you're doing quite well: you've got a couple of thousand dollars, and your opponent has nothing; maybe he's stuck in jail for a couple of turns. At that point the other player gets sick of playing, so they flip the table over and say: "I'm not playing anymore. I've had enough of this. I don't like where you're coming from, so I'm not going to stand for it." Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this wasn't getting halfway through the game or nearing the end, when you know that all the cards have been played and you kind of see where the scenario is going. This was before we even had a chance to start the game.

There was one speaker, I believe, from the government side before they decided to invoke closure. So it really shows the priorities of this government: willing to move fast to give money away, money of hard-working Albertans, to large corporations, willing to roll back overtime, but when it comes to negotiating in good faith with the public servants of this province, well, we're going to have to wait for that. They say that they need to reflect on budgetary restrictions. Well, maybe it was a good idea to reflect on that before you decided to give $4 billion away to large corporations. Once again, we're seeing the priorities of this government.

Now, at the end of the day, this piece of legislation is breaking the law. It's showing that this government is willing to do whatever it can to not fulfill its responsibility to bargain in good faith, to change the rules when the game isn't going in their favour or when the rules aren't working in their favour, and we saw this even passed in the legislation that we debated in this House. We saw this during the standing orders debate, when we as members had our ability to introduce community members, representatives of organizations in our constituencies, our rights as private members, taken away by this Premier and by this government. Hopefully, the members have had an opportunity to reflect on that. Mr. Speaker, as much as I appreciate your ability to introduce my guests for me, I think it's an important opportunity for me to introduce my own guests and advocate on their behalf, and when we bring people here, they want to see that.

Mr. Speaker, of course, this bill is impacting 180,000 workers across this province. It's impacting front-line nurses, social workers, teachers, librarians, food inspectors, child mental health therapists, long-term care workers, correctional officers, and sheriffs, the sheriffs in this very Legislature, that protect us day in and day out. They stay here with us no matter how late we work. You know, we as private members and cabinet members have the opportunity to take a little bit of time, take a break, refuel, but these sheriffs that are in this Legislature often don't have that same opportunity. So what you're saying is that their ability to negotiate is, well, not very important to you. It's very concerning for me.

When we talk about front-line nurses, the people in our hospitals, in our health care facilities that take care of our sick, young, and seniors, you're saying that they don't deserve the opportunity to negotiate their own wages. It's very concerning, Mr. Speaker.

I don't think it's fair, once again, that a government that stands day after day and says that they support these people and that they appreciate the work that they're doing in our communities – it's a funny way of showing it. I think that the workers who are going to be impacted by this legislation are going to be very concerned, which is why I do not agree with the fact that we are limiting debate on this legislation. I think it's important to hear from other government members on this Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining bill. I think that they're probably hearing from constituents of theirs. Considering that this piece of legislation is impacting nearly 200,000 workers, I imagine a few of them are in their constituencies.

So when they come into this House and advocate for new hospitals to be built, for more supports, more doctors, more physicians, more nurses, they're doing a disservice. Really, they're showing that they're really not that concerned, because if they were concerned, they wouldn't be supporting this piece of legislation. Now, I don't quite understand how they think these public servants are going to be happy to continue working on behalf of all Albertans while getting attacked by the very government that should be supporting them.

Of course, there are many more questions that we have around funding for these essential services in the first place: funding for EMS, funding for nurses in our health care system and for the many other workers at primary care networks, and for our teachers. You know, we were able to get a commitment from this government to fund enrolment for one year. Well, that's a great start. Let's talk about the next three years and after that even. On one hand, we have the government attacking the ability of these workers and these public servants to negotiate, and then on the other hand we have a government that's unwilling to commit to properly fund those services.

These public servants are getting attacked on all sides, and you're going to tell them: "It's okay. Your government supports you. Get back to work." We already see instances of teachers having to fund their own classrooms, bringing in supplies for the students because the programs are already inadequately supported. Yet with the bills that we've seen come forward from this government, there are just more questions and no answers, many questions, things left to regulation. The government says: trust us. Well, after this Bill 9 I don't know how these public servants are going to be able to trust this government.

Now, of course, the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs had the opportunity to list many of the contracts that are being negotiated that are going to be affected by the delay that this legislation is putting forward. I'm very concerned for those people. I'm concerned for the workers. I'm concerned for the students and the patients. Everyone in this Legislature should be very concerned. I would appreciate it if the government members, the private members on the government side, took the time to stand up and talk about why they support this, why they support delaying negotiations past the federal election, of course, which seems to be the main concern for this Premier. We've seen the Premier in Ontario struggling with his own numbers because of passing legislation that was not supported by the majority of people in that province. I think we're getting to a place where we may see the same concerns here, especially with a government that is so willing to undermine the public servants of this province.

Of course, this bill goes one step further. We've had the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance stand up and say: "This is only a delay. Nothing to see here. We'll get back to your regular programming in a few months, after the federal election." But, Mr. Speaker, this bill goes further. It gives the Lieutenant Governor in Council the opportunity to make regulations, which is very concerning because that's giving the government the opportunity or the power to regulate whatever they want. If they feel that maybe these health care workers should take a 2 per cent pay cut, well, who needs good-faith bargaining, really? I believe that that's a sentiment that some of the private members in this Legislature on the government side might believe. They might feel that public-sector workers are overpaid. I've seen that on social media quite a bit, and it wouldn't surprise me if some of the members in here believe that very thing. Once again, tax giveaways to large corporations, nothing for public servants: it's very concerning.

Of course, we had an MLA, that is currently on the government side, in discussion of Bill 7 when we were government . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie rising.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that it's so important that we continue to discuss how important it is to bargain in good faith, and I was hoping that the Member for Edmonton-West Henday could continue with his thoughts. I'd really appreciate that.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Just touching on the fact that in Ontario they're currently going through a very similar process in terms of a government that's unwilling to negotiate in good faith, I'm not quite certain if the legislation is before the House or if it's passed now, but the government is talking about capping wages through legislation, which is very concerning. These public servants, the people of our province who wake up every day to serve the people of this province, deserve to be able to negotiate in good faith. Of course, negotiation isn't just about getting a raise, as the government members seem to think. It's about getting higher quality standards of safety and making sure that we're protecting the ratios, whether it be in the health care system or in the education system.

We've been through these over the last four years, negotiations where the NDP government or representatives came to the table and said: "Look, we're going through a recession. We need to have a real conversation about what we can do to serve you while also recognizing that there's not a lot of wiggle room." Instead of this government doing that same thing, they're saying: "We don't really think your voice is important. We're going to decide what's right for you." That's very concerning, Mr. Speaker.

Now, just getting back to the conversation on Bill 7 in the 29th Legislative Assembly, the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon had concerns with the very regulations, the powers that were given under regulations very similar to what we're seeing under Bill 9. Now, I'm interested to hear if the member – I'm very happy he's here to be a part of the debate. I would be very interested to see if he's concerned about these same regulations that are presented to us in the legislation before us. I look forward to hearing him speak.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I think that the almost 200,000 workers of this province who are going to be affected by this legislation – the patients and the students and the workers that protect MLAs and are also affected by this legislation – deserve to have their voices heard. That has clearly not happened. They deserve to be consulted: clearly, not happened. This was not something that was in the government's platform. It was not in the UCP platform. They talk a lot about their mandate. Was this part of your mandate? That's a question that I have. Did the voters of Alberta give you the right to break contracts? I suppose through your majority government they did, but you didn't discuss negotiating in bad faith with Albertans. So I'm very concerned.

Once again this is showing a complete disrespect for the public servants of this province. It's showing a complete disrespect for the ability of our members, who were elected here in just the same way that the members on the government side were, to debate this legislation, which does not bode well for democracy in this province.

Now, once again, I think that every member should stand up and discuss why they plan to support or not support this legislation. I look forward to hearing that debate. I'm very concerned about the idea of labour unrest in this province. We've seen it before, and at the rate this government is going, we are going to see it again, which is a great concern to me. That means compromised services and often more costly settlements. So I don't know if this government is prepared to try and legislate workers back to work when they say: our rights are being infringed upon. We'll see that day when it comes. Hopefully, it doesn't get to that.

Now, once again, we should not be using legislation to break legally binding contracts. We've seen it go to the Supreme Court before. We've seen it lose in the Supreme Court before. Really, this government is trying to create a problem for the future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is rising.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise, my first time to speak to this bill, Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, brought forward by the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance. I want the opportunity and I'm taking the opportunity now to get my voice on the record in defence of workers in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I was very surprised, reading through the bill, that the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board would bring this forward, because it does not respect the people that he stands up and talks repeatedly about daily when he uses his key messages to talk in answer to questions put by my colleagues. Those key messages, frankly, ring hollow when you look at what's before us in Bill 9.

I heard my colleague just talk about another member of the opposition identifying all 24 of the employers and unions and agreement titles and dates. It's stunning to look down the list and think about the breadth of impact that this will have across the province of Alberta and the impact that this will have on hard-working public servants, whether they work directly for a related agency like Alberta Health Services, Lamont health care centre, Allen Gray continuing care centre, represented by AUPE in that case, or if they're, in fact, with the Alberta college of art and design, now called the university of art, in Calgary. The union that represents those workers there is the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees.

I've just mentioned two of the 24, but in the course of my brief talk today I'm going to mention them all so that workers across this province, if they hear where they're working, they'll get the message that this government is legislating away their fair chance to discuss their wages, which all collective bargaining agreements should continue to have going forward. When they don't, you break the contract with those workers. Those workers then really have no need or should have no need and belief in the government that it will ever keep its word again. The two years of zeros that many of these collectively bargained agreements undertook was done by them, Mr. Speaker, because they recognized that there were challenges in the province with regard to revenues coming in. There were challenges in this province with regard to those revenues being stifled and stymied as a result of the takeaway capacity of our oil and gas products, that really drive the revenues for this province, in addition to other taxes and licences and fees.

Mr. Speaker, I'm so disappointed with what's before us that I really wish that all Albertans who are in these many employer situations – for instance, Alberta Health Services. It's massive in terms of the number of Albertans that work for Alberta Health Services that are represented by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. It's probably our third-largest employer in this province, and their collective agreement between AHS and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, general support services, which runs from April 1, 2017, to March 31, 2020, is being essentially ripped up. Those folks didn't bargain for that. They bargained for two years of zeros and then a wage reopener, and this is putting that off potentially indefinitely. I know it says to the end of October, but what the government has shown by bringing in this piece of legislation is that they can continue to abuse power in this province. They can continue to bring forward bills that even delay things further. What's holding them back? Nothing, as can be seen with this Bill 9.

I mentioned the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. I'm sure some members have heard – maybe not all have heard it – some of the feedback on this bill from the president of that union: this is an egregious attack on workers' rights and legally binding collective agreements; this is authoritarian; this is ideological, and it does nothing but create labour unrest; Albertans should be very concerned when a new government uses the power and authority of the state to crush basic rights.

Mr. Speaker, when the government that I was a part of was reaching out to all unions to ask them to look at taking zeros for two years, I visited Mr. Smith and his executive director, and he showed me a photograph on the wall of a massive, massive demonstration just outside on these steps. Not just the steps but the building was totally surrounded with workers in this province who came out to protest. I believe it was bills 45 and 46 that they were on the steps protesting. Bill 45, under the government of Premier Alison Redford in the fall of 2013, was the Public Sector Services Continuation Act, that intended to deter illegal strikes to save Albertans money. Bill 46 was the Public Service Salary Restraint Act. Different titles but probably the same intent, Mr. Speaker.

Those bills caused a reaction that the government at that time was not anticipating. They were totally flummoxed by the amount of upset that they had caused by bringing forward those bills. As I said, the air photo of this entire precinct was covered with Albertans who let their representatives know that they would not stand for the kind of high-handed, bullying treatment from those bills and, I would argue, that this bill brings in, Mr. Speaker.

There are members of this Legislature today who were there then, in 2013. The Member for Calgary-Hays voted in support of Bill 45. The Member for Calgary-Hays voted in support of Bill 46. That person also supported Bill 24, which was the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act. The Member for Calgary-Hays sponsored that bill and voted for the passage of the bill. Mr. Speaker, that same member will be supporting this bill when ultimately it goes to a vote. I can tell you that, from my view of it, that member will be on the wrong side of history four times in just the four bills, the one before us and the three that that person supported.

In addition to those three employers, I want to mention, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta Health Services, Covenant Health, and the Lamont health centre, represented by HSAA, have a collective agreement that will not go forward for negotiation until after the Bill 9 time period is up and, potentially, even after that if another bill gets brought in by the government, which has shown that it will break the law and use its power, the legislative hammer it has, to break legally binding contracts with public-sector workers that are in wage talks.

The preamble of this bill also is something that I'm curious about. I haven't heard anybody from the other side speak to the preamble. It talks about significant changes having occurred in Alberta's economy since the 2018-2019 third-quarter fiscal update and economic statement. I haven't heard the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board address that with regard to Bill 9, Mr. Speaker. If he does have information that would talk about the significant changes that have occurred in the economy since the end of February 2019, perhaps he should elucidate this House on that.

An additional centre, the Bethany Group in Camrose, is going to be affected by this as well, Mr. Speaker. There are 180,000 workers across this province that will be getting the news, probably getting the news right away, from their representatives that their collective agreement with the government of Alberta is not worth the paper it's printed on because of this government's actions.

I want to also identify that the United Nurses of Alberta are negatively affected by what's before us also. The UNA president, Ms Heather Smith, says: I'm not terribly surprised, but I'm very, very disappointed; even Ralph Klein – she invokes the former Premier of this province – in the depths and darkness of the 1990s didn't use legislation to reach in and violate workers' contracts; this is incredibly unprecedented, incredibly disappointing; it is the biggest betrayal by the government I have ever seen.

You new members on the other side: you are part, in the view of the UNA president, of the biggest betrayal of workers' rights that she has ever seen by a government. She says that it's even worse than Ralph Klein. Congratulations. You have two months under your belt, and the feedback is in from a union president who has been serving this province . . .

Ms Hoffman: Since the '80s.

Member Ceci: Since the '80s? I thought it was the early '90s. I think she's coming up to 25 years, Mr. Speaker, as the president of that union.

I think we can all agree that nurses have far more respect in the public eye than legislators, and I would say that the legislators on the government side are the ones who, in her view, are part of the biggest betrayal she has ever seen. It's not people on this side. On this side we respect contracts. We negotiated two years of zeros, with the promise of a wage reopener. There was not a promise that wages would go up. It was a promise that we would get back to the table with those collectively bargained groups and work with them.

So that's UNA.

We go now to Alberta Innovates, with AUPE representatives. It may not be . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie rising.

Member Loyola: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it's imperative that everyone in this House understand exactly what bargaining in good faith means. I was hoping that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo could talk a little bit more about his experience going to the table, discussing with labour union leaders, and the experience that he had but specifically focusing on what that means in terms of bargaining in good faith.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll maybe just speak briefly about a couple of things that happened with regard to that. One, I was a city of Calgary social worker for eight years on the front line. I know another hon. member is a member of the city of Calgary's community and social services. I was a CUPE local 38 member, and I can tell you that the eight years I worked for the city were some of the best working conditions I ever had. Not that I had bad working conditions in other places, but I was never represented by a union or came in and had the benefit of a union that was organizing and looking out for my rights as an employee. That was, in my estimation, the benefit of belonging to a union. I think this government is not caring about those benefits, and it will backfire on them.

I just want to address this particular question from my hon. friend in the back and say that the Executive Council of the government that I was part of, the NDP government that was here from 2015 to 2019, had a respectful working relationship with all of the unions that we collaborated with. I didn't do the direct negotiations, Mr. Speaker – we had very capable people who did that – but I was part of the council of a small subcommittee of the cabinet that worked up the mandates, and then those mandates were taken out by the representative of the government, who sat down with the different unions and organized the collective agreements.

Mr. Speaker, we were very careful with regard to what we could afford and put on the table. These zeros were something we achieved. Sometimes there were improvements to working conditions and social kinds of improvements that benefited those agreements and got those agreements settled. But I can tell you that there was no agreement to de facto say: when you come back for the third year, your wages are going up. We said that we would look at the conditions, that we would look at where we were, and we would bargain. We never said: we will delay. We never said: it doesn't matter what you think about the third year; you're not going to get it. That is dirty pool. That is the kind of activity, the kind of action that someone who doesn't respect front-line people does and pulls and brings up in the – not the dead of night. We're not in the dead of night yet. But it certainly is something that is not fair.

People give their all, and we owe them better, Mr. Speaker. They're at the bedside. They're in jails. They're here. There's the Fort McMurray Catholic board of education that's affected. There are the government of Alberta workers that are affected. InnoTech Alberta is affected. Bow Valley College; Athabasca University; NorQuest, Olds, and Red Deer colleges: the workers there are all affected. Keyano, Lakeland, and Lethbridge colleges; the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology; Northern Lakes College: it's just staggering when you think about the breadth of this. The Teachers' Employer Bargaining Association, the University of Calgary, the University of Lethbridge . . .

The Acting Speaker: Other members wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Okay. Let's talk a little bit about why it might be that conservation officers and custodians and firefighters and paramedics and other people might be worried about this legislation and, indeed, why it is destined for the courts, and why it is more than likely that it will end up costing us more and being thrown out.

First, a little trip down memory lane. In 2002 the B.C. government brought in legislation, subsequently found unconstitutional, to limit the right of a union, a teachers' union in this case, the B.C. Teachers' Federation, to bargain on classroom size and complexity of classrooms. Specifically at issue was an education fund that ensured appropriate supports for children with disabilities. It took away the union's right to bargain on those issues. That was the original piece of legislation.

It was struck down in 2014 after a second piece of unconstitutional legislation was brought in in 2012. There were in the intervening time strikes. It was appealed. The B.C. Supreme Court decision was found unconstitutional in 2014, it was appealed on a technicality in '15, and then in 2016 the Supreme Court of Canada found, in a rare decision, straight from the bench – it took them 20 minutes in 2016 – that the 2014 decision was correct and that the government had behaved unconstitutionally in limiting the right to bargain on those and other issues for the B.C. teachers.

You know, a lot of this came down to supports for children with disabilities, and here's what one retired teacher said in response to the Supreme Court decision: every kid in 2002 who had special needs got no damn help for 14 years because of that government; that's what it means; all those little kids in kindergarten then have finished high school and never got the support they needed. This woman is named Patricia Gudlaugson.

Why is this important? Well, because the court concluded that the government did not negotiate in good faith . . . One of the problems was that the government representatives were pre-occupied by another strategy. Their strategy was to put such pressure on the union that it would provoke a strike . . . The government representatives thought this would give government the opportunity to gain political support for imposing legislation on the union.

Sound familiar?

Certainly, the court allowed that the government has a role and responsibility in respect of the education system that entitles it to establish some fiscal and policy parameters around the collective bargaining.

Well, this is obvious. We all understand this on this side of the House. That's why we bargained zeros out of people for the last four years. But there has to be, essentially, the court found – and that was reiterated by the Supreme Court – an orderly labour relations environment so long as there can still be room for movement within those parameters.

What's interesting about this is that we're pushing this off into delaying arbitration. Now, an arbitrator, for the benefit of the House, performs a function similar to a judge or a court: holding hearings; evaluating submissions, evidence of the parties; making a binding decision; resolving matters in dispute. There are a couple of different kinds of arbitration in labour law, but the point here is that when you get to that point, you're beginning to come to the end of your time at the table, if you will, in negotiations. This is a normal function of labour relations. It's nowhere near the end of the line in terms of options either on the employer or the employee side.

But the right to that process, Mr. Speaker, unfettered by the state and unfettered by a government that has a different agenda – that is, as the court found, that the state used its power to provoke labour action – is actually guaranteed under section 2(d) of the Charter. You know, maybe people in this House are not as enthusiastic about the Charter as I am and, maybe, as people on this side of the House are. Maybe that's why they want 7 out of 10 provinces to be Conservatives on the other side of the House so they can go ahead and amend away my reproductive rights out of section 7 or our right to be free from discrimination in section 15. That's quite possible and likely, and people will go and participate in an election campaign – evidently, they're going to – in order to make that a reality. But as it stands right now, we have the rule of law in this province.

Here's what section 2(d) does. This was found again in a B.C. decision. One of the first Supreme Court decisions to recognize the right of free association, the right to collective bargaining, under a section 2(d) Charter right was B.C. health sciences, again, because that particular government really went after labour. It wasn't just the teachers. It was others as well. In the health sciences decision, again, they spent a whole lot of money going to the Supreme Court, Mr. Speaker, which I assume this government is super enthusiastic about as well.

Section 2(d) . . . does not . . .

as the court wrote,

. . . guarantee the . . . objectives sought through . . .

joining a union

. . . but rather the process . . .

In other words, you don't get an outcome by joining a union, by engaging in collective bargaining, by going through the steps, by taking the votes, by going to mediation, by going to arbitration; all the various steps that one takes in an orderly labour relations environment. You're not guaranteed an outcome. I used to say this often to some of my friends who would enquire about the zeros in public service. I would say: yeah, you're not guaranteed an outcome; you're guaranteed a process with us. That's exactly what happened.

It means that employees have the right to unite, to present demands . . . collectively and to engage in discussions . . . Section 2(d) imposes corresponding duties on government employers to agree to meet and discuss with them.

That's the Supreme Court of Canada talking; that's not me.

It also puts constraints on the exercise of legislative powers in respect of the right to collective bargaining.

Wow. That was an easy Google search away for me, Mr. Speaker. I am not a labour lawyer, yet I found this fairly quickly. That is a more-than-decade-old Supreme Court decision, super easy to find. Just, you know, put in some key terms. Maybe people can get an assistant to do it for them, but I did it, no problem, at 7:30 at night on a Tuesday.

Now, here's the thing.

2(d) does not protect all aspects of . . .

joining a union or

. . . collective bargaining. It protects only against "substantial interference" . . .

against substantial government interference. But here's the thing that the court wrote.

It is enough if the effect of the state law . . . is to substantially interfere . . .

They don't have to have the intent. So when you hear folks over here say, "Oh, it's just a few months," it is enough if the state action is to substantially interfere with the activity.

To constitute substantial interference: what does that mean? It means two things.

(1) the importance of the matter affected [in] the process of collective bargaining . . . the capacity of union members to come together . . . pursue collective goals in concert; and (2) the manner in which the measure impacts on the collective right to good faith negotiation and consultation.

Again, that's the test on whether a government matter or government interference is serious enough to be struck down by the Supreme Court or by any court, I guess. It'll probably be struck down at a lower court because it's fairly straightforward jurisprudence on this.

Now, obviously, as in all things in labour law, courts always look for balance.

If the matters . . . do not substantially impact on the process of collective bargaining, the measure does not violate section 2(d).

If the changes substantially touch on collective bargaining, such as a legislative interference in the orderly conduct of labour relations, they will violate section 2(d).

What is bargaining in good faith, anyways? Is it just being nice to each other? No, it is not, Mr. Speaker. It is not just that. It is the obligation to actually meet and to commit time to the process.

The parties have a duty to engage in meaningful dialogue, to exchange and explain their positions and to make a reasonable effort to arrive at an acceptable contract.

Where that comes in is that arbitration is part of that reasonable effort. Again, bargaining in good faith doesn't impose on the parties an obligation to even conclude a collective agreement. If the union feels that they cannot come to agreement, if the employer feels that they cannot come to an agreement, then there are steps to be taken, lawful steps, within an orderly labour relations environment. For sure, the court allows situations of exigency, urgency. Different situations might demand different processes, timelines, and that goes into bargaining in good faith.

But a failure to comply is not lightly found. It should be clearly supported on the record, so let's look at the record. Let's look at the justification record from this government. Government must, according to the courts, examine a range of options. The government must present evidence as to why this particular solution was chosen and why, and if there wasn't meaningful consultation with the unions about the range of options, then why not. This, writes the court, is an important and significant piece of labour legislation which had the potential to affect the rights of employees dramatically and unusually.

This was in the case of B.C. health sciences. I would argue that for 180,000 public-sector workers the same applies.

Yet when the Supreme Court struck down the B.C. government's actions in health sciences in 2007, it was adopted rapidly with full knowledge that the unions were strongly opposed and without consideration of alternative ways to achieve the government objective and without explanation of the government's choices. That decision might as well be a cut-and-paste to what we know is going to happen in this province.

Just by way of a bracket, Mr. Speaker, what did the settlement with the B.C. Teachers' Federation cost? In the final analysis, it was about $300 million just to bring the government into compliance with the legacy that it had left in 2002. The reinstatement of the education fund, as I understand it, ended up costing even more, but it was costed into the new government's platform, and people began to make good at least on the education file.

Now, in terms of arbitration, why would one want to delay this if not for other political reasons? As we've already established, the courts take a dim view of not having an actual reason to ride roughshod over duly enacted collective agreements and the various steps contained within labour relations legislation. You can't just do it because you don't like the election timing. You can't just do it because, you know, some lady is going to deliver you a report. That is not a good enough reason according to the courts and according also to common sense, just to be clear.

Arbitration is a form of dispute resolution. It is a form of dispute resolution that is widely favoured by both employers and employees. The reason for that is a number of reasons. First of all, it does bring – this is widely available in the literature; this is employer-side literature. Industrial peace upholds the principle of voluntarism. That is to say that you get better collective agreements when both sides are at the table hammering it out together, and then they understand one another's fiscal position better.

You have access to procedural justice. We still have the rule of law around here. I'm not sure for how long, but we do now. Procedural justice is, in fact, a virtue that should be striven for on all sides of the House. It can allow for balance and, in particular on the employer's side, take into account the financial position of the employer. Once again, procedural justice doesn't require an outcome or a particularly positive outcome, necessarily, for employees. In fact, an arbitrator: that's their job, to take into account the relative fiscal position of whoever they're making an agreement with. Also, disputes can be settled at a lesser cost oftentimes with interest arbitration, so they are more efficient, Mr. Speaker.

All of these things would point to, one would think, going about labour relations in an orderly fashion unless – I come back to that previous finding, the B.C. Supreme Court decision, that the court found that the state used its power to provoke labour action. In fact, the court wrote: because the government had another agenda, which is that they thought that it would be politically advantageous for them to cast working people as the opponent and as the enemy. Sound familiar?

Now, there are a number of tweaks that one might make to an arbitration system, even if one was so inclined. The C.D. Howe Institute has – it's some 10 pages in length – a think piece on interest arbitration from a few years ago. Given that before the Saskatchewan Federation of Labour Supreme Court decision came into effect, we had a number of jurisdictions in which arbitration was the place where settlements had to go for public-sector workers, given that there was a wide and blanket prohibition on the right to withhold labour, which, of course, was struck down by the Supreme Court . . .

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie standing.

Member Loyola: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I particularly think that they're really important, the comments that were being made by the Member for Lethbridge-West, in terms of the gravity in which this government is trying to introduce this in terms of the political interest, and I was hoping that she could continue those remarks, please.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member. I'm sure I've just gone down a little memory lane for him in terms of court decisions around our Charter rights to free association, among our other Charter rights, that sometimes are in question by the members across the way.

You know, I think what's important here is what politically is happening, given that there has been no real justification on a procedural side to interfere in the course of orderly labour relations, there's been no justification even on the fiscal side to examine our fiscal position. Well, that's exactly what arbitrators do. That's exactly what labour relations are for, to hammer those interests out on each side, employer and employee, at the bargaining table, because when you don't have it at the bargaining table, then it bleeds out into other areas of public life, Mr. Speaker. Then folks do take matters into their own hands, and they do engage in job action and so on. I think we can all agree, for those of us seeking health care or education or seniors' care, child care, that this is not in the public interest.

Definitely, when government is using its power to paint 180,000 people as the enemy, they are using their power unjustly. State power: I mean, you'd think a conservative would understand this in their DNA, in their bones. Using state power in a way that is disproportionate and unnecessary should never be the place of first resort. I mean, it was, you know, essentially item 3 or 4 in the line of what these folks were going to get up to. It wasn't freedom and liberty and all of that sort of stuff. No. It was taking away equality rights in terms of earning a decent wage for young people, it was hammering on LGBTQS youth, and then it was casting entire segments of the economy – first responders, front-line health care, education, seniors' care workers – as the enemy and using the power of the state to do so. No one should ever take that lightly, Mr. Speaker. In fact, that's why the courts take such a dim view of using that power, that state power, like a hammer.

Who's going to be affected? Well, I think often of all of my years of knocking on doors in Lethbridge-West, talking to people who work in IT at the university, who haven't seen a wage increase in some six years, folks. I think of people who work grounds or maintenance at the college or at the university: same thing. I think often of parents on the doorstep, especially in 2015, before the classroom improvement fund. Mark my words: that will be the next thing on the list for this government. I think of that and all the educational assistance that parents of children with disabilities told me they needed, and our government responded through that classroom improvement fund, which will be on the chopping block. But now it's those people's labour rights that are being taken away, the right to just make a decent living. I think often of them.

I think of conservation officers out in places like Pincher Creek, who are working very, very hard, particularly over the summer weekends, to ensure that we're taking care of our air, land, and water and that there's something to fish and hunt for future generations.

I think of the corrections workers in Lethbridge. We have a provincial correctional facility just outside the boundaries of Lethbridge. Those are AUPE members, too. I can remember their wildcat strikes back in – what was it? – '12, '13, the winter of '14. My memory is fuzzy. Certainly, the experience of seeing the anger from those workers who were being treated so disrespectfully by the former PC government: I remember that.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood standing to speak.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, perhaps better labelled the bad-faith bargaining bill. This proposed piece of legislation is going to be a complete attack on front-line workers. We're talking about over 180,000 workers who work hard every single day to provide high-quality services that all of us as Albertans depend on. These are nurses, social workers, teachers, child mental health therapists, long-term care workers, librarians, correctional officers, sheriffs who protect us, food inspectors, and so many more. The fact that they are going to be legislated out of a fair chance to discuss and to negotiate their wages is absolutely shameful. It's a return to historical Conservative bullying tactics of disrespecting our front-line workers.

You know, the Member for Lethbridge-West just spoke to some of the rallies that happened over the last number of years. I want to give a little bit of historical background because I was at one of those. We know that Bill 45 and Bill 46 were introduced and passed under the Redford government in the fall of 2013. Bill 45, if you don't quite remember, was the Public Sector Services Continuation Act, and it was, quote, intended to deter illegal strikes to save Albertans money. Wow. Trampling of rights in the interest of saving Albertans money. In fact, it was my predecessor, Brian Mason, here in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood who noted that as you look at that bill, you will find in these pages a government prepared to force its employees to work even when they're not safe. You'll see a government that does not respect the fundamental rights of the people of this province.

I remember being at the rally against Bill 45. Gosh, it was probably minus 30 that day if not colder. I remember the Leader of the Official Opposition being there, the former member that I just mentioned from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, Edmonton-Calder at the time, the current Member for Edmonton-Manning, and a number of others who stood up against that absolutely shameful, bullying bill. We saw Albertans coming out in force against this, and I think we're starting to see that with this one as well. Interesting that history seems to be repeating itself and that these governments aren't necessarily learning from some of the lessons of the past.

You know, I'm certainly not an expert on wage arbitration or on a number of these issues, but I've done a fair bit of research over the last little while trying to pull together the perspectives of a number of people who I do respect and that I do know have a lot of background on this. I want to start with the Leader of the Official Opposition. As she said, this isn't simply a delay in arbitration. It's the breach of a legal contract with nurses and other public-sector workers. She asked here in the House: why didn't the Finance minister tell Albertans that they were going to break the law, to steal money from nurses?

As the Member for Lethbridge-West so eloquently pointed out, courts have ruled that the Charter rights of workers are breached when governments interfere with collective bargaining. We're talking about fundamental rights. We're talking about Charter rights. I guess my question is: if the government is willing to breach Charter rights on this issue, where else are they willing to do so? As she pointed out, just weeks on the job and this government is already taking this approach. Gosh, it's going to be a long four years.

Now, I'll just flip back to what the Minister of Finance noted on this. He said, and I quote: Albertans expect us to be responsible with their hard-earned tax dollars. True, Minister. They absolutely do, and I think all of us take that responsibility quite seriously in our role as elected officials. But they also expect us to respect them as workers. Albertans expect us to respect them as workers. They expect good-faith bargaining. He goes on to say: actually, we're committed to working together in good faith with the public sector. But what about this reflects good faith? He also notes: it's unfortunate that we must take this step, but we introduced this legislation because time is of the essence. Interesting that he recognizes that. I think he's foreshadowing that he knows that there will be a number of unintended consequences of this.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Let me go back to a few other folks who I respect on this issue, people who've been around. I would like to just point out what the Member for Edmonton-North West noted when it comes to Bill 9. These folks have been on the job just a few weeks. They're already threatening public servants with legislation to delay wage talks, the Member for Edmonton-North West noted. It seems that the UCP is keen to follow the old Conservative bullying tactics of disrespecting our front-line workers. He noted that that only leads, history shows, to labour unrest and ultimately to more costly settlements.

I point that out because the minister had just noted, gone on the record and said, that his priority is the province's finances, yet we know that more costly settlements are often the outcome. Again, we can point to multiple examples of that.

The Member for Edmonton-North West goes on to say that instead of a sham consultation, this minister should engage in good-faith discussions with workers without bringing down the hammer. It's not just bringing down the hammer on workers. Ultimately, that hammer gets brought down on kids in classrooms, on patients in hospitals and health care facilities, on the public in general, not just workers, workers' families.

My colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods, who I watched in awe as our labour minister: what an incredible job she did to build relationships with the public sector, to bring parties together, to move forward on a path of collaboration. I just watched her listen to and take in multiple perspectives on issues related to labour. I think she set a really good example for future ministers of labour, but I worry that that's not being followed. Now, as I said, I'm so proud of the work she accomplished. She noted that the government is putting this legislation forward as a first piece of a plan to gut wages for teachers, nurses, social workers, paramedics, and many more. As she points out, again, these are folks that are working long days every day to make life better for all of us, yet this government is refusing to sit down and do just what she would have done to model a way of collaboration and relationship building instead of, as she says, not being honest, plotting to steal money right out of their pockets.

I'd like to note, actually – I mean, my colleague from Lethbridge-West just shared a lot of really important points here. She noted: look, just last week was public service week, and this government is celebrating by not celebrating the public service, by acting in very bad faith and bringing down the legislative hammer on nurses, on librarians, social workers, food inspectors, sheriffs, and correctional officers. And, as I said as well, I mean, there was her brilliant assessment of the Charter rights, too.

You might say: well, that's great, Member; you're sharing thoughts from your side of the floor; we get to hear that a lot. Yeah. Well, I just wanted to make sure that all of those perspectives were on the record. But I also want to share the perspective of a number of others who, again, have been leaders in this province in the labour movement and beyond and have put workers' and Albertans' rights at the forefront.

We know that Guy Smith from the AUPE noted that this act is abusive. He called it an assault on collective bargaining, a violation of members' rights. Interestingly, he pointed out that this is authoritarian, that it's ideological, which is interesting because, of course, we hear from the other side so often that our moves are ideological. As I sat down and tried to analyze this bill and work through it, I can't really understand why this government is moving forward with this other than for ideological reasons. Yeah. Guy Smith points out that, you know, this does nothing but create labour unrest, and what concerns me is that he talked a little bit with the media about the fact that he has not seen this level of anger and worry amongst his members. Again, these aren't folks who are just out to get a wage increase. Not at all. They're looking for an opportunity to negotiate in good faith. They're looking to see their fundamental rights as workers respected. Guy Smith points out, as I noted earlier: listen, we know; we understand that any government is going to look at their financial situation, for sure; we get that. But this is a legally binding contract that his union, AUPE, entered into with the government of Alberta and other employers, and the arbitration process was a really important part of that. They are breaking a contract.

Now, Gil McGowan from the Alberta Federation of Labour points out that – you know what? – we're talking about workers who've, you know, already willingly given up two years to wage freezes as a part of trying to assist the government in dealing with a recession that was quite damaging. So, again, we're talking about folks who've made a sacrifice in order to help the government, and now they're being burned. Reading through this a little bit, he points to section 5(c) as being most troubling. It notes that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations "respecting any other matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable for carrying out the intent of this Act." Essentially, what that means is that the government would be allowed to make regulations on anything that it deems necessary to fulfill the intent of the act, including, as we've talked about, imposing contracts without negotiation.

McGowan points out: listen, if it was only about postponing arbitration, there wouldn't be any need for this government to give themselves sweeping powers. If this government wants to move forward and wants to think about the repercussions on workers in this province, then maybe they should think about that clause and about removing it. There's really no other reason why it's in there. His point is, ultimately: let's put Bill 9 in the shredder. We know that it's a bit of a warning to this government that thousands and thousands of Albertans are going to be upset. Again, we've seen historically, when you get a whole heck of a lot of public-sector workers who are unhappy, what the outcome can be.

Now, a few folks in this Chamber tonight have spoken to the United Nurses' perspective on this. I think it's an important one. I'm happy that our leader in particular highlighted nurses because, of course, Bill 9 strips the contract of the provision on which the UNA's agreement to the previous wage freeze was based. Now, we know that if Bill 9 were to be passed, the UNA's negotiations will be put on hold, basically, until Halloween.

Now, the president, that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo spoke a little bit about as well – we know that she's been an incredible leader for the nurses and an incredible labour leader for decades now, and we very much respect her opinion and her experience – pointed out that she's never seen this level of interference. She said that she hadn't even seen it under the Klein government in the mid-90s. Even in the dark days of the 1990s the government didn't reach into collective agreements like this and violate the constitutional rights of workers in this province. Again, we're talking about unprecedented moves here.

The UNA and other unions, of course, are going to be kind of looking at their response here, but one of the things that David Harrigan, who is the director of labour relations, pointed out – again, it's public-sector employee week – is that he's concerned and worried about the morale of his workers. He's worried about the . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for a brief question or comment, and I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has risen to provide just that.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood expressed an incredibly important point in that this unconstitutional and, in fact, illegal way of this government acting is not only going to be affecting the workers of the unions that are being represented within these collective agreements but also their families. We're talking about 180,000 families from across Alberta that are going to be affected by this. I know that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-

Norwood is an incredible door-knocker. She's always out at the doors in her constituency talking to people, and I was hoping that she could express a little bit about some of the conversations that she's had with her constituents as it may apply to this particular bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for that follow-up question. Yeah, absolutely, I did of course knock on a lot of doors many, many times, and I've pointed out a few times in this House that I'm so proud to represent Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. We are, I guess, what you might historically call sort of a working-class riding. You know, we do have a lot of folks who are in the labour movement. We've got a lot folks who've busted their rears for a very long time and have done a lot to build the labour movement.

In my time door-knocking – and if anyone is saying, “Well, you haven't been an MLA all that long,” I did of course have a federal run, so I've been knocking on doors for many, many years and been able to hear from a lot of folks in the constituency. We have teachers, we have nurses, and we have folks who are working in – this is actually making me remember a conversation I had with a sheriff who lives in the riding. He actually brought up with me that he was concerned about what might happen under another government. At that point, I mean, it was, obviously, pure speculation, but he was, I guess, correct in his early concerns about a different government.

In speaking with so many folks in my riding, I do think that I'll be hearing from a lot of them. I'm going to be sharing more about our caucus's stance against Bill 9, and I think this is going to resonate with a lot of folks in my riding. This is going to be a big concern because, as the member noted, it's not just an attack on workers; it's an attack on their families. There are a lot of folks in my riding who do struggle. We have some of the highest rates of poverty in the province. You know, for some of these folks who are struggling to get by, say one-salary families, an attack on their wages is not going to be accepted lightly.

I think I'll just continue a little bit because I wasn't quite finished. I want to just bring it back to some of the concerns that came from the nurses. Again, I've met with a lot of health care professionals and nurses in my riding, and I started to say that, you know, they're concerned about morale. I worry about thousands and thousands of nurses and teachers. I haven't even talked about teachers and education yet, which, of course, is my passion, but I'll talk about that later if I can.

As I noted, David Harrigan, who is the director of labour relations with the United Nurses of Alberta, mentioned that it's going to make it difficult not only to continue to have a boost in morale amongst his members but to attract and maintain staff, and he's worried that in the long term this is going to have an effect. He points out the fact – I mean, a lot of you know that I lived in rural Alberta for most of my life. I grew up in Barrhead, Alberta. I taught and was a vice-principal in Bawlf and Forestburg, Alberta. So I spent a lot of time in various parts of rural Alberta. In a lot of those areas they have a hard time attracting nurses and staffing hospitals and other health care facilities. Again, you know, if I'm a young person in one of those areas looking to go into a career, I may not be interested in nursing or teaching or some of these other areas that are going to be facing attacks from this government.

I think the UNA and the AUPE, the AFL, all these other organizations that I mentioned, are rightly concerned, and I urge this government to think carefully about . . .

The Speaker: Thank you to the hon. member.

I see the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has risen to debate.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are talking about Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act. We understand that the purpose of this bill is to delay bargaining with unions in Alberta till the end of October, October 31, 2019, and we know that about 180,000 front-line workers will be impacted by this. Really, this is the government breaking the law. They're abusing their power by attacking front-line workers by legislating a delay in the wage talks.

We know that they're saying to us, you know, suggesting, that it's very innocent, that they just need to look at the government's financial situation, that they need to wait for this panel that is going to give us a report. I think the report is supposed to come out in August, yet it's October 31 that they're delaying until. There seems to be quite a bit of discrepancy in that time frame. So, then, I ask myself how that is. If they have, maybe, mid-September, that gives them a little time to review, but actually it's months later, October 31.

The argument for them delaying it that far is not clear. They're just saying that they need this time to look at it. I would suggest that perhaps it has something to do with the federal election and that they're delaying it this long because they don't want any kind of bad news in Alberta, where they indeed go much beyond delaying the talks but cutting the wages of front-line workers in our province.

Certainly, our government treated front-line workers with respect. We held good-faith discussions with public-sector workers. These workers are keenly aware of Alberta's economic circumstances. By our negotiating in good faith, we secured good deals for Albertans through tough economic times. But this Premier, this UCP government are actually stealing from workers in order to give a big corporate tax cut of $4.5 billion to corporations, and they're doing it on the backs of workers. This is certainly why on this side of the House we are standing strong in that this is absolutely the wrong path forward. Asking workers once again – I mean, of course, Alberta has had a history of this, of not respecting workers' rights, but this is the most recent travesty.

You know, when the Premier was elected, he was asked a little bit about his vision and what he saw for the province. He was asked, “Are you going to have mandate letters for your ministers?” and he goes: “No, no, no. I'm not having mandate letters. Just look in the throne speech – you see the throne speech that we've laid out – and also go to the platform.” Since we don't have any mandate letters, I've done just a little bit of research. I've picked up the throne speech and have sort of dog-eared it and highlighted and underlined and done a few things, and I'm looking for: where does it say anything about this? It doesn't, Mr. Speaker. It's not in here. So it's a surprise.

The only thing I see that it really says is on page 2, where it says: “Bill 2 will be the Open for Business Act. It will strengthen the rights of Alberta workers within unions.” Excuse me? I mean, the actual Bill 9 does absolutely the opposite of that. Of course, Bill 9 is not in here. Nowhere is there any kind of indication shown that this was part of the government's plan. That's really the only thing I can see, but of course that's not being manifested. That's not what's happening. This delay is taking away workers' rights. It's not supporting them within unions; it's actually hurting them. So, okay, I looked into the throne speech because that was what the Premier directed us to do to understand what he's doing, and I came up empty, as you can see by that.

Then I thought: okay; I'll dive into this UCP platform with all of their promises to Albertans in order to get elected. So I'm looking on page 12 now, and at the top of the page it says, "Our Top 5 Commitments." Commitment 4 says, "Get our fiscal house in order." And then it says, "Balance the budget in the first term through economic growth and prudent spending without cutting front-line services." I mean, really, in these five top commitments that's the only thing that's even close to addressing anything to do with, you know, the civil service and perhaps unions. I'm looking at that, but of course it says nothing about delaying negotiations with unions. It says that it's not going to cut front-line services, but certainly the suggestion now, Mr. Speaker, is that that indeed is what is going to happen. This, again, just like in the throne speech, seems to be doing the opposite of what they're professing. So I'm confused by that. I think that maybe some Albertans might be confused by that, too. That's only page 12, so I dug a little deeper. I'm still looking for some inkling of the UCP's indication that this was going to be something that they were going to do.

I know that something that they have taken great pleasure in attacking the NDP government on is: oh, it wasn't in your platform. They say this in a very proud manner. Yet happily they are passing this bill, which was not in their throne speech, not in their platform. I suppose we're just supposed to give them a pass on that. I don't know if they can see the unfairness in that. I guess I just want them to be aware that, you know, having integrity is an important quality.

On page 48, at the top of the page, it says, "Making Life Better for Albertans." In this one it talks about: "The United Conservative plan to make life better for Albertans includes the following commitments." Then at the very end of the page it says that they're going to be partnering with nonprofits, charities, and volunteers and that this "will help create a brighter future for Albertans who need a hand up by assisting the groups best positioned to help Albertans in their communities." Ah. Oh, I'm starting to sort of understand. Oh, okay. They're going to download government services even more to the nonprofit sector, to the voluntary sector, and really move to sort of a charity model of service rather than a human rights model. Okay. Well, that was in there. I don't know if everybody made the connections there, but that was just what I saw with that one.

Then I just dug a bit deeper. On page 72 it says:

Harnessing the Power of Civil Society
Every day tens of thousands . . .

I'm reading from page 72.

. . . of Albertans give their time, treasure and talent to helping those most in need. These volunteer efforts are often informal, and sometimes take shape in charities and [nonprofits]. They care for those struggling with addiction, homelessness, social isolation, poverty, violence, and so many other challenges . . .

One of the first principles of conservatism is that civil society should come before government, and that voluntary groups are generally more effective in preventing and reducing social problems than a big, bureaucratic state.

Anyway, there's a whole bunch more of this.

So then I think: ah, it's coming even more clear. This government believes that volunteers in communities can deal with significant social issues like homelessness, violence, addiction. They really are going to deprofessionalize social services in Alberta. I think that's what I'm interpreting from this because it's, you know, talking about: oh, volunteers can do things just as well as professionals. That's what it's implying, and I would really caution this government to be very careful about that. These are complex social issues, and if anything, we should be going in the other direction. We should have more professional services for vulnerable people.

Certainly, the outcry that I heard from, at the time, the opposition when we were government regarding Serenity's case was not that we should be deprofessionalizing social services but, actually, we should have more professionals. Now that they're government, it's like: anybody can do that work; you know, you just need to be a kind person. Well, I would challenge that argument. I would say that these people who are professionals in unions, who are social workers, mental health therapists, nurses have a very high level of education. They have training. They have experience. They are best suited to support people who are facing multiple challenges.

I have, of course, some first-hand experience of this working in, you know, child welfare. This was some time ago, but I worked front line serving very vulnerable families in very complex cases. My thought when I was working on those front lines was that, actually, we need higher levels of education than were there then, at that time. I would still say that that's still how it should be. Certainly, last year I had a disturbing diagnosis. I was diagnosed with leukemia, and I of course spent a tremendous amount of time in the hospital. After my 44 days in the hospital I then went every week for chemotherapy until the end of February. Let me tell you. Those doctors, nurses, people in support roles, the aides: they do tremendous work in that, and they need to be honoured and respected.

I don't hear that from this government. I don't hear that at all. I hear, like: okay; we have some fiscal troubles, so we need to have this panel and we need to review the situation here in Alberta. But why the delay for so long, if at all, of course? It's against the law. It's unconstitutional, as many people have said. It's these people who actually support all of us so fundamentally. It's so easy, a tax break of $4.5 billion for corporations, yet people who are, you know, serving and committed to making life better for all Albertans are the first ones who are now being thrown under the bus. I guess, you know, even though it's certainly not explicit and I had to do a little bit of digging to find these things, I see more the direction, this sort of deprofessionalization and not valuing public services, not valuing unions, that the government is moving forward to be doing.

Of course, I'm certainly a firm believer in the human rights model of social services, not the charity model, where people have a right – people have a right – to housing, and people have a right to social programs. You know, in my time as the Minister of Seniors and Housing I can tell you some amazing stories about the public servants who served Albertans – I'm so proud to know them and to have worked with them over those years, as I have previously as a social worker – and how grateful I am to be a recipient of such expertise, professionalism, and care as a patient in our hospital system.

I just want to talk a little bit about the public servants in the Ministry of Seniors and Housing because I feel like, you know, I want the members opposite to realize who they're impacting, what these people do, for who they do it, and their dedication in so doing, to be conscious of who they're impacting. In the seniors division of Seniors and Housing there are several programs that are in the place. One of them is the Alberta seniors' benefit, and it's certainly an income support program that supports vulnerable seniors who are on low income. It tops them up from the federal funding that they have, and it supports them to be able to live with dignity. I'm so proud that our government indexed . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the Member for Lethbridge-West has risen.

Ms Phillips: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to hear a little bit more about all of those fantastic, positive stories about being the Minister of Seniors and Housing and really engaging with the broad diversity of this province and meeting people's needs in a way that is respectful and that also respects the work that front-line workers do in terms of the health care, social, and economic needs of the broad diversity of our population here in Alberta.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I'm pleased to continue. I was just talking about the Alberta seniors' benefit. As I said, this program serves 162,000 seniors with low income in our province. As I was saying, one of the things our government did was that we indexed it to the cost of inflation, so each year it wasn't like they were getting less and less. They were able to keep up. They're on tight incomes oftentimes. That's a lot of people they supported. Of course, who administered this program? Who made sure that people received their funds and their support? Who helped, you know, if there was a problem like someone moved and their address didn't change, all those things? Who took care of that? Those are public servants. They gave very important service to vulnerable seniors.

Another program that is administered, of course, by public servants – of course, they're part of AUPE here – is the seniors' home adaptation and repair program. That program provides low-interest home equity loans to seniors for repairs they may have. Sometimes seniors can't stay in their homes because maybe their roof needs to be fixed or maybe now they're in a wheelchair and that house has a lot of stairs and they can't navigate that. This program gives them a maximum loan of $40,000, and it can support them to make those renovations in their home so that they don't want to move. Certainly, one of the things I heard loud and clear when I was Minister of Seniors and Housing was that seniors want to stay in their own homes. This program that we created helps seniors to do that.

I know one couple out in Sherwood Park. They had a four-level split. The wife has multiple sclerosis. Of course, it's a degenerative disease, so it's going to get worse. She has a walker. She can take the stairs, but some days she is better than others. Since they have a four-level split, you know, there are lots of stairs up and down to go to different floors. They looked into putting in sort of a lift up the stairs and down the stairs, and it was too expensive. They would have to move, they decided. They can't do it. That broke their hearts because they had this beautiful home that they had many years of living in with their children and many fond memories. They had this magnificent backyard with lots of trees and bird feeders that had been immaculately cared for over the years with much love, and it was breaking their hearts.

We know that oftentimes if people have to move from where they want to be, it can really negatively impact their quality of life. When this program came forward, they applied for it, and they found out that they did qualify. They were able to put in the lift, and that just made the big difference for them. They could stay for another 10, 15 years in that home. That meant their quality of life and their happiness was important. Who administers this program? Well, of course, union members, AUPE. I think that that is a valuable program for Albertans.

We also have a special-needs assistance program, and this program helps people who may need personal and health supports. Maybe they're diabetic and they have to pay for some of the materials they need to take care of themselves. This special-needs assistance also supports people who may need some help buying new appliances. Maybe their appliance failed, and now they need a new one.

So these are all very important programs, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has risen.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening to speak to Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, a bill that we on this side of the House call, for good reason, the bargaining in bad faith act because there is an underlying assumption in this country and in most western democracies where the rule of law prevails and is respected, an underlying presumption and assumption, that the law will be followed, that bargaining will be done in good faith, and that governments, companies, and individuals will actually respect the contracts that they've entered into.

But, Mr. Speaker, don't take my word for it. I've been doing a little bit of research on the matter and found a very interesting Supreme Court decision in a case in 2014 in an article that I'll table in due course that was written by Drew Hasselback, November 13, 2014, in the Financial Post. The title of the article, indeed, says Supreme Court of Canada Imposes General Duty of Good Faith in Contract Performance.

The Supreme Court of Canada says 'good faith' is an implied term to all common law contracts [in Canada].

One would assume, Mr. Speaker, that that would apply to labour contracts entered into by one government which are then under the responsibility of a succeeding government. The implication is, of course, that the Supreme Court believes that contractual obligations would have to be respected by the succeeding government.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

I will be speaking about this article a fair bit and quoting from it. As I mentioned, I will table it at the first opportunity. The article goes on to say, Mr. Speaker:

Honesty isn't just the best policy – it's the law, the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled. In a case released Thursday . . .

That would have been in November 2014.

. . . called Bhasin v. Hrynew, the court said Canadian contract law comes with a duty of good faith that requires parties to perform their contractual obligations honestly.

A pretty clear-cut case. The case judge goes on to say:

"Finding that there is a duty to perform contracts honestly will make the law more certain, more just and more in tune with reasonable commercial expectations," wrote Mr. Justice Thomas Cromwell in the unanimous seven-judge decision.

The article goes on to say:

Commercial lawyers have been following the case closely. Some specific areas of law, such as employment and insurance, come with implied terms of good faith. The question was whether the court might apply the doctrine of good faith to all deals made in Canada.

"I think this is the most important contract case in 20 years," said Neil Finkelstein of McCarthy Tétrault LLP, counsel for Harish Bhasin, the plaintiff who won the case. "We're going to find another series of jurisprudence arising out of this case over time about how far this duty of good faith and duty of honesty goes."

Justice Cromwell acknowledged that the common law has long resisted acknowledging a general duty of good faith in contracting outside those specific areas. The piecemeal approach of Canadian common law is out of step with the civil law in Quebec and in most U.S. jurisdictions, he wrote.

"In my view, it is time to take two incremental steps in order to make the common law less unsettled and piecemeal, more coherent and more just. The first step is to acknowledge that good faith contractual performance is a general organizing principle of the common law of contract which underpins and informs the various rules in which the common law, in various situations and types of relationships, recognizes obligations of good faith contractual performance. The second is to recognize, as a further manifestation of this organizing principle of good faith, that there is a common law duty which applies to all contracts to act honestly in the performance of contractual obligations.”

Mr. Bhasin, the plaintiff, had a business that sold RESPs. He struck a deal to sell his customers RESP products provided by the defendant. The contract automatically renewed every three years. Either party had a non-renewal right on six months’ notice. The written agreement did not require the company to provide a reason for ending the deal.

Mr. Bhasin argued that the contract was terminated in bad faith. He won a judgment in an Alberta trial court, but that decision was overturned by the Alberta Court of Appeal. The provincial appellate court found that the trial court had erred by implying a term of good faith in a deal that contained a clear, unambiguous termination clause.

The Alberta appellate ruling was appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, which heard the case last February.

That would be in 2014.

Justice Cromwell said the respondent RESP company, which was formerly known as Canadian American Financial Corp. (Canada) Ltd., misled Mr. Bhasin about the circumstances involving the termination of the agreement in May 2001. The judge awarded him damages of $87,000 plus interest.

Eli Lederman of Lenczner Slaght Royce Smith Griffin LLP, counsel for the defendants, said the case fills a gap in Canadian law by creating a general organized principle that parties are to act honestly in the performance of all contractual obligations. Yet that does raise questions, he said.

“What does it mean if you have a generalized duty to act honestly in your contractual obligations? When you exercise a contractual right not to renew an agreement, does that you mean you have to explain your reason for doing so?”

Counsel for Mr. Bhasin argued in their factum that the freedom to contract comes with reasonable limits. Good faith should exist when a party is exercising a discretionary power that can devastate a counter party, they wrote. He was represented by Mr. Finkelstein and Brandon Kain of McCarthy Tétrault LLP, John McCamus of Davis Ward Phillips & Vineberg LLP and Stephen Moreau of Cavalluzzo LLP.

“The law of contracts is not exempt from basic requirements of honesty and fairness,” Mr. Bhasin’s lawyers argued. “One need look no further than the existing jurisprudence of this court, which recognizes the duty of good faith in employment, insurance and tendering agreements, in addition to cases like this one where a discretionary power is exercised for an improper purpose so as to defeat a party’s legitimate contractual objectives.”

Mr. Lederman, Jon Laxer and Constanza Pauchulo of Lenczner Slaght, counsel for the defendant RESP company, countered that the first principle of common law contracting is that parties are bound by the terms they have agreed to, not what they ought to have agreed to. “To succeed in this appeal, Mr. Bhasin must persuade this Court to adopt a radically new contract model which would give effect to new, unbargained for rights and obligations,” they wrote.

Mr. Speaker, this case is a very interesting refutation of the principle underlying the government’s desire to run roughshod and totally disregard their obligation that is reinforced by the Supreme Court ruling in 2014, by their obligation to act honestly and in good faith. It’s enshrined in Supreme Court rulings that govern contract law in this province. Whether it be in employment, whether it be in corporate law, in any type of law in this country, this ruling has clearly stated that all parties to a contract have an obligation to deal in good faith, an obligation to be honest, and not to arbitrarily believe that they have the right to break an existing contract with impunity.

What the Premier and the government are engaging in is going to be a very expensive and totally unnecessary exercise in court proceedings after they, if they’re able to, pass this legislation. If they decide not to back down and reconsider what the consequences of doing so are, there’s some clear-cut case law in this country, Mr. Speaker, which will, I believe, make a very, very short and clear and concise court decision, easy for judges to make, once appellants bring this legislation to court.

I can see very clearly, Mr. Speaker, that in very short order, if indeed this legislation is passed, you’ll find that the atmosphere in Alberta in the labour movement, in labour relations between this government and organized labour, is going to be very, very poisoned very, very quickly. In fact, I would go as far as to say that even the introduction of this legislation or this bill has caused a great mobilization among organized labour in this province. I think that’s indeed part of the intent of this government and this Premier, to provoke organized labour to do what this Premier and this government seem intent on doing in many fields, and that is to create chaos, to create acrimony, to create disharmony, dissonance, to be churlish, to look towards disarray, discord, and disorder, because this government, this Premier in particular, thrives on it. He indeed, I believe, is looking to create straw men and burn them down and then, as a result of that, suggest he’s solved the problem.

The real truth of Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, the bargaining in bad faith act, is the government’s and the Premier’s dislike, distrust of organized labour. This is really a very unfortunate circumstance to be in, when you have a Premier who really doesn’t look at who comprises organized labour. I mean, it’s people. It’s families. It’s workers. Other speakers before me have gone into this in detail, Mr. Speaker. These are people who work in this building every day, people that we as members of the Legislature and our Premier purport to respect yet attack without mercy their right to negotiate freely and enter into a contract they should expect will be dealt with in good faith and honestly and would be adhered to by successive governments.

This bill purports to simply delay. It’s legislating a delay to wage talks. However, the real purpose behind it is multifold. It’s political. It looks to delay the dissonance that will occur as a result of labour unrest. It’s going to happen if indeed these labour negotiations are to take place before the next federal election. They wish to defer the breaking of these contracts and defer the renegotiation until after the next federal election in an effort to pave the way for the national blue machine, the Manning-Harper politburo, to do their work.

They’ve also seemingly gotten instructions through the Doug Ford Conservatives as well, and they seem to have been told, you know, to hold Doug Ford under a rock until after the next federal election is over. I believe that now the legislative session is over or nearly over in Ontario, a clear five months before the federal election, in an effort to make sure that the only thing that Doug Ford gets seen in is a flower lei in a pride parade, with the police along for the ride.

I’m not really surprised that the Premier in this province has made it his business to make sure that the labour legislation that would cause the chaos and disharmony that we see involved in this legislation – we see he wants to kick that can down the road past the next federal election. The – I don’t know what you’d call it – gang of six plus the federal triumvirate: those individuals all together in the Manning-Harper politburo are looking to install their champion federally and end up with what they hope is a blue wave across the prairies and into Ontario.

We'll figure it out in good time, they think, but we've figured it out already, and we see through it pretty clearly. They seem pretty happy with themselves on the other side of the House.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie rising to talk.

Member Loyola: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was so enthralled by the comments of the Member for Edmonton-McClung, and I was hoping that he would continue expressing his opinions on: exactly what are the political interests behind what's happening here?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Well, thank you once again, Mr. Speaker. I know that much of what is done in this House is political, and this piece of legislation is no different. It's a mechanism to attack organized labour, and people will fight back. I know that this Premier is hoping that the organized labour forces in this province will go out with a whimper, but, no, they're not going to go out. They're going to come with a bang.

This Premier is maybe underestimating the forces that are at play here, and I think we're going to see in pretty short order the same kind of thing that Beijing recently saw when they started limiting rights in Hong Kong. That politburo there is definitely one that saw the rancour of their masses because they rose in uproar and put themselves in the streets. Millions of people in Hong Kong said: "Uh-uh. We're not taking this type of dictatorship, and we're not going to be losing our rights. You had a bargain when you took over Hong Kong, Beijing, and the bargain was that you would leave our democratic rights and freedoms in place."

Their attempts to break that bargain, their attempts to in bad faith and dishonestly disregard the bargain they had made in the handover in 1999 of Hong Kong to mainland China, are something that was resonating right through the whole Hong Kong people. It was a breath of fresh air, albeit a scary one, to see those people in Hong Kong rise up against a government that broke their promise, that brazenly thought that they could get away with disregarding the law, with breaking a contract, with breaking an agreement that was openly signed and freely signed by two parties in agreement.

Fundamentally in this country, Mr. Speaker, we have an obligation, according to the Supreme Court of Canada, to deal honestly and in good faith when we are observing contracts no matter which party is involved. The same goes for governments, honesty and in-good-faith contracting, whether it's an international contract such as the one that Beijing and Hong Kong entered into when the colony of Hong Kong's contract with Britain expired – Britain honoured that contract and handed it over, back to mainland China, expecting that republic to in good faith keep the fundamental freedoms that Hong Kong had been granted in that negotiated good-faith contract between Beijing and Great Britain. However, they decided that they would break that contract, and people rose up in the millions, knowing that ultimately, if a government is going to break contracts made in good faith, what's next is democracy in the streets.

That is indeed, Mr. Speaker, what we're going to see as far as the labour movement goes in this province. Maybe that's what the Premier wants. Maybe that's the type of fight he revels in. Maybe indeed pitting Albertans against each other is exactly his goal. Maybe it's his goal to see all the teachers and nurses and doctors and public servants up in arms, worried about what their jobs are going to be and wondering why in the world their Premier saw fit to attack them when indeed they thought this Premier was one who would stand up and be a champion for democratic and fundamental rights, one who has fought for many things in his life with some pride and some distinction.

However, this is not one of them. This piece of legislation is something that he should be absolutely ashamed of, and the people of this province are going to rise up and tell him so, just as the people of Hong Kong have risen up to tell the politburo in Beijing that they will not stand for a broken-faith contract, that they will not stand for dishonesty, that they expect a deal to be a deal and that it will be abided by the government in power. As the Supreme Court of Canada here has said in this province in a case that was adjudicated in 2014, which established right across the legal world in Canada that a contract is a contract, that it must be abided, that it has to be respected, that bad-faith bargaining is unacceptable, and that the politburo in Canada, in this country, has to be held in check.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, are there any others wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View standing.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and speak to Bill 9. As my colleagues have said before me, I'm rather troubled by this bill. There are a series of legal, policy, and democratic reasons for that, but I think the one that actually speaks to me most strongly is that the way this has been framed is as some sort of grievance, some sort of standoff between the public, the taxpayer, and public-sector workers. I think the first thing to point out is that public-sector workers are people, too. They're people who pay their taxes and volunteer in their communities and contribute to their communities. I think that that distinction is a little bit arbitrary.

Another thing worth noting is that when this province went through a very devastating economic recession just recently, these were the first people to the tables. They came to the table, and most of them took zeros over the course of several years. Teachers, for instance, have had zeros for five years running now. It wasn't that they were trying to pull one over on the taxpayer or trying to get more than their due. They were more than willing to come and work collaboratively with the province. When we said to them, "Look, we're in a recession, and we're having a tough time," they understood that because they're part of the community. These are their friends and neighbours, and they contribute to that community. So those folks came to the table. They came to the table and they participated, and they did their part, like many others have done. I think that punishing that behaviour is inappropriate. Suggesting that they haven't done their share, that they haven't done their part, that they haven't been willing to work with the people of Alberta I think, frankly, is just wrong.

To me, the deepest and most resonant reason that I am troubled by this is because it didn't need to be done. These are people who have shown a willingness to be reasonable and open and to have reasonable conversations about how we can move ahead in a way that is helpful to everyone. I think that doing this was very unnecessary.

It obviously goes without saying that this breaks the law. I mean, not only does it break contracts, but it's clearly been ruled as contrary to the Charter, and I think it's an attack on front-line workers. I think it's part of our larger communications war against working people, and I'm troubled by it. I think that, you know, suggesting that workers, particularly workers who have had little or no increases recently, are somehow the problem here is very inappropriate.

You know, we're using, essentially, a legislative mechanism to override a contract. Basically, the province made a deal. Admittedly, governments change in provinces. That's the case the world over. We nonetheless expect those entities to be held to their contract. Otherwise, no one would ever contract with the province if it was the case that every time an entity with a political head, whether it's a province or a state or a country, changed government, that government was just able to rescind magically all of the contracts that it had signed. No one would ever make a deal with the province because the province couldn't be held to its word in the right sort of way. That ability to hold an entity to the contracts that it has made is a pretty fundamental principle in the legal world. So this is a pretty big deal, not just because it's attacking workers but because it's breaking a contract. More to the point, it's breaking a contract which the Supreme Court has said shouldn't be done in this way. It's no longer considered appropriate. I would argue that it never was appropriate and that the court has just come to this recently.

Anyway, this bill will impact a lot of workers. It'll impact 180,000 workers, and those workers, again, are people in our community. They're people who have gone through the same recession that we have gone through. They're people who have experienced hardship, whose family members may have lost jobs and who may now be the sole income earner. They're also people who provide services to each and every Albertan.

I, obviously, had a child recently. It was during a recession. I am pleased to say that despite the recession, I still received the same quality care that I would have received had I had my child before the recession, and I think that's important. I think that when our loved ones get sick or when our children go to school, they should receive the same quality of care regardless of whether we're in a recession or not, and I think that's what's owed to folks who have paid in over the course of years.

I think the other thing that troubles me about this bill is that it's intended to shut down a conversation. The government didn't even go to these folks to negotiate, to talk about whether or not this might be reasonable, to talk about whether they might have some more time to consider the fiscal situation. They took this step almost immediately, and I think that that's, well, not a very good way to start off any relationship, really. I think it borders on bullying. Yeah, I'm troubled by what the reaction might be to this because I think people will stand up for themselves. I think that people will stand up and say: this isn't right. That can have a serious impact on front-line services.

In fact, you know, we've seen labour peace for the last four years, but it wasn't that long before that four years of labour peace that we had a fairly serious wildcat strike involving remand centres and courts and a whole series of employees, and I think that wasn't good, ultimately, for anyone. Those employees felt that they hadn't been heard. We spent a long time working with the union and working with those employees to try to ensure that in future they do feel more heard.

Ultimately, in any new situation when you come through the door, the first thing you should try to do is work with people. You shouldn't resort immediately to the hammer. You should begin by assuming that people are reasonable. If you come into a room and immediately behave unreasonably, if you come into a room and immediately throw a tantrum, your odds of getting reasonable behaviour back from the other parties in that room are a lot lower. That's essentially what this government is doing. It's stepping into a room and using the biggest hammer it can think of and the biggest bully tactic it can think of right out of the gate. I think that it's bad faith, and I think that it's sad in light of the fact that the government for four years operated in good faith and made a lot of progress in terms of bending the costs.

I don't know, Mr. Speaker, if you're familiar with this, but before the NDP took government in 2015, the provincial budget growth sort of looked a lot like a porcupine. It was up. It was down. It was up. It was down. It didn't seem to have much relation to anything. Since then we've seen a levelling out of that, a predictability in costs, which is good for those providing the services, but it's also good for the taxpayer because instead of having costs spike unreasonably in some cases and then radical cuts in other cases, it just sort of floats along below CPI plus inflation, which I think is ultimately what we should all be aiming for.

This will postpone wage talks for a lot of workers. There's been a lot made of the fact that it's just a postponement, but it isn't really. If they just wanted to postpone it, they could have sat down with folks and asked them to postpone it, but they didn't choose to do that. The timing I don't think is a coincidence. I don't think the fact that the timing lands suspiciously immediately after the federal election is a coincidence. I think it is, in fact, by design, and I think it's by design because the members opposite don't want to suffer the fate that the Premier of Ontario has suffered with his dropping numbers, specifically when they're in a position to assist their federal friends in advance of the election. I think that it's disingenuous at best and also very, very sad.

The folks who are impacted by this, like I said, are people throughout the province, people that we deal with every day. They work at colleges and universities. They work in health care facilities. They're teachers. They're nurses. They're other health care professionals, administrators, professors, all sorts of people throughout the province.

You know, it's ironic, actually, that we're having this conversation right now because I think it was only two weeks ago when we all in this House had a long conversation about how important public-sector workers can be to smaller communities throughout Alberta. This arose, of course, out of the closing down of a federal facility. We all had a conversation urging the government to take into account those local economic impacts. But this will have local economic impacts, too. These workers often work in smaller communities. Often these are good jobs that can allow people to stay in those communities. Many people want to stay in those smaller communities. They don't necessarily want to move to a bigger centre like Calgary and Edmonton. These are decent, long-term jobs that can pay a mortgage, that can support a family, that allow people to stay in those communities where they were raised or where they've moved and chosen to live. I think that attacking those people is wrong. I feel like I should be able to come up with more synonyms for that, but I guess it is rather late in the evening.

The intent of this is clear. We've already sort of seen the communication signals. We've seen, "Oh, we've been lied to," which is usually the thing that Conservative governments say before they impose cuts, which, of course, couldn't possibly be the case because the books in Alberta are prepared by civil servants, and they're audited. Those people are honest and diligent and hard working, so they didn't lie. But that messaging is what's signalling to me, at least, that this isn't just a delay. This is a delay so that there isn't a big fight before the federal election. Then they'll come in and impose.

I mean, certainly, there have been a lot of comments coming from the labour movement from individuals working in these jobs and from individuals representing individuals working in these jobs about how this is unfair, inappropriate, or illegal, that it's an egregious attack on workers' rights. I would agree with all of those statements, really. You know, ultimately, this will fall to be adjudicated by the court, and it will be adjudicated by the court over the course of several years. It will be expensive for the taxpayers to go through that litigation, and it will be deeply unnecessary, at the end of the day.

I think it speaks to a larger problem about disrespect for the rules. You know, it's one thing to come in and say: I want to disrupt things, and I want to sort of make positive change. Sometimes we talk about disruption as being positive in that way, but it's quite another to come in and to be actively disruptive in a way that attacks people. It's quite another to feel that you are above the law, that you are free to break contracts, that you're not interested in what the courts have to say, that you're not interested in the Constitution.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available, and I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie rising.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that the member was onto a really important point in terms of the respect for contract law. Because of her background, I'd like to hear more of her thoughts on exactly that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much. I think it was an exciting day for me. The Supreme Court has deliberated back and forth multiple times on this issue of people being allowed to form unions and being allowed to strike. Recently they had come to a decision that folks did in fact have the ability to take that collective action, that they did in fact have the ability to come together and choose to strike. That forced a lot of changes in the province, where previously public-sector workers were denied that right. I think that's good. I think that allowing people who have less power in a situation to come together and use their power collectively is incredible.

We read a lot of stories about this sort of thing, right? I don't know why Harry Potter is springing to mind, but that sort of initial scene in the first book, when Harry stands up to Malfoy, when the students come together to be willing to do that, I think, springs to mind. That's the sort of thing I think of now. That's the sort of thing – essentially, the court has said that individuals who usually have less power to negotiate in the circumstances are permitted to come together and collectively use their power so that they are on a more equal playing field and they're able to have a more equitable conversation, and those conversations have to be respected. I think that's delightful. And, well, I kind of feel like we have Voldemort coming in and taking our rights away.

Yeah, I think it's incredibly troubling to say that we don't have respect for these individuals, because, again, these are people. The government likes to sort of create this dichotomy, like there are people in the community who have suffered in the recession and there are public-sector workers who have taken advantage of it and there's some sort of big fight, but that's not true at all. Public-sector workers are just people. They're often married to people who work in the private sector. You know, they're in the same family, in the same community. I think that dichotomy just doesn't exist.

I think that this attack on those workers, on their rights, and, fundamentally, on the concept that you should keep your word, that all entities should keep their word regardless of whether they're people or corporations or government – if you make a promise, you should stick to it. I think that that's a pretty fundamental principle not just in law but in the world more generally. This disrespects it, and that's troubling. We should all be troubled by it.

Folks out there may be thinking: well, this doesn't affect me because I'm not a union worker; I'm not a public-sector worker. Well, you know, when people start to come after other people's rights saying, "Oh, it's not me; those aren't my rights, so I'm not going to do anything about it," it can produce a troubling trend, because they don't normally stop at one group. They come after the rights of one group, then they come after the rights of another group, and then they come after the rights of another group. Before you know it, they're coming after yours as well.

This, for me, is the moment where we stand up and we say, "That isn't okay," so that is what I'm doing right now. I don't think that this is okay. I don't think that it's okay to push these contracts off, to break the deals that we have made, and to take away rights that people have fought for long and hard. I don't think it's okay to just break the law, knowing that it will take a while to sort out in the court system. You know, I've said this before in other contexts. The legal process itself should not be part of a punishment, suggesting that you're going to make the wrong decision and let the courts sort it out.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie rising to debate.

Member Loyola: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise in the House today and speak to the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act. I can only state emphatically, as so many other of my colleagues have gotten up to say, that this is an incredibly gross abuse of power.

I've gotten up in this House and I've said before that the current Premier, you know, likes to time travel. Actually, it's been said before – and I've said it – that one of the special powers that he wishes he would have if he was a superhero would be to travel back in time. You know, he may have said that in jest at the time, but you can believe that that's what he really wants to do. He wants to take us back in time, right? He wants to take us back to a time where collective bargaining – you know what? I think that's the problem here. He's an individual who's just so against this whole concept of working as a collective. He would much rather see people working as individuals and in a process where people are pitted against each other rather than all of us working together to reach common goals. That's exactly what's going to be happening here with the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act.

I mean, the member who spoke before me said it really well – and I want to emphasize that because I think it was such an important point – and that is that they set up this juxtaposition between people who are in the public sector and then taxpayers, as if they're not the same people, as if they're not the same people that contribute to this province and the way that it works.

Now, I've said it before that I used to represent the Non-Academic Staff Association at the University of Alberta, the union that represents all workers there at the university, and the motto of our union was: our university works because we do. That's exactly the point that the member was trying to make. Alberta works because the people of Alberta in that public sector make amazing sacrifices, like the Member for Edmonton-Riverview was highlighting.

Public-sector workers are very altruistic because they're dedicated to the people of this province. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview said it really well, said it incredibly well, that these are the rights of the citizens of this province. This isn't just a voluntary: oh, we're going to treat you nice because we're going to be good to you. No. This is about the rights of people, and this government and this Premier want to run roughshod, specifically now, over the rights of workers in this province. It's not as if it was unexpected, Mr. Speaker, because this member has a long track record of doing exactly this, not only here in this province but at the federal level as well, of supporting bills and legislation that erode the rights of workers not only here in this province but across this great land of Canada.

I'll remind the members on the other side of the House that this is about the rights of our citizens, the people that work so hard to contribute to the economy of this here land and of this here province. I've said it before – and I'll say it again – that an economy is supposed to serve the people, not a people serving the economy. You know, it irks me that this government and specifically this Premier and other members of his cabinet continue to say that on this side of the House our government, when we were in power, was an ideological government when so clearly he is being ideological in presenting not only this bill but in so many others that have come before this House during this session in this sitting.

They continue to erode rights, whether it be for LGBTQ, two-spirited people, whether it be for workers, or whether it be for anybody else in this province, because they keep going back to that juxtaposition, trying to pit some people against other people when we should be, as a government, focusing on the common good, on mutually agreed ways of moving forward so that everybody in this province can win, not just some of us.

That's the thing, Mr. Speaker. We're going back to Conservative bully tactics of the 44 years prior to when this Alberta NDP government was in power in 2015 to 2019. When we came into power as a government, we decided to sit down with all stakeholders as much as we possibly could to create that mutually agreed understanding upon which we would create a better Alberta for all people, bringing environmentalists together with indigenous rights advocates, bringing people together from the private sector, bringing everybody together so that we could move this province forward into a more modern way of being rather than pitting the citizens of this here province against each other. Yet here we go again, back to the Conservative bully tactics of previous Conservative governments where they're pitting Albertans against each other. [interjections]

And now I hear a lot of jibber-jabber on the other side of the House right now, Mr. Speaker. They can't stand it when I get up in this House and I speak the truth because – you know what? – that's what the constituents of Edmonton-Ellerslie wanted. They wanted someone that would come into this House and not be afraid to say the truth – and no matter what happens to me, Mr. Speaker, I will continue to do that – come into this House and speak the truth against the ideological tactics of this here government and this here Premier, that are pitting Albertans against each other.

10:00

Now, this here law, this here proposed law, this bill, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, is about breaking the law. It irks me as someone who comes from Latin American heritage because – you know what? – so many times these people who purport to support the rule of law will look at Latin America and other underdeveloped nations across this world. They'll point the finger at us and say – what's the word I'm looking for? – “Look how they break the law. Look how they break the law.” They say, “Look how corrupt” – that's the word I was looking for – “those underdeveloped nations are because they don't respect the rule of law.”

Yet here we have a government who's proposing a bill where they're going to be breaking the law. Mr. Speaker, this is just incomprehensible – incomprehensible – how people will get up in this House and preach about how important democracy is and how important liberty is, how important freedom is, and at the same time will propose to break the law of this land and not only break the law of this land but run roughshod over the rights of workers here in this province.

The process of arbitration is a fair process, one designed to reach a mutual agreement between two parties, and this government is proposing to actually erode that process, that just political process. Now, tell me, Mr. Speaker, does that sound like corruption, where you want to break down the actual, mutually agreed to process where for so many years it was decided that this would be the way? This government, this UCP government and this Premier, want to erode exactly that right.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt. In the excitement of debate, I would just like to remind all members of this House to take a wide berth or steer relatively clear of entering into language that could be perceived as making allegations against another member.

Please continue.

Member Loyola: The truth sometimes isn't well liked by members who don't like to hear it, Mr. Speaker. But, like I said, the constituents of Edmonton-Ellerslie voted me in to be their voice and to speak that truth to power here in this House, and I'll continue to do that because that's my job. That's my job, and I take it very seriously.

[The Speaker in the chair]

You know, this Premier and this UCP government want to take us back to a time when individuals were pitted against each other, when they didn't have the collective right to bargain on their behalf as workers. Now, the International Labour Organization worked really hard for a very, very, very long time so that workers all across this world – and Canada has actually agreed to these International Labour Organization agreements on the rights of these workers. We cannot as a government here locally in this province decide which rights of those workers we're going to respect and which ones we aren't when these have been internationally agreed on, have been nationally agreed on by the federal government.

We need to respect those rights as we continue to move forward. We can't say: “Oh, these rights are okay, and those are not. We're going to decide what we're going to respect and what we're not.” At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, workers' rights are human rights. I stress it again, like the member who spoke previous to me said so eloquently: I'm going back to the idea that these same public-sector workers are the same taxpayers that this UCP government and this Premier here are stating that they are protecting. They're one and the same. They pay their taxes just like everybody else, and they deserve to have their rights respected.

This Premier wants to take us back to that time where the collective right to bargain isn't permitted because he would much rather see individuals pitted against each other and fighting for that opportunity to have that job that they so desperately need so that they can provide for their families and put food on the table. I want to remind all the members of this House of what I call that famous conservative saying: oh, no, don't bite the hand that feeds you. You see, the premise within that saying, “Don't bite the hand that feeds you,” that is so often said to workers when they want to stand up for their rights, is: don't stand up for your rights because – guess what? – it's the people that are providing the job, and you don't want to mess with them because they're going to end up firing you.

I see the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre laughing right now at the fact that workers' rights shouldn't be respected, and coming from him, it's real rich because, as we all know, it's been established in this House that a worker that was working for his company who suffered sexual harassment was fired by that same member. Her rights weren't respected that day, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the Government House Leader has risen.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was fascinating listening to the hon. member's comments, and there was so much content in there and not enough time within 29(2)(a) to be able to focus completely on everything that he brought forward. There are a couple of comments, though, that I would like to focus on in his presentation to the House tonight, primarily around his comments around democracy and the desire that he has, he says today, for us in this House to respect democracy. I find that in a little way almost humorous as I've watched his party in the last few weeks as they've adjusted to being in opposition.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the NDP are now the only party in the history of this province to be a one-term government.

Mr. Kenney: The only one?

Mr. Jason Nixon: The only one-term party ever in the history of this province.

Mr. Kenney: There must have been some special incompetence there.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Something must have happened there, for sure.

They ended up sitting on that side of the House and becoming the Official Opposition, and over the last few weeks they've had some trouble adjusting to that.

Mr. Kenney: I think they're angry about it.

Mr. Jason Nixon: It's been interesting to watch that. I think "angry" would be the right word, Team Angry. Now, I've always kind of thought, Mr. Speaker – and I'm sure you'd agree, from your time in opposition, when you watched the NDP when they were in government – that the best way to probably describe them was Team Angry. Anybody who has been in here during question period, I'm sure, would agree with that. In fact, I had a guest come and visit from Calgary today who watched question period today, and I was just visiting with him after question period, and he indicated exactly that. He said that he was quite shocked at how angry the NDP were, how rude they were, and how obnoxious they were during question period.

Mr. Kenney: They're angry with Albertans.

Mr. Jason Nixon: At its core, Mr. Speaker – and I think the Premier actually pointed this out today during question period – they're angry with Albertans. That's what's going on right now inside the House. They were always angry with the United Conservative Party, primarily because, I think, they're very disappointed to see the Wildrose Party and the Progressive Conservative Party, our two great legacy parties that make up this party, come together and unite free-enterprise Albertans.

10:10

I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo shaking his head. But I do remember the opportunity to be able to inform the House that we've been able to create the United Conservative Party and that the days of the NDP government were numbered, and it turns out I was right.

Mr. Kenney: It was prophetic.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Exactly. I encourage members to check out my Facebook pages. I usually pin that post up top, when I gave that announcement to the House.

But I want to get back to my point, Mr. Speaker, which is that the NDP are angry with Albertans. They're angry with democracy, which is what that hon. member brought up. Instead of going back and asking themselves why they are the only one-term government in the history of this province, why Albertans rejected them governing this province . . .

Mr. Kenney: That would require humility.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yes. Humility is exactly the problem, Mr. Speaker. There's no humility from the opposition.

Now, I personally am excited – I'm personally excited – about that, Mr. Speaker, because I think that goes well for the United Conservative Party to continue to have the privilege of being the government of this province for many terms to come if this is going to be the approach of the NDP. Instead of examining the behaviour that put them onto that side of the House, they're going to instead take this approach, which is to come here full Team Angry, ignore democracy, ignore what the people of Alberta said.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, in record numbers, in constituencies like yours and mine, the two first MLAs in the history of this province to break 20,000 votes: that's got nothing to do with you or me; that was the people where we live outright rejecting the policies and the behaviour of the NDP government at the time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to help my hon. friends across the way because I respect the role of opposition in this House, and I really humbly suggest to them, through you to them, that they take some time – there are a couple of years till the next election; they could take a bit of a breath – and have a conversation on why they ended up on that side of the House, that they show a little bit of humility and look at their behaviour and examine if the approach that they continue to take to this Assembly actually benefits Albertans. [interjection]

Again, I hear the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo heckling away. One of the reasons why he is in that spot where he is right now is because he was the Finance minister for a government that had us on track to $100 billion in debt.

Mr. Kenney: The biggest per capita deficit in Canada.

Mr. Jason Nixon: The biggest per capita debt in Canada. Think about that, Mr. Speaker. And all that hon. member can do is sit here and heckle. How is that helping his constituents right now? I'll tell you that it's not helping.

Mr. Kenney: What about his carbon tax?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Now, we talk about his carbon tax. That's right. It's a great point, Mr. Speaker, to bring in. Now, I'm running out of time, so I'm going to have some more to say about the carbon tax shortly.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any others wishing to join in the debate this evening? The Member for Calgary-McCall has risen.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of 180,000 workers and their families that will be impacted by this legislation. They include front-line nurses, social workers, care workers, correctional officers, sheriffs, and many more. Sandra Azocar, Siobhán Vipond, two of the representatives, are here to witness this debate, and I welcome them here as well.

I think that when we talk about contracts, they're the cornerstone of our everyday relationships, our everyday lives. If we look around, there are many things that we enter into contracts for; for instance, cellphone and car-leasing arrangements, mortgages. When we enter into those contracts, we agree on certain terms and conditions. For instance, take the cellphone example. I will have this much data, this many minutes, this much service, this many texts, and in return I will pay a certain amount of money. I don't think that, of all of us who use that service, anybody would let the company change the pricing, change the terms and conditions every month just because they can do it. It will be unfair, and all reasonable people will see that as unfair.

Same thing with leasing arrangements on cars: exactly the terms and conditions are agreed upon and then followed by both the parties, so there is a certainty of the relationship, and I think that if a dispute arises, there are usually terms and conditions contained in those contracts, that are followed. Hence, I guess, life goes on in society.

Like those contracts, collective bargaining agreements are also contracts. They were entered into by two parties to agree on certain terms and conditions for what their relationship will look like, how each party will behave, what roles and responsibilities each party will have under that contract. Certainly, that benefits employees. It gives them certainty. It benefits employers. It gives them certainty. It benefits society at large.

But what we are seeing here – and these contracts, I think, if we just talk about union agreements, are also entered into through a democratic process. In the first place, when you establish a union, certify a union, that's a democratic process. People come together, and people agree on certain terms and conditions, and that's how they create those unions. Similarly, when they enter into agreements, that also follows a democratic process. It's not that a few people just sitting at the top of the union enter those contracts. Rather, the membership, through a democratic process, agrees to those contracts, ratifies those contracts. It's also a democratic process, and it ensures the dignity of those who may not have that ability to enter into contracts individually. It protects them. It protects the vulnerable in our society.

These rights are protected under our Constitution. These rights are even enshrined in the universal declaration of human rights; for instance, section 23(4), that gives the right to everyone to form and to join a trade union for the protection of his or her interests. Similarly, ILO, the International Labour Organization, also advocates for freedom to associate and bargain collectively. If we look at our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, I think it has been conclusively decided by the Supreme Court of Canada – and it's the law of the land – that section 2 of the Charter protects collective bargaining. Not only that, it also puts a corresponding duty to bargain in good faith. It puts an obligation on parties to meet in good faith. It puts an obligation on parties to set a time frame for the process. It puts an obligation on parties to have a meaningful dialogue.

What we are seeing here is an authoritarian, undemocratic – undemocratic – and heavy-handed tool that's used by this government to undermine the rights of workers in this province, that are protected under international instruments that Canada is a party to, that are protected under our Constitution, that supersedes all the legislative enactments of provinces, the federal government. It's protected. That right is protected there, and here we are seeing this piece of legislation that will infringe on those rights, Charter-protected rights, constitutional rights. It's just a law that will give government the power to break the law. That's what it's doing, and it's affecting 180,000 Albertans across this province, their families, their kids.

We just heard from the Government House Leader about how they've got a mandate and how we didn't get the second term and all those things. They talk about the mandate all the time. These collective bargaining agreements, rights: these agreements were entered into from mandates from Albertans. Albertans gave those unions a mandate to negotiate their rights. If they want their mandate to be protected, respected, I think it's only fair that the same courtesy should be afforded to other democratic mandates, but that's not what we're seeing here.

They want to talk about their mandate, but nowhere during the election campaign, nowhere in any UCP document can they show me that they told Albertans: give us a mandate so we can walk roughshod on your rights, we can walk roughshod on your collective bargaining rights, we can walk roughshod on your overtime, we can walk roughshod on your minimum wage. Whatever we are seeing here, it's a pattern of austerity, and the only people who stand to lose are everyday working Albertans. When you look at their other pieces of legislation: same thing. There's a pattern. The working, everyday Albertans: they are the ones getting hit.

[Mr. Loewen in the chair]

In their preamble to the legislation they said, "significant changes have occurred in Alberta's economy since the 2018-2019 Third Quarter Fiscal Update and Economic Statement." I think that from '17-18 Alberta's economy has a positive growth. The only significant change that happened in Alberta's economy was a $4.5 billion tax break to the most wealthy in this province. At that time, they didn't think about deferring that break, deferring that gift for a little bit until they hear from that so-called panel, the blue-ribbon panel, who can tell them about the state of the economy and the state of finances. They didn't wait for a second. They brought forward that piece of legislation so they can give that break to their donors and supporters.

Here they are saying that the economy has changed significantly. That was the only significant change that we can point to, and that's the reason that now they have to attack Albertan workers' rights, they have to attack their constitutionally protected bargaining rights. Had they not handed out that gift in such a hurry, I think they could have waited. They could have bargained with these unions, with these workers.

They're trying to say that as if they are getting 50 per cent of Alberta's budget and they're not doing anything. Wherever we go, I think, in schools, in hospitals, in colleges, everywhere, these are the workers who are providing essential services that Albertans depend on, rely on each and every day. These are important services that Albertans need and rely on. Now we are attacking all those Albertans. We are attacking their rights, and instead, I guess, of talking about who it will impact, we will just hear from the other side: oh, it's unions; they're spending this much money. But it's not. It's Alberta workers, and this bill is attacking their rights, their freedoms, their constitutionally accepted rights in Canadian jurisprudence.

The Minister of Finance got up here and said that Albertans want us to respect their hard-earned dollars. I'm sure Albertans want them to respect their constitutionally protected rights, too. Same principles should apply. Ask any Albertan. They want you to respect their hard-earned dollars. At the same time, they want you to respect their constitutionally protected rights. They never said anywhere: no; just protect our hard-earned dollars and walk roughshod on our rights.

Mr. Speaker, I think we are seeing a pattern here that is based in ideology, and many members on that side have followed that pattern, have done the things that go against collective bargaining rights, right of association. I can point to some pieces of legislation that were before this House and the previous Conservative government. In particular, I guess, the Member for Calgary-Hays will remember that because he voted in favour of all those pieces of legislation.

There were bills 45 and 46, that were passed in 2013. Bill 45 was the Public Sector Services Continuation Act, and that was intended to take away their rights to protest, to enter into strikes, essentially limiting their rights that were fundamental and also protected under the Charter. It was not about that piece of legislation. It was not about wages or unions. It was essentially about undermining the workers' rights, exactly the same thing we are seeing here. We are seeing the workers' rights, 180,000 Albertans' rights, undermined through this piece of legislation.

Bill 46, Public Service Salary Restraint Act, was also an attack on workers, and the Minister of Transportation and Member for Calgary-Hays voted to pass those pieces of legislation.

Then Bill 24 was introduced by the Prentice government in 2015. That was the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act. Again, the Member for Calgary-Hays voted in favour of that, sponsored and voted for passage of that bill. It's the same ideological agenda that continues through this piece of legislation. It's an attack on Albertans' rights. No matter what you say, these are the services that Albertans relied on. I think that during the campaign they were told that their services will not be affected, but this bill is attacking the very people who offer those services.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-South has risen to make a brief question or comment.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is always my pleasure to hear from my hon. colleague from Calgary-McCall. It is always a pleasure to hear his insights. I do wish to make a few brief comments because I think what he said is very important and is very pertinent to the debate we are having here today.

I would like to comment on what the government is doing in regard to attacking these workers' rights and absolutely attacking Albertans and their rights. I think that it is important to note how deeply the government is attacking the process by which we do this as well. The government has gone through and, in an unprecedented action, Mr. Speaker, under the cover of darkness, decided to move the previous question. What that has done is that it has effectively limited debate on this so that while they go and, as the member had said, attack workers and go after the very people who serve this province, we also are no longer able to effectively debate that right here in this Assembly and to hear insights like my hon. colleague's. That is something that Albertans should be deeply concerned with.

Then just today, Mr. Speaker, we saw the government introduce a motion for closure tomorrow. In fact, they only want one more hour of debate at this stage of this bill. That should also be extremely concerning because that is not the sign of a government which is acting in good faith. It is not the sign of a government which is negotiating in good faith because when you negotiate, Mr. Speaker, you don't then slam the door right as the other team is about to open their mouth. That is not how you negotiate in good faith, that is not how you work for the benefit of all Albertans, and that is not how you show that you are indeed trying to have the best outcome for all Albertans.

I think this is something that every single member of this Assembly should be very concerned about. I'm pleased to have heard from so many of my colleagues here in the opposition. I hope that some members of the government caucus will also speak to why they think it's okay to shut down the very debate that this Assembly was built for, why members of the government and government private members think it is okay that they can trample over workers' rights and not even give this Assembly the chance to discuss it. That's something that I think is very important, Mr. Speaker. I think all members will agree with me that we were sent here to debate. We were sent here as MLAs. Our jobs, indeed, are to ensure that we debate legislation and vote on legislation.

What the government has done is that they have tried to make that as limited as possible. Indeed, they have tried to make it impossible for legislators in this Assembly to do their jobs. Mr. Speaker, I think that is something that is very shameful. It is something that members of the government front bench should be concerned about because their bills will not get the proper vetting of this Assembly, and it's something that members of the government backbench should be concerned about because they will not be able to have a say in the very legislation that comes through this Assembly. That's something that's very concerning.

When you move to shut down debate in this unprecedented manner under the cover of darkness, Mr. Speaker, it shows bad faith, just like the government is showing at the bargaining table. They've gone out and slapped workers in the face by introducing legislation that destroys the ability of the unions to have good-faith negotiations, and then they come to this Assembly and slap legislators in the face by preventing us from doing our jobs here in the Assembly. That is something that should be offensive and is offensive to all Albertans. I am deeply concerned with what the government's goal is here. If the government indeed is trying to act in good faith, they should get up and defend that. They should get up and explain to Albertans why they think their legislators, their elected officials, the over 10,000 people who voted for me in my riding shouldn't get a say in this Assembly. If we're measuring mandates, I actually have more votes than most members in this Assembly due to the population in my riding. Indeed, when we're measuring mandates, it really is important to consider that every single MLA in this Assembly has a voice. What this government is doing is trying to shut down that voice and shut down that voice while also shutting down negotiations with the workers that serve this province.

That is something that the government needs to stand up and defend themselves for. The government needs to stand up and explain to Albertans why it's okay that because they won this many seats, Mr. Speaker, they don't need to negotiate. They don't think workers are worth their time to negotiate, and they think that workers don't deserve to negotiate. That's something that all Albertans should be concerned about.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone else wishing to join in the debate this evening? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to join the debate to oppose this oppressive bill to deny workers their rights that have been long fought for not only in this country but in many westernized democracies for the last few hundred years. Here we are now having to stand up yet again. As they say, the right to freedom requires eternal vigilance. I think we find ourselves in that place once more.

I want to begin by speaking a little bit about the fact that these labour rights aren't simply the rights of a few individuals to, you know, do what they want. They're in fact embedded in the very concept of human rights. What we are defending here this evening is not simply the choice of some people around their particular work site to get some whim exercised but, rather, to in fact protect the fundamental reasons why western democracies are the best places to live in the world; that is, that we have a belief in the rule of law and that we base that rule of law on the concept of human rights. The fact, the idea that labour rights are human rights has been reinforced in our own Constitution and has been reinforced by the Supreme Court of Canada. So let me just take a moment to speak to that.

They say that the right to freedom of association, which includes the right of workers to join unions and bargain collectively, is a fundamental, universal human right and the cornerstone of democracy. It's not simply an issue of workplace conditions. It is, in fact, the fundamental cornerstone of what makes democracies work. Unionization and democracy both come from the same roots of protecting individuals, people who are citizens, with average amounts of power in society from the oppressions that come from tyranny, that come from the dictators and oligarchs and jackbooted thugs who've been trying to prevent people from expressing their human rights for centuries.

On June 8, 2007, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that the guarantee of freedom of association in section 2(d) of the Charter of Rights protects the rights of Canadian workers to form a union and bargain collectively. It's not a point of debate. It's not something that we question. It's been brought forward already by legislators across this country and has gone to the highest court in the land, and the highest court in the land has said exactly what we are trying to defend here, that you have a right to join a union and that you have a right within that union to collective bargaining.

As I'd mentioned prior in this House, there is another, subsequent doctrine of constitutional law that once a right has been defined, you can't pretend to recognize that right but then undermine it. The doctrine of hollow rights is that once the right is protected, you must in fact take a liberal or broader, expansive approach to how that right is expressed. You can't then say: well, we'll recognize the right, but we'll take away all the ways in which that right can be expressed without actually saying that we're taking away the right itself. There's no back door here. You can't come in and artificially cut down the workers at their ankles by using this surreptitious and nasty technique of undermining the right that they have worked on in this country for over a hundred years. The doctrine of hollow rights indicates that you must listen to them, you must collectively bargain with them, and you must honour the results of that collective bargaining. Not doing those things is, in fact, a defiance of Canadian democracy, that which we have fought for for over a hundred years in this country.

In fact, it's very interesting that this government is attempting to attack unions a hundred years after the Winnipeg General Strike, which occurred almost exactly a hundred years ago now, in May 1919, in which at first over 30,000 private-sector workers left their jobs on the same day to demand the right to collective organization and to talk about the big union, as they called it, and to make sure that the benefits of this great country called Canada are shared not just with a few folks in the corporate world, as they were in those days, but are shared broadly for workers.

It's fascinating what happened then. It was a Conservative government at the time that came in to suppress those union rights. In fact, the minister of the interior and the Acting Minister of Justice at the time, Arthur Meighen, who subsequently became Prime Minister of Canada, was sent to Winnipeg to suppress worker rights, a fine Conservative tradition there, I'll say. A hundred years later you're still at it. You clearly haven't learned anything from the history of bargaining rights in Canada.

What they did do when they arrived in Winnipeg was that they started to attack the workers by actually changing the laws. They changed the laws, saying that they would fire all of the federal workers who joined the private-sector workers on the general strike if they didn't go back to work. And then they changed the laws to allow them to attack even British-born immigrants so they could be deported if they participated in this. They actually went in to create laws in order to undermine collective bargaining. That's the kind of jackbooted activity that led to the Winnipeg General Strike.

In fact, one of the leaders of that Winnipeg General Strike, an incredibly important figure in Canadian history, J.S. Woodsworth, was arrested along with many other people. Subsequently, while many others spent six months or a year or two in jail, he was released. But I can tell you what happened. He then went on to form the party which we now represent here in this House. I can tell you what happens with this Conservative tradition of denying people basic human rights and acting to change laws in order to undermine those rights: you create the opposition. So I guess I can thank the Conservatives for helping to create the NDP in this province and in this country. Unfortunately, they do so only by being oppressive and denying the people the right to the fruits of their labour.

I think there's another interesting aspect to the history of the nature of collective rights that's essentially of the same impulse as the desire for democracy: the desire to take power away from a few people who have the power to write laws, who have the power to bring in the police, the military, and other people to enforce those laws and to spread that power into the populace and to give that power to people through the vote to elect and to remove or, in the case of collective bargaining, to allow people who contribute their labour to the benefits of a business or a government or a society to benefit from the goods that come out of that labour. It's rooted both democracy and collective bargaining in the learning that we've had in western democracy since the time of the Enlightenment. What we have now is a government that is trying to go back to pre-Enlightenment thinking in terms of their relationships with the people in society. It's completely appalling.

Let's talk about why. Through the Enlightenment, through the last few hundred years, the last hundred years in Canada since the Winnipeg General Strike, we have felt that in the modern world it is important and necessary to protect human rights because underlying the notion of collective rights and the freedom of association is the right to the integrity of the body. That is, when you put in your labour and you exercise your body in order to derive some benefit, you have the right to the benefits that come from that labour, and if you begin to pierce collective rights and collective bargaining, you begin to pierce the right to the integrity of the body.

Now, this is very well articulated by a great American writer by the name of Ta-Nehisi Coates, who indicates that the history of black men in the United States is the history of suppression of the black body. What he's talking about is that the great benefits that America has derived over the many years have been on the backs of the labour of black men and women, that every cotton field benefited financially from people who were in slavery, whose body was taken, and the right to control that body was subverted by people who had power, using the law as a way of subverting that right to the integrity of the body. So if you remember that that's what we're talking about here, the fact that we have learned through hundreds of years that we need to create a society in which people have control of themselves and the fruits of the labour that comes from themselves, or else we end up in a society where some are enslaved for the benefits of others.

It seems ridiculous to us now, in 2019, to be talking about slavery, but I want us to remember the roots of the work that has gone into collective bargaining and what it's all about because at one time it did matter. At one time it was about slavery. It was about taking people's rights to control their own bodies in order to be able to fulfill their own needs and subverting that for the needs of other people to exercise power over. That's what we're challenging here today. We're reminding you that this came from somewhere. These rules didn't just appear out of magic one day. These rules came because we had to learn lessons over hundreds of years, since the Enlightenment, about how to create a society in which everyone, regardless of their skin, their religion, or their choice to associate with others – if we do not protect those things, we are on the road to perdition; we are on the road to denying people the very rights which will allow all of us to live the best life that we possibly can.

This movement that the conservatives around the world seem to be celebrating right now, of reducing the rights of the many and the wealth and the power of the many in order to give those to a smaller and smaller and smaller group of people so that the inequality is getting farther and farther from the top 1 per cent to the rest of us, is a dangerous trend and one that leads to the kind of suppression that we saw a hundred years ago in Europe and around the world, where people were attacked for simply wanting to join with their brothers and sisters in the protection of their bodies, of their labour, and their work for the benefit of all mankind.

Underlying what we're talking about today is the fact that we have thousands of public-sector workers who are out there every day committing themselves, their bodies, and their labour to the benefit not only of themselves but of the wider society. Because we have created these structures in society which allow us to share the benefits of society, we indeed have probably one of the best societies the world has ever known here in the province of Alberta and in the country of Canada. That's on the backs of those people who have contributed to the collective good. That's the benefit of recognizing that people need to be respected and that the laws that protect their collective rights need to be respected as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, and I see that the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West has risen.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ordinarily I would not rise to respond to the types of comments that I have heard from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, but we are here to debate about the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act. That particular act: the intent is clear on the title of this particular bill. What I have heard from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is to compare this bill to slavery. To say that that is outrageous and ridiculous is an understatement. And coming from . . .

An Hon. Member: It's disgusting.

Mr. Madu: It really is actually disgusting, Mr. Speaker. It is shameful, and I would ask the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and the members opposite to render their apology for this shameful analogy.

Mr. Speaker, one should never minimize the impact of slavery on the coloured people in the United States. We are talking about a political party that formed government, that nominated the highest number of immigrants in the last election. I can talk about my friend from Edmonton-North West, Ali Eltayeb. I can talk about my friend from Edmonton-South, Tunde Obasan, or myself and a host of other of our colleagues from different ethnic minorities in this province. If any political party in this dispensation is to lay the claim to have nurtured a welcoming environment for minorities to seek upward mobility and opportunity in this province, I think that I am confident, I am proud to say that it really is the United Conservative Party.

You know, I have heard several times in this House that members opposite like to talk about human rights and the rights of minorities. But, Mr. Speaker, I'm here tonight to tell you that from my own vantage point as someone who has lived the Alberta dream – and the reason why I am proud to say that I am Conservative and principled, for that matter, is precisely because of the rhetoric that I hear from the members opposite. The people the members opposite are referring to came to this country in pursuit of opportunity, an environment that will provide that opportunity that minorities are looking for to live, work, and raise their children, not to be used as a political football by a party that nearly destroyed our economy when they were in government. So it is outrageous for the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to make these allegations tonight in this House.

The time has come for the members opposite to recognize that it is precisely these identity and divisive politics that led the vast majority of the people of this province to reject their politics of fearmongering. I do not, for one, being someone of a minority ethnic group who is a proud Conservative – it was insulting for me to sit here and hear the member talk about a lived experience he knows nothing about. Mr. Speaker, the vast majority of the people of this province, including people like myself, came here in pursuit of opportunity. That is what our party and the UCP government has offered them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone else wishing to join the debate? I see that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows has risen.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to speak against the bill. I'm proud and, to be sure, honoured to speak against this bill, Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, that was put forward by the government. The reason I'm so proud to speak against the bill is that there's no way this bill will do any good for Albertans or Alberta workers or the people of Alberta at large.

This bill is a gross abuse of power and an attack on front-line workers. This is authoritarian and unethical behaviour, I will say, taking away workers' fair chance to discuss their wage rights. I'm still trying to understand, you know, what made this government conclude to put this Bill 9 forward. Was there something they tried to attempt to resolve, a problem with the stakeholders? Did they try to consult with them? Were they unsuccessful? Were there some challenges to this? Lack of consultation, lack of facts shows the clear motive, the political motives behind this bill, the ideological motive behind the bill. The government really wanted to send a signal as to what average Albertans can expect from this government going forward.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is going to affect approximately 180,000 Albertans. Who these 180,000 Albertans are and what they do: they are front-line nurses, social workers, teachers, librarians, food inspectors, child mental health therapists, long-term care workers, correctional officers, sheriffs, and more, the kind of work that's so essential not only to serve society, serve Albertans, but also to make this place better.

It's not only these 180,000 workers that will be affected by this bill if it is passed but also their families, their children. They are in the hundreds of thousands. Maybe one-fourth of Albertans will be badly affected if this bill is passed. I'm very sure, you know, that they will not just sit back, and they will not just accept it, the government's attempt during the dark midnight. Then those people like nurses, when we are just discussing the bill that is attempting to take their right to the fair chance to discuss their wage, might be right now serving in a hospital so that our loved ones can have the care they need.

Not only that, but the other reason I'm feeling so proud to speak against this bill is that this bill is, I will say – I'm just trying to find the word – a unilateral, one-sided act and fails to consider the participation of the people that are going to be most affected, when those people have reflected very responsible behaviour in the past. Those are the people that spent the important years of their lives studying in colleges and universities and afforded costly education. And this government is not willing to do anything about tuition or to make education more affordable.

Those individuals not only worked hard to make their career but also chose a career that they can build their life on while serving the people of this province, where they can contribute to making this place better for all. I say that these people deserve much more respect than this bill is showing. Especially when our province was going through the deep recession due to the price differential, those were the people that showed leadership. They showed responsibility. They took zero. This government even, you know, failed to bring them to the table.

This act and the government's rush to pass this bill are showing that the government has something to pursue, maybe their hidden agenda. This was not even something in their election platform that they worried about, that they are very stubborn, I will say, about. It's very hard to understand why this government is so stubborn to pass this bill.

The government did not show any action to engage those people or that they had provided the opportunity to those responsible stakeholders, unions, associations, and they were not successful. So given the facts that we have in front of us, it strictly seems like their ideological move. They don't really believe in unions. They don't really believe in their right to fair wage negotiations.

Given that the government has just, you know, started their work six weeks ago, has not even completed two months, looking into the series of acts we have been going through, these seem, once again, not justifiable acts at all. That's why I'm proud to speak against this bill. In speaking against this bill, I surely feel this is my duty. This is the duty that my constituents have given me, and when I walk home tomorrow morning, I will not be ashamed. When this government was discussing something to take away the rights of everyday Albertans, I had my duty, and I did not sit back and listen. I had the courage to stand. I'll go back and I will explain to my constituents that I will stand on behalf of them.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, during the campaign I was door-knocking, and I know many of the members on both sides of the House had opportunities to door-knock and listen to thousands of people in their riding. I can still not even look into the eyes of the mother I met at the doorstep who lost her son, you know, due to lack of service. He was suffering from mental illness, 18 years old, a young fellow. She could not even explain the pain she was going through. She couldn't even speak about it. She couldn't even finish what the problem was.

I'm still even thinking about how I'm going to get back to that person, how I'm going to find help for this person, how I'm going to talk to her about how we in this House are collectively, you know, discussing and are concerned about her concern and the pain she's going through, how we will collectively make sure that we will not let this happen to anyone else. We cannot return her loss, but we can make sure that this doesn't happen to anyone else. But in this House I'm seeing something very different happening, attacks on those people, the people providing services like for mental health, the services provided in our hospitals. That is the other reason I feel very proud to stand up and speak against this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that this is the biggest betrayal of workers' rights. These are their hard-fought rights. They did not just get them granted. There's a history of labour movements. There's a history behind the struggles of, you know, the people's achievements with respect to their rights of bargaining, their rights to make unions, their rights to participate in unions, their rights to become members of unions. That history does not even come from somewhere else. That very history belongs to this land. People did not just even struggle for centuries; people gave their lives to legislate for eight hours a day, to legislate for overtime, to legislate for holidays, sick leaves.

In this bill I'm seeing a reversal of those rights. It's an insult even to our martyrs, our seniors, our forefathers who fought very hard not only for their own rights or of their fellow citizens . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I believe that the individual who caught my eye is the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very interested in the perspective of the Member for Edmonton-Meadows. You know, it's coming right after the Minister of Municipal Affairs' perspective that he shared with us. Perhaps in a berating way of this side, he shared his views and, I think, missed the point that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was making to this House.

I'm really interested, hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows, in your perspective about how you wound up on this side, a different side than that member, who claims that perhaps all new Canadians, immigrants to this land, should end up on that side by right. That's not where you are. I'm really interested in your journey to these benches, to this opposition, and to this time if you can explain.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, fighting for average people's rights is something I feel very lucky and proud that I got from the environment that I was lucky to have at home. When I'm talking about the fundamental rights of workers and respecting those rights, so helping or contributing to make this society better, not for the few or some but for all, I have witnessed even in my childhood how hard it was for people, my grandfather, my ancestors. They worked tirelessly. There was a time that a day was not legislated as eight hours, not only that but also for fundamental rights. This was a society, I will say, where women were not able to vote.

You know, my friends right now are trying to – I don't want to go out of context. I'm hearing them say terms like “trickle-down effects.” You’ve got to look at the trickle-up effects. I was happy to see those kinds of struggles, workings, in the kind of environment I was able to grow up in. That was back in the ’70s, when it was surely a social stigma that people were not ready to send their children, the females, to schools. They were not comfortable sending them to school. It was not for them, the right to education. It was not their right to participate in social clubs or local councils.

That was a time in the early ’70s when my mom was so young, in her 20s. She was a person who was able to be elected as a member of the local council, and I think the credit goes to not only my mom but my parents and my family at large. Not only this, but my grandfather and numerous people from my village where I grew up, the party spirit and, you know, the struggle against colonial rule, knew that . . .

The Acting Speaker: Are there other members wishing to debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to speak against Bill 9, the bill that will take away the rights of Albertans and of working people in this province. As many of the members are aware, in 2013 I represented the human services members of AUPE who worked in PDD, persons with developmental disabilities; the office of the public guardian; AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped; and Children’s Services. In this position I participated as a member of the bargaining team and have had the experience of going through arbitration.

Let’s spend a few minutes talking about the bargaining process. During former Premier Peter Lougheed’s leadership he deprived public employees of the right to strike in the event of an impasse in bargaining. However, in return they got access to compulsory arbitration processes; in other words, an arbiter who looks at the facts, the laws, and private-sector comparisons and who then has the right to impose a settlement on both parties. This process was a compromise that was established due to a respectful relationship between the government and the essential services employees. However, things have changed, Mr. Speaker.

In recent years the past government, under the leadership of Premier Redford, engaged in a process to dictate the salaries of all employees by introducing Bill 46, the Public Service Salary Restraint Act, that would impose a two-year salary freeze and negotiate the collective bargaining process and, of course, remove binding arbitration.

In addition to that legislation, a second piece was introduced, which was Bill 45, the Public Sector Services Continuation Act, 2012. This act significantly increased the penalties for illegal strikes by workers who are deemed to provide essential services. This bill was introduced as a response to the wildcat strike by correctional officers that began at the Edmonton Remand Centre earlier in the year. The government proposed to introduce harsh fines of up to $100,000 per day on unions in the case of an illegal strike or even the threat of an illegal strike. But neither of these bills ever received royal assent. Now, the reason for this is the fact that there was a significant response from the labour movement in regard to these bills, in fact such a response that all members of the opposition, no matter the party affiliation, came together to oppose the PC government.

Now, the Minister of Environment and Parks just stood in this House and spoke about how he believes that the Official Opposition is upset about the merging of the PC and the Wildrose caucuses. Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, I’m actually a little bit curious about how that’s all working out with this new government in relation to this bill. The reason I say this is that I believe that there must be some dispute in the caucus about how to deal with this bill and, in fact, knowledge of the trouble that is coming.

Mr. Speaker, let me quote some of the members of the current government caucus on how they felt about the impact of the legislation of arbitration. The current hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat said:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. member if he’s not at all concerned about how arbitration rights seem to be the balance that’s been set in many, many jurisdictions for the public union’s legal inability to strike and if he’s not very, very concerned about how that removes individual freedoms.

I want to remind the individual member that in the last election tens of thousands of people in southern Alberta were very, very concerned with your government’s quick and easy decision to legislate away property rights, the same way you’re trying to do a quick legislation . . . here of individuals’ rights to have arbitration when they’re providing valuable – valuable – public services. I remember hundreds and hundreds of signs that had the arrow through the PC: don’t vote PC.

. . . Hon. member, are you concerned about taking away individuals’ rights to arbitration under Bill 46?

If anybody wants to follow along, that’s in Hansard, December 2, 2013.

In addition to that, here’s another quote:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m just wondering if the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo feels that the Premier and this government’s broken promises since the election date may have [been impacting] the crafting of Bills 45 and 46.

I’m also wondering – I know that in the Wildrose our position was recall in the last election, and I understand that in B.C. when the Campbell Liberal government kind of hid the truth from the people that they really wanted an HST, PST combined, [they started] the recall process of 21 MLAs for the Liberal party on Vancouver Island [which] made a huge change in [their] government policy. I wonder if the member would care to comment on if recall might be an option for this province down the road.

That’s from December 4, 2013.

Now, I have one more that I think is also interesting. I quote from a March 23, 2015, press release: we are interested in building a new spirit of co-operation with our public-sector unions; repealing Bill 45 is a clear indication that we want to work with our public-sector workers to develop legislation that ensures fairness for all employers, employees, and Albertans as a whole. That was by the then minister of jobs, skills, training, and labour. Did anyone guess who that was? A PC member, now the Minister of Transportation.

So I find it very, very interesting that we have two very, very clear indications from members in the current government that were part of the Wildrose and part of the PC caucuses that have now come together and who have been clear in their press releases and their comments in this House that they do not support this type of action with working people. What’s changed? Well, it would appear that one member learned after an election how working people in this province have a real issue when government impedes their rights while the other member realized he was going into an election and that Albertans didn’t like their rights to be impeded.

It is possible to learn from your mistakes, so I would encourage the members to look throughout their caucus and to discuss with each other the things that they have learned through the history of their parties, the PC caucus and the Wildrose caucus, and the different visions that they had when it came to arbitration, when it came to impeding workers’ rights, when it came to the rallies that happened in 2013 and 2014, and maybe think about the danger and the road that you are slowly going down. There are members of your caucus that very clearly remember what happened, that clearly understood it was in their best interest, at the time of going into the election of 2015, that repealing any type of labour legislation that may upset the labour movement was a good idea.

I recognize that we are now at the beginning of a mandate of four years for this current government, so maybe the learning is: if we do it early enough, people will forget. But I would caution all of you in this House, all of the members, that the labour movement never forgets and that the labour movement understands and that working people in this province remember when you start taking away their rights. Albertans remember when you take away their rights, and if they didn't remember, then we wouldn't have seen the actions that we have seen by some of the members of your current caucus, when they were in government in 2013, 2014, and the beginning of 2015, to have to repeal legislation to make sure that when they went into the 2015 election, they didn't have to worry about losing their seats.

So what I will say in this House is that we will continue to fight. We will continue to fight for workers' rights. We will continue to fight for what is very clearly a breach of Albertans' Charter rights. We will very clearly remind workers repeatedly throughout the next four years about what it is that you are doing to working people in this province. You don't respect working people. If you did, you would actually be going through the arbitration process. You would be having a discussion.

The reality of this is – and we have seen it in other jurisdictions; we've seen it in B.C.; we've seen it in Saskatchewan – that when governments try to impede the legal process of arbitration, when they try to impede the Charter rights of Albertans, of people living in B.C., of Canadians, the governments ultimately lose. They lose every time, because a government does not have the overall authority to say that they have urgency within their policies that impedes the Charter rights of Albertans or of any Canadian. They lost with the teachers. They lost with the health care workers. They were substantially fined, which ended up costing more for the government in the end than it would have if they had just gone through the arbitration process.

The reality of it is that there are 180,000 workers that are impacted. There are nurses; there are social workers; there are teachers; there are youth workers; there are child mental health therapists; there are long-term care workers; there are correctional officers; there are sheriffs; there are many, many, many other workers that are under these arbitration agreements that will remember when you decided to take away their abilities to negotiate.

I guess the question that I have and the thoughts that continuously go through my mind around this are: how did you not learn from 2013 and 2014, when thousands and thousands of people were standing in minus 30 weather, minus 40 weather at Churchill Square...

An Hon. Member: It was cold.

Ms Sweet: It was cold. I remember. I couldn't feel my feet.

... protesting these bills. Then they came to the Legislature, and they rallied here. Then they came to committees, and committees had to be moved into bigger rooms, and more rooms had to be added because there were so many people waiting to speak against the bill. Ultimately, the bills died and were never proclaimed and were repealed.

You're heading down a very, very dangerous road. I mean, you're the government – you have a majority – so you can choose to do it, but for the new members in the House, I would do your research on the history of the labour movement in this province. I would do your research on the regressive legislative bills that have been passed, even in the last eight years, in this province and how successful that was for governments.

Let's be clear. Part of the reason we were here in 2015 as government was because of what the Redford government did to the labour movement. I mean, it helped; there was no question. We became government because the Conservative bullying tactics and the disrespect for working people in this province helped them recognize that the NDP actually fights for working people, helped them recognize the fact that many of us come from working backgrounds. We were teachers and nurses and social workers and educators, lawyers, different things like that, and we came from the trenches. We were in the trenches with the working people of Alberta.

I just feel like it's something that you should all think about, all consider. Definitely, you want to look at the fact that, you know, when you did the Public Sector Services Continuation Repeal Act – that was the Minister of Transportation – it was repealed because a Supreme Court decision said that it was illegal. The Public Sector Services Continuation Act was intended to deter legal strikes, but again it wasn't legal.

What you're doing isn't legal. Like, let's just be clear. You're going to end up in court. You're going to end up spending a lot of taxpayer money, a lot of taxpayer dollars, that you continuously say that you're defending, to go to court and do court challenges on something where, if you were just being honest and you just wanted to work collaboratively with the public sector and actually have a conversation and go through the process, it probably wouldn't even cost you as much.

I guess the point is that this government has been very clear that $4.5 billion for corporate taxes is okay and that doing constitutional court challenges on everything and anything just for the sake of doing constitutional challenges on anything and everything and not respecting jurisdictions, federalism, a variety of different things, seems to be the most effective way to use taxpayer dollars. Instead of investing in Albertans, you're just going to pay rich lawyers to go to court and to fight, when in reality you could just sit down at a table and have a conversation and actually negotiate and work collaboratively with your public-sector employees and maybe even be able to come up with a deal that makes sense.

When we were government, we could do it. I mean, we were honest with the public sector and said: "We can't give you any salary increases. Like, we just can't. There's no money." So they took zeros. I think that's pretty fair. I mean, no cost-of-living increase, and zero, zero, zero, some for four years, some for three. Some had taken them for much longer than that because they had zeros prior to the renegotiation of their last contract. Really, if you look at it, they've been ...

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, under 29(2)(a), I saw the hon. Government House Leader standing.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise under 29(2)(a) yet again this evening. I appreciate the hon. member's comments and her taking the time to participate in this debate. You know, it's something that's significantly different than what we saw last night from the opposition caucus, who spent most of the evening trying to adjourn debate. While I do disagree with the hon. member on many of her comments, I do appreciate that she's taken the opportunity to be able to debate this legislation in this House tonight.

One thing I just wanted to talk about briefly, though, in her comments was the comments about respecting working people. I find it troubling that it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that over and over the opposition doesn't recognize that working people were dramatically impacted by recent decisions made by the NDP when they were in government. A party that ultimately ended up becoming, again, the only political party in this province to ever have a one-term government ended up taking us on track for almost $100 billion in debt, oversaw the largest job losses in the history of this province. At the same time that those very working people were struggling to make ends meet and the people that created jobs for them, the employers in our province, were struggling to be able to keep people employed in our province, that member was part of a government that then brought in the largest tax increase in the history of this province, called the carbon tax, a tax that they knew and have admitted many times on the record was all economic pain and no environmental gain. I could tell you, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents, all of whom are working people, that they found that to be unfortunate and troubling for them and it caused them significant damage.

The second point I wanted to discuss. She referred to my comments specifically discussing the fact that the Wildrose Party and the PC Party – ultimately we would go on to become the United Conservative Party, and we were very proud of that. Mr. Speaker, I am still very proud of that fact. It has been a great journey over the last few years under the leadership of the hon. Premier and many other people, more than I could even name in any 29(2)(a), who have worked hard to take this movement together. Let me tell you: we are more united than we ever were.

Quite frankly, I'm happy to report to you that having been there from basically the very beginning of the United Conservative Party, in the room with my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays when the documents were made that would make this party, both of us can say, Mr. Speaker, that I never thought it would work this well. I'm pretty excited about that and what happened on April 16 and the fact that Albertans agreed with us by giving us the largest vote total in the history of this province and a clear mandate to come back here and form government.

I think the hon. member missed my point altogether. I would rather just give an opportunity to make sure that that is clear with this 29(2)(a), if I could, Mr. Speaker, and that was about the humility that her opposition, now that they're not in government, should start to express. My advice to them – and I was being sincere in that advice because I respect the role of the opposition in this Chamber. I was proud to be a member of the Official Opposition in this Chamber and to do the important work that we had to do. Our constitutional responsibility was to hold the then government of the day to account. They have a responsibility to do that, too, and I respect that.

But they should also examine their own behaviour that led them to that side of the House. Examine it. Take time to process what took place, Mr. Speaker. The reality in this province is that Albertans don't reject governments very often. They have never in the history of this province until April 16, 2019, kicked out a party with only one term. Ever. The NDP have that: the first time ever, the first political party in over a hundred years of parliamentary democracy in this province, they were ejected from government after one term.

I suspect that's why they're so angry. They spend most of their time focusing on anger. You know what, Mr. Speaker? The NDP in the time that I've served in public life with them have always been about fear and smear. They've always been about fear and smear and smearing their opponents and doing that. What is new this time – I've sat in this Chamber for over four years with the NDP, and I've never seen them this angry. I'm pretty used to the fear and smear, but the anger that is coming from the NDP since this election is quite shocking.

You know, my dad was here today, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: To continue debate, I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods standing.

Ms Gray: Why, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll just comment very briefly that I think that this government is using a lot of important words that they don't understand. I just heard the member opposite use the word "respect" repeatedly, and I'm not sure that he understands what respect looks like. In fact, that segues very nicely into what this government is doing: breaking the law, abusing their power, attacking front-line workers, and legislating a delay in wage talks and not just a delay but giving themselves the opportunity to write regulations into the future that will potentially roll back wages, freeze wages, make other changes, regulation-making power as they should so choose to use.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to stand up to speak against this bad-faith bargaining bill. Speaking of bad-faith bargaining, that's another term that I'm not sure that the government understands. The Finance minister has stood up numerous times and used the term "good faith." Respect, good faith, democracy: there are a lot of words that are being thrown about without the action behind them. Showing respect for public-sector workers, showing respect for the people who care for seniors in this province, showing respect for the people who clean the government offices, showing respect for the people who prepare the requests that the ministers make day in and day out does not look like legislating an end to contracts.

We know that this attack on front-line workers is not constitutional and will not stand up in a court challenge. We know this, Mr. Speaker, because we've seen that these types of policies taken by governments in other jurisdictions and, as my colleague from Edmonton-Manning was talking about, attempted in many different ways here do not stand up to court challenge processes. Now, one of the bars our government set for ourselves was to stay within constitutional law: let's not introduce legislation that we know will be struck down. It seems like a reasonable bar to expect your government to operate to, but it was a little too high for this government.

We know that the public-sector workers that are going to be impacted by this legislation now with the delay in which legally mandated, contractually mandated wage reopeners, arbitrations as well as the public-sector workers who will be affected in the future by the regulations that roll back their wages because this government does not want to come back into this Chamber and have to redebate this fight again, so they made sure that their bill, Bill 9, included section 5(c). Allowing them to write regulations into the future is the old, Conservative tactic of disrespecting front-line workers.

With the very limited debate time that has been allowed to myself and members of the opposition and given the fact that this government has refused to look workers in the eye, to actually engage with them in conversations, I thought I would bring a few workers' voices into this debate, Mr. Speaker, because workers have been outraged by the actions taken by this government. I've grabbed a sample of a few different stories and thoughts – what do Albertans think about this? – because I know the government is not interested in what the opposition thinks because that would mean doing their jobs and listening to the feedback that we're providing.

Here are a few comments from Albertans: "Christina, I'm worried. I'm worried about the future of my public service job. I'm worried about what this government is going to do in the future. Bill 9: what is next? I appreciate that you continue to fight for us. I feel cheated and betrayed by this government. I never thought that a UCP government would come after the food on my family's table."

Here's another story, Mr. Speaker. The members opposite have already started laughing, laughing at Albertans who are worried. That's the type of cruelty I expect but am always disappointed by because I expect better. Since 2011 ...

The Acting Speaker: I think that just at this point I don't think anybody knows what anybody's motives are with regard to any comments being made, so I think that's a fair statement in this stage of debate.

Please continue.

Ms Gray: Thank you for your guidance, Mr. Speaker.

"Since 2011 we have had only one only one small raise of 2 per cent for two years and 1 per cent for the last year, not even cost of living. I work as an administrative assistant and co-ordinator, and I have 12 staff I support in admin duties, and then I also co-ordinate a medical supply for 2,000 locations in Alberta. I'm at the top of my pay scale, and I make $60,000 a year. I have a diploma and a certificate, and I paid over $30,000 for my two pieces of education. Do you honestly think that I'm overpaid and deserve to have my wages frozen and then cut? Jason Kenney thinks so, and that's not fair."

Some Hon. Members: Names.

Ms Gray: Oh, my apology, Mr. Speaker. I will endeavour not to do that again. My apology.

Another message from an Albertan, Mr. Speaker: "My girlfriend and I both work in the public sector albeit in very different roles. Neither of us have had a cost-of-living raise in our time with the GOA: five years for me, six for her. I'm working 40-plus hours a week while also trying to finish a degree online. We can't afford a strike. We can't afford pay cuts. This isn't fair. We're taxpayers, too."

This is one that echoes a lot of what you've heard from the members of the Official Opposition over the debate that's happening in the 30th Legislature. "I'm quite amazed that the UCP and its supporters feel that this is a good move. I guarantee I spend more in Alberta to Albertans than those rich – I will not use the next word, Mr. Speaker – getting a massive tax break. Now, me, a public servant, won't again get a cost-of-living increase to get me and my family an extra dinner a month in an Albertan restaurant, yet oil executives get enough kickback to take their families overseas to spend that money. It just doesn't make sense."

Now, this comment, I think, echoes a lot of what the Official Opposition has been talking about, that the modus operandi, the plan, has been to blow a $4.5 billion hole in the budget by giving large corporate tax giveaways to large, profitable corporations and then to fill that hole by rolling back the wages of public-sector workers of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, we've talked about this in the House a number of times. We know – we know – that when you give working people, when you give lower paid workers a little bit more, they spend that locally, and when you give large corporations a little bit more, they use it for share buybacks. They use it for executives to go on vacations in other parts of the world. When we're talking about the Alberta economy, this Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, this bad-faith bargaining bill, is a part of that economic discussion.

Now, a lot of Albertans have recognized that there are a number of aspects of this legislation that are unconstitutional because Albertans have seen this before, and they've seen it happen in other jurisdictions. I'd like to share with you a few of their thoughts regarding what impact this will have on Alberta should the government continue to proceed and not listen to wisdom from the Official Opposition because we, of course, are here to help.

"It will cost Albertans much more in the end. After a few years of expensive court battles, they will lose and have to pay millions in reparations and penalties. Gordon Campbell and Christy Clark broke a contract with the B.C. teachers in 2002 and fought them in the courts until they lost the last appeal in 2016. Then the NDP got elected, and they are struck with the task and cost of restoring the conditions of the broken contract, restoring class sizes and special-needs programs 16 years later. It means finding space and trying to hire teachers and teachers' assistants and repairing years of neglect." Mr. Speaker, to that comment, another Albertan replied that it was the kids that had paid for that in the end.

This perspective, I think, is important, Mr. Speaker. Again, from an Albertan, a taxpayer: "The real cost when civil workers are hit is a human cost. It's the students in the classroom, the patients in the hospitals, public safety, and on and on and on. Alberta has been here before during the Klein years. It took years to recover from his slash, burn, and cut approach. Very sad but not shocked by this whatsoever."

This perspective is very similar. "Cutting wages or even freezing them can actually result in more spending. This happened with Klein, too. What will happen is we'll have an exodus of qualified personnel, which will mean that the people that remain will have to work more hours; i.e., overtime pay." Well, potentially at straight time, Mr. Speaker, but that's another matter. "Less public-sector workers will also severely impact tons of essential services. Less medical staff, for example, equals more overworked staff, equals more mistakes, and those mistakes will cost people's lives. The thing is that, in the end, a lot of public-sector workers will be fine – lots of them have a good education – but a lot of them might leave our province." Mr. Speaker, that is the fear that this Albertan has. He's also concerned about the impact on rural health care. "What's going to happen when they have less doctors, less nurses, less physiotherapists, less pharmacists? Most people working in rural health care are stretched to the max already."

These Albertans see the writing on the wall. They see what Bill 9 is: not only a piece of legislation that is allowing it to break contracts but a piece of legislation that will allow the government to implement wage rollbacks in the future and the impact that that will have on our public-sector services. Some are even worried about what workers may choose to do. A government strike would absolutely cripple the government. From forestry workers to prison guards to educational services and health, people would see pretty quickly what the civil service is doing for people in this province. Hopefully, it doesn't come to a strike. Hopefully, if it does, it doesn't last long. But this government seems content to see it getting to that place. Of course, AUPE is taking this legislation to court. I honestly think it will win because of previous governments who lost in similar cases.

I found this perspective interesting, Mr. Speaker. From somebody who has been working directly with this government: "I tell you what; if they want to cut back my wages, I'm not going to hurry up with their urgent briefings requested on unreasonable timelines. 'You want to know all the funding information for organization X over the last 20 years and you need to know today? Yeah. That's a level of effort greater than you're willing to compensate me for.' They shouldn't be so cruel and petty to the people who support the province, obviously, but it's absurd to cut off your own arms regarding the public service. That might have worked in the Klein years, before social media and mass e-mails, but now we get hundreds of complaints a day from all across the province, all of which need to be dealt with quickly to avoid a spiral.

These people are not logical thinkers.” There’s a different term in there, but I think that’s a good sampling from just a handful of comments and thoughts from Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I’m hearing from my constituents and from other Albertans outrage at this government’s actions to break contracts with its workers, outrage at using terms it doesn’t appear to understand like “respect,” and not being willing to work fairly with our public-sector unions and our workforce. This government, at its own peril, forgets that workers have power. Workers have the power to withdraw their services. Workers have the power of solidarity.

The Member for Edmonton-Manning spoke about the demonstrations and the mass outpouring of support for workers during bills 45 and 46 debates. It’s important that our government treat workers with respect, true respect: looking them in the eyes, engaging them in consultation, working with them at the bargaining table, and allowing legally mandated arguments to proceed because we know it works.

[The Speaker in the chair]

This is what is mind-boggling to me, Mr. Speaker. For the past four years, by genuinely approaching bargaining in a good-faith style, we were able to work with our Alberta brothers and sisters, friends, neighbours, siblings. These are the people who live on your street. These are not people who deserve to be vilified. These are the people who keep our province running, from emergency services to answering the briefing notes that these ministers request. Do you think about those people as we debate Bill 9? I hope you would because this government is stealing from public-sector workers to pay for their big corporate tax giveaway.

11:50

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oh, my goodness, I believe the Minister of Transportation caught my eye.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I was interested in what we just heard, and I have to say that a few things caught my attention. One of the comments that caught my attention was how somehow an oil and gas worker is going to take whatever money they make and go on a vacation to Europe or something and other workers wouldn’t be able to afford a meal. Well, I agree with the hon. member on one thing: we should be thinking about the welfare of those working Albertans.

But I would say to the hon. member that those working Albertans have probably benefited from our government already because every time they fill up their vehicles with fuel, they save about 7 cents a litre. That’s about four or five bucks a tank, and that’s $20 a month there. Every time they pay their electricity bill or their natural gas bill, they save somewhere between $5 and $25, depending on how much of each of those commodities they use. They’re saving, and in many cases they’ll be saving $100 or $200 a month, and in many cases that will get that extra meal. It’s important. [interjection] The hon. member from across is so enthusiastic that I hope he’ll take his turn later on.

Mr. Speaker, I agree when the hon. member says that workers have power. I couldn’t agree more. Anyone who has ever employed people knows that if your employees don’t show up for work, you’re out of business. That’s a fact, and I would agree with the hon. member on that. But the hon. member ought to be supporting our government’s policies because our government’s policies are designed to create more of those workers to have more power. Actually, our policies are designed to get the 180,000 people that were out of work under the NDP back to work and to have more workers have more power.

I wonder how the hon. member feels about the fact that when you get some of those 180,000 people back to work, what they do is they spend their money. The problem with the NDP government’s policies is that with all the people out of work, they have less money to put into the marketplace, which means the local businesses close up, the local grocery stores have less business, which means fewer employees, and the local restaurants have less business, which means fewer employees. Every other local business has less profit, which means fewer workers, fewer employees. They should actually be supporting our government’s policies – I wonder how the member feels about that – to create more workers with wages to spend at the grocery store, with wages to spend at the restaurant, with wages to spend at the flower shop. Somehow the NDP thinks that’s negative for Alberta.

An Hon. Member: They’re all fat cats, all those small-business owners.

Mr. McIver: Yes. They all think that the people running the flower shops are fat cats, that those corporations are making too much money. You know what? More people to buy coffee, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the member ever considered the momentum of creating more jobs and how it creates more opportunities for people and how having maybe two paycheques in the home because there are more jobs available in the marketplace might be good for a family with the policies that our government is putting forward.

I heard a lot of talk about workers’ rights, but as the hon. Finance minister said, this is only about slightly delaying what is going to happen, not taking away anybody’s ability but, rather, slightly delaying the arbitration process so that we can have the information to deal with those workers in a responsible way, having good information in our hands to go forward in a proper way. I’m curious what the member thinks about those things, and I wonder if the folks on the NDP side ever thought about the benefits to Alberta workers, be they public-sector workers or private-sector workers, of actually having more people working in Alberta, creating more opportunities, and in fact making it more affordable for the government to keep and have additional workers. Because a province that will attract people when there are more jobs will be the opposite of what happened when the NDP was in government for the last four years, Mr. Speaker. I wonder very much if the hon. member who just spoke gives a thought to that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is anyone else wishing to join in the debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-South is rising.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is always a pleasure to rise in this House and debate legislation which is going to affect hundreds of thousands of Albertans in ways that the government does not understand. That seems to be the recurring theme in this session of the Legislature, that the government simply does not understand the impact that the legislation they’re putting through will have. Now, a number of my colleagues here in the opposition have spoken quite at length on why this is true and quite a bit on how over 180,000 workers, including nurses, social workers, teachers, librarians, child health workers, therapists – you name it – are going to be affected in overwhelmingly negative ways if the minister moves forward with this legislation and violates their constitutional rights. That is something that I think has been well established in the Assembly, and the government has chosen to either be wilfully ignorant of it or perhaps they just don’t care that they are breaking the law and hurting ordinary Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I think that their attack on Albertans and their attack on workers goes further than just what is on the paper of this legislation. I think that when we saw them last night at the stroke of midnight move forward a motion to stifle debate on this, not only were they going after the front-line workers that make this province great, but they were also saying, "You don't deserve to have a voice in the Alberta Legislature." That is what is so shameful about this government. That is what is so shameful about what this government has done.

Then just today, Mr. Speaker, on this bill they moved forward a motion of closure. In fact, at this stage they want only one hour of debate. They want us to only have – that's four speakers, basically, plus the open and close. That is appalling, that they would believe you could have so little debate on this important legislation that is both unconstitutional and attacks over 180,000 workers. That is something that every single member of this Assembly should be concerned about because it is our duty. It is what we were sent here to do. Every single member that sits on the government bench, whether they are the front bench or the backbench, and the opposition were sent here to debate legislation and recognize when legislation is flawed. We were sent here to recognize when legislation hurts ordinary Albertans and to fight back against that. That is what we were sent here to do.

That was number one on the government's platform: jobs. So why are they attacking the jobs of these essential front-line workers? Why do they simply not care about their families? Why do they simply not care about how this affects the Alberta public service? It is very clear after numerous stories that have been told by the opposition here that this legislation is both unlawful and directly hurts families. It directly hurts the people that work for this government, and that is something the government should be ashamed about. Those are the employees that are under the charge of every single person on this front bench. Every single person on this front bench, I'm sure by now – I hope by now, perhaps – has made a request through their public service for briefing material, for an update on an issue, for information on legislation they wish to bring forward. Perhaps the Minister of Finance even sought legal counsel for this bill right here, and perhaps those very workers are the ones now being attacked. Those very workers that do the work that makes this Assembly possible are the ones being attacked.

Not only is it not enough for this government to attack those workers, but they then want to tell the Assembly that this Assembly has no right to debate that attack, to talk about how unlawful this is, to talk about how this goes after hard-working people and hard-working families, to talk about how this goes after ordinary, everyday Albertans. It's a gross abuse of the power that this government has been given. It is a gross abuse of the trust this government has been given, and every single public servant that works under this government's charge knows that, Mr. Speaker.

It is something that every single member of this front bench should be concerned about. They should be concerned that they are attacking their own employees. If they don't recognize that, Mr. Speaker, if the members of this government do not understand that, then perhaps they should read the actual legislation and the case law behind it. Perhaps they should actually go and do the research. If they are not willing to do the research, because they do not wish to or perhaps they feel that they do not have enough time to do the research, whatever it may be – I'm not one to speak to what they do in their free time – then all they need to do is listen.

All they need to do is sit here, and instead of texting or working away on their laptops, all they need to do is listen, and they will understand the impact that this is having on the very employees under their charge, the very teachers, the social workers, the nurses, the long-term care workers, the correctional officers, and so many more employees, Mr. Speaker, the very people that this government swore to work for in the province of Alberta, to further this great province. That is something that is very concerning.

They either don't understand or they don't care how dangerous this action is, how dangerous it is to take illegal, unlawful action against your own workers. That is the very definition of bad-faith bargaining. The government has tried to say time and time again that this is a good-faith thing. They want to use this legislation to move forward in good faith, but, Mr. Speaker, the case law shows that's not true. In fact, by them trying to force this through at the stroke of midnight last night and now saying that this legislation should be stifled, that we shouldn't be allowed to debate it in this very Assembly, that shows that this government simply does not care about those workers. It shows that this government simply does not even want those workers' voices to be heard in Assembly. It shows how little respect this government has for ordinary, working Albertans, and that is something they should be ashamed about. That is something that they should be ashamed about, or they should stand up and defend.

Mr. Speaker, that is their prerogative, to sit on their hands and not speak to why it's okay to stifle debate and not speak to why it's okay to leave their workers behind and legislate away all the problems that they'll have. That is the government's prerogative.

Albertans will know that they were let down by their own government, the people that are supposed to advance the interests of Alberta workers. Mr. Speaker, the government is showing that they simply don't care. Nothing they are saying is anything other than rhetoric. Nothing they are saying is anything other than campaign talking points. The campaign is over. Now is the time to govern, and now is the time to make sure that the people that have been put under your charge are taken care of and are able to do their best possible job for Alberta, for this great province.

Instead, what this government has decided to do is to go and throw a slap in the face right at those workers that are under their charge, Mr. Speaker. That is something that each and every minister should be ashamed about. That is something that each and every person on that front bench should be ashamed about. That is something that every single person on the backbench should be concerned about. If their own government ministers will not respect the people that are put under their charge, then how could government backbenchers expect to have their voices heard in a respectful manner from their own ministers?

It is something that is deeply concerning for all members of this Assembly because this Assembly has a duty to ensure that we have strong debate on every single bill that comes forward. It is our duty to ensure that every single bill sees the light of day and has thorough research and debate so that we don't put forth legislation that may be unlawful, as this one is, and we don't put forward legislation that will harm ordinary Albertans, as this one does, and we don't put forward legislation that will attack our public service and unions, as this one does.

Mr. Speaker, the government has shown that they either don't understand that that is their job or they really don't care that that is their job. Both of those are things that every single member of this Assembly should be concerned about. That is, indeed, Mr. Speaker, why they were sent to this Legislature. They were sent to this Legislature to debate bills. So when they introduce motions that say, "We only need one hour because we've got it right," well, very clearly, they do not. The bill is illegal. It is unconstitutional. It is breaking the law. If that is what they consider as having gotten it right, then I'm really concerned with what they do when they get it wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think it was what the government intended when they wrote their platform, to say: we're going to break the law, attack our workers, and then have a complete disregard for the Alberta public service. I don't think that's what the government intended. But that's what this bill does, and members of the front bench don't care. I see them fiddling away on their phones and texting away. That's their prerogative. But I really think they should be listening. They should be concerned with how thoroughly this attacks the people that have been put under their charge, how thoroughly this attacks the people that they need to do the duty of Albertans. That is something that is very concerning.

It really shows how the Conservatives have quickly fallen back into their old ways. They've fallen back into bullying workers and not allowing real debate to happen in this Assembly. They've gone out and decided to attack workers, bully them, and say: well, we know the law says one thing, but we're going to introduce legislation anyway because we can get away with it. That's something I think the government should think about really deeply. That is not what Albertans expect from a responsible government, and it's certainly not what our public service expects from responsible government, Mr. Speaker.

We know that a move like this will lead to labour unrest, compromise settlements, and ultimately, when this is taken to court, it is going to cause costly settlements for all Albertans. I know that the Minister of Finance, who introduced this bill, has spoken at length about how he wishes to be fiscally responsible and he wishes to control the cost pressures. Well, Mr. Speaker, to make it very, very clear, lawsuits and having to defend your illegal and unconstitutional legislation is not a way to reduce cost pressures. That is a way to make lawyers rich. Myself, I am not a lawyer. I would prefer if we tried to make Albertans rich. That is something that I think is very important that we do here in this Assembly.

When we look at this bill, which attacks workers, attacks ordinary Albertans, and really is a bad-faith bargaining tool, a bad-faith bargaining bill, we can see very clearly how little this government cares about ordinary Albertans. We can see very clearly how little this government cares about the very people they have under their charge. We can see very clearly how little this government cares that their public service provides essential services for Albertans, services like health care, services like education, services like food inspection. Those are the types of people that this government is attacking with this bill in bad faith. Those are the types of people that will see that this government has broken the law by attacking their collective rights, their collective rights as a union, and that is something this government should be ashamed of. This government absolutely should be ashamed because they have decided that they are above the law. They have decided that the law no longer applies when they bully workers.

That is something that Albertans will not stand for and this opposition will not stand for. We will continue to fight every single day, Mr. Speaker. We know that even though the government does not want any more debate on this, because the government recognizes how bad a bill this is, they recognize how bad this would be for workers. That's why they decided at the stroke of midnight to shut down debate on this. That's why today they only wanted one hour of debate at this stage of the bill. They recognized how harmful this bill is to ordinary workers and to our public servants and our unions. They recognized how much this attacks our workers, the employees under their charge, and because of that, they've tried to stifle debate.

But this opposition will not allow that to happen. We will continue to stand up for ordinary Albertans. We will continue to stand up and fight for those workers. We will continue to stand up and fight for their collective rights, their rights to organize as a union, and that union's right to have a good-faith agreement. This government is opposed to that. This government is opposed to good-faith bargaining, and that is something they should be ashamed about. That is something they should be ashamed about, and they should be concerned about the lawsuit that'll be forthcoming.

I encourage all members to vote against this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Oh, my goodness. Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I believe that I saw the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview rise.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise. I'm going to try to rise as often as I can because, Lord knows, it'll be very rare that we get to stand up and speak. I will be speaking more broadly to closure. Actually, we'll take a little trip down memory lane because it is fascinating how when the shoe is on the other foot, the rules just don't seem to apply. So I've got lots of beautiful quotes lined up of the hon. House leader, the Premier, the Member for Calgary-Hays, and others who set their hair on fire when our government was attempting to bring in closure in our four-year term.

I mean, it is quite a serious matter, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-South for his very passionate speech talking about what this means. I know that the Member for Edmonton-South has looked at Hansard for some of the bills that were brought in under the PC government, bills 9 and 10 and bills 45 and 46, which, of course, also were trying to take away workers' rights. Bills 9 and 10 were the pension bills that I was in this House debating, where the government of the day also brought in closure. I wonder if the Member for Edmonton-South can just talk about the fact that we're seeing this once again, week 3 of this new government, making an unprecedented move by bringing in closure, stifling democracy. This very Premier at every turn talks about how he is a fan of democracy, yet at the first opportunity does the opposite.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South has approximately three minutes remaining.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a pleasure to take a question or comment from my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I have to say that it really is almost ironic to hear what he said because it's true. There are members in the government today – some of them are in the government caucus, and indeed some of them are on the government front bench – who were here for those debates and who were here in this Assembly when those bills were introduced last time. They will obviously remember that those bills triggered mass outrage across this province. Not only did they trigger mass outrage; they actually triggered having to travel around this province and hear from workers about why this would be so detrimental. Indeed, it was determined that some of those rooms weren't large enough because so many workers were affected.

When we look at what happened before and how hard Alberta pushed back against a Conservative government that did not care about their rights, we can see today how quickly the Conservatives have fallen back into their old ways, how quickly these members, who should remember – if they don't, Mr. Speaker, maybe they're getting a little bit on in years, then perhaps they do need to refresh their memories. They need to refresh their memories on how aggressively they were pushed back on because it was Albertans that told them that this was unacceptable. It was Albertans that told them that this was an attack on their collective rights. That is happening here again, Mr. Speaker.

These collective rights are being trampled on by the government, and the people who were here before, the members who were here before, they should be able to remember how badly that went for them then, and they should know how badly it will go for them this time, Mr. Speaker. We understand here in the opposition that you do not get to walk over workers' rights. You do not get to walk over collective rights of employees because not only is that what the law says but it is absolutely the right thing to do. When the government decides to do the opposite, then what they are showing is that not only do they not care about the law but they also do not care about workers.

Mr. Speaker, it is so obvious that they have fallen back into their old ways, that we saw years ago, and they simply want to bully workers every single time they have a chance. Every single time they gain the seat of power in this Assembly, they suddenly decide that they need to go after collective rights and bully the workers that are under their charge, and that is a real shame.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Anyone else wishing to debate? It appears the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has something to add.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Oh, I have lots to add, let me tell you. First of all, I just want to start off by saying that this bill, the bad-faith bargaining bill, is absolutely a slap in the face of democracy when the government brings in closure after one opposition member had a chance to speak. Now, in our term in office we did bring in closure on Bill 6 for one of the readings. I will quote some of the members opposite when they were in opposition, how they responded to that.

But what this government is trying to do, I think, is quite historic. Again, I did live through the period when the former PC government tried to ram through the pension bills and had to bring in closure. You know what, Mr. Speaker? It's really an affront and an attack on democracy, and I find it extremely rich for the Premier to be bringing this in considering that at every opportunity he stands up and talks about how he's trying to bring decorum to this place and democracy. Yet actions speak much louder than words.

I can tell you that the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, back when we brought in closure for Bill 6 – and I'm quoting from Hansard – said:

The NDP is pulling every trick out of their book to ram through legislation that farmers and ranchers are simply asking to be consulted on, tricks that the NDP once railed against. Once upon a time the Government House Leader said that, quote, this time allocation thing is a way for the government to short-circuit democracy.

Wow. That's pretty rich, hey? Some might even say that the actions of the government are borderline hypocritical, Mr. Speaker. The member continues:

Premier, we've seen consultation ignored, debate muzzled, and now democracy subverted.

How many public-sector workers did you folks consult with before you brought in closure for this bill? How many did you talk to before you even introduced this bill?

Again, Mr. Speaker, it's incredibly rich that this government will go on and on about how what they've run on is what they're introducing in the House. I don't recall this being in your platform. Can any one of you speak to that? I doubt it. Yet, again, that was their infamous talking point when they talked about the carbon tax, that our government didn't run on it. Again, you're doing the same thing. Hmm. Very hypocritical actions.

Now, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, the Government House Leader, at this point in time in the Bill 6 debate, when we introduced closure, said:

It should be unacceptable to Albertans because this is the Assembly where their issues are supposed to be dealt with. This is where democracy is supposed to take place.

I guess that doesn't really apply anymore, does it, post 2019? You have a majority; therefore, you can run the place like a one-party state. Continuing on:

This is where debate is supposed to happen, and by the government taking this action, they are stifling debate. They're not just stifling the opposition members; they're stifling the people who sent us here to represent them, and I think they should very much be ashamed of their behaviour.

Wow. Well, I hope the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is feeling very ashamed to be hearing his own words. That was from, Mr. Speaker, December 9, 2015.

On that same day – we know that the Government House Leader and myself enjoy hearing ourselves speak – he said:

Now, Madam Speaker, as you no doubt know, the government chooses not to speak to their bills. That's unfortunate. I can see why they would want to end debate and go home, but the people that sent me here and have sent my colleagues in the Official Opposition party as well as the third party and the independent colleagues in this Assembly, our constituents, have made it clear that they want us to speak to this bill. They want us to debate this bill because it affects their lives.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will affect hundreds of thousands of Albertans, ones that provide critical services to the functioning of our society, and the government needs to ask itself: without nurses, health care practitioners, and teachers, how many businesses would come to Alberta? If they couldn't access health care at any level, if they couldn't put their kids in school, there wouldn't be businesses here. Businesses don't just come for taxes; businesses come because they want reliable, quality services.

What I find rich is that this government has clearly decided that they're going to give a 4 and a half billion dollar corporate tax cut as one of the first actions they take, and who's paying for it, Mr. Speaker? The men and women that make this province turn, that make this province go round. It is disgusting that this is a piece of legislation that they are ramming through. I don't doubt that the government will try to get this through before the end of the week.

Again, the members opposite can say: well, we've had some time to debate. Well, you know what, Mr. Speaker? It's not up to them to say: you've had enough time to debate. Democracy and freedom of speech cannot be collared with time constraints and restrictions. That is exactly what this government is doing. They should be absolutely ashamed of themselves. As I had mentioned, it's more than a little rich that when they were in opposition, we did this, to my knowledge, once at one stage of a bill. Doing it for multiple stages, for this government, is shocking, and I think it is an attack on working people.

Again, I'm proud of the record of our government respecting the collective agreements, respecting negotiations with labour. I mean, I don't know if the government quite understands that by forcing this legislation, it's a slap in the face to all of the brothers and sisters in organized labour that this will affect. This is an affront to teachers, to nurses, to those that help. In fact, the very sheriffs that work in this building, that keep us safe, will be affected by this.

Mr. Speaker, the government, through their words in question period and in this House, are not coming clean with Albertans. They are not being truthful in that there is a clause in this bill that will give the Lieutenant Governor in Council, cabinet, sweeping authorities. In fact, I was talking with a friend earlier today, and this reminded me of Ralph Klein in the '90s, when he rolled back teachers' wages, not just taking zeros but rolling back the wages of our teachers and others. You know what happened? They drove thousands of people out of this province. Highly qualified people left this province because it sent a very clear message that that government, similar to this government, does not value or respect them or the process.

Now, when the Finance minister gets up and says, “This is just a delay,” I think the government is being very mistruthful with . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been called. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j). You know, it’s become almost comical to watch the opposition continue to try to skirt around the rules of this Chamber and refer to hon. members of this Chamber as lying or not telling the truth – there are certainly tons of Speakers’ rulings on that, lots of stuff in Beauchesne’s – totally inappropriate behaviour for this House. While I do appreciate that the hon. member may be frustrated, for him to imply in any way that the hon. the Finance minister is not being truthful is completely and utterly inappropriate for this Chamber.

Again, Mr. Speaker, it’s kind of rich because the Opposition House Leader has used as one of his points in his debate today the decorum in this place, respecting this place, and those type of actions. Again – sorry – those types of actions are completely inappropriate. Again, I even hesitate to rise on it, but it’s so sad to see the opposition continue to do this all the time. You just need to watch question period to watch the fact that the opposition is spending their entire time trying to figure out new and creative ways to call the government a liar. I think there are probably better ways to serve their constituents than that.

The Speaker: I might remind the hon. member that I am present for every question period thus far.

The Official Opposition House Leader is rising on the same point of order.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is not a point of order. First of all, I did not use the unparliamentary language “lied.” Second of all, I did not refer to the Minister of Finance. I referred to the government, not to an individual member. I sure did. I encourage the Government House Leader to check the Blues or Hansard. I was very, very cautious with my phraseology and wording.

Again, it’s rich coming from the Government House Leader. I think it was today, maybe yesterday – they’re kind of blending together – in question period that the Government House Leader talked about the opposition being mistruthful, misleading and said those words probably six or seven times in three sentences, which, Mr. Speaker, wasn’t a point of order. This is not a point of order. I would appreciate getting back to speaking, my one chance, to second reading of Bill 9.

The Speaker: Well, the good news for you, hon. member, is that the clock is stopped, and you will have that opportunity. The bad news, however, for you: while I appreciate your caution – and I was listening attentively, in fact, during debate. While you did use that phrase, I believe that I gave you a very high eyebrow at that time. As you’ll know, last night at approximately this time I reminded all members that we ought not do indirectly what we can’t do directly.

I am very sympathetic to the Government House Leader’s intervention when he has suggested that all members in the Chamber have been trying to find unique and innovative ways to call each other liars. The Government House Leader has apologized for doing this this week. The members of the opposition benches have apologized for doing this this week. [interjections] I might remind all members that the Speaker is on his feet, and as such they should remain silent while they’re in a sedentary position.

Here’s what I will say. Let us all endeavour to raise the level of decorum and not imply that the government is lying, that individuals are lying. Let’s do our very best to not try to do indirectly what we can’t do directly as my sense is that this will continue to lower the level of decorum and not increase the level of debate. While I won’t be asking for an apology as I do acknowledge that the Official Opposition House Leader was cautious in the way that he approached the situation, I would suggest that if he continues to do so, he will need to apologize and withdraw.

As such, let us continue the debate, where the hon. member has approximately six minutes and nine seconds remaining.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will endeavour to be more cautious with my language.

I think Albertans will see that despite the fact that the government claims that this is just a delay, it is quite clear – in fact, it’s in black and white – that it is not just a delay, that this is going to have a significant impact and, quite frankly, it’s going to have a cost. It’s going to have a cost to Albertans because it is unconstitutional. Again, the Premier and this government, rather than sitting down at the table and bargaining with our public-sector unions, which is something that they have earned, which is something that’s been done for decades, Mr. Speaker, would rather tie this up in the courts, pay a whole bunch of legal fees – you know, probably some friendly firms will benefit from that – and waste time and money as opposed to what our government did.

When we went through negotiations with labour, we did it in a respectful way, in good faith. This is part of the reason why this is unconstitutional. Legislating before you get to a table is bad faith, which is unconstitutional. Mr. Speaker, you can bet your bottom dollar that there will be court challenges immediately by a number of the very men and women that this government claims to appreciate and support yet – once again actions speak louder than words – is attacking the very people that take care of us, that ensure that we can get to and from work safely. Really, without the folks that this government is attacking – you know what? – we couldn’t do our jobs, quite frankly. It’s not a show of respect and appreciation. Again, it’s a slap in the face.

I know that there are a couple of members in the gallery that are here from labour to see first-hand how this government views unions and talks about them. I don’t have Hansard here, but let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, I’ll pull it up because there are some choice examples of members like the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat and others referring to unions as “thugs,” speaking in this Chamber using that word and speaking very negatively about them, when their goal is to ensure that working people have rights, because it wasn’t that long ago when they didn’t have rights. So this is an affront to them, to Alberta workers, you know, the very people that this government claims to support or stand up for. I mean, the good news, I guess, if there is good news, is that Albertans will see very, very clearly what this is.

I also find it fascinating, the timing of this, Mr. Speaker. I think it's no coincidence that, one, this government is trying to ram this bill through this week and, two, that it's this week that the legislation was tabled, and the government hopes to pass it through, very convenient, in the same week that the Trans Mountain pipeline was approved. I'm sure that the Premier wouldn't try to sneak something in in the cover of darkness, in the middle of the night while Albertans are thinking about some positive news.

This bill is awful. I don't know, quite frankly, if and how many amendments we'll be bringing forward. It should be scrapped. If anything, I think the Premier and this government should apologize to working people for their attack on them. I think that what the government doesn't realize is that in the last four years we haven't had any labour unrest. There are many examples in Alberta's history from not too long ago when the government attacked working people. I don't know if you recall, Mr. Speaker, the wildcat strikes that occurred between 2012 and 2015 at the remand centre and elsewhere because the government decided that it was going to attack workers and take away some of their benefits, all on this, you know, assertion or claim that we need to tighten our belts and times are tough. Again, I think Albertans will see – well, you've just given 4 and a half billion to corporations, so I guess times can't be that tough. But who's paying for it? The men and women that built this province and continue to build this province. So I think it's very, very offensive.

I think the government should sit down at the table with labour, the way we did. We were honest and up front with organized labour and said: "You know what? There are some years that we need to ask you to take a zero per cent salary increase." And they did, Mr. Speaker, because they're reasonable. But bringing forward legislation is not just unconstitutional and unreasonable; it's also, in my opinion, a very arrogant action on behalf of this government.

I can tell you that our caucus will not be supporting this bill, and I am sure that is exactly why the government has closure and I will only get one opportunity to speak to this bill in second reading.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, and I have seen on a number of occasions this evening the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon trying to catch my eye. As such, 29(2)(a) for a brief question or comment is available to you.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for letting me rise and be able to speak to this 29(2)(a) and to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I want to start perhaps with a little different tack here. I had the opportunity today, as I was leaving the Chamber after QP, to bump into the gentleman that was sitting up in our gallery here who was from England and had been doing the creation of swords for the various regiments in the Commonwealth. We began talking, and I eventually toured him around Edmonton this afternoon to some of the various military establishments in the nearby area here and had a great time with him and dropped him off at the Hotel Macdonald around 6 o'clock.

One of the comments that he made to me, completely unsolicited, speaks to some of the issues that have been talked about by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview around the issue of decorum. One of his comments, as he was watched question period today, was just how impressed he was with the decorum of the government side of the Chamber and how we appeared to understand that in the thrust and parry of debate there's a time to listen, and then there's a time to talk. It would appear that there are still a few members in this Chamber as we speak that need to remember that there's a time to listen, and then there's a time to talk. I was very glad to have the time to listen to the member across the way from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and, for that matter, to many of the members across the Chamber, Edmonton-South, et cetera, as they made points about this bill that we're discussing in this Chamber this evening.

I'd like to start by talking about a couple of the points that they've made as we've talked in this Chamber. Perhaps the first one is that without a good public sector – and I would understand, I guess, that what he's really talking about is a well-paid public sector – there would be no business in this province. I believe that's pretty much, almost, a direct quote from the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and I guess that really speaks to the difference between the way we see things on this side of the House and the way they see things on that side of the House.

Honestly, when I talk with my constituents, they understand this very clearly: if we don't have a society that has the capacity to generate wealth, then you cannot generate taxes, and when you cannot generate taxes, Mr. Speaker, then you cannot provide the services that are necessary to be able to meet the needs of the public. If you cannot generate the taxes and you cannot generate the services, then you will not be able to hire public servants to meet the needs of the people of Alberta, and that's a very crucial difference of opinion and a point of view when it comes to this side of the House and the opposite members, that you have to be able to create an economy that allows you to be able to generate wealth so that you can indeed take care of those that are less fortunate and that you can hire the public servants that allow you to be able to do that, to do the very good things that we all agree on in this House like educating our students, like meeting the health care needs of our people, and like helping those that cannot help themselves. But you have to be able to generate the wealth first.

Now, that's why it's a little rich when I remember back to 2015 and back to some of the debates on Bill 6 or the carbon levy or tax, as we called it, or the electricity decisions, taking the rollback off coal and into natural gas and the jobs that I lost in my constituency because of that decision, because of the stranded assets that were left in the ground, because of the lawsuits that came out of that. I can remember standing up in this House and saying very clearly: "Listen. You know what? Compassion is not limited to one side or the other of this House." I would listen to the other members on this side when they speak their concern for workers and for their rights and for the capacity to take care of their families. I don't think compassion is limited to one side or the other on either side of this House. But what I would argue and what I argued in 2015 is that the people that are really compassionate . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there others wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka is rising.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We spent the night here listening to the opposition raise all the drama they can and whip up all the fear and anxiety they possibly can and tramp around in the swamp as much as possible, but I think we should actually take the advice of one of the members who suggested: why don't we actually read the legal stuff? I have in my hand a copy of the collective agreement, a signed copy – I think 11 signatures on behalf of the employer and eight on behalf of the bargaining team. It says, "The undersigned hereby certify that the foregoing Collective Agreement properly sets forth the terms and conditions agreed upon in negotiations." That's on page 74.

I've read all 74 pages, up to that point that's been signed. There's not one bit in there that actually refers to the content of the bill that the government has put forward. You will find that part about 10 pages further on. There's a salary schedule addendum. There are a couple of other small addenda. You get to page 85, way past the signed portion of the actual agreement. We're down in a bunch of addenda. We have there a small paragraph that actually isn't even signed. After that it goes on to an additional letter of understanding with regard to some other issues.

But we have this little addendum at the end here, that talks about the three-year April 1, 2019, wage reopener. It says, "The Parties shall commence negotiations . . . on the wages payable in Year 3 (April 1, 2019 to March 31, 2020) . . . no earlier than January 15, 2019."

In spite of the fact that we have the opposition continually bringing up that this government is trying to attack every aspect of the civil service, that we're trying to destroy democracy, that we're trying to create illegal agreements, in spite of all of this fearmongering and drama, literally, false passion and all the rest of it, what we actually have here, the part that the government bill actually refers to says simply – and I read it because I doubt that any of the opposition members have actually read it – that "the Parties agree that the only item open for negotiations shall be wages in the Salary Appendices . . ." Then it goes on to say a little bit farther down that "this reopener shall not be construed in any way as [actually] "opening the agreement" for negotiations on any other issues by either side."

So we have all of these things that they keep dragging forth as if we're attacking every aspect of the collective agreement, as if we want to destroy it, as if we want to tear it apart and shred it, an agreement that we're talking about that actually says that is not what's supposed to be happening. They say we haven't read it? They haven't read it.

Then it goes on a little bit further. It says that "any wage adjustment under this wage reopener shall be retroactive to April 1, 2019." I neglected to state at the beginning that this agreement actually doesn't even end until March 31, 2020. So all through this whole period of time the wages are going to continue in force, everybody is going to get paid, the entire collective agreement continues to exist just as it was – none of it can be reopened for negotiation by either side – and when it does finally get agreed to, it's all retroactive anyway. All of this drama and attack and nonsense is just almost unbelievable. It's fearmongering of the ultimate degree. I don't think that they've actually read their own agreement, because I have it in my hand and I'm reading from it.

Mr. Speaker, I just find it astounding, some of the things that have been said. I think that it truly is just meant to – I don't know. Maybe they still think they're campaigning. Maybe it's just because in their DNA they like to be revolutionaries. Maybe they just want to stir up opposition to this government in the hopes that somehow they will regain some sense of credibility. But I think they're just digging themselves a deeper and a deeper and a deeper hole. Because the agreement is still in force to its full effect until April 2020, as the government has said, we're simply asking for a delay in order to have a fair and an equitable opportunity to negotiate.

Now, I understand that everybody who goes into a negotiation wants to get the advantage on their side and wants to take the whole thing in a way that puts them in a favourable position against their opponent. I understand that, sure, they would like to be able to force the negotiations – actually, the arbitrator – prior to the government having the opportunity to understand where we're at. It would put them in a favourable negotiating position. But the truth of the matter is that we did actually, my understanding is, speak to the union leaders and ask for the opportunity to delay this a little bit. To their right, they chose not to. But then to turn around and say that we're bullying them and that we're overriding them and that we're running over top of them is completely ludicrous. It just simply isn't the case.

We have an agreement that will stay in force until March of 2020. We've simply asked to delay a couple of months so that we can have a fair and an equitable negotiating time. All this other drama, Mr. Speaker, is nothing but just drama.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has risen to provide a brief question or comment.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am always pleasantly surprised when you recognize me, and of course I will take the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's example of cautious phraseology when I choose my words in response to the remarks from the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

I want to thank the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka for his astute legal analysis of the collective agreements. I certainly will be making sure that my children don't ever attend a law school that this member intends to open up, Mr. Speaker, because this has been an incredible – an incredible – reading of the collective agreement, to suggest that it's no big deal to just scrap one part of the collective agreement, you know, that legislating, passing illegal legislation against the wishes of 200,000 public-sector workers is somehow not bullying.

You know, he doesn't understand why we would be upset except that it's in our nature to be revolutionaries. Certainly, on the topic of revolutionaries I wanted to remind the House that the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka in I believe it was the fall of 2017 warned this House that if we were to legalize cannabis, Mr. Speaker, that we would certainly be heading down the path to Communist revolution. I'm still waiting for the revolution to break to break out. I can certainly say that my own use of cannabis hasn't made me any more or less revolutionary than before, and I certainly don't see signs of that here in Alberta, broadly speaking.

Mr. Speaker, I also take offence at the member's suggestion that none of us have read the collective agreements. Certainly, as Minister of Advanced Education – and when I get to my regular speaking time, I will delve more deeply into this – I was continually apprised of the stated negotiations with a lot of the units that are listed here in the legislation: Alberta college of art and design, Athabasca University, Bow Valley College, Keyano College, Lakeland College, Lethbridge College. A lot of the workers that benefited from employment at agencies that I oversaw in my term as Minister of Advanced Education are definitely being targeted in this bill. If that has anything to do with, you know, the way that I have treated the members opposite, I'm sorry. If an apology will help stop this attack on the good workers of these educational institutions, then I would certainly offer that up.

I was continually apprised of the state of negotiations with all of these units, Mr. Speaker, so I'm more than well aware. Certainly, you know, I've been following this for years whereas the member just happened to flip through it here briefly while he was sitting here listening to debate in the last couple of minutes. For him to suggest that none of us are even aware of what's in the collective agreement is almost as ludicrous as his suggestion previously that legalizing cannabis would send Alberta down the road to Communist revolution.

Mr. Speaker, it's ridiculous to say that this is no big deal, that we're only – we're only – attacking one part of the collective agreement by passing illegal legislation here in this House, so why should we be concerned? You know, it's certainly indicative of the government's willingness to run roughshod over collective bargaining rights using the powers of the legislation that are given to them. Why would we be upset about that? Who could possibly understand why people would want a government that honours the contracts that it signs in good faith with 200,000 working Albertans?

Mr. Speaker, again, I'll just remind everybody in the House that I won't take any lectures from the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. I certainly won't be endorsing his law school if he ever chooses to open one.

The Speaker: Well, thank you, hon. member.

Is there anyone else wishing to speak to Bill 9? I see the hon. the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the time between the last speaker's comments and my opportunity to rise to speak to this debate, I had some further thoughts on this matter. You know, I know that we're only a few hours into debate and that there is much ground that has yet to be covered.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

I want to talk a little bit this evening about the impacts on rural Alberta that this legislation will have. Certainly, I want to talk about two issues related to rural Alberta. One is education and economic development, and the other is rural crime, Madam Speaker. On the topic of rural crime we've heard the members opposite on a number of occasions get up and talk about the rising epidemic of rural crime. Certainly, the UCP platform in the 2019 election had a couple of pages dedicated to talking about rural crime. You know, they tried to tell us that we didn't do enough even though we voted for an extra $50 million in the budget, that they refused to vote for. Of course, the election platform talks about how tough on crime they're going to be.

Yet here we have a government that's actually knowingly committing a crime. They know that this legislation is going to be illegal, and they know that throwing out the duly negotiated contracts with all of these organizations listed in the bill is illegal. It's interesting to me that a party that prides itself on being a government of law and order would so willingly break the law when it comes to contracts.

Mr. Ellis: Point of order, Madam.

The Acting Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Point of Order

Imputing Falsehoods against a Member

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Under 23(h), (i), and (j), certainly, to be so direct as to suggest that anyone in this Chamber is knowingly breaking the law, to suggest that anyone in Executive Council is knowingly breaking the law is completely ludicrous and is indeed false. These are "allegations against another Member," "imputes false or unavowed motives," and, certainly, "likely to create disorder" in the House.

I would argue, Madam Speaker, that the hon. member, who is certainly familiar with points of order – in fact, I would almost argue that he would probably have his own time out corner, if that was the case, because there have been so many points of order against him. I would just suggest and caution him to maybe choose other language than making accusations against any member in this government that they are breaking the law. I mean, I think there has been some leeway here, and I think that people in your position as the Speaker have provided that leeway, but to be so direct, as he has been, I think is completely outrageous. He certainly needs to withdraw those comments and apologize.

Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Madam Speaker, I don't think this is a point of order for a couple of reasons. Number one, throughout this whole evening we have talked about how this bill is unconstitutional and illegal, or breaking the law. The member did not identify any individual member as breaking the law or that their behaviour is. It's the government bringing forward a bill that is unconstitutional, which I will point out has been said by about 15 of my colleagues throughout the whole evening. Not once was that a point of order or did it cause disorder, yet it appears that the government has it out for the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and was even referenced by the hon. government whip when he said: look at the number of times that he's had points of order against him. That is irrelevant in an individual point of order. It's not a score that is being kept on individual members.

For that reason, it's not a point of order. It's a difference of opinion. I believe the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was merely referring to the fact that it is unconstitutional, and we will see that in the coming weeks should this bill pass in this House.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Speaker, the difference between what the Opposition House Leader just presented and what the chief government whip was presenting is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said that the government was committing a crime. The language changed significantly in that hon. member's presentation from what the Opposition House Leader just presented. Now, he may not have heard that – I don't know – but that is what he said, which is significantly different than what the Opposition House Leader just defended.

As for the concerns about the chief whip having it out for the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I can assure you that that is not the case, though I am shocked to hear that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is excited to hear that he gets more points of order found against him than anybody else in the Chamber. That could be his record that he can take away from this place, but certainly he should not be calling the government criminals.

The Acting Speaker: Do you have anything to add, hon. member, that's of relevance to the debate?

Mr. Dang: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South, and then that's it.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Very clearly – I would encourage you to check the Blues – the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did not use the words "committing a crime." It is very clear and there is a long history of precedent in this House that matters of opinion that are presented by members of this Assembly are actually matters of debate. In many cases, as the current Speaker of the Assembly has ruled many times, this House may be required to accept multiple versions of the facts. I really do believe that this is not a point of order.

Thank you.

1:00

The Acting Speaker: Well, thank you, hon. members. I was wondering when I took the chair if this was going to happen.

To be clear, there has been significant leeway in this House around this bill specifically and discussion around whether it is illegal or it is not. It has been recommended in the past that when these conversations are happening, it needs to be directed to government policy and directed at the government as a whole and not individuals. I did not hear the specifics around the term “criminal actions.” However, I am going to caution the member to rethink the debate and how you will continue to discuss this bill specifically. I would say at this point that it’s not a point of order.

The hon. member.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, I am also not a lawyer, so perhaps the difference between breaking the law and committing a crime is a difference that is lost on me, and I will be much more careful with my language. Certainly, I didn’t want to imply that the government is doing anything criminal, but I was absolutely clear that they are knowingly breaking the law.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I can say that with every confidence because, having sat in cabinet myself, I know that when legislation is brought forward, the lawyers that work for the public service provide advice to the members in cabinet on whether or not a law will be constitutional. Unless they’ve wholesale changed the legal staff in the public service, I am certain that the lawyers who are providing advice to cabinet did warn the members opposite in cabinet that it was unconstitutional. If they didn’t, Mr. Speaker, I would strongly advise them to hire different lawyers.

Anyway, it is bizarre to see the members opposite say that, you know, they’re not breaking the law, that all they are doing is delaying a date for arbitration from now until the end of October. If we were to draw and analogy to a criminal circumstance – to be clear, this is not a criminal circumstance – it would be like catching somebody who stole a car and then them explaining to the police officer that they didn’t steal it, that they were just borrowing it for a little while. That’s exactly what the government is trying to do with this legislation when they say it’s not illegal to break the collective bargaining agreements that they’re only seeking to delay.

It is illegal, and they are breaking the law in rural communities all across this province. They’re certainly breaking the law when it comes to, you know, the AUPE employees at the Lamont health care centre, the HSAA employees at the Lamont health care centre, and the Bethany Group. Alberta Innovates, I know, has a site in Vegreville, and they’re doing a lot of interesting things related to agricultural production, innovation there. Athabasca University represents a number of employees who live in the town of Athabasca. InnoTech, Keyano College, Lakeland College, Lethbridge College. Northern Lakes College has some 23 sites distributed all throughout northwestern Alberta. That affects employees in a number of ridings represented by government caucus members. Olds College, Red Deer College: those two institutions, Mr. Speaker, you’re well aware of the valuable contributions that they make to rural Alberta not just in the communities of Red Deer and Olds, but they also provide education services in towns like Ponoka and Stettler and Drumheller, for example, through the Campus Alberta central.

You know, it’s bewildering to me that the members opposite, of course, talk about what they’re doing to prevent law-breaking in rural communities, and then their ninth act of legislation breaks the law in a whole host of rural communities, but I guess it only matters that they’re breaking the laws that they don’t like whereas the people that they want to bring to justice are breaking the laws that they do like.

The further point is the valuable educational services that these institutions provide. Mr. Speaker, in my time as Minister of Advanced Education I had the opportunity to visit all of the colleges and universities that are listed here, and I know that the members who work at these institutions provide valuable services to the students as well as the faculty and administration at each of these institutions. Without them, they wouldn’t be able to conduct the teaching and research that provides such a valuable resource to citizens all across this province. Indeed, it’s really the rural colleges that stand to lose the most with labour unrest. Certainly, institutions like – I want to talk about Northern Lakes College because that’s certainly one of the institutions that’s doing a lot of good work in providing education for rural and indigenous students in northern Alberta. Mr. Speaker, most of the students that attend these colleges are attending the only postsecondary educational institution that’s available to them. Most of these students live in communities that are very, very far away from Edmonton and Calgary, and it’s almost impossible for those students to make the trip to Edmonton or Calgary to attend university or college in the big city for a whole host of reasons, cost being one of them, transportation barriers being another. Certainly, the culture shock of moving from their hometowns to a big city like Edmonton or Calgary is a big barrier for a lot of people to overcome.

So it’s critical that we be able to provide high-quality education to citizens in these communities. By the work of the people who are represented by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees in these institutions, they can get that education that they need to go on to become the trained workers and professionals that their communities rely on. Certainly, when I talked to lots of people at Northern Lakes College, the college has an aboriginal teacher education program that trains indigenous students from northern Alberta to become teachers, and that’s often the only way that many of these communities in northern Alberta can get teachers to come to their communities, by sending their own students to this college to take the training and then return home.

My concern is that by creating all of this labour unrest, by ripping up contracts and making this unconstitutional move to destroy collective bargaining with these agencies, it’s going to put students at risk, Mr. Speaker, and it’s going to have an impact on thousands of students, especially in rural Alberta, thousands of students who don’t have the means to get an education, who don’t have a lot of other opportunities for education. When those students lose that opportunity for education, then their whole communities lose out. I hate to think of how many classrooms are going to go without teachers because students have lost the opportunity to take the teacher training, that they’re going to not have people trained to be paramedics or licensed practical nurses or social workers because they’ve lost the opportunity to receive that kind of education at these institutions because the members opposite have decided to agitate the workers and create all of this labour unrest by making this unconstitutional move.

In a time when, certainly, rural Albertans have borne the brunt of the economic downturn and certainly have a disadvantage when it comes to receiving higher education, it makes no sense to be weakening the higher education system in the very communities that stand to gain the most from a strong higher education system, Mr. Speaker. I don’t understand how the members opposite can run around claiming to be champions of rural Alberta education and rural economic development when they’re attacking the very foundations of education and rural economic development in their very own communities. I hope that the members opposite take the opportunity to reflect on this, go back to their communities, and talk to their constituents about the value of the education that is provided by these institutions and the possible negative consequences that the students who attend those institutions would suffer if they create the kind of labour unrest that they seem to be intent on creating through passing this legislation. I can tell you from my own experience that rural Alberta communities will be hit hardest, and it will have a significant, lengthy impact on those communities that it will take a long time to recover from.

I don't know, Mr. Speaker, how much time I have left. I just want to make a pitch for Lakeland College in particular. I've got one minute. I know that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed is a good friend of the Premier of Saskatchewan. I would urge him to talk to the Premier of Saskatchewan and get the government of Saskatchewan to fund Lakeland College. We have a lot of Saskatchewan students who pay domestic tuition to Lakeland College, and of course we know that the operating budget of that institution is funded entirely by the people of Alberta. I don't think that that's fair.

So if they're looking for ways to cut the budgets of institutions, I would hope that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and his fellows on Executive Council would reach out to the government of Saskatchewan and ask them to pony up for the high-quality education that has been provided to many citizens of Saskatchewan at a reduced cost due to the generosity of the people of Alberta for years and years and maybe ask them to reach into their own pockets and pay for the education of Saskatchewan students and not take that money out of the pockets of the AUPE workers who are providing those critical services to the students who are learning and will contribute so much to the fabric of this province and the province of Saskatchewan.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: I was just riveted by what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has been talking about and his plea for Lakeland College, and I do believe that he probably has a lot more that he could say requesting government to advocate for the many, many different agreements that are going to be impacted by this. I think that it's really important that he get to continue talking about his concerns and be able to express our general concern with where this bill is going. With that, I would like the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to continue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. I was struggling to find how it was relevant to the debate, but perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar will be able to ensure that his pleas are also relevant to the debate that's before us.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm a little bit hurt that you would suggest that my comments weren't relevant to debate. You know, I will try to make it as relevant as I can.

Obviously, the government is looking for a place to make money, right? Rather than reaching into the pockets of the hard-working people who provide educational services, support services at Lakeland College, they could call up the Premier of Saskatchewan and say: "Hey, we're educating your students at no cost to you right now. Do you think that's fair?" Of course, I think built on the strong relationships that are clearly evident between the Member for Calgary-Lougheed and the current Premier of Saskatchewan, perhaps there would be a fruitful resolution to that issue, and they wouldn't have to reach into the pockets of the AUPE workers who are there at Lakeland College.

I wanted to talk a little bit about, you know, some other examples of valuable educational opportunities that are put at risk by this legislation. And thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for her question. I remember fondly visiting the campus of Lethbridge College, where they have a wind turbine installation program, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, during the time of our government Alberta became a continent leader in investment in wind energy, and the demand for people with the training to go to work in the wind sector was going through the roof. That will likely change since the members opposite are ideologically opposed to wind, other than the wind that's generated by their own members.

You know, we need to move to a renewable energy sector as quickly as we can. Certainly, I would agree with the Pope, who has also told us that we need to move to a renewable energy economy as quickly as possible. Lethbridge College is training a number of people to be able to go to work in that sector. If we create this labour unrest that the members opposite are intent to create with this very legislation that we're talking about, that puts not just the students' education at risk but Alberta's ability to move to a renewable energy economy at risk. We don't know how many potential wind turbine technicians we're going to lose as a result of this bill, Mr. Speaker.

You know, I know that I won't find too many sympathetic ears when it comes to renewable energy, but I certainly hope that we would find some sympathetic ears when it comes to fossil fuel development. I can certainly speak to the excellent work that Keyano College does in training the power engineers and other related technicians who are required to work in the oil sands industry in Fort McMurray. There is no better place to learn about working in that industry than Keyano College. They've invested significant resources in developing their ability to train people to go to work in the oil sands industry. That industry will also be put at risk because of the government's intent to create labour unrest at that institution, Mr. Speaker, and I think that that's a shame.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, if I might just provide a comment prior to calling the Government House Leader. I think that it's fair – when the Speaker makes an error in the Chamber, he'll be happy to apologize. Certainly, those comments were relevant, and my interjection was unwarranted.

I see the hon. Government House Leader rising. I'm happy to hear what his . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: I'm confused, Mr. Speaker, if you're asking me something. I wasn't following. I'm intending to speak.

The Speaker: You have no opportunity to speak because you've already . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Because I already moved it. Yes; you're right. Correct.

The Speaker: If you're intending to speak to the bill, you are unable to do so as you moved the previous question. If you are perhaps moving a motion that I was unaware of, I recognize you to do so.

If there are any other members that wish to speak to the bill, now would be your opportunity to do so. I see that the hon. Member for Calgary-West has risen.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, Bill 9 – I've been listening intently to the opposition as they have argued their case per se.

You know, I've certainly had an opportunity even to talk with my friend here from Leduc-Beaumont, who is a former police officer as well and somebody that was part of an association, both he and I, although one in Edmonton and one in Calgary. Certainly, we were part of collective bargaining agreements. We were somewhat reminiscing and talking about how there had been times where for two – I think in his case he mentioned two years. I think in my case I remember anywhere from two to three years where we were without a collective bargaining agreement and were still in negotiations with the city at that particular time.

You know, I reminisced with him as far as: what did we do? Well, we put our nose down and we just continued to work. At some point the agreement would eventually be reached and then there would be some form of compensation that would be paid back to us over a period of time, but that's just part of the process.

On Bill 9, to sit there and reflect and go, "You know what? We are looking for a few months after the complete fiscal disaster that the NDP had left us in so that we have an understanding of what the books are, the way the layout of the economy is" is not unreasonable. In fact, for them to insinuate or suggest that they have somehow, we'll say, carte blanche or some sort of ownership over all public-sector workers is completely false. I know full well many public-sector workers who are constituents, who are friends, who are people I've known for well over 20 years who do not support in any way the NDP.

I myself am a police officer. The gentleman from Leduc-Beaumont is a police officer. The hon. minister here just to my left is a social worker. Well, big surprise; we have a teacher over here from Drayton Valley-Devon. We have construction businesspeople. We have a carpenter, I learned only today, right? I mean, these are working-class people that understand the situation that the NDP has left us in, and that is why we had a victory on April 16, an overwhelming mandate from the people of Alberta with well over 55 per cent of the vote. That was a clear mandate saying that we want fiscal responsibility and we want restraint on spending. That's not unreasonable. To ask for a few months, just a few months, for us to take a look at this complete mess that we have been left is not an unreasonable ask from the people of this province.

When I take a look at this bill – you know, I know that we've had fun with our friend who is the Opposition House Leader when he was referred to as, in jest, the minister of one job, during the previous Legislature – I look at this bill as being almost three times larger than his bill, which was his job-description bill. I say that in jest with him. Certainly, we have talked offline.

I just want to reflect back when I reflect on Bill 9. Again, the comment on the people in this Chamber – you know, I cannot speak for the folks in the opposition, but I can speak for the hard-working people that spent months and months talking, door after door, to constituent after constituent. Certain cases and certain constituencies had unprecedented numbers – unprecedented numbers – of people who purchased memberships with the United Conservative Party to support this vision of bringing the Wildrose Party and the Progressive Conservative Party together. Again, things that were completely unprecedented. This did not happen by chance. This was not a fluke. This was hard work that was done at a grassroots level. So when we sit here and talk about asking for just a few months' grace – that's it, a few months' grace – to look at the disaster that has been placed in front of Treasury Board and Finance and has been placed in front of this government is again something, Mr. Speaker, that is not at all unreasonable.

You know, I know that there are always these references to – I heard references about rural crime. Look, I mean, we worked hard. We worked hard in putting together a rural crime report. We went and talked to not just constituents, but we went out. Myself being from an urban riding, I remember going to your constituency, Mr. Speaker – and I think it was Three Hills – and talking to the frustrated people. We questioned the government. Where were they at the time? Where were they? They didn't go to any of these town hall meetings. I heard references earlier about listening to rural Albertans. Well, rural Albertans, they spoke, and they spoke very clearly on April 16, and that's why you see the majority that you see in the House that represents a good portion of rural Alberta.

Mr. Jason Nixon: All of it.

Mr. Ellis: All. In fact, you're right. You're right, sir. Right? I mean, unless somebody can correct me, I think all of rural Alberta is part of the United Conservative Party. Again, that's something that is, I would say, to be almost unprecedented. Certainly, if somebody wants to look up the numbers on that – but the point is that we went.

We talked to constituents. We went to these town halls, you know, and these people have an understanding – an understanding – of what needed to be done. They knew – they knew – that there were going to be some tough decisions because of the massive fiscal hole that we have been left. As our Premier has stated, I think publicly, the numbers are bad. The numbers are really, really bad, and I'm sure at some point we're going to have that day where those numbers are going to be released. This is important. It's important. I see members of Executive Council here. I see our Premier in the wee hours of the morning, according to my watch 1:30 in the morning. We're here because we care. We care about Alberta. We care about the hole that was left by the previous government.

I know it was discussed already earlier about the history of Alberta, the history, you know, over a hundred years. We had one government that was there for 44 years. Another government was there for 36 years. Other governments were there for longer. It was unprecedented that we would have a one-term government. Unprecedented. It was given a clear mandate during the last election to have the fiscal responsibility to look at the books, and that's really what we're doing right now with Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act. It gives us an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to look at where we are, how we got there, and we have a fantastic panel, what I would call a blue-ribbon panel, led by a former NDP Finance minister, right? Like, are they criticizing that, a former NDP Finance minister, right? They're going to come back with these recommendations. They're going to find out where we are as far as the previous government, the hole that they left us in.

This is something that, Mr. Speaker, is important to Albertans. It's important to Albertans as to where we are, but also it's important to Albertans as to how we got to where we are and also a plan as to where we're going. That's important. To sit there and to take a prudent approach, to sit there and be cautious: there's nothing wrong with that. That's reasonable, right? It's all we're asking: common sense, reason; slow things down; proceed with caution. We cannot have an open chequebook where we're just writing cheques. It's just not fiscally responsible.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to close my remarks, and I certainly thank you very much for your time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, and I see that the hon. Government House Leader has risen.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me, and thank you to the hon. government whip for his comments. I note the time, so I will try to be brief with the time that I have. I just wanted to point out a couple of things after listening to the debate for the last six hours this evening. I'd be curious about the chief whip's thoughts on this. It's been interesting to listen to the opposition members get up in this Assembly all night and last night as well and say that closure had been brought in on them, on this legislation, that they weren't going to be able to debate this legislation, and that they were being capped at one hour. I heard some of the members say that, that they couldn't speak to the bill and that this was a big affront to democracy. I feel that it's important to be clear to the Chamber what has taken place.

First of all, last night in this Chamber until about 3, 3:15 in the morning the opposition debated this piece of legislation for just over eight hours and this evening have now reach about six hours, which is a total of 14 hours, and we're only on second reading of the legislation. That's significantly longer than one hour. In addition to that, 22 members of the 24-member opposition caucus have spoken to this legislation so far on second reading alone.

Mr. Kenney: I thought we weren't letting them speak.

Mr. Jason Nixon: If we weren't letting them speak, that's quite shocking. I don't know how you can make that argument with a straight face in this Chamber, though. We've watched them for 14 hours make the argument that they've only been here for one hour, and we've watched them for 14 hours as each and every one of the opposition got up one after another and said that they weren't being allowed to speak. It's kind of bizarre, Mr. Speaker, but that was their approach to this legislation. That is their right, to be able to approach debate however they want. It's their right to be able to communicate in this House. Whether they're communicating effectively or not: I won't judge on that.

But here's the reality. I have not as the Government House Leader moved a closure or time allocation motion on second reading, and I sense that it is about to pass second reading this evening. I will see what happens. I think the vote is imminent without a time allocation motion before the House. In fact, I would note for the House, with two members of the opposition caucus who still haven't spoken to it, that they're welcome to speak to it when we yield the floor here shortly, but what will likely happen here in a few short minutes is that you will call the question, second reading will take place after two votes, and off this legislation will proceed through the House. Again, we have two opposition members left that are welcome to speak to the bill if they like with no time allocation motion on the table. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-South, I think, continued to say that time allocation had been moved. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there has been no time allocation motion moved.

Lastly, just a reminder: 14 hours of debate so far, and we're not done on this legislation. It's important to us to be able to make sure that all members have an opportunity to debate this important motion. Again, as we move through to the next stages, I would encourage the members of the opposition to focus more on actually debating the bill that is in front of our House instead of spending their time trying to say that they're not being allowed to debate for 15 or 20 minutes while they're discussing that they're not allowed to debate. I think that's pretty fair, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I look forward to seeing if I'm correct in that the vote is imminent.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-West, there's approximately a minute and 25 seconds left.

Mr. Ellis: Well, wonderful. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for allowing me the opportunity to have a final word here. You know, I concur with what the hon. Government House Leader has said. It's been 14 hours' worth of debate, so to suggest in any way that there hasn't been an ample amount of time to talk about this – you know, when we listen here, the vast majority is not necessarily debate about the bill itself. The vast majority of the time, of the 15 minutes being used by each member, is usually in reference to a suggestion that they've only had an hour's worth of debate. We respectfully disagree with that opinion, right?

Mr. Jason Nixon: It's a fact.

Mr. Ellis: I agree. Yes, the facts do disagree with what has actually happened.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you again for the opportunity. Again, Bill 9 is just a simple way to allow the government, the Executive Council, to take a look at the books, to give our Finance minister an opportunity to look at the fiscal mess that has been presented before him.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any others wishing to speak to the previous question on Bill 9?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the previous question carried]

Amen.

Members' Statements

Democracy and Parliamentary Debate

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, what is democracy? Democracy is the vital concept that underpins our great province's system of government. Democracy is what allows 4.3 million Albertans, each with their own unique views, to live with one another in peace and prosperity.

To most of us democracy means free and fair elections on a regular schedule, and to be sure, that is a key part of it, but another part of democracy is the idea that those who are victorious in any election will govern well, not just for those who supported them but for all. Democracy also means having the ability to present alternative viewpoints to the government of the day. Some might even argue that it's this last part, having an official space for differing views, that is the real distinction between democracies and dictatorships. As we all know, many countries that toil under dictatorial leaders still have so-called elections.

It is, therefore, the lengthy debates that we have in this House and the ability of the opposition to suggest alternatives to the government's course that truly make up our democracy. That is why I'm so thoroughly disappointed by the recent actions of this government, Mr. Speaker. The recent decision by this government to pre-emptively shut down debate on Bill 9 is not just bad etiquette, but it quite literally constitutes an assault on our democracy itself.

I can understand that the government members may not like to hear the opposition explain to them the ways in which Bill 9 breaks the law and how eventually the Supreme Court of Canada will undo Bill 9's disregard for collectively bargained contracts, but it is the ability to speak these truths to power that make our province a democracy, Mr. Speaker.

While this government is free to bring forward as much deeply flawed legislation as they wish, I would ask them to recognize that their recent actions to pre-emptively shut down debate take them to an even worse low. There have been plenty of flawed pieces of legislation in this place, Mr. Speaker, but it is the debate itself that allows us to call this province a democracy, and I ask the government to get back to honouring their oath and maintaining it as such.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

International Day for the Elimination of Sexual Violence in Conflict

Ms Glasgo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise and acknowledge June 19 as the International Day for the Elimination of Sexual Violence in Conflict. This date was chosen to commemorate the implementation of Security Council Resolution 1820, in which the council condemned sexual violence as a tactic of war, an impediment to peace building. The term "conflict-related sexual violence" refers to rape, sexual slavery, forced prostitution, forced pregnancy, forced abortion, forced sterilization, forced marriage, and any other form of sexual violence perpetrated against women, men, girls, or boys that is indirectly linked to a conflict.

The year 2019 marks the 10-year anniversary of the establishment of the mandate of the special representative of the UN Secretary-General on sexual violence and conflict. Over the past decade there has been a fundamental shift in the understanding of conflict-related sexual violence as a threat to international peace and security. Threats of sexual violence leave entire communities of potential victims living in fear. This fear is used as a weapon by occupying forces to pacify the population and reinforce their grip on the community. This year's International Day for the Elimination of Sexual Violence in Conflict will call for a survivor-centered approach that builds the resilience of affected individuals while minimizing the risk of retraumatization, social alienation, and stigma. No individual should be subjected to the kind of trauma these individuals are subjected to in conflict zones every single day.

Our United Conservative government stands in support with the victims of sexual assault and sexual violence, whether it's here in Alberta or anywhere in the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May God bless the victims of these tragedies.

Government Policies

Mr. Dang: Team Angry, Mr. Speaker. That's what the government likes to sling at the Official Opposition when they've run out of insults. [interjections] Now, the government thinks that's degrading for some reason.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is a long-standing tradition of absolutely no heckling during Members' Statements. I'd ask that the hon. member have the opportunity to restart the clock to two minutes, and he can begin again should he wish.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you. Team Angry. That's what the government likes to sling at the Official Opposition when they've run out of insults and heckles. Now, the government thinks that's degrading for some reason. But, Mr. Speaker, I am angry.

I'm angry because this is a government which has no respect for Albertans or democracy. I'm angry because this is a government that decided to introduce Bill Hate, a bill which directly targets LGBTQ2S-plus kids and destroys GSAs. I'm angry because this government introduced legislation to break the law and attack the rights of workers. I am angry that this government is picking the pockets of everyday families to give a 4 and a half billion dollar tax break to their wealthy friends. I'm angry because this government is moving forward with risky ideological P3s that will hurt education and health care all across this province. I'm angry that this government doesn't tell the truth when it comes to their risky ideological privatization towards American-style health care. I'm angry that this government is cutting the minimum wage of young Albertans. It said, quote, people of modest human capital don't need to be paid fairly.

I'm angry that this government has protected and stood by candidates and party members who are white supremacists, racists, and who have compared the pride flag to a swastika. I'm angry that this government's House leader fired a woman for reporting sexual harassment and then was promoted. I'm angry that this government is trying to reopen long-settled issues like women's rights and reproductive rights. I am angry that this government hides from the media, refuses to answer questions of the public, and doesn't tell the truth to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, when the government calls us Team Angry, I want them to know that they're right. I am angry. I'm angry on behalf of all Albertans and all of those who were misled by this government. I'm angry because I know how important it is for us to keep fighting for the rights of our constituents. I will never stop standing up against injustices committed by this government.

Thank you. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Kiwanis Club of Calgary Centennial

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to rise in the House to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Kiwanis Club of Calgary. The Kiwanis Club is an international organization, with over 550,000 Kiwanians, dedicated to improving the lives of children one community at a time. The Kiwanis Club in Alberta began in Calgary and was founded by a group of World War I veterans on this very day in 1919. One of the most well-known Kiwanis Club initiatives is Kamp Kiwanis, which finds its home just east of Bragg Creek in the heart of our beautiful provincial riding of Banff-Kananaskis.

When I look back on my life growing up, some of my favourite childhood memories stem from attending summer camp year after year. Summer camp provided me and my friends the opportunity to get out in nature and just be kids while also learning independence while living away from our parents for a week. I was fortunate to have the opportunity to attend summer camp for many years of my life and eventually went on to become a camp counsellor for two summers. But not every child has the opportunity I had, and that is why Kamp Kiwanis exists.

Kamp Kiwanis is specifically for children from underprivileged or disadvantaged backgrounds. Every child who attends Kamp Kiwanis is one hundred per cent subsidized, allowing children who would not normally get to experience the joys of summer camp the gift of doing so. Last year 546 children between grades 4 and 12 were given the privilege of attending camp, all thanks to the work that the Kiwanis Club of Calgary and their generous donors do. Kamp Kiwanis also hosts an outdoor school and rents their facilities out to other community groups to run programs out of. Between all the services they offer, Kamp Kiwanis welcomes over 11,000 campers, students, and community members every single year. Kamp Kiwanis is a wonderful initiative, and I am proud to have them operate in my riding.

Today I hope all members of this House can join me in congratulating the Kiwanis Club of Calgary on 100 years well served and thousands of lives touched.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

ATCO Sale of Electric Power Plants

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was in Hanna this morning, and I'm happy to report that it absolutely poured, so this member's statement will not be about the pending drought.

I was in Hanna to meet with community leaders and the current and soon-to-be owners of the Sheerness and Battle River generating stations. ATCO has a pending sale of these assets, along with nine others, to Energy Capital Partners based out of New Jersey. The new Canadian entity will be dubbed Heartland Generation Ltd. Energy Capital Partners is a major top 10 power generator in the U.S. For context, Mr. Speaker, they own 27 gigawatts of generation while the entire grid in Alberta is approximately 10. They also own Calpine, the largest natural gas power-generation company in the United States. They purchased this suite of generating facilities from ATCO because they believe them to be best in class with strong growth opportunities.

The coal-to-gas conversion will continue at both Sheerness and Battle River. Engineering and equipment manufacturing is under way, and construction will begin in July for Battle River 5 and October for Sheerness. Both facilities will be able to co-fire – that is, burn a blend of gas and coal – by March of next year. Between March 2020 and the spring of 2022, the decision of how much to burn of gas or coal will be largely economic. By 2022 firm gas contracts will be in place, and the full weight of the accelerated coal phase-out will be felt by these communities.

The silver lining for me is that we have a company that wants to be here, will base its headquarters in Calgary, has promised to keep the same faces in the same roles, and is focused on the future and growth. However, it is lost on no one that the made-in-Alberta carbon tax accelerated this transition and cost communities like Hanna and Forestburg a hefty toll. The previous government demanded that these communities transition rapidly away from coal. We as a province are left with American-owned infrastructure and an Alberta grid that continues to import coal-fired power from other jurisdictions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie is rising to make a statement.

Grande Prairie Regional Hospital Construction

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the Assembly today to report on the progress of the Grande Prairie regional hospital build. Originally approved in 2010, this project has been problematic, to say the least, and has cost Albertans far too much in delays and cost overruns. My commitment to the constituents of Grande Prairie is twofold: to regularly visit the site and personally ensure that progress is ongoing and to meet with stakeholders from the project to learn what went wrong at each stage and compile that learning to save taxpayer funds on future infrastructure projects. In short, I want to get this hospital completed and open to serve Albertans, and I want to ensure that the lessons from this project are learned and the mistakes are not repeated.

It was timely, then, on June 7 to host the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and the hon. Minister of Finance as well as the Member for Central Peace-Notley at the hospital build site in Grande Prairie for a tour and a review of the next steps to get this project finally completed. The directive is clear: we need this hospital completed as soon as possible, and we need to deliver a quality facility to the people of the Grande Prairie area, who have been more than patient. As we toured with site leaders, it was encouraging to see such a positive and productive work site, including as many as 450 construction personnel, and to witness their focus on timely completion and the highest calibre of workmanship.

When completed, the Grande Prairie regional hospital will provide a wide range of health care services, including surgery, cancer care, and emergency services. The new hospital will include a state-of-the-art cancer centre, with two new radiation vaults, and will serve as a health care training facility in partnership with Grande Prairie Regional College.

This facility is long overdue, and my constituents have raised their concerns over the project with me repeatedly, so I want to take this opportunity to highlight this project as an identified priority for this government and for myself as the MLA for Grande Prairie.

On behalf of the city of Grande Prairie thank you to the ministers as well as the member for taking the time to join me on this tour.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Bill 11

Fair Registration Practices Act

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move first reading of Bill 11, the Fair Registration Practices Act.

This bill introduces measures to ensure that regulated professions are governed by registration practices that are transparent, objective, impartial, and fair. This includes the creation of a fair registration practices office. This office will work with trade and professional licensing bodies to streamline, simplify, and accelerate foreign credential recognition, with the goal of giving applicants for licensure an interim decision within six months or less of their application. This legislation enables the government to work collaboratively with regulatory bodies to ensure that best practices are followed and that organizations fulfill their requirements as laid out in the act. With this proposed legislation we will remove unfair barriers while maintaining the high professional standards all Albertans have come to know and expect.

We're heard from many newcomers who are underemployed and unable to contribute to our economy at their skill level. All too often this is because they are waiting for months, even years for their credentials to be recognized. This delay not only impacts newcomers to our province; it also hurts our economy. We are inviting skilled immigrants to Alberta because their skills are in demand, and then due to unnecessary delays these skilled newcomers are not able to get to work in their profession. By introducing this legislation, we will create a win-win situation for newcomers as well as Alberta as their skills help to grow and diversify our economy. Bill 11 will speed up the process where possible, maintain high professional standards, and increase fairness and transparency. This is a key part of our fairness for newcomers plan to reduce red tape, reignite the economy, and get all Albertans back to work.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite copies of a tabling that I am making right now in regard to the Sherwood Park UCP constituency office, a fundraising letter that was sent out using the title of the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction, which was dated on June 10.

I also have the requisite copies of a report, Supervised Injection Services: What Has Been Demonstrated? A Systematic Literature Review.

And another report: Reports of Needles Have Dropped Since Opening of Edmonton's Supervised Consumption Sites.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I have the appropriate number of copies of a news article from the Canadian Press cautiously welcoming yesterday's TMX approval. Jack Mintz, the tax policy and economics expert, echoed our Premier's comments yesterday. He said, "I think the champagne corks will come out if there's a feeling there won't be legal challenges that can stop the pipeline from being built." All my constituents are really concerned about the opposition from the NDP Premier, NDP leader . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. You've already tabled the document.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I have tablings today. Yesterday in the House, while speaking to Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining bill, I referenced a Financial Post article written by Drew Hasselback, November 13, 2014, entitled Supreme Court of Canada Imposes General Duty of Good Faith in Contract Performance, which underlines the obligations of all contractors, including governments, including the Alberta government, to be honest in their performance of their execution of contracts and to do so in good faith. I have five copies.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have another story which is part of the CBC news series entitled In Our Backyard. This one is called How Climate Change Is Thawing the "Glue That Holds the Northern Landscape Together."

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a document here called Simply Having a Gay Straight Alliance Reduces Suicide Risk for All Students. In schools with GSAs heterosexual boys were half as likely to attempt suicide. I have the requisite five copies.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Bill 9 Debate Time

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The UCP are ramming through their bad-faith bargaining bill at a breakneck speed. They have invoked time allocation at all three levels of debate, and that's something the Legislature library confirms hasn't happened in nearly 30 years. It's just ridiculous. What's more is that this bill is designed purely to gut the wages of teachers, nurses, and many more. To the Premier: why have you put a muzzle on this House? What are you afraid of?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I reject completely the premise of the question. First of all, closure has not been used. In fact, at second reading of Bill 9 I believe there's been 13 hours or 16 hours of debate. Twenty-two members of the opposition were able to speak. If that's closure, I can't imagine what an open-ended debate is. We're happy to hear from members of the opposition, but our commitment is to ensure that we get back to fiscal balance. That means getting all the information on the table, which the MacKinnon commission will be providing us with before we can proceed with correct information on the wage reopeners.

Ms Hoffman: It's the end of the school year, Mr. Speaker. Our teachers are focused on marking exams, filling out report cards, looking forward to a well-earned break, and now this government is attempting to ram through legislation that guts their wages before they've even had a chance to consider what the impacts will be. To the Premier: will you commit to actually bargaining with teachers and other workers and promise here and now that you will never impose a contract on them?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate but hardly surprising that the NDP anger machine continues to try to mislead Albertans with their tactics of fear and smear, precisely the tactics that were so resoundingly rejected on April 16. There is nothing in this bill about reducing anybody's wages. The collective bargaining agreements continue. This simply seeks a few months in order for the government to get adequate information to proceed to the wage reopeners in a way that is responsible and fully informed by the facts.

Ms Hoffman: The question was a simple one, Mr. Speaker. Will you commit that you will never impose an agreement on teachers that they actually haven't bargained and agreed to? The government has also cut the ability to bring amendments to the bill, and trust us: we want to amend it. This bill gives government both the ability to rip up contracts with public-sector workers and to impose contracts on those workers without even having to return to this House. That's right. The Premier wants to screw workers over and won't even look them in the eye while he's doing it. To the Premier: why are you such a coward?

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. member, it sounded a lot to me like you called the Premier a coward. I'm pretty sure that would be considered to be unparliamentary. I'll invite you to withdraw and apologize for such a comment.

Ms Hoffman: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I certainly shouldn't have said, "Why are you being such a coward?" I should have said: why are you acting like such a coward? I apologize. I shouldn't have called him that specifically.

Bill 9 Debate Time (continued)

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the schoolyard bully tactics are not going to prevent this government from keeping our commitment to Albertans to restore the province's finances to balance after the fiscal catastrophe of the NDP's $100 billion debt plan. Now, Bill 9 very simply and very clearly is limited to giving the government a little bit more time to receive all of the facts about the NDP's fiscal catastrophe so we know what we're dealing with when we sit down and negotiate in good faith with our public-sector unions.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education can't keep her stories straight. Whether it be enrolment funding – the Finance minister finally bailed her out there; we're really glad about that – whether it be the GSA bill, saying that it's the strongest legislation in the country – it's not – you name it, she changes her mind every day. Yesterday during interim supply I finally got a straight answer from the minister. I asked the minister if the classroom improvement fund our government introduced and the 400 teachers it adds to the classroom would be extended this fall. She said it wouldn't. To the minister: will you confirm once more to this House that the 400 teachers aren't important to you or your government?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, of course teachers are important to this government. My dad was a teacher. The Minister of Education worked for years as an elected member of her local school board, as president of her provincial school board trustees' association.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I need to come back to the previous question, where the member said that the government wasn't allowing amendments on Bill 9. Of course, that's absolutely ridiculous. The opposition and any member can bring forward amendments at report stage, and they'll be considered by the whole House, as is normal in any parliamentary democracy.

Ms Hoffman: Well, not in second reading, Mr. Speaker.

The classroom improvement fund was critical for adding teacher support staff and programs for students with complex needs. Those were 400 teachers. That description was pulled right from the Alberta Education website. The school board this minister represented just last year, Red Deer Catholic, would have had another $1.2 million to help students this fall. I'm sure that all the Calgary caucus members will be concerned to know that nearly $20 million will be cut from Calgary public and Catholic boards alone by cancelling CIF. To the minister: can you explain why students with complex needs will be left behind so you can fund a $4.5 billion tax giveaway to wealthy corporations?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the government has been clear that enrolment growth in the upcoming school year will be fully funded. At the same time, we are going to work with school boards, teachers, administrators to ensure that we're able to deliver high-quality public education more efficiently. The $100 billion NDP debt is what really jeopardizes the future of our public services, including public education. They want to burden that generation of students with massive higher taxes through debt that has to be repaid with interest. We're not going to do that.

Ms Hoffman: Yesterday in interim supply the Minister of Education said that the classroom improvement fund would be gone this upcoming year. That's 400 teachers, Mr. Speaker. That is absolutely not what the Premier just said. Who's right: the Minister of Education or the Premier? Clearly they're not on the same page. Maybe the Finance minister needs to straighten things out again.

Mr. Kenney: Again, Mr. Speaker, we have the biggest spending public education system in Canada in per capita terms. We have the highest paid teachers in Canada in per capita terms. [interjections] This government is going to continue funding enrolment growth. None of those facts will be changed by the anger machine angrily heckling in this Assembly. What we will do, however, is ensure the future of our public services, including education, by bringing balance back to the province's finances. We will not jeopardize the future of those services by spending billions of dollars on debt interest to the bankers and bondholders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora for the third question.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been nine days since the Finance minister announced that the government would fully fund enrolment, and I want to thank him again for the doing what the Education minister refused to do. Unfortunately, we still can't get an answer from this Education minister on what it really means. Districts like Foothills school district have to make choices now, and they're being forced to guess. Does the minister know how many teachers are being laid off in the Foothills school district while she hems and haws?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I know that the New Democrats don't just see their opponents as opponents. There's this terrible tendency to demonize their opponents. They seem particularly uncomfortable with strong Conservative women like the hon. the Minister of Education, who's doing a fantastic job in this place to keep our platform commitments to high-quality public education, the funding levels of which we will maintain or increase, while also respecting our wonderful tradition of school choice in Alberta. We stand with our tremendous Minister of Education.

Ms Hoffman: That would be easier to believe if the Premier would actually let her speak when I ask her a question. The Member for Livingstone-MacLeod might want to know the answer to that question. It's at least 10 teachers and 20 educational assistants that are losing their jobs in Foothills on top of losses through attrition.

Let's try another. Does the minister know the consequences of her bungling of the Education budget for Banff's public schools?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the opposition attacked me when I wasn't here to answer questions because I was trying to bring investment to Alberta. Now they attack me for answering questions in the place. But, you know, it's perfect, because all they really know how to do is to attack. While they attack, while they denigrate, while they engage in ad hominem attacks, particularly against the women in these benches, we instead are focused on growing, on building, and on strengthening the Alberta economy and our public services.

Ms Hoffman: I think that asking a question about how many teachers are being laid off is a fair and reasonable question, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Banff-Kananaskis probably should have asked this question, but let me make sure that I tell her the answer. The answer is that staff morale is in the tank. They're cutting the music teacher from the elementary school, half the teachers at the elementary school are going to be new, and most of them will be on temporary contracts because they are worried that cuts are going to be even deeper in the fall.

Boards are bracing for the worst, Mr. Speaker, and this minister is doing nothing. Is the minister ready to stop her messaging and admit to her own caucus that she has no idea about the chaos that she's creating in her local school districts, or does she enjoy causing stress for . . .

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the full outrage from the NDP anger machine does not change the facts that this government was elected on a commitment to maintain or increase funding levels for public education and that we have committed to increasing enrolment growth next year. We've also committed to bringing our province's finances back to balance, to stop the NDP's reckless dive towards $100 billion in debt. [interjection] I'm being heckled now by the most incompetent former Finance minister in Alberta history, who ran the largest per capita deficit in the country. We're going to stop that disastrous record.

Energy Industry Update

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's start with jobs and the economy. Energy company Repsol has announced that they're laying off hundreds of staff from their downtown Calgary office as well as their Alberta field offices. Clearly, they haven't gotten the message from this Premier that Alberta is open for business. Perhaps it's because he hasn't done a thing to create jobs except hand out big tax giveaways to wealthy corporations and pray that in a few years it generates jobs. Clearly, Repsol wasn't sold. To the Premier: how many more companies will fire workers while we wait to see if your risky gamble pays off?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate news for the workers at Repsol here in Canada. I can tell you that I met with the CEO of Repsol last year. The Premier refused to meet with him, but I did as Leader of the Opposition, and he explained to me how the damaging policies of the NDP were jeopardizing the future of that company in this province. We inherited the worst economic record of any government since the Great Depression. We are doing everything we can to turn that around by restoring investor confidence and creating jobs in Alberta, but it won't happen overnight after four years of catastrophic economic mismanagement.

Mr. Sabir: Earlier this month oil company Nexen also announced it was laying off a hundred Calgary workers. Neither of these companies seem to be endorsing this Premier's plan. Certainly, firing workers indicates otherwise. To the Premier: have you tried to sell Repsol or Nexen on your much-touted platform? Perhaps this is something useful that your war room could do?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to report to this House that last week I met with major global investors in the energy sector and in other sectors who are profoundly interested in new investments in Alberta precisely because of the job-creation strategy of this government. One global CEO was telling me that his company was getting close to a positive final investment decision on a prospective $10 billion investment here precisely because of the job-creation tax cut enshrined in Bill 3, that I hope will be passed into law soon in this Legislature.

Mr. Sabir: One way to protect jobs while we wait for TMX and other pipelines to be built is to move oil by rail. This government is still claiming that it will rip up the contracts we signed that would move 120,000 barrels per day. The minister hasn't been able to tell us how many barrels he has secured in the private sector to replace these contracts. To the minister. Let's try again. Is it 20,000 or 100 or 20 or 10 or 1, or is it actually zero barrels?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it takes a lot of chutzpah for the NDP to stand up and ask a question like that, the party that urged Justin Trudeau to kill the Northern Gateway pipeline. Oil should have been flowing through that pipeline by now. The NDP surrendered without a peep to the federal Liberals, killing the Energy East pipeline. The NDP supported the federal surrender to Obama's veto on Keystone XL. Why? Because they always opposed Keystone XL. The NDP appointed people like Tzaporah Berman who want to shut down the energy industry. Shame on them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Provincial Fiscal Sustainability

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2016 the Finance minister of the previous NDP government stated that they would not make the choice of balancing our books and reducing our debt on the backs of Albertans, an interesting statement for the NDP government to make before committing Albertans and their children to pay principal and interest on upwards of $100 billion of debt. To the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance: can you comment on the need for our government, unlike the previous government, to not ignore the realities of debt and interest but, instead, to budget sustainably with the future of Albertans and their children in mind?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The members opposite had us on a trajectory of $100 billion of accumulated provincial debt in this province. The interest payments alone would have been crippling. As it stands, Albertans pay $1.9 billion per year right now as a result of that legacy. This is larger than most government departments' total budgets. We've made a commitment to Albertans to be responsible with their hard-earned tax dollars. We're looking forward to the recommendations of the MacKinnon panel, and we're committed to bringing this province to balance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that under the previous NDP government Alberta has become one of the highest spenders in the country on health care and given that, despite this, wait times have been increasing while health outcomes have been declining, can the Minister of Finance comment on Alberta's current health care expenditures, including the proportion of our budget that health care represents and how Alberta's spending in this area compares to the national average and to other provinces?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to rise and answer on behalf of the hon. minister. Alberta spends close to $22 billion per year on health care. This makes up about 40 per cent of our budget. The Canadian Institute for Health Information, or CIHI, found that we spent approximately 7 and a half thousand dollars per person on health care each year. This is about $700 more than the Canadian average and puts us among the highest in Canada. Unfortunately, the high level of spending does not translate into stronger results for Albertans. We are committed to delivering on that value and providing Albertans with the quality health care services that they deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Health minister. Given that Alberta is also spending comparatively higher amounts on its education system and given that, despite this, constituencies like my own lack schools, playgrounds, and continue to struggle with excessive classroom sizes and declining math and reading scores, can the minister comment on Alberta's education system expenditures, including the proportion of our budget that education represents and how Alberta's spending in this area compares to the national average and other provinces?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education is rising.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We owe it to Albertans to examine how to achieve the best possible outcomes for our students. Right now Alberta is in the top three provinces when it comes to spending on a per-student basis. Our education investment makes up approximately 15 per cent of our total budget. Over the past 15 years operational funding for education has increased by 80 per cent, far outpacing inflation and enrolment growth. We will always ensure that Alberta's students receive a world-class education, and we know that there are ways to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

2:10 Publicly Funded Health Care

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Premier because clearly the Minister of Health doesn't care about keeping health care affordable for Albertans. Yesterday I asked the minister . . .

An Hon. Member: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Feehan: . . . if he would support my Bill 203, which bans billing for insured health services. He said no. This side of the House supports universal public health care, period. To the Premier: are you aware that your minister wants to bring credit card medicine to Alberta? Is this also what you want?

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:10.

Mr. Kenney: No, and no.

Mr. Speaker, this morning at about 1 a.m. I was in this place when that member stood up and compared Bill 9, a temporary delay in wage reopeners, to slavery. That is a gross abuse of the privilege of a member of this place, to draw such a grotesque and false analogy between a simple matter of getting information on collective bargaining and the practice of slavery. Will he apologize? Shame on him.

Mr. Feehan: I won't apologize to the guy who asked for an English to English translation of a Sikh Member of Parliament.

Given that the Premier has said that surgeons . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we don't use preambles after question 4.

Mr. Feehan: I'm sorry?

The Speaker: Don't use a preamble after question 4.

Mr. Feehan: Given that the Premier has said that surgeons take too many coffee breaks when they could be operating on multiple patients at once and given that he's also said that health care workers waste their time on unnecessary duties like, say, sanitizing equipment, to the Premier: the next time you need an operation, is it okay if you're the fifth person or perhaps the 10th person to go under the knife? Is it all right if that knife is just a little dirty from the last guy?

Mr. Kenney: And they continue to descend into lower levels of mudslinging, of incivility, Mr. Speaker. But I'm not surprised. The member can't even acknowledge that his perverse analogy between Bill 9 and the practice of slavery was at best inappropriate and completely unbecoming of any member of this place. Again, I'm not surprised, though. That was the member who in the last session stood up and spent several minutes in this place ridiculing the Jewish Torah. He should be ashamed of himself.

Mr. Feehan: Well, clearly, this Premier does not want to answer the questions. Must be something he's trying to hide.

Given that both the Premier and the minister are trying to shame health care workers so that they can justify swiping their pay with the bad-faith bargaining bill and given that it's clear that to pay for his $4.5 billion tax giveaway to wealthy corporations, this Premier will turn to two-tiered, American-style health care in the near future, to the Premier: when I turn up at the emergency room, do you prefer that I use Visa, MasterCard, or American Express?

Mr. Kenney: You know what's peculiar, Mr. Speaker? The lines we just heard: classic, old-school NDP medi-scare lines used in every campaign that we've ever seen in Alberta, including the most recent campaign. Do you know what Albertans did when they heard the medi-scare threats from the NDP? They fired them. They gave us the largest democratic mandate in history, in part based on our public health guarantee to ensure high-quality, publicly funded, and universally accessible health care.

But, Mr. Speaker, I'm still waiting for that member to apologize for his analogy between slavery and Bill 9.

Quebec Bill 21

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the government to join the opposition members of this House in condemning Quebec's hateful Bill 21. The legislation poses an impossible choice between career and faith. It bans Muslim and Sikh teachers, lawyers, police officers, and judges from wearing turbans and hijabs at work. To the Premier: are you aware of the hateful Bill 21, and will you stand in this House today and condemn it?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've always been clear that I oppose this bill, this approach. In fact, when I was the federal minister for multiculturalism, I publicly threatened to launch a constitutional challenge against the former PQ government for their charter of values, which included similar provisions. In Alberta we believe in pluralism and respect for religious freedom, including the right of people to wear the ostensible signs of their religious faith.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier is said to be building a new friendship with the Quebec Premier and given that the two had dinner together last Wednesday, before the Quebec Premier spent his weekend fighting to ram through his government's racist legislation, to the Premier: did you raise concerns about Bill 21 with your friend the Quebec Premier, and did you ask him to kill the bill immediately?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I did indicate my opposition. I think I speak for the vast majority of Albertans in saying that we believe in religious freedom and that that religious freedom should be protected; for example, for public servants wearing ostensible religious symbols.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the current Premier posted on social media that during his meeting with the Premier they, quote: discussed ways to better choose immigrants based on business needs. To the Premier: what exactly did you discuss with the Quebec Premier, and will you please speak out publicly on social media and condemn Bill 21 immediately?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I've already answered the question. The member has a hard time taking yes for an answer. I would just point out to him that when I was the federal multiculturalism minister, I championed the Multani case, for example, that allowed Sikh children to wear kirpans to the Montreal public schools. I worked to change the rules to allow kirpans, for example, to be worn at Canadian consulates and high commissions around the country. I supported the rights of girls in Montreal to wear hijabs while playing soccer, against a rule that had been adopted for them. My record of these matters is very clear.

Highway 1A Interchange at Cochrane

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, the previous PC government had the intention to twin highway 1A through Cochrane, but the project was never completed. The following NDP government promised to alleviate the traffic pressure in my constituency of Airdrie-Cochrane by building an interchange at highways 1A and 22. However, the capital list this project was apparently on was never released to the electorate. To the Minister of Transportation: is it the intention of this government to make the capital list public?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Cochrane interchange project is listed in Alberta Transportation's 2018 construction program. Perhaps part of the reason why it never was advanced by the previous NDP government is that they actually let that agreement, that I signed with the nation, on the widening of 1A lapse.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given we know this project was not budgeted for, as no budget was released for this fiscal year, and given the previous NDP government had stated that they were building the highway interchange in Cochrane and given that 1A and 22 interchange is still in the design phase, can the minister tell me if this project is still currently on the capital list?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you once again, Mr. Speaker. I discussed this project, I'd have the hon. member know – and a thank you to him for his advocacy on behalf of his constituents. I talked to the mayor of Cochrane in May on this project. I know it's important. As we move ahead, we will attempt to get it back on the list when we have the agreement back with the nation. At that point it will be under consideration in the capital planning and budget.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given this project is long overdue in the community of Cochrane and given that this roadway and interchange present a significant safety risk to commercial traffic, residents, and tourists alike, to the Minister of Transportation:

now that you've been able to review the situation in your department, will this much-needed interchange at 1A and 22 remain a priority moving forward?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The interchange itself is not part of the nation. I can say that to date $2.2 million has been spent on planning, design, and engineering. Again, that piece will be considered as part of the overall capital planning and budget process for 2019. When we make those final decisions, we will certainly announce them. I appreciate the hon. member advocating for his constituency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is rising to ask a question.

Gay-straight Alliance Participant Privacy Protection

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Education seems more than willing to pass the buck to the Privacy Commissioner when it comes to protecting our LGBTQ youth. She stated repeatedly that FOIP and PIPA would prevent students from being outed, but even the Privacy Commissioner acknowledged that schools have significant discretion under these acts to decide if it would be reasonable to out students. We brought in Bill 24 because some schools did think it was reasonable to out students. Is the minister's response to queer and trans kids that they can be outed because they can just file a complaint with the Privacy Commissioner?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it's quite frankly odious that the NDP continues to suggest that there are people who want to, quote: out gay students. This is ridiculous. It's contrary to the law. If students disclose to a teacher or counsellor private information, for example, about their sexual orientation, obviously, there is both a professional obligation and a legal obligation under the privacy act for that information to be retained as private, as was confirmed yesterday by the Privacy Commissioner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP government had several examples of situations where schools were outing kids to their parents.

Given that the Privacy Commissioner's own website says that it takes six to eight weeks to even confirm if they'll investigate a complaint and given that it takes another, at least, nine months to investigate and that it could take another 18 months or more to conduct an inquiry and have a formal decision, to the minister: I guess what you're basically saying is that if a student is outed and feels they cannot continue on in their school or in their home, it's okay; it will be dealt with in due course.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Privacy Commissioner confirmed the law – confirmed the law – for people who work in positions of authority and responsibility with students. Of course, they are trained and expected – they are professionally required, they are legally required – to respect the law. The NDP understood exactly this, which is why they did not bring forward Bill 24-style amendments when Bill 10 passed into law here in 2014, nor did they for their first three years in government. This is nothing but cheap divisive politics on the part of the NDP.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a number of outed kids would disagree with the Premier's statement and given that the Privacy Commissioner has said that they cannot issue fines, force any form of discipline, or act as an advocate for LGBTQ youth that have been outed, to the minister: what exactly would be the point of complaining to the Privacy Commissioner, why are you passing the buck to a pointless privacy investigation, and why do you continue to stand in this House every day and defend legislation that will put students' lives at risk?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, that line of questioning is so profoundly wrong and offensive. Yesterday the Privacy Commissioner confirmed that everything that the Minister of Education has said about this was absolutely correct and that the NDP has been trying to frighten people with their campaign of fear and smear. It didn't work in the campaign. It's not going to work now. We are keeping our word with Albertans to bring into effect the Education Act. Promise made, promise kept.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Member Irwin: Mr. Speaker, this Education minister was caught on video just a few months ago saying that she believes protections for GSAs are based on, quote, flawed reasoning and were unnecessary to begin with. Unbelievable. I guess we know why she's so eager to destroy GSAs and QSAs. To the Minister of Education. It's hard to believe your position would change in just a few short months. Do you still believe that protecting LGBTQ youth is unnecessary?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education and this government agree with the law that was created almost unanimously in this place to allow for gay-straight alliances and other peer support groups to be created. We oppose mandatory notification. We also oppose the NDP's efforts to drive wedges on this issue rather than looking at the actual facts, the law, and realizing that this is a campaign of division being led by the NDP, which is beneath any member of this Legislature.

Member Irwin: It's not a campaign of division. It's a campaign of standing up for our young people.

Given that in addition to claiming that it was unnecessary to protect queer and trans youth, the minister was also caught on tape saying that these protections were just to further an agenda – you're darn right our side of the House has an agenda, and it's to protect our kids – to the minister: if this isn't on your agenda, what is? Or is there a hidden agenda?

Mr. Kenney: The accusation in that question is that the hon. minister was, quote, caught on tape having the temerity to disagree with the NDP. Well, you know what else was caught on tape, Mr. Speaker, on April 16? Over a million Alberta voters that repudiated the NDP's fear and smear politics and that endorsed our very specific platform to bring into force the Education Act, that the NDP itself promised to make law back in 2015.

Member Irwin: We're hearing from Albertans loudly and clearly that they're not going to stand for this attack on LGBTQ youth. They're going to be rallying tonight at the Legislature.

Given that the Minister of Education also thinks that any law put forward about GSAs is part of some sort of agenda – Minister, GSAs save lives; they make life better for all Alberta students – this minister has an opportunity right now to show some courage, clear the record, apologize for her vile remarks. She's got 30 seconds. Go for it.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Education has answered dozens of questions on this, being absolutely clear about her support and that of this government for the ability of students to create positive peer support groups. It really is unfortunate that the NDP, instead of accepting that there is a broad level of consensus in Alberta on this matter, continues to try to drive wedges for their own political purposes. We instead are focused on ensuring that we keep our promises to Albertans with the implementation of the Education Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie has a question.

Surgery Wait Times

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the NDP's watch surgical wait times for Albertans increased, and so did the cost for health care delivery in Alberta. In fact, Alberta health care is now one of the most expensive systems in the world. According to the Canadian Institute for Health Information Albertans are waiting longer for joint replacement and cataract surgeries than they were just three years ago. Universal access to quality, publicly funded health care is a fundamental principle for this government and a significant concern for my constituents. To the Minister of Health: what are you doing to reduce wait times for Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct. Under the NDP wait times increased for four straight years. The NDP talk about their commitment to public health care – they talk and they talk and they talk – but for four years they watched wait times for surgery get longer. They watched access to continuing care decline. They watched our hospitals get more logjammed, and they did nothing about it. We were elected to deliver better results for Albertans, including shorter wait times, and that's what we're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that this government has confirmed their commitment to quality, publicly funded health care and given that citizens of Alberta are currently waiting far too long for surgeries like knee and hip replacements and given that some Albertans are even considering going out of province and paying out of their own pockets for surgeries they can't seem to get scheduled in a reasonable time frame here in Alberta, to the same minister: when will Albertans see wait times reduced and gain access to timely service?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again, the hon. member is correct. We campaigned on our commitment to our publicly funded health care system. [interjections] That's right. We're committed to publicly funded health care, but unlike the NDP, we want a public system which works for patients. We want what Albertans want, a public health care system where wait times go down, not up. That's why we're commissioning the first comprehensive review of AHS in 10 years. We'll have the final report by the end of this year, and Albertans are going to see a real plan for improvement by the end of this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the minister. Given that Albertans deserve the same quality health care available in other parts of Canada and given that many Albertans are concerned about the current state of Alberta's health care and given that there are significant budget constraints as a result of the former NDP government's mismanagement of public funds, to the same minister: what will you do to ensure that budget constraints don't slow this promise to Albertans, and what are the specific steps your ministry is taking to see progress for those waiting in pain for a surgery date?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We campaigned on maintaining or increasing health care spending. There's enough money in the health care system currently to do better, and we're going to do better. The NDP ignored the data for four years, and now it's up to us to take it seriously. That's what the AHS review is all about. Finally Albertans have a government that takes performance seriously and takes accountability seriously. We're studying the Saskatchewan surgical initiative as well. The review will look at other ways we can learn from other provinces and other countries, and we're going to learn from our own people because we have some of the best clinicians in Canada.

Gay-straight Alliances in Private Schools

Ms Phillips: The day the Minister of Education announced her act to destroy gay-straight alliances, she refused to condemn private school policies that spread hate about being gay. Those policies openly state that students would be outed against their will. Will the minister rise in this House, speak for herself, and condemn those illegal and discriminatory private school policies?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we know that the NDP has always opposed independent schools. They've always been ideologically hostile to school choice. The NDP have never wanted to respect section 26(3) of the universal declaration of human rights, that says that "parents have a prior right to choose the . . . education" that is best for their children. This government and the vast majority of Albertans, however, respect school choice just as we respect the law under Bill 10 that allows kids to create supportive peer groups, including GSAs.

Ms Phillips: Given that we just heard that the Premier supports discriminatory policies, given that the Minister of Finance served as a board member for the Peace River Bible Institute and given that that school required all students to follow rules that banned same-sex relationships and shockingly compares these relationships to demonic activity, will the Minister of Finance condemn the policy of that institute, or does the minister support the comparison of same-gender relationships to demonic activity?

Mr. Kenney: Just to confirm what I said, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite characterized our support for pluralism and school choice as, quote, support for hatred. I don't understand why the NDP has such a hard time understanding that the first fundamental freedom enumerated in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is the freedom of religion and why school choice is recognized in the universal declaration . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we heard the question; we'll hear the answer.

Mr. Kenney: The right to school choice is recognized in the universal declaration of human rights and in Alberta law, Mr. Speaker. We will protect kids, but we'll also protect school choice in this province.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, how can we actually expect Albertans to trust this government given the beliefs of people like the Minister of Finance, the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon, what the Minister of Education herself was caught saying on video just a few months ago, and what the Premier just underlined in his support for discriminatory policies that we heard just a few minutes ago?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, every legacy member of the PC and Wildrose parties that make up this party voted in favour of Bill 10 to create statutory protection for gay-straight alliances and other peer-support groups. Where we differ with the NDP is that we don't believe that these are wedge issues that should be used to divide people. We believe that children should be protected, and we believe that can be done while also respecting the fundamental freedom of religion and the right of parents to choose the form of education that's best for their kids.

Royal Alberta Museum Former Site

Ms Goehring: It's collected all of our stories, and it itself became a great story: those are the words of Darrel Babuk in relation to the original site of the Royal Alberta Museum. Residents in the Edmonton-Glenora constituency that played host to the museum since 1967 are proud of its history and want this building to be there for future generations. To the minister of culture: will you commit in this House today that the Royal Alberta Museum building in Glenora is here to stay?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we'll take that question under advisement, and I'll ask the Minister of Culture and the Minister of Infrastructure to respond to the hon. member as quickly as possible with a detailed answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that nearly 9,000 people have signed a petition to keep the former Royal Alberta Museum building, will the culture or Infrastructure minister commit to holding open town halls with residents about the future of this site, with the Member for Edmonton-Glenora as a full partner, before making any major decisions?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, actually, our department has asked for input from the stakeholders. We'll collect the stakeholder input and then make our decision based on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the original RAM building was neglected under Conservative austerity measures that resulted in reduced maintenance and upkeep and given that this may result in a need for serious renovations, will the Minister of Infrastructure commit to dedicating funding to repairing the RAM site if it's determined that residents in Glenora want to keep it intact and viable for the future?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, decisions on facilities like the Glenora site are guided by evolving government needs, available budget, and how those needs fit relative to other funding priorities. There are no plans yet for the future of the Glenora site, but we'll look at all options regarding its future use.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Klein has a question.

Provincial Fiscal Sustainability and Budget 2019

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I campaigned on getting Alberta's finances back on track. I made a commitment to my constituents to no longer continue to leverage our children's future. What we are now seeing during supplementary supply estimates is a result of four years of mismanagement with this province's books by the previous government. To the Minister of Finance: with this new information, what commitments can we make at this time for getting back to balanced budgets by '22-23, as we initially promised?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the member for the question. That is right. Our government campaigned on the commitment to bring this province back to balance. I take that commitment very seriously. The previous government had us on a path to bury this province in debt. Albertans expect much better from our government. We're bringing prudence and predictability back to this province's budget. We will achieve balance by 2022-23.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for his response as well as his hard efforts in getting us back to balance. Given our commitment to getting the budget balanced without damaging the spending for necessary services like health care and education, can the minister ensure that we will also be able to commit to our election promise of maintaining or increasing health care spending?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer is yes. That's our commitment to Albertans, and we're going to deliver on it. The bigger challenge is performance. We need to control costs, and we also need better results for Albertans: lower wait times, better access to emergency, better access to continuing care. Lower costs and better results: that's our commitment to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Minister of Education recently announced plans to modernize Alberta's education system by replacing the School Act with the Education Act and given that the concern I'm hearing from my constituents is about education funding and given that I'm also hearing from teachers and parents in my riding about concern over increasing classroom sizes and given that we're about to expect 15,000 new students this fall, can the Minister of Finance confirm our platform promise to maintain or increase spending in education? [interjection]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South will come to order while the Member for Calgary-Klein is asking a question.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member again for this important question. As we have confirmed, increased enrolment growth will be accounted for and funded. Alberta's children deserve an excellent, world-class education, and

I can confirm that we will ensure that there is funding for these outcomes. We are committed to delivering the best possible outcomes for our children, period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is rising with a question.

Rural High-speed Internet

Mr. Yao: Thank you. In 2018 the CRTC declared that stable broadband infrastructure is a necessary component for Canadian participation in the digital economy and digital age. The communications industry has invested in and enabled this in our densely-populated urban areas, but rural communities do not have the same infrastructure. Mr. Speaker, 96 per cent of urban homes in Canada have access to fast, reliable Internet but only 39 per cent in the rural areas. To the Minister of Service Alberta: is our government investing in this crucial infrastructure?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the member for the important question on behalf of rural Albertans. Our government knows how important reliable Internet access is to all Albertans and how frustrating life can be without it. We know that all Albertans have strong expectations for their technology, and we're continuing to learn from them how best we can address this issue and move forward. We are serious about technology and will work to ensure that we do this correctly and do it correctly the first time.

Mr. Yao: It is given, Mr. Speaker, that stable Internet access is becoming a necessity in our education system. This platform has enabled increased access to educational resources and more flexibility in distributing and accepting assignments. It has become as essential as pen and paper in our schools. What is this government doing to ensure Internet access for rural schools to enable this basic necessity in our digital age?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that students are increasingly using digital resources for their school work. Times have changed since I was in school, but over the last 15 years in my career as a venture capital investor, I've learned a lot about the importance of technology and having technology accessible to students in schools as they're building the tools they need to succeed in their upcoming careers. One of the tools that helps them to do that is the Alberta SuperNet, which currently provides access to high-quality Internet services to 1,935 schools in addition to libraries and over 1,000 other government facilities.

2:40

Mr. Yao: It is given, Mr. Speaker, that there's a dismal divide between rural and urban high-speed Internet quality, and this is worrying for rural Alberta's economy. Businesses rely on the Internet for communicating with customers, suppliers, and vendors. They do their banking online and access legal support. In a report tabled in the Legislature last year only 13 per cent of rural communities in Alberta had access to Internet speeds that meet the target speeds as set by the CRTC. Can the government tell this House what the government's plan is to secure Internet access to support rural . . .

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to ensuring an environment in which Albertans and businesses can succeed. We recognize the importance of reliable Internet access for businesses, and that's why we're monitoring what is happening at all levels of government. We know that we need to work with the federal government, our provincial partners, municipal governments, and business owners on this very important matter. That is why we have been engaging with members from all of those stakeholder communities to look towards a path forward. I would be happy to follow up with the member offline. No pun intended.

The Speaker: I believe that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays called a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. McIver: Yes, I did, under 23(h), (i), and (j), imputing false motives to another member. I don't have the Blues, Mr. Speaker; perhaps you do. The hon. member said something to the effect of: the hon. minister doesn't care about health care or doesn't care about delivering services. It was about caring. That, of course, is exactly the definition of imputing a motive.

Mr. Speaker, I could understand – and this isn't a matter of opinion – if they said, "The hon. minister is doing a terrible job" or "I disagree with his policies" or "He hasn't done his homework," something like that, but to actually say that the hon. minister "doesn't care" about the main purpose of their ministry, I think it's straightforward imputing false motives to another member of the House. I would ask you to rule to ask the hon. member to withdraw those comments and apologize.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is clearly not a point of order. This is a matter of debate or a difference of opinion. I believe that the member talked about how the Minister of Health doesn't care about keeping health care affordable. That is his opinion. The members on the government side may have a different opinion. This is not a point of order. He did not make claims or whatever the hon. member is arguing in his point of order. It's not a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It's a matter of opinion.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I do in fact have the benefit of the Blues. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford said, "My question is to the Premier because clearly the Minister of Health doesn't care about keeping health care affordable for Albertans." I don't find the point of order well taken. I could be sympathetic to the Member for Calgary-Hays if, in fact, he did say: he doesn't care about health care. Perhaps that would be a point of order. It may, in fact, be a question of debate, but in this case I would suggest that that is not a point of order, and I consider the matter concluded.

Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 5, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019.

Madam Speaker, the supplementary amounts provided by this bill reflect the fiscal picture outlined in the third-quarter fiscal update, released by the previous government on February 27. The spending is way beyond what was budgeted for in the 2018-2019 fiscal year. Now it must be approved by the Legislative Assembly.

We recognize that over a fiscal year, unplanned expenses can come up; for example, the devastating fires in northern Alberta. I know my colleagues opposite will agree that the Alberta government will always provide funding and support for Albertans in their time of need, no matter who is in office at that time. However, when it comes to other spending, it is imperative that we plan and spend appropriately. While some of these expenses may be critical according to the opposition, we will be taking a more prudent approach as we move forward.

Madam Speaker, many of these expenses before you today were not spent using that approach, and now out of respect for our parliamentary process our government must spend nearly $1 billion ensuring that many of those obligations are met. A billion dollars is a lot of money, and when one-third of that money is spent on a project that should never have been funded by the Alberta taxpayer, it makes it all the worse. I want to make this loud and clear. This is not how our government will be doing business in the future. The poorly negotiated contracts to lease railcars, signed on the eve of an election, have left our government to pay the bill. From the moment this issue was made public, we made it clear that we did not agree with this initiative. It is an irresponsible use of taxpayers' dollars, and we will not be continuing this track under our government. Our government will be more respectful and responsible about how we spend Albertans' hard-earned tax dollars. Since we took office, barely six weeks ago, we've been working to ensure that we're getting the most value for every dollar spent.

But before we can look forward, we must deal with the mistakes of the previous government. As a matter of law, our government must pass this legislation to honour Alberta's contractual commitments despite our own misgivings. I respectfully urge my colleagues in this House to support this bill and fulfill Alberta's contractual commitments from the last fiscal year. This ensures that there's appropriate oversight of government spending by the elected representatives standing before me today.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As the hon. Finance minister and President of Treasury Board said, this is kind of a backward-looking bill and not a forward-looking bill. It's an awkward situation where the government is required to support the expenditures that the previous government made before we were elected or else have those expenditures count against this year's spending, so it's an odd one. I imagine all sides of the House will vote for it because we kind of have to, and the opposition would be voting against what they did when they were in government. Nonetheless, it is one of the procedures that we live with in this House. It becomes a bit peculiar right after a change of government, an election.

With that, I will move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2019

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 6, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2019.

This bill will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and to the government for the period April 1, 2019, to November 30, 2019, inclusive. The approval of this act will provide the funds needed to continue the business of our province while our government takes the time necessary to prepare Budget 2019, which will be presented in the fall. It also will give the Assembly time to review and debate the government's 2019-2020 budget plans.

To be clear, this is not a budget. The interim supply estimates reflect the expected costs, commitments, and timing of payments needed to keep government operating. For the next eight months we are simply beginning our work to deal with the financial mess left to us by the previous government. We must take action to reverse the province's deeper dive into debt. Our approach to interim supply places a strong emphasis on fiscal restraint as we work to meet the promise of balancing the budget by 2022-23.

Over the past four years, Alberta's spending has not meant better services for Albertans. In fact, we found that Alberta spends more per capita than other provinces without seeing better outcomes. That is not acceptable, Madam Speaker. Our government will find ways to do things differently and more effectively. However, those decisions take time. Our government recognizes that for our stakeholders and for all Albertans this is a difficult message to hear. Operating in the unknown can be uncomfortable. However, responsible choices take time and thoughtful planning. We are using the time requested for interim supply to develop a budget that reflects the promises we made to Albertans.

Recommendations from the MacKinnon panel and discussions with the staff in each of our ministries will help guide our decisions. We're looking at ways to eliminate waste, duplication, and nonessential spending so we can find ways to fund our government's key priorities and do things differently.

Over the past four years many Albertans have struggled under the decisions made by the previous government. We believe it is not fair to saddle future generations with the burden of onerous debt. If we don't begin work to balance that budget now, we'll end up spending billions of dollars on interest payments to bankers instead of funding Albertans' priorities. This is about looking to the long term, making responsible choices, and eliminating reliance on deficit spending, that steals from future schools, hospitals, and future generations.

Details on our government's plan to restore balance to Alberta's finances will be included in Budget 2019. As we develop that plan, I respectfully urge my colleagues in this House to support this bill to give us the time required to draft a thoughtful, prudent budget.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise to speak to this interim supply. We had not a lot of time to talk about it when we were in the question phase, so I'm happy to be on the record to speak about it now.

I just wanted to highlight, I guess – I know we're repeatedly being told that, you know, with poor fiscal planning, waste, somehow the government programs under the NDP government were not actually serving Albertans. I just stand very deeply in my shoes here, Madam Speaker, to say that that's not true at all. We had invested very significantly to support vulnerable Albertans. I know that in the Ministry of Seniors and Housing, which I had the honour to be the minister of, we certainly supported so many people to live in dignity, close to their families and friends, in their communities. I guess I just want to be on the record to articulate how important it is to support people in Alberta.

Having looked at the numbers that are being presented, just as the Minister of Finance has indicated, they do seem low. They do seem like, yes, indeed, there will be cuts to these valuable programs. You know, this is a concern because we know that the needs are growing. We know that Alberta has 600,000 seniors currently, a little bit over that, but that number is going to double to a million in the next couple of decades. So actually what we should be doing is investing even more because we need to make sure that seniors are supported and cared for. Some of the ways that we have supported them which I think are extremely innovative – and I think also, you know, that even though the implication was that the things we did were not prudent, it was pretty prudent because if we support people to live in their own homes, which is what the seniors' home adaptation and repair program does, then actually that is great for the seniors because they get to stay in their same community, close to their family and friends, where they want to be, where all their connections are. The quality of life is enhanced because they have deep roots, oftentimes. So that investment in the SHARP program – that's the acronym for the seniors' home adaptation and repair program – actually, I think, saved the government money. Not only does it have an excellent social outcome, but it has an economic outcome that's excellent, too, and it actually cost the government less.

I'd just encourage the Minister of Seniors and Housing, when she's looking at what she has to slash from her budget – this is a program that we brought in in 2016, and it's been wildly successful. People from all over Alberta have applied to the program and been successful in receiving grants. We know that over 800 rural senior households have actually been recipients of these grants. That might be something for many of the members in the government to look at because I think a lot of their constituents benefited significantly from this program.

The program started in July 2016, so it was certainly our government that brought it in. Also, like, as I said, over 800 rural senior households benefited, so about 50 per cent of the loans in that program went to seniors in rural Alberta. They received $9.6 million in loans, and the average loan was about $14,000 for a senior. You know, they could use that to get a new roof, anything that they needed to make sure that they could still stay in their own home. That was important to them, so sometimes that was what they needed. They needed a new roof because their house was aging, and they needed to do that. Then they could continue to stay there.

I know I've shared with the House previously that I know a couple I met in Sherwood Park, and it really, you know, elongated the time they could stay in their home because the wife in the couple has MS, and she can't really manage stairs. They had a four-level split, and they needed to have some kind of a lift for her because she couldn't make it up or down. Of course, that made it impossible for them to stay in the home, but when they looked at the costs to be able to buy a lift, they absolutely couldn't afford it, and that broke their hearts because they wanted to stay in their own home.

When they saw this program, they applied to it, they were accepted, the lift was put in. They had the support they needed. [interjections] They could stay in that home for another 10 years or more, and that really made a huge difference in their lives.

So I would just suggest, Madam Speaker, that this is not . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there's a lot of noise happening right now over the speaker. I'm just wondering if we could tone it down a little bit. Thank you.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Ms Sigurdson: For this couple it certainly made a huge difference in that their ability – they just absolutely could not have stayed in their home.

I would say that this is not government waste, Madam Speaker. This is supporting people to live with dignity in their own homes. As I said, it not only has excellent social outcomes; it has good economic ones, too. It supports people to stay in their own homes – you know, it'd cost much more to have to live in some type of facility or things – plus their quality of life is much enhanced because they get to be where they want to be, and we know that seniors want that. That's why we developed this program, because we listened to seniors all across this province, and this is what they said: we want to stay in our communities; we want to stay close to families and friends. This is a really important program. I think that I'd just caution the government, if they're cutting programs – it does look, by the numbers, that they're going to be – that this is a valuable resource for thousands of seniors across our province.

There's also a component of it that is a grant program because sometimes seniors, you know, don't qualify for the loan because they don't have enough home equity. There are some restrictions so that the loan can be repaid. We don't want someone to be not able to repay the loan. There is a grant component, so that helps many more low-income seniors take advantage of that. That's just one of the programs that I think certainly is not government waste, is not poor fiscal planning, that we hear repeatedly from the government. That's a program that supports the dignity and well-being of Alberta seniors.

Another program that also supports our seniors here in Alberta is the Alberta seniors' benefit. One of the very important things that we did with that program is that we indexed that to the cost of living. This is an income support program. It augments people's, you know, monthly income from the federal government. This really supports quite low-income seniors who are receiving old age security, guaranteed annual income from the federal government. But their incomes are still quite low. This is kind of a top-up program that the provincial government does to support seniors on quite low incomes.

The importance of indexing, of course, is that our cost of living goes up each year. Oftentimes, if we're employed, that's taken into consideration when we sometimes have reviews each year, and we'll get an increase. But when you're on a fixed income like this, those programs don't necessarily have those bumps. So why are seniors really unfairly not benefiting from that when the rest of us are? I think that this is a very important one, especially when we're talking about people who are quite vulnerable. Those few dollars – and, really, they're not a lot, Madam Speaker, but at least it doesn't erode, you know, what they're getting each year on an annual basis.

Again, just as I was discussing the seniors' home adaptation and repair program, I would say that the indexing aspect of the Alberta seniors' benefit is also extremely important, and for seniors to live in dignity with the support, that is also a program that needs to be invested in. In no way is this not prudent. It is an investment in the pioneers in our communities. I was very proud as the Minister of Seniors and Housing at that time to completely support the indexation.

If I move a little bit to the – there are sort of two aspects, I guess, to the ministry: one is seniors, and one is housing, and of course the two come together also as we do, you know, have affordable housing in Alberta. When we became government, we inherited a billion dollars in deferred maintenance, maintenance that needed to be done on the public delivery of affordable housing in our province. It really was quite disturbing for me as minister to come and see just how derelict some of these facilities were, and it was largely to do with a lack of funding by previous Conservative governments.

So our government made a bold move. We invested $1.2 billion in affordable housing to address those significant maintenance needs and also augment what affordable housing we had so that people who were on low income, people who were on income support – maybe they had minimum wage jobs – were supported with their families. This bold move really created, you know, quite a significant move in building and in opening units so that more access to affordable housing could occur, because we know that we don't have enough affordable housing. We know that it's true in rural Alberta. We know that that's true in the big cities and in the medium-size cities. This investment, this $1.2 billion that we invested, was four times more than the last Conservative government's budget, their capital budget, in affordable housing. As I said already, it was a very bold move.

We have in Alberta, you know, about 100 housing management bodies. These are organizations that do the delivery of affordable housing in our province, and these are people dedicated to making sure that people in their communities have access to affordable housing. What does that mean exactly when I say that? Like, what is affordable housing? What's our program here in Alberta? That is, like, seniors' lodges. Certainly, we know that oftentimes seniors' lodges in rural Alberta and communities – I mean, I grew up in Valleyview. We always had the lodge there in town, and it was just a hub where people came. It was a place for people who maybe could not maintain their own household anymore or maybe needed a little bit more support or perhaps one of the partners in that couple had passed away and they really wanted the social aspect and that connection. Alberta has an amazing lodge program all across the province, and they really are hubs in these small communities.

Of course, the lodge act came in in, like, the late 1950s, early 1960s, so many of those facilities were very – the infrastructure was extremely old. There had been some new building, but there still was a significant amount of need in that area. You know, in that alone we could be investing so, so much. But we did certainly step up that program to do that.

There is also seniors self-contained, and this is where, you know, seniors actually live in their own apartment-style units. We have over 14,000 of those units across our province. These are for seniors who are functionally independent, so they don't need that extra support. They can live independently, but they don't want to live in, say, their own single-family dwelling anymore. They want to live more communally. That's another program that's important.

We certainly do have community housing. This isn't based on age anymore. Seniors, obviously, are considered people who are 65 or over. Community housing is subsidized rental housing for low-income families. Here in Edmonton, Capital Region Housing is a significant provider of that. In Calgary it's the Calgary Housing Company. There are many other housing management bodies across the province.

I guess what I'm trying to do is get on the record, Madam Speaker, to have this government understand what these funds are going to. They're helping seniors in our province, supporting them to live with dignity in their communities, and helping people who need affordable housing live so that they can raise their families in safe, secure, well-maintained, appropriate housing. I say to you, Madam Speaker, that this is not a waste. This is not, you know, us, the NDP government, acting with no prudence. This is actually a significant investment that helps many Albertans. I would say that even as a society, we all benefit from that, when we support our friends and neighbours.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2019

[Adjourned debate June 19: Mr. McIver]

Hon. Members: Question.

3:10 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 2

An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair. This bill has now moved into committee. An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, it is called. It is not at all that when one examines the contents of this bill and some of its more egregious elements. Really, this is an act to pick your pocket. This pick-your-pockets bill will take workers' overtime. It will scoop holiday pay. It'll cut holiday pay to pay for a tax gift to corporations.

One of the things that we see, Madam Chair, as an ongoing theme from this government is a very uncaring approach in their first bills to the most vulnerable. This reveals, I think, who the priorities are, and it's certainly not an empathetic approach to young people, to people who might be working on an hourly basis, and certainly not for people who work in the service industry. Really, you know, this is a very well-trodden trail of authoritarian, right-wing governments who go after labour rights as one of their first items of business. It's really about the fact that the working class will pay for large gifts to friends, insiders, an increasing concentration of wealth at the top such that society becomes more unequal, such that workers lose bargaining power, such that young people revise their expectations of a good life and millennials are invited to abandon the dreams of a good, middle-class life that other generations have enjoyed in western industrialized democracies. That's what this is about.

You know, on the ground what it means is that this is a government whose essentially first item of business was to follow teenagers around pilfering toonies out of their pockets. That was job number one, apparently, to create a pool of labour that is not compensated at the same rate, that does not enjoy the same protections as the rest of the workforce, and that is less able to form associations to bargain collectively for wages and working conditions. One of the really big issues that ought to be considered at the amendment stage of this bill is, when we have this youth differential wage, this idea that vulnerable teenagers could choose to drop out of school in order to earn a higher wage. That is of deep concern.

We've had some improvement over the last few years, I think. There's no question that the previous PC government, under Education Minister Hancock, and then more recent efforts by our government have increased the high school completion rate. There's no question about that, but that's been a sort of multiyear, multigovernment initiative and a good one at that, Madam Chair. But this proposes to start chipping away at that very good progress. That is something that this government should pause and consider as an impact of this reduction in a youth minimum wage.

I think, too, that the massive amount of red tape that this proposes ought to be a place where the government considers amending the legislation given that it's a confusing and very detailed calculation that has to be done with respect to what qualifies as a youth minimum wage. It applies for the first 28 hours of work in a week while school is in session. If they work more than 28 hours a week, they must be paid the general minimum wage for every hour beyond the first 28. During breaks and summer holidays the youth rate will apply to all hours worked.

You know, really, this is a whole lot of headache, Madam Chair, and that's why even the Klein government, that was not exactly predisposed to an orderly labour relations environment – I worked in opposition at that time. I can recall a number of different unhelpful initiatives on the part of that government, but even they scrapped this because there were just too many loopholes, too many hoops to jump through for employers, too much muddy water created for employers about when people are in school, when they're not, how many hours, back and forth, and so on and so forth. For a government that has put a bill in the window around red tape, which is a bit of a mannequin bill and indeed a bit of a mannequin minister on this file, with very little substance to go with it, it would seem to me that this is counterintuitive to the stated public policy aims that the government has put forward. Therefore, this section in particular could use some tightening up and some amendment. There's no question about that.

On the general holiday pay and, you know, questions around holiday pay and questions around statutory holidays and so on, I remember being in the service industry myself and this being a rather algebraic calculation for most of us coming up to Thanksgiving or other holidays on whether we would get the stat pay or not. I recall even for management it being a headache at the time given that our rules were so far out of step with other provinces. At a couple of the places I worked, managers had come from other places, and I remember – this was even back in the '90s – they used to roll their eyes at Alberta's sort of arcane and complicated rules around general holiday pay and stat holidays. Going back to some of these more difficult arrangements, putting us out of step with other provinces, again, creates confusion for employers. No other Canadian jurisdiction has similar rules. The changes that were brought in over the last few years were simply bringing Alberta in line with other jurisdictions.

You know, there were really no consultations taken on Bill 2. That is another reason why the government may want to pause and either amend this section or send it to committee, Madam Chair, given that there were absolutely no conversations undertaken with hardly anyone on this topic. You know, really, why would they? When we look at some of the issues around overtime, we know that there is, in fact, no mandate for returning to straight time for banked overtime. The reason we know that is because people got pretty upset about it during the election campaign, and the leader of the party at the time, who is now the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, assured the electorate, in particular private-sector oil and gas workers, that they would not lose those thousands of dollars a year in overtime for banked overtime. Assurances were given, and then classically: say one thing; do another.

There is a reason why people are already asking questions about the straight talk coming from the leader of the members opposite. Certainly, there have always been questions among the electorate on this topic. Certainly, this issue proves that out, that what is said in the heat and enthusiasm of an election campaign is not necessarily the actual facts on the ground. Certainly, that is a concern. Just at a moment when we had a positive decision yesterday on the topic of market access and expansion of energy infrastructure; just as we may be again exiting from some of the uncertainties around market access and the price of WCS, that hurt economic growth in early 2019; just as we are moving beyond some of those challenges, Madam Chair, and returning to the levels of economic growth potentially – although private-sector forecasters aren't seeing it yet – that we saw in 2017 and 2018, when the province, when we were in government, led the country in economic growth two years in a row; just as we may be seeing some of those glimmers for private-sector oil and gas workers, we have a government that is going to scoop thousands of dollars out of their bank accounts. To be clear, this was really job one for the new government.

I think Albertans have every right to ask questions about this issue of banked overtime, especially given the assurances that were given over the course of the election campaign, assurances that have not proved to be factual, Madam Chair. This is another place where the government could pause, show some empathy and some consideration for families who work hard, and ensure that they get the overtime pay that they have worked for and, indeed, that they deserve. There are enough stories of families that have gone through hard times. When the price of oil dipped, the last thing they need is to have the long hand of this government pilfering around in their bank account to take $2,500 out. When a family needs a roof replacement or they need to pay for specific supports for maybe a child or specific activities for that child or other pressures on the family budget, that amount of money can be really, really significant. This is about quality of life for people. It's not about extras.

Certainly, on the topic of extras, we see who's actually getting them, Madam Chair, and that's already-wealthy corporations who have profits over $500,000. Those are the beneficiaries of the largesse of this government, but not ordinary people who work on an hourly basis either on contract or in a non-union atmosphere, in particular in construction and in the oil and gas industry.

I think some of the calculations collected by Statistics Canada bear this out. The average oil and gas worker earning $43 an hour and working 10 hours of overtime every week on a 12-week project would see their wages differ, if all 120 hours are banked, by about $2,600. That's a lot of money. It is reasonable, I think, for the new government to take a look at a number of the pieces of legislation: employment standards, labour relations. Certainly, when our government updated these pieces of legislation – there were reviews of the code done in '07 and 2014, and I was sort of adjacent to at least the latter. But no changes were made at that time. There were some specific changes that should have been made at that time, but the previous PC government was obviously wrapped up in its own palace intrigue and unable to actually govern in the best interest of people.

But, you know, it's perfectly reasonable for this government to take another look at employment standards, the Labour Relations Code, and if they do in fact conclude, for example, that ensuring compassionate care leaves is not appropriate, then they should consult with Albertans and change that. If they do in fact, after a period of examining the changes that were made to overtime, go out and consult with private-sector workers and private-sector workers say, "Absolutely; I'm super not interested in having a couple of thousand dollars a month every quarter in my bank account" – not everyone is interested in getting paid fairly for their time, I'm sure – and they can reasonably demonstrate after a period of consultation that people aren't interested in their overtime, then they should make these changes, Madam Chair.

Here's the reasoning behind some of the changes that our government made. We did a focused review of existing laws. There were 7,300 submissions from business, industry, different labour and worker associations, academics, municipalities, nonprofits, the general public. If after a robust review of some of the changes that were made when legislation hadn't been updated in 30 years, I think the government would be fully within its rights to make some of these changes to overtime.

But the fact is that they've moved this through so quickly, without any of these requisite conversations with the broader public, and they'd be hard-pressed to find people who would wilfully give up a couple of thousand dollars every quarter just to satisfy a few backroom lobbyists in cigar-filled rooms and other folks that are seeking a gift of forgoing overtime. Certainly, that is what they've gotten. They've gotten a piece of legislation that has not been given its appropriate time of day in terms of consultation. That is unfortunate and is one of the things that should give government pause to find places to amend this piece of legislation. Perhaps send it to committee for some of the consultation that our government undertook. I would certainly replicate such an effort.

You know, when the members opposite rise to talk about some of the changes we made to employment standards, I guess the question that I would pose back would be: "What, of these changes, do the members object to? Is it compassionate care leave, or is it long-term illness and injury leave? Is it personal and family responsibility leave?" Certainly, one of the things that we did was an unpaid new leave that provided for up to five days of job protection for personal sickness or short-term care of an immediate family member. That was something that we didn't have prior. That was something that ought to have happened out of the 2014 review that didn't happen because people were busy – I don't know – building sky palaces and flying around and other things that were focused on themselves rather than focusing on parents like Amanda Jensen, who got fired for having to care for her son who was undertaking treatment for leukemia, childhood leukemia. Is it bereavement leave, domestic violence leave, or citizenship ceremony leave? Which of these changes, that the members opposite allege have somehow been problematic, do they object to?

I think they should be clear about that. I think that they should be straightforward with people and parents like Amanda Jensen and others who are struggling to care for sick children.

I think, too, that the code really clarified some things that really are of issue to ordinary people and people who work on an hourly basis, particularly in the service sector, so here I am talking about oftentimes young people or oftentimes women, oftentimes newer Canadians. Around deductions the code clarified some of the changes that our government brought in, which deductions are allowed from wages as well as explicitly prohibiting deductions for faulty work and cash shortages such as dine-and-dash and gas-and-dash scenarios. So the members opposite, you know, when they run down the good work of the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, who was at the time the minister of labour, her very detailed work, they should be clear if they want to go back to a situation where we didn't have that kind of clarity for workers around deductions that were questionable at best around cash shortages and so on.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to pick up from where the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West left off if I could. You know, my view is also that this is a pick-your-pockets bill, that this really takes us back in time, takes away the good work that was done by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods that she undertook along with many other people. For instance, there was industry involved, there were stakeholders involved, people who had views about employment, organized labour, of course academics, municipalities, employers, many, many, many people with great knowledge about the impact of the current system of the labour code and laws with regard to employment in this province. Their work spanned a great deal of time. It took a long time because there was a lot of work that needed to be done, as the Member for Lethbridge-West talked about.

You know, it was 1987. The Employment Standards Code and Labour Relations Code had not been updated since that amount of time, 30 years, Madam Chair. Thirty years. I can remember the discussion in this House often about what was going on 30 years ago. It served as a bit of a mental reminder that the world has moved on, but Alberta's codes and laws with regard to labour hadn't. With the review that was taken, our oldest workplace legislation in Canada was updated, and I would like to spend my time talking about some of those updated standards and code changes. That's where the Member for Lethbridge-West was going.

Madam Chair, the work that the government undertook was done because we wanted to address many problems that had been left. The 2007 and 2014 previous government's actions, which didn't get followed through with, needed to be changed. For instance, in the area of minimum wage for people with disabilities it was okay prior to the changes in 2017 to pay people with disabilities less than the minimum wage, and I think all would agree that that's not a benefit to that person with disabilities. It's a benefit to the employer, and it is something that other provinces have done away with and we did away with in 2017.

With regard to leaves, I know the Member for Lethbridge-West was talking about a number of them. One was the compassionate care leave. Their job protection was extended to 27 weeks, Madam Chair, from eight weeks, to better align with the federal insurance program benefits. That also, you can appreciate, was something that is of great benefit to people who have necessarily needed to take time to grieve and to spend time away from their workplace but with the assurance that they have 27 weeks to do that instead of just two months. That caregiver status was expanded, of course, to include nonprimary caregivers; not generous but how people live.

Long-term illness and injury leave: that was an unpaid leave provision, up to 16 weeks per year for personal injury and sickness, and that, again, aligned with the federal employment insurance program. That's unpaid, recognizing that businesses need to oftentimes backfill, but they're not paying that person for that who's taking that long-term illness or injury leave. That money – they're essentially keeping their payroll the same but being compassionate, again, to the person.

Personal and family responsibility leave: Madam Chair, that's a new leave that provides up to five days of protection per year for personal sickness or short-term care of an immediate family member. It includes attending to personal emergencies and caregiving responsibilities related to education of a child. We've done a lot of discussions about the Education Act and education in general here and GSAs in particular, but, you know, you can see where it might be really helpful for a family who is struggling with all sorts of issues regarding their child, whether that child is in a GSA or struggling with their gender identity. The parent in that case can take some time off to try and sort things out with their child, with the school, with people who need to be supportive of that young person.

Bereavement leave: it's a new unpaid leave. It provides up to three days' job protection per year for bereavement of an immediate family member. I don't think anybody would see that as overly generous or unusual, Madam Chair. What is unusual is that Alberta didn't have that in place, and the work of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, as the labour minister at the time, brought that into the code.

Domestic violence leave: certainly, something new in this province, but we can all appreciate where 10 days of job protection per year for employees addressing that situation of domestic violence is critical for their families and their own safety, mental health, and of the struggles that often go on for a person.

Citizenship ceremony leave: a new unpaid leave that provides up to a half day of job protection for employees attending their own ceremonies or their immediate family members' ceremonies, something we can all be proud of when new Canadian citizens – I was going to say are made or created or struck, but that's not the right word – receive their citizenship in Canada.

Critical illness of a child: a new unpaid leave that provides up to 36 weeks of job protection for parents of critically ill or injured children. That aligns, again, with federal insurance program regulations, Madam Chair. I've never been in that situation, but I'm very proud that Albertans who have a child in that situation now can take their time off work for that necessity of giving solace and support to and caring for their sick child.

Death or disappearance of a child: certainly, a new thing as well, Madam Chair, up to 52 weeks of job protection for employees whose child disappeared as a result of a crime or up to 104 weeks if a child died as a result of that crime. That aligns, again, with the federal employment insurance program. I can't imagine what parents go through in those situations, Madam Chair, but Alberta is now similar to the federal government and the Employment Insurance Act in that regard and probably many other provinces, but we didn't have it here. There's some really excellent work done.

Leave eligibility, Madam Chair, is the next area I want to talk about, that period for current and new leaves set at 90 days rather than one year, really, you know, some immediacy to decisions being made in that regard as opposed to employers saying: "I'll get to it. I'll get to it. I'll get to it." There's some kind of necessity to get to it within three months.

Maternity and parental leave: extending that, as was done by the federal government for the employment insurance benefits, from 37 to 52 weeks. Madam Chair, of course, it's critical for young children, babies that they have the care and ability to be cared for by parents who have that ability to take that time off work, and this gives them up to 52 weeks, another 15 weeks. We did that in alignment.

Rest periods: it's unbelievable, but it wasn't in the code that there should be a minimum of 30 minutes' break, paid or unpaid, for every five hours of consecutive employment. We know that some work is taxing, back-breaking, and for people not to have rest periods is obviously a potential danger to them and their colleagues on the job. This rest period was another way of extending the best-in-class support to people in the workplace.

Overtime: we've talked a lot about overtime agreements and how we increased the allowable time to take that overtime to six months rather than the current three months, and that mirrors every jurisdiction in Canada, Madam Chair. The area that doesn't anymore is the removal of 1.5 hours for all hours worked of overtime banked and calculated at that amount. We have got out of step now with every other jurisdiction in Canada with regard to that, and that really doesn't benefit workers at all. Who it benefits in this case, I think, quite clearly is – the restaurant association of I think it's Canada lobbied quite hard for this and other things. That's a retrenchment or a step back for workers in this province.

Madam Chair, next I want to go to the whole idea of minimum wages and spend some time on that, particularly the youth minimum wage for youth under 18 years of age going back to $13 an hour. When this bill hit the House, many employers like the Calgary Stampede, the Edmonton public library, I think, and others were in the process of the contracts they had established with young people. They were asked, you know: what are you going to do around all this? Because it's taking effect June 26, 2019, you can legally pay youth $13 an hour who are going to be working for you. Of course, the Stampede has, I think, somewhere around 500 youth who will be a part of their summer contingent.

The Stampede, to their credit, said: you know, we made a handshake deal with those young people and had told them that it was going to be the minimum wage of the previous government's labour code that was brought in, and we're going to stick with that. The Edmonton public library said that as well, Madam Chair, and probably other entities that were put under the kind of glare of public scrutiny also said the same thing. It begs the question: if the Stampede, if the Edmonton public library, if many other places are sticking to their word of $15 an hour, why is there a need to roll this back to $13 an hour? I know the rationale from the other side is: well, it's going to help more youth get employed, and it's just going to be better for them. Well, it's not going to be better.

The words of our former minister of labour, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, were that the value of your work should depend on the effort and skill you put into it, not on what year you were born. So the value of your work should depend on the effort and skill you put into it. This change will make it harder for teenagers, who are often working to save up for their first car or put money away to pay for college. Vulnerable teens in particular, she outlined, may even choose to drop out of school in order to earn a higher wage, which is very concerning.

Madam Chair, I just don't see why we're rolling things back in some areas. It looks like it's targeted. "They can't speak up for themselves, so we'll take this opportunity to address our campaign promises to, particularly, the employers," whose lobby effort comes through the restaurant association and other kinds of similar things. Our Bill 17, Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act, was very comprehensive. It was done to update something that was 30 years old, that the previous government attempted several times to throw up trial balloons around but, frankly, jammed or chickened out all of those times because they didn't want to upset the employers of this province. That's another thing that is pretty clear, that the balance here has shifted now away from an equal balance between employers' and employees' needs and addressing those needs and towards employers only. Employees give up much – employees give up much – and employees are the losers with regard to this bill, a bill to pick your pockets, and who benefits is not employees.

When we were in government, we made sure that Albertans had modern workplace laws that respected working people, set modern standards, and ensured that Albertans would be treated fairly. We worked on those things after decades of inaction, Madam Chair. The current bill before us does nothing to improve the situation for employees. When you roll back wages – it looks like this is what's going to be happening, not only for youth but for people and their banked overtime – the younger people are muzzled because they don't have a vote here and don't have a say. But that's why we're up here talking about that, spending time making sure that Albertans know that young people, people whose banked overtime is going to be affected, people who want to organize in the workplace, will be affected. Those and many, many other changes will be taking place.

The whole area of labour relations, I think, really needs to be outlined as well, because the certification process that was in place was working, Madam Chair. It was updated and mirroring other provinces who have done the same things. But the update was because PC governments before the current one were not supportive of organized workplaces. They took all actions to try and make sure that Alberta had the most regressive labour organization approaches in the country, and it worked for a long time.

It only worked until 2017, Madam Chair, when we had the foresight to make changes that would improve workplace relationships as a result of conflict being lessened because there were clear rules around how organized unions could be established. Establishing a program to support and assist employees who were seeking that information about their rights as a union member only had the benefit of improving situations in the workplace for both the employer and employees. Strengthening those rules in the workplace reduced the number of complaints that were going to multiple bodies, including the Human Rights Commission and the Labour Relations Board. Those changes are going to be rescinded, and that's another thing that's not going to be working out very well for the people in employment in this province.

Madam Chair, as I said earlier, the balance seems to be shifting back . . . [Mr. Ceci's speaking time expired]

The Chair: Are there any more comments, questions, or amendments to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. A pleasure to have the opportunity to rise this afternoon and speak once again to Bill 2, an act to pick the pockets of Albertans. My colleague the MLA for Calgary-Buffalo – I wanted to say Calgary-Fort. That was his former constituency. He has shifted over to Calgary-Buffalo. He talked about balance, and the word “balance” is one that has come up quite a bit during this legislative session. It's been the topic of conversation on a number of bills: on this bill, on Bill 8. It's been a topic of conversation when we talk about Bill 3 and the corporate tax cut.

Indeed, Madam Chair, that's probably one of the biggest jobs of government, to seek to find balance for the people it serves, and the job of government is to weigh a lot of different interests, to take a look and see what the different interests are. Who are the people that are asking for different policies? What are the rules and regulations in other jurisdictions? What has the history been? It is the job of a government to keep current. When there are rulings or other legal opinions or other things that come forward that expand the rights of individuals or recognize rights that perhaps had been overlooked before, it is the job of a government to keep abreast and to update things on a regular basis. That is a government that is best serving its citizens, and in so doing, it is the job of that government to determine: what is the best balance to bring into play between competing interests?

Now, as my colleagues have noted before me, the history of labour relations, the history of employment standards and rights of workers in the province of Alberta, is unfortunately not a story of balance. Indeed, previous Conservative governments were very out of balance in many respects. The challenge in finding balance, Madam Chair, is sometimes having to weigh, I guess, the interests and the needs or the wants of a particular group with whom you may feel more affinity against another group with whom you perhaps don't quite relate. It's going to be affected perhaps by your world view or – another word that gets tossed around in this Assembly quite a bit – ideology.

But we recognize, Madam Chair – I don't think anybody can argue – that in a province where we went nearly 30 years before some aspects of our employment standards or labour regulations were updated, we had governments that had a very poor sense of balance, so poor in some respects that it's a wonder they managed to stay on their feet.

That was one of the biggest jobs our government had in many respects. Actually, our government had a lot of big jobs. As I've said before in this House, Madam Chair, a number of times I had conversations with people about a wide variety of issues, and people came to me with particular concerns and said: “Why is something this way? Why is it like this? It wasn't like this when I was living in Ontario or when I lived in B.C. or in other places.” I had to tell them, “Well, Alberta is still the only jurisdiction in Canada that . . .” and very often these were not good things. So our government had a lot of work to do, frankly, to catch up on years of Conservative governments that chose to rag the puck on a number of things that they felt were too controversial or might cost them too much with some of their supporters.

We brought forward a bill that made a number of amendments to employment standards in the province of Alberta in seeking to bring Alberta back into balance, as had been demonstrated in other jurisdictions. I think it's fair to say, Madam Chair, that if something is the standard in every other jurisdiction in Canada, a balanced perspective would say: well, that should probably be the standard here, too, unless someone can present a very compelling argument why that balance would somehow be injurious.

Let's take, for example, the question of banked overtime. Alberta was the only jurisdiction in Canada that did not provide for workers when they worked an hour of overtime and would be paid an hour and a half for that overtime to also, then, if they banked that hour of overtime, bank an hour and a half, the actual value of the work they performed. Indeed, I just did a quick survey, Madam Chair, while sitting here awaiting my chance to speak. In B.C. it states: if an employee makes a written request, an employer can create a time bank and credit overtime wages for future time off; however, the time banked must be equal to the wage the employee would have been entitled to in working overtime. In other words, they must bank an hour and a half.

In Saskatchewan for every hour of overtime worked, one and a half hours must be banked.

Moving east to Manitoba, for every hour of overtime worked, one and a half hours of time is banked, which is paid at the regular wage when the employee takes the time off. Again, if the employee earned it at an hour and a half, they bank it at an hour and a half. If they take it as pay, they would be paid at the regular wage rate for overtime, that being an hour and a half.

In Ontario, if an employee has agreed to bank overtime hours, he or she must be given one and a half hours of paid time off for each hour of overtime worked.

In Quebec the employer may, at the request of the employee or in cases provided for by a collective agreement or decree, replace the payment of overtime by paid leave equivalent to the overtime worked plus 50 per cent.

In Nova Scotia: instead of overtime pay, an employee may receive one and a half hours of paid time off work for each hour of overtime worked when an employee and employer agree to do so.

In New Brunswick: banking of hours is actually not permitted in New Brunswick, interestingly. Employers must compensate employees for all overtime hours worked at the minimum overtime wage rate, that being time and a half.

In Prince Edward Island, if the employee requests it in writing and the employer agrees to that request, that employee, under the written agreement, must receive one and a half hours of paid time off for each hour of overtime they have accumulated.

In Newfoundland and Labrador instead of overtime pay an employee must receive one and a half hours of paid time off work for each hour of overtime worked when an employee and employer agree to do so.

Finally, in the Yukon the time off must be calculated by multiplying the hours of overtime worked by the employee by time and one half and be paid at his or her regular rate of pay at the time it was worked.

In every jurisdiction in Canada, Madam Chair – every single jurisdiction – if an employee works an hour of overtime, they either get paid an hour and a half or they bank an hour and a half. Alberta was the only province in Canada that said that employees' time was worth less. We corrected that. Now we have this new government who's coming into power. They've come into power, and their first thing to do is to roll this back. Apparently the Alberta advantage does not apply to workers in this province.

Now, I appreciate what members have shared about the need for some employees to have some flexibility in how they work with their employers. Indeed, that is why, like other provinces in Canada, there were provisions for employment averaging, where an employer and their employee could sit down, they'd come up with an agreement, it's approved, and they have different ways of approaching how they spread out those hours. But this government seems to feel that an hour worked in overtime is somehow worth less to an employee because they choose to bank that time as opposed to taking that as actual pay.

While we recognize that there is the need for there to be an agreement between an employee and an employer, we also recognize that not every workplace necessarily makes it easy for an employee to turn it down if that's what their employer tells them they are going to do. If I'm in a position where I desperately need that job and I'm told that the only way I can have that job is if I agree to the employer's imposition of that agreement and I sign my name to it, it is difficult if you're in that kind of vulnerable position to resist that kind of pressure. I don't think that's a door we should be opening as a government, to offer that opportunity for abuse.

And I am not, in saying that, suggesting that all or even a majority of employers are abusive. Indeed, I can count very few in my own career that I would say would take that kind of action: a very small number, but that number, Madam Chair, is not zero. Often that is going to be people who are in the most vulnerable positions. Governments should not be reopening loopholes to allow for people to pick the pockets of workers in this province, to allow people to take away what is their due right to earn, what is a right that they would enjoy in any other province in Canada.

That brings me back to what we were discussing, Madam Chair, that being balance. Now, it seems to be the view of this government that balance must be tilted to the side of employers. Depending on one's perspective, you can decide how big that tilt is, whether it's a slight grade or whether, after all the changes that this government wants to bring in, it's a steeper hill. The fact is that that has been the history of Conservative governments in this province for many, many years. We see it even now with the legislation that this government wants to bring forward to break collective agreements, a view, again, that we as employers, as the government of Alberta, should have the right to override the duly negotiated rights of our employees, that somehow our quest to address the bottom line, which indeed is an important one, that that end justifies seemingly almost any means. In this bill we see that this government seems to be of the view that they must take the balance we created in bringing Alberta into line with every other jurisdiction in the country, that that balance must somehow be tipped back or there is no way we will ever see economic prosperity in this province again.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

That is not what I'm hearing from businesspeople in my constituency, Mr. Chair. That is not what I'm hearing from young entrepreneurs who are building neighbourhood businesses, who have indeed built franchises, suites of multiple businesses that are thriving within the Edmonton downtown core, who pay their employees above minimum wage and who treat them with the due dignity and respect that an employee, I believe, deserves and indeed that we have codified in law and that this government now wishes to roll back. This is not balance. This is tipping the balance. It betrays, I think, in many respects the disrespect in some ways – I don't know if that's quite the correct word; the lack of regard maybe – that some members of this Legislature seem to have for working people.

By all means, Mr. Chair, we should have respect for entrepreneurs. I respect people that start a business and operate a business. I recognize the risks that are involved. In my time as a customer service agent and a facilitator for the Canada Revenue Agency at the business inquiries call centre I talked with many business owners and I heard from them the challenges they faced. I talked with them about payroll. I talked with them about GST. I respect the challenge that comes with that.

But to support and empower entrepreneurs, we do not have to roll back the rights of workers. Alberta workers do not have to be less than workers in any other province in Canada in order for entrepreneurs in our province to succeed. In some respects I would say that that is an insult to entrepreneurs in Alberta, to suggest that they are unable to thrive under the same conditions that entrepreneurs in other provinces can.

I recognize that we have come through a difficult time as a province, and indeed we are still emerging from that. I recognize that with that, there have been challenges for many people that operate businesses. Folks that operated restaurants and bars and other service industries in downtown Calgary indeed would have felt an impact from the world-wide drop in the price of oil and the impact that it had there. There are many things that you could point to and say were the issue there. There are many things that you could point to that indeed lie at the feet of many governments successively in this province, in the decisions on how they were going to structure the economy, how they were going to make investments, and how dependent they were going to be on oil and gas royalties to fund government services. There are a number of decisions that cascade up to this point, but frankly, Madam Chair, I do not believe that the culmination of those decisions should be borne by Alberta workers.

Our work over our four years in government was to try to find that balance. Were we successful in every front? Probably not. Nobody has a one thousand batting record in government. These are complex, difficult decisions to make. But the simplistic narrative that is being brought forward by this government, that by picking the pockets of Alberta workers they will somehow restore prosperity, it's a flimsy illusion.

The problems that we have, the difficulties that we need to face are for more complex than simply giving 4 and a half billion dollars back to wealthy corporations which may or may not choose to invest that back in the province and create jobs. It is not telling employees that the work that they are doing is worth less in Alberta than it is worth in any other province in Canada. It does not lie in telling young people that because they are under the age of 18, regardless of what experience or skill or whatever they have, they are worth $2 less an hour. We do not help get other people ahead by handicapping workers.

I recognize that this is a point of philosophical disagreement, ideological disagreement, even, Madam Chair, between ourselves and this government. They will have the power to pass this legislation and move ahead, and I hope that they will be able to demonstrate that what they say this is going to do, it actually does. If not, this is clearly going to hurt Alberta workers. This going to create an imbalance between our province and every other province in Canada. It has the potential to exacerbate poverty for vulnerable individuals.

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any comments, questions, or amendments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise again to speak against Bill 2, a pick-your-pockets bill. As members of Her Majesty's Official Opposition, you've heard over and over how we are against this bill and that on this side of the House we are standing up for hard-working Albertans. We made sure that Albertans had modern workplace laws that respected working people. We set modern standards and ensured that Albertans were treated fairly. After decades of inaction hard-working Albertans finally had the same rights and benefits as every other Canadian. We followed through on our promise to phase in a $15 minimum wage so people didn't have to go from work to the food bank. We made workplaces more family friendly. We introduced job-protecting leaves and improved maternity leave and compassionate care standards.

We put a lot of time and effort into studying the impacts of minimum wage. We know that it put more dollars into the pockets of hard-working Albertans, who live, work, and spend their money here. We poured over studies, finding positive effects of raising minimum wage, effects like increased consumer spending, lower wage inequality, and better health outcomes with little negative impact on overall employment levels, Madam Chair. The opposition can study and release data, but it had better include the impacts on women, consumer spending, health, poverty, and so much more.

You've heard me speak in this House about the pride I take in being a social worker. I saw firsthand the impacts of poverty on all aspects of people's lives. Unfortunately, Madam Chair, most of the people impacted were women and children. These families had higher rates of illness, lower education, limited housing ability, and the list goes on. On this side of the House we believe that Albertans, young or old, deserve equal pay for equal work. Rolling back the minimum wage for young people demonstrates a lack of compassion and a lack of respect for young workers. The value of your work should depend on the effort and the skill that you put in, not what year you were born.

The UCP is also proposing to implement $2 an hour wage cuts to students between the ages of 13 and 17. The $13 an hour minimum wage applies for the first 28 hours worked in a week while school is in session. If they work more than 28 hours in a week, they must be paid the general minimum wage for every hour beyond the first 28. During breaks and summer holidays the youth rate will apply to all hours worked. This could lead vulnerable youth to choose to drop out of school in order to earn a higher wage, which is very concerning to members on this side of the House, Madam Chair.

I would like to again talk briefly about some of these vulnerable youth, specifically young parents. I shared my personal story in this House about being a young single mother myself. Having worked with young parents for several years, I can speak first-hand to the negative impacts that this harmful legislation will have on these young people and their families, that depend on them. For young parents to be able to continue with their schooling is absolutely essential not only to their future but to the future of their children, that rely on them. Being able to support these families is so important. Proposing legislation that creates a dilemma between furthering their education or dropping out of school in order to increase the minimum wage differential is very concerning. Many young parents want to continue with their education. However, many face barriers such as access to affordable child care, access to transportation, access to affordable housing, and access to good-paying jobs.

Many of these young parents work in the service industry as they are putting themselves through school. The UCP is also proposing a liquor server differential wage. We believe that the minimum wage needs to be guaranteed for hard-working Albertans regardless of what place of business they work in. The government should not be creating different tiers of workers. We know that tips are not a stable form of income. Tips vary shift by shift, night by night, and business by business. A nightclub in Edmonton is different than a restaurant in Vegreville. You can't rely on an unstable source of income. When the UCP says that all servers make up the difference in tips, Madam Chair, how can they guarantee that?

Their pick-your-pockets bill will take your overtime, steal your holiday pay, and cut your holiday pay to pay for their big tax gift to corporations. This pick-your-pocket bill will impact roughly 400,000 Albertans working overtime to care for themselves and their families. Albertans in oil and gas, construction, and the skilled trades will be hit hard. These are Albertans working to a project deadline, who often put in the extra hours to get the job done and then take the paid time off later. If you're an oil and gas worker making average pay, putting in 10 overtime hours per week on a 12-week project, that's 120 hours in paid time off. The difference between banking that pay at time and a half pay versus straight time is over $2,500, Madam Chair. That's a huge difference for working people. We're talking hundreds to thousands of dollars for people going above and beyond in the workplace, day in and day out.

What happens when the worker accumulated overtime with the understanding that they were going to receive 1.5 hours for each overtime hour? It's not taught to students or non-unionized workers to negotiate their rights as an employee. Who is to sit down with workers and explain that they have the right to request their overtime to be paid out? How will employers respond to that negotiating process, if they even allow the discussion to take place to begin with? There is absolutely a power dynamic at play in these discussions no matter how you frame this.

Employers' bottom-line profits are affected if they pay out overtime. Will they be open to doing so when they know that paying out overtime will be at 1.5 hours for each hour worked versus time in lieu, which is hour for hour? The workers' time is not valued as it was in our legislation. Workers are at the mercy of employers' discretion to honour their important work, that generates those profits for the employers. How can members sit across there, vote this through, look Albertans in the eyes, and say, "Your work is not valued"?

Many of my constituents work in the trades, and their overtime is what has helped the families of Edmonton-Castle Downs get through economic downturns. When I was on the doors, I heard loud and clear from all constituents that overtime was the most important issue that crossed all demographics. I heard many times that the previous election reflected Alberta's wishes for the future of Alberta. Well, Edmonton-Castle Downs voted overwhelmingly against losing their overtime hours, losing their value.

I now have constituents coming to my office with fears that: "Now that this has been introduced, what will this mean for me? What will this mean for my family?" One constituent came in so upset that there is an expectation on workers to know how to negotiate to have their overtime paid out at time and a half instead of time in lieu at hour for hour. He's never had to do this before, Madam Chair. His concerns are that if he opposes the employer, he is at risk of losing his job. Therein lies the rub, the power dynamic at play that we worked to eliminate for workers' rights. He is speaking with his co-workers about how to have these discussions.

A working Alberta does not pit workers against employers. That is what this bill does. We both have a large stake in the outcome, workers needing their hours to be honoured for what they have earned versus the business bottom line. Workers take on overtime to help pay for a roof over their head. Workers take on overtime to help pay for braces. Workers take on overtime to help pay for their children's tuition costs. Because of this overtime, Madam Chair, workers miss out on major life moments by taking on overtime for the benefits of finishing the job and for earning additional money for their family to succeed in Alberta. Business bottom lines do not hug your child at night and tuck them in. Business bottom lines do not pay for formula and diapers. Business bottom lines cannot pay for missing a first step or a first word or a first "I love you."

What morale will this leave for the workforce? How will this play out for the economy if Alberta doesn't have that minimum of 2,500 additional dollars in their pocket? To hear the UCP repeat over and over that the $1,000 of the carbon tax deserves to be in the hands of Albertans: what is the difference when they are taking over $2,500 from Albertans? This is a prime example that they were concerned not with the amount of money in the hands of Alberta but with where the money from Albertans was going. Instead of having that money back in Alberta circulation, they would rather it be back in the hands of employers like large corporations, where their profits aren't reflected in the Alberta economy. For a party that shouts to the rooftops that they are about jobs and the economy of Alberta, this does not sound like they are at all concerned about Alberta's economy. The voters in Alberta voted for more jobs and an improved economy, but they did not vote for losing money out of the Alberta economy, and that is what this bill does.

I'd like to talk a little bit more about some of the things that we did with the minimum wage increase and some of the information that it has provided. We know that on October 1 our government increased the minimum wage to $15 an hour to help hard-working families. More than a quarter million Albertans earn less than $15 an hour. They represent over 11 per cent of all workers: 24 per cent are age 15 to 19, over 40 per cent are age 20 to 34, and over 12 per cent are age 55-plus. Alberta's overall employment increased almost 2 per cent from October 2015 to August 2018. Alberta's employment in the three lowest paying occupations – sales support, service support, and salespersons – increased, Madam Chair, by about 6 per cent during that time. Employment in retail trade, the largest minimum wage sector, increased 4.8 per cent from August 2017 to August 2018.

We introduced Bill 17, the Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act, in 2017. We know and we heard all throughout that time that Alberta had some of the oldest workplace legislation in Canada. Prior to our government's change, both the Employment Standards Code and Labour Relations Code had not been significantly updated in almost 30 years. I'm proud of the work that our government did to update those codes. While reviews of the code were done by previous governments in 2007 and 2014, no action was taken, Madam Chair.

Following a focused review of existing laws and over 7,300 submissions from businesses, industry, organized labour, academics, municipalities, nonprofits, and the general public we passed a series of changes as part of Bill 17. I'm curious, Madam Chair, who this government has consulted with when they introduced this piece of legislation. I feel that it's not as robust as what was done before because some of this simply would not have been introduced as part of the legislation.

Some of the Employment Standards Code changes that we made were that we repealed the ability for employers to pay employees with disabilities less than minimum wage.

We created job protection extended to 27 weeks from eight weeks to better align with federal employment insurance benefits around compassionate care leave, and caregiver status was expanded to include nonprimary caregivers, Madam Chair.

The long-term illness and injury leave: a new unpaid leave that provides up to 16 weeks of job protection per year for long-term personal sickness and injury. It also aligned with the federal employment insurance program.

Personal and family responsibility leave was an unpaid new leave that provided up to five days of job protection per year for personal sickness or short-term care of an immediate family member, including attending to personal emergencies and caregiver responsibilities related to the education of a child.

The bereavement leave was a new unpaid leave that provides up to three days of job protection per year for bereavement of an immediate family member.

One that I'm very proud of, Madam Chair, was a domestic violence leave, a new unpaid leave that provides up to 10 days of job protection per year for employees addressing a situation of domestic violence. This, I think, was essential in the legislation because we know that people fleeing domestic violence don't often identify to their employer why they're away. They may be sick. They may be dealing with other excuses that they're trying to create to keep their job. By introducing this piece of legislation, it gives permission for people to be honest with their employer about what's really happening at home and not fear losing their job because of that. So I'm very proud of that piece that we had added.

We also created citizenship ceremony leave, which is a new unpaid leave that provides up to half a day of job protection for employees attending a citizenship ceremony, Madam Chair. I know that in my role as an MLA I have had the incredible pleasure to be able to speak and preside at several community citizenship ceremonies. It is an absolutely heartwarming experience having people becoming Canadians, saying the oath, and seeing their family, their supporters, their loved ones coming to support them in that process. Several times I have taken the oath at the same time with them, and it's just, like I mentioned, an absolute honour. To be able to know that we provided an unpaid leave so that they could attend that ceremony with job protection is something that I'm very proud of because it's an important part of being engaged in your community and being able to participate in that without the fear of losing your job. I think it's a very important process.

One that is upsetting that it was needed but I am very happy that it was included was the critical illness of a child, a new unpaid leave that provides up to 36 weeks of job protection for parents of critically ill or injured children. It aligned with the federal employment insurance program.

We included a new unpaid leave for the death or disappearance of a child, 52 weeks of job protection for employees whose child disappeared as the result of a crime or up to 104 weeks if a child died as a result of a crime. Again, this aligned with the federal employment insurance program.

Leave eligibility: the period for current and new leave set as 90 days rather than one year.

The maternity and parental leave: job protection for parental leave extended from 37 to 52 weeks to better align with proposed federal employment insurance benefits.

Legislation for the following, modified such that an employee may be terminated during the notice entitlement period only for situations where the business is closed or suspended: an employee whose pregnancy terminates within 16 weeks of the due date would still be eligible for maternity leave. I think that's a really important piece, Madam Chair, because for someone who has experienced a pregnancy termination, it can be devastating, and it has a huge impact on your life. Being able to take the time to grieve and to process that loss is huge. To not have to worry about your job being at risk, I think, is something that we are very proud of on this side of the House.

Rest periods: employees require a minimum of a 30-minute break, paid or unpaid, for every five hours of consecutive employment.

Overtime, Madam Chair: overtime agreements allow time to be banked for six months rather than the current three months. Like every other jurisdiction in Canada, overtime banking is calculated at 1.5 for all hours worked rather than hour for hour. Now, this was something that I heard, over and over, all across the province, workers were very, very appreciative of because Alberta was the only place in Canada that didn't acknowledge that. Now Bill 2 is taking this backwards.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to be in this House today and speak to important disagreements about legislation being brought into the House. I always welcome that opportunity because I think it is a true reflection of that which we all value, which is democracy and a chance to have some reasoned arguments about the differences we have in terms of approaching the well-being of Albertans, an opportunity to speak to the concerns I have about how this legislation shifts some of the well-being of some individuals within the province for the benefit of others and the concern I have when you're taking a side of that nature and who you're picking to support and who you're not picking to support. I think that's the underlying concern that I have here.

As I've addressed in the House before, I think that one of the responsibilities of the government is to do some assessment of society and have some sense that some people in society are more vulnerable than others and therefore are going to require some kind of structural support in order to do well and be well in society, will need the rules to be set up in such a way that they will be protected and supported when they can't themselves achieve that kind of protection, because they're a single individual against a larger institution or against a larger majority of people or perhaps because they have some personal vulnerability which prevents them from achieving and seeking out the things that would be good for them in society.

We know that people are gifted differently. Some people will do well in any circumstance, will rise to the occasion, will face very serious challenges, and will be able to find ways to move through those challenges and find success and, in doing so, will create benefits not only for themselves but often for other people, their family members or even the community around them. Those people we celebrate. Those people we are quite happy to see succeed. We get behind them and cheer them on and try to pave the way for them when we can.

But we know that other people will just not be able to do that in quite the same way, that other people simply don't have the type of background, whatever it is – I wish we knew what it was – that allows them to succeed against all odds. As a result, it's often important that government understand that there's going to be that differential and to try, as much as possible, to ensure that people do not suffer as a result of not having whatever it is that allows that success to be possible for others.

That's part of my concern about all of this legislation here, that we do have people in society who need us to ensure that they have a set of rights and that those rights are protected and that those rights are encouraged and that, within those rights, they are given the best opportunity to succeed, just the chance to do the best that they can. Sometimes we have to worry that the balance of power in our society is not evenly distributed. That means that government, which has power, can help to share their power with the people who are more powerless in order to create that balanced and even playing field.

That was largely what was behind our decision to bring in the Fair and Family-friendly Workplaces Act in the previous Legislature. It was a chance for us to look at: how do we create the best opportunity for people who are employees of businesses so that they can become successful and they can derive benefit from the well-being that Alberta so richly creates for so many people?

You know, I'm concerned here at this point that this government has come in and very quickly after being elected, without having an opportunity – of course, it simply didn't have the opportunity – not taking the opportunity to go out and to consult more widely and to begin to assess those concerns we have about who's going to benefit from these changes and who's going to suffer from these changes, to do a consultation but, more than a consultation, to do an assessment of: where is the vulnerability, where is the disproportionate amount of power, and how do we work as a society in order to create a more equal and balanced playing field so that one person does not have advantage over another?

On this particular legislation – I've had a chance to speak to it in the past, and I've addressed some of the concerns that I have – I want to speak about one particular thing that I haven't had a chance to address until this day. That is that for many people we have to worry that they have what we refer to as precarious work; that is, it's not dependable. It's not like many of us, like those of us in this Legislature. We know that at the end of every month we will receive a paycheque, and that paycheque will be exactly the same from month to month. We can do our budget, and we can schedule our lives around that, and we can derive great benefit from the satisfaction it gives us that we have that kind of stability and security from fear of finding yourself in a very difficult financial spot, because you can plan for it.

Now, a very high number of workers in any province, of course, don't have that kind of work. Their work depends on the jobs that happen to come along, on the number of hours they're able to acquire from employers, and that goes up and down. It's really very much out of their control. It's not like they can simply choose for a new building to be built, for a new industry to be initiated. They have to wait. They have to wait to see what the world has to offer.

The world, you know, is not that settled and consistent a place. Things happen. The price of oil goes up and goes down. I know that it's often commented that in the time that we were in government, a lot of jobs were lost in this province as a result of changes in oil prices. Now, the government likes to blame that on policy that we have, but I just want to remind government members and, of course, everyone in the House that if you actually look at when the job losses began to occur, it was actually six months before we got elected. The most dramatic drop in job losses was actually not in our government but prior to our government. Between November 2014 and June 2015: that's when the vast majority of jobs were actually lost.

Now, unfortunately, we were hoping that there would be a quick recovery and that a lot of those jobs would come back, but they didn't. That's very unfortunate, but it didn't have to do with government policy. It had to do with world events. It had to do with things that happened not here in Alberta and not even in Canada but in the United States and other countries of the world that caused there to be this precarious set of circumstances that, of course, led to businesses being worried and businesses making decisions to contract in order to be able to kind of weather the storm. That makes sense. Nobody here would be against businesses making decisions to weather the storm, to get through this difficult time so that they can succeed in the new time that comes along when the weather changes and things are better.

But we would also want that for workers. We would also want workers to be able to weather the storm, to be able to have ways of getting themselves through those bad moments when the jobs just aren't coming, when they have to wait it out a little bit, when they have to wait their turn because there are only so many positions available and there are more people looking for those pieces of work. That's the time that I'm most worried about here.

The reason why I'm bringing that up is because I think overtime pay is one of those strategies that was available to workers for a long time. You could bank your overtime pay at one and a half times your regular salary and keep that as banked overtime until the day arrived when your precarious work took a negative turn and suddenly you found yourself, for perhaps weeks and sometimes perhaps months, without proper employment and therefore a proper income. People were able to make that decision, but they would put this money aside, and then when life got rough, when the vagaries of employment occurred in your world, you were able to know that you had this nest egg that you could draw on.

Now, of course, that still exists to some degree because it can still be banked at a 1 to 1 ratio. But what was happening before, of course, is that people were able to bank it at a higher ratio. Let's talk about why that higher ratio was even created in the first place because I think that's important. In many ways there is a disbalance between employers and employees. All the employee has to offer is their labour. That's it. That's all they can bring to the situation. They can work hard. They can do their best to help the company get better. They can be, you know, hard-working, thoughtful people who contribute above and beyond. But that's it. They can just be good employees.

Employers have a variety of other things that they're able to do. They can make decisions that have extremely serious effects on workers. Having the opportunity for workers to be able to negotiate wages with their employer is a very important thing to occur because it allowed them to come to the table with something, to be able to say: look, I want to be able to work on your behalf so that your company grows, you gain profits, but I need to have some power at that table, not just take whatever comes my way.

One of the things that came from many years of union negotiations in Canada and, of course, around the world was the fact that we needed to find a way to create a win-win. An employer is in a good situation. They've got more work to be done. They've got things they want to have happen, so they go to the employees, and they ask them to put in more time. It's a win for them if the employee puts in more time because they can do more of whatever it is that they do well. If they're selling the product, if they're selling a service, they can do more of that. They can drive the benefits of that, particularly profits, of course, and that's a win on the employer's side.

What the old system had was a win also for the employee. It wasn't just a demand for more work. It wasn't just someone with power telling you: if you want to keep your job, you're going to give me more hours. It was a negotiation. It was an agreement. "Look, if you're going to get this win of being able to make more profits because I'm putting in more hours, then give me a win back. Give me a win back so I can take care of my life when life is precarious, when the work isn't there, so that I can bank hours so I can draw it out later. We both get a win out of this. You get more profits, and I get more profits. Kind of the same thing." That's a nice deal. It's nice because it brings everybody to the table. It gives everybody a win to go home with and helps to reduce the precariousness of income for people who don't know whether or not they're always going to have the work.

Now, this turns out to be a fairly significant amount of money for many people. In the oil and gas industry, for example, a lot of people work overtime consistently. They work overtime every day for weeks at a time. I notice that some of the stats indicate that if you put in about 10 hours extra a week over a period of three months, a little more than 120 hours for that three-month period, that can have the difference of $2,500 to $2,600 in terms of your household income. That's a lot of money to put aside. If you were able to put that money aside over a period of years, then you would have enough money to pay your rent and your groceries sometimes for months at a time.

I know a number of people who work in areas like carpentry, plumbing, and other kinds of technical trades that have really taken advantage of that when times got tough, when they knew it was going to be three, six months between the job that they have now and the next job that came down the road. Having that amount of money taken away from them just puts them more into that precarious world. You know, we can't stop all the vagaries of life – I understand that – but it's always incumbent upon us to try to find ways to create structures in society that provide that kind of stability when we can. It's a possibility, and it's a nice one because it's a win-win kind of possibility. It allows both the employer and the employee to get some extra benefit.

Now, I know employers may be concerned. "Well, then I'm paying out more money, and that's something of a loss in terms of my profit margin." Of course, if they're going to make more money, they have to do that calculation. Is it worth the extra time and a half? If it is, well, great. Good for them. We don't have a problem then. If it's not, then they do have another choice. That other choice is that they simply hire more people to do the job so that overtime isn't required. They can reduce the amount of overtime they're paying out by making decisions to employ more people, which is, again, a win-win for us here in the province of Alberta. If we have employers making the decision to hire more people, that's a satisfactory outcome as well.

What I'm just arguing for is that there has been a good balance up till now in terms of people being able to negotiate their lives, to take care of the bad moments, and to move on in a positive, satisfactory kind of way. I would really like to see that continue, and I'm very concerned that we are moving away from that position in terms of the decisions that we're making right now. That is going to have an effect on somewhere around 400,000 Albertans who are included in this particular scenario that we're talking about, so it really has a huge effect on a large number of people.

I know I heard about this quite often on the doorstep because, of course, many people living in Edmonton were people whose partners would fly up to places like Fort McMurray or other places typically in northern Alberta and come back. You know, while the employee who is moving up to Fort McMurray is up there, they might as well work overtime. They're not at home with their family anyway, so it's a great way to put in some extra hours, get some extra money, and then come home and be able to live the life that we all desire with our families, with the benefits that they were able to accrue and the contribution that they're able to make to the GDP in the province of Alberta and to the local economy.

When they come home and they have that extra money, I can tell you that most employees spend that money in the local community, and that's one of the really nice things about employees, that that's where their dollars are spent. Their dollars are spent on things that the family needs. It allows them to buy a vehicle for the family. It allows them to perhaps go out to a restaurant every once in a while. It allows them to live a good life. Most of that is spent here, in the province of Alberta, which, again, turns over and increases the GDP here in the province of Alberta. So it's a really positive thing when we have that happening.

I want to take a moment to move on and speak a little bit more about the decision to lower student wages, from $15 an hour to $13 an hour. Again, I'm worried about the nature of the outcome of this, the unintended consequences that this will have for many young people, particularly with regard to the concern of precariousness in terms of employment. Now there is a complex set of rules here. There is red tape involved in the strategy that has been established for how people will be paid, how much, so much up to 28 hours, so much if you're in school or if you're not in school. Again, I've spoken to the fact that I'm very concerned that now people are not only not being paid for the work that they're doing, but they're also being paid based on some externality such as whether or not they're in school or whether they happen to be 18 or they happen to be 17. These are things that are very disconcerting for us here.

I'm also concerned that it sets up this competition between people who are in school and the people who are out of school, that it sets up a competition between people who are under 18 and people who are over 18, and that it makes their life precarious. The employers naturally will be in the position of wanting to maximize their profits and will start to make decisions that are difficult for employees, decisions that will pit them against their co-workers so that if you're 17, you might have an advantage over an 18-year-old because you can be paid less. Then suddenly you turn 18, and your work becomes precarious again because there's someone else who will be working for less.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any other members wishing to speak or offer amendments to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and discuss Bill 2. I have a couple of concerns and a couple of comments that I'd like to make in regard to the bill, but before I do that, for the sake of the House, I have an amendment. I will just take one copy. Would you like me to read it into the record or wait till you have a copy?

The Chair: Just wait till I have a copy, please.

This amendment will be known as amendment A1.

Member for Edmonton-Manning, please proceed.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will read it into the record. I move that Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, be amended in section 1(2)(a) in the proposed section 23(2)(a) by adding "at least" after "overtime pay will be provided, taken and paid at."

Now, the reason for this amendment is that when we look at the legislation and the way that it reads as of right now, there is a concern around the fact that without the words "at least" this creates a loophole. The reason for what we would perceive as being a loophole to this legislation would be that there are existing contracts that private-sector employers have signed with their employees that already guarantee time-and-a-half pay. With the changes to this legislation, without adding "at least," an employer could interpret this by saying: well, the legislation says that I no longer have to honour that contract at time and a half, and I'm only now required to have to pay you straight time. What will happen is that we might see contracts in the private sector and, let's say, potentially, looking at some bills that are coming forward such as Bill 9, that maybe the public-sector employer would also like to look at this as an option, to not have to pay time and a half even though there's contracted language in regard to it.

This is another way for this government to create policy that actually allows the employer to say, "Well, the legislation now says that I can't pay you time and a half," even though the government has repeatedly said: well, it's a negotiation between the employer and the employee. We know how well negotiations go between this particular employer and their employees. So I would question the relevancy of whether or not that argument is valid. Again, it's just an opportunity to pick the pockets of our workers.

I would like to have the belief that the majority of the employers in our province wouldn't look at this and take it as an opportunity to not have to pay time and a half to workers that are currently working and have contracts that exist at time and a half. However, if there is a loophole and there is an opportunity, some may decide that it makes sense to be able to renege on a contract or to renege on paying workers time and a half when they don't necessarily have to.

I feel like this amendment is very important to this piece of legislation because it clarifies, and it's a little bit of a housekeeping tool to say that "at least" exists within this legislation instead of the way that it reads currently to be paid, which is at a "rate at a time that the employee could have worked and received wages from the employer." Again, we recognize that there are 400,000 Albertans that are going to be impacted by this piece of legislation. I would put out there that there might be an additional 180,000 workers that are impacted by Bill 9, that could potentially be impacted by this as well, for a total of 580,000 Albertans.

You know, again, I'm not trying to imply that employers are going to break their contracts. I mean, we would never want to do that. We would never like to think that any employer in this province would ever want to break a contract because that could potentially be illegal, depending on the contract that's signed. But if there's an opportunity and there's a loophole that exists within pieces of legislation that could allow breaching of contracts, some might decide to try to take that route and see what happens.

I would encourage all members of the House to consider this amendment. It's a pretty reasonable amendment, I think. It's only two words. It's not substantial by any means, no. You know, be fair to the workers that are already working time and a half, that deserve to get paid out with their existing contracts, let's honour the contracts in Alberta. Let's ensure that employers understand that they don't have to pay employees at straight time, as this could be potentially interpreted. Let's just clean it up a little bit and make sure that employers understand that they have the opportunity to still pay at one and a half times versus it having to be at straight time because I think that's a substantial change for employees. I think it's important that employers understand that they can negotiate and make it time and a half and that they can pay their employees whatever they feel is a fair wage and fair compensation for their overtime, and the only way that we can do that is by making sure that this language is clear so that they don't feel like this government is now telling them that the only salary they can pay and the only compensation they can pay is straight time.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you, Member for Edmonton-Manning, for bringing forward this amendment, that would certainly clarify that the minimum required for the employer is the wage rate, but there is no restriction as such in the legislation should they want it to be at a higher rate. I think the reason that this amendment is important is that we have heard many times from that side of the House that this bill will leave open the opportunity for employers and employees to negotiate the overtime. At least that intent will be reflected if we pass this amendment. It's a very common-sense, practical amendment brought forward by my colleague. I don't see any issue with it such that the government side won't support this amendment.

We know that ever since the UCP got the mandate, including this act, many other pieces of legislation, Bill 9, they're all designed to attack Alberta workers' rights. This piece of legislation, pick-your-pockets legislation, is essentially reversing all the changes that were brought forward by the previous government making workplaces more family friendly, introducing job-protected leaves, improving maternity leaves, compassionate care standards, and all those things. Where there is an opportunity to make this bill a bit more clear, I think that's the one, and we should certainly support this amendment.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

In general, I guess, this piece of legislation – I think the name says An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. I think their idea of making Alberta open for business attacks workers, takes their rights away. That's exactly what this piece of legislation is doing. It's picking pockets by cutting overtime, by taking away holiday pay, by cutting holiday pay, and by reducing youth minimum wage and all that to give a gift to corporations, multinational corporations.

It makes changes to employment standards and labour relations that will take Alberta backwards and not forward. When we were in government, I think we conducted a review. We consulted with workers. We consulted with those representing our workers, those organizations. We consulted with businesses, and the changes we brought forward were common-sense changes, and they were not the radical, ideological changes as sometimes the other side would want to describe them. They were merely changes that will bring Alberta at par with other Canadian jurisdictions.

When we look at other Canadian jurisdictions, time and a half pay for overtime work, that's pretty much the norm, but here in Alberta we are seeing that they're after reversing that change that was brought forward after years and years of struggle from the labour movement, Albertans asking for those changes, and the previous Conservative government not paying any attention. Finally, when we became government, we brought forward those changes.

Similarly, when we became government, Alberta was towards the lower end of minimum wage. We increased the minimum wage to make sure that Albertans who go to work, full-time work, are able to put food on the table, are able to meet their basic needs. What we are seeing here is that they are reducing minimum wage as well from $15 to $13 for kids age 16 to 18. I think, as has been said by my colleagues here, a former minister and the MLA for Edmonton-Mill Woods, that work should never depend on your age. It should depend on your skill. It should depend on what you have to offer, but here we are seeing an arbitrary kind of two-tier wage system that only depends on how old you are. I think that discriminates against young workers in this province just because they are young, just because of their age. I don't think that in any way, shape, or manner that kind of policy will help us create jobs.

When Albertans elected this government, they were promised jobs, they were promised a pipeline, they were promised prosperity. So far, when we look at their legislative agenda, what we are seeing here is that, on one hand, they are trying to do their best to benefit their donors, benefit the wealthiest in this province, but at the expense of an attack on workers. Bill 2 does the same thing. Bill 9 does the same thing. Bill 3 does the same thing.

This piece of legislation is reversing the progress that was made under the previous government, under our government. It's repealing minimum wage, and I don't think that we heard during the campaign that they will be reversing minimum wage. Similarly, I don't think Albertans voted for their compassionate care leave, that was adjusted after a long wait, to be taken away. They didn't vote for their long-term illness and injury leave to be abolished. They didn't vote for their personal family responsibility leave to be taken away. They didn't vote for their bereavement leave to be taken away. They didn't vote for their domestic violence leave to be taken away. In fact, if they voted for anything, they voted for jobs, they voted for the economy, they voted for pipelines.

So far what we see from this government, I think, the evidence is that despite their repeal of the carbon tax, despite their big tax corporate giveaway of 4-plus billion dollars, what we are seeing in Calgary is that there is more job loss. There is more unemployment in Calgary. Certainly, those things that they did in the name of the economy, in the name of job creation didn't have the intended impact on the economy.

As was mentioned earlier today, just in the last week Repsol is laying off workers in Calgary. They're laying off workers from their field offices across Alberta, two different places in Alberta. Similarly, Nexen is also laying off people in Calgary. If their policy was to have any positive impact, if their policy – they were describing that the reason for job losses is that there is a carbon tax. The reason for job losses: maybe the taxes are high. Both those things, I guess, are in the UCP's legislative agenda. One has already been passed. If that was the reason, I don't think we will see more job loss in Calgary. We won't see companies shutting down their field offices, companies restructuring them. So certainly that's not the issue. That's not the way you create jobs, by pitting businesses against Alberta workers.

This piece of legislation is an important one and will impact more than half a million Albertans. That's pretty much half of what you claimed your mandate to be. So that's half of your mandate that will be impacted by this piece of legislation.

The overtime pay plays a very critical role. Those who work at minimum wage jobs, those who work at low-paying jobs, and even those who are working in oil and gas, construction, skilled trades, they work hard. They work overtime so that they can meet their needs, and this change will affect them somewhere around $2,500. It's a huge, huge amount of money for those who work hard to earn this overtime, and now with this law they will see that $2,500 taken away from them. Their hard work is not valued.

At the same time they will see that this government would rather give $4.5 billion in tax breaks for the corporations, for the wealthiest, for multinational corporations but not to hard-working Albertans, who work hard each and every day in the oil and gas sector, who work hard each and every day in the construction sector, who work hard in our health care system, in our education system. All those Albertans are getting impacted by this only so that the UCP government can pursue their ideological agenda of providing $4.5 billion in tax breaks so they can follow the policies of the past, trickle-down economics, supply-side economic policies that have failed all across the globe and also here in Alberta many, many times before.

If they really want to create jobs, if they really want to help the economy, I think one way of doing that would be to create more takeaway capacity for our energy sector. There were oil-by-rail contracts signed by the previous government, which would have helped the Alberta economy to take another 120,000 barrels to market. That would have created jobs; that would have attracted investment. But what we are seeing here is that those contracts are being threatened. There's no answer. We were told that the private sector will take on that capacity and will create that capacity. When asked during question period how many barrels of capacity were added, there is absolutely zero evidence that any barrels, no capacity, was created through the private sector. When we brought those agreements, I think we looked into the market capacity, we looked into the existing capacity, and it was a well-thought-out decision that was based on sound advice from the Department of Energy and public service, but here we are. We will cut overtime, but we will not do anything to create jobs or attract investments.

They're cutting, through this, not only overtime pay but also young workers' wages. They're cutting it just based on their age. It should never depend on someone's age; rather it should be fair, and it should be based on equal pay for equal work and based on the effort and skill you put into any work. Instead, we are told that this cut somehow magically will also increase jobs for youth. There is no evidence that cutting existing workers' pay will create more jobs because businesses have a background in economics and businesses will only hire the amount of labour that they need, whether it's at $15 or $13. Somehow if the wage drops, they will not create additional positions that they don't need. There will only be positions that they need. They will only employ labour that they can accommodate and that they need. There is no economic theory whatsoever that I am aware of – if they can point to some, I would be happy to listen and look it up. Throughout my education, up until my master's in economics, I never heard of an economic theory that says that cutting youth wages will somehow create more youth jobs, because businesses will only hire as much labour as they need, regardless of what the cost of that labour is. That's a critical factor in production that will account for that, whether it's higher or lower, but that will not create jobs.

This piece of legislation, again, is attacking youth. Somehow they think that that will magically create jobs. All of that is done in the name of making Alberta open for business. There is not a hint of that in this piece of legislation. What really is there is that they're taking overtime pay away, they're attacking their leaves, they're attacking their wages, and somehow that opens Alberta for business. I think a fair Alberta, an Alberta that looks out for businesses, looks out for workers, looks out for all Albertans, doesn't have to pit workers and businesses against each other. It doesn't have to pit the economy and the environment against each other. It doesn't have to hide these attacks in the name of business. It doesn't have to name the bill in such a way that no Albertan would ever guess that in Alberta, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business will have everything that amounts to an attack on Alberta workers.

At least this amendment put forth by my colleague from Edmonton-Manning will ensure what we heard from the other side, that their intention is that employer and employee can negotiate overtime. That's another thing, whether these negotiations are possible or not, but it leaves room there that the employer at least has to pay the employee at the wage rate. Should they choose to pay more, at least the legislation is open to that idea.

I think it's a common-sense amendment that will help clarify their intention as described by them. Although I believe that no amount of amendments, no amount of tweaks to this legislation will make this bill acceptable to Alberta workers, will make this bill acceptable to those who are working, those who are earning minimum wage. No amount of amendments will make this bill acceptable to those whose overtime is taken away in the amount of $2,500, those whose leaves are taken away. No amount of amendments will kind of strike a balance where we can say that it's a fair piece of legislation and that it strikes a fair balance between employers and employees.

It's clearly tilted towards businesses along with their other acts, for instance, Bill 9, Bill 3, everything. I think the only people who stand to lose in these pieces of legislation are working Albertans, those who provide essential and important services every day, those who are there and who are needed to run hospitals, run schools, run these businesses. They're on the receiving end of this attack, and they're the ones who are losing their benefits.

At least this amendment will clarify their intention, make a little bit of a difference, and I hope that members on both sides of the House can support this amendment. Thank you so much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Are there others? I see the hon. Minister of Transportation rising to speak to this amendment.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise on this amendment made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, I think, if I have it correctly. Let me just say that our legal folks looked at this and they have determined that this will not be an improvement. It's essentially somewhat repetitive with the intention of the bill. The government side over here, we've been very clear about the intention of the bill. The bill is to provide the flexibility for employees and employers to work together in those cases where they could trade hours worked and bank them, to take them at a one-to-one basis when it works. Of course, if they get paid out, they will still get paid out at the one and a half rate.

The fact is that we've heard a lot in the last little while from the opposition, and they are doing their best to roll out every negative scenario possible, and I suppose that's their job, so I'll give them a pass on that, at least to some degree. But if they looked at it in a more realistic way and talked to some more small businesses about how this works, they might actually be saying things differently than what we've heard in the House today.

A scenario that a member from the opposition the other day rolled out, that if somebody banked 40 hours' worth of work under the current legislation, they could take off a week and a half's holidays, and if they banked 40 hours' worth of work under the new legislation, they would only get a week's holidays. Let me say, if you look at it as the most negative scenario possible, that is one scenario.

But let me tell you about another scenario of how this could roll out, too. If an employer needed someone to work an extra 40 hours' work, after this legislation that we hope will pass comes forward, here are the possibilities. One possibility is what the NDP says. That's potentially a possibility, but the other possibility is that that worker might not get any overtime. The employer might either work themselves, or the employer might bring in a second employee at regular time. That employee, instead of having the benefit of those extra hours and getting some extra time off with his or her family, wouldn't get any overtime at all and wouldn't get that opportunity from their employer to have that extra benefit. That's actually a more realistic scenario. That's actually a more realistic example of what could possibly happen out in the world.

The opposition likes to talk about these examples, too. They always loved the expression "wealthy, greedy corporations," but the fact is, Mr. Chair, in many cases the organizations that will benefit the most from the banked-time provision are charities and nonprofits. They often will use the one-to-one banked time as a big part of fundraising, when you see galas, for example, special events that charities put on, whatever it happens to be, some gala with a theme where everybody goes and has dinner, and they try to talk them into spending money for the charity outside of the ticket price.

What happens, then, within the charities and the nonprofits is that their staff end up working sometimes 12, 16 hours a day for two, three days because it's a lot of work to get in, move decorations in, decorate the hall, host the event, work overtime, the next day clean up, undecorate the event, and move out. If the nonprofit or the charity had to pay one and a half times pay for all of that, it might actually not be worth doing it. Then, of course, you lose the benefit of that charitable work and the nonprofit work that they do out in the world.

Right now, in fact, many employees that work in these scenarios actually look forward to the events so that they can work the extra hours, and then they can, at a mutually agreed upon schedule with their employer, take a Friday off or a couple of Fridays off or a couple of Mondays off or they can take a day off to take a child or a spouse to a doctor's appointment or, heck, they can sleep in. They can ride their bicycle some day when it's sunny. There are all these scenarios, and there are a thousand more scenarios like that, that the opposition wants to ignore, than the things that don't really happen.

The other thing that exists is that there is lots of seasonal work. If you just think about agriculture, where in farm labour the fact is – well, it's not universal across all farms and ranches – anybody that grows a crop that has farmhands knows that during the spring when seeding is going on the work goes 12, 16, sometimes 24 hours a day. The farmhands know that part of the deal is that you've got to – the old-time expression is you've got to make hay when the sun is shining.

The same thing holds true in the fall in harvest when you make hay when the sun is shining, where you go from maybe a normal workday to having people working on the combines and other pieces of equipment morning, noon, and night because they have a limited amount of time between when the crop is ripe and when the snow falls, and if they don't get it off the field, then the farmer or the rancher doesn't make anything unless they do. It's been going on for years with their employees in many cases. Those employees work – let's face it – really long, really tough hours during seeding and harvesting, and they get paid for working lesser days where they will maybe get a few weeks off when the crops are in the field and growing in the middle of June and there's a lot less daily work to be done.

Let's talk about February. There's not a lot of seeding or harvesting going on in February in Alberta, and there are lots of arrangements with the employers and the employees where they continue to get paid during the off-season. They and their families benefit more during the pay period but probably will have less tax taken off during the pay period. But let's be clear. At the end of the year when you file your taxes, that all evens out based on your total annual income. But the fact is that these arrangements are commonplace, and a lot of nonprofits suffered when the NDP changed the ability for employers and employees to come to these mutually beneficial arrangements.

A lot of small businesses suffered when this happened, and a lot of their employees, instead of getting time and a half, got nothing extra. A lot of them actually like being able to work hard. It makes them feel part of the team. They surely earn their money, but they get to have, perhaps, a day off in the summer or whenever they want. Maybe in the winter they get a day off to go skiing; maybe in the summer they get a day off to ride their bike or do something. But the fact is that the NDP's legislation has taken away this mutually agreed upon flexibility and quality of life improvement that has been going on for years.

They somehow just can't seem to get it through their minds that before they showed up and did their best to mess up the Alberta where almost everybody that wanted to be working was working – they are small-minded, in my view, in the way they look at these things. They don't consider both sides of the argument, Mr. Chair. Sure, the other side will jump up and say: well, what if an employer is bad? Well, you know what? That happens. There are bad employers and there are rules to deal with that, but in this particular case this is a mutually agreed upon arrangement that benefits the employee and the employer. Many times it's the difference between getting some overtime and getting days off when they really want it or not, and getting those days off and still being able to pay their monthly bills.

The other side always likes to talk about people that don't make a lot of money, and that's one of the things that I'll say I agree with them on. You've got to think more about people that don't make a lot of money in this world because they need us thinking about them more. But those are the ones that, because they don't make a lot of money, may not be able to afford to take a vacation. One of the things that helps them to be able to take a vacation is the one trade-off so that they can get the overtime, so they can take the vacation without missing the paycheque. In many cases they won't get any opportunity for the overtime because the employer will just hire somebody else, a second employee at straight time. They won't ever get any extra pay or any extra time off, and in some cases they won't get a Friday off. They won't get a vacation.

That's what the other side refuses to acknowledge. They know it's true. Some of them might even have received that benefit along the way. I don't know. I don't know whether they have or not. But the fact is that they refuse to acknowledge it. Why? Because they'd rather think of job creators as being bad instead of being good. On this side of the House we actually think job creators are part of the solution. The other side of the House thinks job creators are the problem. We think job creators are the solution.

And it's the same. They talk about taking $2 an hour away from young students. Again, I suppose if you want to look at it in the most negative way possible as the NDP does, because they think of job creators as being the problem rather than the solution, that's one way to look at it. The other way, the other legitimate way to look at it is that making $13 an hour is $13 an hour better than making zero dollars an hour if there is no job for them at all because the employer can't make a profit still or keep the doors open at the higher rate. That's a fact.

The other side doesn't like to acknowledge that businesses are under pressure, too, when they've got skilled or hard work. You can't get people to do some jobs at $15 an hour, Chair. That's just an experience that lots of businesses have, and if they can't get them to do the jobs at $15 an hour, they can't get them to do them at $13 either. But more to the point, in many cases employers are giving their employees fewer hours. The employee starts off thinking: "Great; I got a $2 an hour raise, beautiful. Multiply that by the 20 hours a week or the 12 hours a week I'm working while I'm in school." Then they find out that their hours are cut in half, and then they're not very happy at all.

I acknowledge it can cut both ways. In some cases some people will end up making a little bit less money. I acknowledge that. I wish the other side – we don't mind acknowledging that, but they refuse to acknowledge the other side of the argument that some people will be making zero, and it's better to make $13 an hour than zero if you need the money. It's better to keep a business open and employing people rather than make the business close because they can't afford to stay open because they can't afford wages to keep their doors open.

The other side refuses to acknowledge that side of it. On this side of the House we're prepared to acknowledge both possibilities and allow for the job creators to do the magic they do. The magic is sometimes the risk that they take, many times putting a mortgage on their house to finance their business or taking out a personal line of credit to run their business and to pay the salaries on a Friday, whether the business made money at all that week or not. Some weeks businesses don't make money, but they pay their employees on Friday anyway so that they can still be open next week and hope that more people come through the door and spend money so they can maybe make the money back next week. We understand that. We acknowledge that.

The other side just thinks that they're bad people that take advantage of their employees. We think job creators are the solution; they think they're the problem. That's the real difference here. The real difference is that when we were in government, businesses felt like they were welcome here, and they wanted to be here. When they were in government, they made businesses feel like the government felt they were criminals, that they were taking advantage of people, and that their government didn't want them here. You know what? Businesses got the message. Eighty-billion dollars worth of investment left this province under the NDP.

Now we are left to clean up the mess, to do business-friendly things to bring businesses back and jobs back so that families will get those jobs and will have, hopefully, two jobs instead of one in the household or three instead of two because we're making the environment more business friendly. That is what the other side refuses to acknowledge. That is what this side understands a lot better than the other side does. That's why we are going ahead with An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business.

Mr. Chair, this amendment doesn't help, which is why we won't be supporting it.

The Deputy Chair: I saw the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows standing a couple times to speak, so he has the call.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak in favour of this amendment to Bill 2, moved by my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. The amendment says: that Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, be amended in section 1(2)(a) in the proposed section 23(2)(a) by adding "at least" after "overtime pay will be provided, taken and paid at." Looking at the bill and the changes this bill is proposing, I think the hon. member has moved a very reasonable and common-sense amendment, and that's why I feel honoured to rise and speak in favour of this amendment.

I just want to say something else. It was a pleasure to listen to the hon. member from the other side. Not only that, but a few weeks back, when the hon. member from Red Deer was addressing the bill giving $4.5 billion to the largest corporations, he referred a lot to his professional experience dealing with businesses. He referred to the businesses when talking about the $4.5 billion tax cut to the corporations, and he kept stressing the small-scale businesses, the mom-and-pop shops and hair salons, that have nothing to do, you know, with that bill that has to do with the tax cuts to the largest corporations in this province.

Having 16 years of experience operating a small-scale business, I am hearing lots of presumptions about small-scale business. Small-scale businesses are much different than those people who do not even know who their employees are or where they're working. Large corporations may employ people and they'll never see them or might not even be sitting in the same province, might not be sitting in the same country. When it comes to small-scale business, it's like we have kind of a family environment, people working together. In a small-scale business I'm sure the people are not worried about a dollar or two in salaries; rather, they're more concerned about the good, committed, retainable workers that they can rely on. That's the biggest challenge they're facing in industry. They don't want to turn their businesses into just, you know, training centres, where they hire a person today and then look for someone next week. That will actually create chaos for a small-scale business.

If we want to help small-scale business, grow small-scale business – yeah – I will be happy to see something coming forward. Look at the rising cost of their lease that they're struggling with and do something to address that. The rising cost of commodities, equipment, machinery: that is their biggest burden, and I haven't heard a single word regarding this. I know the members on the other side of the House somehow feel and want to claim that they are the only ones representing small-scale business in this House. Looking at the changes being proposed in this bill, it doesn't do any better for small-scale business or to attract investment or to create more jobs. It just creates more of a burden on average working Albertans.

I will call it a step backward as we are living in the 21st century. Instead of, you know, coming together and thinking about their welfare and how we can protect their basic rights, we see that the changes being proposed are going a step backward and removing their basic guarantees. As the hon. member from the government side was saying, this is a mutually agreed contract. Then why do we want to remove the basic guarantees? Why are we so afraid of the unions providing basic protections to the workers for their chance at fair-based negotiations for their contracts? I also see that it's not only workers, youth workers, the unions, but everything being proposed is not even doing anything better to help the average Albertan.

If this bill is passed, what does it do? It addresses the general holiday pay. Does it do any better for the average worker? No. It proposes that the employee must work 30 days in the last 12 months before even being entitled to general holiday pay, and an employee who has to regularly work on a general holiday will be entitled to receive the holiday pay. If the holiday falls on a day that is not normally a workday for the employee and they work the holiday, then they're entitled to 1.5 times their regular wages. This is how it is right now. They can, you know, choose to get the pay, or they can just bank their overtime.

I don't see this as a burden on the employer in any way. If this is a help for the employee to choose to bank their holiday, to choose to get the time off later on, similarly this is a help for the employer as well. If the employer has, you know, a commitment to get work done in a timely manner and he gets help from the employee to complete that work in a timely manner, the employer also has the option to defer the payment. He doesn't have to come up right away with those, you know, extra monies. So I don't know where it's trying to resolve a dispute. It is just, I will say, an attack on the average worker's rights.

Now if the employee goes on holidays, he will be paid for three weeks if he has earned the overtime equal to the extra week, but if he chooses to bank the overtime, he will not be able to receive the wages for the third week. If he chooses to take, you know, the wages for the overtime, yes, he is entitled to it, but it might not be to the benefit of the small-scale employer. On the other hand, the people working in the biggest industries – oil sands, construction – they're going to have a big hit. A little bit fewer than half a million people will be, you know, affected by these changes. That's why I think this amendment is a very reasonable and common-sense amendment.

Also, with the changes being proposed to the labour laws, if this bill is passed, it will be mandatory for the unions to, you know, return to the secret ballot. It will restore the mandatory secret ballot for all unions seeking certification votes. They will need to establish a program to provide support and assistance to employees who are seeking information on – sorry. Just wanted to refer to the 90-day period for unions. They will need to provide evidence that employees support certification. It's tightening the requirements for the unions. The unions, I will say, are providing the minimum protection to the workers in industries like the oil sands and construction.

This is kind of, you know, tightening the rules on unions. It will be much harder for them to represent the average worker, and it will, I would say, infringe more on the average worker.

Reducing the minimum wage on youth workers is not, like, coming with any kind of – how would I say it? – description. It's just based on their age. It's not as if they are going to do something different, if they are not working on the same job as the person who is entitled to earn $15. It's just simply because of their age difference. That's clearly discrimination based on someone's age, I think, especially for the innocent and vulnerable people, that did not even have the right to vote. They did not even give us their mandate. They are the most vulnerable people. They're going through an age and a time where they spare the time. You know, they go to school, full-time school, and they're under the pressure of keeping up with their education. At the same time, their needs are growing. They probably want to buy a computer, or they probably want to make some money to buy lunch, or they probably want to save money for their higher education. I don't know why this government wants to penalize those youth workers.

The claim this government is making, as it says in the title of the bill, is An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business. We have a clear example in our neighbouring province. They did not address the issue of the minimum wage. They did not increase the minimum wage in Saskatchewan, but the youth unemployment rate is no less than ours. It's probably higher than ours. So the reason the government is giving for this bill does not really make sense. It's in no way going to help. The facts are clearly showing that it will not help in creating more jobs. But it will definitely make, you know, youth workers do the same thing and earn much less than they are entitled to under the current rule.

As I have already recorded on this, my predecessor, a former Speaker of this House, the hon. Gene Zwozdesky, stood up against any kind of, you know, discrimination. When it was pointed out by one of the candidates during a debate, "Oh, he's over 60; he has done enough; he should step aside; he should let someone else run," he stood up and said: "Focus on the issue, man. You want to just discriminate against me because of my age instead of looking at my experience and what I can contribute based on that?"

I think this is a totally wrong precedent. We are going in the wrong direction. There's no evidence that this is going to help anyone, that this is going to help our economy, that this is going to help small-scale industry, or that this is going to help create more jobs. That's why I rose to speak in favour of this amendment.

If the government is very serious, they can come up with some other programs. If they are really serious about helping small-scale industry grow and create more jobs, you know, they can come up with some more programs. Like, the government already has programs. I'm just trying to find what the name was. I don't exactly remember the term. Is it the STEP program?

Ms Sigurdson: Yeah, there's the STEP program.

Mr. Deol: The STEP program, yeah.

Ms Sigurdson: We brought it back.

Mr. Deol: Just look at that. Why roll back wages? How much are you going to save? I'm very sure as a former small-scale business owner for 16 years, where we were working six, seven, eight employees together, that we know how to understand each other's challenges. The wages, within a dollar or two, were never the issue. It's more of a commitment. It's a family environment of how we can help each other. It's more of how we can have someone for a long-term commitment. That is how we can retain an employee that we can depend on in the long term. That is what supports small-scale industry. That is what . . .

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members? I believe that the hon. Member for Calgary-South East caught my eye.

Mr. Jones: Thank you. The members opposite continue to vilify and assume the worst of our business owners and entrepreneurs. I've spent the last 10 years working with these people, and I find this offensive. Let me tell you what I saw while working directly with these villains over the last four years. I saw business owners taking on unprofitable or break-even work just to keep their employees working. I saw business owners taking out loans against their homes or loading up their credit cards to pay employees. I saw business owners reducing their own salary to zero to keep employees. I saw business owners cry after describing their inability to keep their employees, knowing that after laying them off, they would be unable to find work. Do you know why they did this? Because they know that their employees are their greatest asset.

Throughout the economic downturn businesses in Alberta have faced margin compression and reduced profitability. They have faced increased taxation and burdensome regulation from a government that also chased away their customers. The result of this has been that many businesses, particularly those engaged in labour-intensive industries, could not afford to provide a service at time and a half, but they could at straight time. Bill 2, An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business, enables employers and employees to agree to bank overtime at straight time, enabling a business to take on work that would otherwise be unprofitable. Thus, an employee can do work that they would not otherwise have been able to do. That employee and that employee's family need that money.

This amendment, like most of the policy from members opposite related to business, adds no value, and I will not be supporting it.

The Deputy Chair: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to put a motion to rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul rising.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. So ordered.
I see the hon. Deputy Government House Leader standing.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 3(1.2) I wish to advise the Assembly that there shall be no morning sitting on Tuesday, June 25, 2019.

Further, Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence, I thank all hon. members for their work today and move to adjourn the Assembly until this evening at 7:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:57 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, June 19, 2019

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening, everyone. Please be seated.

Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 9

23. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, is resumed, not more than six hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's great to see you this evening. Do I go straight into my time right now? Thank you very much.

I want to start off by just pointing out the misconception that has been taking place inside this Chamber for the last few days. In fact, we watched hon. members of the opposition rise over and over in this House and say that time allocation had already taken place inside this House, which was not true. We watched some of the members rise and say that they had been allotted only one hour to speak on the bill though for two nights already this week, as you know because you've been in the Chamber, we have kept debate on Bill 9 going well into the wee hours of the morning. Last night I think it was 2:30.

An Hon. Member: It was the Premier who said an hour.

Mr. Jason Nixon: No, it wasn't the Premier. It was the hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Anyways, it was 2:30 in the morning. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The opposition will have the floor in a moment. I'm sure we can look forward to hearing what they have to say.

The point is that they are misrepresenting the facts when it comes to this issue. Bill 9 during second reading was well debated, two days. Interestingly enough, time allocation was not needed for us to proceed with the business of this House. Also, interestingly enough, Madam Speaker, not all of the members of the Official Opposition even bothered to speak to Bill 9. There were opportunities for that that were provided completely by the government because debate by the opposition is important. While I think that their communication ability on the bill has been very ineffective and that they have spent most of their time playing political games rather than debating the bill, that's their prerogative and their decision. But the reality is that they had more opportunity to debate it. If this was as important for the constituents that they represent as they have said, you would think that they would have made sure to use all that time to debate that legislation. They did not. Last night it passed second reading, with, again, room for hon. members to speak and no time allocation.

The reality is that we are going to pass the agenda that Albertans sent us to pass in this House. We are going to provide ample opportunity for all members to be able to debate in this House, but if the opposition continues to play games as we move this legislation through, we will be moving reasonable time allocation to make sure that we don't plug up the House and so we can make sure that we do the business that Albertans sent us here to do. As such, I move time allocation on Committee of the Whole, a reasonable time allocation, not what the NDP used to do to us; it would be one hour or so. We'll have six hours tonight. I look forward to it.

I want to also point out one last misconception that has been brought forward by the Official Opposition, where they said that they were not allowed to do amendments to the bill. Well, Madam Speaker, that is also a misrepresentation of the facts. Here's their opportunity, as we go into Committee of the Whole, to move all the amendments that the opposition would like to move. That's more than an ample amount of time. In fact, during second reading – it was about 13 hours or so – again almost every member of the opposition was able to speak.

This is a reasonable amount of time, and I look forward to hearing what the Official Opposition has to say. Again, Madam Speaker, let me be clear. We will put the agenda that Albertans voted for in record numbers through this House, and we will use the tools that are available to us to move that agenda forward despite the protests from the opposition. Again, through you to them, I call on them, as always, to get some humility and to examine why they are the only one-term government in the history of this province and how they ended up on that side of the House. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I realize that tonight's debate might get rather heated, but I think it would be most respectful for us to make sure that all members, while speaking, are heard in this House. Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will close with this, my initial point, which is that the agenda that the people of Alberta voted for in record numbers will pass in this Chamber. Those are the instructions that we have been sent here with. Your constituents and my constituents made it clear to us when they sent us here. That's what will happen.

At the same time, we will go out of our way to make sure that the Official Opposition has every opportunity to be able to do their job. I encourage them to do it and stop playing games, as they have, inside this Legislature, to get focused on debating bills and not pretend that they haven't been allowed to, actually put forward speakers, using their time effectively inside this House, and to stop obstructing what Albertans voted for on April 16.

The Deputy Speaker: It is now time for a member of the Official Opposition to speak. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Democracy in action UCP style, so we see. Let's clarify a couple of things first that the hon. Government House Leader said. First off, there has not been closure enacted on all three stages of a bill since 1990 – fun fact – when the NDP was the Official Opposition. So that's convenient. When we were in government, we enacted closure on one stage of two different bills – one stage – after two and a half weeks of debate, not a bill that was introduced at the beginning of a week that we are now progressing through in one week. That's a fun fact.

The other piece of this is that this was not a platform commitment by the UCP. They can stand here and say that they have credit and that they were voted in on this mandate. This was not in the platform; this was not a mandate that Albertans gave them. This is actually breaking the law. So let's clarify a couple of points there.

In addition to that, let's talk about closure and invoking time allocation. The now Premier of Alberta said on December 8, 1998:

The government announced its intention to invoke time allocation on both report stage and third reading only two hours into the debate. I must say that while I commend the minister for the work that he, his officials and his parliamentary secretary have put into this bill, I think it is disappointing, to say the least, that the government has, in passing such a critically important piece of legislation, so carelessly and callously disregarded the best traditions of [democracy] . . . in this place.

Another quote from the Premier of Alberta:

I am pleased to rise in debate on this bill at report stage. I regret the use of time allocation, closure and all the usual heavy-handed, undemocratic tactics employed by the government, as this has been my first opportunity to attempt to articulate the overwhelming consensus . . . on this matter.

How about we go to the Government House Leader and what he said when time allocation was implemented when he was in the opposition?

It should be unacceptable to Albertans because this is the Assembly where their issues are supposed to be dealt with. This is where democracy is supposed to take place. This is where debate is supposed to happen, and by the government taking this action, they are stifling debate. They're not just stifling the opposition members; they're stifling the people who sent us here to represent them, and I think that they should very much be ashamed of their behaviour.

Well, Madam Speaker, shame on them. Shame on them for putting time allocation on this bill. Shame on them for standing in this House not only a year ago saying how shameful it was for a government to do it and for doing the exact same thing they're doing now, and not only at one stage of a bill for a few hours but for all stages of this bill that they just implemented on Thursday, that they introduced and orally introduced. They didn't even give the opposition notification that it was coming. It is shameful; it is undemocratic. They should be completely ashamed of themselves, and they shouldn't be voting in favour of this.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 23 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call this committee to order.

Bill 9

Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments in relation to the bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you. I don't want to spend too much time speaking tonight because I'd like to give as much opportunity to all the members, particularly the Official Opposition, as they talk through committee . . . [interjection] Again, Madam Chair, through you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, she'll have her chance to take the floor, but this behaviour that we continue to see from the opposition is actually what I want to quickly talk about as it relates to Bill 9.

Mr. Kenney: Quickly but not so quickly.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah. Exactly. Just to describe the opposition's behaviour when it comes to this legislation – you're right – could not happen quickly. It's quite ridiculous.

In particular, Madam Chair, as we watched the debate on the motion that just passed in this Chamber a few moments ago in relation to this, the hon. Deputy Opposition House Leader rose in the Chamber and said a couple of things that need to be addressed when it comes to this bill, but the first, I think, that's interesting is that since 1990, I believe, there have never been three time allocations done on a piece of legislation.

First of all, Madam Speaker, I'd like to back up and make it clear that when it comes to second reading of Bill 9, there was no time allocation done on Bill 9. Those who were in the House last night will have seen what I'm about to describe, and those who may watch the Legislature, maybe the three or four people that watch the Legislature at about 3:30 in the morning . . . [interjection] You're right. Madam Chair, through you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora: you're right. There are a lot of people up in the gallery right now, and that's good. They should probably know what happened last night as well.

There was no time allocation motion moved. Not one. In fact, I rose at one point to make it clear that there would be no time allocation motion moved and that there was an opportunity for every member to speak. Interestingly enough, Madam Chair, do you know how many members of the Official Opposition spoke on second reading of Bill 9?

Mr. Kenney: How many?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Twenty-three of 24. Twenty-three of 24 spoke when it came to second reading of Bill 9.

Mr. Kenney: What about the 24th?

Mr. Jason Nixon: The 24th, interestingly enough, did not speak. They had an opportunity. We didn't have time allocation. In fact, nobody rose at that point to speak to the legislation, and they quietly let it pass through the House. I was kind of shocked by that, taken aback by that. I thought that, certainly, they would go 24 for 24 given how much the opposition said they wanted to speak to this legislation.

Mr. Kenney: I guess they don't care.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah. They must not. But they got there, and they passed it.

Then they had the nerve to stand in this House today and say that we time allocated on second reading and that we're going to time allocate at all three stages of the bill when we had, in fact, not. In addition to that, they then said that it was the first time since 1990. I will draw your attention, Madam Chair – and this relates to Bill 9 because the primary argument from the Official Opposition in regard to Bill 9 that you're going to hear tonight and that we have heard for days is about the fact that they are not being allowed to debate the bill. They're spending their time when they're allowed to debate the bill arguing that they're not allowed to debate the bill. I can't even follow it.

But the point is – and, Madam Chair, you were in the Legislature with me when this happened. During Bill 6, which was certainly not in 1990, the then hon. Government House Leader moved . . .

Mr. Kenney: This was their attack on farmers?

Mr. Jason Nixon: This was the attack on farmers, yeah.

Let's recap that, too. That was a bill, Madam Chair, that was legislation attacking farm and ranch families that ultimately could have ended up in a situation, if we were not able to get an amendment passed inside this Chamber – thankfully, from the hard work of Albertans, not from anybody in this Chamber but from the hard work of Albertans who protested against the NDP's lack of consultation and their attack on farm and ranching families, we were able to get that amendment passed. But if we had not, kids weren't even going to be allowed to do 4-H anymore. That's what that legislation was.

The Government House Leader rose at that time – now he's left political life – Brian Mason, who was the Government House Leader for the . . .

Mr. Kenney: A good guy.

Mr. Jason Nixon: A good guy who had been the House leader for the NDP and a long-time leader.

He moved three of them – I can table them in Orders of the Day tomorrow, Madam Chair. He moved three time allocations on every stage of the bill – every stage of the bill – including second reading. Interestingly enough, do you know how much time he gave the opposition? One hour on each of the three time allocations. One hour on each of the time allocations.

So when it comes to Bill 9, which is the legislation that's before the House right now, I think it's important that we actually encourage all members of the House, particularly the Official Opposition, to actually talk about Bill 9, not spend their time talking about this important legislation and indicating that they haven't been allowed to speak to it when we know that Monday night this week we were in this Chamber until 3 o'clock in the morning giving the Official Opposition time to speak on it. Last night we were here until about 2:30 or so in the morning giving the Official Opposition time to speak on it. I suspect we'll be here tonight probably even later than that. We worked to make sure that the Official Opposition has all the time in the world to be able to speak on this legislation because they've indicated that that's important to them.

But what I want them to do – and I'm challenging them – as they work through Bill 9 is not to misrepresent the facts inside this Chamber. I think it takes away from the important argument when it comes to Bill 9 and the people that they say that they're representing when their members stand up inside this Chamber and make a comment in their speeches – and you can check Hansard, Madam Chair. This happened on Bill 9. They said: hey, the Government House Leader has made it so I can only speak for an hour on the bill, only one hour. When that person was rising, we were already at somewhere around 10 hours into the piece of legislation. It does a disservice to the people that you represent. It's not accurate, and it's not appropriate.

Mr. Kenney: It's not truthful.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Not truthful, if you will. It's shocking to me to continue to see the Official Opposition do that.

My point – and, again, this matters to Bill 9, Madam Chair. I will tell you why, because I can see that right now you're trying to say: hon. Government House Leader, get back to the legislation. I've seen that look before. But this does matter to Bill 9 for two reasons. One, this is the argument that the Official Opposition has put forward for days inside this Chamber, that I am refuting right now. Second, I suspect they'll keep doing it. I might be wrong. We'll see shortly whether I'm wrong or not, but I suspect that they will continue to do that.

Second, it goes to whether or not you can trust what the NDP have to say when it comes to this legislation. When their argument both in this Chamber and outside of this Chamber is to say that they were time allocated when they were not, that they were limited to one hour to speak when they were not, that their members were not allowed to speak when they were: that goes to their credibility when they talked about Bill 9. It goes to their credibility when they say that Bill 9 will be legislation that – and they say some horrible things about my friend the hon. Finance minister, that he has a bill in front of the House to pickpocket people. That's ridiculous, Madam Chair. It fits with Team Angry. It fits with their approach, the NDP. But can Albertans really trust the Official Opposition in their arguments when it comes to Bill 9 if they spend their time in this Chamber misrepresenting the facts and saying that things are happening that are easily provable have not happened?

You know, Madam Chair, I am a father of three children, and sometimes your kids come forward with some really bizarre things. Usually when they're in trouble, you see them and they say – I'm watching my little brother, the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein. He's, also, the father of four children, actually.

Mr. Kenney: He's not so little.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah. He's not so little; he's just littler than me. He has twins, like me, actually, Madam Chair. We both have twins. I've seen his twins. They come and stay at my house. They come and give you a sheepish look, and you know that they've been in trouble. You start to ask them questions, and then they come up with just the most bizarre stories sometimes because that's what kids do. And you know it's bizarre. That's kind of like what's happened here in the last couple of days, when the Official Opposition says that they've been time allocated when they have not been, that they're capped at one hour when they have not been. It's ridiculous.

The Chair: Hon. members, I am enjoying, very much so, the stories of family, but let's take some of your own advice and focus on Bill 9.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I agree, Madam Chair. I think it's important that we talk about Bill 9. The argument that the opposition has against Bill 9 and the fact that we are moving it through this legislation – they want it to stop – is that, essentially, the government of the day should not be allowed to move forward the agenda inside this House. As I've spoken about several times over the last few days – and so have the hon. Premier and a few others – this goes down to the lack of humility from the Official Opposition to stand inside this place and debate against a piece of legislation like Bill 9, that does nothing except give a little bit more time to make sure that we're able to get this right as we look at the absolute, devastating mess that was created by the Official Opposition when they were government.

We talk about my little brother from Calgary-Klein's twins and my twins. This party across from me was going to saddle them with $100 billion worth of debt, and they have the nerve to stand in this House over and over and over and say shame on us because we're going to take the time to get it right, to try to get a path to balance for our province, for my little brother's kids, for my kids, and for all Albertans' kids. Shame on them, Madam Chair, I say, for what they were going to do to this House. Shame on them for standing against a reasonable approach to be able to get our finances in order. Shame on them. Shame on them for continuing to come to this Assembly, showing no humility for being fired by the people of Alberta, the only political party in the history of this province to be a one-term government, fired by Albertans.

Instead, their approach on stuff like Bill 9 is to come here, make things up, attack the hon. Finance minister for bringing forward reasonable legislation to try to get it right – to do what, Madam Chair? – to fix the mess they made. Thank goodness that we've got a Finance minister that's willing to take the time to get this right so that we can start to change the mess that they made. Nobody else could be held responsible for the mess that was made inside this province except for the NDP when they were in government. They made the mess. Now, Albertans put them in the time-out box. I suspect they're going to stay there for a while, particularly because they can't adjust to it. They still haven't realized what they did wrong: bring in a carbon tax at the same time as we had the largest unemployment in the history of our province, take us on track to $100 billion in debt. [interjections]

You can hear them, Madam Chair. They can't stop.

Mr. Kenney: They're angry.

Mr. Jason Nixon: They're angry. Team Angry. That's all that they have when it comes to Bill 9, their anger. They've always been the party of fear and smear, Madam Chair. You know that, and I know that. But now they've taken it to a whole other level of angry. You know who they're angry at? And you'll see it in the debate tonight. Through you to my colleagues, who do you think that they're angry at? They're angry at Albertans. They should not be angry at Albertans. They should be angry at their leader, who took them down this path. They should be angry at themselves, their former cabinet, who took our province down the path of financial ruin. Now they stand in this House and filibuster and make things up and do whatever they do to try to stop the hon. Finance minister from using Bill 9 to be able to fix – to take the time just to be able to get this problem fixed so we can continue with the services that we need inside this province. It's sad.

Ms Renaud: Shame on us for protecting the law.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah. They said, "Shame on us for protecting the law."

You know, again, I'll tell you another thing, Madam Chair, through you to them. Shame on them for continuing to misrepresent the facts, for continuing to say that people inside this House are not obeying the law. It's shameful that that's even been allowed to continue in this House for as long as it has. I'm proud of our side of the House, that doesn't behave like that. They should try better. They should try better.

I just want to close with this, because I actually intended to get up for just a few brief moments, Madam Chair. You've got a party in opposition who want to spend their time talking about this legislation – and this legislation is relevant to what I'm saying: it's a three-page bill – and you know what they spent the majority of their time on when debating Bill 9? Calling division bells to try to adjourn debate so they could go home to bed.

I don't know about you, Madam Chair, but my constituents sent me up here to work. I'm happy to work as late as we need to to get the job done. I encourage the NDP to do that.

Then the next day they spent all their time inventing a time allocation that did not happen instead of coming back to the importance of Bill 9, which is the discussion about whether it's a relevant piece of legislation that makes sense to pause things, to give the Finance minister and the blue-ribbon panel some time to get this right – to do what, Madam Chair? – to fix the mess the NDP made. That's the entire job. That's what Albertans sent us here to do in record numbers.

I get how that probably hurts the NDP. I get that. It has to hurt to lose an election at that magnitude. I mean, go look at an electoral map, Madam Chair, and see what Albertans think about the NDP and their policies: not one seat in rural Alberta, where I come from – not one seat – and devastated in Calgary. Albertans spoke loud and clear that they don't like the direction the NDP went in. They don't like the mess the NDP created, and they gave this side of the House a clear, record-breaking mandate for the now hon. Premier, his government, and his Finance minister to come and do the job right.

If the hon. members want to spend their time talking about that tonight, I'm sure the hon. Finance minister would like to get up and discuss this legislation and how this would work with them, but if they want to continue this approach of just fear and smear through to the end, I suspect that we're going to spend some time together listening to some bizarre speeches because we respect the right of the opposition to speak. [interjections] Unlike the opposition, who don't respect my right to speak inside this Chamber, we will respect their right to speak inside this Chamber. We won't heckle, and we won't shut them down. We will go out of our way to make sure that they have an opportunity to speak on behalf of their constituents. We just ask that they do it with respect, that they actually work on the piece of legislation, that they don't misrepresent the facts, and that they stand up and actually do what they're supposed to do for their constituents. That's it. That's all. That's pretty fair. And you know what, Madam Chair? I think that's what Albertans expect of them.

The Chair: Any other comments, questions, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, hon. colleagues and Madam Chair. I am rising to speak to Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining bill. There are a few things I want to say in response to the comments just now raised by the Government House Leader. I have tremendous respect for our nonpartisan research staff here at the Legislature, including the library team. The library team did a very thorough review and actually did one hundred per cent confirm that the only time, in easily searchable records, that they could find going back was in 1990, where in second reading calling the previous question occurred – some people call that closure; that's sort of a colloquial term; calling the previous question, I guess, is the technical term – which the government brought forward, which does limit debate because it limits speaking ability to only one time each. You can't bring forward amendments in second reading. I know these are all very technical things, but I think that they're important for people to know. So it essentially does limit the amount of time on debate, and it does limit the ability for people to bring forward amendments because it says that you can't. So facts.

I also want to clarify that absolutely every – first of all, oral notice was given late last week. The bill was actually introduced on Monday. It was well known that our leader would be speaking at a national conference in Toronto and, of course, tried very diligently to be back here. The fact that the Government House Leader drew attention to the fact that she wasn't able to speak is an embarrassment towards him, I would say.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

The Chair: Point of order. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Jason Nixon: I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j), Madam Chair, language to create disorder. We just watched the deputy leader of the NDP get up in this Chamber and say that I said that the Official Opposition leader was not able to speak and was not in the Chamber. I would not do that because it would be, first of all, against the rules to refer to an absence of a member, something that I would not do and, second, something the deputy leader just did to her own leader, which I don't quite get. In addition, it's not what I said.

Again, stick to the facts, and let's get to debate on the bill.

The Chair: Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Chair. Although I recognize that the member is using points of order now to start buying into our six hours of timed debate, same with using the 15 minutes he just used, how about we just focus on the debate? There is no point of order here. I would like to request, respectfully, to the Government House Leader that he respect our six hours of this debate.

The Chair: Hon. members, I suspect that Edmonton-Glenora has clarification on the matter.

Ms Hoffman: If he wants me to withdraw the remark, I am certainly able to do so, Madam Chair. I think it's important to give context to the comments that were given in this House completely out of context. I'm happy to continue with my time. I would like to continue with my time, if that's amenable to the table.

The Chair: Please proceed.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Of course, the fact that the bill was only introduced on Monday and here we are on Wednesday and the government is moving forward at breakneck speed when it was well known that our leader would have additional commitments I think is of importance. I think the fact that this bill, which attacks 180,000-plus workers, many of whom are very busy – teachers are one of the groups that it attacks because it threatens their collective agreements. Of course, what's happening this week? All of my teacher friends are talking about their last field trip, their last exam, their report cards, and getting ready for the summer. That's what people who are very busy this time of year do, and the fact that the government has brought forward this bill that has damaging impacts on their collective agreement, that was legally negotiated, that has national protections, I think is something that shows that the way the government is behaving on this is, I would say, unbecoming.

When I did follow up with the library, I said: is there another time when notice has been given for other stages of the reading, while it was still in second, that there was notice given about closure? The result was that the only time closure, going back through the research, had been brought in – of course, the Premier, when I raised this in question period yesterday, said that there would be between 25 and 30 hours. So it sure sounds like the Premier has already decided how many hours of debate there will be for this, which implies that there will be closure at all three readings. The fact is that the last time that happened was in 1990, that the library was easily able to find, anyway.

What was happening in 1990? One of the bills that they did that to – they did it to two bills – was the sell-off of an important public asset, Alberta Government Telephones. This was something that was contentious, and the government responded in a ham-fisted way, much like the government today is responding. I want to say that I do not apologize for the comments that I gave. The response that the Premier gave I think speaks to the fact that he absolutely intends to follow through on the motion that the Government House Leader gave.

What I am simply pointing out is the fact that this has not happened in almost 30 years because it is so ham-fisted to have closure at all three stages, or to call the previous question, whatever vernacular you want to use, limiting the amount of debate. Why is that? It's because this bill is about bargaining in bad faith. This bill is about breaking collective agreements, collective agreements that were ruled constitutionally as being workers' entitlements. They sat down at the table in good faith and negotiated.

You know what? I know that the Government House Leader is an expert at revisionist history, but let's review the facts again, which are that while the NDP held government in the last term, our partners in labour sat down at the table and struck very reasonable agreements, almost exclusively zeros, with us, right? They sat down at the table and said: "We get that it's a difficult financial situation. Obviously, our members would like increases, but if we have certainty that our rights will be respected, that we can solve some local issues, things like the classroom improvement fund, if we can find ways to make sure that we have a number of zeros and then a wage reopener or binding arbitration, we will accept the zeros." What the government today is doing is breaking those contracts by bringing forward this bill. It is breaking the law, and that's why we will keep calling it as we see it, Madam Chair.

I have deep concern that this could result in labour unrest. I think that it will in turn result in compromised services and ultimately cost Albertans a lot more than just following the law, following the agreements, and going to an arbitrator. I think that that is something that is fair and reasonable. By negotiating in good faith, we did secure those deals for Albertans during tough economic times. We did that by working in a very respectful way with our partners in labour, the people who provide those services that the government is obligated to provide to the people of Alberta.

I know that we don't do introductions anymore, but I want to note that there are a number of people in the gallery. I want to recognize my long-time friend and co-worker John Vradenburgh, who is the CUPE 474 president, who's here to watch. CUPE 474: for the government's awareness, there are a number of different sectors that they represent, but the biggest one, the biggest area of membership, is custodians in public schools. These are the men and women who keep our schools safe and clean, who take care of the boiler systems, who make sure that when your kids – maybe the twins of the Government House Leader – lose a shoe up on the roof of the school, they can crawl up on the roof, get that shoe, and send it back down to those kids, right? Sometimes you kick a soccer ball and your shoe goes up on the roof. These are hard-working men and women who take care of our kids. When our kids show up at school every day and we say to our kids, "We expect you to do your best," it's custodians who are the first people that usually they see.

They definitely see the work of that custodian. In the middle of the winter it's the custodian who's at that school at the crack of dawn making sure the sidewalks are clean and safe. It's the custodian who makes sure that the school entrance is clean and welcoming. Kids know whether or not the people at the school are phoning it in or if they really mean it when they say: we expect you to do your best. To the custodians all across our province – specifically, John is on my mind right now through 474 – I want to say thank you. I think it's only fair that government treat the people that we expect to work and to do their best for kids in a fair and reasonable way. I think it's only fair that they not be railroaded into breaking the law, breaking the collective agreements that have been signed.

I also see Heather Smith, president of the United Nurses of Alberta. Nurses: again, another group that will be negatively impacted by this bill that is being moved through this House at such breakneck speed. Heather Smith, for the Government House Leader's awareness, has been the president of this local for many years and has probably seen labour unrest on more than one occasion but not in the last four years. Not in the last four years because we worked respectfully and collaboratively to make sure that we honoured nurses and the work they did. And what did nurses ask? They said: "We'll take zeros, but just put an opportunity to sit back down at the table in our contract." Right? "We deserve to sit back down at the table and continue to have a respectful relationship and get to a result that works for everybody."

When the government says that the NDP behaved in a way that set this province up for economic disaster, the government doesn't acknowledge the fact that it was the Conservative government that set most of the collective agreements that are at the rates we're at today, and it was an NDP government that sat down at the table and very respectfully worked with our front-line workers to make sure that they have an opportunity to continue working with government.

Obviously, this new government isn't interested in that. What's the first thing they did when they had a chance to show the working people of this province who work for the province, the public servants, the people on the front lines – you know, nurses, teachers, paramedics, and the sheriffs that keep this very building safe and make sure that our court systems run smoothly. I think they're one of the first ones that are due for arbitration. I think it was probably supposed to start next week. Maybe that's why this is moving at such breakneck speed, because when we have time for the sheriffs to sit down and have arbitration to have what they rightfully negotiated respected through their contract, the government can't move quickly enough to trample their rights and their ability to be heard.

Again, when the Government House Leader says, "Well, you say that you only have an hour," I want to refer to what was said by the Premier. Here's what I said, and here's what the Premier said. I said:

What the Premier is pushing his cabinet and caucus to do is cowardly. It's the epitome of unconstitutional, law-breaking infringement on the rights of teachers, nurses, paramedics, and front-line public service members.

And the Premier responded by saying: "There will be ample debate." Cue closure. Then the Premier goes on to say: "between 25 and 30 hours of debate. That's more than one hour for every member of the opposition." So the one-hour reference is referring to what was said by the hon. Premier. Again, that's a little bit of background and facts about what we're actually doing here today.

Why I think this is so frustrating – again, here we are debating a closure motion at 7:30 at night. It could have easily been debated in the middle of the day. We've been here for a good chunk of the day already. It could have been debated when the news broadcasts were happening. It could have been debated just after question period, after the daily Routine. But, no, the Government House Leader and the Premier chose to do it at 7:30 at night, and the time allocation will happen from 8 o'clock at night until – what is that? Like, a 2 in the morning time allocation, essentially? Not exactly peak watching of the House, watching what kind of tactics are being used by the government.

The other thing I want to mention, the other really interesting thing, is that Monday the bill gets introduced. Monday was also the day that the pipeline approval came through? Tuesday was the day the pipeline approval came through. Thank you very much, hon. members.

Again, people are either watching the news and hearing great news for our province about the pipeline approvals, which have been long overdue and we've been fighting for years to make happen, or they're marking their exams or they're doing the regular things that families do when they're heading into the summer season. I just think that the government can't move quickly enough. The last time a government acted in such a ham-fisted way was in 1990 with something so politically contentious as the sell-off of Alberta Government Telephones. Sorry; AGT.

Let's circle back. Today in question period we had a very good question from the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo about broadband and SuperNet and making sure that we have connectivity in the north. How is that possible? Of course, it would have been more possible if we actually had a public service through the telephone and through the Internet services. I just can't help but circle back to how pushing a harsh ideological practice of privatization and breaking collective agreements seems to be a recurring theme.

I imagine there will be other opportunities. We are in committee, and I imagine my colleagues will have some amendments at this stage since we are actually allowed at this stage to bring forward amendments. The government made it so we couldn't bring forward amendments at second reading. Certainly, I think it's important that we have an opportunity to hear from those colleagues about those important amendments.

I also wanted to say how much I appreciate – I know that it's a cold night; it's rainy – how many people are engaged and are here to witness what I hope becomes an open-minded debate.

I know the Government House Leader also said, "We're here, and we're going to pass this," sort of presupposing what's going to happen, how the caucus is going to vote. I imagine he probably has a pretty good idea, but I do want to remind the caucus that in no way was bargaining in bad faith part of the platform. In no way. When the Premier very happily stood up as a candidate, a leadership candidate, with a nurse and a paramedic who were candidates, I doubt he actually said to them before they signed their nomination papers: PS, we're going to break your collective agreements. Right? Like, I doubt he actually said to these lovely candidates: we're going to trample on your rights, and if you aren't successful and you end up back working in the jobs you have now, we're going to break your collective agreements. I doubt that was something that was said to those candidates. It definitely wasn't something that was said in any of the campaign literature or any of the ads that we saw. It certainly wasn't something that the government was open and honest about with the people of Alberta.

Here they are – it's only Bill 9, right? Here we are so early in their mandate, a mandate that could bring about a number of other things. I remember there being things in their platform about midwifery. I remember there being things in their platform about rural health care. We're not here debating that. That was actually in the platform. Instead, we're here debating a bill about breaking collective agreements and bargaining in bad faith. I think that is certainly not the track record that the Government House Leader should probably be mapping out for his caucus. But that's what we've got tonight.

With that, I will cede my time, hopefully to my colleagues, and we will have an opportunity to continue this important debate and consider amendments. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Hon. members, before we proceed with any further debate, I would just like to express some caution as we proceed with tonight's debate that we stick to the bill that we are debating, that we refrain from discussing closure or any other thing that does not have anything to do with the bill at hand, which is Bill 9. I hope we are in agreement.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Standing Order 13(2): clarification on your ruling. We just watched the opposition speak for 20 minutes during the Bill 9 debate, with no opposition from the chair. Are we not going to be allowed to respond to that?

Second, I do think the opposition feels this is part of this legislation. I'm not really understanding your ruling.

The Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, I'd be happy to explain my suggestion that I made earlier. I might point out that we've now had one speaker from the government and one speaker from the opposition that both may have had a lot of leniency given when it came to the topic at hand, the bill.

8:30

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I will be happy to, then, rise and talk – I will try to stay away from the closure arguments given by the deputy leader of the NDP Party.

Ms Sweet: Point of order. Sorry, hon. member and Madam Chair. I didn't get a chance to respond to the 13(2), so I just wanted to . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I apologize, but that is up to the discretion of the chair. On 13(2) I explained my ruling.

Ms Sweet: You didn't give our side an opportunity to even engage.

The Chair: That's to the discretion of the chair to have additional voices. Would you like to call something else?

Ms Sweet: Okay. Well, then, I'll call it again, 13(2). Please explain to me why the opposition doesn't have a chance to respond to this ruling and give us more detail as to why we can't talk to time allotment.

Point of Clarification

The Chair: Hon. members, I'm not sure what you want to debate here tonight. Bill 9 is on the Order Paper. I am simply ensuring that that is what is being debated here in this House. That is the ruling that I made, that's the ruling that I explained, and that is how we're going to continue on with debate this evening.

Hon. Government House Leader, would you please continue your portion of debate.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, then, I will stay away from time allocation, take your advice, Madam Chair. It was, frankly, what I indicated in my opening remarks. Hopefully, we can get to there.

I would like to just talk about another issue that was raised by the deputy leader of the NDP, and that's this whole concept of this not being in the United Conservative Party platform. First of all, Madam Chair, through you to that hon. member, that's pretty rich coming from a member that belonged to a government just a few short weeks ago that ran an entire campaign and did not tell Albertans about their plan to bring in the largest tax increase in the history of the province, then got elected without telling them that, and then came in and brought in the largest tax increase in the history of the province.

The reality is, though, that when it comes to Bill 9, our platform was clear that we were running on getting our province on a path to balance. That's all that Bill 9 is about. The Finance minister I know will talk about this a little bit later. This is about giving the Finance minister the opportunity to be able to slow things down to be able to understand exactly where the fiscal situation is.

The opposition left this province in an absolute dire situation: on track for a hundred billion dollars in debt, devastated the finances of this province, sat on their hands and did nothing for the hard-working people of this province as they underwent the largest unemployment in the history of this province, sat back as communities that I represent – the former Education minister is laughing as we talk about this. I don't laugh when I think about communities like Drayton Valley or Rocky Mountain House, who were decimated under the NDP's regime. Decimated. That's not an exaggeration. Go to Drayton Valley and see what your policies did to that community, Madam Chair, through you to them.

Our platform was to fix that. That's what we're going to do inside this place. The NDP can try to slow that down as much as they want. They can make the arguments that they want to make. That's their right inside this place. But to rise inside this House and say that this is not part of our platform, that it is not part of our platform to be on a path to balance, to get our finances back in order is a ridiculous argument, Madam Chair. Read the platform. I have it here. I have, like, two or three copies if the hon. members across the way would like to have a copy of it. There's some good stuff inside it. That's what we ran on.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. He often has things to say inside this House sometimes when he stands up, more often when he's yelling them across the way and interrupting other speakers. But he often has stuff to say. I'd like him to rise and see what he thinks about the comments of his deputy leader and the fact that he was part of a government who decimated the finances of this province, putting us in a situation where we had to evaluate the situation, take the time to get it right. Do you know why? The hon. Finance minister has done a good job of talking about this, as has the Premier. It's because of jobs that we have to do this. It's because of the services that Albertans depend on. It's because of the mess that the NDP made. What this bill comes down to at its core is about the NDP's absolute fiscal mismanagement, and that's why you see Bill 9 on the floor today.

Now, I have a lot more to say about the misrepresentation of facts when it comes to the time process that's happening in this House, but, Madam Chair, I will eagerly await to see if the NDP will respect your ruling. But if they continue to rise inside this House and misrepresent facts, we will continue to rise, even though it's eating into their time, to clarify those facts.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I am pleased to stand to speak against Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, an act that through debate many have already pointed out numerous flaws in. I would very much appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill once more because it is such an egregious abuse of power and because it is attacking our front-line workers, the public servants who deliver important services, who are our friends and family, who are our neighbours, who are our visitors in the gallery this evening. These are the people that this bill is directly attacking in a gross abuse of power with a legislative hammer that is going to break legally binding contracts with public-sector workers who are in wage talks right now.

The government's motives to do this and to do it at a very quick pace appear to be tied with the fact that there is arbitration actively happening, actively scheduled to make sure that our public-sector workers are – after having gone through mediation and proper negotiation with our government, after having created contracts or collective agreements that included a wage reopener, this government is now trying to break that process. This is problematic for a number of different reasons.

When a collective agreement is signed, when a contract is signed, when an agreement between two parties is entered into, we expect both parties to uphold that. This bill is the government breaking contracts and not upholding its part of the bargain. It is disrespecting workers, it is disrespecting the collective bargaining process, which is very important, and it is putting us on a very dangerous path because our public-sector workers, all workers, deserve our respect. They deserve our respect, and when workers do not get the respect that they deserve, when they are not treated with respect, well, that's when workers start thinking about what their options are: potentially withdrawing services, job action, looking for other jobs, leaving the province, perhaps.

We all deserve to be treated with respect at all times, particularly in an employment situation, and this government is not doing that. Bill 9, which breaks the law – and many lawyers have already weighed in that this is unconstitutional. It will be taken to court – we've already seen that in the media – and could end up costing our government and our coffers more in the long run, which has happened in other jurisdictions. We've seen in B.C. in 2002 that the government reached in, broke that collective bargaining process with teachers. It took many years to resolve, and it ended up costing not just the B.C. government, but it cost the kids of that province in lesser services until this was resolved and negotiated, and the NDP government there has had to take that on.

At my last opportunity to speak to Bill 9 I made a very deliberate point of reading into the record the voices of Albertans, people who were horrified, people who were hurt, people who felt disrespected, people who were worried about what was happening with their employment situation, what would happen with their salaries, because they're concerned about what a government that would do this may do to them. It was important for me to read those voices into the record because so many Albertans have not been heard through this process. So many Albertans have not had the opportunity to consider what Bill 9 is and what it might mean for them. We are now at a point where we have a limited amount of time to have that conversation with Albertans.

We know that this bill impacts nearly 200,000 workers, including nurses, social workers, teachers, the sheriffs who guard our Legislature and who are here working with us and will be staying here late into the night as we debate this piece of legislation, child mental health therapists, long-term care workers, librarians, custodians, correctional officers. The number of people this impacts is enormous, the variety of jobs and services they provide.

But one thing they all have in common is that a lot of these workers have worked collaboratively with the previous government at the negotiating table to negotiate agreements that both parties were able to work with, to live with, and for a lot of these workers that meant taking zeros. That's what got negotiated at the table by both parties because our Alberta public service workers, our partners, understood what was happening in our province, and we dealt with them in a fair way. We found alternative ways to negotiate to make sure that there were agreements. I know that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-North West, when he was the Minister of Education, introduced the classroom improvement fund, representing roughly 400 teachers, so although teachers at the negotiating table were able to negotiate and took zeros, other supports, other changes were provided.

This type of strong working relationship, of treating each other as partners, looking each other in the eyes, and negotiating is how collective bargaining is supposed to work, but this government is ignoring all of that at their own peril and at the peril of our Alberta public services, at the peril of service delivery within our province. Not only that; my fear is that this could lead to labour unrest, that this could lead to service disruptions, that this could lead to workers leaving the province. It could lead to a number of very negative impacts when we could have negotiated in good faith with them.

Now, this government in various remarks has used the term "good faith," which I do not believe they fully understand. They've used the term "respect," respect for workers and at times respect for the opposition, but, again, in both cases actions do not match their words. So making sure that we try to raise as much attention as we can to Bill 9 and the negative impacts it could have in our province is incredibly important.

Now, there's a particular section within Bill 9 that through the debate tonight we will have an opportunity to discuss, and that is section 5(c), which provides the government with the power to create regulations on any matter that they consider "necessary or advisable for carrying out the intent of this Act." These are very broad powers. These are powers that give the government the ability to write regulations on anything respecting the intent of this act. Madam Chair, how do we define what the intent of this act is? The preamble. And the preamble of this particular bill, the preamble which would bind the powers, those regulation-making powers, speaks about commitment to balancing the budget, speaks about "public sector compensation [being] the largest government expenditure," speaks about the blue-ribbon panel and its recommendations, and speaks in such language that the government could easily use that boundary to write regulations to roll back wages, to implement wage freezes, and to further impact that collective bargaining process with our public-sector unions. I have a great deal of concern about the bill as a whole, as I've outlined, and about that particular section.

We know that this legislation would apply to 24 collective agreements, including several where arbitrations have already begun. In today's Edmonton Journal there is an important story drawing attention to the fact that there is an arbitration decision deadline that may be prompting the government to ram through the wage delay bill because there's arbitration that is scheduled to happen on Friday and Saturday of this week where the union involved, AUPE, "will argue that 23,000 front-line government employees deserve raises." Now, at that same table, Madam Chair, the government would also make its argument on economic factors, the current state of the economy, the current fiscal picture of Alberta. The information described in this preamble would all be things that the government would bring to make its arguments as well. That is the process by which an arbitrator would review all of the factors and issue a decision.

The article goes on to say that "the arbitrator could make a ruling as soon as Friday," and it includes some quotes from AUPE President Guy Smith: "That's why they're ramming it through . . . They don't want an independent third party, based on facts, to make a decision (about) front-line workers. I find that really quite disgraceful."

The government introducing a bill to break negotiated agreements with unions by delaying arbitration on wages until after October 31 is unconstitutional. It does a disservice to our public-sector workers, to Albertans. Again I will remind you that we are talking about our friends. We are talking about our family in many cases. I have family who work in the Alberta public service. We are talking about our neighbours. They live in all of the communities in Alberta because they serve every community in Alberta in so many ways.

On Monday night, while we debated this bill, members of Executive Council were on social media thanking front-line responders for helping to evacuate wildfire-impacted communities. That's a really great thank you. Thank you for helping to protect families and homes. We're going to stop your arbitration. We're going to reach into your collective bargaining process, and possibly we might do some wage rollbacks later because we've given ourselves the power to do that.

The disconnect: I suspect that those social media posts were sent from this Chamber while we debated Bill 9. Not being able to make the connection between these front-line responders, between the people we work with day in and day out, between the people who work to provide these ministers with the information they need to make sound decisions and the people this bill impacts is disconcerting to me, Madam Chair.

When contracts were originally negotiated in good faith by coming to the bargaining table and working together as partners, members of the public service agreed to multiple years of frozen wages in return for the ability to negotiate a wage increase in the final year of the contract. That's where we are today. To have that taken away from them is disrespectful, very upsetting. We have a lot of agitated public workers, and they have every right to be.

Interestingly enough, I had the opportunity to listen to someone in the labour relations community who was one of the mediators who helped negotiate this, and he felt that his reputation when he helped mediate this agreement was now impacted by the fact that the government has gone back on a contract, on a collective agreement that was duly negotiated at the bargaining table.

The clause that I referred to earlier, section 5(c): I do want to speak about that briefly. I believe that should the government stand to talk about clause 5(c), one of the things they would say is that this is commonly used, that this is a clause that we use all the time. That is not correct. It is a clause that can be put into legislation, but I can tell you from my four years in a government caucus that it is never lightly added to a piece of legislation. I had multiple discussions over different pieces of legislation when this clause was used, and in many cases it was removed because it was seen to be too powerful or inappropriate.

In this case not only is this clause used but the preamble which defines the intent of this act is so broad that it could be used to do anything. Now, when the government gives itself regulation-making powers on the local food act, then the government can make some regulations within the boundaries of a bill that is about supporting our local agricultural producers, on a bill that is about local food. When the government puts the clause into Bill 9 and defines its intent as "public sector compensation is the largest government expenditure," that's something entirely different. Now, I understand that the Minister of Finance has created a social media clippable video, saying that they would not use this to do wage rollbacks. My question to the members of the government would be: if you're not going to use it, then why is it there? That type of a catch-all clause allowing regulations to be made can create unexpected and unintended consequences.

8:50

Mr. Eggen: Oh, I don't think it's unintended.

Ms Gray: Or intended consequences, as a member of my caucus has just pointed out.

The Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, the bad-faith bargaining bill, is a bad piece of legislation, Madam Chair. This is one that takes away our workers' rights, that disrespects the workers of this province, claims that it is only a delay but gives itself regulation-making powers that are far-reaching and inappropriate in this case unless the government can provide a convincing argument for why they are necessary. It is specifically designed to interfere with an arbitration, with multiple arbitrations, but specifically we have one that was scheduled to happen later this week. Union leaders have called the bill an egregious attack on the collective bargaining rights of all of these workers: government employees, nurses, teachers, health professionals, and others.

Now, when I talk about section 5(c), you don't need to just take my word for it. We've had it checked with multiple lawyers, who agree with our interpretation of how this could be used. In fact, our Alberta Federation of Labour president, Gil McGowan, said on Wednesday that a clause in Bill 9 could give the government the power to cut public worker wages without requiring legislation or negotiation. Another well-respected member of the labour relations community said that this fundamental loss of trust in the Kenney government is one consequence of this very bill.

The Chair: Hon. member, I caution against the use of names in the Assembly.

Ms Gray: Oh, my apologies. That trips me up when I read things. Thank you, Madam Chair.

It bodes very poorly for the future of labour relations, and I agree with that concern wholeheartedly, Madam Chair.

So we find ourselves here, Wednesday night, starting a debate on a critically important piece of legislation, on which, I would submit, Albertans have not had proper opportunity to be consulted because the government did not talk about freezing arbitration or delaying arbitration throughout the election. They did not talk about breaking collective agreements or breaking contracts. This bill was introduced with oral notice exactly seven days ago. They did not give the opposition notice that this bill was coming. Normally the government would give the opposition and the press gallery: here is our agenda for the session. They did give us an agenda. This wasn't on it. A surprise bill intended to interrupt collective bargaining and then time allocated.

Madam Chair, it's really important to me that I repeat one more time that we are talking about friends, neighbours, family, the people we know and work with each and every day when we debate this bill, the sheriffs who are here protecting this building, the nurses that we see when we need help, the child mental health therapists who help the children in our communities.

I am not supporting Bill 9, and I look forward to hearing what my colleagues have to say on this bill as well as we continue to debate this, and I will be introducing amendments at a later time in the debate.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Madam Chair, we're back on talking about time allocation. The hon. member spent some time talking about the fact that the opposition was not informed about this legislation, that it was not something that was provided. That, in fact, is not true. I'm not saying that the hon. member is being untruthful; she may not have been informed by her Opposition House Leader, and that would be unfortunate if that's the case. I, through you to her, Madam Chair, would suggest she take that up with her House leader if that's the case. But that is not true. The opposition was fully informed of all of the legislative agenda of the government, including this bill. The Government House Leader, that's myself, and the Opposition House Leader had a meeting about our agenda, no different than what the NDP did when in government and I was the Opposition House Leader. That's a standard process. We exchange what the legislative agenda will look like for the upcoming sitting.

Now, from time to time – and the NDP did the same – occasionally, bills are added to that list, and then you contact the other side's House leader to inform them of that legislation. I want to, Madam Chair, through you to the entire House, assure the House that I did that. It's one of our goals, to always treat the opposition with respect when it comes to legislation. Again, the hon. member may not be aware, but her House leader was informed. It would be incumbent upon him at that point to inform their caucus. That's how the process is. This is not a secretive bill.

There's another issue that I'd point out in the same context, Madam Chair, and it was brought up by the member. The member brought up that this bill was magically tabled on Monday under some conspiracy theory, that we knew on this side of the House that Trans Mountain would be approved on Tuesday, the next day, and that this would somehow stop the press from covering this legislation, that this was some great secret. The reality, though, is that this bill was tabled on the Thursday, so four days before the hon. member says.

The point is that this is the problem. When it comes to everything the NDP is doing right now but particularly on this piece of legislation, they continue to misrepresent the facts of what took place in regard to this legislation. I can go through dozens of facts tonight. Even after I opened up debate on Bill 9 and pointed out that that party, when they were in power just a few short years ago, on Wednesday, December 9, 2015, while debating Bill 6, the farm safety act, the then hon. Government House Leader, Mr. Mason – I hope he's enjoying his retirement. If he's up watching us in Kelowna; I don't know what he's doing.

Mr. Kenney: From his vineyard? I doubt it.

Mr. Jason Nixon: I doubt it. But just in case he is: I hope you're enjoying your retirement, Brian.

He moved the following:

Oral notice having been given, Hon. Mr. Mason to propose the following motion:

Be it resolved that, when further consideration of Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the Bill in Second Reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the Bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

An Hon. Member: How much time?

Mr. Jason Nixon: One hour. One hour.

I could read again; I won't, Madam Chair.

Mr. Eggen: Madam Chair, point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-North West, your point of order.

Mr. Eggen: In regard to your previous comments about using this very limited time that we've had imposed upon us through closure, through the heavy-handedness of this government, you did, I think, very magnanimously suggest that we use the short amount of time to debate Bill 9. Clearly, the Government House Leader is abusing and circumventing that wise advice, taking up time talking about things that are only, you know, vaguely connected to anything, really, in this House, much less Bill 9. I would suggest, please, if you could redirect the debate back to why we're here in the first place.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Chair, I'll respond to that.

To be clear, Madam Chair, I rose to rebut the deputy leader of the NDP earlier. You made a ruling, which I respected. I moved away from time allocation and went to a couple of other things that the deputy leader brought up, and I yielded the floor in respect of your ruling. Since then I've been listening, and repeatedly, including with the last member, time allocation is being discussed, accusations are being made against this side of the House and the government that are misrepresenting facts, that, frankly, are not true, discussions about whether or not they were informed about the bills, those types of things.

Let me be clear. I will continue to rise and rebut misrepresented facts from the opposition. If they don't want to use their time on this bill to misrepresent facts inside this House, I will continue to rise and rebut them. I can either do it during debate or I'll do it on points of order over and over, but they will be rebutted. Again, through you, Madam Chair, to them, I suggest that they stick to the bill if they want to spend their time on it, but every time that they rise and misstate a fact, I will rise again and clarify it because I think it's important that House knows the facts.

The Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, I think it's fair to offer a rebuttal to comments that are made. I would suggest that they be as brief as possible in doing so.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Standing Order 13(2), Madam Chair, to get clarification on the ruling: is that how it will be for both sides?

The Chair: Of course, that is how it will be for both sides.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Good. Thank you.

Debate Continued

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining act. I'd like to take a moment first to actually confirm something that the Government House Leader said, which is that, yes, you know, the day before oral notice was given to this House of the introduction of Bill 9, I do believe the Government House Leader did inform the Opposition House Leader that, quote, a labour bill would be introduced that would make us set our hair on fire. So one can only assume that the characterization . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader. A point of order.

Point of Order

Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Chair, I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j). I'll focus primarily on language to create disorder though there are a few other standing orders I could use in this case. The hon. member is now attempting to refer to a conversation that she was not part of and, again, putting forward a timeline that she's incorrect about. The opposition was informed that legislation of this magnitude would be coming more than one day before, certainly several. I don't have the exact date in front of me. I certainly do not believe I said anything about lighting hair on fire. I would be very concerned about my friend the deputy House leader the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays if was anybody was lighting their hair on fire. He only has so much left. Again I would encourage the opposition not to misstate facts inside this House.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, I don't see any point of order here at all. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is simply setting up the debate that she will very methodically deliver in regard to Bill 9 and the drama and the facts that have taken place around Bill 9 from the time that we first heard of it, which was scarcely a week ago, to when it is scheduled to terminate through this ham-fisted time allocation, sometime in the early morning hours of Thursday. I would be so happy to hear her continue with what I'm sure will be a most illuminating analysis.

The Chair: Again I will add some caution when we're talking about a decision that has already been made in this House in regard to time allocation. This is just clearly a dispute of the facts, who may or may not have been part of conversations. No one really knows.

Please proceed with caution, hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased that the rules around hearsay do not apply in the House, and the hon. Government House Leader should be aware of that.

This is to set up the characterization of how this act was introduced in the House. I don't intend to speak to the issues the chair has already ruled on. But it goes again to the fact that this government has introduced this bill because it has a complete disregard for Alberta workers. That is why it was introduced. In fact, it is a clear disregard for the collective agreements that were appropriately negotiated between the parties to all these agreements. There might have been some intent to actually break them and to do that, and that's why they've introduced the bill that they've introduced. The characterization by the hon. Government House Leader, I think, speaks to the disdain with which this government is treating Alberta workers.

It's something that I've highlighted a number of times already in this House when I've spoken on other issues and when I've had the opportunity to speak to this bill the first time, that for some reason this government seems to have a complete disdain for the public-sector workers who deliver the public services that all Albertans rely upon. We've heard numerous times that the workers that they're challenging right now by breaching those collective agreements are the people who deliver our front-line services. They are nurses, they are teachers, and they are librarians. They are food inspectors, child mental health therapists. They are long-term care workers, correctional officers, sheriffs. These are not people that we need to disregard or that we should treat with disdain. These are Alberta workers. A government that campaigns on a platform of caring about jobs seems to still have very deep, deep, deep disdain for the people who actually perform those jobs. They seem to only care about them if they're private-sector workers.

Well, we care about the private sector as well, which is why we stood up in this House and talked about the disdain that this government was showing for workers in the oil and gas sector who work overtime, for minimum wage employees, for young workers. You know, jobs come with people attached to them. They come with people who need to put food on the table, who collectively bargain in good faith with their employers and with the government, and they expect those collective agreements to be upheld. I don't know why this government insists on treating Albertans with this disdain.

So if we're going to talk a little bit about the details of the bill – we've talked about in this House the fact that introducing this legislation is unconstitutional. I know that there is a great desire for the government caucus to engage in as many lawsuits as possible. We see that they like to keep lawyers employed, and, you know, as somebody who worked in private practice, I can say that I'm sure there are a lot of my former colleagues who will be thrilled by this government's agenda because it's going to keep a lot of them employed for a very long time. That's exactly what this government is doing. Apparently, the only workers that they really care about are lawyers, and, hey, as a lawyer I'd say thank you except that now I have a very significant role, which is to stand up for all Alberta workers, not just lawyers, in this House. But they seem to be dead set on setting this government down the path of repeated lawsuits.

Let me talk a little bit about the law, because I don't know if the government has considered the law at all. They seem to have callously and very recklessly introduced this legislation with the intent to bring on the ire of the opposition members but, clearly, also to trigger the ire of organized labour in this province. So let's talk a little bit about the law. It's very important that the government realize that while they think they have a large mandate, the Supreme Court of Canada still sets the law of the land for this province and will rule out governments who are acting unconstitutionally.

In 2007, Madam Chair, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled in Health Services and Support – Facilities Subsector Bargaining Assn. versus British Columbia that the right to collective bargaining under section 2(d) of the Constitution protects the right to good-faith bargaining and that governments will be held to account, just as employers are, when they bargain in bad faith. They set out the requirements that governments must be held to when they're introducing legislation that affects collective agreements. They talked about how that duty to bargain in good faith includes an obligation to meet, to commit time to the process, and to engage in meaningful dialogue that is aimed at arriving at an acceptable agreement. This lies at the heart of the collective bargaining process.

In that decision by the Supreme Court the court stated that with respect to legislation introduced by governments to affect collective agreements, the court confirmed that legislation must as well conform to section 2(d) of the Charter and is void under section 52 of the Constitution Act if it does not comply with section 2(d).

So let's go back to what's at the heart of that right to bargain in good faith that is set out by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court says that section 2(d) of the Charter, which is freedom of association, does not protect activity that is a substantial interference with associational activity. If it affects the associational activity, it must not discourage the collective pursuit of common goals. "It is enough if the effect of the state law or action is to substantially interfere with the activity of collective bargaining, thereby discouraging the collective pursuit of common goals." I want to clarify because the Supreme Court actually talked about this and said that there doesn't need to be intent by the government to actually substantially interfere. It's just enough that there's an effect. But in this case I think we see both. We see an intent to substantially interfere and an effect.

The court stressed in that decision that "the right to bargain collectively protects not just the act of making representations, but also the right of employees to have their views heard in the context of a meaningful process of consultation and discussion," and that means that they should be able to rely upon the collective agreements that they negotiate.

The Supreme Court also stated that laws or state actions that prevent or deny meaningful discussion and consultation about working conditions between employees and their employer may substantially interfere with the activity of collective bargaining, as may laws that unilaterally nullify significant negotiated terms in existing collective agreements. That is exactly what we are seeing here. We have a number of collective agreements that have already been agreed to, that have been in place for a number of years, that have a wage arbitration provision in them. This is what was agreed to by the parties at the table, and this government is breaking those agreements. They are substantially interfering with the negotiating process and the collective agreements that have already been settled.

9:10

It is an important aspect of good-faith bargaining in a collective agreement situation that all parties mutually respect the commitments that they have entered into. If the content of bargaining shows hostility from one party toward the collective bargaining process, this will constitute a breach of the duty to bargain in good faith.

This is why, Madam Chair, it is important how this bill was introduced. It is important because it shows that there is a lack of commitment, that there is an intent here to undermine the collective agreement process, and that they are breaching the agreements that were rightfully and lawfully entered into by the parties of these collective agreements. This government is doing that intentionally, and the process by which they've done it is important, the fact that they did not campaign on this mandate. It was not part of their platform that they would breach or alter collective agreements. It is key to know that that is what they're trying to do here. They did not give notice to Albertans that they were trying to breach their collective agreements. They simply did it, and they did it under cover of night. They did it with next to no notice. They did it by limiting debate. That's all important to the fact that it goes to the intent of why it was done. It was done because they're trying to ram it through quickly, and they're trying to do it as fast as possible. As the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods said, they might actually also be doing it to get around the arbitration provisions that are coming forward right now.

I think it is very important that – you know, the Government House Leader wants to talk about the legislation. He wants to talk about the bill. That is why the context around how the bill was introduced is so important. I don't know that the Government House Leader is listening to the important constitutional provisions that we're talking about. Again, I think there is a very strong desire to enter into as many lawsuits as possible. For a government that its platform is on fiscal responsibility, I wonder how responsible it is for Albertans' dollars to be used in lawsuits rather than in delivering public services and maintaining their commitment to the public-sector workers who provide those services every day.

I look at the opposition members. We all know people in the public sector who work. I wonder how the Member for Calgary-North would feel about the fact that teachers in his riding might take collective agreement action. They might take strike action because their wage negotiations are going to be interfered with. How would his constituents feel about a disruption in the delivery of education in their schools for that reason? How would the Minister of Education feel about that? I'm not sure we'd hear much from her about that. I wonder how each member in this House would feel if in their constituency their constituents were not getting the public services that they are owed, that they deserve, that they need because their caucus has decided to bring forward a breach of collective agreements and are causing significant labour unrest.

One of the things that I'm very proud of coming into this government, not having been part of it for the last four years, was to watch particularly the work of the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. She did such a fantastic job working with unions, listening carefully, being a fantastic representative of government, of public-sector workers and public services but also doing it in a responsible way. She worked collaboratively with them. That is why, during a time of significant financial strain, with the drop in oil prices in this province, we did not have labour unrest. We did not have slashing and burning of government services. I think all Albertans, public-sector workers in particular, understood our responsibility in a time of economic difficulty to come together and do what was right for this province. Now this government is going to reward those employees, those workers, those public-sector workers who deliver these services to our province, by breaking those collective agreements.

I think it's important to note that the government keeps mentioning: "This is just a small bill. It's just a few clauses. It's just delaying it for four months." We have not heard a commitment from the Minister of Finance that there will actually be arbitration at the end of this time period put forward by Bill 9. There is no commitment. Frankly, I don't think that many public-sector workers will have much faith that that arbitration is going to come. We know what's happening. The government has been telling us for weeks – actually, they've been telling us for months about what they're going to do. They've been laying the groundwork through the Mackinnon panel, through the statements that we heard in this House about, oh, how much we spend on education, how much we spend on health care. They're laying the groundwork for significant cuts. Would they have any faith that there would be fair bargaining coming at the end of Bill 9's expiration? I don't think so.

I think it's also fair to say, as the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods pointed out, that this piece of legislation has one of those really tricky, convenient clauses that allows for the drafting of regulations with a very broad regulation-making authority. Given that there should be no faith by Albertan workers in this government, I don't think we can have any faith that they would pass regulations that would be in the best interest of public-sector workers. We know that they'll be passing regulations that will continue to undermine the public services delivered by public-sector workers in this province.

I think we have a significant issue, and this deserves a significant debate because this government is trying to ram this through quickly. They've already made their decision with the MacKinnon panel. They gave clear direction that they're not to talk about opportunities to raise new revenues from tax increases, so where are those extra revenues going to come from? It's going to come from cutting services and cutting public-sector employee wages. This is clearly part of a pattern. We see what's coming, we anticipate it, we should be outraged, and we should be talking about it.

If the Government House Leader and the government caucus is not going to listen to public-sector employees, I know I am, and I know that my colleagues in this House are. I listened to them when I was on the doorsteps in Edmonton-Whitemud talking to constituents who were saying: thank you for not cutting our jobs. There are a significant number of public-sector workers in my riding, and they said: thank you for not cutting my job and not cutting the services to my family in a time of economic downturn. But somehow that is not appreciated by this government. They don't appreciate that. They're dead set on hurting Albertans and hurting the Albertans who work in those sectors even more than they are right now.

I think it's very significant that we talk about these things and we talk about the fact that this government is sending us down a path of considerable labour unrest in this province, considerable constitutional legal challenges, and that's not going to serve any of us well. All that's going to do is waste our time. It's going to upset Albertan workers. It's going to upset our services to our families and to our households, and it's only going to create a lot of money for lawyers.

I'm completely baffled by how this government claims to campaign on a platform of fiscal responsibility, yet all they want to do is blow our money on gambles, gambles on a $4.5 billion gift in the corporate tax cut, a gamble that we've shown numerous times is not supported by research. There's plenty of research to talk about how that does not create jobs, but they're going to gamble that way. They're going to gamble our climate change future on the fact that, oh, well, you know, we'll challenge the federal carbon tax in court even though that challenge has already been defeated at the provincial level, but we'll just launch lawsuits. Now they're saying that we're going to gamble on our public service delivery, on our public service workers by breaching collective agreements. We'll just take a gamble that. We'll go to court and deal with it there.

I don't think that that's fiscal responsibility, and I think, quite frankly, all Albertans should be ashamed of that because we deserve a government with a plan, a plan to actually invest in our public service workers, a plan to invest in our public services and invest in things such as climate change and invest in things such as actually creating jobs rather than just hoping that by cutting taxes, somebody will come and create jobs here.

This government has not shown that it has done its research. It clearly has not done its research on the constitutional laws around freedom of association, the right to collective bargaining, and bargaining in good faith. As somebody who used to work in public service, I feel a little bit of compassion for the lawyers who work in Alberta Justice who are now going to have to spend their time defending this because that's really all they're going to be doing.

They're going to be defending ourselves or perhaps leading challenges in court, and that's just wasting our public service dollars.

I'm, frankly, sorry that the Government House Leader seems so disdainful toward the opposition and the fact that we stand up and we will continue to stand up for the fact that this is something that we need to do. I know that the Government House Leader requires a great deal of attention every time he enters the room. He's looking for some attention right now as well. But we will certainly continue to advocate for Alberta workers because this government is not only not going to advocate for them; they're trying to hurt them. I myself am not going to stand for that. That's not my job. I was elected here to look out for Albertans, both who hold those jobs and who receive the services from our public-sector workers.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Others wishing to speak? Any other members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mountain View – Calgary. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

9:20

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You almost moved me a little north.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

I'm pleased to rise as well and speak on this bill. I think my colleague before me from Edmonton-Whitemud has done an amazing job of laying out some of the primary objections to this bill, laying out the ways in which it violates the Constitution. I think I could belabour that point at length because it does violate the Constitution. I think that we should all be concerned about that because we're not talking about – you know, we talk about the Constitution, and for some of us that document holds an enormous amount of weight. Fundamentally what we're talking about when we're talking about the Constitution is those fundamental principles which pull us together, things like basic rights, the basic rights of individuals to come together and act collectively to protect their interests. I can't think of anything more fundamental to a society than the ability to come together in that way.

I think we should watch this closely because it is part of an overall pattern. It is part of an overall pattern of disrespect for the rule of law and disrespect for the fundamental principles of our democracy. I think that is a huge shame. It isn't just this one set of people that are being disrespected, and I think that would be enough. That would be enough for me to stand up and for me to push back and to say: "This isn't appropriate. You can't do this. These are people, and those people have rights. You can't just run roughshod over them." But it isn't just this one group. It's youth. It's LGBTQ youth. It's youth employment. This is a much broader pattern of trying to sink those who have less power, of trying to push down on those who have less power in society, of taking away from those who are already vulnerable.

Essentially, what they're saying is that these individuals who have come to the table, who have participated with Albertans, who have come over a number of years to bargain in good faith with the province, often taking zeros – again, I've mentioned this before in the House. Teachers took five consecutive years of zeros because they, too, care about the future of this province because it is their province, too. To take that, to say, "You came to the table, you acted in good faith, and you treated us fairly" and to turn around and snub it and say, "We're not going to treat you like that. We don't respect the promises that we have made. We don't respect the contracts that bind us. We don't even respect the highest law in the land, the Constitution," I think is disgraceful.

You know, much has been said about the exact timelines in this House, but I think that when members opposite are rising to talk about how things used to be and how things are and who has disrespect for what, they ought to recall, because I certainly sat through many long nights in this Chamber, when members opposite wailed about being asked to consider a bill in under two weeks. Well, here we are looking at a bill in less than a week. I can't even imagine. I remember what the hon. Government House Leader had to say about being asked to do second reading a day or two after a bill was introduced. I can't imagine what he would have said about this. The comments that are made publicly about this: to maintain a reasonable and effective pace. A reasonable and effective pace that is higher than any pace that has been taken in the past? I mean, it's almost laughable that those are the words that are used to describe it.

We need to take the time to consider this because, again, what we're talking about is fundamental. It's fundamental to our democracy. We're talking about the Constitution. We're talking about violating the Constitution. Let's not give it any consideration; let's just put it through in less than a week. I mean, it's incredibly troubling. Again, my colleague from Edmonton-Whitemud spelled out, I think, the legal framework around this in incredible detail. But I think that there's more than just legality behind this because, ultimately, this is a matter of the ties that bind us together as a society, the ability to make a promise, to say "I promise" and keep that promise. That's the basis of contract law.

Interestingly, I studied philosophy, and one of the things I took was an entire seminar on promising. It's considered philosophically a very interesting concept because it underlies so much of our society, because it underlies the legal world in a huge way. People's ability to say to each other, you know, "I will do A, and you will do B" and to make an agreement is the basis on which we are able to live together. If we do not have that, the exchange of saying, "I will give you $10 now, and you will give me a goat tomorrow," if we're not able to make that exchange, if we're not able to rely on the word of the people around us, and if we're not able to rely on the system to force us to keep our word in that way, it really does impact our ability to function effectively moving forward.

Another thing which has been mentioned in this House extensively is the mandate, the mandate of the government, that the government was elected with a huge mandate. But what troubles me is that I don't recall seeing in the platform – and perhaps the hon. Government House Leader will help me out. He seems to like to rise repeatedly. [some laughter] That really wasn't intentional. That certainly wasn't in the platform, this plan to cut public-sector wages. It wasn't in the platform that they intended to roll back the rights of workers.

I mean, a lot has been said about facts or nonfacts or disputes of facts or various other things this evening, so I think it's worth referring to the actual text of the bill because I think, you know, at least in this case, the facts are in black and white. The clause that my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods referred to is a clause which is very rarely invoked in legislation.

- 5 The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations
  - (c) respecting any other matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable for carrying out the intent of this Act.

It's used infrequently because normally the House passes legislation, and then cabinet is able to make regulations. Those don't get the same kind of attention. They don't necessarily attract the same kind of public attention. So the reason that regulations are only used to support acts, the reason that regulation-making powers are not generally this broad is because, well, the public deserves to know what's happening.

Again, I've said that this clause is used infrequently. I do know that it has been used in the last four years because I certainly remember discussing it. But in instances in which it's used, it's usually used with an act that has a comparatively narrow focus. The problem is that the intent of the act is defined by the preamble. It's a series of whereases. Usually the preamble to a bill doesn't really add much, but in this instance, because of this particular clause, the preamble becomes highly relevant. In this instance the preamble refers to:

Whereas public sector compensation is the largest government expenditure, constituting over half of the Government of Alberta's operating expense . . .

Then I'm skipping one and moving down.

Whereas the Blue Ribbon Panel on Alberta's Finances, an expert panel appointed by the Government of Alberta, will deliver a final report . . . and time is required to gather . . . [the] information.

9:30

We've had a significant amount of foreshadowing about what it is that this particular expert panel is going to say. We know that the chair has recommended closures of rural hospitals, has recommended wage rollbacks, has talked about wage rollbacks. I mean, they might as well have written right into the bill "whereas we would like to roll back the wages of public-sector employees" as part of the preamble. I mean, essentially, this preamble is foreshadowing exactly what's going to happen.

I'll say it again: if the government is saying that they're not going to do that, that they're not going to impact contracts, that they're not going to roll back the wages of public-sector workers, then why is this here? If you have no intention of using it, why is it there? Certainly, other clauses could have been used. There are a multitude – I mean, I can probably count hundreds – of different regulation-enabling powers that could have been used instead of this one. This one was chosen, and it was chosen with an incredibly broad preamble. It was chosen with a preamble that clearly foreshadows wage rollbacks. Yet here it is. I think it's clear what the intent of the bill is. [interjection] Sorry. I think it's clear what the intent of the bill is. It seemed as though the hon. Premier had something to add there.

I think, you know, the government is in a position to ultimately make these moves and to make them in cabinet with very little debate, which brings me back to the overall concern here, which is, again, that we're violating contracts, that we're violating that which fundamentally holds us together.

We're not just violating contracts for anyone. I think my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods and myself, in a previous statement, have been quite clear about this. You know, the government attempts to set up this dichotomy: like, there are public-sector workers, and then there are people. Well, public-sector workers are people. They're our friends, they're our spouses, they're our families, they're people next door, they're members in our community, and they contribute to this province, the same as we do. This attack on them should not be taken lightly because it isn't going to end here. It isn't just going to be this. It isn't just going to be the public-sector workers and young workers and LGBTQ youth. I mean, who knows who's next?

I think folks should take note of this because it clearly foreshadows what's coming. Again, despite significant talk about things being in the platform, I didn't see in the platform a statement that said: we're going to cut public-sector compensation. I didn't see in the platform a statement that said: we intend to violate our own contracts. I didn't see in the platform anything that said: we intend to take away overtime. There are a fair number of these things, and it's not okay.

Again, it speaks to disrespect, and I think that in this House we've seen it on a number of different occasions, and I find it very troubling. There is this tendency to write off legitimate questions on the part of the government as, quote, unquote, fear and smear, as, quote, unquote, personal attacks. Well, asking how many teachers will be laid off because of a cutback isn't a personal attack; it's a legitimate policy question. We have a policy difference over whether or not we should cut public-sector workers' jobs in the midst of a recession.

That's probably our biggest fundamental difference, that and trickle-down economics, which I don't believe works and the members opposite obviously do. I think that to write that off as a personal attack and something that isn't worthy of an answer is incredibly inappropriate. To write off a question about whether Alberta's health services are going to continue to be publicly funded, publicly delivered health services that are accessible to all people is disrespectful. To suggest that policy debate like that, that a policy question like that is somehow out of order is disrespectful, the same way that breaking these contracts is disrespectful. I don't think that it's behaviour that should ultimately be tolerated.

I'm sure I can think of a few more additional – we did interim supply just recently, in which all members had an opportunity to go back and forth, and there were, I think, a series of allegations that legitimate policy questions were out of order in various ways. I myself, to my questions about budget numbers, received not a single response detailing a number. I received an angry diatribe that involved yelling and raising of voices and, just generally, angriness. I think that I have a right to ask in this place, on behalf of people I represent: hey, this budget is clearly going to be lower than the last one was; where are the cuts? I don't think that that should get an angry diatribe in return. I think that that is a legitimate policy question, and I think it should be met with a legitimate policy answer. I mean, I think the answer is clearly: of course, there will be cuts, and they will be deep. Otherwise, why would it be met with a long, angry, screaming rant?

Those are many of the places where this government, I feel, continues to be disrespectful of the opposition and our role. Again, a lot of Albertans voted for us. You know, this is the interesting thing, because this all ties back together, in my view. It's true: a majority of voters voted for the government. That's how that works. But that doesn't mean that all minority voices, the other 45 per cent of the population, can be entirely disregarded. In the same way, LGBTQ youth represent a minority of the population, but that doesn't mean that their rights ought to be disregarded. Public-sector workers represent a minority of the population, but that doesn't mean that their rights ought to be disregarded, yet we see this government again coming forward with a bill that says pretty much exactly that.

I'm troubled. I'm troubled by what this bill means, I'm troubled by what the agenda of this government means, and I'm troubled by the fact that I know that there are members on the government side of the House who don't agree with all of these. I know that there are members on the opposite side of the House who do have respect for LGBTQ youth and their rights. I know that there are members on the opposite side of the House who care about the rights of nurses, of teachers, of court workers, yet they don't rise. Not only do they not rise, but they vote to limit the ability of the opposition to rise, and they push through this bill in such a way that they limit the ability of the public to engage.

If there's any one flaw, I would say, in our democratic system, it is that public engagement has been diminishing, and I think that that is sad. It has a certain amount to do with the fact that there are fewer members of the media, I think. I mean, they do an incredibly good job; they really do. They work incredibly hard at what they're . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, comments? I see the hon. Minister of Finance rising to speak.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to refute, I think, some of the comments that have been made by the opposition regarding Bill 9. I think the first thing I want to say is that the intent on Bill 9 is clear. It really is, as the title would suggest, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act. The intent is singular. The intent is simply to delay arbitration a few months, until this government has had time to fully assess our financial situation and, moreover, hear from the MacKinnon panel, a very competent, diverse, nonpartisan panel, that has been put in place to deliver, not only to this government but to the people of Alberta, a path forward to balance and, at the same time, a path to continue to deliver high-quality services to Albertans.

We've heard from members opposite about what was and what was not in our platform, but, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to all members tonight that there was something that was very clear in our platform, and that was to bring this province to balance. Albertans have put this government in place to deliver that mandate, and that is the purpose of delaying public-sector wage arbitration, not because we have determined what that outcome should be but, in fact, to ensure that we have sufficient time, sufficient information to be prudent and thoughtful and responsible not only to Albertans but to the public sector and not only for this generation but for future generations.

Mr. Chair, the previous government, the members opposite, had this province on a trajectory for $100 billion of provincial debt. That is unacceptable to this government, but more importantly it was unacceptable to Albertans. That was one of the reasons why they elected this government, to make the decisions, financial decisions on behalf of Albertans. If our province was going to continue down that path to really unacceptable debt, it leaves Albertans with significant challenges. It has a very negative effect on investment in this province. It would have continued to encourage the flight of investment from this province and, with it, jobs and opportunities. We've heard the members opposite talk about the importance of jobs, and jobs are important, both in the public sector and in the private sector.

Continuing down the path of high and rising deficits, which contribute, amongst other things, to the flight of investment capital, the loss of jobs and opportunities, is a game of declining sums, Mr. Chair. Not only does it lead to future unemployment, job loss, and wealth loss for Albertans, but it will ultimately lead to governments not being able to deliver the high-quality services that Albertans expect and not being able to continue to employ a very vibrant, skilled public sector, that we need to deliver those high-quality services.

Mr. Chair, this Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act is about ensuring that we have the information that's required to make prudent, thoughtful decisions on behalf of Albertans so that we can ensure that we're able to deliver these high-quality services such as education and health care and other services to Albertans. I'm a lifelong Albertan. I've raised a family in this province. We have grandchildren in this province. We have been privileged to benefit from these services that the public sector has delivered, and I can truly say that I'm grateful for and appreciative of the public sector and the services that they deliver to Albertans every day. But the fact is that in order to ensure that we can continue these services, again, not only for this generation but for future generations, we must be responsible, and this move to defer the arbitration is about being responsible so that we can make, again, thoughtful, prudent, informed decisions on behalf of Albertans.

There has been concern with one of the sections of the legislation, section 5(c), which states that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations “respecting any other matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable for carrying out the intent” of the bill. I would suggest, in fact I would state, Mr. Chair, that the intent of this bill is clear. The intent of this bill is simply to delay public-sector wage arbitration. That is the intent of the bill, and I would like to mention to the members opposite that in bills that the members opposite actually created and passed when they were in government, there was similar language in many, many of those bills. Let me read some of those tonight.

Bill 5, Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act; Bill 2, An Act to Restore Fairness to Public Revenue; Bill 4, An Act to Implement Various Tax Measures and to Enact the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act; Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act; Bill 202, Alberta Local Food Act; Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services; Bill 5, Seniors’ Home Adaptation and Repair Act: that is not an exhaustive list. In fact, I can carry on. Bill 6, Securities Amendment Act, 2016; Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences; Bill 11, Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016; Bill 16, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2016; Bill 18, An Act to Ensure Independent Environmental Monitoring; Bill 19, Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions Compensation Act: Mr. Chair, there was very similar language in these bills as well.

I will reaffirm from this government that the intent of this bill is simply to delay arbitration for a few months. Again, this bill is not about the removal of rights. It’s simply about the postponement – the temporary postponement – of process. We take our responsibilities very seriously, the responsibilities that Albertans entrusted us with on April 16, the responsibility of delivering high-quality services to Albertans today, tomorrow, and ensuring that by virtue of doing so, we don’t do it in a way that jeopardizes that delivery to future generations. They also left us with a responsibility to bring this province to balance. We take those responsibilities seriously, Mr. Chair. We require time to deliver well. That is what Bill 9 is about, and we will follow through with that commitment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods standing.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for recognizing me, Mr. Chair. I would like to say thank you to the Finance minister for speaking specifically to section 5(c). The bills that he was referencing were all limited. The power in section 5(c) was limited by the intent of the act. The intent of this act is wide ranging and specifically talks about balancing the budget on the backs of workers. That is how it is read.

At this point, before I speak any more, I would like to move an amendment, Mr. Chair, to Bill 9 on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, this amendment will be known as A1 going forward, and if you would be so kind as to read it into the record, that would be great. Just to remind you, too, there are another 19 minutes and 12 seconds remaining as well on this part of your questions, comments, and amendments.

Ms Gray: Oh. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I don’t believe I’ll use the full amount of time.

The amendment on behalf of Member Bilous is to move that Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, be amended by striking out section 5(c).

Section 5(c): we’ve had the opportunity to discuss a number of times about the concerns, the strong concerns, that it gives the government power to impose wage freezes, wage rollbacks, that it gives very broad, far-reaching powers, particularly when you consider that it’s governed by the intent of the act. The intent of this act is a very long preamble that touches on a number of things, specifically public-sector compensation, specifically the need to balance the budget, all of this leading us to believe that this section can and will be used to freeze wages for our public-sector unions or roll back wages to our public-sector workers.

Similar to my earlier comments, I will remind this House that the workers we are talking about are the sheriffs in this building, our friends and neighbours, the people in our communities. With this amendment I would like to propose to the government that we strike section 5(c). If the government is intent on moving forward with this bill – and they are, having brought it forward and put in place closure – will you accept amendment of section 5(c)? If you will not accept this amendment, I would very much appreciate hearing the reasoning on why not. I would invite any member of the government to respond.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, are there any members wishing to make comments or questions on amendment A1? I see the hon. Government House Leader rising.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Chair, I’m happy to rise on this amendment. I’m looking at it. One of the concerns I have – and I have indicated that to the opposition in the past – is that it would be helpful to provide these with a little bit more notice, and we’d be able to provide them some feedback. I would, through you to the opposition, suggest that they spend a little bit more time articulating to us why this amendment is important, and I suspect we’ll be able to give them an answer to their question shortly.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora rising.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I think that one of the things was just mentioned. One of the criticisms that has been given on this bill has been mentioned by the Finance minister, and that’s concern that this section 5(c) is the section that gives sweeping powers to implement – let me read it for us: “respecting any other matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable for carrying out the intent of this Act.”

Really, because of the preamble, a question was asked: how is this different than when this clause was embedded in the Local Food Act, for example, one of the acts that the Finance minister gave as an example of where this clause was lifted from? Fair point. This clause is in other legislation, but the preamble to this act is very different than the preambles for other legislation. Usually the preamble is much more focused. The Local Food Act talked about – I don’t have the words in front of me, but it essentially said: whereas our intent is to support local producers, local agricultural producers, we are bringing forward the following legislation. So it was very clear that if the Lieutenant Governor in Council wanted to bring forward other pieces consistent with the intent of the act, that it be focused in that area, around local food for the Local Food Act.

The intent of this act is much broader given that the preamble talks about things like being “committed to providing high-quality front line services” and that “the Government of Alberta is committed to balancing its budget [in] 2022-2023.” Again, there’s concern that that means that that will be the highest priority and that through an order in council there could be other, more sweeping impacts to collective agreements that would make that the primary focus.

In the preamble it says, “Public sector compensation is the largest government expenditure, constituting over half of the Government of Alberta’s operating expense.” This leaves concerns that if the LG, through orders in council, is going to be bringing forward amendments where that’s the focus, it would indeed lead to things beyond the scope that has been articulated in this House, around the scope being simply about delaying arbitration, that it would be far more sweeping, the ability to bring forward things through OIC. That’s a bit of rationale for the Government House Leader and all members to consider.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader is rising.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Again, just a few moments ago the hon. the Finance minister rose in this place and spoke about a couple of things, but what’s relevant to this legislation is that he spoke about the history of using a clause like 5(c) inside multiple pieces of legislation. It’s actually a very common clause inside legislation. I see the hon. member nodding in agreement, that certainly a significant amount of legislation that had a clause like 5(c) has been in this place in my time. I know that the hon. member in her time in cabinet moved legislation that had 5(c) in it, I would assume. Certainly, her colleagues had. You know, stuff like Bill 6, for example, had 5(c) as well as some of the municipal bills that the hon. Finance minister referred to earlier. This is a standard procedure within legislation. I see no need for this amendment. I appreciate the hon. members bringing it forward, but this side of the House will not support this.

The intent of this bill is clear. The Finance minister has made it clear what it is. It’s to keep a promise as we work through our balancing of the budget process, to provide a period of pause just to make sure that we can get all the facts straight and then be able to go through this process properly.

As such, I would encourage all of my hon. colleagues to vote against this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods rising again.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the Government House Leader for the response. To respond specifically, yes, this is a clause that can be used in legislation. It always needs to be used cautiously. We always need to look at the bounds for how it can be used, and that is the intent. But the preamble for this bill is very wide ranging, has very big potential intent, and the connection between this preamble and using this section to freeze wages or to roll back wages is easily painted and has been confirmed with lawyers. That is why we have put forward the striking out of section 5(c).

Now, I’ve heard the Government House Leader state in this House that he will not be supporting this amendment. My question to him or to other members of the government is: will you state in this House that you will not use section 5(c) to freeze or roll back public-sector wages?

The Deputy Chair: Are there any others?

I see the hon. Government House Leader rising to speak.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Chair, thank you to the hon. member for the question. The intent of the bill is clear. It’s been expressed clearly inside this House by many members of the cabinet as well as lots by the hon. the Finance minister. This is, again, a standard clause that is in most pieces of legislation like this. I know that the Official Opposition has many amendments that they would like to move forward this evening, and I suggest they move on because I don’t believe the government will be accepting this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the Government House Leader. Absolutely understanding that the government will not be supporting this amendment, I’m simply seeking a clarification. The Finance minister did do a social media video that was posted, but for the record and in this Legislature for Albertans who are watching in the gallery, online, or recorded into the future, the concern is that this section will be used to freeze or roll back public-sector wages. The government has said repeatedly that the intent is only to delay. Let’s connect these two thoughts. The intent is only to delay, so please state that your intention is not to freeze or roll back for public-sector workers.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Chair, the minister has been clear on this point. The hon. member is referred to his comments, and it’s time to move on.

The Deputy Chair: Anyone looking to speak to A1? It looks like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore if I’m not mistaken.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate it. My second opportunity here to speak to Bill 9 and, of course, this amendment to the act to remove section 5(c). As you can imagine, I’ve been listening very intently over the course of this debate, and I have to say that history is a very interesting thing. We can learn a lot from history. We can learn what’s taken place, and we can learn how not to repeat mistakes that have been made in history but also something very important. We can learn what people might do in the future based on what they’ve done in history.

When I see a section like 5(c) in Bill 9, it gives me great pause because I look back as far as maybe only half an hour to what’s been just said around reviewing the finances of the province. The Finance minister said that we need to fully assess the finances, that we need to be prudent, thoughtful, and make informed decisions. He also made reference to the blue-ribbon panel, which, unfortunately, does not have the mandate to review the revenue side. So I struggle with whether our finances are going to be fully assessed, whether thoughtful and prudent decisions will be made.

When I look at 5(c) in Bill 9, I’m hearing, “Well, it’s just standard; we’re probably not going to use it,” yet we’re kind of almost cheaping out on what I was just talking about with reviewing the finances. We have members in the gallery tonight that believe the government is going to cheap out on 5(c) and that they are going to mandate either wage freezes or, probably most likely, wage rollbacks. To have the government be able to just come right in, do that without bargaining, well, Mr. Chair, that leads us back to why we’ve now dubbed this bill the Bad-faith Bargaining Act. So how is it that we give our members, our very hard-working public-sector Albertans, confidence that this government will not do that? This amendment here, by removing 5(c), would at least, hopefully, be a start.

There is still the whole concept around pushing off the bargaining that was made in good faith. You know, I remember one of the members – I’m not a hundred per cent sure; it could have been the Member for Calgary-Hays – talking about the diversity within the government caucus and all the different backgrounds, which is fantastic, Mr. Chair. I love it. What I’d like to do is that I’d like to appeal to maybe some of the folks that have a business background. So let me ask you: if you're running a business and you've made a deal with somebody, be it a product or service that you require for your business, and partway through the other side says, "You know what; I'm just going to change that," I'm curious, hon. members, about how many of you would have a problem with that. If you don't raise your hand, I think that would concern me if you were a business owner, so why wouldn't these hard-working public-sector workers up in our gallery this evening be concerned? Why are you surprised that they would have a problem with Bill 9?

But we have an opportunity here, Mr. Chair. We have an opportunity to maybe extend an olive branch, to maybe say: well, look, we'll do this in good faith, trying to show you that it really is about just holding negotiations off for just a little while while we look at our finances. Of course, I would really love it if the Finance minister would fully assess our finances, including our revenue side, so that you can make prudent, thoughtful, and informed decisions.

But what concerns me, again, Mr. Chair, looking back in history, is when I've heard certain things said: one of the key elements of structural reform is to move quickly; speed creates momentum; it also makes it harder for opponents of reform to obstruct it, because we don't want to get bogged down with public consultation. Our hard-working public-sector workers in the gallery want the opportunity to bargain fairly, and Bill 9 is taking that away. But by removing 5(c), we're extending a bit of an olive branch, saying: "We won't freeze your wages. We won't roll them back. We'll actually consult you," which means bargain, "in good faith."

I'm curious. Maybe to the Member for Leduc-Beaumont: I wonder if hard-working police officers would have appreciated having their wages just automatically rolled back without even asking them. To the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo: I wonder if maybe our amazing paramedics, colleagues in his field, would have appreciated being told, "Your wage is frozen; thanks for coming." Maybe to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon: I wonder if any of his teacher colleagues would have liked having their wages rolled back. I bet we've probably even got some fine social workers up in the gallery this evening, that work very, very hard for Albertans each and every single day, and I really do appreciate that. Maybe to the Member for Calgary-Foothills: I wonder if any of his colleagues might have had a problem with having their wages just rolled back without even asking. That's what 5(c) tells me could possibly happen.

I look back in history at some of the things that we've heard said: making it harder for opponents to obstruct; not getting bogged down in consultation. That is a recipe, Mr. Chair, for labour unrest, and I would not blame these very hard-working women and men this evening if they took exception to what this government is proposing in Bill 9.

I do want to make sure that some of my other colleagues get the opportunity to speak. I may be up again on my feet, Mr. Chair, with more to say. As you can imagine, I fully support this amendment to remove 5(c). Let's extend an olive branch. Maybe we might be able to gain back some trust. I think that actually voting down Bill 9 as a whole will gain back a whole lot of trust from those hard-working public-sector workers in our gallery this evening.

10:10

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, comments, questions, or amendments? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-South rising to speak.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's always a pleasure to get up here and debate on such important legislation here in the Chamber.

I really do want to thank my hon. colleague for moving this amendment because I think it is something that is very important. We can look at Bill 9 and see that it gives the government carte blanche to roll back wages and to act in bad faith against so many workers across this province. I mean, I've noted that there are a number of unions that are going to be affected by this bill, and they're listed quite clearly in the schedule in the bill.

But I have a few questions, perhaps, to the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. I mean, I've really got to ask the member: what is going to happen to the teachers and the students and the parents that are in the Drumheller Outreach school, those grades 7 to 12 students? I mean, those students absolutely do need the best possible education. If they're worried and their teachers are constantly worried about wage rollbacks or what this government will do without any consultation and without letting it be debated properly in this Assembly, what are those parents and teachers going to think?

I'm worried about what those grades 10, 11, and 12 students in Drumheller Valley secondary school will think as well. I mean, those students are going to be worried about what those negotiations are going to mean for things like their class sizes, for things like how many educational assistants they can have in their classrooms.

I mean, even in Greentree school, K to 6: those are some of the most formative years for students. I really hope that the member understands how aggressively this is going to be attacking those families in his community. And it's not just the public workers. Of course, this is about negotiations with those unions and with those teachers, but the families that go to those schools in your community, in Drumheller, right there, are the ones that are going to be under attack.

We also can look at some schools in Stettler. Stettler elementary has 600 students, grades K to 6, formative years for 600 students, and there are so many teachers that have to go into that. When we look at the class sizes that have to be negotiated and the remuneration for that and whether those teachers are going to be able to give their best if they're worried about this government attacking them without consultation, attacking them without allowing them to negotiate properly, in bad faith, I mean, that's something I would be very concerned about if that was my constituency and if those were my constituents. I assume that the vast majority of those teachers would live in your riding, Member. I would also assume that the vast majority of the families that go to those schools would live in that riding as well, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler's.

I mean, those are just some of the bigger schools. Of course, we're talking about some fairly large towns here, but there are even schools that are quite a bit smaller, right? We can talk about schools like Byemoor school, which is a K to 9 school. There are only about 30 students, two and a half full-time professional staff, and 1.75 full-time paraprofessional staff. Most of those classrooms are even triple graded. If this negotiation goes on and aggressively attacks those classrooms, triple-graded classrooms with only two and a half full-time professionals, what if this negotiation brings it down to two or one and a half? That could be something that could be very aggressively targeting those 30 or so students right in that community. I'd encourage the Member for Drumheller-Stettler to maybe get up and explain to those families why it's okay to attack those teachers, that are working so hard to make sure these students have the best possible education in this province.

We talk about Coronation school. There are about 300 students there, K to 12, but 80 of those are in high school. Those 80 high school students absolutely need to have the best possible preparation they can have for things like their PATs and diplomas, that are coming up right away. If you're going to be attacking the teachers that are going to prepare those high-schoolers, that's something that can be very aggressive to them. It's not just teachers. We know teachers really do affect our families in very large ways. Teachers teach our students and they teach our kids, and that's something that's very important. Those teachers and those students and those families live right in your members' ridings, just right there in Drumheller and Stettler.

We can also look at the other types of workers as well. There's the Drumheller health centre. There's a 24/7 emergency room there. They provide laboratory services. They provide things like ultrasounds, pharmacy services. All of those people who are under negotiation – I believe it would be probably HSAA and that organization. Those members that live in your riding: I'm sure a number of them voted for the Member for Drumheller-Stettler as well, Mr. Chair. Those members are now being attacked by this government and not being allowed to negotiate in good faith. That's something that I think that the member should be concerned about. I should perhaps explain to those members, explain to those union members and those constituents, indeed, why he is going to be supporting a bill that gives carte blanche for the government to go in and do wage rollbacks and freezes under regulation.

Perhaps he would like to speak to this amendment and explain why it's okay for this to go on, why he's okay with the families in his area not having a say in this Assembly, why the member is okay with the families in his area constantly having their rights taken away by this Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining bill here, Mr. Chair. I think it's something that all members of this Assembly – I know the opposition is very concerned about. I would hope that we don't have to do the Member for Drumheller-Stettler's job for him. I would hope that he can get up here in this Assembly and do that himself and explain to his own constituents, but I'm happy to stand here with my colleagues in the Official Opposition and stand up on behalf of those constituents of his because we know that when you're elected here to this place, you have to represent all constituents in Alberta, every single Albertan. You have to make sure you're acting in the best faith of all Albertans.

I know that there are nurses in the member's riding who work throughout his area. I know that there are doctors that work throughout his area. I know that there are many lab techs as well that would live and work in his area, Mr. Chair. Those are hard-working Albertans that contribute greatly to those communities because in a number of those communities, especially in those rural communities, when you're talking about health care professionals, sometimes there's just not as many. That nurse is going to be playing multiple roles, or that pharmacist is going to be playing multiple roles. That lab tech is going to be playing multiple roles, and we look at this. Suddenly the member is okay with that lab tech or that nurse not having a say. Suddenly the member is okay with giving an unprecedented wage rollback to that nurse. I hope the member will get up shortly here and explain to me why he thinks that's acceptable, why he thinks it's okay that he should vote against the interest of his own constituents. That's something that I think should be very concerning for him, that his constituent's would be directly attacked by this bill.

This amendment makes it a little bit better. I'd hope he'd support this amendment. Because those teachers, those nurses, those professionals all across his riding, Mr. Chair, it is certainly important that they have a voice in this Assembly. That's why I felt it so important that I get up here today with my colleagues here in the opposition to speak up on behalf of those workers because those workers are Albertans. We know that here in this Chamber every single Albertan deserves a voice, no matter where you come from, which riding you live in, and who you voted for.

Indeed, every single one of those constituents deserve a voice in this Assembly. It's unfortunate that the Member for Drumheller-Stettler doesn't want to give a voice to those constituents. It's unfortunate that the Member for Drumheller-Stettler doesn't think it's important that those nurses have a voice. It's unfortunate that he doesn't think it's important that those teachers have a voice. It's unfortunate that he thinks it's okay that those classes and those classrooms and those students should be allowed to suffer and those families should be allowed to suffer, the families that rely on that essential health care.

That's something that if that is indeed not what he thinks, he should be very welcome here to stand up shortly and defend attacking their wages and attacking their ability to negotiate in good faith, their constitutional right to negotiate in good faith, Mr. Chair. I really do hope he does get up and speak to this because I think every single member of this Assembly should get up and speak to why this is important in their area and why they think that taking away the constitutional rights of their constituents is acceptable.

Certainly, we can also look at the Member for Morinville-St. Albert, the hon. associate minister here. There are many schools across Morinville-St. Albert. There's Notre Dame elementary school, for example, and hundreds of students there. If those students are not worth having good teachers in their classrooms, perhaps the minister would like to get up and explain why. Or perhaps he'd like to explain to the families in Morinville public school why those teachers don't deserve the right to negotiate, as is their constitutional right. Perhaps he would like to explain to those families why those health workers that live in his riding aren't important. Perhaps he'd like to explain to those health workers why he thinks that their rights are fewer than anybody else in this Assembly or any of those other things. I mean, I think it's something that's really important because these are the issues that affect all of us in this Assembly. These are the issues that affect all of us.

I mean, coming back to the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. There are a number of schools. Of course, there's Gus Wetter school in the Clearview school district here. Could you explain, perhaps, to Dale Blume, who's an education assistant in grade 5 and 6 in that school, why he shouldn't have the right to negotiate properly? Right here in black and white Bill 9 takes away that right. This amendment would help protect him a little bit. Could you explain to Dale why suddenly it's okay for him to have his rights taken away and you won't even accept a simple amendment to protect his rights? Perhaps could you maybe explain to Tyler Brochu, the phys ed teacher for grades 5 to 12, why he doesn't deserve the right to negotiate, why he doesn't deserve the right to understand what's going to come if there are wage rollbacks or wage freezes, why you think it's okay that Bill 9 should give carte blanche to these types of things?

This amendment would make a bad bill better, and that's why I'm supporting this amendment, but I want the Member for Drumheller-Stettler to come out and maybe speak to that. Ellyn Schaffner, who's the kindergarten teacher right in your riding – I'm sure she lives in the member's riding of Drumheller-Stettler – she teaches kindergarten day in and day out. Could he explain to her why that suddenly is less important than any other worker in this province, why their right to collective bargaining should be legislated away? I mean, that's something that I think is very concerning. Luke Peters, who teaches the very important CALM program for grade 9 to 12 students and social studies as well – in social studies you learn about how important democracy is and how important the Constitution is and the Charter here in Canada is. You learn about all these important things. But then the member would go and say: well, actually, your constitutional right to negotiate, though I know you just taught that to the kids, is not important for you.

I mean, that's something that I think the member should get up here and explain to his constituents because there are so many teachers all across his riding that are going to be so significantly affected, the ones who live right in his neighbourhood, Mr. Chair. That's something that I think is very important. It's very important that every single member of this Assembly get up and explain to their constituents. This is just a small sampling of some of those constituents. I'm sure that there are constituents that live in your riding, Member for Drumheller-Stettler, that teach outside of your riding, but those constituents also deserve a voice because they're also going to be teaching or practising their profession and negotiating, and it's going to be affected significantly by this bill.

Really, when I say "affected significantly," I mean that you're going to be trying to break the law against them. That seems quite absurd, and it seems like it'd be quite offensive to many of those constituents. I hope you do get up and take this opportunity, Member, to explain to this Assembly why you think their rights are worth less. I'm sure a number of these people did vote for you, hon. member, and I'm sure a large number of these people are quite happy that you're their MLA, but I would ask that you explain to them, then, why you refuse to stand up on their behalf and why you would go and directly take away their rights at the bargaining table and go in bad faith and allow the government in bad faith to do all these things.

Through you, Mr. Chair, it is very clear that either the member doesn't care about his constituents or he doesn't know the impact that this bill will have on his constituents, and I think either of those would be unacceptable. It is important that we as elected officials in this Assembly get up and speak to bills and we understand the impact they're going to have on families in our riding. These teachers are friends, I'm sure, of many members here. You're friends with teachers, perhaps the teachers that taught their children. Perhaps some of these teachers even taught the children of the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. I mean, those teachers – we know that schools are the cornerstones of communities. We know that the teachers that interact with families all across the community become friends with many of those families, and that is so essential for our communities.

I would hope that the Member for Drumheller-Stettler would explain to those families and the friends of all of the teachers why he thinks it's okay to take away their rights. I mean, I think that's something that every single Albertan and every single member of the opposition, certainly, is very interested to know: why the Member for Drumheller-Stettler thinks it's so easy to take away the rights of the people that he would have sitting next to him in classrooms or the people that would be taking care of his children if he had to use the 24/7 emergency room, or indeed if he had to use the 24/7 emergency centre in the Drumheller health centre? Why would it be okay if, on one hand, he would ask them to help take care of his health, and on the other he would then take away their negotiating rights that are constitutionally protected and their bargaining rights that are constitutionally protected?

I mean, I think that all the workers who work in the member's riding of Drumheller-Stettler would be very curious about this. I think it's something that they would be very concerned about indeed because these are the people that have to take care of our families in our communities, especially in these rural communities, Mr. Chair, where the communities are so tight-knit and everybody knows everybody and everybody is often friends with everybody.

You have to explain to the nurse who works in the 24/7 emergency centre or you have to explain to the lab tech and you have to explain to the ultrasound tech why the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler thinks it's okay to take away their bargaining rights. That's something that the member will have to get up here and explain. I mean, the member will have to get up here and explain to Rebecca Clarke, who teaches high school English and grade 4 English at Gus Wetter school, why her rights are fewer than anybody else's in this province. The member either doesn't care or doesn't understand what the rights for his constituent are. I mean, that is something that is really important for us to get through here.

I mean, I think that every single member of this Assembly should get up and speak up on behalf of their constituents. They should get up and speak up on behalf of their constituents that really do feel the brunt of this because those families and those schools, those hospitals, those health centres, those families are the ones that we're sent here to protect and we're sent here to represent. It's something we see in this bill that directly attacks them. We know this amendment makes it a little bit better because it doesn't give the government carte blanche to do significant wage rollbacks or freezes without any consultation or any negotiation. I mean, I think that is something that we all should be proud to stand up in favour of because it would be creating a more fair system in the Assembly, Mr. Chair.

Maybe the Member for Drumheller-Stettler needs to explain to people like Jaymi Rausch, who teaches grade 2. Grade 2 is an extremely formative year for students, and when we look at students at that age, they absolutely do need the best education. But if the member is okay with holding legislation over the head of the teacher while that teacher is trying to make sure our students have the best possible education, then I'm concerned about what that means for students learning in his own riding, Mr. Chair.

The member has to understand that these impacts will impact those schools, those health centres, those teachers, those nurses, those families, and those communities right in his own riding. If he doesn't understand that, maybe he needs to get up and explain to us why he doesn't understand that. Maybe he needs to get up and explain to us why he doesn't care that it's going to affect those families in his community and those types of schools and health centres in his community.

It has to be one or the other, Mr. Chair. You have to understand the bill and understand what is going on. I mean, it really isn't that many pages. I'd encourage the member that, if he hasn't yet, to read the bill and the amendment. The amendment is only one sentence as well, so there's really not that much homework here for the member to do. He'd be able to understand the negative impact this will have on families in his area. Once he has done the reading and once he has done the research, then perhaps he can get up and explain to us why he's okay with attacking the workers and families that live in his own riding, why he's okay with voting against the interests of the families and communities right in his own riding.

The member has the opportunity here – we have many hours of debate ahead of us – to get up and defend those workers. The member has the opportunity here to get up and speak on behalf of those workers. But if he won't, I'm very happy to, Mr. Chair. I'm very happy to stand here and speak on behalf of all workers in Alberta because workers and their right to collective bargaining and their right to good-faith collective bargaining is something that we in the opposition believe is not only a Constitution right, but it's the ethical thing to do. It is absolutely the right thing that you should do and you should support.

If the member doesn't feel that way and the member thinks that their constitutional rights aren't important or that their ethical rights aren't important, then he should get up and explain to his constituents. He should explain to those teachers, he should explain to those nurses, he should explain to those health care workers why he doesn't think that their rights are important, why he doesn't think that he should stand up on behalf of them, and why he doesn't think that they deserve a strong voice here in this Assembly. That's what he was sent here to do, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. He was sent here to be their voice in this Assembly, and he has refused to do that today, Mr. Chair. I hope he will prove me wrong and get up and speak to why he thinks it's the right thing to do to attack those workers and it's the right thing to do to give the government carte blanche to attack them. But I'm worried that he won't.

I mean, that's why I'm standing up here today and speaking on behalf of all of his constituents. I'm speaking on behalf of those workers in his area, the ones who are in unions and the ones who are not, because this is something that attacks all workers. I think it's something that I think all members in this Assembly will be very concerned about, so I would encourage him to rise and speak.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we are on amendment A1.

I see the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler standing to speak.

Mr. Horner: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would just like to be brief. I know the opposition has been quite clear about how valuable their time is to them here tonight, so I wouldn't like to take any more of it than I have to.

I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-South for taking the time to look up many of the wonderful schools in my riding and name-dropping a few of the great people that I've met in my travels. I just would like to say that if anybody in my riding has a problem with Bill 9 or any legislation that we bring forward, they can reach out, as many have. I would politely tell them that this is Alberta's response to asking for a little time to know the finances of the province. So far that has been very well received and very understood. I don't know. You said a few people voted for me in the riding. About 77 per cent did. That hospital that the hon. member mentioned in Drumheller my wife is a nurse at, so I try to keep tabs on the staff there and keep them abreast of what's happening here.

I just would like to say that that is almost the most I have heard that hon. member speak on anything other than daylight savings time. I know how you gauge the problems in Alberta and in our world, but I would just like to say thank you for naming those schools. I have been to most of the graduations. It hasn't come up. It hasn't come up on our e-mails. I'll continue to look and monitor, and I'll keep you posted.

Thank you for the attention.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-South standing again.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I do appreciate that the member would rise and speak so briefly but wouldn't address any of the core points of the amendment or the bill. I mean, perhaps he could tell us a little bit more because he did rise here and he spoke in his brief remarks about how many of his constituents have reached out to him about Bill 9 and how they supported it or perhaps some of their concerns as well.

I think that when we look at those schools and those communities – and I think it's great that the member has been to so many of those high school graduations or perhaps grade 9 and grade 6 graduations. I think that's great. I hope that at those graduations the member explained to those students that if they wanted to go into a job in public service, he would then go after their wages and he would then go after their right to collectively bargain and he would then go after their right to negotiate. I think that's something that the member should explain very clearly to his constituents, and perhaps he should rise in this Assembly and explain to his constituents.

I want to know exactly what some of the things your constituents told you are, hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler and through you, Mr. Chair, exactly what some of those concerns were that were brought up regarding Bill 9 or other bills, regarding their right to collectively bargain, regarding their right to work in education and health care, and whether giving the government carte blanche to attack those rights of theirs is something that they supported. I think it's something that the member should get up and speak at length to because his constituents deserve more than a 30-second quip in this Assembly. I think that when they voted for him – I mean, he said he got 77 per cent. Well, that's quite impressive, but 77 per cent of his constituents I'm sure expect more than 30 seconds for their vote. I know I've spoken for more than 30 seconds here tonight, and I think that my constituents are getting a better value per vote right now than his constituents are. I think that that's certainly something that his constituents should be maybe a little bit concerned about. His constituents, I hope, will get a better value as the night goes on because there really is . . .

Chair's Ruling

Behaviour of Guests in the Gallery

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. I do look forward to the rest of your comments. This is not intended to in any way, shape, or form slow your comments down.

I do want to take this opportunity to just remind those in the gallery that I have on several occasions heard what sounded like laughter, which could have been imputed as trying to influence the debate, which is not a privilege that would be allowable in this case. So just a general reminder to the gallery to maintain order and decorum. That would be much appreciated.

Please, hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Of course, I can speak both at length and in quite many words per minute, so I'm sure that the value that my constituents will get will continue to be very high. But I think I want to compliment the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler on having such good cheer in his comments this evening because those 77 per cent of Albertans that were constituents that voted for him, I think, do deserve to have their voice here, and they do deserve for somebody to speak up on their behalf. That's why I will give them the value that they are not getting from that member. That's why I will speak up on behalf of them. The member will only speak for 30 seconds. I mean, I think that they deserve a bit more than that. I think they deserve to understand the implications of having their rights attacked, of having their collective bargaining rights attacked.

This section 5(c) of this bill directly gives the government a blank cheque, basically, Mr. Chair, to go out and do wage rollbacks and wage freezes without any consultation or negotiation. That attacks our constitutional rights, so I'm happy to stand here and speak at length on behalf of that member's constituents because that member's constituents deserve a strong voice. The entire opposition here will work at length to make sure that every single Albertan has a strong voice in this Assembly regardless of whether they voted for us because that is our job. That is what we were sent here to do. We were sent here to make sure that every single Albertan has a strong voice. If the member does not want to provide that strong voice to his constituents tonight, then I'm happy to do that on his behalf.

I think it's something that is very interesting when we look at those teachers, when we look at those classrooms, when we look at those nurses, when we look at those health centres, because it's going to be people that the member mentioned previously. He said that he has met many of them in his travels, and I really do want to hear what some of those concerns from those people he met were, perhaps particularly around their rights to collectively bargain. I mean, I hope the member can get up and speak at length to that tonight. I hope that he can give his constituents a voice because if he's met with them – unfortunately, I have not personally met with many of his constituents, Mr. Chair, but he appears to say that he has, so he should get up and represent their voices here in this Assembly.

I think that is something that we would all relish here in this Assembly, especially us here in the Official Opposition. We would all be honoured to hear from the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. We'd all be excited to hear how, perhaps, he explained to the grade 12 students at those graduations that if they chose to become teachers, he would directly attack their collective bargaining rights; how if they chose to become nurses, he would directly attack their collective bargaining rights. I think that is something that us here in the opposition would all be very excited to hear from the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. We would be excited to hear at length from the Member for Drumheller-Stettler because we know that he has the opportunity and the ability to give a strong voice to his constituents. But for whatever reason he thinks that 30 seconds is sufficient for that.

I mean, if I had voted for the hon. member – and I will admit that I did not vote for the hon. member, not because I would not have but because I could not. I do not reside in the Member for Drumheller-Stettler's riding. But certainly, if I had voted for the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, I would expect that I would get a better value than just 30 seconds per vote because . . .

Mr. Schow: Point of order, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: We'll hear the point of order from the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Point of Order Brevity

Mr. Schow: Yeah. A point of order on Standing Order 23(c), persists in needless repetition. It's clear the member opposite has a bone to pick with the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, continuously repeating that he wants to hear from the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. If he's so intrigued as to what the Member for Drumheller-Stettler has to say, maybe he would sit down and allow the member to speak as opposed to in vain repeating himself over and over and over and over.

The Deputy Chair: Is there anyone? Feel free to speak to the point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It is my right to speak to the point of order. I think there is much relevant new information that I bring to this Assembly, I mean, as I speak to many of the clauses in this bill and to the effect of this amendment. I think it's important that matters of debate are allowed to run out here. I mean, we are each allocated a certain amount of time here, so when the hon. government deputy whip here speaks about how I should sit down and not speak, I actually would think that is an attack on the democracy of this House. Indeed, we are each allocated a certain amount of time to speak. When my time is complete or I choose to not take it, then the hon. member has his opportunity to speak. That is in the standing orders of this Assembly, so I think that I would ask you rule it as debate.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you very much for that. I hesitate to interrupt you. I just think that we were getting a little off the repetition side of things there. I would say that, in this case, it is one of the main jobs of the chair to ensure that freedom of speech is fully respected in this House. That said, I think that for the purposes of ensuring that order and decorum do continue, I would ask the hon. member to perhaps take his comments slightly away from directing at one individual member and perhaps starting to skirt up to the side of imputing motives of that member as well. I'm not saying you did that at this stage, but I would just say: please be cautious of that when you are making your comments.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-South, please continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I certainly would, through you, never impute motives of any member of this Assembly. I would certainly only speak to what the facts and the actions that we can see in this Assembly are and the facts of what this bill and legislation do to constituents of any member of this Assembly. Perhaps in particular I've named certain members such as the member for Drumheller-Stettler here tonight. I mean, I've named him at multiple points because I understand that as they affect all members of this Assembly, those issues are very pertinent. I think that those issues that we've named on behalf of his constituents and on behalf of all constituents of all members of this Assembly are very important.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

I think that's something that we need to keep pushing on. We need to keep talking about why every single Albertan, whether they are a teacher, whether they are a nurse, whether they are a professional or a nonprofessional, whether they are covered under a nonacademic association in organizations like SAIT, whether they are covered under the ATA, whether they're a staff member at NAIT or Northern Lakes College, wherever it is, Madam Chair, I think it's very important that we speak up on behalf of every single one of those constituents. If the hon. member chooses not to speak up on behalf of his constituents, I think that is something that would be very unfortunate here tonight. I think if the hon. deputy government House whip chooses not to speak up on behalf of his constituents but instead chooses to try to stifle debate in this Assembly and not support freedom of speech here in this Assembly, as the chair so rightfully pointed out, then I think that would be very unfortunate here in this Assembly as well.

I think certainly here in this Assembly we do strive to make sure that all members understand the ramifications of Bill 9, and that's why I was so proud to support this amendment that was moved to strike out clause 5(c), which really gives a blank cheque to the government to roll back wages and attack workers without any consideration for collective bargaining. I think that is something that every single member here should be very concerned about. If the deputy government House whip wishes to attack our method of debate rather than the actual amendment, that is his prerogative, but I think that his constituents expect a better value than ad hominem attacks as well, Madam Chair. I think that certainly the Member for Drumheller-Stettler's constituents expect a better value than that. It's certainly something that I think that your and my constituents would expect a better value than.

It's something that I am very pleased to be able to rise here and speak to tonight because it is our duty as legislators to stand up and speak in this Assembly and to give voice to our constituents and to give voice to the concerns of our constituents. Whether we met them at high school graduations or we've met them in our travels in other ways, I think it is our duty to give voice to those concerns. So when we hear from them when we attend their health centres, when we hear from them when we attend their schools, when we hear from them – the Member for Drumheller-Stettler spoke at length about how he had heard from many of them and many of their concerns. It is his duty and it is our duty to stand up for those concerns here in this Assembly, and that's what I'm doing here today. I'm standing up and speaking on behalf of all members of this Assembly that refuse to stand up on behalf of their workers, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler being one of them.

I think that certainly we understand how crucial it is that the government not be given free rein to attack workers without any regard for their constitutional rights, without any regard for unions' rights to collectively bargain, and without any regard for the effect this will have on families, constituents, teachers, nurses, lab techs, and so forth, Madam Chair. It is very important that we understand the impacts of these things in our communities. It is very important that we have a considered debate and an extensive debate on these issues.

I look forward to when my time elapses or I choose to sit down here, Madam Chair. When I sit down here, I would be very pleased to hear from the Member for Drumheller-Stettler on why he thinks it's okay to attack those workers, the ones who live in his riding, to take away their collective bargaining rights, why he thinks it would be okay to take away the rights of the people who work in the health centres in his riding, the teachers that teach his kids and the students around them. It would be very encouraging to me if all members of this Assembly, including the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, would get up and speak to that. It is something that I think all members of this Assembly, all members of the opposition, for sure, and certainly members of the public and the people in the gallery here tonight – they have spent extensive amounts of time and taken time out of their evening to come sit here and watch us debate this bill and this amendment, which I think is a reasonable amendment.

It would be very important for us to be able to explain to the people watching why these actions are okay and why the Member for Drumheller-Stettler wouldn't support a simple amendment that makes the bill better. It just takes away this blank cheque for the government. If we really do respect workers and we respect good-faith bargaining and we respect Albertans, then the member perhaps would get up and explain to me why he would give a blank cheque to the government, because a blank cheque is not good-faith bargaining. It certainly does not respect workers' rights or union rights or collective bargaining rights or constitutional rights, Madam Chair, and I think that's something that is very important. I would encourage the member to rise here in this Assembly, explain to us why he thinks their constitutional rights are not important, explain to me and to all members of this Assembly what the concerns that were heard all throughout the riding were.

I mean, those are things that are very important in this debate because that is indeed what we were sent here to do. We were sent here to have debate, and we were sent here to debate at length about these bills that affect our communities, that affect the families that attend those schools, that affect the families that have to use that emergency centre, that affect the families that have to suffer because we pass bad legislation in this House. Well, Madam Chair, if it was up to me, we wouldn't pass bad legislation in this House, but the government seems determined to go forward and do so.

I mean, at this point I think that I've spoken quite a bit at length about why I think the Member for Drumheller-Stettler is directly attacking his own constituents, the 77 per cent of constituents that voted for him and indeed those other 23 per cent who did not vote for him as well, Madam Chair. I would really encourage him to get up and explain to those 77 per cent and the 23 per cent, respectively, of his constituents what he thinks of their collective bargaining rights and why he thinks, after hearing their concerns, it's okay to continue to attack them.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I look forward to hearing from the member.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Horner: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. Once again I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-South for name-dropping my riding so many times. It's wonderful to hear. You're doing a great job.

If I was too brief last time, I'll just say, you know, that if you're asking how I feel, right now I feel kind of embarrassed. I feel embarrassed to be four hours from home, with my little kids in bed without a dad, because I'm here listening to this, over a three- or four-month delay, when we're at $60 billion headed to $100 billion.

Ms Renaud: It's called democracy.

Mr. Horner: Okay. It's called democracy.

We've heard a lot over the last few days and long, late nights about contracts, who respects them, who understands them. I think that's a little rich coming from that side of the House, Madam Chair, considering that one of the reasons that I ran was because I was so frustrated with the treatment of the electricity file from when they were in government. The power purchase agreements, those contracts and the way those were treated . . .

Ms Renaud: How is that relative?

Mr. Horner: Pardon me?

Ms Renaud: How is that relative?

The Chair: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Horner: Right. Thank you, Madam Chair.

So contracts. Because I was too brief last time, Madam Chair, I guess you'll have to indulge me, and I'll read you an entire article about them entitled $1.8B and Growing – Cost to Alberta Consumers from Power Contract Fiasco Mounts.

Losses at Alberta's Balancing Pool from the controversial power purchase deals have now topped $1.8 billion, but the bleeding is finally slowing – just as the new Kenney government prepares to call in the auditor general to study the fiasco.

The Chair: Hon. member, I will caution you to not use members' names in this House.

Mr. Horner:

"This is a mess entirely of the NDP's making," Christine Myatt, spokeswoman for [the Premier], said in a statement.

"Albertans deserve to know how this happened and how much they are on the hook for."

The Balancing Pool, a government agency that backstops the province's power purchase agreements . . . released its annual report last Friday, showing the organization with net liabilities of $946 million . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I apologize for interrupting. However, we are on amendment A1, and I would caution you to stay on topic.

Mr. Horner: Okay. I think you'll have to give me a little latitude, considering what I just listened to from the Member for Edmonton-South, regarding staying in your lane. This is about contracts, it's about the financial state of Alberta, and that's how we're here. That's why we're discussing this.

The Chair: Please proceed.

Mr. Horner:

But looking at the total costs connected to the return of power purchase arrangements from industry players to the Balancing Pool in late 2015 and 2016 . . .

Ms Sweet: Point of order.

Mr. Horner:

. . . shows the mountain of red ink is still growing.

The Chair: Hon. member, a point of order has been called. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Point of Order Relevance

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just under Standing Order 23:

- (b) speaks to matters other than
  - (i) the question under discussion,
  - (ii) a motion or amendment the Member intends to move, or
  - (iii) a point of order or question of privilege.

I would recognize that the member may be frustrated with the discussion that is happening around Bill 9 and what the member on our side has been discussing with him. However, what the member is reading is not relevant to this discussion. It doesn't matter if he agrees with what our member said or not. Going on and reading an article that is not related to Bill 9 or the amendment is not relevant to this discussion, and therefore it's a point of order.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's pretty rich coming from the opposition at this time of night, particularly after the last speaker for the opposition, the Member for Edmonton-South, spent somewhere around 20 minutes demanding that the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler get up and talk. Now that he gets up and talks, the opposition doesn't want him to talk.

Ms Hoffman: He can talk, but talk to the bill.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Talk to the bill? I haven't heard the opposition talk to the bill very much tonight – that's for sure – and I certainly didn't see the Member for Edmonton-South talk to the bill. What he did was that he talked about the Member for Drumheller-Stettler a lot. Now, I've known the Member for Drumheller-Stettler – he's a pretty cool guy – and I'm happy to talk about him any time you want, but the reality is that that member asked him to talk.

Now, with that said, I did not hear the specific article that was being read. I do not believe that this is a point of order, but I would caution members that if they are referring to reference material, it should be relevant, certainly, to the debate, and I suspect he will, Madam Chair. Again, they asked the member to get up and speak, and I was looking forward to hearing his remarks. I'm just shocked that the opposition doesn't want to hear from him now that they've asked him to speak.

The Chair: Hon. members, there's been a lot of leeway given with the prior speaker and the current speaker. I've already cautioned the current speaker, and I am assured that he will get to the point.

Hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, please proceed.

Debate Continued

Mr. Horner: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. The gist of the article: somewhere between $1.6 billion and $2 billion were mismanaged by the previous government. I think that kind of ties the entire argument into the financial mess and state of affairs that we find Alberta in now, and we're forced to make some tough decisions and fulfill our mandate of balancing the budget within four years. That's the argument coming full circle.

If the Member for Edmonton-South would like to speak more about my riding and schools and the staff and children there, I guess I'd like to share one story that's very memorable as I was speaking to a class at the Stettler school. The kids are great, they ask the best questions, and the teachers are always engaged. The question was around class size, which I know was brought up a lot today regarding this bill and the amendment by the hon. member opposite. The teacher pulled me aside after and said – and I'm not making this up – with tears in her eyes: you know, I would rather teach 35 kids than 20 that are coming from a dark place because their parents don't have a job, because things are tough at home, because they're coming to the school and are coming from a dark place. She said that as clear as day. It'll never leave me.

This is about the big picture in Alberta and trying to take care of everybody, not sticking our head in the sand and not just staying in our lane. This is about the big picture. I couldn't be prouder to stand here in support of Bill 9, not of this amendment. Yeah, it's going to be a great evening.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, he was a tough act to follow. [interjection] No, he was, actually. He's got a lot of energy. I'm quite thankful for the Member for Edmonton-South. He's a young person. I think he's got a lot to add. I know that he caused a lot of laughter on the other side, so, you know, what's not to like? And he did get someone to stand up and speak, so that's a good thing.

Before I get going and start talking about the amendment to this bill, which is the Bad-faith Bargaining Act, I wanted to stop and just recognize and thank, really, all of the public-sector workers in Alberta, particularly the people that are represented here today, just to thank the nurses and the teachers. There are so many different workers to thank, I couldn't possibly list them all. I know that this is a stressful time, just not knowing what's happening, so I do want to thank them and thank them for making time to be here to watch us. I know it's not always super stimulating at this time of night, but I am thankful that they're here.

One of the things I find a little bit interesting. You know, I sat through years of listening to, first, the Wildrose Party, and there were little leftovers of the Conservatives, and then they became the UCP. I listened to them for years, as they were in opposition, rail on and on about everything, everything under the sun.

Suddenly things are changed, and I need to spend some time going back through Hansard, Madam Chair, to find some clips to sort of talk about, just to address some of the things they're saying here today about what our job is as opposition and why it is important for us to stand up and speak and why democracy is important. You might not like what we're saying, but we have a right to say it. Yes, I know you have a great big mandate, you know, whatever. We hear that every day, multiple times a day. You like to talk about how big your mandate is – I get it – but we also have a mandate. We were also sent here by the communities and the people that voted for us. You may not like it, you may not like what we're saying, you may not like our point of view, but that is democracy.

You're not supposed to eat in the Chamber.

I just wanted to talk a little bit about my community, the community that I represent, which is St. Albert. One in 4 people that live in St. Albert actually are public-sector workers. I didn't realize that until we went through some of the census information, and it was really quite interesting to see where they're working. There obviously are nurses, teachers, and all of those things, so this is particularly important.

I get that the government is saying, "No, we're not doing anything bad; we're just stopping; we're just going to pause; we're going to look at the finances because, oh, my gosh, it's a horrific mess," which we knew they were going to say because this is how it goes. This is how they normally go, Madam Chair. This is the speech, right? "Oh, it's far worse than we ever thought. We're going to look. We're going to make tough decisions." Actually, there was a member that told us that you guys were going to make tough decisions before the election happened. We believed him, but the people opposite were saying, "No, that's not true; that's not going to be the way it is" because they weren't upfront about their platform. In the platform you didn't tell public-sector workers that you were going to pull this stunt.

Anyway, back to this bill. Let's go back to this. I believe that by doing this what you are doing is that you are creating stress in groups of people that already have very stressful jobs. The Sturgeon hospital in St. Albert is a busy, busy, busy hospital – really busy – that serves the north and all of the communities. It serves Morinville, Legal, Redwater, Gibbons. People from north Edmonton use the Sturgeon hospital. There are nurses, nurses' aides, nursing assistants that work there. I have never ever seen these workers and looked at them and thought: gee, I think we should stress you out a little bit more; let's add some unease to your caseload so that you don't know what's going to happen with your contract, whether or not you're going to get a cost-of-living increase.

Now, the people opposite will tell you: "Oh, the job-killing carbon tax. People can't live because of this extra $100 a month. The farm is going to go under. My job is going to be gone because of that. I can't afford to put fuel in my vehicle." That stress was caused by a strategy, a tax on pollution, yet they can't understand the stress of not knowing if your contract will continue, if you will get an increase, if things will go the way you think they should go after very little increase for multiple years. They can't understand that kind of stress, but they could understand the other stress. This is putting stress on public-sector workers, and these are workers that already face enormous amounts of stress every single day.

I'll go to a sector that I know. Public-sector workers provide supports for people with disabilities. Believe it or not, government actually does employ people that work with people with disabilities in Calgary, in Edmonton, and also in the central region, which is Red Deer. There is a large institution in Red Deer. I'm not going to get into that today. We have public-sector workers that work with people with disabilities, and that work is tough. They work with people with very complex issues, severe disabilities in many cases, behavioural challenges, complex needs. These are not highly paid people. These are unionized workers, and I'm thankful for that because they have benefits. They have some job security that people in other sectors don't have. I'm thankful for that. They don't make a lot of money, but they work hard to support their families. What this legislation is doing is telling them: you need to worry about this; there is a problem.

We had a previous government that negotiated in good faith, that did not break the law, that sat down with them at the table and talked to them. What this legislation does is tells them: you should be unsure; we don't know exactly what's going to happen.

Clearly, the government of the day does not respect the rule of law or this process, so much so that they're legislating.

Now, the Government House Leader: I don't know if he's had a few cocktails or what, but he's finding this quite funny. I'm not sure.

The Chair: Hon. member, I would caution you to not incite the other side of this House.

Ms Renaud: Okay. I'll take that back. Withdrawn.

The Chair: Please proceed.

Ms Renaud: I didn't find my comments too funny. He clearly does.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Madam Chair, a point of order.

The Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, a point of order.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Jason Nixon: Under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), language to create disorder, first of all, I assure the hon. member that it would take more than a few cocktails for me to be amused by her speech. Second of all, Madam Chair, that's completely inappropriate inside of the House, to be referring to another member and implying that they've been drinking. Again, it's so disappointing to continue to see the deterioration of the Official Opposition in this Chamber, from Team Angry to just Team Bizarre at this point.

The Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, I completely agree. I have already ruled on the matter. I will ask the hon. member to apologize and withdraw her comment and then move on.

Ms Renaud: Okay. I apologize for suggesting that the Government House Leader had a few cocktails.

Debate Continued

Ms Renaud: Just to move on a little bit with this bill, you know, we've heard over and over again that the reason that this legislation was brought forward is because the government needed time to look at the finances of the province. I find that a little bit rich considering that they had no problem going as fast as possible to create a situation that there is a massive tax cut for already profitable corporations. Now, estimates are 4 and a half billion dollars, that will blow a hole into our revenues. They didn't seem to have a problem with that, they didn't need the time to stop and examine that, yet they need the time to stop and examine this issue. That's why they brought this legislation. That doesn't make a whole lot of sense.

I think that had the UCP been truthful when they were trying to sell themselves to Alberta voters, they would have told Albertans precisely what they plan to do. They would have been upfront with their plans. I don't recall hearing about this. I recall hearing: jobs, pipeline, economy, jobs, pipeline, economy, jobs, pipeline, economy. I don't remember hearing about changing legislation around public-sector wage arbitration. I don't recall hearing about changing the rules around GSAs. I don't recall those discussions, yet here we are.

I don't believe they're upfront with their plans, and I think public-sector workers are feeling the same way. They didn't tell Albertans that they'd trash good-faith negotiations that our front-line workers, public-sector workers rely on and expect. They didn't tell Albertans that they would turn their backs on the front-line workers and give a lame excuse that they needed to figure out the province's finances before they could do their job and negotiate in good faith with 180,000 front-line workers. That is a lot of Albertans. Albertans don't buy it. They're not going to buy it. They're going to see very quickly. I thought it would take a little bit longer than it has for the real sort of focus and aim to come out. I'm surprised, actually, at the speed that it's happening. I am really surprised at the speed that it's happening.

The UCP didn't campaign on breaking the law. That's what they're doing with this legislation. They didn't campaign on attacking workers that we rely on. They didn't campaign, Madam Chair, on attacking workers that protect us, not just in this Chamber but out in the community. They didn't talk about those workers. They didn't talk about the front-line workers that respond to our emergencies every single day. Every single day they are out there responding to fires, to health emergencies. They're intervening in all kinds of ways that we can't even imagine.

I've been lucky enough to do two ride-alongs with fire and EMS in St. Albert. Although I always imagined that that job was very stressful and took a lot of skill, I was astounded, actually, by the level of professionalism and skill of the firefighters and paramedics in St. Albert. It is incredible. They would go from a fire emergency to sort of acting as an emergency social worker with a couple that were having issues. The skill of these workers is phenomenal. We rely on those people, and I think we owe them some security in knowing that we will say what we do. If our laws tell us one thing, they should know that legislators and decision-makers will honour that law and follow that law.

The UCP didn't campaign on attacking workers who hold our loved ones' hands and reassure them when they endure rounds and rounds and rounds of chemotherapy or when they're supporting families as they're watching their loved one take their last breath. Those are the front-line workers that we're talking about. These are the people that are there for us when we're at our absolute lowest, and the skill and the professionalism of this group – they just don't deserve any of this.

The UCP didn't campaign on attacking the people who educate our children, our most precious resource. These people already have enough stress in their lives. Can you imagine being a grade 1 or 2 or kindergarten teacher, how tough that is already? I mean, I've visited a classroom just for an hour or two, and it's pretty overwhelming. These are the front-line workers. They don't need to be stressed by a government that at just the drop of a hat will decide: no, we need more time to examine this before we do our job and honour contracts and follow the law.

The UCP didn't campaign on breaking the law. The UCP didn't campaign on attacking workers who facilitate inclusion in our classrooms. These are educational assistants that are there every day doing really, really tough work in really tough situations. Often there are not nearly enough of them in our classrooms. Our classrooms are huge.

I heard somebody back there from the other side talk about someone telling them: I'd rather have 35 students in my classroom than 20 because of the dark days of the four years the NDP were in power. Well, after four decades of Conservative rule, okay, if you want to go with that story. But let me tell you: in a classroom of 35 students the chances are that a few of those students will also have disabilities. You add all of those students with the students with disabilities and then have maybe one or two assistants, and those children aren't going to learn. They're not going to learn in the way they need to learn, and inclusion will not happen in those classrooms if they're not funded properly and if they're not staffed properly. So perhaps you should go back and have a conversation with that person that talked to you and explain that difference.

The UCP didn't campaign on attacking the workers who teach and inspire our young people in postsecondary. You know, this is our future. They are our future. They're our future doctors and scientists and engineers and translators and social workers and all kinds of things. These folks also have very stressful jobs, and they work in conditions that are not always perfect. They, too, are understaffed and are dealing with massive classrooms, massive lists of students. These are people that deserve a sense of job security and a sense of belief to know that no matter who the government is, whether it's UCP, NDP, or whatever, they will respect the rule of law, they will respect the contract. You might not agree with it, might not like it, might not have been the way you negotiated, but you respect it.

They don't have that security now because they've seen this. They have seen that the UCP government has no problem giving a massive tax cut to wealthy, profitable corporations – they're secure enough to do that – but they have to stop and possibly add all of this stress to front-line workers because they're not sure of the state of finances. I don't know. I don't buy that. Albertans don't buy that.

You can be all smug in here and think: well, we got a great big mandate; we can do whatever we want. Albertans see what you're doing; 180,000 front-line workers see what you're doing. It will continue. This will catch up to you. People are watching. People are paying attention. You can think: we're just deferring; we're just going to wait; we're just going to see. People see what you're doing, and you will be accountable. You can feel, you know, cocky, secure in your great big mandate, but there will be a reckoning someday.

That's all I have to say, Madam Chair. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members? The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in this Chamber this evening to speak on the Bill 9 amendment moved by Member Bilous to move that Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, be amended by striking out section 5(c).

The Chair: Hon. member, I will caution you on the use of names in this House.

Mr. Schow: I was just reading the amendment.

The Chair: It's a tricky situation, but don't use the name.

Mr. Schow: Oh. Okay. I apologize, Madam Chair. I retract that. I thought I was within the confines of the rules reading the actual amendment moved by the member opposite.

I've certainly heard a lot of conversation tonight about this and specifically about protecting Alberta workers. I think that is paramount for this government. It's something that we are committed to doing. It's something that we think is an absolute priority. I just heard the member for Edmonton – oh, for heaven's sake. I'm sorry, member across the way. I forget your constituency. I do mean no disrespect. [interjections] What's that? St. Albert. I apologize.

I heard the Member for St. Albert talk about how Albertans are seeing what we're doing, and she is, in fact, right. I'm excited that they're seeing what we are doing because I stand in this Chamber and sit in this Chamber, depending upon the time of the day, and I hear what's coming from across the floor. All day I hear the negative, the fear and the smear, the anger machine turned up to level 10. Frankly, the knob is probably broken off because it was cranked so hard.

That's what we hear from the members opposite, and then we get to go home. We go home to our constituencies, wherever they may be across this beautiful province of ours, and we talk to those constituents. We go and we knock on their doors, we speak to the business owners, we speak to the public-sector workers, of which there are many in my own constituency, and they tell me that they are listening. They do hear what we're saying, and they love it. They love what this government had to offer during the election, they love what we had to say while we were in opposition, and now that we are in government, they love what we are doing because we are keeping promises that we made. In particular, there are a couple of people that I've talked to in places that I visited that have made specific note about the moves that we are making and the things that we're doing.

The reality is that this government is committed to getting back to balance. That is a priority of this government. We have said it time and time again. It's in our platform. Every time the Premier speaks, he talks about the importance of protecting this province and getting it back to balance, and a large part of that is ensuring that we know the financial state that we are in. It would be disingenuous to Albertans to move forward without knowing the details that we face, particularly with regard to finances. With regard to finances it's great to refer back to our constituents, even to the private sector, and relate it to them.

You know, there is a store in Cardston that I love to shop at and buy some clothes. Particularly over the last year and a half, as I've knocked on countless doors, I've worn through a lot of socks, so I love to go over to this store. It's called Atkins. It's owned by Kris MacDonnell. She has probably the largest sock collection that I have ever seen and some pretty awesome socks. I encourage everyone to visit Atkins and pick up some socks. The point I'm making here, Madam Chair, is that Kris MacDonnell has to order clothes on a regular basis as seasons change and fashions change, and she has to make decisions as she makes these orders based on what's trending, what's not trending, but also based on projected income and how much she can actually buy versus how much she is going to sell.

For Kris and Atkins to just buy a whole whack of clothing, a whole pile of new jeans or socks or whatever, with no real intent of selling it or without any idea of the financial situation her company is even in at the time would be dishonest to herself and to the business's future. So she takes those things into consideration when purchasing for her company, hoping to buy clothes that will be purchased and that the business can continue to grow, a business that, I might add, has been around for over 100 years. I celebrate with that, then. It's a tremendous Alberta success story. I love this store and particularly Kris. She's a wonderful lady who's a good, strong supporter of what this government is doing. But if we take the mentality into negotiations, into any decisions we make, rather, without considering all the facts, we are not doing Albertans any service whatsoever.

Another example is Koster's Bakery in Picture Butte. Now, I might have spent half of my kids' college fund buying vanilla squares over at Koster's through the campaign – I was in Picture Butte often, knocking on doors – and its delicious treats. Again, I also encourage anyone, when you're in Picture Butte, to go by Koster's. You will not regret it. They make some fantastic baked goods. But they have to judge what they make every day based on what they intend on selling. If they were to bake 1,000 loaves of bread, which maybe they do, but only intend on selling 100, that business model won't last very long. That's not very good planning.

With regard to Bill 9 all we're asking is for an opportunity to delay negotiations until we understand the entire financial picture. It would be wrong for us to do anything with this government if we don't understand where we are at.

Now, the members opposite love to quote – and I love it when they do this – our campaign slogan: Jobs, Economy, Pipelines. We were pretty clear on that. In fact, we were so clear that the members opposite know it off by heart. They repeat it often, and when they do, I always give a good, “hear, hear,” because – I'll tell you – I love hearing it. It's like music to my ears. But the big thing here is jobs, protecting jobs. Now, I understand that the members opposite want to show up for those in the gallery behind me, for their people in the gallery behind me, and I can certainly respect that. But the reality is that we are not just governing for those behind me but, rather, for all Albertans, and what we would like to do is make sure that Albertans and the future of this province are secure. That means doing our due diligence as a government to understand our finances before we move forward with anything.

Now, back to jobs, economy, and pipelines, we do need to make sure that we have well-paying jobs in this province, that we are leaving the province better than we have at the moment, and those jobs ... [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. member.

Mr. Schow: Yes?

The Chair: Sorry.

Can I please have order in the gallery. Can I please have order in the gallery.

Hon. member, please proceed.

11:20

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do appreciate, regardless of whether we agree or not, the members opposite, that their opinion certainly is valued in this Chamber. But it is their opinion that we'd like to hear, not those in the gallery, so thank you for calling those in the gallery to order. I ask them to respect that moving forward.

But it's about jobs. It's about making sure that we have good-paying jobs in this province and that we're respecting the need to have them moving forward.

Now, I do also want to address something that the Member for Edmonton-South had said in his remarks, that when I asked him to sit down, I was suggesting that I'm trying to curtail debate. It is actually quite the opposite. I was simply bringing to the attention of the Chamber that he was engaging in vain repetition, and if he was that interested in hearing from the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, he should allow him to in fact respond.

I think that debate in this Chamber needs to be robust. This should be the highest level of debate in the province. This is, in fact, debate that is determining the future direction of the province, and under this United Conservative government I think it is the right direction. But to simply stand up and take up time and repeat oneself over and over isn't doing any service to anyone's constituents. If I take up five minutes or take up 20 minutes, if I get the message across from my constituents that I was elected to this Chamber to deliver, then I have in fact done my job. You don't have to be an acclaimed high school national debate champion to do that. Kudos to him. I always respect good competition. As those in this Chamber know, debate wasn't my forte in high school. It was more on the basketball court, but I digress.

Albertans do deserve the best. Objectively speaking – and I think the members opposite would agree – Alberta is an incredible province. It's a province that deserves what's best moving forward, and it deserves a government that takes all things into consideration when making decisions for the residents living here and those who we would like to attract to come here in the future. We're hoping that the decisions we make in this Chamber this evening and moving forward will increase migration to Alberta, will increase our workforce, will increase the number of students in our schools, because it is a beacon of hope and opportunity and prosperity across Canada and across the world.

But as we continue to make these decisions, Madam Chair, especially with respect to Bill 9, we must understand the facts. "Facts" might be a difficult word for the members opposite to comprehend. It's a difficult four-letter F-word for them, but facts . . .

Ms Hoffman: Five, actually. And that's a fact.

Mr. Schow: Fact. Sorry. Fact. That is a fact. I do appreciate the member for correcting me on that. I was an athletic student, not a student athlete. What can I say?

But the facts are simple. This province is in a terrible state of affairs. This province needs immediate attention, and it needs a full understanding of the situation that we're currently in. That's why Bill 9 is so important. We're asking for time, Madam Chair. We're asking for an opportunity to analyze the facts, analyze the numbers, so that when the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board is making decisions in the caucus and in cabinet, he is well informed. Anyone who knows the Minister of Finance knows that he comes from a business background of his own. I suspect he's done well for himself. It doesn't happen by luck, something that the Leader of the Opposition said not long ago, during our 24-hour marathon. It's something that I personally took exception to and responded to because I'm looking at this – and Alberta didn't happen by luck. Alberta didn't happen by just pretending that we know the facts. We've done the work, we've done the research, and we know what needs to be done here.

Madam Chair, I simply put to this Chamber that Bill 9 is one that we should support, and we should not be supporting this amendment to Bill 9 because we need all the information possible to make the right decisions for Alberta. I do believe that right now we're on the right course to find that information, but we need time.

With that, Madam Chair, I will conclude my remarks.

The Chair: Are there any other hon. members that would like to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I certainly appreciate the opportunity to speak to amendment A1, that is before us now. I think it's particularly relevant in that this is perhaps the most egregious part of Bill 9, which is the entire section that could be used to cancel contracts, to undermine any further negotiations – right? – on each of the affected contracts that are coming up here between the province of Alberta and any number of workers, from the teachers to the nurses, 180,000 workers.

We had the Treasury Board president and Finance minister emphatically jumping up and down and saying: no; this is just a pause to wage reopeners and arbitration and so forth, and then everything proceeds as normal. But, you know, this section 5(c), Madam Chair, undermines that or is quite contrary to that assertion. If you use section 5(c), you are in fact able to do any number of other legislated changes to individual contracts, including imposing the terms of contract and so forth. My question is: if you are so emphatic about only using Bill 9 as a pause, why does section 5(c) exist? Why is it there? I would beg an answer from the members opposite although I can see that many of them are wearing bright pink earplugs that their Premier is handing out to all of them right now. Probably many of them can't even hear what I'm saying right now. I'll test it with the House leader. Oh, he's coming. Testing: one, two, three. Oh, he took them out. That's great.

The point is, I guess, that if we want to move forward in a constructive way and in sort of a collaborative way, this particular amendment is a perfect way by which to send a sense of reassurance, albeit probably quite tentative, to the 180,000 or more workers that can see Bill 9 Threat categorically as a threat to bargaining, a threat to their family's income, to the conditions which they work in, and perhaps, quite frankly, a threat to many people's jobs – right? – because, of course, when you are interfering with contracts and fair collective bargaining, then the people that have less seniority or perhaps are in other circumstances: their very jobs can be threatened or undermined. I don't think I have to tell anybody here in this House or the people listening that Bill 9 or just the existence of Bill 9 categorically has sent a chill through the public service and all of the essential services to which they are responsible.

School boards are already not renewing contracts for teachers for the next school year, because they have to build their budgets. They're already many weeks behind in actually building their budgets. They had to defer to, you know, see where funding was with the interim supply at sort of the eleventh hour, the eleventh minute. Some funding for enrolment was achieved, but we also heard, almost in the same breath, that the Minister of Education took away classroom improvement funding, which, again, results in significant job loss and unstable funding for education.

Same thing with hospitals, right? We know that hospitals are not hiring. We know that hospitals are short-staffing on individual units. I talk to nurses and LPNs and so forth every day. They say: we've been short-staffed again. Tonight probably there are some nurses listening to this very thing that's happening here in this Legislature. They're working night shift, just like us – right? – caring for people who are sick and families and so forth. They are short-staffed already, even before the sword drops from this UCP government. Again, you have the letter of the law that's in a bill, and then you have the tone that is sent with that bill. By removing the particularly egregious section 5(c) from this Bill 9, then you perhaps soften that tone, which is aggressive and, you know, full of language around attacking, not respecting collective agreements and so forth, and perhaps go to a better place.

We know, Madam Chair, that when you're looking at the budget as a whole for the province of Alberta – it's a considerable budget – if you are taking out revenues, like the removal of the collection of the carbon levy, you know, reducing corporate tax, you end up with a multibillion-dollar hole in your budget. There are only so many ways by which you can hope to achieve to compensate for that, and the number one place is the wages for public-sector employees. So the idea that you march in after a month of being a government and you put in enabling legislation such as Bill 9, that can literally wipe out contracts, just at the time when the public service has so many outstanding contracts that need to be worked through, then, of course, people are nervous. Of course, people are looking for reassurance, and a way by which we can do that is not just through words but through action. I would say that by removing the section of Bill 9 that talks about using that as enabling legislation to rewrite contracts, to strip collective bargaining, would be a step in the right direction.

So often we hear with this government that they talk about their mandate and how they like to swing their big mandate around, and it's all very fun and good. But the mandate you do have, actually, as a government is to be responsible to the public services that you provide as a government: health care, education, infrastructure, social services, security, and protection. To in any way compromise the integrity of those essential services, which this government is responsible for, is irresponsible. Certainly, we still have a way by which we can pull back on this. I think it's not, you know, a done deal yet by any means. We know, by negotiating contracts over the last four years, that you can in fact negotiate in good faith. If you open up the books and you show the various sectors of the nurses and so forth and the teachers, show where you are, and you show where you want to be, you can come up with lots of great collaborative ways by which to solve financial problems and challenges in all sorts of sectors.

I know that for myself, personally, in regard to education that teachers, support staff knew that we were in a difficult financial circumstance, but they also knew by the authority of trust that we did invest in the collective bargaining process – going to the table as equals, going to the table in good faith – that you can come up with lots of other ways by which to not just negotiate wages but negotiate the quality of the service that you're delivering. So there you go with the contract, the first provincial contract with the teachers, you know, negotiating as a provincial body, entity, we came up at the table with the classroom improvement fund. What a fantastic way by which you can invest in the classroom, have meaningful discussions about where you make that investment to reduce class size, to maybe focus on basic skill learning.

We had lots of school boards like in Fort Saskatchewan, I know, that took on a school board wide initiative through the classroom improvement fund to increase reading levels amongst the youngest grades, right? They put in a multiyear program to ensure that students are reading at grade level by the time they get to grade 3 and were willing to take that classroom improvement fund money to pull everybody up to that level so that a seven- or eight-year-old, then, is reading at grade level, and they are set for the rest of their K to 12 education and beyond.

Those programs are in jeopardy now, Madam Chair, because we see already just from interim supply that the government is cutting the classroom improvement fund, a collaborative effort achieved at a bargaining table in good faith that came up with solutions that were going to improve student outcomes, improve students that were reading below grade level. Together, through the collective bargaining process, we came up with a way by which to make that investment in those young kids. It improves the classroom conditions for the teachers, for the students, for the parents, for everybody.

What's the point of all that? That table is not just a place where, you know, you have a battle with the workers that you are negotiating with. It's a place where you can start, in good faith, to create a better circumstance for everyone. It doesn't always just involve wages. It involves the working conditions and the quality of the delivery of those services for which we are responsible.

Madam Chair, I would strongly suggest to all members of the Legislature that we take this modest amendment, which is the removal of section 5(c) from Bill 9, to ensure that this is an endeavour that is being exercised in good faith. If it's truly just as the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance emphatically says in person and on the Internet, that it's just a way to pause and take a second look at these things, then remove the section that otherwise would make Bill 9 a huge club to swing around to remove the rights of collective bargaining and setting of wages and working conditions for more than 180,000 workers. Those workers are skeptical right now, and I don't blame them. Quite frankly, I am skeptical as well.

I know that as a teacher – I taught for 20 years – in 1993, when I was a young teacher, the government went through an austerity process as well. They would say one thing, dangle it up to the right, and to the left they would take away wages. They would take away classroom conditions. They would take away the futures for kids, for young teachers, and hope for families as well.

I don't think that Albertans are in any mood for anything that resembles that again. If this UCP government thinks that their recent victory in the election is a mandate to do all of those things around austerity and to make deep cuts into essential services that Albertans depend on, then they are frightfully and woefully wrong. I would suggest otherwise, that this amendment is a nice way to send a better message, you know, for the sake of 180,000 public service workers and the many, many, many hundreds of thousands – I dare say millions – of Albertans that depend on those services to ensure the safety and the security and the good health and the education of themselves and their families and that we do follow through with this amendment. We'd all be better off for it.

Thanks a lot.

The Chair: Hon. members, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, shall I call the question on the amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill. Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? Comments, questions, or amendments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, it's been an interesting evening so far on the debate. I rise again to introduce another amendment. I will give you the original with the requisite number of copies.

The Chair: Member, please just wait a minute until I receive a copy.

11:40

The Chair: Hon. members, this will be known as amendment A2.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I feel that this amendment is a reasonable amendment, and I would like to encourage the government to take an open mind with this amendment and listen to my rationale, because I feel like it speaks to some of the conversation that we've actually been having in this House around the blue-ribbon panel and the fact that the full intention of this bill is actually just to allow the blue-ribbon panel to come back and to provide recommendations to the government about what they should be doing as they move forward around, specifically, arbitration with this bill but, of course, the other recommendations that may be coming around how to support the government in making fiscal choices.

What we see in Bill 9 is very clearly under the preamble, and I will read the preamble, just the piece specific, where it says:

Whereas the Blue Ribbon Panel on Alberta's Finances, an expert panel appointed by the Government of Alberta, will deliver a final report by August 15, 2019, and time is required to gather other information on Alberta's economy and the Government of Alberta's financial state.

Fair enough. You've given us a very clear date, August 15, of when the blue-ribbon panel will be providing a report to the government.

What I'm recommending with this amendment is that we, then, look at section 2 as well as section 3 within Bill 9. First, section 2: what I recommend is that it is amended by striking out "October 31, 2019" and substituting "August 31, 2019" wherever it occurs and also in subsection (2)(b) by striking out "November 1, 2019" and substituting "September 1, 2019."

I will just speak specifically to section 2 to start, and then we can move into section 3. Section 2 is basically amending the shortening of the temporary suspension period by two months for arbitration. What Bill 9 currently says is that you will look at going back to arbitration on October 31, 2019, and start setting your new arbitration dates for negotiation with your bargaining units and the employer.

What I am suggesting is that because you've already indicated in your preamble that you will have your report by August 15, you actually start setting your arbitration dates on August 31, 2019. That's just setting the dates. That doesn't mandate you nor does it require you to be going straight into arbitration on August 31. All it asks you to do is to start working with the employers to set those new arbitration dates that you've already put on hold.

It is a two-month change, for sure. It's a two-month advance on what you've indicated in the bill because, of course, you've indicated that August 31 would be the date that you would then start going back to these bargaining units to set your dates. But the date of October 31, 2019, is just about setting dates; it's not actually about entering into the arbitration process. So if your argument is that you're waiting for the blue-ribbon panel to come back and to provide you a report, which they're going to provide to you on August 15, there should be no reason why the government wouldn't be willing to enter into talks with the bargaining units to start setting those dates then, like, August 31, 2019.

You also have other bargaining units that within this same section were going to be set for November 1, 2019, and all I'm saying is that instead of waiting till November 1, 2019, you start setting those dates on September 1, 2019. Again, yes, it's a two-month change. It brings your agreement to start talking about setting arbitration dates two months ahead, but it is still after your blue-ribbon panel's recommendations will have been received by this government. I think that's fair. I think that's reasonable. If the whole argument around arbitration and setting arbitration dates is because of the blue-ribbon panel, this still allows your blue-ribbon panel to give you the recommendations to the government, but what it says to the employer, to your bargaining units, is that you're willing to start talking about arbitration again two weeks after you've received that report. It's not saying that you're going to start negotiating on those dates. It's just saying that you have a willingness to be co-operative and to work in a respectful relationship between the employer and the employees.

Again, I feel like this is fair. This meets your argument around the blue-ribbon panel and the recommendations, but it also speaks to your bargaining units to say that you're willing to bargain in good faith. It's a good-faith argument. It meets everybody's needs. It meets your bargaining units' needs because they're believing that you're entering into this with good faith, but it also meets your mandate, that you've clearly given all of us in this House, about the blue-ribbon panel recommendations having to be provided to the government. That's section 2.

Now, section 3 amends by moving the rescheduling deadline dates for the holding of arbitration hearings up by two months. Your deadlines currently in this legislation would be – for June 30 to August 1, 2019, they are the ones that you are currently putting on hold today, because you have bargaining units that are actually in arbitration that should be starting on June 30, to August 1. You've had some agreements that you've put on hold that you've asked the arbiter to put extensions on, which would be impacted by these dates. They would then go to October 15, 2019, instead of being December 15, 2019. Again, I'm pushing your dates up by two months. However, in saying that, this still meets your mandate around your blue-ribbon panel. It still gives your bargaining unit on the employer side an opportunity to review the recommendations, and it still gives you two months and a bit, actually, from August 15, when you receive the report, to be able to meet with your bargaining units on October 15 instead of waiting until December 15.

In addition to that, you also have August 2, 2019, to September 30, 2019, that would then become January 15, 2020. Now, again, same argument. You have bargaining units that were guaranteed to have an ability to enter into arbitration between the employer and the employee that you've asked to push those dates back. All I'm saying is that as a reasonable government who wants to work collaboratively with your bargaining units, then instead of pushing them all the way down the line from December as well as the other ones that were set in October, you actually just move them back here two months.

Your bill actually speaks to this already. In your amendments it was a two-month bump for every bargaining unit group that you had decided to push back. All I'm asking you to do is to be reasonable and to start entering into those conversations at the end of August and to start setting those dates, instead of in December, in September and October. I think it's reasonable. It still meets your mandate, your whole argument around the blue-ribbon panel, your whole argument of saying that we have to wait till you get your report back. Fair enough. If that's the direction that this government has decided to take, to wait till your panel comes back to give you some feedback on some fiscal decisions that you need to make and that arbitration is part of that process, it is totally within the government's prerogative to do that.

But if we're going to talk about good-faith bargaining, which is what we've been talking about for the last few days and what we've been asking you to do, which is to show all of these bargaining units that you respect this process, which is what we're asking you to do, which is what everybody is asking you to do, just respect the process, respect these bargaining units, respect that they have a right to arbitration, then instead of pushing all of these dates back to unreasonable time periods, in my opinion, then acknowledge that you have from the 15th to the 31st to start setting those dates. It still gives you two months to review the recommendations before you start entering into the bargaining process. You can do the math. I'm sure it won't take you two months to do the math. I feel like you probably have some ideas already about maybe where you want to go. But let's look at that.

If it pleases the House, I can read section 3. I did read section 2. Section 3 is amended (a) by striking out "on or before November 30, 2019" and substituting "on or before September 30, 2019" and (b) in clause (a) by striking out "December 15, 2019" and substituting "October 15, 2019" and by striking out "during the time period beginning on June 30, 2019 and ending on October 1, 2019" and substituting "during the time period beginning on June 30, 2019 and ending on August 1, 2019." Again, in clause (b) by striking out "March 15, 2020" and substituting "January 15, 2020" and by striking out "during the time period beginning on October 2, 2019 and ending on November 30, 2019" and substituting "during the time period beginning on August 2, 2019 and ending on September 30, 2019."

Again, I just want to reiterate that I feel like this is a reasonable discussion to be having with the government. I feel that, you know, we all have very strong opinions, I believe, on both sides of the House, some believing that this side of the House doesn't appreciate the fiscal responsibility that the government has. I do appreciate the fiscal responsibility. I feel like the Finance minister and I have been able to have pretty reasonable conversations around different strategies, around different bills that we've discussed, around different ways that we can do economic stimulation and how you can manage budgets and different things like that. I feel like this speaks to that. I respect that you've created the blue-ribbon panel and that you're waiting for those recommendations to come back. I believe that that process is fair and that that is a decision that this government has made.

What I do not believe is fair is using it as a reason to push back fair bargaining practices and arbitration practices and to put workers in a vicarious position, not knowing what the process is going to be, when it's going to start, and what the outcome will be. I would encourage the government, please, to at least look at this amendment, take it into consideration, and recognize that I don't believe that it's actually asking for that much. It's asking for you just to push things back by two months. It's still allowing you to look at your recommendations and to implement them. It's not mandating you to immediately go into arbitration and bargaining processes. All it's doing is saying: we believe in good faith, we believe in the bargaining process, and we believe that the employer and the employee have a right to a conversation to actually set dates to begin this process again.

I will leave it at that, and I look forward to hearing the response.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to respond to the, I think, reasonable amendment that the hon. deputy House leader of the opposition has made. You know, as I listened to the hon. member's comments, it reminded me a little bit of the thought process that we had when we were considering the contents of this bill. We recognized the critical importance of hearing from the MacKinnon panel, and we also worked to understand how much time we would need as we worked through the conclusions of that panel and also melded those with our upcoming budget deliberations. So we recognized as well the importance of being, again, thoughtful and prudent and ensuring that we had full information in making those decisions.

Lastly, we wanted also to ensure that the dates we chose were the least intrusive on the public sector. We didn't want to extend it longer than it needed to be, so we did put a fair bit of thought and deliberation into choosing the October 31 date. We believed that that would give us enough time to adequately consider the panel's report and conclusions, again, relative to our upcoming budget and relative to our plan and responsibility to balance in our first term and balance that out, again, recognizing the importance of creating as little intrusion into the public sector as possible.

To respond to the member opposite, our thought process was similar, I think, to what the member articulated, so we came down on these dates after, I think, an adequate amount of deliberation, conclusion, and input. I believe the dates we have in this bill are the dates that will serve the process most adequately and, ultimately, Albertans correctly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Finance minister for the response. I appreciate what he's saying. I do. I guess, for me, this is about actually just setting the dates. This isn't actually about working through the arbitration process. This is where I struggle. Arbitration can actually take a very, very long time. Going through it as a bargaining member and representing members at one point, it took us a very long time to be able to come to an agreement within the public sector, sometimes years to finally be able to get to a place.

I guess the part that I struggle with is that when we look at arbitration, an arbiter is supposed to be independent. We have a group of representatives from the employer side and we have a group of representatives from the employee side that start opening up a conversation around language, around specifically wages, I guess, in this context. The arbiter is supposed to be neutral. If the government is saying that from August 15 until October 31 they're not going to be able to have an understanding of what kind of wage negotiations they're going to be able to put in, I'm a little bit cautious around thinking that that could be the fact.

I feel like it won't take this government two months to decide what they're going to do around wages for public-sector workers or for any of these bargaining units. I also believe that these dates – again, it doesn't mean you're going to have an agreement that day. All it's saying is that you're willing to enter into an independent arbitration process between the employer and employee. I would be curious to think that the government would try to influence that process with directing the arbiter how to do that, because typically it would be the employer side having a group of individuals and the employee side having a group of individuals. There should be enough understanding, I would think – even given the fact that this bill is in front of us speaks to the fact that the government has thoughts about this already.

I also trust that the blue-ribbon panel, given its mandate and who sits on that panel, has been pretty transparent about some of their thoughts around supporting, you know, whether or not there should be salary freezes versus rollbacks for some of those things. We have seen reports written by some of the individuals on that panel about what they believe would be in the best interest of financial prudence in this province.

I struggle with the fact that the government isn't willing to just push these back to even just start the date. Again, this is about setting dates. This isn't actually about how long the arbitration process is going to take. This is just about setting dates and acknowledging the collective process and acknowledging the fact that all of these bargaining units have a right to arbitration and that they have a right to collective bargaining.

To have good faith and to show goodwill as the employer to these bargaining units, I would say that being willing to go back two months and just set the dates is reasonable given that it's still past your blue-ribbon panel. You can still have conversation amongst yourselves around what those negotiations will look like and what the outcome of those negotiations will be. As I'm sure the government is aware – and I know there are members within their government that worked at the labour board, so they're very aware of this process – there is time and there are many meetings, and there are many processes that go through this whole wage arbitration process and that it doesn't happen in a few weeks.

Even if you said, "August 31 we're going to start talking about setting dates," well, it could take a month or two to set those dates, so you might not even be going to your first arbitration meeting until December, which is still two months after your blue-ribbon panel has come back. Then, even after that, it could take who knows how long until you actually get to an agreement based on many discussions and many factors. Saying that October 31 we're going to start trying to figure out what date we can meet: I still think that is reasonable.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's an honour to be able to rise to this very reasonable amendment. I do plan to support it, and I appreciate the member bringing it forward. I think that it's reasonable in the fact that while I will definitely not be supporting this bill as a whole, I think that we should be able to, as legislators, find some common ground here. Maybe the government doesn't plan to bargain in good faith with public-sector workers, but hopefully at some point we can find the ability to bargain in good faith here in this Legislature.

There were instances when we were in government over the last four years where amendments came forward from the opposition, Wildrose or UCP at that time, and we said, "Hey, you know, this is reasonable; this is a happy compromise, and we can find ourselves supporting it," and we did. I really hope that the government does consider supporting this. I think that the way that the bill is written right now leaves too much wiggle room. These public servants are expecting more from this government, and through Bill 9 we've seen that the government is not willing to listen to them.

The fact that they're giving a timeline for waiting for a blue-ribbon panel to come back with answers that the government already knows – the government knows what is going to come back, especially considering that the blue-ribbon panel is only considering one side of the equation when it comes to returning to balance and fiscal responsibility. The blue-ribbon panel is going to come back and say that we're spending too much money, but the fact is that the government hasn't given them the ability to look at the tax structure of the province, so they're going to come back and say – well, they're going to become a scapegoat for this government to look at public-sector and public servant wages and say: "Well, this is really the only mechanism we have to reduce the debt, and the blue-ribbon panel said that it was okay to do so, so we're going to start making cuts. We're going to start renegotiating wages and, like we're seeing in Ontario, start capping wages over the next four years and possibly worse." What we've seen through this legislation is the ability to roll back wages. Of course, that was the discussion of the last amendment – I won't get into it – that we put forward, the unbelievable power that this government's trying to give themselves to negotiate wages on behalf of these public servants.

I think that this amendment is reasonable, and I think that this government should really consider supporting it. Do I think that they're going to? Probably not, based on the quality of discussion or the willingness of the government to actually hear us out this evening and for the last few evenings of discussion on this bill. You know, we saw 20 minutes ago that the Premier or one of the members started handing out earplugs to the members of this Assembly, which is very concerning for me. We're sent to this Legislature by the people of each of our constituencies, and they expect us to be doing our job when we're in here, so to see members starting to put in earplugs, which I believe most of them have taken out now, is very concerning for me.

It really goes to show – I've been following the social media discussion on this issue, as I do with all discussions, and there was a community member in the constituency of Airdrie-Cochrane that was reaching out to their MLA on Twitter to find out: why are you supporting this bill, considering the unbelievable power that it's giving to the government to force contracts on public servants? And what was the response that this member of the public got? They got blocked instantly on Twitter.

The Chair: Hon. member, let's talk about the real world and this bill in this Legislature and not the social media world.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Well, this is the real world.

The Chair: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Freedom of Speech

Mr. Bilous: I rise on a point of order, Chair. In this Chamber in committee members are allowed a gross leeway to debate the bill, to discuss things like closure, which are related to the bill. That is part of the freedom of speech in Beauchesne's 75.

The privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Member of Parliament on the floor of the House and in committee. It is primarily guaranteed in the British Bill of Rights which declared "that the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place outside of Parliament."

So the member talking about the bill and how it relates to the proceedings in the Chamber here tonight I assert is the member's privilege as a member of the Chamber and he should be allowed to continue.

The Chair: Hon. Opposition House Leader, Standing Order 23(f) should be referenced here, should have been referenced in your debate. There has already been a ruling on the matter that has been dealt with in regard to calling the previous question. We've already discussed that matter. It's done. We're on Bill 9. We need to proceed with the matter at hand.

Mr. Bilous: Under 13(2), Madam Chair, I appreciate that the motion of closure has been enacted, but there very much are time constraints, and members can bring up the fact that there is a limited amount of time to discuss this procedure. It is parliamentary tradition. I encourage the chair to look at the past 75 years. I've been in this House the past seven years, and not once has a chair ever ruled talking about closure or time allocation, including members of the current government who were opposition when we brought in time allocation, discussed it at length.

The Chair: Hon. member, the issue is not with referencing the decision; it's with revisiting the decision that has already been made. We've been revisiting this decision multiple times in this Chamber, but we need to keep it on track, especially as the hour goes through the night.

Mr. Bilous: With all due respect, Madam Chair, again, this relates back to freedom of speech and members having the ability to be able to discuss. This is related to this very amendment. This is related to the bill, and I contest that members need to uphold the freedom of speech and the ability to allow members to speak.

The Chair: The member will be allowed to speak. He will not be allowed to speak about the matter in which we have already debated at length and has been decided on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday. Please proceed with caution.

Debate Continued

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Now, I do want to revisit the point that when constituents reach out to us, whether it be on Facebook, Twitter, whatever social media it may be, it would be awfully convenient for me to say: well, this constituent is not living in the real world. So I do take concerns with the matter that was just brought before us and the comment that you made. I think that it's awfully important for us as politicians and as representatives of our community to be able to visit all mediums and hear from constituents in all sorts of ways, whether it's a phone call to our office or being reached out to on social media. It is a grave concern, and we have seen legal discussions in previous years about the fact that representatives should not have the ability, with, of course, exceptions, if there is targeted harassment, to be able to block constituents that they represent on social media.

So it was a great concern to me to see that happening on social media, to see the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane – whether it was the member or a staff member, it doesn't matter. It's a concern. They should consider revisiting that matter because each constituent of ours should have the opportunity to have that discussion even if the member doesn't agree with the position that the constituent is taking.

An Hon. Member: You responded pretty good.

Mr. Carson: Now, really, I did respond because I think that people across the province . . . [interjections] I'm being heckled by the member. I think that we should be listening to our constituents, and we should listen to everyone even if they are not in our constituency, which is why I responded to the member's constituent even though that member wasn't willing to do so.

Just getting back to the amendment, Madam Chair, I will be supporting this amendment. I think it's very reasonable. I think that setting some timelines, of course, not trying to force the government to begin negotiations but at least starting to consider them as soon as the blue-ribbon panel concludes – once again, I don't think that the government is going to receive any new information that they didn't already have before them with the wonderful public servants that they are provided with to gather this information for them in the first place. I do believe that it is going to become a scapegoat for them to start cutting wages and capping wages. But I'm planning to support this amendment. I hope that all members of the Assembly will.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Madam Chair, I hesitate to interrupt, but I did find it fascinating talking about Twitter. First, I wanted to agree with you. I don't think Twitter is the real world, but I don't know if that's really that relevant to the bill, which I think was your point. I just wanted to talk about what I think is the hon. member's point – I'm not sure; I'm having trouble following it – that he feels that the government is not talking to constituents and something about somebody blocking something on Twitter. I was still struggling to see how it had anything to do with Bill 9.

But the reason I wanted to jump up and have a quick conversation was my experience with NDPism. I'm sure yours has been, Madam Chair – you've been here as long as I have been. That's quite frankly been the biggest problem with the NDP, that we hear about all the time. I have had to spend significant time inside my large constituency that I represent, often had to spend time servicing constituents inside the old Banff-Canmore constituency, for example. I know that won't happen anymore because Banff – sorry; Banff-Cochrane riding, back then. Cochrane's now represented by two excellent members – or one excellent member of the Legislature. It's your town that now has two. Sorry, Madam Chair. And Banff-Kananaskis is also represented by an excellent member now, so I suspect that it won't happen.

If we want to talk about not helping constituents, I think that's a great example. The former Member for Banff-Kananaskis, he and I had an interaction to do with one of his constituents when he was first elected. I found this shocking. There was a gentleman from Sundre who came in to my office, and he was quite emotional. He had a brother at the time who was in his late 90s who landed in Normandy on D-Day, was knighted by the French government afterwards, a pretty interesting individual, a hero of our country. Then he came home and he settled inside Canmore and he married a young lady who became a nurse who then ended up running the hospital inside Canmore. They lived together for 50, 60 years inside the Canmore community. Then his wife got sick, unfortunately, Madam Chair, and they had no space for her in the Canmore hospital. They asked for her – because of that, they moved her to Calgary and by this point this gentleman could no longer drive.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hate to interrupt. I assume you are going to tie this in to the amendment.

Mr. Jason Nixon: You bet, Madam Chair. I'm getting there, and I'm going to get right back to the bill. I'm coming there, full circle. Do not worry.

Anyways, he could not drive to see his wife anymore. His brother was a little bit younger and was quite emotional about that. They're having trouble getting them to connect. You can imagine, Madam Chair, how hard that would be for a couple that were married that many decades. Interestingly enough, they contacted their NDP MLA for just over six months for help. That MLA would not even return their phone call. Fortunately enough, they came to the Sundre constituency office and the staff there were great. They were able to reach out, and just a few short days later his wife was able to return to Canmore, where she remained for the remainder of her days, actually, close to her husband. He's passed away now.

But that's the type of service that we heard that NDP members gave their constituents, so I don't think that the hon. member should rise in the House and try to imply that the United Conservative Party members in any way are not keeping care of constituents. The now hon. Health minister told me this story when he took over his office: over 1,000 unreturned messages. So I don't think, Madam Chair, that they should bother going there. I think that's probably a little bit of the pot calling the – how do you say that? Sorry; it's getting late.

An Hon. Member: The kettle black.

Mr. Jason Nixon: The kettle. Yeah. The kettle calling the pot black or the pot calling the kettle black.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to have the opportunity to stop by and be part of tonight and partake in some sober debate here in the Legislature and offer some perspective on this particular bill and this particular amendment that we have before us. Seems it's been an interesting and entertaining evening. I had the opportunity to follow it earlier. Yeah. It's been interesting to listen along.

I appreciate this amendment that was brought forward by my colleague from Edmonton-Manning. I appreciate it for one particular reason. That's because multiple times in question period, here in this House tonight, over and over again, we have offered this government the opportunity to provide some level of clarity, some small sign of good faith to public-sector workers that what they claim their intentions with this bill are are in fact the intentions they are going to follow through. And this government is refusing to do that. They have been offered the opportunity to stand in this House and make it clear that they will not use this legislation to impose a contract or to impose a wage rollback. They will not offer that guarantee. They have refused to state that on the record. They go back to talking about the intentions of this bill.

We have brought forward amendments like this one here, which, again, is providing this government with the opportunity to demonstrate to public-sector workers in Alberta that they are indeed approaching this in good faith. We'll see what they choose to do with it because so far, Madam Chair, I can't say that the record of this government and how they have approached this particular situation really gives the public sector any reason to give this government their trust or to believe that there is any good faith intended in this legislation which is being brought forward to break their contracts. Now, let's be clear about that. Whatever the government's intentions are, their means of achieving them are to break a contract.

Let's just step back for a moment and run down the timeline of how we arrived here. On June 11 we discovered that this minister had had his staff send out a letter to the bargaining units, which were anticipating and waiting at the table, asking them to sit down and have a consultation. They then also mentioned: well, if you don't, we've got this bill that we've already got ready hanging over your head. Even one step further back from that, Madam Chair, is that this government hid their plan from Albertans. During the election campaign they hid the fact that they intended to take this step, that they intended to break these contracts. They were not straight with Albertans.

Now, the minister stood earlier and claimed that, in fact, while in the campaign platform they promised that they were going to balance the budget and that they were going to practice fiscal restraint, within that general vague bromide was contained their intention to break this contract. Unfortunately, Madam Chair, this Premier has repeatedly stated what the standard is for whether or not one is hiding something from Albertans.

He has made it very clear, Mr. Chair, that if you do not have something one hundred per cent explicitly stated in your campaign platform and then bring forward legislation to implement it, you have acted in bad faith, you have hidden something from Albertans, and you deserve to be punished for it. That is repeatedly on the record in this House, in the media, and indeed I believe even in their own campaign platform, so by their own standard and their own measure they already began in bad faith.

Then they bring forward this letter, again, which they send to the bargaining units, more or less saying: "Hmm. Nice contract you have here. Shame if something were to happen to it." Two days, two days, Mr. Chair, after sending that letter, after not a single actual conversation – pardon me; I take that back. There was apparently some contact between department officials and the bargaining units, brief contact. But two days later this minister rose in this House and he tabled legislation to break contracts. He tabled this bill on bad-faith bargaining. Then, to follow that up, not only did they not want to actually sit down, not only did they hide this from Albertans, not only did they not have the courage to actually sit down and have real consultation and conversation with the individuals involved; now they do not even want to have that conversation in this House. They are limiting the time as much as possible because they recognize that they hid this from Albertans, and they are hoping that Albertans will not notice that they can hopefully slip through this breaking of contracts, this bad faith, in the dark of night.

And, to top that off, these members are willing to sit and wear earplugs. The Premier himself distributed them to his caucus members. Perhaps he was concerned with what his members might say. He felt that they could not actually even listen to the opposition. I didn't know we were that convincing.

That said, Mr. Chair, that is the standard that's being set. And then this government has the gall to say: "Trust us. We're from the government. We're here to help. Trust us. Ignore all that stuff over there. Ignore the fact that we have a blue-ribbon panel that's looking exclusively at how to cut money from the budget. Ignore the fact that we have punched a 4 and a half billion dollar hole in that same budget. Ignore the fact that we have repeatedly spoken so poorly of the democratically elected unions that represent our public-sector workers. Ignore all of that, and take it on good faith that this bill, on which we will offer no actual public guarantee, on which we will say nothing on the record to address any of your concerns – trust us that we're going to be okay on this."

I don't think public-sector workers in this province are going to do that, Mr. Chair, which is why we are here in the dead of night debating this bill, because this government is ashamed to actually have this public, to actually have Albertans watching. Indeed, the thing is that Albertans are watching and they are listening, which is why this minister is putting out videos on that platform, that apparently doesn't matter, trying to convince Albertans that, really, this is all okay but offering no new guarantees or information, not actually meeting any of the arguments but simply, again, saying: "Trust us. Trust us as we break your contracts. Trust us as we demonstrate our bad faith out of the gate. Trust us that our ends really will justify these means."

But Albertans aren't buying it, and they are paying attention, Mr. Chair. I was forwarded a message tonight from my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora that she received from one of her constituents and gave us the permission to read it here tonight. I'd like to do so.

That message reads: public-sector workers are Albertans; I am an Albertan; it has been my lifelong dream to work within Alberta's public sector since I was 12 years old; I finally made my dreams come true in 2018, something that took years of hard work and sacrifice; I wanted to make life better for Albertans, but Bill 9 has completely betrayed my trust in this government; I would never have thought that this government would come after the food on my table, the clothes on my kids' backs; what is next? Are you coming after my job? I'm worried about my financial future and that I will suffer due to the desire to create a path forward; a deal is a deal; honour the rights of Albertans, all Albertans, not just the ones in the top 1 per cent; sincerely, a public servant.

You know, time and time again, Mr. Chair, we hear this government talking about needing to look after Albertans and somehow overlooking the fact that these workers are themselves Albertans. Now, I respect that this government indeed did get elected with a significant mandate and, in so doing, kind of cut a deal with Albertans on what they said that they would do. One of their promises was to balance the budget. They are claiming they can do so while pulling 4 and a half billion dollars out of that budget for a corporate tax cut, for which they have no returns for the next two years at least and no guarantees for anything beyond while planning to make cuts to services. They promised that they will maintain or increase funding for health care and education somehow, miraculously, and they claim that they will find efficiencies and that they will make these cuts and they will reduce their spending without impacting the delivery of public services. Indeed, they claim that they will improve them. That's a lot of big promises.

But what really undermines the faith, I think, of Albertans that they could deliver on that is when they immediately, as one of their first steps, come forward with something which they hid from Albertans during the election, which they knew they were going to do and did not tell Albertans that they would, when that is one of their first things, and that involves breaking the actual contracts that have been signed by the government of Alberta – but then they turn and say: trust us. Unfortunately, the record of Conservative governments in this province, Mr. Chair, has not been a friendly one with public-sector workers.

We've seen this time and time again. The price of oil drops. The government decides it must make cuts. We see reductions in service. We see cuts in programming. We see folks being laid off. We've seen Conservative governments that have gone after the pensions of public workers in the province in Alberta, and we've repeatedly seen Conservative politicians in this province use them as scapegoats, objects of resentment: "Look at your neighbour over there who works in the public sector. He didn't get laid off when the price of oil dropped. We need to make him feel some pain, too. His salary hasn't been cut. Of course, it also hasn't been raised in a number of years, but hey, you got hurt; we should hurt him, too."

That does nothing to help our economy, Mr. Chair. Ensuring that we have more Albertans who are earning less or perhaps not earning anything at all isn't going to support more local businesses. It isn't going to allow more people to keep their homes. For myself, Mr. Chair, I see no reason and this government has given me no reason to trust them on this. They have a lot of pretty words, and I will give this Premier that. He is a man who is good with his words. But because you hide something from Albertans with a smile on your face, it doesn't make you more trustworthy. The fact that you can dress it up in some fancy talking points and dance rather skilfully around the issue without actually addressing it: I think Albertans are starting to see through that.

That is why I and my colleagues are here tonight and why we're going to continue to debate this, and we are going to use every second of the time that this government has so generously allotted to us. Of course, we can recall all the comments from members of this government when they sat on this side of the aisle, when they were concerned about an issue, and their deep and heartfelt protests about the abrogation of democracy when they were not given enough time and opportunity to speak. But we will continue to speak. We are continuing to put this out for Albertans. We're continuing to hear from public-sector workers. We saw an unprecedented unification of the leaders of our public-sector unions here at the Legislature just a few days ago. It goes back to years ago. You know, Premier Klein worked really hard to try to break that up. He tried to put the public sector at each other's throats. Well, kudos to this Premier. Not only did he unite the Conservatives in this province; he certainly united the public sector.

I'm not sure that this is a battle this government really wants to take on. I recognize the damage this is going to do, in my view – it's already begun to be done – the loss of faith that's already occurred with this government in the public sector, on whom, I remind the House again, as I have before, they are going to be dependent on achieving their incredibly lofty goals. Let's be clear, Mr. Chair. These are not new goals. If I took a shot every time a Conservative government in this province said that they were going to solve the budget deficit by finding efficiencies, well, I would not be able to stand in this Chamber, I can tell you that. This has been a repeated promise, over and over and over again, and not a single Conservative government in this province has managed to pull it off.

Now, of course, we have the much-praised Premier Klein, who himself went to battle with public-sector unions, and indeed he balanced the budget on paper. But he did that by drastically reducing services, by deeply cutting the public service, and by badly neglecting infrastructure across this province. As many have noted, it took years – and indeed I talk to public-sector workers today who work in laboratory tech, who work as paramedics, who work as nurses, and they tell me: we still have not recovered from the damage that Premier did, the capacity that we lost and never regained.

Even as this province went through the boom years and we drew population from across Canada and indeed from around the world, as we continue to do, we never caught up, and that is one of the reasons we have the expensive system we have today, because for all those workers that were laid off or who picked up and left Alberta, when Premier Klein all of a sudden had a little more cash in his pocket thanks to the rise in the price of natural gas, well, when they started hiring people back, it became more expensive.

Because governments chose to cut every time the price of oil dropped and to spend when the price of oil rose, we built infrastructure – not enough of it, mind you – and what infrastructure did get built got built at some of the most expensive times to build. Governments attempted to hide the fact that they were so dependent on the price of oil by cutting corners: promising lots of schools but not actually building them, tinkering around with the health care system, playing around with the edges, reorganizing this, reorganizing that, creating expenses, all the while . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, are there any others wishing to speak to A2? I see the hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Chair, I just feel compelled to stand and participate in this debate ever so slightly just due to the comments made by the hon. member. I represent the constituency of Calgary-Elbow, and there's one thing, when you knock on doors in Calgary-Elbow, that they take great pride in, the fact that Ralph Klein represented them for years. He held up the sign "Paid in Full." He set the foundation for Alberta to have years of prosperity. It is with great pride that I rise as the now Member for Calgary-Elbow. Not a day goes by, when I go back to my constituents, where they don't tell me that they are proud of the fact that Ralph Klein, King Ralph, as they talk about him, was the Premier of this province, and they're looking for us to lead now in our time.

I also just want to say that I think we're at – what is it? – hour 15 of debate, Government House Leader, about hour 15, 16 now?

Mr. Jason Nixon: A little more than that.

Mr. Schweitzer: A little more than that? A little more than that.

I just also want to put on the record that after all the points raised – some of them have been well articulated; some of them, I would say, may not have been that well articulated – I still have not been persuaded. I still believe that Bill 9 is the way forward. We need this to have a responsible way forward, Mr. Chair, to make sure that we act responsibly, to make sure that we act in the best interests of Albertans, to make sure we have a reasonable path forward.

I'm going to be very brief and now sit.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre rising.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, I thank the Member for Calgary-Elbow for his comments. I can tell you that when I knock on doors in my constituency, there is a very different opinion of Premier Klein, markedly different. But to each their own. Particularly when we're talking about historical figures, there can be many ways to view their records. Indeed, folks are open to their revisionism or to what aspects they want to look at or what aspects they don't.

I would also just note that my intention in standing and speaking here is not to convince the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow or any other member in this House. I recognize that these folks that are here are fairly early in their mandate. They recognize what brought them here, and they are going to do the bidding of their Premier. What I am here to do is to represent the voices of my constituents, who have overwhelmingly told me that they do not support this bill. They do not support this government acting in bad faith and choosing to break contracts and setting this as their precedent, their first action, in how they are going to work with public-sector workers in this province.

I'm here tonight and I'm engaging in this debate so that Albertans can know and understand what it is this government is choosing to do. Now, I regret that the Member for Calgary-Elbow, who's declared he's not going to be convinced, has to sit here and listen to my debate, whatever he might think of the quality of what I bring forward, but that's my job, and that's what I'm going to do.

Now, as I was saying, Mr. Chair, damage has been done to this province in terms of vilifying public-sector workers, of using them as objects of resentment, and, as I was noting, this government is going to need every single one of these workers onboard if they truly want to find efficiencies, if they truly want to improve these systems.

They can conduct their review of AHS. In some respects that's an admirable thing. Of course, there have been reviews that have been done. AHS has been around since 2009. Again, it was a creature created by previous Conservative governments, which, as I noted, love to tinker about with the health care system but never really seem to actually figure out how to begin to cut through the many layers that had accumulated on it over time and actually get down to better service delivery.

Indeed, for the past decade they were barely able to keep a minister in the portfolio for more than two years. There's hardly one that sat for a full term. I have to give credit to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora in that she lasted the full four years. In my opinion, whether you disagree with her policies and the choices she made, I can't say that anyone could disagree with the fact that she knew her file and that she actually sat down and talked with all of the folks that worked in the different public sectors that informed her portfolio, that she was a minister that was on the ground.

I don't envy the Minister of Health for the work he's going to have to do and the water he's going to have to carry on behalf of this Premier when this is the first step out of the gate, when this is the tone that is being set for how we're going to work and negotiate with our public-sector workers in the health care field.

I can tell you that I'm already hearing from paramedics, from lab technicians, from nurses, from people all throughout our health care system about their frustration, about the fact that they are upset with this choice by this government, the fear that they have of what next steps this government is going to take. Again, we have given this government, as with this amendment that we have in front of us, the opportunity to offer some concrete reassurance to those workers. All we're asking here is that we actually give them some concrete dates, which, to be clear, Mr. Chair, they already had in a contract which was fairly negotiated at the table, signed, and completed. Now this government is introducing legislation to crack it open for their convenience without even a modicum of negotiation or discussion.

Now, as so many of my colleagues noted, of course, that's what this Premier said he was going to do. He was going to move quickly. He was going to have lots of stuff planned in advance. He wasn't going to tell Albertans what he had planned in advance – this particular piece: he made sure he hid that – but he was going to have it planned in advance so that he could move quickly to get past any potential opposition, so that no one would have time to stand up and question. Indeed, that's what we see happening with this bill.

What we are offering this government is the opportunity to maybe repair some of this damage that they've already started, to put a little bit of good faith back in on top of all this bad, that they're opening these discussions with our public-sector workers. This amendment simply says: "Okay. Well, you say that you can't do this date right now? Okay. Fine. You feel that you have to legislate and go in and break the contract? Fine. At least give them something to indicate that you intend to come back to this table."

The government refuses to give any sort of statement that they will not impose a contract and that they will not impose a wage rollback. They refuse to say it. They insist on keeping that option open in their back pocket, ready to pull out, hidden, much like they hid their intentions with this legislation. If they will not give the public sector at least that promise, at least that small bit of comfort in this era of uncertainty that they are now opening up for so many workers across the province of Alberta, they could at least agree that they would agree to some dates, at which point they will actually promise to sit back down at the table again.

That doesn't commit them to any actual action, Mr. Chair. All they're saying is, "We will sit down and talk to you at the table, starting between this date and this date." They can sit down at that table and say: "You know what? I'm sorry. We can't give anything more. We need to ask you to take a zero." They can sit down at that table and say: "You know what? We've looked at our budget, we've heard from the blue-ribbon panel, and we need to ask you to take a 5 per cent wage rollback." They can sit down at that table and say whatever they want, hold whatever position, negotiate from whatever position they want. This is simply a promise that they will do so and not simply arbitrarily make that decision, that they won't just sit down and say: "You get a haircut whether you like it or not. Your family is going to have less to live on this year regardless. No discussion."

We'll see, I guess, what this government chooses to do with this amendment. If they choose not to vote for this amendment – they keep saying: our intentions in this legislation are clear. Well, they are becoming clearer by the day, clearer by the minute. Clearer by the minute is probably more accurate. They're not allowing us an opportunity of days to discuss this. But I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that Albertans are watching.

During our four years in government we had a period of labour peace. We were able to sit down and negotiate with public-sector unions. We sat down to the table. We talked with them. Our negotiators from the government went and spoke, and we achieved agreements of zeros. Those were negotiated. That was with public-sector workers who had already taken zeros in previous years. We were able to do that in good faith: sit down, actually bargain with them, talk to them.

This government, right out of the gate, is burning that up. They're spending all of their capital right out, much like their corporate tax break. You know, they're gambling that 4 and a half million dollars, and they are all in. They're rolling those dice. I recognize that I'm mixing my gambling metaphors. On this, too, they apparently feel they've got enough political capital to spare that they can come, right out of the gate, breaking contracts with public-sector workers, which is saying: "If we want something, we'll simply legislate it. We're not going to sit down and talk about it. We're not going to discuss it with you. We're simply going to use the most powerful tool in our tool box to crush you." That is what this government is choosing to do.

Again, all we are asking for with this amendment, all we are offering is the opportunity for this government to demonstrate that – if it is not as dire as what I have been saying, if anything that I and my colleagues here have said is untrue, they have the opportunity to actually adopt an amendment that demonstrates that to be the case, to do more than simply say: "Trust us. Trust us on this policy, that we hid from Albertans, that we did not tell them we were going to implement because we knew what the reaction would be. Trust us that, really, this time when a Conservative government sits down and talks about, you know, needing to find efficiencies, it's not going to be borne on the backs of the workers." That hasn't been the record in this province, certainly not under the much-vaunted Premier Klein.

The fact is that this government is a big fan of offering overly simplistic answers to complex problems. That may win you an election, particularly when you hide the less savoury parts of your intentions and policies. But I'll tell you, Mr. Chair, that it is going to be much, much harder in practice, particularly when the government sets out on this kind of a fight, on this kind of bad faith right out of the gate. I mean, between this and Bill 8, this government is just out to burn up trust. I know that members are sitting here now, and members have risen in this House, and they've said: "Well, you know, actually, folks in my constituency aren't that concerned about this. I've even talked to a teacher or nurse or two, and they're okay with this."

What I would say is that this is the first brick in the wall. This is the first piece of what is going to prove to be a shaky foundation for this government. Maybe you don't feel it yet. But I'll tell you that there are nurses, there are teachers, there are correctional officers, there are paramedics and front-line workers in your constituency who are watching this, who are watching you. This is planting that first seed of doubt, and when your budget comes this fall, when you, hopefully, come back to the bargaining table – of course, you are unwilling to offer any guarantees that you will actually do that – they'll remember this. They'll remember what the first steps of the first action of this government were, and that trust is going to continue to erode. Those folks might be happy with you now, in the warm, honeymoon glow after the election, but once the implications of these decisions that you're making begin to bear fruit, things aren't necessarily going to seem so rosy anymore.

But we have the opportunity here tonight with this amendment for this government to help mitigate that, for you to demonstrate to your constituents your good faith and your goodwill that you have in this Premier, that these members have in their Premier and their leader and in their minister. They're willing to take it on faith that what they are saying is what they are going to do, or perhaps they're aware that it's not, but they are willing to go with that, too. I can't say.

But here's an opportunity to demonstrate, for each of these members to demonstrate to the folks in their constituencies that this government intends to bargain in good faith with public-sector workers and that whatever they feel needs to be done, if they feel there needs to be sacrifice, they will sit down, they will look them in the eye and talk to them about it, that this government will be willing to actually go to the negotiating table and lay out their case and not simply, as they are choosing to do now, use legislation to ram it down the throats of public-sector workers and then go on a campaign of spreading further resentment, whether that's themselves personally or through their many proxies in conservative media in this province, folks who are more than happy to reprint the Premier's every word and press release.

I'm incredibly thankful, actually, for the legislative reporters that we have here in Edmonton, who I think do a fantastic job despite their clashes at times with ministers of this government and the Premier. I have great respect for the work they do. They are going to be here, and they're going to be covering this, too, and they're going to be letting Albertans know, as they have.

That is, again, part of why I and my colleagues are here tonight, because we intend to keep this story alive as long as we possibly can to ensure that Albertans understand the decisions that this government is making in bad faith, the incredibly poor precedent that it is choosing to set, and make sure that they are well aware and well clear that this is not a government that can be trusted, that perhaps they best be getting out their pickets, their cardboard, their markers and getting prepared because this government has yet to demonstrate at all on this bill that they are willing to show any semblance of good faith in how they are going to approach the livelihoods of folks that so many Albertans depend on.

The amendment is here. This government has an opportunity to demonstrate one last time, perhaps, what their intentions on this bill truly are. I look forward to seeing what they decide.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would also take just a quick moment to mention that we are on amendment A2 at this time. I would never anticipate anybody's direction of debate, or I would not try to do that; however, having read the amendment, it does deal primarily with what look like schedules, so I would just mention that if this amendment was put to question, Bill 9 would also be available in totality to debate. It seems like we've given a wide berth with regard to every member's direction of debate, and that is also available to the House.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Chair. I will be brief. I will speak to the amendment, and once we vote on the amendment, after that I can speak to the bill again. I think it's an important and common-sense amendment, brought forward by my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Manning. The way I understand it, what this amendment is doing is just reducing the time that's provided in the legislation, the time limit that government has set for September 30, 2019. I think this amendment is changing it to a shorter time frame. I think we have heard in this Legislature many times that this is something temporary. This is only for a short period of time, and the legislation itself refers to the report of blue-ribbon panel, that the final report will be available by August 15. That's the time frame they're looking at to, I guess, defer these agreements. If that's the intention as provided in the legislation, I think, then that's a reasonable amendment that provides government with a reasonable time to look into these agreements.

But I do want to say this on the record, that no amendment to this piece of legislation will make this legislation better, but at least this one provides a little bit of certainty, that what they are essentially saying, what they have shared with this House, what they are trying to achieve through this piece of legislation is exactly what will be delivered through this legislation. Since it's very clear in their legislation that they want to defer these agreements until they hear from the blue-ribbon panel – and that report will be out by August 15, and that will be the final report – this amendment sets out the time that should be enough for the government to consider that and if that is a temporary matter and if that's the only thing, that's the only purpose they're trying to achieve with this.

I think we need to take these amendments seriously, take this piece of legislation seriously because we know that this piece of legislation will impact one-fifth of their mandate. It's almost 200,000 Albertans, workers: front-line nurses, social workers, teachers, librarians, food inspectors, child mental health therapists, long-term care workers, correctional officers, sheriffs. There are a lot of Albertans who are impacted by this piece of legislation. There are a lot of jobs that are at stake. There are a lot of rights that are at stake. Putting a proper safeguard, putting a proper timeline: it's important that we have that clarity in the Legislature. That's why this amendment is important.

I will urge all members of this House to vote in favour of this amendment, to vote in favour of those workers whose rights have been impacted. This amendment will make it at least a bit more certain, will reduce the time that government may take to look into these contracts. They will have the information they need, as stated in the legislation, and I think it's a reasonable amendment that all members should be voting for.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. Member for Calgary-McCall. I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo standing.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. At this late hour I wanted to just, of course, echo some of the thoughts that were just put. The Member for Edmonton-Manning brought forward a very reasoned amendment, I believe, that just moves timelines up. You know, there are about 200,000 people that'll be impacted by this legislation, this bill to defer their arbitration rights, their ability to sit down with government and deal with contracts that are coming up for wage negotiations, 200,000 Albertans who are our neighbours.

1:00

They work in places throughout the province, as you can see from the schedule here and the various places that are identified: postsecondary, AHS, ABCs, government itself, and other workplaces – 200,000 Albertans, Mr. Chair, who are our neighbours, who we all know personally. My colleague from Calgary-McCall talked about what those professional designations are, and they're numerous. We all know people in those positions.

They're public servants. They're teachers. They work for agencies, boards, and commissions throughout the province. Two hundred thousand workers are about 5 per cent of the population of Alberta. If you take away the under-18 part of the population, that percentage goes up maybe to 10 or 15 per cent, so 1 in 6 working Albertans are affected by what we're seeing here before us today.

I would think that those 1 in 6 Albertans want greater certainty about how long they're going to be impacted by Bill 9, a bill to really rip up the agreed upon contracts that they have. The Minister of Finance said that the bill was designed to be as little an intrusion into the public sector as possible, but I would disagree. I think it's a massive intrusion into the public sector and the working lives of 1 in 6 Albertans who are impacted by this.

I want to understand why government didn't sit down across the table from representatives and talk to them about the issues that they're going through with regard to the preamble here, why they didn't talk to them about the significant changes that have occurred and lay that out for those representatives of the different unions that would negotiate with government.

The experience of our government was that we did sit down. We laid out the situation with regard to finances and where things were at, and what we were able to achieve was an understanding with those labour negotiators, and we were able to achieve a good deal for Albertans, a three-year deal for Albertans. This government doesn't seem to want to follow accepted practice, which is to sit down at tables and to negotiate. This government wants to use a heavy-handed approach with far-off timelines for getting back to the table. You know, the people that they'll be dealing with are already skeptical that the government is going to deal in good faith when they finally get back to the table. This is seen as something that's in bad faith, bad-faith bargaining, Mr. Chair.

I don't think this is a little intrusion into the public sector. I think 1 in 6 workers, who will be impacted by the delay of their collective agreements not being followed through with, can rightly say that they're believing that the government is acting in bad faith. You just have to scan websites for the different bargaining units that are identified here: HSAA, AUPE, TEBA. You just have to scan those websites to see what they're saying about this government now, and none of it is flattering. None of it is believing that they have on the other side of the table a good-faith partner who will sit down with them and negotiate fairly.

They're already setting up legal information pickets at different work sites around Alberta, and those will be coming up in the next two weeks. It's a way to further inform the people who are impacted by Bill 9 on what is going to be happening and what their actions together will be with regard to this government. Mr. Chair, the numerous scheduling dates, moving them forward, is in a sense to give greater certainty, to shorten the timelines so that people around this province who are impacted by Bill 9 have less worry and less concern and less upset as a result of knowing that the government of Alberta has, essentially, ripped up contracts with them.

It's unprecedented in the last four years, Mr. Chair. This did not happen. As my friend down the way here from Edmonton-City Centre has said: the relative labour peace that was achieved was a new thing, the stability was a new thing. It was as a result of dealing with people fairly across the table, and they didn't come away from the table with massive increases. It was negotiated such that the times were very difficult. And if that is what the Finance minister is going to be saying to different labour groups when they get to the table, why doesn't he get there now? They have repeatedly said that they know what the books are like, they know what the economic conditions are like. Why don't they start talking at this point in time?

Mr. Chair, they are not talking, because, again, if you look at the websites for the different labour organizations, they're already talking about gearing up for the cuts that they believe will be coming as a result of this delay. So they've gone past the amount of time that's indicated here, and they are essentially saying that they know they're going to be at war with the government. That's not how we build a province. That's not how we build a province, on the backs of people, of workers, the workers for the government of Alberta, the workers for the agencies, boards, and commissions in Alberta, public servants in this province, who have for a long time given their everything to this province.

So I'm going to of course support the amendment. I'm going to believe that if members opposite want to assist their neighbours who are public servants around this province, that they will also support this amendment. There are a lot of public servants who work for the government of Alberta. Not all of them are covered by this Bill 9 – there are far more than that – but those public servants who aren't identified in Bill 9 are probably thinking that they're going to be dealt with in the same way, Mr. Chair, the same way that this government has shown that they are willing to deal in bad faith and rip up contracts, the same way that will get this government into deep trouble, like previous governments have been in the past with previous bills. That's not the kind of labour situation anybody needs or wants.

Mr. Chair, I'm going to sit down right now, but I do want us to support this.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to A1? I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is standing to speak.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: My apologies. I believe that I might have said A1. This is obviously A2.

Ms Sigurdson: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm happy to stand and talk about the amendment that was put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. Certainly, we know that this amendment helps to keep a tighter timeline on the arbitration, the bargaining that we know is due at this point. I think that that's a very important amendment that we should all support because it is showing, certainly, respect for the process, following the regular process, and I just want to stand in support of it.

I just want to also say that I'm not a labour lawyer, but I certainly know what fairness and justice are, and this amendment moves us closer to fairness and justice whereas the bill itself moves us further away. So I just really do support my colleague's amendment and, of course, am standing in support of it.

It's challenging for me as a member to see sort of the Minister of Finance repeatedly rise in this House and declare that it's just a delay in bargaining, you know, and it's presented extremely innocently, like: oh, it's just a delay. But even in the bill itself it implies that there is deep concern about the salaries of public servants, so it's already foreshadowing some decisions that this government is going to make. We know, and many of my colleagues have said this repeatedly, that it seems like it's important to make sure that certain segments of our population get support right away whereas others, it's not so important. Public servants are some of those ones that aren't so important to this UCP government.

On this side of the House we certainly believe that the service that public servants offer Albertans is extremely important and needs to be respected. Of course, this bad-faith bargaining bill doesn't do that, and the amendment brings it closer. You know, it makes it more fair, for sure.

We've heard over and over, too, that it's just a delay because we need to have more information. We're a new government; we need to have this panel look at the government finances and help us have direction. We know that sometime in August, mid-August perhaps, they will have their report. But, of course, the delay is October 31, 2019, so it's, like, much later than the report comes out, so somehow there's just some faulty logic, then. Like, well, how come it is so much later? Really, the government has been silent on that. They haven't told us, you know, why exactly. They certainly said that they need this report, so maybe they need a few weeks, maybe even a month to look at it, but October 31? I guess what's not said is that that will be after the federal election, and they don't want any bad news from Alberta. That's not been explicitly said, but there's been nothing said to fill that gap, and I think it's a fair question. It's a question that Albertans are asking, and certainly I'm asking that because it is strange, the delay. That's certainly a concern.

This amendment will definitely bring sort of more fairness, justice, and respect for public servants.

I mean, this bill impacts the constituents in Edmonton-Riverview, which I have the honour to represent, pretty significantly. Edmonton-Riverview is a beautiful riding in central Edmonton, and like the name says, it does sort of hug both sides of the North Saskatchewan River. The University of Alberta is situated in it, the University hospital, the J.G. O'Donoghue Building, which has many government offices in it. It's got mature neighbourhoods like Windsor Park, Belgravia, Lansdowne. These are all beautiful parts of Edmonton. And then it goes across the river to Laurier Heights, Valleyview, Crestwood, and the Valley Zoo is in my riding. So this is really central. Besides the sort of larger institutions like the University hospital, the government's offices in the J.G. O'Donoghue Building – and I understand that community social services staff work out of those buildings; Alberta Infrastructure works out of those buildings – many staff work downtown, and it's a very short commute. You can take the LRT easily from McKernan, another community. I have a lot of public servants who work in the public service in my riding. As their representative in this Assembly I certainly am proud to stand very strongly against Bill 9 and see that this amendment is a way to make it a more fair bill. I mean, I don't support the bill at all, but I know my constituents are, you know, greatly impacted by that.

Certainly, when you think of the University of Alberta hospital, who's in the University of Alberta hospital besides the patients? It's all the staff. We have nurses. Are nurses impacted by this? They absolutely are. They're represented by the United Nurses of Alberta, and there are, you know – I don't know if I'm right in saying this – maybe thousands; maybe it's hundreds. I'm not sure, but there are a significant number of nurses who work at the University hospital every day dealing with very high-stress situations, helping people in life-and-death situations. Their work is very important, and they serve Albertans.

You know, I've said this in the House before, but about a year ago I was one of those people who was supported. I had a cancer diagnosis, and at first, when I went to emergency, it was touch and go. They didn't know if I was going to live, really. It was that close. But I had so many amazing United Nurses of Alberta staff serve me and really make a difference in my life, and I am forever grateful for that because I get to stand in the House today and speak about their important work.

I think that this government is forgetting who these people are. I've really been proud of my colleagues because everybody is being reminded of who these people are. They're Albertans. I think the government and certainly the opposition somehow would like to dismiss these people as, "Oh, they're union people" or something, that that's somehow a bad thing. Well, certainly, on this side of the House we don't see it that way.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

Nurses, you know, work tirelessly to support Albertans in very difficult situations with high stress. They work shift work. Shift work can be very difficult for families and really challenging for them, but they are committed. They have chosen that path to be a nurse. But now it feels like, you know, a fundamental part about their work and their representation through the United Nurses of Alberta and the government of Alberta supporting them in their work – there seems to be a breakdown. It really saddens me to know that they're sort of first on the chopping list. They're, you know, a lower priority than other segments for this government, and I think that that's a really horrific thing because these are people who support Albertans in very difficult times. I just want to certainly thank them, from my own personal experience, and I know of thousands of other Albertans who have received caring, professional treatment from these nurses.

Also, you know, other government workers that are impacted by this are people who are represented by the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. Some time ago I myself was one of those employees. I worked in child welfare, and I worked as a front-line social worker. I did become a supervisor in the time that I was there. This was, like, I would say, the early '90s, and we all know what happened in the early '90s. That was when Ralph Klein slashed public programs by 50 per cent. That devastated the public service and made our work very, very difficult.

I just want you to know who these people are who are working in child welfare. I think that certainly a lot of the members, when they were in opposition, were very concerned about, you know, if things are being done properly. Certainly, we had the devastating case of Serenity, a very young girl who lost her life in a very tragic situation. Of course, the professionals around that case: we need to make sure that they're supported and make sure that they have good connections with supervisors and managers and make sure that proper assessments are done, all of that.

But having worked in child welfare and having dear friends that still work there, I know first-hand that several positions just stay vacant. Management doesn't hire people. They're trying to cut costs all the time. Supervisors aren't available to front-line workers when they're doing assessments. Managers aren't available. They're short-staffed. They don't have a lot of resources to offer families a lot of times. Can you imagine being a front-line caseworker and having a caseload of perhaps 30 families? That's a chronic issue working in child welfare. You know, these are multiproblem families. These are families who are very vulnerable and have significant issues. Certainly, I would say that Serenity's family would be a good example of that, and obviously we know the very tragic circumstances around that.

Having worked directly in that area, I know first-hand just the tremendous dedication, the long hours, the weekends that these staff put in to make sure that families are safe. I think we would have much more tragedy, unfortunately, if we didn't have these kinds of dedicated workers. Maybe we could have less, but this bill, again, sort of says to these people who are really – I mean, it's not a job when you work in child welfare. You know, some people say that it's just a job. It's not a job. It's a vocation; it's a dedication. Myself, when I went home at night, I had trouble sleeping sometimes. I would do the best I could, but sometimes I couldn't do everything I needed to make sure those kids and those families were safe.

It is disturbing that these are the people who are the first on the chopping block of this government. I don't know; their work doesn't seem to be honoured. I know that this amendment really helps us at least give a shorter time for us to focus on the importance of remuneration, the support for workers. You know, they have families of their own, they have lives of their own, and they need to be supported. There is tremendous service that they give, and I thank my friends regularly that still work in child welfare, that serve and go way beyond. I mean, I have a good friend who's a supervisor, and oftentimes I can't see her because she's working the weekend. She says: oh, I'm too busy; I can't make it this week. Here I am, an MLA, with kind of a busy life, too, but oftentimes it's her schedule that prevents us, and that just shows her dedication. I would say that she's not an anomaly. She's routine. Many, if not all, of the staff do that. So this is how we reward them. This is how we reward them. I'd just caution the government to, you know, really remember who it is that we're impacting by this and what the ramifications are.

Also, some of the contracts that are being delayed, the arbitration that's being delayed: it does identify that in the bill itself. The Bethany Group in Camrose is impacted by that. Of course, I know the important work of the Bethany Group because I had previously been the Minister of Seniors and Housing. They do tremendous work with people who are living in affordable housing, our lodge program.

I just want to support the members to really realize who is being impacted by this, you know, significant delay. Of course, the union representing the Bethany Group is the Health Sciences Association of Alberta. In Camrose there's the affordable housing, which is Jamieson Manor. I know that the Member for Camrose likely knows this very well. There are many lodges that the Bethany Group supports. Some members are representatives of the Autumn Glen Lodge in Innisfail, the Meadows lodge in Bashaw, the Big Knife lodge in Forestburg, Eckville Manor in Eckville, Lacombe Senior Citizens Lodge in Lacombe, Peace Hills Lodge in Wetaskiwin, Rosealta Lodge in Camrose. These are just some. This is the Bethany Group's purview. They serve many, many Albertans in central Alberta. For many members in the UCP, these are in their constituencies.

You know, I certainly have heard from people how this is negatively impacting their work, and I'm sure that the members themselves would want to hear from their constituents about what this means. These people aren't highly paid. They're working to serve vulnerable Albertans. Knowing that there is an opportunity to review their contracts – we know that the cost of living goes up generally every year – you know, it's fair for them to have an opportunity to have their salaries go up, too. This amendment really does create a bit of a tighter timeline so that the process can get going. It just shouldn't be delayed. I'd just really caution the government that they are hurting people in their own backyards. I guess that is my point here. The Bethany Group does serve a large part of central Alberta, which many representatives do have constituents in.

Just the other day I was walking in the tunnel, and I ran into someone who I've probably known for 20 years. He works for the government of Alberta. I hadn't really seen him through my whole time in government, but I just, you know, serendipitously ran into him walking in the tunnel. He said, "Oh, it's good to see you," and I said, "Likewise." We chatted for a bit, and he told me: "I've never – I've never – seen the morale so low in the public service, and I've worked here for 30 years. I've never seen it so low." So, again, members, please know what you're doing. Please know what you're doing. You are disrespecting the people who are serving you, serving all Albertans, serving Albertans in your constituencies.

And you know what? If people are stressed in their work, if people are not supported in their work, it's harder for them to do their jobs. In fact, they become less effective. Well-supported public servants: it makes a big difference. Of course, by this government deciding, you know, to say, "Well, we're going to delay this, and we're not going to open arbitration," that's a significant thing. These are things that the public servants are counting on. I mean, we all need to have support in our lives, and this is just a very clear indication from this government that these are not people that they really respect.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am pleased to rise this morning, I guess it is, in the Chamber to speak to the amendment to Bill 9 that we've been having under consideration for some time now. Many folks have spoken quite passionately about it. I wish to add my comments to the arguments made so far and express my large disappointment in this government although I'm not shocked this government has gone in the direction they have. But I certainly am disappointed that indeed they've carried through to demonstrate what I expected they would in their first acts of legislation when it came to legislating in the field of labour law here in the province.

I think, Madam Chair, that there could be no more illustrative imagery produced, that nothing would illustrate more clearly than what was demonstrated today in the Chamber or more colourfully played out in this House tonight than that action of the Premier when he demonstrated his government's attitude towards working people in Alberta by participating personally in handing out orange foam earplugs to members of his caucus so they wouldn't have to suffer the indignity of listening to opposition members and voices who dare to stand in opposition to his centrepiece bad-faith bargaining bill.

In fact, members in this House on the government side pointed gleefully to their ears to demonstrate they were still wearing their orange foam earplugs, and some are doing that right now, happily suggesting that they really have no intention of listening to the voices of those working people they're attacking with this legislation tonight and throughout this whole process of implementation of Bill 9 to basically put to rest any opposition that working people and, particularly, public servants who are under contract negotiations might wish to mount to this government's onslaught against their rights to negotiate fairly.

I have mentioned in this House before an article in the Financial Post from November 2014 by Drew Hasselback titled Supreme Court of Canada Imposes General Duty of Good Faith in Contract Performance, where it's established, in that case, the case of Bhasin versus Hrynew, that the court said that Canadian contract law comes with a duty of good faith that requires parties to perform their contractual obligations honestly and to act in good faith no matter what side of the contract you're on.

This government is certainly not living up to the dictates of that Supreme Court case, which very clearly stated the obligation of all parties to contracts in this country and, specifically, to employment contracts to live up to the terms of those contracts in good faith, to bargain in good faith. This bill, that we've dubbed the bad-faith bill, is certainly diametrically opposed to the spirit if not the letter of that Supreme Court case, which in 2014 clearly spelled out what the actions of a government must be in terms of respecting the laws that are in place and the contracts that they have in place with their public service. They have to demonstrate their good faith and their intention to deal in good faith, not to break a contract, not to deal in bad faith and disregard the clear legal descriptions placed in the law of the land by the Supreme Court of Canada. That prescription was to clearly follow the law and deal in good faith with parties to a contract. This piece of legislation is one which certainly is a clear demonstration of the government's disrespect for the Supreme Court's dictate to deal in good faith.

I know that in my working career I've been subjected to the ignominy of a party to a contract dealing in bad faith, where overnight the wages that I was paid were cut from, I think, 13 bucks an hour to nine bucks an hour because one company changed, the contract went from one company to another, and the law allowed them not to respect the contract that was in place. All the workers of that DATS bus driver system that I was a member of lost a significant amount of their paycheque overnight because labour legislation in this province allowed that contract that was in place to be disrespected. This is another example of the type of labour legislation that I've been living under all my life in the province of Alberta. I was doing my best and will continue to do my best to represent the working people and the public servants who work in my constituency to oppose these draconian measures, which are totally disrespectful of the law of this land. Notwithstanding the fact that the government can pass legislation and make it legal, it doesn't make it any more respectful of working people in this province.

It's an image that I can't get out of my mind, the Premier of this province walking around the House doling out orange earplugs so that members of his caucus won't have to listen to the opposition and, in turn, the people that they represent. I think that in all probability a gentleman named Malcolm Mayes is right now scribbling with his orange felt pen the large earplugs that the Premier was handing out in this Legislature. I can only imagine the political cartoon that he might come up with in the coming days, maybe even tomorrow, in the publications that he's a part of.

I hope that he comes up with one of his more charismatic cartoons, to really show the image that I have in mind, of our Premier reaching out to shake the hands of organized labour with a set of big, fluffy, orange earplugs stuffed into his ears, demonstrating that he's got no interest in listening to what they have to say while at the same time he's trying to do a deal with them. It's a pretty strong image in my mind, and I think that it's one that's going to stick with me if not every Albertan who happens to hear about the incident tonight where our Premier was handing out earplugs to his caucus so that they wouldn't have to listen to the opposition. Unbelievable. I couldn't believe that that was taking place, but indeed it has. It's historical, and it'll go down in the annals of our memory for a long, long time.

It reminds me of a story, and I've read this story to kids that I've visited in schools. I didn't realize that the book that I had as a child talking about Top Cat was such a serial book. This Top Cat series of books, of which I only had one, spoke about a group of stray cats who lived in a city, and they followed a leader named Top Cat. Top Cat was the leader of the band, and there were cats like Choo Choo and Benny and Fancy-Fancy. They were playing, and they were following their leader, Top Cat. They lived in the back alleys of the city, and they clanged together ashcan lids – bang – making a heck of a racket. One of the featured characters in the Top Cat book series – if you're a person of a certain age, you might recall – was Officer Dibbles, a police officer who was local to the neighbourhood. Of course, Top Cat and his gang of cats were clanging together their ashcan lids and making a heck of a racket, and Officer Dibbles said: "You can't do that anymore. You can't make that kind of noise anymore, Top Cat. You've got to get out of the alley."

The Chair: Hon. member, please sit for a minute. There is a standing order that does not allow you to bang on your desk, hon. member.

Mr. Dach: I was trying to demonstrate the clashing of the ashcans together.

The Chair: Additionally, I'm having a hard time figuring out what this wonderful Top Cat story has to do with the amendment that we're on.

Mr. Dach: It has to do, Madam Chair, if I may . . .

The Chair: I will appreciate it if you get to the point of the amendment rather quickly.

Mr. Dach: I will do so. I'll speed it up.

The Chair: Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Dach: Thank you so much. I will do my very best to do that.

Anyway, long story short, Madam Chair, to get to the point, Top Cat got kicked out of town for being too noisy, and he decided to take his gang of cats out to the countryside. They didn't like it – they got stung by bees, they got tripped up into the water, and the bull in the pasture gave them trouble – so they went back to the city. What they did when they got back to the city: they invoked Top Cat's great big idea to solve the problem. They gave Officer Dibbles a pair of earmuffs so he wouldn't have to hear the clanging of the ashcans. So that's what it was. That's what it was.

The Chair: Hon. member, back to the amendment now.

Mr. Dach: To the amendment, we're basically saying that this amendment would allow the government to take their earplugs out and listen to the people who they're negotiating with and have a little more respect for those individuals, those families that those people represent. I know what it would have been like had my father had to come home as a union carpenter . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, this is your last opportunity to speak to the relevance of this amendment that we are on.

Mr. Dach: All right. Well, I certainly thought the amendment that we're talking about, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act amendment, was going to be changing the timelines of the invocation of the effort of the government to have the blue-ribbon report heard first and then engage in arbitration later. That is what I'm getting at, that they weren't listening to individuals who were telling them: "We need to be respected. Take the earplugs out of your ears, and listen to working people, who need to end up in a position where they can trust that their government is going to respect contracts that they've entered into, that their bad-faith contracting practices cannot be accepted, that the Supreme Court dictates that as a government or as a contractor or an employer, you must respect the contracts that are agreed to by both parties. Those are the rules of this country, and indeed if you wish to engage otherwise, you're going to suffer the wrath of voting people."

But this Premier, this government, doesn't seem to care. They think that they can craft and cobble together a government, a majority in this province, repeatedly by not having to rely on the vote of organized labour. I think they do make that calculation at their own peril. In fact, I'll do my very best in my constituency to ensure that that peril exists for them for many terms to come. People in my constituency, Madam Chair, are really, really concerned that their voices are not being listened to with respect to this government and its attitude towards arbitration and when, in fact, that is going to be happening.

The ruse that this blue-ribbon panel has to meet first in order for the government to have its information all together before they can make a decision on whether there's enough in the cupboard to pay what working people have fairly negotiated: that's something that working people aren't going to accept. It indeed is something where I couldn't imagine the Premier thinking of the kids in a working person's family, in a public-sector family, when that mother or father goes back home and the child sees them and wonders: "Why are mom and dad so upset? Like, what's the problem? Why are they not happy?"

What's the conversation around the dinner table? As a parent you've got to look your child in the eye and say: "Well, the government passed a law, and it said that the agreement that they entered into – they just tore it up. Well, that's the law of the land. They can do it. They said that they were elected to do that, and that's what the government did. That's democracy, young son, young daughter. That's what they did to us. Consequently, we're not going to be able to, you know, take that weekend to see your grandparents, or we're not going to be able to perhaps have the second pair of good-quality outfits that you'd like to have, or you're not going to be able to play hockey this year because the raise that we were going to get is not going to happen. I'm sorry. We thought we were going to end up having a bit of a raise. I know that we've gone for three years, Andrew, Angela" – whatever the child's name is – "and we agreed for three years to not take any kind of a raise. In return, we thought we were getting a bit of an increase this time round, but no. The government said that they don't have to respect the law, that they can just change it, because that's democracy, that they can tear this contract up. So me and John and Pete and Mary and other people that I work with are going to get together and tell their kids the same story, that democracy in this country means that you don't have to follow the dictates of the Supreme Court."

You just go your own way because you said that you had that in your election platform, and you just rip up that contract and change the law overnight and say: too bad, so sad; this is what we're going to do.

I, for one, am at a loss to describe to anybody or anybody's kids the rationale behind a government and a Premier who would, with a straight face, be able to stand up in front of a classroom of children, maybe even children who visit this Legislature to come to the School at the Leg. for a week, and explain to them exactly what it is that is behind their thinking when they say to parents and those children: "We had a deal, but we're going to rip it up. Your parents, your mom and dad, were going to get a slight increase this year. It was going to be an arbitration that happened if we couldn't come to an agreement, but the wage clause was going to be opened up, and they could anticipate getting an increase this year after three years of taking no increase in an effort to show everything they could. They knew finances were in a bind and that other people in this province were suffering and that other workers were without work, so for three years they took zeros in negotiated increases, yet in this year of the contract, where it promised in the contract to open it up and actually perhaps negotiate an increase, no, no, that's off the table. In fact, the deal is torn up, and we don't care whether the courts suggest" – not suggest; the courts tell us – "that we have to honestly and fairly bargain. We don't care about your parents, and we particularly could care less whether the children and your brothers and sisters get a little bit less after three years of getting no increase at all."

I'd really like to see our Premier, in a classroom of grade 6ers who come to visit our Legislature, explain that one. He may have no trouble at all looking at our opposition members across the way and explaining, with a straight face, that they're out there to balance the books and that they were given that mandate to do that. But tell that to a group of grade 6ers who come and wonder why their parents don't have an opportunity to have a bit of an increase after three years of negotiated no increases. I think that might be a little bit more difficult audience for the Premier to hold sway with. I mean, you can't find a more honest audience than young people and children. I'd pay money to see that, actually – I really would – on top of a caption of Malcom Mayes showing the Premier of the province handing out earplugs or perhaps wearing a set of his own. That's an image that won't leave my mind.

I really think that the amendment that's been put forward to stifle – the initial bill to stifle the opportunity for the public-sector workers who are under these contracts, who expect to have their rights taken away, is somewhat blunted by this amendment that has been brought forward to change the timelines and allow the government to do in one way what it wanted to do, and that's basically to get beyond hearing their blue-ribbon panel.

The Chair: Hon. members, any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm rising in the House to take the opportunity to speak in favour of this amendment. By looking at this amendment – I think we couldn't do more than this. By presenting, proposing this amendment, my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning shows not only a very reasonable and common-sense amendment; she also shows the act of, you know, how positive and co-operative an opposition we are. By proposing this amendment – but it reflects, like, that we almost agree to what this government is trying to do through this bill after days of debate and just only want to make sure that we don't sit back after passing this bill. The processes still keep going. By tightening the time limit on this bill, we'll make sure that we don't forget about it.

By not showing the courage to accept this amendment, it reflects something on this government, that they're very, very committed to get through something. They had it very hidden from day one as this was not even on their election platform.

I just wanted to be brief as I know that I will probably come back to the original bill. So I just wanted to be on the record that I support this amendment, and I request each and every member of this House to show the courage, please, to vote for this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I will speak as long as I can although I have a feeling that we'll be stifled in a matter of minutes. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment, which is attempting to amend a completely flawed bill. Not just flawed, Madam Chair; this bill is a direct attack on working people. I don't believe for a moment that this is about delaying, as the government has proposed or offered as an explanation. Essentially, what this is is an excuse for the government to shirk its responsibilities of good-faith bargaining with the unions in order to allow the blue-ribbon panel to come back to say: "Yeah. You know what? We can't afford to sit down and negotiate in good faith, not to have it predetermined."

But what I find rich is that one of the first moves this government did was to introduce a 4 and a half billion dollar corporate tax cut. So there are dollars for that but not a willingness to negotiate. I'm not saying: give the 4 and a half billion dollars over to the men and women of this province. But they do deserve a government that will negotiate in good faith. This is why we have dubbed this bill the bad-faith bargaining bill. I mean, that's even a very sensitive way of framing it. It's quite unbelievable that what this bill does is attack the over 200,000 men and women that provide critical services for all Albertans.

This Premier and this government have the audacity to not just disrespect them but to not even sit down with them at the bargaining table and to bring in legislation in the dark of night. In fact, second reading started, I believe, a couple of minutes after midnight one evening. The government is passing this bill at breakneck speed, with three readings within a couple of days. You know, the Premier and others will talk about the hours of debate. I didn't realize that democracy had a time frame or a time limit on it. If you pass over a certain number of hours of debate, well, you can check the box that you've allowed members to speak.

Again, it's extremely rich considering that the Premier, when he was an opposition member in Parliament, railed against closure and time allocation as a member yet now, as Premier, has no problems using it, including a number of members – the Minister of Environment and Parks, as well, I quoted in second reading, who was, you know, quite upset at this concept of limiting debate and democracy . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, we have already debated this matter. Please move on.

Mr. Bilous: It relates to this bill as far as how quickly we are passing it.

The Chair: The debate on that motion has already been settled. It is not relatable to this bill.

Mr. Bilous: It's relatable and will be in a matter of about a minute, when we then move into third reading, which has closure on it as well.

You know, this bill is an awful piece of legislation and unnecessary, quite frankly. I mean, really, this is just an excuse to pave the way for a blue-ribbon panel to come back to government, and for the government . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Government Motion 23, agreed to on June 19, 2019, I must now put every question necessary for the disposal of Bill 9 at this stage.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 9

Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance is rising on debate.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise tonight to move third reading of Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act.

The intent of Bill 9 is to simply postpone wage reopener arbitration hearings until October 31, 2019. It will temporarily delay hearings for 24 public-sector collective agreements. I've said this before and I'll say it again: this is not a cancellation of arbitration hearings, nor is it about wages. This is a procedural delay, full stop. It's a four-month postponement of the process. This bill and any regulations that might need to be created would not determine wages.

The proof is in the bill's heavily discussed preamble. Yes, the preamble talks about balancing the budget, but it also talks about providing high-quality front-line services for Albertans, and it talks about significant changes that have happened in Alberta's economy. Mr. Speaker, it talks about the time that we need, time to gather information about Alberta's economy both from the MacKinnon panel and from other information sources. The intent of Bill 9 is described in the whole preamble, not just the parts that some in this House like to talk about.

Mr. Speaker, there's no denying that Alberta's public sector does important work. We have great respect for what they do for Albertans every day. They need to know that we are not denying their right to arbitration, just postponing the process temporarily for four months. We need more time to consider Alberta's economic situation. That's really what we're looking for here. It would be fiscally irresponsible if we proceeded with arbitrations without making an informed decision. It's not a fair process when one side doesn't have all the information they need. And it would be unfair and, frankly, disrespectful to Albertans if we represented their interest without having examined the province's economic situation first.

Putting forward this legislation was not a step we took lightly. But we urgently needed more time: more time to understand the impacts of our rapidly changing economic situation, more time to receive and review the MacKinnon panel's recommendation, and more time to plan our path forward.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleagues in this House who are supporting fiscal responsibility and informed decision-making through their support of the bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone else wishing to speak to third reading of Bill 9 this evening? The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will rise to speak to this bill at this late or early hour. Unfortunately, this will be my last opportunity to speak to this bill. I know that that disappoints most members in this Assembly.

It's frustrating when, you know, members of the opposition especially but all members have such limited time to debate a bill but also limited time to go out and consult. I mean, this is one of the main points that the opposition, the current government but when they were in opposition, made as far as trying to send most if not all bills that our government put forward to a committee. Their argument was that they needed time to go out and consult with Albertans, consult with their constituents.

What's interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill was introduced, I believe, on Monday. It feels like this is a three-day bill. Now, I recognize the fact that there have been unique circumstances in the history of this province and of this place, where there, I believe, are four bills in the history of the Alberta Legislature that were passed, all three readings unanimously, in one day. That required unanimous consent of the House. In fact, the last bill was the recognition of the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day that our government brought forward and with unanimous consent of all opposition parties passed all three readings in one day. I believe the bill previous to that was one brought in by the hon. Gene Zwozdesky when he was minister, which recognized the Holodomor, or the death by starvation that happened to millions of Ukrainians under the Stalinist regime. So there have been a couple of different bills that have passed, but, again, those required unanimous consent.

I can tell you that this current government knew that the opposition would not give unanimous consent to attack working people. Because of their agenda, which I'll speak about shortly – because I think it's important that Albertans and even the members of government, the government backbench, are aware of the real reason that the government is pushing this through at breakneck speeds. You know, I mean, if this was just a matter, as the Minister of Finance says, of delaying negotiations until we get a better picture of Alberta's finances – although that's quite rich considering this government was very, very quick to introduce a 4 and a half billion dollar corporate tax cut. You'd think that may have a little bit of an impact on the bottom line of the balance sheet.

But, regardless, it's convenient that as we speak, there are three different public-sector unions that have been negotiating with the government, and I believe that they will go into binding arbitration if this bill is not passed and proclaimed by this weekend. What's interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that the reason for this breakneck speed isn't just to delay talks; it's to ensure that the government won't be going into binding arbitration with these three different unions. Of course, the reason for binding arbitration is to ensure that there is an agreement reached and a fair agreement for both sides.

Really, this is an attack not just on those unions but on, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, working people. For me it's frustrating to have our time of debate in this House limited. If I'm not mistaken, we have less than two hours to speak to this bill. We had six hours in committee. Despite the fact that the Government House Leader claims that there wasn't closure brought in on second reading, there wasn't time allocation brought in but there was closure. By moving the previous question, it ensured that the opposition couldn't make any amendments, either a referral or a reasoned amendment, to ensure that members, all members, have an opportunity, an ample opportunity, to speak to this. For me the frustration is that second reading started a little after midnight and, once again, we're now in third reading at 2:25 in the morning, when most Albertans are sleeping, and the government is trying to pass this as quickly as possible.

Now, I appreciate that our government did in one bill bring in motions for closure, which I'm sure the Government House Leader will be very quick to point out, which I do recognize. However, we did not pass or attempt to pass the bill in three days' time. What it does is that it basically handcuffs and inhibits private members', including the opposition's, especially the opposition's, ability to go out and talk to Albertans about it to ensure that there aren't unintended consequences.

Again, the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board talks about how this merely just delays arbitration and does not dictate an outcome. I would contest that if that was the case, then the one section, section 5(c), shouldn't be in this bill, which allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council, cabinet, to make regulations "respecting any other matter that the [cabinet] considers necessary or advisable for carrying out the intent of this Act." You know what that does, Mr. Speaker? To put it into plain language, that gives the Premier and Executive Council the ability to not just impose contracts on public-sector workers; they can also impose rollbacks on public-sector workers. That is a direct attack on working people and the people who provide incredibly important services to all Albertans.

Now, I respect the fact that maybe the intent of the government is wanting to look at ways to be a little more cost-efficient or cost-conscious when they're looking at the global budget. But, again, you can't have one action where you race out and give up 4 and a half billion dollars of your budget for one sector or group, yet on the other hand tell another that you're absolutely hitting the brakes. I mean, the reality is – and the Minister of Finance and the Premier will know – that when we sat down to negotiate with the public sector, that was on a bunch of contracts that came up at the depths of the recession, and in good faith our government sat down with them, and they agreed to for the most part taking zero per cent increases.

But the point of this, Mr. Speaker, is that it was agreed to. It wasn't legislated. It wasn't shoved down their throats. It wasn't imposed on them. It was done through good faith and through bargaining and through sitting down with them. This government clearly has little respect for our public sector. For me it's quite frustrating. Then to rub salt into a wound, stifling debate and invoking closure at every stage of this bill, quite frankly, is undemocratic.

I want to read to you, Mr. Speaker, a few quotes from – now, let's see here. I believe it is the Premier who said this in his role in the federal House of Commons. On December 8, 1998, he had said:

The minister said that this bill respects the finest traditions of the parliamentary system. If that is the case, then why did he cut short democracy? Why did he cut short democratic deliberation when it came to this bill?

On the same day, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed said:

The government announced its intention to invoke time allocation on both the report stage and third reading only two hours into the debate. I must say that while I commend the minister for the work that he, his officials and his parliamentary secretary have put into this bill, I think it is disappointing, to say the least, that the government has, in passing such a critically important piece of legislation, so carelessly and callously disregarded the best traditions of democratic deliberation in this place.

Again on May 27, 1998, Mr. Speaker, the Premier had said in his former role:

I begin by condemning this government for allowing itself to trample on democracy and democratic deliberation by invoking closure and time allocation on [at that time] Bill C-36.

Mr. Speaker, on November 2, 1999, the Premier said:

Mr. Speaker, there we have it. They always blame it on the rules, but when it comes to an option to expand debate and to listen to the diverse voices of a pluralistic society, government members say no, no, no every time.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good one. I can't believe this wasn't ruled unparliamentary. Back on November 2 as well the Premier in his former role as a Member of Parliament said:

Mr. Speaker, I would not deign to suggest that member is a thief. He voted with his colleagues to take from me the right to speak on that bill by limiting debate through time allocation.

2:30

An Hon. Member: It seems relevant.

Mr. Bilous: It seems relevant. It seems a little rich that when the shoe is on the other foot, Mr. Speaker, at that point it's an affront to the democratic right of members, but when the Member for Calgary-Lougheed has the privilege of being in the Premier's chair, well, I guess those rules don't quite apply. There are words for that.

This is quite interesting. My list of excerpts of the hon. Premier is not ending at all. We have . . . [interjection] I'm sure that the Member for Calgary-Hays is very interested to hear me quote his leader. From May 25, 1998:

It is regretful, and I say this as a new member, that the government has failed to restrain its excessive use of what really should be a very rare lever to limit debate in this place.

Now, that's the Premier. I mean, my goodness.

Let's get on to the Minister of Environment and Parks when he was an opposition member. Back on December 9, 2015, the now Minister of Environment and Parks, the Member for Rimbeey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre:

Now, Madam Speaker, as you no doubt know, the government chooses not to speak to their bills. That's unfortunate. I can see why they would want to end debate and go home, but the people that sent me here and have sent my colleagues in the Official Opposition party as well as the third party and independent colleagues in this Assembly, our constituents, have made it clear that they want us to speak to this bill. They want us to debate this bill because it affects their lives.

I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that there are over 200,000 men and women whose lives are being affected by this piece of legislation about which clearly, by the actions of this Premier and government, they don't care.

The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat was quite articulate when he said on December 9, 2015:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP is pulling every trick out of their book to ram through legislation that farmers and ranchers are simply asking to be consulted on . . .

Probably, similarly, the men and women whom this piece of legislation is going to impact would like to be consulted. That was my own addition for Hansard.

. . . tricks that the NDP once railed against. Once upon a time the Government House Leader said that, quote, this time allocation thing is a way for the government to short-circuit democracy. Premier, we've seen consultation ignored, debate muzzled, and now democracy subverted. Is there any principle you won't sacrifice to ram through your agenda?

Well, that's interesting, Mr. Speaker. I wonder how the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat feels today about what his government and his Premier are doing.

Mr. Speaker, it's insulting. It's insulting to millions of Albertans, who elected all of us to this place to speak on their behalf, to have that debate stifled, to have closure invoked on our right. Quite frankly, it's not just the act of time allocation but the speed at which this bill is going through. In fact, if the shoe was on the other foot, I'm sure the former Wildrose Party would have spared no expense to put on a massive advertising campaign.

In fact, I think the last time that we did invoke closure was during Bill 6, and we know that there were thousands of people that came down to the Alberta Legislature. With that bill, despite the fact that there was closure, there was much more time for the members to go out and talk to their constituents. In three days' time, Mr. Speaker, it is extremely limiting for us to be able to engage members. The other thing is that I'm not sure what time we would be engaging our constituents, considering that we are spending, you know, copious amounts of time in this place.

Mr. Speaker, I think the government still has an opportunity to do the right thing and vote down this bill, to sit down with our public-sector unions, that provide such critically important services to this province, and show them, through actions, that they respect the work they do. I find it insulting and, I think, so do many of the spokespeople for labour. When the Minister of Finance stands up and says, "We respect the work that they've done; we appreciate it," well, you sure have a funny way of showing it, Minister. For me, my understanding of respect would be to sit down with them and to bargain in good faith, not to pull these types of heavy-handed moves. I wanted to say "shenanigans," but that almost makes light of it.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of issues that we have in this bill. Again, we know that it's affecting 24 different collective agreements and will impact a number of different folks. To contrast, what our government did for years in this province – there wasn't any labour unrest. In fact, again, as I had mentioned, we were able to sit down in good faith with teachers, with nurses, with support staff to ask and negotiate and came to – I mean, obviously, those folks are very, very understanding. Teachers took zeros three years in a row and did that with the thought and hope that the future round of negotiations, as the economy started to improve, would at least mean that the government would have the courage to sit down with them and bargain. If you ask me, it is a cowardly act to ram through legislation which strips the rights of working people in this province.

You know, Mr. Speaker, for the past four years we've listened to a number of members who now sit in the government caucus talk about their disdain for unions, their attack on the very value and purpose that unions serve, which, of course, is to ensure that their members are represented with a collective voice, which is much stronger than coming back as individuals.

Quite honestly, I lost my train of thought right there, Mr. Speaker. These things happen at this time of day although I'm sure one of my colleagues can help me get back my train of thought here.

Mr. Dach: Talk about the children.

Ms Phillips: Is there a Top Cat in this story?

Mr. Bilous: I don't think I could discuss or retell that story that the Member for Edmonton-McClung so eloquently shared with all members of the Assembly.

Again, I just want to draw attention – I'm sure my time is coming to a close – to that section of the bill which does much more than what the Finance minister is sharing with this House, saying that this merely delays negotiations with the public sector. Again, that's section 5(c), which likely will be unconstitutional, Mr. Speaker. What this government is doing under a guise of, "We need to look at our numbers": again, if that was the case, why doesn't that apply to the 4 and a half billion dollar corporate tax cut that you folks so quickly pushed through? You can't have it both ways.

So I call on all members to oppose this bill.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone else wishing to speak in debate? I see the hon. Government House Leader has risen.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise under 29(2)(a) – no, on the main bill itself. I forgot that the hon. Opposition House Leader does not have 29(2)(a), so I will take this opportunity to respond to a couple of the comments that he had made. It appears that we're now debating closure. I'm unaware of a closure motion at the moment on third reading of Bill 9, but I guess that's where we're at now, so we could spend maybe the next few hours discussing a hypothetical closure motion.

The hon. Opposition House Leader spent some time talking about the fact that he believes that when he was in government, just a few short weeks ago and over the last four years, they only used time allocation once. I hate to be the one to have to inform him of this, but he is wrong about that. Interestingly enough, the last time that the last NDP government used the time allocation motion, it was to force a vote on the Alberta Election Commissioner being put into place.

I know that my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays is laughing because he remembers that debate, which got quite heated in this place. He talks about what was an issue where there were certainly some concerns that were being raised by the then opposition of the day in regard to that appointment. We felt that it was important for us to be able to spend some time debating that issue and having a conversation about whether or not that was the right direction for the Legislature to go. Interestingly enough, because of that, the government at the time decided to bring in time allocation after six hours.

Now, the hon. Member for – at the time she had the pleasure of being the Deputy Government House Leader, and I believe the hon.

member's riding changed, so I'm just checking, Mr. Speaker – Calgary-Mountain View, who was then the Justice minister and Deputy Government House Leader, said: "We began debating the motion [yesterday]. It has been debated multiple times, for a total of about six hours." She then proceeded to move a time allocation motion for one hour, so seven hours on just that. There are several – several – examples of the NDP, when they were in government, moving time allocation. It's happened before. Now, I personally think that it should be used sparingly by a government.

I always appreciate when the hon. Opposition House Leader is quoting me. I do appreciate that he takes time to read my comments in Hansard. I knew somebody was.

Mr. Bilous: Over and over.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah. But the reality is that those comments were made about a piece of legislation that we felt was important to us when we were in opposition, and I respect that the Opposition House Leader feels that this is an important issue for him to be able to speak about. I think, though, Mr. Speaker, that it's important that we're clear, again, though, that there's been lots of opportunity provided to the opposition, and there will continue to be more opportunity for the opposition.

We started on this legislation, Mr. Speaker, last week, not this week. The opposition continues to say that this bill was brought in on Monday. It was not. It was brought in on Thursday of last week. We were in this Legislature until about 3 o'clock a.m. on Monday night. We were in the Legislature last night till about 2:30, accommodating the opposition, again to give them as much opportunity for them to be able to spend some time on this legislation. And now here we are again, at a quarter to 3, still working on this legislation on behalf of the people of Alberta. I thank the opposition for participating in that process. I hope that they continue to do it. But I still remain concerned that the majority of the time that the opposition are speaking about Bill 9, a bill that they continue to indicate that they're concerned about, they're actually not speaking about Bill 9.

I think that's what brings us to the point that we are at in the Chamber today, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that you saw it right now with the Official Opposition House Leader, who just rose and spent his entire 20-minute speech, in response to the hon. Finance minister, talking about a closure motion that has not even been moved, not about this legislation that he's indicated that he is here to argue about. You know, I think that's the point. We're at a point now where it's been pretty clear that the opposition is going to continue to delay the progress of the House. There's nothing wrong with the opposition standing and fighting on a bill that they think is important to them. That's their job. I respect that. We're going out of our way to make sure that can happen. We're calling legislation late at night to give them an opportunity to do it. [interjections] They laugh, but they've been given ample opportunities. Again, we're sitting round the clock for the people of Alberta to give the opposition the opportunity to be able to talk about these motions that are important to them.

I just want to talk about my friend the former Government House Leader, now retired, Brian Mason, a good friend to many across the aisle, I am sure, a friend to many of us over here, and think about some of the talks that he would bring when he was bringing in time allocation. He says one quote, and this is what I like: "I've been in opposition, and I know the game. They try to slow things down so that government has to invoke closure and then they point to the government and say: look, the government is being very undemocratic, and they don't want to debate."

That was a pretty good one, Mr. Speaker. I would submit to you and through you to the Chamber that we've seen that the last few days, again, not wanting to debate the bill but wanting to speak about closure so that they can now turn the debate about the hon. Finance minister's bill into a conversation about whether or not we're being democratic and stifling their debate. Brian Mason, December 8, 2015: The people of Alberta expect us to be here and do our job and get the business of the House done. I know the Opposition House Leader was probably in the House when his House leader was saying that the people of Alberta expect us to be here and do our job and get the business of the House done.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Alberta do expect us to be here, and they do expect us to get our job done when we come to this Chamber. The reason I bring that up is the other point the Opposition House Leader raised in his comment was to complain that we are here late at night. Now, we come to this Chamber to do work. This Chamber sits long hours. It's an important part of the process. I do appreciate that the Opposition House Leader lives here in Edmonton, so he may be less dedicated to wanting to stay here at night as some of us who are far away from home right now.

I said last time, when this conversation was taking place in the 24-hour sitting, to the media that I was 300 kilometres away from my family here and all I had was an empty motel waiting for me, Mr. Speaker. Maybe that's why I'm more eager to work late into the night on behalf of my constituents when I'm in Edmonton. I appreciate that, but they . . . I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West is chiming in and heckling. It's been a while since she's heckled me. It's great to see her back in the House, and I look forward to seeing her comments. Mr. Speaker . . .

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Environment and Parks referred to a member being absent at a certain point in time and needs to apologize and withdraw.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, that's ridiculous. I did not refer to a member being absent from the House. I referred to a member being in the House. This is probably what happens as you get late into debate. I clearly said it was great to see the member back in the House. Mr. Speaker, it's great to see you back in the House. It's great to see the Premier back in the House. It's great to see the Official Opposition House Leader back in the House. It's great to see all the members back inside the House. This is not a point of order.

The Speaker: I would say, while I agree it's not a point of order to refer to people being in the House, the challenge is that we are doing indirectly what we can't do directly. I would caution the hon. member, but this point of order is not well taken.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I assure that it was not my intent. I am happy to see the member back in the House. Congratulations on returning to the House.

Now, we are back to what we were talking about, which is, again, the fact that we're on Bill 9. We are in third reading. The Official Opposition indicates that this is an important piece of legislation to them, that they want to continue to do that, and the government is going to continue to provide them that opportunity. I look forward to hearing the comments from the hon. members in the opposition party as they debate this legislation. I hope, Mr. Speaker, as we go through third reading of Bill 9, that the opposition will actually begin to start to talk about the bill.

But, I will submit to you, Mr. Speaker, as I get ready to yield the floor, that as long as they continue this behaviour and wanting to talk about closure and not about the legislation, they prove my point, which is, as the former House leader Brian Mason always said, and I'm going to close with this one because I heard him say this many times when he did time allocation. I already said it once, but I just like it: "I've been in opposition, and I know the game. They try to slow things down so that the government has to invoke closure, and then they point to the government and say: look, the government is being very undemocratic, and they don't want to debate." Brian Mason, December 8, 2015, while invoking time allocation on Bill 6, the agriculture safety bill.

Mr. Speaker, you see that already again tonight from the Official Opposition House Leader. I suspect you'll see it again throughout the remainder of the morning because it appears the opposition doesn't want to debate this bill. They just want to debate whether or not the government is being democratic or not. I assure you we'll continue to provide the opposition as much time as possible, but we will not stifle the progress of legislation through this House because on April 16 Albertans voted in record numbers to give us instructions on what to do when we come here. We will do the job that we've been sent here to do despite the opposition trying to block the progress that Albertans have asked for.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for a brief question or comment. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-South has risen.

Mr. Dang: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is always a pleasure to rise in this House and respond with some brief comments for the hon. Minister of Environment and Parks here. I think it is actually somewhat rich that he would enter this Assembly and speak at length about how their government is doing nothing wrong and that this is business as usual, when we can see very clearly the clock has almost struck 3 a.m. here in the Assembly. This government is clearly trying to ram through this legislation in the cover of darkness.

Really, it's a bill that should have deserved more daylight. It's a bill that workers should have had the opportunity to examine, our constituents should have had the opportunity to examine, and all members of this Assembly should have had more time to examine. But really the hon. Government House Leader there clearly does not agree that Albertans and democracy deserve a chance in this Assembly. He clearly does not agree that democracy includes free and open debate in this Assembly because it appears that they think that 3 a.m. is an appropriate time that we can demonstrate to Albertans what is happening here in this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it is really rich when the Government House Leader tries to quote previous instances of time allocation being used. This is really unprecedented. We have spent basically three days debating this bill. I admit we have spent quite a bit of time over these three days on this bill, but by and large it has been under the cover of darkness. Nearly every night this week we have been here till 3 or past 3 a.m. The reality of it is that it's because this government is too embarrassed to do this during the daytime. They don't want Albertans to be able to see what is happening. That's why the Government House Leader won't put this up during the days. I believe he is trying to do this to avoid having Albertans see what is going on in this bill, workers see what is going on, and that is something that he should be ashamed of and I think the government should be ashamed of and every single member of the government bench should be ashamed of, front and back.

I think it's also very clearly something that if they knew that they were going to be breaking the law, which I think they did with this bill, they wouldn't want Albertans to see what was happening, and that's why they would use this veil of darkness. Only by moonlight are we having the opportunity to debate this here, Mr. Speaker, and that's something that is a real shame.

It's a real shame that even with this unprecedented cover of darkness and restriction on the ability for us to debate, members like the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland would actually put in bright orange earplugs given to him by the hon. Premier. That is something that is absolutely shocking and unprecedented here in this Assembly, to be so disrespectful to other members who were duly elected here to this Assembly and not just to these members but also to all of the constituents of every single person who represents a seat in this Assembly. It is something that is absolutely an offence to this Assembly, and every single member should take offence. It is something that shows contempt towards the Assembly. It's something that shows that the proceedings of this House are not important enough. It is something that shows that the proceedings of this House should be tuned out, and it shows very clearly that the member cares not for the process of democracy.

That is something that is shameful, and it should be embarrassing, and the member should actually apologize for that not just to this House or to Albertans but really to his own constituents, for not doing his job in this Assembly and listening to Albertans and listening to the voices that Albertans sent here. That is what we were elected to do, Mr. Speaker, to debate in this House. But when the Premier decides to act in basically blatant disregard for the procedures and practices of this House, that is something that all Albertans should be concerned about. That is something I believe all Albertans are concerned about.

We will see, Mr. Speaker, when the sun rises and when Albertans discover that the Premier really has no regard for the rights of workers and has so little regard, in fact, that he doesn't want us to debate it during the daytime, and during the nighttime when it is debated, he would rather put in earplugs than actually listen to the debate in this Assembly. I think that is something that all Albertans will be offended by. I think that is something that all Albertans will understand is not what is expected of government, is not what is expected of their legislators, and is certainly not what they elected MLAs to do here tonight. Mr. Speaker, I am offended, and I think you should be as well. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Dang: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Point of order?

Mr. Dang: I believe the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland was actually just recording me on his cellphone.

The Speaker: A point of order has been called. It appears that the hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland would like to speak to the point of order.

Point of Order Use of Electronic Devices in the Chamber

Mr. Getson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard a lot of noise this evening and all the concerns about hearing loss. Obviously, the hon. members here are well aware of occupational health and safety records because they are completely tied in with the working communities. Noise-induced hearing loss is no laughing matter, nor is tinnitus. I've been recording the decibel readings of these individuals to my left, which have peaked out at over 97 to 100 decibel readings, and 85 decibel readings equates to what could be sustained as noise-induced hearing loss. The hon. Member for Edmonton-South has a very loud, boisterous voice. I have tinnitus in my left ear and, as such, had to plug out some of the noise lest all of their arguments fall upon deaf ears in this Chamber entirely. One of the members had checked earlier in the day to verify that I'm actually recording the noise in this Chamber coming from the hon. member to my left.

Mr. Dang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege.

The Speaker: Keeping in mind that a point of privilege is a serious matter, I'm happy to hear the hon. member's concerns.

Privilege

Use of Electronic Devices in the Chamber

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is very clearly established in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice as well as Beauchesne's that the practice of recording a member in the Assembly is a breach of the privilege of the Assembly. The Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland has actually just admitted to this Assembly in his remarks regarding the point of order that he was indeed recording the noise levels in this Assembly, his own words, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I would assure you that I did indeed, and other members here did indeed, hear the words that he said he was recording this Assembly. That is a very serious breach of privilege of the Assembly. I believe that he should immediately delete such a recording, and he should be held in contempt of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation is rising to speak to the point of privilege.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me say that I was listening to the exchange just now. While I acknowledge that the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland mentioned the word "recording," I think it's fairly obvious to me and everybody else in the House that the word he probably should have used was "measuring," which is not the same thing and is certainly not a breach of privilege. I appreciate that the word he used was "recording." I heard it. I'm sure that Hansard will say that, but I think it's pretty obvious to all of us that he used the wrong word, and the right word he probably should have used, which is not a breach of privilege, is he was "measuring." As such, I don't think it meets the standard for the very serious accusation that's being made by the member from the opposite side.

The Speaker: The Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, if he wishes to provide some comment.

Mr. Getson: Yes, sir. I used the wrong word. It's a measuring device, an application for reading, not recording of either video or audio. It's simply taking a reading. The hon. member has obviously corrected my error in word usage at this early hour.

The Speaker: Are there others wishing to speak to the point of privilege? Seeing and hearing none, I would agree that this particular situation is not a point of privilege. While it may be unconventional to measure the level of debate inside the Chamber with respect to technologies that are available and/or not, there is no record of the information that has been shared or said. There is no ability for the member to then share that outside of the Chamber should he ever choose to do so. It's very, very clear that this is not a point of privilege. I consider the matter concluded, and we are continuing.

3:00

Speaker's Ruling

Referring to an Absent Member

The Speaker: The other thing, though, that I will add is that even the chair from time to time can make an error. When he or she does that, we should recognize and acknowledge that. Moments ago the Opposition House Leader raised a point of order with respect to the member, essentially referring to the fact that a member had not been present at some point in time by referring to their presence. In Beauchesne's 481(c) it is very clear, so apologies from the chair to the members, that referring to the "presence or absence" of a specific member. As such, very clearly, the member referred to the presence.

I see the hon. Transportation minister rising. He must be rising to withdraw and apologize on behalf of the Government House Leader.

Mr. McIver: It's like you can read my mind, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Government House Leader I would like to rise, apologize for, and withdraw the remarks about the presence of a member in the House.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Debate Continued

The Speaker: We are on debate of third reading of Bill 9, and I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West has risen.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining bill. I will say that I can understand that some hon. members don't want to hear the opposition speak, but I will say that I will exercise my rights and privilege to speak in this place. I will not be measured on what kind of decibels I may or may not use, and I will seek permission from no man to talk in whatever tones that women speak in. I am here to speak to Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining bill. I will not be tone-policed while I do it, hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland. This bill will define labour relations for at least the next three years.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been called. The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Point of Order

Addressing the Chair

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we just heard an example of the hon. member referring to my colleague from Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland in the second person as opposed to the third person, and I would ask you to insist that the hon. member address her remarks through the Speaker and not directly to another member of the House.

The Speaker: I would agree with the hon. Minister of Transportation that the member should be referring their comments through the chair, and I would encourage her to do so.

Debate Continued

Ms Phillips: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will rephrase and say that I will not be tone-policed by any member of this House, including the previous member or the Minister of Transportation, for that matter.

Now, this bill will define labour relations, Mr. Speaker, for at least the next three years or at least until the courts do the inevitable, which is strike it down. Let's talk about the mechanisms enabled in the law. It allows the government to delay arbitration in approximately 24 collective agreements covering approximately 180,000 people who work for the broadly conceived public sector. It covers the direct Alberta public service. It covers those who work for Alberta Health Services, many postsecondary institutions, educational institutions, schools, school boards, and others. This bill sets the stage for broad rollbacks of wages in the order of 5 per cent, 10 per cent – who knows? It will reduce pay for nurses, teachers, corrections officers, custodians, educational assistants, social workers, counsellors.

These are human beings, Mr. Speaker. They are Albertans. They built this province with us. They are our neighbours. They are our caregivers. They are the people who protect our air, land, and water. They keep us safe. They guard our prisons and put out our fires. They teach our kids. They are every single one of us, and, yes, they are our brothers and sisters; at least, they're mine. This is the first step away from collective bargaining in good faith, a basic human right affirmed by the courts and a fundamental pillar in the rule of law in a country such as Canada. The government must rethink the use of this legislation. They have so far failed to take our advice and scrap this legislation, this hammer, this affront to democracy and the rule of law, but they could still. They could still hold off on interfering in the normal course of bargaining for the arbitration decisions that are to take place as early as this Saturday.

Let's talk about this assertion, that I and others have made in this House, that it is unconstitutional. This bill, on the face of it, is unconstitutional. Why is it? This is an important point. Let's start with the facts. Of course, it's important to talk about values and fairness, working people trying to pay their bills, but what I want to focus on first are the underlying facts of the assertion.

I still believe in facts, Mr. Speaker. I still believe in reason that guides human progress. I still believe that some things are objectively true. Perhaps in 2019 that's a naive belief on my part as we see an unprecedented, in the postwar period, assault on the institutions that underpin our politics, our economy, and our society, but the foundation of the law around collective bargaining remains. That foundation is good faith. It lies at the heart of private contracts as well. Colloquially, this concept might be just characterized very simply as: you're going to do what you say that you're going to do, and if you didn't actually enumerate it within the contract, then you can trust that the other party will act reasonably, tell the truth, exercise restraint in any power that they may have within the terms of the contract or in negotiating new terms outside of an existing contract.

The collective bargaining right also has a different element to it. It's not just good faith, like it is in private-sector contracts. It's also protected under the Charter in a different way. Under section 2 of the Charter we are guaranteed rights to free association, which is to say that we are able, Mr. Speaker, to choose our friends, faith, bowling league. The state may not, within the obvious reasonable limits in terms of hate speech and other specifically enumerated limits under section 1, choose who my friends are, who I talk to, who I hang out with, who I make agreements with, who I make plans with, who I help, who I donate money to.

Similarly, the state may not interfere in my right to get together with my co-workers to talk to the employer about my wages or my working conditions. This has been upheld by successive Supreme Court decisions. The state may not compromise my individual liberty in this regard, my liberty to freely associate. The state may want to. Government people or others or their associated sock puppets may want to call people names for freely associating in a collective bargaining relationship. They may want to cast aspersions on the democratically elected leadership of whatever group people form to talk to their employer. They have freedom of speech rights to do so. They may say what they want. They have a free speech right, Mr. Speaker – anyone does – to be dismissive, to be arrogant, rude, obstinate, or mean to custodians, to educational assistants, to orderlies, or to anyone else who works hard for an honest day's pay. They have that right. But what they may not do is get in the way of the process of freely associating with one another and then bargaining in good faith.

Now, Conservatives do have the right to say mean things about front-line workers. They do it all the time. They exercise those rights as often, as loudly as they can, and that is fine. That is their right. But despite all that noise, the law of this land is that we must have the ability to get together with our co-workers and hammer out the details of our wages and working conditions.

What's more, section 2(d) of the Charter also guarantees us the right to a process when we get together with our co-workers, and if we are not allowed or able, reasonably able, to withdraw our labour as part of that process, the Supreme Court affirmed in the Sask Fed of Labour decision – I believe it was 2016 – that the right of association is actually relatively meaningless without the process that can ultimately end in the withdrawal of labour. That was the decision rendered by the Supreme Court a couple of years ago.

The courts have found that these rights to free association, to collective bargaining are not just carte blanche, but they have to be real. They have to be substantive, and any impediments to them have to be proportionate, have to be last resort, have to be justified. A number of tests have been developed in the jurisprudence on this over the years. In fact, what they can't do is to have an ulterior motive. This is what the courts have found. In fact, when the B.C. Supreme Court struck down a law very similar to this one – there were, in fact, two of them that were struck down by the B.C. Supreme Court – it was appealed and then appealed again at the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court upheld the original decision, which found that the state used its power to provoke labour action, that it passed those laws for reasons other than being proportionate or a justified last resort.

So what does this mean for the arbitration process? In this case it means that collective agreements have come to their wage reopener phase. The two parties are negotiating, but the negotiations have come to this phase of arbitration. Attempts at mediation have thus far stalled. Parties have a right to a meaningful continuation of that process but not to an outcome. Parties do not have any right to a wage increase. Employers don't have a right to a rollback. The parties must come and negotiate and bring their respective positions. If they cannot come to agreement, then they have a right to go to an arbitrator and make that case, Mr. Speaker.

But in this case we are frustrating that due process right by the long arm of the law and the long arm of government, where this government has not demonstrated the urgency, or they have not demonstrated that they are at the end of some kind of long, protracted exercise. This is, you know, barely a couple of months in. And the claim that this interference in the normal course of collective bargaining is based on fiscal urgency is rather hollow given the fact that fiscal concerns can be and are always part of the negotiation process and the arbitrator's decisions, Mr. Speaker.

You know, it's shocking to me that that piece isn't fully understood by the Minister of Finance, clearly, or officials within the Premier's office. It portrays to me that either they don't know how to negotiate and how to go in there and make a deal – so much for, you know, some of the members' enthusiastic support of the great deal-maker to the south – don't know how to negotiate, maybe. Maybe they don't understand how to do negotiations. Maybe they don't trust their own negotiators on the government side. It's possible. Maybe they don't trust the officials giving them advice.

Or maybe the goal isn't this at all. Maybe the goal is in fact to create disorder among organized labour in order to find an enemy, build a political case for wage rollbacks, and set up a narrative of the undeserving union member versus the rest of Albertans to divide us from one another; from our neighbours; from the people who protect our air, land, and water; from the educational assistants in my and many of my hon. colleagues' kids' classrooms. Maybe the ultimate aim here, as we frustrate the good-faith process that is based on the rule of law, maybe the ultimate game here is to play politics with teachers, with public safety, with corrections officers, with orderlies, with lab techs. all of those people that we rely on every day to keep us safe, to keep us healthy, to keep us educated, to keep us cared for, Mr. Speaker.

Now, every once in a while – perhaps it's the late hour – the government side betrays a fit of transparency. Instead of saying, "Oh, no, we need time to assess the fiscal situation," which I have already described as extremely thin gruel and not really a reason, Mr. Speaker, every once in a while we get a fit of transparency and, you know, comments that may in fact end up in the courts at some point, which is that folks have said: well, this is about balancing the budget. In other words, what we have from the government side is already an admission that this is about rollbacks. They have already taken a bargaining position in this House, and they are betraying the fact that they are getting in the way of the rule of law in order to push a specific outcome.

This is not about taking several months to understand revenue projections, which should take a few minutes. It's not about that. This is about, certainly, balancing the budget. I can imagine that there are, in fact, challenges with a path to balance when you blow a 4 and a half billion dollar hole on the revenue side in that budget. It becomes awfully tough to balance things. For sure, that balance is going to have to come from the wage bill for nurses, teachers, health care workers, educational assistants, caregivers for seniors, and others, Mr. Speaker. What we have here is a very, very transparent admission, in actual fact, at the late hour during Committee of the Whole, that this isn't at all about waiting to understand the finances better or to get a hold of the projections. No, it's about, quote, unquote, balancing the budget, which, as I said, is a direct interference in the normal course of bargaining and is, due to how labour relations work, in actual fact unlawful.

That brings me to my final point. This bill is not being brought in for the reasons that the government claims. This bill is being brought in for political, not economic reasons. This bill is being brought in to set up a narrative between teachers, nurses, caregivers, and others and other people in Alberta. It is being brought in as a tactic, as a way to cast working people as the enemy of this government and Albertans, and they are not my enemy, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the Minister of Transportation has risen.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I tried to listen with care to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West. I just wonder how she feels about betraying her own arguments. She said in part of her debate that two months is not a long and protracted period of time, yet she is complaining that four months, which is what the hon. Treasury Board president is asking for in order to gather information, in order to hear from the MacKinnon panel and to come to understand the situation that the government is in after four years of severe mismanagement and poor governance by the previous government – I wonder how she feels about the fact that the opposition side has been complaining for hours and hours and hours and hours and hours. I think, again, we heard earlier that 23 of the 24 members spoke on a previous reading. Despite the protests of not being able to speak, everybody that wanted to speak apparently could speak and did speak.

However, I wonder how the hon. member feels about betraying her own arguments and the opposition's own arguments about what a long delay this is. Really, now we're down to a matter of degree. In terms of whether the delay is right or wrong, which I've heard the opposition say, earlier on this morning we heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview say – and this isn't an exact quote. I'm paraphrasing because I don't have the Hansard in front of me. It was something very close to the effect of: well, a one-month delay I could understand. So we've got the Member for Edmonton-Riverview saying that one month is okay. We've got the Member for Lethbridge-West saying that two months is not a long and protracted period of time. Now we're only down to a matter of degree, not the protests of something being wrong here that they've been trying to sell in this House for the last dozens of hours though they would call it shorter than that.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that I'm curious about how the member feels about completely destroying the opposition's arguments against this bill, which is an honest and sincere attempt by the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board only to have enough time to put the government in a position to move forward with a reasonable amount of information and a reasonable amount of time to consider the government's position before they move into the arbitration process, not to take the process away from our very valued and important public servants but, rather, to put the government in a position to have an adequate amount of feedback and information before going into that important part of the process.

So, you know, I'm curious about the reflections of the hon. member, if you just think of the arguments that the Member for Lethbridge-West just made, making it clear that she doesn't consider two months to be a long and protracted period of time, combined with the argument from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview that a delay would be okay, that, really, there's only a matter of degree, only a matter of disagreement on the length of the delay. It seems to be completely counter to the arguments that the opposition has tried to offer to this House about bad faith and a bunch of other accusations that are unfounded when their own members in the last couple of hours have actually destroyed all those arguments with their own words.

I'm curious about what the hon. member feels about unravelling the opposition's entire argument during the speech which she just concluded about five minutes ago.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West in the time that's remaining.

Ms Phillips: Well, that's an easy one, Mr. Speaker. This isn't about the specific times. It's about the arbitration on Saturday.

The Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall rising to speak to third reading.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 9. I was listening to the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board making the claim that this piece of legislation is simply postponing, that it's a procedural delay, that the preamble needs to be looked at in its totality, all of those arguments that I will deal with. I think that nobody agrees with the government on this, that it's simply postponing, that it's a procedural delay. In the minds of workers, in the minds of 180,000 workers, their representatives, they know very clearly that this law seeks to break their legally binding contracts and the rights therein. There is no doubt in the minds of all those Albertans.

So it's not simply postponing. It's breaking legally binding contracts with the public service that they entered into in good faith, that they entered into, I guess, believing that the government will follow their contract. These are Albertans who provide high-quality service each and every day in our communities, in all our ridings. These are teachers, nurses, workers that provide the services that we need and rely on pretty much on a daily basis, that our constituents need and rely on on pretty much a daily basis.

Then the Minister of Finance also argued that it's not fair that one side doesn't have the information they need. The only time they don't have information is when it comes to workers and their rights. Well, when they brought forward a tax cut, a 4-some billion dollar tax break, for the wealthy multinationals, they didn't blink for a second. They had every information to do that, and they just went ahead with that decision. Even though we know that they were claiming that their decision will create jobs, will create prosperity, all those things, we are still seeing layoffs in our economy, in Calgary.

Same thing, that it will be disrespectful to make a decision without full information: that was another argument. That's the reason, they said, that they're bringing forward this legislation. I think they made every other decision without full information or without whatever information they had, and only for Alberta workers they don't have needed information and they need to find and dig into that information. I think the Alberta public service in Finance and Treasury – my colleague from Calgary-Buffero will attest to that – are very capable people. They're very capable of providing that information and on very short notice. Had, I guess, government sought that information, they would have provided that information. It's, I guess, not really an argument that they don't have the information to make that decision.

I think they would exactly know that cutting taxes, giving a tax break would create a hole in the budget and would make the deficit bigger and will require cutting services, will require breaking these contracts, legally binding contracts. I think contracts are fundamental to our relationship to our everyday dealings. I think that earlier, when I was speaking to it, I mentioned that we enter into many different contracts each and every day, from acquiring cellphone service to leasing to buying a house, and every time when we enter into a contract, I think that's the understanding, that this document will govern the relationship of both parties.

Parties enter into these relationships in good faith that both sides will honour their obligations. If we lease a car, there is a certain payment that the person who is leasing will make, and the dealership will get that money, but there will be new regulations that will govern their relationship, how maintenance will be dealt with. But here government is using law to change that relationship unilaterally, and that is unfair, that is undemocratic, and that is not lawful. That is not the best use of their mandate and their power.

Earlier in the Legislature I think that, if I recall correctly, I heard the Premier refer to article 26 of the universal declaration of human rights. That article is with respect to education, and the specific provision that was shared was that "parents have a prior right to choose the kind of education that shall be given to their children." So if that universal declaration of rights is here to guide them with the decision-making, I think there is another article in the same declaration – that is article 23 – which says that everyone has a right to form a trade union, and they have a right to do so to protect their interests. Certainly, protecting their interests will cover their collective bargaining rights. That's the reason that they're given that right. So if a universal right is a guide to them when it comes to education, it should guide them also when it comes to Albertans' right to associate, Albertans' right to join trade unions, and Albertans' right to collective bargaining. The same kinds of rights are also enshrined in the International Labour Organization charter as well, which gives not only the freedom to associate but also the freedom to bargain collectively.

Now, I think it's settled in our jurisprudence coming from the Supreme Court of Canada that our Charter protects these collective bargaining rights, not just that they have a right to unionize. It also puts corresponding duties on the parties to do so in good faith, a duty on the parties to meet in good faith, to set a time frame for the process, to agree on time frames, and to engage in meaningful dialogue.

But here we are seeing a heavy-handed tool, a heavy-handed piece of legislation, a heavy-handed legislative hammer to break these contracts, to wage a war on these public-sector workers who are in wage talks, which certainly clearly shows that the government is not approaching all this in good faith. The government is breaching their constitutionally protected rights and breaching those rights by dint of law, which we know can be challenged. I think that in our daily lives, when somebody breaches the contract, what do we do? We take them to the courts. So this might create jobs for some lawyers, but I think that overall it's not a fair thing to do. It's not a piece of legislation that we should be debating at this hour.

I think it's important for us to debate this because this is impacting almost 200,000 Albertans. Their rights are at stake. We hear a lot from the other side, that they have a mandate. Sure, they have a mandate, but I don't think these 180,000 Albertans gave the UCP, this government, a mandate to walk roughshod on their constitutionally protected rights, on the rights the Charter grants them, on the rights that are talked about in the universal declaration of human rights, that's advocated by labour organizations. I don't think that Albertans gave this government a mandate to do so. There's still time. They should reconsider and think about it.

When they talk about their mandate and wanting their mandate to be respected, I think they should also respect the mandates that unions come with. Unions are made in a democratic process. It's always the majority of the bargaining unit members that come together to create those unions, and when they enter into these negotiations, enter into these agreements, these agreements are democratically ratified by the union membership. They have a mandate there, too. So if they want their mandate to be respected, I think they should respect the union's mandate, too.

We hear a lot about the mandate, but I think a couple of weeks ago I saw their mandate challenged by kids, youth, in Calgary, and none of them – it was there, but I saw their mandate getting challenged on Bill 8 today, this evening around 6, 6:30. So I think they should reconsider what mandate Albertans have given them and how much mandate they should use. Certainly, what they are doing through this piece of legislation is not something Albertans mandated them to do.

They talk about the budget deficits, and they talk about respect for Albertans' dollars. Sure, Albertans are concerned about budget deficits, and they want their tax dollars to be used prudently, but I don't think that they want this government to do so at the cost of their basic, Charter-protected, legally binding contractual rights. Albertans don't expect them to walk roughshod on their rights.

Similarly, they talk about deficits. I think that when we talk about deficits, deficits are not just on the books. We inherited a lot of deficits in 2015 in our communities. We inherited a deficit in our school system. That was the reason that we invested in 244 schools across this province. That was also a deficit that was not reflected on the books but that was present in our communities. If we look at our seniors' housing, we inherited a huge deficit. There is still, I guess, a list of over some thousand people who are waiting on waiting lists. That's why we invested almost $1.2 billion in seniors' housing. It's all depends on how you define deficit. There was a deficit left by the previous government, and that's why we invested in communities.

Albertans not only don't want deficits, but they also want to have cutting-edge education for their children, they want to have hospitals, and they want to have seniors' care centres. That was the reason that we were investing in all those things. Somehow their priorities didn't change overnight. Yes, they elected a different government, but their needs still remain the same. There are almost 15,000 kids who are going to our school system come September. They will still need schools, they will still need teachers, and they will still need teaching assistants.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for a brief question or comment. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has risen to provide a brief question or comment.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do rise under 29(2)(a). I'm very interested, as always, in listening to the Member for Calgary-McCall speak. I know that members in this House realize that he's a lawyer and one of the finest minds in this Legislature. I know that the Member for Calgary-McCall understands that we do criticize countries who do not follow the rule of law, who do not respect the international declaration of human rights, that was actually created by a Canadian in conjunction with the widow of the 32nd President of the United States. Eleanor Roosevelt and John Humphrey created that together in 1946-1947.

I'm just wondering if the member, who has of course travelled the world and is a lawyer, can talk about what we lose, on top of the respect of the world community, when we fail to respect the rule of law ourselves. What other losses do we suffer when the standards of jurisprudence that I referenced when I talked about the Supreme Court of Canada decision saying that the law of the land is to confirm that honesty is absolutely necessary – and the court said that Canadian contract law comes with a duty of good faith that requires parties to perform their contractual obligations honestly. Now, indeed, we're not doing that with this Bill 9, this piece of legislation. I wondered, from a legal standpoint, how embarrassed we could become as a country if indeed this type of pattern of legislation continues.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, for the detailed question. I think I will keep my comments to collective bargaining and the rule of law in that context. I think that collective bargaining has many benefits for employers, employees, and society at large as well. The fundamental thing or aspect of this is that it promotes negotiation, it promotes collaboration, and it encourages or brings parties together at a bargaining table. People think through their issues, people think through their interests, and they come together with agreements. Then they act upon those agreements, which leads to a peaceful society where the people understand their rights and they expect their rights to be respected.

If we breach contracts like this, we will certainly see labour unrest. The workers who will be impacted by this legislation: I don't think they will be very happy with this piece of legislation. That will also impact their workplace productivity. It also may impact their turnover. It will also impact retention rates and all those things.

I guess the rule of law in this context, that their contracts should be honoured, is important for many different reasons. For the most part, I think it's important for the fair and equitable functioning of a society where contracts are only entered into based on this understanding that parties will respect the rights and relationships agreed to in those documents. These contracts, especially collective bargaining contracts, I think, are important ones in that they are also protected under our Constitution, under our Charter, the Charter that gives Albertans, gives Canadians a right to make those associations, join trade unions, and also protects their right to collective bargaining. That's a right that shouldn't be interfered with lightly, that shouldn't be interfered with in the way this government has interfered with it.

If they were worried about their finances, all those things, I think they could have put the brakes on some of the other pieces of legislation, some of the other things they did; for instance, that giveaway of 4-some billion dollars in tax breaks. They could have waited on that promise until they figured out this, because that one was more important.

The Speaker: Hon. members, anyone else wishing to join the debate this evening for third reading of Bill 9? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act. I apologize. I'm frozen. I cannot get warm, but I'm sure I will. We were standing outside, joining hundreds of young folks in support of LGBTQ youth, and I haven't quite gotten warm yet.

Yesterday, or at least I think it was yesterday – I'm not really sure what day it was – I spoke about the perspectives of a number of people on Bill 9. I wanted to share a number of stories, and I wanted to share a number of quotes. I'm going to do a little bit more of that today. I mean, yesterday I shared the wise words of our leader, of my colleagues from Edmonton-North West, Edmonton-Mill Woods. I talked about the positive approach she had taken to labour and the relationships that she'd built in that capacity and just how proud I was to see her leadership in her tenure as labour minister. I spoke a little bit about what the Member for Lethbridge-West had – she'd given a very good summary of Charter rights and so forth.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I wanted to focus as well on the thoughts of a number of labour leaders because we've seen in the last couple of days labour leaders really speaking out on behalf of their members: Guy Smith from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, Gil McGowan from the Alberta Federation of Labour, and Heather Smith from the United Nurses of Alberta. I talked about their concerns with this unconstitutional approach, this absolute breach of rights, this all-out attack on workers.

I did speak in particular about the nurses. You know, Heather Smith is someone I respect a great deal. She noted that she'd never seen any interference to this degree even in the Klein era of the 1990s. She noted that even in the dark days of the 1990s the Alberta government never reached into collective agreements and violated the constitutional rights of public-sector workers.

I trust her, as I said. I trust her to stand up for workers, to stand up for rights. In fact, I saw her this evening – tonight – with us in solidarity with LGBTQ youth. She stood in the rain, in the cold, with our caucus and with hundreds of other Albertans. When she points out this betrayal, this breach of Charter rights of nurses, I trust her. I'm going to listen to her.

I didn't get a chance, however, to speak to the profession that is close to me, and that is teaching. I ran out of time, in fact, which is rare, because I would never think I would have run out of time when I got into this job. I'm not usually a person of a lot of words, but I'm having to become a person of more words. Many of you know I was a teacher and a proud member of the Alberta Teachers' Association, teaching in rural Alberta. Many of you have heard that I started my teaching career in Bawlf, Alberta, which is a tiny community near Camrose. I was also in Forestburg, Alberta.

Now, what I wanted to talk a little bit about was the Alberta Teachers' Association's perspective on Bill 9. Greg Jeffery is the past president and, again, someone who I respect greatly on this. I'd like to share his perspective. We know that the ATA is the professional association of teachers, and they act as the bargaining agent for 46,000 teachers who are employed across this province. Now, Greg Jeffery calls Bill 9 "a heavy-handed abuse of power that significantly erodes trust between this government and its public servants."

You may not know that in April 2019 a two-year agreement was reached between the ATA and the TEBA, which is the Teachers' Employer Bargaining Association, after a government-appointed mediator recommended that independent arbitration be used to determine any salary increases. That agreement was thereafter ratified by a vote of teachers, school boards, and government representatives. It was agreed upon by all those parties. It was, as we call it, an agreement of good faith. As Greg Jeffery points out, you know: we had a collaborative relationship; we arrived at that agreement in good faith. And now what is this government doing? It's using its highest powers. It's using its hammer, as my colleague from Calgary-McCall talked about earlier, "to unilaterally change the terms of the agreement." He points out: imagine if this were to happen in the business world, if this were to happen in the private sector. If a contract was so blatantly ignored, you wouldn't do business with that corporation.

He points out that it's a huge interference, just as Heather Smith did. It's a huge interference. It's a huge reach into the collective bargaining process. He says: you know what? There's really no need to delay arbitration. We know that the blue-ribbon panel is scheduled to report back by August 15. Arbitration hearings with teachers aren't expected to begin until September.

It's offensive to teachers. Of course, just like other labour leaders, he's calling on this government to abandon its plans to pass this bill that we're debating currently and to respect public-sector workers, including teachers.

As many of you know, teachers agreed to this after already agreeing to take six years of zeros, of zero increases, in the past seven years. So it's not about teachers not being paid enough or complaining about their wages. It's about teachers, again, having agreed in good faith to a contract, already agreeing to no increases and then being, basically, lied to.

The other interesting thing that he talks about and that the nurses' union talked about as well is concerns about morale. You know, right now it's June 20, and we've got teachers who are teaching the younger grades dealing with very excited students who are about to break for the summer and those teaching the higher grades dealing with diploma examinations and year-end examinations, and there is a lot of pressure and a lot of stress. Added to that is the pressure, the stress, of not knowing what's going to be happening with their collective agreement.

I'm also concerned about attraction and retention of public-sector workers and what such an approach by this government could mean, particularly in rural Alberta, where, you know, I spent my teaching career and where I grew up as well. We know that there are still rural areas in Alberta where they have a hard time attracting nurses. In fact, David Harrigan, who is also from the United Nurses of Alberta, noted that some of them are starting to use agency nurses. They're just not able to staff their hospitals and their health care facilities. As I said, having taught out there and seeing how it is hard to attract and retain folks in various parts of the public sector, I think about the students that I would have taught out in these small communities and what careers they'd be seeking. Would they want to seek a career in nursing or teaching knowing that there's this time of much unrest?

Greg Jeffery from the ATA points out, though, that this isn't going to change the delivery of public education, because he knows, like we know or most members of this House know, teachers are professionals. And despite the fact that there is uncertainty, despite the fact that they feel as if their rights are being breached, they will continue to do their incredible work and deliver the high-quality education that they have for years in this province. But the timing, of course, is tragic, as I've noted. I mean, these are teachers who've worked hard. They've put in a lot of hours, and they're heading into a summer of uncertainty, for sure. I've heard from many of them.

In fact, I'll make reference to the rally tonight out on the steps of the Legislature, again, hundreds of folks out there in the cold and the rain. A number of teachers came up to me, and of course they were supporting us for our work to support LGBTQ youth and the fight that we continue to have in us to ensure that those youth are protected. I actually had a few of them say to me, too, that they're concerned about these other bills, including Bill 9, and what that's going to mean.

You know, I chatted about nurses and teachers and some of their concerns. I actually had somebody reach out to me on Facebook, and she wanted her story shared. She is a worker in Calgary, and she'd reached out to me when she saw we were in the Chamber a little bit earlier than this time last night. She was one of those keen folks watching online at about 2 a.m., and she says the following:

As a pharmacy technician working to my full scope of practice I represent a significant cost savings as I perform tasks that only 3 years ago were performed by members with higher education qualifications. My role has had 20% staff turnover in the past year and a wage cut would make it impossible to ever be fully staffed. I work at a cancer centre where we are working beyond capacity to make hundreds of life saving individually dosed IV bags and thousands of oral medication doses every day and this government is telling me that my rights don't matter and I'm not worth negotiating with. Thank you for standing up for me. Thank you for showing me what a courageous caring MLA looks like.

Her story is, I'm sure, the story of hundreds, thousands of workers across this province who are just trying to do the best for Albertans and feeling completely neglected, rejected by this government: something to think about.

As I was doing some research in preparation to talk about Bill 9, I wanted to share the perspective of someone else that I respect. His name is David Climenhaga. He's a writer, and he's got an interesting take on Bill 9. People might say: well, why is this a big deal? Right? We heard from members opposite tonight, from the Finance minister. We listened carefully to the words he chose as he was introducing third reading. You know, he used words like "just" and "nearly" and "just a temporary postponement."

David Climenhaga says, "Yeah, probably a lot of Albertans hear that and think: okay; it's not a big deal." Well, it is a big deal, and here's why. We all know that, once passed, this bill will postpone the start of any arbitration hearings until after Halloween, kind of a scary timing, and as we've outlined, 24 collective agreements are impacted, and so are about 180,000 employees across this province. So despite the fact that the members opposite will say that it's just a short procedural delay while this aforementioned blue-ribbon panel gets its handle on the province's finances, we should be worried. David Climenhaga notes that this is because it is neither hyperbolic nor tendentious to declare that the government's motives in introducing a law that breaks important terms and conditions of legal contracts should be transparent to even a casual observer.

As one of my colleagues pointed out earlier, of course this government won't say this – this is not the narrative that they're sharing – but halting arbitration hearings is obviously intended to prevent one thing and one thing alone. And what is that? Arbitrators giving public employees like nurses, like teachers a raise.

The urgency for a government that has already decided to attack public sector salaries is that many Alberta public employees' unions negotiated "wage-reopener" agreements in their current contracts, which have now reached the point [where] these wages-only negotiations are about to start or are already underway.

As we know, if the parties to a wage reopener can't reach an agreement, compulsory binding arbitration is triggered, as the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview talked about earlier. The problem, of course, for a government like this one is that arbitrators have to make their decisions based on facts like comparable salaries paid to other workers, the cost of living, and the employer's finances, not based on ideology or based on hostility to the public sector or to unions.

So by tearing up this inconvenient part of the agreements signed just over two years ago by several unions, the government gives itself time to plot its . . . moves.

Of course, it gives the government an opportunity to breach a key part of collective agreements like those that I talked about earlier, that of the AUPE, the United Nurses of Alberta, the Health Sciences Association, of which that person I spoke of earlier is a member, and the Alberta Teachers' Association. Again, just like the teachers, these members sat down and agreed to multiple years of frozen wages in return for the ability to negotiate a wage increase in the final year of the contract. This bill, Bill 9, strips the contracts.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available. I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker, I am always pleased to hear from my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I think she had a little bit more of a story to tell here and a little bit more that this Assembly would be privileged to hear, so I'd encourage her to please get up and let us know what else she has to tell the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Yes. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-South. In fact, I'll just continue by noting that I'm quoting a lot of this from Mr. Climenhaga because I really appreciate his perspective on this.

I was just starting to say that Bill 9, this proposed legislation, strips the contracts of the provision on which members' agreement to a wage freeze was based, again a clear direction. He actually gives a similar example to Greg Jeffery from the Alberta Teachers' Association. Imagine – and I think the members opposite should consider this – just the outcry, the brouhaha that would result in the private sector and among Conservatives "if an NDP government, say, had told a contractor that a provision in its contract that allowed periodic renegotiation of its fees had been nullified by legislation!" Well, of course, we can imagine that people would be up in arms. As many of us have mentioned, this is a clear violation of rights that are enshrined in our Constitution.

As he points out, this is what public-sector unions are talking about when they say that their members' constitutional rights are being violated. Of course, it will inevitably be tested in our courts. As we know, this is all happening at the same time that this panel is doing its work. From history, from the backgrounds of some of those panel members, and from what we can speculate, the panel will likely come up with some nonshocking findings like recommendations for wage rollbacks, wage freezes, again, all fitting nicely into this government's narrative. As he also points out, we know that this panel is predestined for some unfair conclusions because they're not even looking at the revenue side, right? They're not even looking at the revenue side, nor are they able to perhaps re-examine the $4.5 billion corporate tax cut. Again, I mean, that could be another way to look at the province's finances, but that's not in their mandate.

Just to end, I think I want to reiterate the concern for future labour relations and for the stability of this province. We're not talking about a small number of folks who are employed in these public-sector unions across this province. We're talking about a lot of folks. I shared the other day just how much Albertans stood up in opposition to previous Conservative governments' approaches to negotiating or, I guess, not negotiating. In the case of, say, bills 45 and 46 I stood with a lot of folks on a very cold day, in particular on Bill 45, years ago, and Albertans weren't standing for that, and I don't think that they're going to stand for this.

Again, it's not just about those workers. It's about the impact on their families. It's about communities in some cases. As many of you know, the riding that I represent, Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, would be, you know, an area that a lot of folks would maybe label as working class. We've got a lot of folks who do struggle to get by and who have contributed significantly to the labour movement in this province. They're concerned, and rightly so. There is this brewing loss of trust in this government, that hasn't been in power all that long, and as I said, it bodes quite poorly for future labour relations as well.

So it's a bit of, I guess, a warning to the members opposite to consider the impacts because I think that probably every member opposite has someone in their family or their extended family who is employed in one of these unions and who will be affected, who are right now feeling like their rights are not being respected.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone else wishing to speak to Bill 9?

An Hon. Member: Question.

The Speaker: I think the Speaker calls the question.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is always a pleasure to rise and speak in the limited time that we have here in the Assembly to the bills that are brought before us, especially here today for Bill 9, the bad-faith bargaining bill. I mean, it's something that is really important for many, many Albertans. It's really important because what the Premier and the Conservative government here are doing is that they are moving forward to break the law. They are moving forward to abuse their power and attack front-line workers and unions. I think that is something that every single member of this Assembly should be concerned about. I think it's something that every single member of the opposition is concerned about. I think it's something that a lot of members of the unions and organized labour across this province are very concerned about.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I just had a message forwarded to me by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, and I understand that it's from a teacher who resides in her riding. I think it's something that has a very strong message, that I want every single member of this Assembly to hear. It reads: dear member, Bill 9 is an abuse of power that erodes any trust that existed between the government and teachers; an agreement was reached in good faith back in April 2019, and unilaterally delaying arbitration is heavy handed; I'm writing to ask that you please defend the mediation process and ask the government to allow the independent arbitration, which was agreed upon by teachers, school boards, and government representatives, to continue; the use of Bill 9 to break a contract in order to cause a delay that isn't necessary is reckless and sets a precedent that can only lead to future mistrust in negotiations. This is from a teacher from the member's riding.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that is not an unusual thing to hear. In fact, I was in my riding just a few days ago, and I was going to visit some schools as graduations are proceeding around this time of year, as I'm sure all members are aware. One of the things that I do for my constituents is that I give scrolls to the students who graduate from grades 6, 9, and 12 and so forth. One of the things I did is that I stopped in to visit the principal of one of my local schools in my constituency. Indeed, she came up to me and thanked me for dropping the scrolls off, and the first thing she actually asked me was: "What do you think is going to happen with this arbitration bill? It's going to be so bad for us teachers."

That's the sentiment I'm hearing all across my riding, Mr. Speaker. That's what people are asking me unsolicited. When I told her that our opposition was fighting it every day and that we believed that it wouldn't hold up in court and it was absolutely unconstitutional, she said: well, that's good to hear, and I'm glad you guys got in at least as the opposition because these guys are going to tear us apart. That's how teachers feel about this government, that they're going to tear them apart, and I think that's something that's very concerning because teachers are the core of our education system and the core of shaping our future to make sure we have a strong education. When you negotiate with them in bad faith, it's something that's very grossly offensive, and I think that's something that we should be concerned about. Indeed, the teachers and nurses that are under attack by this bill are people that live in our communities and that we represent. They're the people that really hold our communities together.

I explained to that principal that we had actually been in until about 3:30 the night before, I believe. We had been in, and I had been debating on her behalf, really, until 3:30, trying to make sure that we had the opportunity to discuss the important issues of why the government shouldn't negotiate in bad faith. The government shouldn't break the law. They shouldn't violate the constitutional rights of teachers and nurses and union members.

Really, Albertans understand what that means. They understand that the government is indeed — right now, actually, they're laughing at the concept of being allowed to break the law. They're laughing that they're able to go out and use their bully tactics against front-line workers. I think that's something that's very unfortunate because what it's going to do is that it's going to lead to labour unrest. It's going to lead to compromised services. As this government goes to court, Mr. Speaker, it's going to lead to very costly settlements because this government is going to lose. As we've seen in other jurisdictions, when this has been brought to court, these rights are constitutionally protected.

We know that the people that are being attacked by this bad-faith bargaining bill are Albertans who work hard each and every day to provide high-quality services to Albertans, and they deserve to be treated with respect and dignity. Unfortunately, it seems that the members of the government don't understand that or they don't care. They don't care that our front-line workers work very hard for this government day in and day out, and indeed many of those people that this government will be attacking are actually working right now across this province in emergency rooms and hospitals and health centres. Wherever they may be, there are people working right now under agreements with this government that are being attacked by this bill.

I mean, if the Minister of Finance doesn't think that their voices are important or that their rights to collectively bargain are important, then I'm really disappointed in that, Mr. Speaker. It's something that I actually think is a sign of poor governance. That's the government's prerogative. If they wish to govern in a poor manner, that is their right, but it's something that's disappointing. I don't think we should be legislating away a chance to discuss fair wages.

I don't think we should be using legislative tools as political props here. This is really being done to delay arbitration past the next federal election here. I know the Premier is very fond of Ottawa, and I know the Premier intends to try and spend a lot of time in Ottawa, as he already has and will in the future, coming up to this federal election. I mean, I prefer, of course, to stay here in Alberta in my constituency and fight for those workers and those workers' rights. The Premier certainly has the right to go and campaign on behalf of other parties in other jurisdictions that may or may not have the best interests of Albertans at heart. That's the Premier's prerogative.

But, Mr. Speaker, I think it really does speak to how little the government understands what this bill is going to do and how little the government understands what bad-faith bargaining actually means because they came in here and they told Albertans and they told this House that debate was not important. Indeed, after only one speaker had spoken at second reading, they moved the previous question. Then the next day they had notice on the Order Paper for time allocation. That notice remains right now. It still remains on the Order Paper as we speak. That is something that's a shame because this is a bill that deserves the time of day to be debated in this Assembly. It deserves that every single member who was sent here by their constituents for their constituents is able to speak here. I think it deserves to have more time than at 4:10 a.m. and 4:11 a.m. because Albertans deserve to see this.

I know, of course, that Assembly TV is broadcasting live right now. I believe it's on Shaw and Telus. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I think most Albertans, the ones that are currently working shift work – perhaps they're nurses that have to work overnight – are not going to be able to watch this because they're going to be working while their government takes away their rights, and the Albertans that are not working shift work right now will be working tomorrow. Teachers, for example, Mr. Speaker, are going to be asleep because they know they have to work hard tomorrow to have a strong Alberta and a strong future for our students. Unfortunately, they're going to wake up and find out that their government has also stripped away their rights.

I think that's something that's a real shame here. It's a shame that the correctional officers that are currently helping inmates reform and keeping us safe here, Mr. Speaker, when they get off their shift or, indeed, go on their shift or wake up to go on their shift: they're going to see that this government directly attacked them and directly took away their bargaining rights. That's what they're going to be reading about in the news tomorrow. That's what they're going to be seeing on the television and hearing on the radio as they drive to their workstations. That's something that I think is really unfortunate because this bill impacts over 180,000 workers, right? That's a significant amount. That's 180,000 workers not just here in Edmonton. The government, I know, has a great disdain for Edmonton, and they wish that Edmonton, perhaps, wasn't a part of this province at some point. I don't want to presume anything, but that's what I've heard. If that is what the government wishes, I mean, they will find out and they will realize soon enough that indeed a lot of these 180,000 workers live in their ridings as well. They don't only live here in Edmonton.

We have members in the opposition here from four different cities in this province. Indeed, in every single one of those cities there are people that work in the public service and whose rights are going to be taken away this morning by this government in bad faith, and really it's their rights that are protected by the Constitution.

When we look at what this bill does – here we are in third reading now. We've had a lot of opportunity and we tried to propose amendments that would make a bad bill better. Mr. Speaker, I think you've used that term yourself many times in the past when you were on this side of the House. We wish to sometimes help make a bad bill better. The government refused. The government refused because they knew that they were trying to take away these rights for workers and that if we did make it better, it would allow workers to be able to negotiate in better faith, not good faith – of course, this is the bad-faith bargaining bill – but in better faith.

The government either have to understand that or they have to not care. Really, they either don't care about the workers that are under their charge, the ones who are out there like, for the Minister of Environment and Parks, for example, the fish and wildlife officers who are out there right now keeping us safe and making sure our environment is protected – those workers, when they get off shift or perhaps right now are listening to their radios or are tuned in to Assembly TV and watching us, their rights are being stripped away by the minister right now.

I mean, of course, we can also see that many ministers such as the Minister of Education will have many teachers that will wake up in the morning and realize that ultimately their boss, Mr. Speaker, has voted against their own rights. Maybe that speaks to something about employers, but definitely I think it's something that in this Assembly we should strive to do better. We should strive to have a stronger debate in this Assembly, and we should strive to protect our employees and the people who work on behalf of all Albertans and the unions that represent those workers.

We shouldn't work in bad faith. I mean, we heard at quite a bit at length from my colleagues here in the opposition stories of how teachers and nurses and lab techs and educational assistants and social workers and so forth will be negatively affected by this bill. If the government didn't have their earplugs in, maybe they would have understood. If the government and the Premier had decided to not put in their earplugs and had decided to not attack the very foundations of democracy in this Chamber, maybe they would understand where we're going. Instead, we see the hon. Premier laughing away in his corner over there as he strips away the rights of Albertans, and I think that's something that's a real shame.

I would say, as I have said before in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier should be ashamed of this bill, but indeed I know that the Premier certainly is not ashamed, and I think that in itself is something that I'm a little bit upset about because it shows poor judgment on behalf of this government. It shows such poor judgment on behalf of the government to directly attack workers and show no remorse. That's something that I think is shocking to me but perhaps is not shocking to many Albertans.

Actually, I did mention that it was shocking to me on social media at quite some length this evening and earlier in the morning here, and many Albertans wrote back saying that they were not surprised. So perhaps Albertans are now seeing what this government is doing. They are seeing the direct attack on workers that is going on here. They're seeing the direct attack on the rights of Albertans here and on unions, and I think that's something that's a real shame.

I mean, it's a real shame that the members like the Member for Calgary-Klein will heckle away and disregard the rights of those workers. He can go on at length about how he hasn't heard from any Albertans, but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I have. I can assure you that those workers can hear that he doesn't care about their rights. I think that's actually something that Albertans will be very disappointed in that member for and will be disappointed in this entire government for.

And that's simply the truth, Mr. Speaker. The truth and the facts are that this is a gross abuse of power. It's an illegal act. It's a bill that breaks the constitutional rights of unions and workers in this province. It directly attacks all workers because an attack on one is an attack on all. It's something that really does not do any of the things that the Finance minister purports it will do.

He purports it's just for delaying the arbitration, but indeed he knows very well – or I would think that he knows very well; I wouldn't presume – that this would indeed actually impact the ability to negotiate in good faith, and that is something that has not just been established by members speaking in this Assembly, but it's something that has been established by the highest court of this land. It's been established by the Supreme Court of Canada here, Mr. Speaker. That is something that if the Finance minister is not aware of, that I'm trying to explain to him right now, and if he'd take the earplugs out and look away from his phone, perhaps he would understand.

Mr. Speaker, it appears that the government just does not care about workers and does not care about the people that are under their charge and the services that those employees provide to Albertans, and that's a real shame. That's something that is really upsetting to me because I understand, as my constituents understand and I'm sure many constituents of the members opposite understand, that these services are essential for Alberta, having strong organized labour that can negotiate in good faith to provide the services like correctional officers, like sheriffs, like our peace officers across this province and fish and wildlife officers.

It is essential that we have strong laws in this province and that we uphold the rule of law in this province. Conservatives sure like to say it, Mr. Speaker, but here we can see tonight that they either don't understand what the rule of law is or they really don't care and that they would rather use it as a political talking point. That's really a shame.

I'd encourage all members to vote against this, but it looks like the government just won't care enough to do so.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. All members will know that I like to go back and forth between the opposition and the government when there is a choice. The opposition has had many opportunities to speak under (29)(2)(a), but I do see that the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein has risen to speak under 29(2)(a) as well.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that it's been an incredible evening of debate and discussion, and it's exciting. Actually, I think it's been one of the more exciting nights that I've been here so far in session, to hear the back and forth between both sides of this House and the robust discussion that we've been able to have.

I wanted to make a quick comment, especially about our Member for Edmonton-South and his comments earlier about the importance of seeing members from both sides of the House stand up and debate and discuss, you know, on behalf of their constituents and speak up on behalf of their constituents. I thought it was important to be able to stand up and commend him and commend the members opposite for doing that as well as the members on our side of the floor, too.

I wanted to comment a little bit on something I heard earlier, the Member for Edmonton-South speaking up on behalf of the constituents of Drumheller-Stettler, the 23 per cent of the folks that didn't vote for our Member for Drumheller-Stettler. I thought it would be important to get up and speak on behalf of the 54 per cent of the voters that didn't vote for the Member for Edmonton-South.

You know, we heard a lot earlier today, actually, from the Member for Edmonton-West Henday about not representing or not getting back to constituents. I can tell you that that's very important to me, and probably few people in this House have knocked on as many doors as I have in making sure that I'm getting out there and hearing from the good people in Calgary-Klein, and that includes doctors, nurses, teachers, social workers, lab workers. I can tell you that I just spent a full weekend in my riding connecting with people who have those professions.

We heard a little bit from the Member for Edmonton-City Centre about a disdain from our party, our government towards these government workers. I can tell you that I have not heard anything negative from the members of this government or the ministers of this government towards our public service. In fact, I've heard nothing but positive things, respect for our public service and how hard they work for us, and I'm proud of that. I'm proud that this government stands with our public service and is committed to working with them.

Going back to this idea of the 54 per cent of the people that did not vote for the Member for Edmonton-South, they did not vote for the Member for Edmonton-South because of their economic record, because of their attack on jobs here in Alberta, because they saw how their policies significantly impacted the success of Alberta moving forward. I can tell you from door-knocking in my riding that I had lots of nurses, lots of teachers, lots of social workers that voted for our party and, in fact, came out and door-knocked with me. They did that, again, because they recognized that we needed to get this fiscal house in order to have a sustainable path forward so that we did not continue to leverage our children's future, so that we had money and resources to be able to continue to provide excellence in government services going forward.

That's what I heard at the doors. That's what I continue to hear, and I can tell you that when I was back at my constituency, going from event to event to event and talking to hundreds of people this past weekend . . .

An Hon. Member: Through the chair.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: I'm of course talking through the chair.

. . . that included so many – so many – doctors, nurses, and social workers who were patting me on the back and thanking me for the hard work that we are doing up here to get our economy back on track and showing fiscal prudence, taking the time and the restraint to make sure that we have the right information so that we can move forward and make good fiscal decisions so that we have a sustainable path forward. I heard that from the doctors and nurses and teachers in my riding, and I'm sure I would hear that from the 54 per cent of the people that did not vote for the Member for Edmonton-South in his riding.

I'm happy to stand up on their behalf and to speak up for fiscal prudence and make sure that we show responsibility as a government going forward, that we're not making rash decisions, that we're being responsible with hard-earned tax dollars, that we're not wasting money and taking into full consideration – like I said the other day, when we take a look at who this money belongs to, it's not us. It belongs to taxpayers – it belongs to the people who have worked hard – and we need to demonstrate fiscal prudence for them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, is there anyone else wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-West rising.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise and adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 9

24. Mr. Jason Nixon moved:
Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, this government will not be held hostage by the Official Opposition. When necessary, we will use the tools at our disposal in order to move forward with our legislative agenda.

Mr. Speaker, there's been a lot of conversation this week about time allocation, and I think it's an important discussion. Whenever a government uses time allocation, they should be justified in it. I think it should be used sparingly. I think it's very important that the Official Opposition has an opportunity to do their work on behalf of the people of this province. They have an important duty, which this side of the House certainly respects.

But the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that we have been through a process since, basically, Monday at 7:30 until now, Thursday morning at 4:30, working our way through this piece of legislation, which is a three-and-a-half-page bill. It's becoming quite clear that it is the opposition's intent to paralyze the Legislature and to stop the legislative agenda of this place moving forward, to block the majority who have a responsibility to move forward with the legislative agenda. We're not going to tolerate that, and we will use the tools that are available to us on behalf of Albertans when we need to.

With that said, we still want to provide the opposition with a little more time; hence, why we have two hours with this time allocation motion. I do know that when the hon. Opposition House Leader rises momentarily, he will have lots of quotes, likely from me. I look forward to hearing myself always in Hansard. It's a great experience. But I will leave you, Mr. Speaker, with a couple that I think illustrate my point.

First off, on behalf of a great House leader in this Assembly who we talked lots about today, Brian Mason. I'm sure he's really excited to watch the Conservative Party use his quotes tonight, and I'm happy to do it.

Mr. Kenney: He's not awake.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah, he's probably not awake, Mr. Speaker. I'll send him Hansard tomorrow.

In 2015, while invoking time allocation in a similar situation, he said: it's quite clear the opposition is trying to filibuster the motion; they're trying to block the business of the House, and we can't allow the Assembly to be paralyzed. I agree with Mr. Mason that there comes a time where the majority can't allow the Legislature to be paralyzed. I will add, again, Mr. Speaker, that I want to be clear on how much time has been given by the government to be able to accommodate that. We've been working on this since Monday evening all the way until now, a significant amount of time.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the last time that time allocation was used in the 29th Legislature was to force a vote on an appointment of a legislative officer of the Assembly. At that time the now hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View said: "Mr. Gibson has devoted many years to this issue and has a proven track record. But rather than stating their objections, then voting against the appointment, we have witnessed speaker after speaker simply repeating the same talking points." I do think it's pretty clear and anybody who's watched the Assembly for the last few days realizes that we've probably now reached that stage as well with the opposition, where we're seeing speaker after speaker say the same talking points, often not even about the bill.

Then, lastly, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to close with a quote from the now hon. Opposition House Leader, who was a minister of the Crown at the time, speaking on a closure motion. He says: "This Assembly has now debated Bill 6 for approximately 24 hours. Nearly all opposition members have now participated in the debate, including the leaders of each of the opposition parties." He said that on December 9, 2015, just for my friends at Hansard. The reality is that we are headed now to a very similar time frame.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that I will heed my friend the hon. Official Opposition House Leader's advice, and we'll move forward with this motion and get our Assembly moving again.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. the Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is unfortunate that I have to rise to debate this motion of closure or time allocation that the government has now done on three different phases of this bill. Despite the fact that the Government House Leader will try to argue that time allocation wasn't used in second reading, moving the previous question is a form of closure, a move that was done after one speaker of the opposition got up to speak to second reading. I haven't double-checked with Hansard, but that could be a precedent, as far as moving the previous question after one speaker. I know for a fact that when we were government, we didn't do that.

Mr. Speaker, I mean, this is an example, again, of a government trying to ram through a bill in the darkness of night. Most of the debate has been while Albertans are sleeping as opposed to debating this bill during the daylight hours. We have a government that is moving a bill not only through the dead of night but also a bill that very likely is unconstitutional. It will be challenged. It will cost taxpayers money.

To every single government member that stands up and talks about how we need to get our fiscal house in order: well, first of all, the first move of this government was to reduce revenues by 4 and a half billion dollars, so you can't argue that revenue is the issue if that was your first move. Second of all, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government House Leader loves to talk about Bill 6 and how our government moved closure on it. That bill was debated for 23 days, over three weeks, not three days, as this bill is. Now, I appreciate that the Government House Leader will say that, well, the bill was introduced on Thursday. That is correct: Thursday afternoon, when the week is done for this Assembly. Debate started on the Monday, and as the Government House Leader has pointed out, our first night was well into the night. In fact, the Bill 2 moving of the previous question happened after midnight.

My point is this, Mr. Speaker. This is an abuse of power that the government has: to use tools to stifle debate, to muzzle the opposition, and to ensure that Albertans do not have adequate time to be able to reach out to government members and to opposition members with their feedback. Again, it is coming from the very party that at every turn tried to send every bill to committee on the reasoning that more time is needed, that we need to consult our constituents. Clearly, this government is proving through action that consultation is meaningless to them, that they don't care what Albertans have to say. They want to move their ideology and ideological bill, which is an attack on working people and working people's rights and collective rights, through as quickly as possible and, again, at a time when the majority of Albertans are sleeping.

The members opposite have in previous debates, when they were in opposition, talked about how this is heavy handed, that this is the government ruling with an iron fist. It looks like the gauntlet is on the other hand. Of course, the Premier, as a Member of Parliament, on numerous occasions spoke at length in the House of Commons, when he was an opposition member, about how it was heavy-handed, undemocratic tactics employed by the government. He found it very, very disturbing that the government would insult the very ability of members to speak on behalf of their constituents with adequate time.

Now, the government can claim that the opposition has had adequate time. I would assert that it is not up to them to decide what is adequate and what is inadequate. Members are here to represent their constituents but as well to represent Albertans throughout various ridings. I know the government loves to talk about its majority, but it did not win a tyrannical dictatorship. It is a democratic government that must respect all members, and therefore this motion is undemocratic.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act (continued)

[Adjourned debate June 19: Mr. Ellis]

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I sense – and I could be wrong; my wife informs me that I’m wrong most of the time – that the House may like me to move for unanimous consent for one-minute bells.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has asked for unanimous consent for one-minute bells for the remainder of this afternoon’s sitting. This evening’s sitting? For Bill 9?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, for the remainder of, I guess, Wednesday’s sitting.

The Speaker: Hon. members, for clarity’s sake, the Government House Leader has asked for unanimous consent for one-minute bells for the remainder of this evening’s sitting.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Anyone wishing to speak to Bill 9? The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m happy to rise at this early or late hour to talk about Bill 9. When I spoke earlier regarding this, I talked about sort of the innocence of the Minister of Finance suggesting: “It’s just a delay. There’s nothing more to it than that. We’re just waiting for these reports to get our information.”

I think I want to revise that. I’m not so sure it is innocence anymore. I think it might be duplicitous. Certainly, we hear very clearly words like: we care about public servants; this is just a delay. But I, when the NDP was government, sat across the way and heard often from the opposition at that time not even using the words “public servants” but actually words in a more pejorative sense of it, like “those bureaucrats.” I know that, you know, going back in Hansard you’ll see that, which was, I feel, certainly a more pejorative term. But now they are much more careful with their words, and they are assuring us, “We care about public servants,” regardless of this bill not caring about public servants. Of course, we also have other legislation that they’ve brought forward that also is disrespecting public servants, people who are connected with the union movement.

I also want to just bring up – you know, I know that many members in the government have talked about how they’re not enamoured with what we have to say. But perhaps their own constituents: they might listen to them more. I guess I just want to reiterate that many of these contracts that are being delayed are impacting their local home communities, like for the Member for Camrose. The Bashaw Meadows lodge is one of the facilities that serves vulnerable seniors, and that’s one of the facilities that their contract is not going to be honoured or the process is delayed. Of course, this is all part of the Bethany Group. Also Rosealta Lodge in Camrose is another one, Big Knife lodge in Forestburg. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake: the Autumn Glen Lodge that’s in Innisfail. The Eckville Manor lodge: that’s in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Peace Hills Lodge in Wetaskiwin: that’s in Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin.

I guess, for the members just to realize that these are real people in their ridings, these are their constituents who are having their contracts delayed, that perhaps will bring it more to their attention, you know, if our words here in the opposition are not valued. I also encourage them to reflect because I think that this is a pretty serious thing, and it’s not just a simple delay. That’s certainly not what I see. It really is an attack on the union movement in our province. It’s not only in this bill; it’s in a previous bill that was introduced. For me this is really a significant issue because we know that unions are champions for workers. Certainly, I stand and I know that the NDP Official Opposition stands with workers in our province. We know that unions improve the wages of workers, they improve workplace safety, and they reduce inequality. These are fundamental things that are important to any society, and unions help enhance wages, workplace safety, and actually reduce inequality in our province.

In some of my remarks today I just want to acknowledge the Parkland Institute, who has done some extensive research in this area, and I’m referring to a report that actually came out in May 2014, so it was actually before the NDP government was in place. It really was doing a review of the legacy of the Conservative governments in our province that held power here for 44 years. One of the – not findings, but one of the things that they’re reporting, of course, is that Alberta has the lowest unionization rate and some of the most hostile union labour laws in our country. Our research shows that this does a great disservice to workers in the province of Alberta in general.

These two bills that are before us, Bill 9, which we are debating currently, and Bill 2, which we’ve debated previously, are an attack, again, on unions. We are going, again, backwards, and workers in Alberta are being compromised. Of course, the impact of unions in areas of wages, worker safety, income inequality are really significant and important.

When we look at some of the key findings from this report, it’s measured in terms of economic performance, wage growth in Alberta. We know that wage growth in Alberta has been far lower than in other provinces with higher unionization rates. Women and young workers fare much better in unionized environments. Again, you know, in Bill 2 previously, there's an attack on young workers, so youth are now having their wages rolled back with youth minimum wage. We know that high unionization rates also put upward pressure for wages for nonunion workers, and I think I've talked in this House before about that. That's called the lighthouse effect. Unionized workplaces have higher wages, so the shop next door wants to have workers, too, and they need to see what the market is paying, and that influences them. That's good for workers, and I think it's good for a healthy society.

Unions play a key role in improving worker safety through education, worker empowerment, and government lobbying, and there's a strong correlation between falling unionization rates and growing income inequality in Alberta. As I said, unionization in Alberta continues to be the lowest among Canadian provinces. Workers have a particularly difficult time becoming unionized in Alberta. Applications to unionize are on the decline, and union members make up a shrinking percentage of the private-sector workforce, leaving unionization in the province increasingly restricted to the public sector. Of course, as I said before, when we were government, we updated labour laws significantly. Actually, we were able to improve them to a degree where people could become part of a union more easily. But, of course, you know, Bill 2, with their movement back to not looking at card checks anymore, which is pretty standard in all the other provinces, is taking us backwards again.

If I could just expand a bit on how it does support the wages of workers. Of course, my colleagues have shared many times who these people are. These people are nurses. These people are working in the public service, administrators, responding to calls of Albertans. They're social workers. Certainly, I was a public servant some years ago in child welfare; I've spoken about that before. These are people who are working on the front lines, people that I've heard this government does want to support, you know, and cares very much about. But in delaying this arbitration, they actually are showing the opposite of that, and that's, I guess, why, Mr. Speaker, I moved from indicating that it was sort of an innocent thing to more duplicitous. I'm concerned that workers are being disrespected.

If we look at wages, this is one of the main ways unions do support workers. When measured in terms of economic performance, wage growth in Alberta has been far lower, actually, than in any other province. But union wages in Alberta are, on average, 18 per cent higher than non-union wages, with the difference being most noticeable for women and young workers. Again, people who aren't part of sort of the more privileged classes, people who are younger or women, oftentimes get passed over. There is still, unfortunately, gender discrimination in our province, in our society.

Unions really take bold steps to support all workers, including ones that have maybe more barriers or disadvantages. You know, I'm very proud to say how important unions are, and I just want everyone to know that this bill, Bill 9, and Bill 2 are eroding some of the power that unions, I think, should have. Certainly, our government did enhance labour laws in this province, and it's very sad to see so quickly that those are being eroded by this Conservative government.

Another aspect that really is important is worker safety. Certainly, Alberta workplaces are dangerous, with official records indicating 145 occupational fatalities and approximately 30,000 serious workplace injuries in 2012. This report, as I said, was published in 2014. Employers demonstrate widespread noncompliance with provincial occupational health and safety regulations due in part to ineffective enforcement by the provincial government. Unions are the central force protecting worker safety, doing so through worker education, worker empowerment, and government lobbying.

So this is very distressing, Mr. Speaker. You know, early on in our mandate I was the minister of labour. One of the things that we did was that we expanded the number of safety officers, the people who were investigating if there was a workplace issue, and supported them to go out and make sure that workers were safe in their workplace. The public servants were somewhat shocked, really, because under the previous Conservative governments the mantra was always, "Get out of the way of business; let business do whatever they want," even compromising worker safety. They were very pleased because they were trained occupational health and safety officers. They cared very much about what they needed to do to protect workers. They didn't want people to not be going home at the end of the day. They wanted to make sure that workers were safe in their workplaces. I must say that we had a lot of public servants very proud and happy that their work became unfettered under our government.

The third key piece here on the importance of unions and why we should be respecting them and not delaying their arbitration is income inequality. The gap between the rich and poor has increased dramatically in Alberta and now is the highest in Canada. Again, Mr. Speaker, it's back to 2014, but that still holds true today, unfortunately. Income gains over the last three decades have gone almost exclusively to the wealthiest Albertans. Certainly, it's been a few years since this has been in the media a lot, but it's that top 1 per cent, right? So people who are already making significant incomes are getting even more, and that's very, very pronounced in our province. We know that rising income inequality is closely related to falling unionization rates in this province, so unions are critical to achieving a more equitable distribution of income.

Of course, you know, Mr. Speaker, we have already seen this government move boldly, giving that elite, top 1 per cent a big corporate tax break. Right away they were happy to do that while eroding the rights of workers. There are consequences for these kinds of policies. It does matter what government does. Policies matter. As this report identifies and as other reports do, oftentimes women and youth are most impacted by this.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has risen.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to respond to some of the comments I've heard here this morning. Again, I do want to acknowledge and I do appreciate the services, the exceptional services, that our public service provide Albertans day in, day out in our hospitals, in our schools, serving various government departments, and serving in communities right across this great province. They serve an exceptional purpose, and they do it and conduct their responsibilities. They serve Albertans exceptionally well, and I want to acknowledge that this morning.

Again, Bill 9 is about delaying a process, Mr. Speaker. It is about delaying a process so that this government can make thoughtful and informed decisions. This is what Albertans expect from this government. We've heard from the Member for Calgary-Klein, and I think my story during the campaign is similar to his when we were going door to door meeting with Albertans. You know, there were a variety of opinions on various issues that we would encounter, but

I would have to say this: the most consistent expectation that I heard from Albertans in my constituency was virtually regardless of age demographic, ethnic background, income level, or profession.

The concern that I heard time and time and time again was that they expected a government to be fiscally and financially responsible, to make thoughtful, informed, prudent decisions so that we did not burden future generations with ill-informed decision-making and irresponsible decision-making. Mr. Speaker, that's what Bill 9 is about. Bill 9 is about delaying a process so this government can hear from the MacKinnon panel on a path forward to balance for this province and on a path forward to continue to deliver high-quality services to Albertans.

I also heard from many Albertans that were out of a job, quite frankly, during that time. I heard some very difficult stories from good folks who came from eastern Canada and were living in Grande Prairie without a job because they had lost it due to, certainly, a downturn in the energy industry and, I will say, as well due to some very ill-informed, really disastrous policies of the previous government such as a carbon tax, such as increasing corporate taxes by 20 per cent at a time when the industry could simply not afford it. Those were very tough stories, Mr. Speaker, but I will have to say this. Those individuals that were experiencing the toughest of financial times had an even greater expectation of this government to manage resources responsibly and prudently and wisely for this generation and the next.

That's what Bill 9 is about. We have a responsibility. Albertans have placed their trust in this government to make the decisions that will ensure we can deliver high-quality services today, tomorrow, and for the next generation. That's why I'm pleased to bring forward Bill 9, a responsible bill to ensure we have time to make the best decisions on behalf of all Albertans, including the public sector.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others wishing to speak in debate this evening? On the main motion, the hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be able to rise in this Assembly once again at this beautiful, early hour today. I suppose I will just start by saying once again, you know, being a returning Member of the Legislative Assembly, being elected for the second time, I want to give my appreciation to the constituents in Edmonton-West Henday that put me here. I'm going to continue fighting against legislation like the piece that is before us.

Now, I suppose I will start – and I will not dwell too long on it – by just responding to comments that have been made in response to Bill 9 by both the Member for Calgary-Klein and also the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance. You know, they've talked at length about consulting with their constituents during the election campaign and over the last week, having the opportunity to speak with many public-sector workers in their communities, and that they support the measures that this government is taking in working to get people back to work, which I can appreciate. However, I doubt that they had a conversation about legislating delays to their contracts.

You know, when we talk about election platforms, this, of course, wasn't a piece that was in there. I think we also, once again, have to reflect on the fact that, really, this government is putting large corporations ahead of the people that work so hard as public servants for our province. The government is talking about getting our fiscal house in order before they're able to continue negotiating contracts, a few of which are due to come to a conclusion over the next few days, which, of course, is a concern of theirs and is one of the main reasons why they're slamming it through this House.

But I have concerns with the comments being made about returning to fiscal balance, considering what we've seen so far from this government. I mean, the first piece of legislation, of course, repealing the carbon tax, was a key campaign platform of theirs, but when you start pulling billions of dollars out of the economy, we need to have answers about how you're going to replace that.

To go further and give another $4.5 billion to large corporations, taxpayers' dollars – we've heard that come up a few times tonight when we're talking about properly compensating the people that work so hard in our province, the public servants – we're not hearing about how they're going to replace that fund. When we talk about the valley line LRT or the green line LRT, this government is creating large amounts of debt, and they have not spoken about how they're going to pay for it, so I would be very interested to hear how they're coming to this conclusion that somehow they're bringing us back to balance while also blowing massive holes in the budget.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the fact, the bottom line of this legislation, is that the Premier and the UCP are breaking the law. Forcing legislation to delay arbitration and delay the ability of public servants to collectively bargain is an incredible concern. Not only is this piece of legislation before us, Bill 9, a concern, but really it's signalling something more. When in the First Session of this Assembly we're talking about infringing upon the rights of unions, of public servants in our communities to collectively bargain, they're signalling that there's more to come.

Now, if you look at the history of this Premier in his time as an MP in Ottawa under Stephen Harper, our former Prime Minister, you might think back to 2011, when the postal workers were having rolling strikes because they couldn't come to an agreement through arbitration. At the time the corporation of Canada Post was trying to lower the wages for new workers, among taking away other pieces of compensation. So the government, through Bill C-6, I believe, in the House of Commons, one, forced these people back to work, which I imagine we will probably see over the next four years – we'll wait and see, but I'm willing to almost bet on it; I'm not a betting man, but I would almost take that bet – and also the fact that they were willing to push through lowering the wages of these workers even past what the arbitration process had offered them, even past what Canada Post, the corporation, was going to offer them. The government came in, as far as I remember, and lowered the wages of people starting out at the company.

So we've seen a history from this Premier in his time as an MP of forcing through legislation that harmed public servants in our communities. Of course, in 2016 that piece of legislation was struck down because it did violate the Charter, and I imagine we'll see a similar argument on this piece of legislation. When the inevitable happens and the government, through arbitration, cannot come to an agreement with these public servants, I imagine we'll see further bills that violate the Charter. Of course, that will take years and much time in courts and paying for expensive lawyers before we see that answer, but there's no doubt that that will happen.

Now, Mr. Speaker, of course, I would just reiterate the fact that I'm very concerned about the values of this government. With the pieces of legislation that we've seen come forward so far – attacks on youth wages, attacks on overtime pay – I reflect on a comment that I had previously mentioned, that the Premier had made before he was the Premier, about a meeting that he had late into the evening. He was quite happy that he wasn't having this conversation with unionized workers because then he would have to pay them, I believe, time and a half, which, of course, now he's working to get rid of. So I suppose that issue has been fixed for the Premier, thankfully for him.

Of course, we've seen attacks on the abilities of our members to advocate on our behalf – I brought that up – and, further to that, giving members the ability to abstain, which really is not a good thing, in my opinion. I think we went into great detail about that. But we are sent here to have an opinion, to speak to our constituents, and to be willing to make the decision, and sometimes it's not an easy decision. You'll often find that when you bring conversations to the people of our communities, 50 per cent of people agree with something and 50 per cent of people don't, and it is our responsibility as members of this Legislature to make that final decision.

Now, I do not believe that the majority of my constituents or the majority of constituents of any people in this Legislature would believe that this legislation is in the best interests of the people of this province. The fact is that it is a bill that is pushing to bargain in bad faith. It is not something that any member of this Assembly should be happy to support, no matter the situation that our fiscal framework is in. I think that it's important to recognize the ability of public servants to collectively bargain, and this is an attack on that and once again is signalling what is to come.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is very concerning that, you know, we have 40 minutes left to debate on this piece of legislation. We've all been in here for the last week, for quite some time debating this piece of legislation, but really I haven't had a whole lot of opportunity to take this back to the people of my community. Now, I'm pretty sure that if I go and have that conversation, I know where they're going to sit. I don't think that government should be imposing such strong-handed legislation on the people of this province, and I think that they would for the most part agree. Of course, there will be certain people that disagree, but overall the people that work in my communities as teachers, educators, front-line nurses, social workers – the list goes on. But I think that they would be very concerned with what this piece of legislation signals.

Now, once again I would just say that the people of Alberta should take a strong look at this legislation and the process over the last week that we've seen here in the Assembly and really consider the values that a government that's willing to go forward in a process like this and bring a piece of legislation like this forward, what kind of values they're reflecting. We can see it in the history of this Premier, in his time as an MP, the way that he's voted on legislation, which we've debated before, but really also in his respect for public servants and, specifically, unions and their ability to collectively bargain and their ability to represent the members of their unions as well.

Of course, at the time in 2011, just going back to the piece of legislation, C-6, which I believe this member was a part of, I'm sure – Canada Post had a CEO, Deepak Chopra, not to be confused with the Deepak Chopra that had quotes like "Happiness is a continuation of happenings which are not resisted." He may have invoked that quote during his time while he was busting the union. It's very concerning because the Conservative government under Stephen Harper had appointed Deepak Chopra, and he was in direct conflict, being, I believe, an owner in an organization that was in direct conflict with the mandate of Canada Post.

We saw, through the union-busting that happened then, the right-to-work legislation that happened then, that they had very little regard for the public servants who were affected by these contract negotiations. Really, in that time of those negotiations and the proceedings of the House of Commons we saw a government that continuously tried to undermine the public service in order to convince the Canadian public that a private corporation could do the job better than a public organization could.

We are going to see that over the next four years. There's no doubt about that. We've heard this government twisting itself into pretzels talking about publicly funded health care, not talking about how it's going to be delivered. Not talking about how it's going to be delivered. So we will see this government constantly undermine the public servants of this province. We will see them continue to erode the ability of workers to unionize and to collectively bargain, and there is no doubt in my mind that at some point we will see this government impose right-to-work legislation on the people of Alberta, which will be struck down by the Supreme Court, too late, of course, but it will cost Alberta taxpayers a lot of money. If that doesn't happen and if this Premier doesn't end up invoking right-to-work legislation, then I suppose I will stand in this House at some point and say: I was wrong. But I really don't believe that I will be wrong on that point.

Mr. Speaker, with that being said, I think that we have a few other members here that do wish to speak to Bill 9 in the closing time that we have left. Very disappointed the way that this process has played out, I will not be supporting this legislation, and I suppose that is all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, and I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has risen.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Good morning to all. I believe that it's really important that we highlight the actual track record of this Premier and the work that he's done to undermine workers' rights, and I was hoping that the Member for Edmonton-West Henday could get up and share a little bit more of that history if he doesn't mind.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday should he choose to respond.

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm wishing I had grabbed some more water here. I do appreciate the comments from the member. Of course, once again, I mean, the actions that happened in 2011 were really one of the main reasons that I got involved with politics. I had grave concerns with the way that the Conservative Party of Canada was treating public servants across Canada, and I continue to be concerned about the conversations and the way that they're treated. Of course, the government continues to stand up, whether it's the front bench or the backbench, with the little time that they're willing to give discussion to this legislation, and they say: "We support these public servants. They work so hard. You know, we need them in our community, but we just need them to wait."

Really, as has been brought up several times in this House over the last week, many of these workers have not seen a wage increase, of course, negotiated earlier under our government – and some of these negotiations happened before – for between three and six years. I can imagine being in the private sector, and, of course, before being elected I was an electrician in the private sector. I can only imagine how I would feel as an employee going to an employer after three years and saying: "Look, you know, I've worked really hard for you. You've made some money. You're still doing good. You're profitable" – of course, the government might try and argue that – "and I think that I've worked hard enough. I think we should at least have a discussion about my compensation." Now, what this government is saying is: "Maybe just wait. Wait another year. Wait another couple of years if we had our way." I'm sure they would like to do that.

Of course, this legislation doesn't really give a real timeline about when negotiating these contracts will be finished. I'm sure that if they had it their way, it would be longer than the October 31 deadline that they have to even start discussing those negotiations. I can only imagine being an employee working hard for a company, going to my employer, saying, "You know, it's time to have this discussion," and them saying: "Well, we just need to wait. We just need to wait." That is what this government is telling the workers of this province, and it should concern them. I know it does concern them because these are nurses in our hospitals providing care to our seniors and our children. They are working very hard, and they deserve to be respected, a respect that this government is not providing them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, standing order 29(2)(a) is available. I see no one.

Anyone else wishing to speak to the bill?

Mr. Dang: Under 29(2)(a), Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: It was available, but we've moved on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

5:30

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 9 during this period of finality. I begin by echoing some of the words that I think describe the atmosphere that this legislation is creating in business in a province where the government is claiming that they're open for business, but the poisonous words that ring true when we look at this legislation are such words as: acrimony, disarray, disharmony, disorder, dissonance, turmoil, tumult, bedlam, disorganization, lawlessness. These are hardly the types of words to describe a province that is open for business, yet this is exactly the poisoned atmosphere that this type of legislation brings to bear because people who look towards a jurisdiction to do business want to make sure that they can do business and have their contract respected.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that I administered many, many contracts when I was in my real estate career. I had about six years as a sales manager, and during that time frame I had to arbitrate many, many situations with buyers and sellers. Usually if somebody was knocking on my door and they were salespeople, they were looking for permission to do something that they already knew they shouldn't be able to do. But if they were clients, either buyers or sellers, I never actually saw anybody in my 30 years and in my six years as a sales manager who wanted to unilaterally break a real estate contract just because they thought they should be able to get a better deal. Now, if somebody failed to complete a transaction, there were consequences. Many, many severe consequences would act as a brake on such behaviour. There were financial penalties, huge financial penalties, for breaking a contract, big consequences. On top of that, there were many, many exposures to potential lawsuits, which would also act as a brake.

For example, Mr. Speaker, I know that there was a situation, which was kind of a classic situation, where a widowed seller decided that she no longer wished to sell her property because her husband had been tragically killed and she sentimentally wanted to maintain her ownership of the house as a result. A young couple, a first-time homebuyer couple, had an offer, a binding contract, to buy the property. Upon seeking legal advice, the young couple discovered that, yes, they had rights to the house. Of course, they had some compassion for the widowed seller, but there indeed was a price to pay, even in those dire circumstances, whereby the widowed seller agreed to pay to the young couple who had contracted to buy her house in a binding contract $5,000 to basically relent and allow her to maintain her life estate in the house where she had lived with her late husband.

Consequences are very much something that people face if they break contracts. If indeed you're a government, those consequences are also there. But this government seems to be wanting to minimize those and suggest that in Alberta contracts aren't worth the paper that they're written on. This government is announcing to the world with this Bill 9 that people can't trust a contract written by the Alberta government. Whether it's labour negotiations, whether it's oil-by-rail contracts, whether it's electricity generation, open for business is not the sign that is on the door. It's: watch out; beware; your contract may actually be pulled out from underneath you.

That poisoned business atmosphere is something that this government is generating by creating disarray and disharmony with its labour negotiations, and this Bill 9 is a prime example of what people in business are going to come to expect from this province because they know that they can't really trust whether a contract that the province has entered into is going to be honoured in the final analysis regardless of what the Supreme Court of Canada has said.

Given that this atmosphere is poisoning the business climate in the province, I'm concerned about the long-term effects of Bill 9. I, therefore, Mr. Speaker, would like to move an amendment to Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act. I will give the original and all copies to the page and await your instructions.

The Speaker: That's exactly what I was going to suggest.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this will be referred to as REC1.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to this amendment, and it reads as follows. Notice of amendment to Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act. Mr. Dach to move that the motion for third reading of Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 9, Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act be not now read a third time, but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering sections 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5(a) and (c).

Given that the amendment has now been read and the title and the subject matter are before the House, I'd like to make a few comments if I may, to provide a little flesh to the bones of the matter. I did kind of do a bit of a backdrop on my concerns to Bill 9, and that will lead me to determine even more in depth why I think the atmosphere that I described by using adjectives such as "acrimony," "chaos," "disharmony," "dissonance," "disorder," "tumult," "turmoil," "bedlam," and "lawlessness" – these are words that describe the business atmosphere that is being created by such actions as contemplated by Bill 9, where a binding labour contract is basically being torn up and the government is thinking that there will be no consequences to it, but indeed there are consequences to tearing up a binding contract.

We will see it reflected in the type of reputation that this province receives as a result of people losing confidence in the government. If you do end up doing what this Bill 9 contemplates, simply tearing up a binding agreement, it is contrary to Supreme Court direction that all governments, all contracts in fact, all parties to a contract have an obligation to deal in good faith, to be honest in their performance of those contracts. This flies in the face of that doctrine, that the Supreme Court of Canada established in a 2014 case that I've tabled in this House.

There are other historical bits of legislation that this government has already enacted or proposed to do. They've proposed to cancel the oil-by-rail contracts. They're looking at changing the electrical generation mechanisms in the province and tearing up existing contracts. They're looking at other labour negotiations, and in each case, Mr. Speaker, there's a risk to the province of having its reputation permanently damaged by the operation of this government, who will demonstrate to businesses that they can't trust to contract with this province. They don't know in the future if, indeed, this government will honour that contract. You get a pattern of disregarding legally binding contracts, and it's going to end up in reputational damage to the province.

I'm really concerned that the so-called open-for-business shingle that this government wants to hang on the province is one that is thin paper, indeed. You cannot go ahead and say on one hand that you're open for business and on the other hand that you won't honour the contracts that you enter into. It's a shameful practice.

I mean, if I ended up having clients in the real estate business who would enter into a binding contract, an unconditional contract, signed, sealed, and delivered, and they decided they just wanted to walk on it, I certainly wouldn't be advising them to be my client the second time around. The second thing: I'd be doing them a favour by inviting them to get legal opinions right off the bat. We're going to end up costing this province millions and millions of dollars, Mr. Speaker, as a result of lawsuits that end up being filed against this government for passing legislation such as this, which negates by legislation binding negotiated labour contracts, and those costs are going to be borne by the taxpayers, of course, and those dollars are going to be spent by a provincial government, which indeed is doing so, creating a war room of their own against labour in this province. They like creating war rooms and this particular one is going to be aimed at their own citizens. It's a shame that this government sees fit to spend what will probably be millions and millions of dollars on frivolous lawsuits when they know, in fact, that they're going to lose those lawsuits. That war room, that war chest of provincial dollars is aimed directly at working people who are employed by the government that purportedly values their services, so it behooves me to see the rationale behind this.

The government simply looks to save money. They're looking to balance the budget, but in the same way that other Conservative governments have done so in this province over the decades, where on paper they have a balanced book but there's an infrastructure deficit, there's a deficit in services, there's a deficit that's not shown on paper that we ended up paying for for decades and we still are paying for from past Conservative governments, yet the claim is still made that we balanced the books.

Well, I'll tell you what. The books may have shown a clean slate, but the truth is that the public suffered greatly, whether it was in diminished health care services, whether it was in infrastructure that never got built, whether it was in 250 schools that our past government was actually trying to complete. That deficit is something that caused pain and hurt and damage and that we're still paying for.

Member Loyola: Deferred maintenance is one.

Mr. Dach: Pardon me?

Member Loyola: Deferred maintenance on some of those buildings.

Mr. Dach: Oh. Deferred maintenance is another thing as well.

I mean, the cost of that is not just seen in, you know, damage to your car, but it's also seen in the children that don't end up having schools that are properly functioning, they're in larger classrooms, they don't have educational assistants that they are in need of.

I'm concerned, Mr. Speaker, that we're going down the same path here that we've seen before. Like we've all seen this movie in this province before, where you're going to see similar things, particularly maybe a backhanded swipe at Edmonton in terms of projects that get put on the back burner, like our LRT and public transit projects that got pushed down the road for decades because we had the audacity to vote the wrong way in Edmonton.

I know that our mayor is concerned about that as well. I know that there are infrastructure projects in the health care system that, particularly in my own riding of Edmonton-McClung, I'm very, very concerned about. We've announced a $65 million construction project for a brand new emergency department at the Misericordia hospital when we were government. I attended that announcement with the then Health minister, and I'm very, very concerned that that project is going to be sent to the dustbin, collateral damage of this government's decision that it wants to have a paper balanced budget, but of course the deficit remains, the deficit in infrastructure spending in particular. That type of thinking has created the current emergency department at the Misericordia hospital right now. It is in dire, dire need of replacement, yet we may end up seeing that hospital needing a new ward for decades more to come.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) has expired, and I see the hon. Member for Calgary-South East is rising to speak to the main bill.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act: pretty self-explanatory to me, but if you listen to the members opposite, this delay is an attack on unions. I very much see it in their interests and in the interests of all Albertans. The entire purpose of this deferral is to get this right, to ensure that Alberta has and will continue to have . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. We're under 29(2)(a), and I know you asked to speak to the main bill. It's my mistake. I'll call on you to speak to the main bill immediately following Standing Order 29(2)(a).

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is rising under Standing Order 29(2)(a), and he was rising when I inappropriately asked the Member for Calgary-South East.

The Opposition House Leader is rising on perhaps a point of order or something?

Point of Order Speaking Time

Mr. Bilous: Correct, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if we can get the time back that was just used, considering that we're on closure.

The Speaker: Oh, yes. There'll be five minutes of 29(2)(a), and the approximately 90 seconds prior to my noticing my error will be added at 6:53, the end of the debate. It will now be at 6:55.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was questioning what was going on there. I was, like: what's going on? Mr. Speaker must be tired perhaps, missing out on that 29(2)(a).

Debate Continued

Member Loyola: Well, I think it's really important, the comments from the Member for Edmonton-McClung in discussing very intently the effects of balancing this budget on the backs of public-sector workers. It's not just about balancing the books on the backs of public-sector workers. It's that the services that those public service workers provide to the good citizens of this province are also going to be negatively impacted. I was hoping that the Member for Edmonton-McClung could highlight a little bit more about what those effects will be as it relates to the history of this province and how that was dealt with before under previous Conservative governments that also took the opportunity to balance the books on the backs of public-sector workers here in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has approximately three minutes remaining.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I was mentioning in my remarks, there are prime examples of exactly what the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was alluding to right in my constituency. Of course, first of all, I was talking about the need for an emergency department to be completely built, brand new, on the west end of the Misericordia hospital. I've had occasion to have family members attend that emergency department, the existing one, over the last year or so, unfortunately more than once, and I have visited there as the MLA as well to witness exactly how those front-line workers are having to make do with a very, very old and ill laid out emergency department, operating with basically hallway medicine because they don't have the capacity and the room. That emergency department should have been rebuilt a long, long time ago, well before our four-year term began, and the medical practitioners there, the administration of that hospital, the board, and the community leaders have been begging for that to be rebuilt.

We did ensure that we had funds committed to get that project under way, and I know that the design and planning for it are well under way, yet I fear that given the rumblings from this government about having to perhaps tear up labour contracts to balance the budget, to look at everything a second time around to determine if indeed the project is really needed, to me, it threatens the fact that these things might actually not go ahead.

Another project, the southwest Henday twinning. The two lanes that were going to be added, one north, one south, on that leg of the Henday are something that the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Transportation were talking about in question period the other day, and that leads me to be concerned that it wasn't the lead-up to say that, yes, indeed, it's going to be going ahead. It concerns me that the Minister of Transportation is going to be saying: "Oops. Too bad, so sad. We took a look at it, and we know there's crushing traffic there in every rush hour, but we just don't have the money right now. We're going to put that off and kick that can down the road." Then we are going to be in the southwest part of that Henday bumper to bumper morning, noon, and night because that roadway needs the extra lanes.

I think that people in Calgary should be concerned about their roadway, the ring road project, as well because of the same thing. Everything is under the microscope right now, and if indeed the government is intent on being as ruthless as it seems to be to reach the so-called balanced budget nirvana, I think that many things are going to be on the chopping block, and it scares me a lot. So this is a concern.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Now we are back on the main bill, on which the hon. Member for Calgary-South East would like to join the debate.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, again, Mr. Speaker. Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act: pretty self-explanatory to me, but if you listen to the members opposite, this delay is an attack on unions. I very much see it in their interests and in the interests of all Albertans. The entire purpose of this deferral is to get this right, to ensure Alberta has and will continue to have high-quality and sustainable services for the long term. I have to wonder: do the members opposite really not see the value in a brief deferral of negotiations until our government has full information on the state of Alberta's finances? I suppose it's difficult for the members opposite to appreciate the value of properly considering all the information before acting, particularly when it relates to government spending.

When the NDP were in power, there wasn't a problem that billions of hard-earned Albertan tax dollars couldn't fix. The power purchase agreements fiasco? Meh, just a couple of billion dollars. Coal power plants taking too long to naturally phase out and providing too much employment: $1.3 billion. Failure to advance the energy industry and secure pipelines might hurt us in the election: $3.7 billion in rail contracts it is. And if we bundle a superlab and laundry, we can get it for under a billion dollars. Fiscal responsibility and fabric softener: I love it. I wonder what their reaction was when they got the bill, the $60 billion receipt for their poorly planned expenditures, probably something along the lines of: we should ramp up this carbon tax that nobody wants.

But I know what Albertans' reaction was. On April 16 Albertans fired the NDP as their financial managers. On April 16 Albertans could literally no longer afford an NDP government. My guess is that the NDP government didn't plan for that, just like they didn't plan when they blew through Albertans' hard-earned tax dollars over and over and over. We have committed to fix the financial disaster created by the NDP government and to approach all government spending with prudence and proper consideration. We have also committed to high-quality and sustainable health care and education, and that is what Bill 9 is about and the reason I support it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for a brief question and comment.

Seeing none, any others wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South is rising to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is always a pleasure to get up in this place and speak, especially when my hon. colleague from Edmonton-McClung moves an amendment. I think this amendment is something that is so important, that all members of the Assembly have the opportunity to debate. Unfortunately, we won't as the government has used time allocation to stifle free speech and democracy in this place today. But I think it's important that we look at the content of this amendment and at the content of the bill and realize how important it is that we have the opportunity to recommit this to Committee of the Whole.

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

While this government pushed forward and rammed this legislation through in the cloud of darkness, in the shadow of darkness, through the night, the people that this will be affecting were either working shift work and unable to follow the debate, or perhaps they were sleeping as they were anticipating a busy day ahead of them here, Mr. Speaker. Instead, we now see that the time has come when many of them will be rising, many of the people under the charge of the ministers right here, like the Minister of Environment and Parks. His very parks and forestry workers will be rising right now. Their alarms will be going off shortly, and they'll have the opportunity to tune into Assembly TV and watch us debate here as their rights are taken away, as that minister votes to take the rights away from his own workers.

That's something that we should have an opportunity to debate, the important amendments that we would have in Committee of the Whole, and be able to consider the clauses in a more thorough way in front of Albertans and to have people actually observe what is being brought forward here. Bringing through the bill with closure in the shadow of darkness is the opposite of open government, it's the opposite of transparency, and it shows that this government has no respect for the democratic process, has no respect for showing Albertans the truth of what is going on with this bill, about how this bill was a bad-faith bargaining bill, how it does none of the things the government purports that it will do. The government has spoken at length about how it's simply a delay in process, but indeed it's actually an attack on rights. It's an attack on the constitutional rights of workers, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, it's an attack on the constitutional rights of workers who this government is charged and sworn to protect and who have served our great province of Alberta. I think that's a shame.

I heard at some great length members of the government speak today and last night as well, and I think they spoke at length about how their constituents supported them attacking the rights of their fellow Albertans. Frankly, I find that pretty hard to believe. As we have moved through the very few days the government has granted for debate on this bill, we here in the opposition heard from hundreds and thousands of Albertans who are so strongly opposed to this bill. They are so strongly opposed to this bill, and they've asked us why we can't just make some amendments to make it better, to make a bad bill better. That's something that I know you, Mr. Speaker, have used in the past at length as a term to try to improve bills of the government. I think that you would appreciate that the opposition today is trying to make a bad bill better. Bringing it back to Committee of the Whole to bring back more of those amendments and allow Albertans to watch us bring back more of those amendments: I think that would be something that all members should welcome, to have that open debate and have that open discussion here in the Assembly.

I know that there are going to be people that are waking up right now and tuning in, and perhaps they haven't realized because there's been so little debate. The government has stifled debate to such an extent, and they've forced it through in such a short amount of time, only, really, three days of actual debate here, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps they haven't realized that their rights are about to be stricken away, stolen from them, and that the government is about to attack their very livelihoods and their families. That's something that I think teachers and nurses and paramedics and forestry and parks workers and so on will be very concerned about, when they find out what the government has done in the shadow of darkness here. I think that that's something that all members should be aware of, should be concerned about.

I mean, there are over 180,000 workers that are going to be affected by this. It affects many unions across this province and many of the workers that work under this government, and those workers deserve the opportunity to have this discussion in the House. Really, our constituents deserve the opportunity to have this discussion in the House. When we look at what this bill does, what this bill does is that it goes after our workers, it goes after the people who are trying their hardest to make this province a better place, and it goes after the people that work in every single one of our constituencies. It doesn't matter who we are in this Assembly or where we come from in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker; every single one of us has public servants that work in our ridings and live in our ridings. I think those public servants and those public service workers deserve the opportunity to have their MLAs speak on their behalf here.

It's really important that the government has chosen to stifle debate and not have that happen and not have their members talk about why they think it's okay to attack the people that live in their ridings, attack the families that live in their ridings. But that's the government's prerogative. I mean, it's their prerogative, again, to disrespect this Assembly and hand out earplugs and put them in all throughout the night. It's the Premier's prerogative to do what I consider one of the most offensive things I've seen in the last four and some years that I've been here. Indeed, some members who have been here longer than me would say, Mr. Speaker, that they've never seen anything like it. They've never seen a Premier disrespect this Assembly in such an obvious way.

That's something that I think is really shocking. It sets the tone for the next four years of debate here, Mr. Speaker. Really, Albertans are watching. Albertans are watching the government not listen, essentially. They're watching the government intentionally obstruct our ability to speak to them in this Assembly. That's something that's a real shame. I would say that the Premier should be ashamed and the government should be ashamed that they are using such childish tactics. But, really, I know they're not ashamed. They've said as much. So, really, I feel almost embarrassed for them. I think that they should get up in this House and apologize for disrespecting democracy. They should get up in this House and apologize for disrespecting the process of democracy here and how we should be allowed to debate in this House. If the government feels that Albertans don't deserve to have a voice and that the voice that Albertans do have shouldn't be listened to, then that is the government's prerogative as well.

I mean, sometimes, Mr. Speaker, elected officials need to learn that their job is indeed to be here and debate and not to complain about the hours that we have to put in, because what we do is try to pass the best possible legislation for Albertans. This amendment would allow us to do that. It would allow us to go back and re-examine the clauses of this bill. It would allow us to make further changes that would make a bad bill better, and that's something that I think all Albertans would want to see this government allow and do here. I think they would actually prefer to see this government rescind their time allocation and allow proper debate so that Albertans could be notified of what will happen here. But we know that's not going to happen. I'd hope that we can go back to committee and make some changes to make a bad bill better. That is all this opposition wants to do. I know that my colleagues on this side of the House have spoken at length on why this bill is bad, why this bill attacks the rights of workers, attacks the rights of unions.

Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to say that it attacks the rights of unions because I know that "unions" isn't a bad word. Some of the members of the government caucus may – what that shows is a blatant disregard for the rights of people that live in our ridings. It's not just the ridings on the opposition side here; it's ridings all across this province in every single community. We need people like nurses, like teachers, like paramedics to take care of us in our communities and take care of our families and take care of our kids as they go to school. We don't want to be hanging these large, heavy, illegal, Constitution-breaking acts over their heads when they should be trying to focus on manning the emergency rooms or taking care of kids and teaching them in our classrooms.

It's a shame that the government either doesn't understand that or they just don't care. Mr. Speaker, the longer and longer we go on here and as the opposition members have spoken quite at length here as to why this is a bad bill and why it needs to go back to committee and have the concepts brought forward, it becomes pretty clear they either are wilfully not listening – I mean, the earplugs can probably speak to that – or they really don't care. I think that perhaps there's a bit of both going on there. Their lack of regard for the workers that they're attacking that are under their charge is blatantly obvious. As we see, the minister has refused to speak to this bill. We see that the minister has refused to speak at length to the importance of taking away their rights and why their rights are not as important as any other workers' rights in this province.

I think there is a bit of both here. They don't want to learn how much this hurts families and how much this hurts workers in this province. They also don't care, and they don't care to learn either, Mr. Speaker. When they wear bright orange earplugs in this place, it's an affront to democracy. It's an affront to this Chamber. It's an affront to the members of this Assembly. [interjection] As members of the government laugh at that, I think that's actually something that they should be embarrassed about because they're laughing at hundreds of years of tradition of us having parliaments in the Westminster system to debate in these Assemblies.

That is why we were sent here. That is why we were sent to this Legislature, to debate and hear perspectives from all sides of the Assembly. That is why we are Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, Mr. Speaker. That is why we are given that title. We are entitled to be here and have speech and debate in this Assembly. But government members don't think that's important. They would rather put in their earplugs and tap away on their phones and their laptops. That speaks to how little they care about what Albertans have to say and hear in this Assembly. It's something that really is disappointing.

I would say that they should be ashamed, but again I know they aren't ashamed. I would say that, really, the members of the opposition here and, I think, Albertans are disappointed that the Premier would have a long-winded conversation across the entire Chamber instead of listening to debate that he was sent here to do in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker. I mean, that's something that's his prerogative, but I think that Albertans expect better. Albertans expect a Premier that isn't going to play childish games, isn't going to walk around giggling, handing out earplugs in the middle of the night. They expect a Premier that's going to work for Albertans. I don't think that when they elected this Premier, they expected him to be walking around giggling like a schoolchild, handing out earplugs in this Assembly.

It's a matter of fact. That's what he did. We all saw it here in this Assembly. I think it's something that's very important to point out on the record, that he walked around this entire Chamber, disrespecting the members who were speaking, just to hand out tools that would obstruct his own members from being able to hear the debate. That's something that I think is shameful. I know the Premier is not ashamed, but I think it's something that Albertans are disappointed in. Albertans expected better and Albertans want better from a Premier who purported to state – in fact, the Premier made a video at quite a bit of length during the campaign that stated: you will miss graduations, and you will spend long nights in the Assembly, and you will be fighting for the rights of all Albertans. Instead, what we see is the Premier deciding that the Assembly is a place for games and fun and deciding that he just wants to go around and hang out with his friends.

Mr. Speaker, that's the Premier's prerogative, but instead the opposition will stand here and fight in this House.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j), language that creates disorder. The hon. member is talking in great detail, making, quite frankly, accusations against the Premier, his intent to create disorder in this Chamber, against every member of the government's intent to create disorder in the Chamber. First of all, I find that ironic, coming from that member, from that party as well. If anybody who has been in here has ever watched a question period lately, they would know which party in this Assembly is going out of their way to create disorder and, quite frankly, would also know the great work the Premier has done bringing order to this Chamber. I've enjoyed the calmness of this side of the House, as I'm sure you have.

When that member gets up and makes those types of accusations against the hon. Premier, the Premier of the province, who's sitting in here this evening, listening to the speech of that hon. member, who could then present something beside making accusations against the Premier, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that that language creates disorder.

The Acting Speaker: Is anybody else wishing to speak?

Mr. Dang: Mr. Speaker, this is clearly a matter of debate, a debate of the facts of what happened here in this Assembly. The hon. Government House Leader spoke to how I was intending to create disorder in this Assembly. As you can clearly see and hear, no disorder was created. So I'd ask you to rule that it's not a point of order and allow me to continue with my speech.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much, Member. You know, I was about to rise myself. I think you were treading a little bit on the edge there about causing some disruption in the House, so I would caution you to reflect on the amendment to the bill and speak to that, please.

Debate Continued

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I mean, very clearly here the stifling of debate continues. This Assembly would do well to go back to committee and speak at length on how we can improve this bill rather than plugging their ears and pretending that this bill won't hurt workers.

[The Speaker in the chair]

But, really, we know that's not true. That's why we've moved this amendment. That's why it's important, this amendment. It's because we know that we need to go back and not hand out earplugs. We need to go back and take those earplugs back, if the Premier would take them back from his members, and then allow them to listen to the debate in this Assembly, allow the committee to proceed with its good work.

Unfortunately, the committee was not able to proceed with its good work, perhaps because of what the Premier did earlier by handing out those earplugs so that his members could not hear what the members of the opposition and other members who spoke in this Assembly were proposing. I think that's something that Albertans are going to be disappointed about, Mr. Speaker. I think it's something that members of the opposition here are disappointed about. But that is the prerogative of the government, to disrespect this Assembly, to disrespect the process of this Assembly and disrespect the process of Committee of the Whole.

That's why I think it's important that we recommit to Committee of the Whole. If we go back, we can then have that debate properly.

The Premier could apologize for trying to disrupt this House by not allowing his own members to hear this debate. Then we'd be able to have that discussion and move those amendments that are important to this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, at great length I might add that we could have added many amendments that would have made a bad bill better. I mean, those are words you've used yourself while you were on this side of this House, that sometimes there's a bad bill that the government introduces and the opposition just wants to make it better. I think that's what was happening here.

I mean, obviously, the Premier didn't think his members should listen to suggestions for improvement. Those are the facts. I mean, he walked around and handed out devices to impair the listening of members. I think that's something that is an affront to the democracy of this House. It's an affront to us being able to do our jobs in this House. Our job is to speak to all members of the Assembly. I think that is something that we in the opposition here are proud to do. We're proud to speak on behalf of our constituents and on behalf of all workers in Alberta, who are having their rights taken away. As they wake up right now, I'm sure they're turning on their radios and turning on their TVs to Assembly TV, Mr. Speaker. They're watching in this Assembly right now that their rights are being taken away. The members' and minister's own workers who are under their charge are waking up right now and realizing that the minister is about to vote to take their rights away.

I think that's a shame, so I'd encourage all members to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has risen.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, due to my proximity, can't help but enjoy the debate from my colleague from Edmonton-South. Indeed, it would be fair to say that there is no other quite like the MLA for Edmonton-South here in this Assembly, and I would appreciate the opportunity to hear him conclude his thoughts on this particular bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I endeavour to always keep my comments as brief and succinct as I can, and that is why I would take this opportunity to speak at just a little bit of length as to why it's so important we bring this back to committee. The very act of obstructing the committee from doing its work earlier, I think, should mean that we should go back and do that work properly and not wear the earplugs and not ignore the amendments and not ignore the concerns that are being raised by duly elected members of this Assembly.

I think every member of this Assembly should listen to the amendments. They should get up and actually speak to the amendments, and they should get up and do what we were sent here to do and what is our job, which is to debate legislation in this House, to have strong and thoughtful debate on how we can make bills better in this Assembly. I think that any member who accepted those earplugs from the Premier when he went around handing them out, giggling like a schoolgirl, during Committee of the Whole, which we should recommit back to, should come and apologize to this Assembly for disrespecting other members in this House in such a gross manner.

It is a gross disrespect to this Assembly to try and ignore what other members have to say, to try and disrespect and disregard what other members have to say and not do the work that their constituents sent them here for. I've spoken quite a bit at length about how it is disrespectful to this Assembly, but I think what it's more disrespectful to is their own constituents, because their constituents are the ones that expect them to do debate in this Assembly, especially in Committee of the Whole, where substantive amendments are brought forward, which is what we're trying to recommit to right now. Especially in Committee of the Whole, where substantive amendments can make bad bills better, you would expect your MLAs and your elected officials to listen and reflect and consider whether to make changes. Unfortunately, it looks like the government members chose not to. They chose to disrespect democracy in this place, and that's why I want to give them a second chance.

I believe in second chances. I believe people can change, so I'd like to give all members of the Assembly a second chance to get up in committee and apologize for disrespecting us the first time and disrespecting their constituents the first time and then have a strong debate and reconsider amendments and consider whether we should move forward with this bill or not or whether we should make a bad bill better, Mr. Speaker. That's something I think is very important. I see members of the government are laughing away over there because they think it's not important to listen to debate in this House, that it's not important to have a strong, thoughtful discussion in this House. That's the prerogative of those members, especially the government whip, who doesn't have to do his job here in the Assembly and listen to debate and vote on bills here. I mean, the government actually introduced changes to the standing orders so they could abstain from their job, and that's their prerogative, but I think that we should go back to Committee of the Whole so that we can have that debate, so we can do our jobs and make a bad bill better.

We can improve the legislation that's been brought here to this Assembly. It's something that I wish and I hope all members would be open to. I think that certainly members of the government caucus and government backbench understand how disgraceful it is to disrespect this Assembly and their constituents, and I hope they get up and apologize for that, Mr. Speaker. I think that this is a really important amendment, that we should go back to committee and consider those amendments that were neglected in the first place and then have proper discussion on them. I think that discussion would improve our outcomes of this bill. It would make it so that our workers who are having their rights taken away this morning with very little opportunity to speak under the cover of darkness – I think that those workers would appreciate it if we had the opportunity to go back to Committee of the Whole. Those workers would appreciate it if we could have some of that debate. Now, I believe that the sun is probably coming up outside a little bit, Mr. Speaker, so with some sunlight they would appreciate being able to listen and see the debate that is happening in this Chamber and understand the ramifications this will have for their families, for their communities, and for the ability for them to service their communities as public workers.

I encourage everyone to accept this amendment. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are on the main bill. I might just add that you can both sit down at this point in time. I've made my decision about who I'll recognize. I just want to provide a little bit of commentary.

As I was unable to have the pleasure of hearing all of the comments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-South, I thank the chair who was able to rule on the point of order. What I might just say is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-South might use significantly more caution when making accusations about other members in the Chamber, particularly when members of both the government and the opposition have had electronic devices that may impair their hearing for whatever reason they might choose to do that. Whether they're working on other things, I have noticed many members in the Chamber throughout the night with earphones and other things. I would just perhaps provide some additional caution to the Member for Edmonton-South.

With that, I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein, who has risen to speak to the debate.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to, before I get into this, note how proud I am of our Premier and his efforts to not only raise the level of decorum but also, as a result, the dialogue in this House, which is something that I heard loud and clear from my constituents in Calgary-Klein as I was door-knocking and the general frustration about the decorum and the dialogue and the debate that was happening in the past. The fact is that, again, over the last several hours we have had a great back-and-forth discussion in this House. We have heard from several government members as well as several opposition members on this topic. I would say that this has been one of the best evenings of debate that we have had. I think it speaks to our commitment to having a good dialogue.

The other thing I wanted to quickly note – and thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your comments on this. Again, I don't want this to turn into a game of tattletale, but as we've had members that have been kindly pointing out actions, whether or not they were actually happening in this House when the member was saying that, talking about the importance of listening to the debate and hearing from the opposition: I have been paying attention. I've been thoughtfully sitting here and paying attention and hearing what each of the members has had to say, but while I've been watching and listening to you guys, I've also observed members in this House reading comic books, racy comic books, in front of me and the Member for Edmonton-City Centre and the Member for Edmonton-South doing online shopping while we were in here, while I'm trying to listen to the members here.

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader has risen on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, point of order: 23(h), (i), and (j). The reason why earlier the Member for Edmonton-South raised the question about recording was because the member for – forgive me; I don't know the constituency.

Mr. Getson: Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you.

Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland had divulged himself what he was doing, which was listening to the amps or measuring the volume of the House, which was divulged on his own.

Members, there is a tradition in this House that members do not identify members, nor what they are doing, whether they are working on other projects, signing cards, writing correspondence, working online, which, of course, Mr. Speaker, you will be very well aware of – I apologize; my words are not coming so quickly to me at this hour.

The Member for Calgary-Klein, by calling out members: I believe that falls in line with speaking about absences or the members that aren't present as well. I jumped up on a point of order because I think the member should cease going down this path that he is going on.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, first, Mr. Speaker, I'll be brief because of the hour, and I know that time is important to the opposition. I do sympathize a little bit. The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein used to tattletale on me quite often when we were younger as well, so I hear that argument.

With that said, though, while I do sympathize with that, I do want to point out that the hon. Member for Edmonton-South just spent about 15 minutes in this Chamber calling out individual members of this Chamber. I know the Speaker has addressed that, so I don't want to spend too much time on that. I want to respect that, but the point is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-South called out individual members of this Chamber and asked them to rise to explain these types of things, including the hon. Member for Calgary-Klein, who, from what I see, is rising to address the direct question that was asked by the Member for Edmonton-South, and he is using examples of members of the Opposition House Leader's party who are on their computers looking at cartoons or online shopping or those types of things. I think his point is well taken.

Mr. Speaker, with that said, I will encourage my little brother from Calgary-Klein to move on with his comments.

The Speaker: Thank you for the interjections. I don't think that we need to hear from the Member for Calgary-Klein on this particular issue, as I'm prepared to rule.

Herein lies the challenge before the Assembly. When members effort to walk down this road of making accusations, saying that this member is doing that or otherwise, both the Member for Edmonton-South and now the Member for Calgary-Klein, decorum in the Chamber is inevitably going to deteriorate and create disorder. I am sympathetic to the position that the Opposition House Leader has raised about how we treat each other in this Assembly, and members have a smattering of responsibilities that they need to take care of. The challenge here is that the decision that the Member for Calgary-Klein has made is to bring issues to the debate that are not necessarily all that relevant to the issue that is at hand. The issue that we are debating is a recommittal motion on the bill, Bill 9, and if both the Member for Edmonton-South and the Member for Calgary-Klein had kept their remarks more relevant with respect to the amendment, my sense is that decorum would not have deteriorated. As such, I would encourage the Member for Calgary-Klein to get back to the matter at hand and for all members, for the remaining time that we have left today, to focus purely on what is relevant to the debate in this Chamber.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly want to get back to the topic at hand. I'm certainly new in the Chamber, too, learning about this process from veterans in this Chamber and following their example. Thank you for the direction on that, and we'll move on. Again, we've heard a lot of debate in the House in regard to whether or not we're paying attention. I just wanted to make sure that the folks in the House – we rebutted and made sure that it was noted that we are sitting here. We are paying attention, and we are excited to be a part of this debate.

With that, I'll get to it a little bit here. Getting back to this debate, we were talking about the importance of hearing from our constituents, knowing that that's what I've been doing and spending my time doing. I also wanted to note that I have several family members that are public servants. I have a sister-in-law who is a nurse. I have a brother who is a teacher. I have another sister-in-law who is a paramedic. I have another sister-in-law who's a lab tech. The hon. House leader and myself have lots of opportunity at family events to hear from our government workers in addition to what we're hearing from our own constituents.

One of the big things that I continuously hear from front-line government workers is the need to improve overall efficiency in our system, that we have so many opportunities to get better value from our government services. Again, this is part of why I think we need to make sure that we're getting all the information that we possibly can in order to inform our decisions on how we move forward as a government when it comes to public services, taking that time to hear from them, to dig into this, and make sure that we have all the best information available for us to move forward. It's about due process, emphasizing that effort to take that time and hear from our front lines.

I think the other thing we've heard a lot from, too, is just this concern over growing and mounting government debt and the need to have a sustainable path forward, so taking the time to figure that out. Again, that's why I commend the Minister of Finance and our Premier and this government for that fiscal responsibility, and I'm very proud of government and its efforts to do that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, we are back on the amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to what we know is the final reading for Bill 9. You know, "To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven." That's from, of course, the Book of Ecclesiastes, the man Solomon, his book of poetry, just recognizing that things move in cycles. We begin at one side; we move to the other. Here in this Chamber every day we can look up and we can see the sunrise and the sunset courtesy of Alberta indigenous artist Mr. Alex Janvier. On this bill again we find ourselves coming full circle in our debate, in our discussion; indeed, recognizing that, as I said earlier, this is a story we have seen played out before under many different Conservative governments in this province.

Indeed, you know, that bit from Ecclesiastes in some ways talks about futility, the futility of committing the same actions over and over and not seeming to get ahead, recognizing there are natural cycles. But then there are these sorts of situations; again, we have this government which is moving forward and bringing legislation to break contracts with Albertans. Now, the Minister of Finance rose and he spoke earlier on this particular bill, the bill in which, I would dare say, speaking of seasons, anyone trying to keep an eye on the shifting seasons of this particular bill as this government rushes it forward would probably get a severe case of whiplash, noting that they're in such a rush to move forward on this through the seasons, to plant the seed and reap their fruit, then plunge us into, seemingly, our winter of discontent.

But this minister rose in this House and he attempted to, in his view, clarify what the intent of this bill is and what the government is trying to do. He said that it would be fiscally irresponsible for this government not to go in and break contracts with workers. Mr. Speaker, what I would say the responsible thing is is to honour a deal that is made. The responsible thing is for government not to set the precedent that when it is convenient for them, that when it works better for their particular interests, they will simply use the heavy arm of the law to reach in and break contracts at their whim.

You know, often in this House we talk about uncertainty; indeed, members of the government caucus when they were in opposition talked often about the damage that was done by creating uncertainty for businesses. They claimed that business didn't know which way the government was going to turn, what they were going to do, or how they could possibly invest and do their best to create prosperity in Alberta.

Well, I dare say, Mr. Speaker, as I noted in a question the other day to the Minister of Health, that uncertainty works for workers, too, and this government is choosing to create tremendous uncertainty in the public sector. For all the promises that they make standing in this House, for all the lovely words that they are finally coming around to saying, as they realize the attention that is being paid, the potential damage this is doing to their political capital, we recognize that they are creating uncertainty amongst our public service. I've heard it from many. My colleagues have talked about the others that they have spoken to who have heard it, too. They do not trust this government – indeed, why should they? – when this is the first step that they choose to take in their interactions with the public service in this province.

The minister talked about wanting to be sure that we had a fair process – a fair process – as government exercises its unilateral ability to reach in and break a contract, to break a deal. At which point now can workers ever trust that the government is not simply ever going to do that again, simply choose whenever it likes? If it dislikes the way a particular negotiation has gone, if it decides that it needs to change things for its own political convenience, that it's not simply going to rise in this House and again table a bill like this and force it through in the dead of night? That is not a fair process, Mr. Speaker.

Indeed, the minister spoke about how not bringing forward this bill would be unfair to Albertans. Mr. Speaker, as I also noted the other day in my question to the Minister of Health, we are talking about Albertans, Albertans who sat down and had their representatives negotiate a fair deal. This is why I believe that this bill needs to be referred. These Albertans put their trust in their elected representatives. They participated in the set rules and processes of a system, that was there to protect them and their interests, in which they participated in good faith, and indeed our government did as well.

They signed a deal that they expected to be upheld in good faith, and this government is breaking it. That, Mr. Speaker, is unfair to those Albertans. Indeed, if this is where the government goes in terms of treating the very workers that it employs, for whom it is directly responsible, how can we trust them in good faith in any other aspect of their work? How can we trust them in business relationships or other contracts that this government may undertake if this government is simply willing to tear up, shred a deal when it's for their convenience?

The minister said that this is not a step they take lightly. Well, it's certainly a step they took rather quickly, Mr. Speaker. It's a step they took without giving any indication to Albertans that this was something they were looking at doing. Even though, I would suspect, they were well aware of this during the election campaign, they chose to hide that from Albertans. They told them that they would strike their blue-ribbon panel.

I cannot believe that this Premier, a man who I have clearly seen is a man of deep study, a very strategic thinker, who informs himself very well before he takes an action or before he moves forward, did not understand the implications of what was coming forward with public service contracts. I find it hard to believe that he was suddenly blindsided on entering office. Yet he and his members made absolutely no mention of the fact that they would, by force of law, force – not ask, not politely work with or negotiate but force – public-sector workers in the province of Alberta to forgo the rights that they duly negotiated in their contract.

Now, we recognize that the government has this impending deadline tomorrow. As the arbitration would continue, they want to make sure that they push this law through so that they can break that contract before they have to deal with that, again, to act in bad faith for their own convenience. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I don't care whether they took this step lightly or not. The fact that they are taking it is an insult to public-sector workers in this province, the fact that they are willing to tear up these contracts, that were negotiated in good faith, with barely a shred of notice to those on whom they are imposing this.

This has all taken place, Mr. Speaker, within the span of a week. Again, anyone trying to keep track of this government's movement on this bill could well get whiplash. We know that this government has chosen to impose closure in this. They have chosen to limit debate, to limit us to only the few days that we have had in this Assembly, in which we as the opposition have diligently tried to make the best use of that time as we can to make sure that Albertans will be aware of the decision this government is making. Indeed, if this government is as proud of what they are doing as they claim they are, then by all means they should be quite happy to have Albertans fully understand it and be informed about it.

We've taken what opportunity we have available to make that known, to make that clear. I know our time is still limited. We don't have too much of it left this morning, so I won't take up too much more of it myself. But I will say that I have appreciated this opportunity to be here to represent the voice of my constituents, indeed, to take a break at times. Whether or not the Member for Calgary-Klein appreciates my taste in reading material or the random Internet ads that might pop up around it, I can tell you that Action Comics featuring Superman is an entertaining read.

That said, I appreciate the stamina of all members of this Assembly in taking part in this debate this evening. I've made it quite clear what I think of the government's intentions and plans with this bill. They've made it quite clear how they view that. In about 20 minutes we will have our vote, and then from there it will be up to Albertans to judge.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. I see the hon. Member for Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you. I just had a couple of comments or thoughts that I wanted to share this morning. As the Member for Edmonton-City Centre spoke, he started out by talking about the importance of making sure that we don't break contracts. As you know, Mr. Speaker, as opposition we had the unfortunate opportunity to listen and watch as the NDP government continued to unravel and break contracts with our PPAs in this province, that ended up costing Albertans upwards of about $2 billion. It's unfortunate for that member to say that he thinks what's going to happen with this is that we're going to break contracts, but he doesn't know. He's assuming that that's what this process is all about. Yet, in reality, this is about being able to take a reasonable approach to looking at Alberta's finances after this NDP government broke these PPA contracts.

Mr. Speaker, during the last election, when I was door-knocking, I was in Foremost. I was doing a meet-and-greet there. I had the opportunity to have a couple come up afterwards. They were an older couple, and they came up and said that they had voted for the NDP in every election where they were able to vote. In fact, this gentleman had actually driven Grant Notley around in that area, drumming up votes.

Yet he said to me: this year I will be voting for the United Conservative Party. He said: for the first time I understand the concept that we need to have something that is sustainable, that the reason why the UCP is trying to be able to get the financial situation back on track is so that we can provide these wraparound services, the things that we hold so dear in Alberta: health care, a proper sustainable education system, good policing, and firefighters. He said: the reason why I am now voting for the United Conservative Party is because finally I understand the connect between having a strong, robust economy and sustainable wraparound services for Albertans. This is why he wanted to vote for the United Conservative Party.

What we've been asked to do by Albertans is to be able to have a reasonable approach, to be able to put together a go-forward plan for our children and grandchildren that can be sustainable. It's folly for the members opposite in the NDP to believe that you can continue to go towards $100 billion of debt and still be able to provide in the future opportunities for good health care and good education. It's fiction; it's fantasy; it's only the things you read in comics.

Mr. Speaker, we on this side have pledged to Albertans, have committed to take a reasonable look at the books. We have struck the panel. The blue-ribbon panel is designed specifically to give us the information that we need so that we can go forward in the proper way, so that Albertans can know that there is going to be a sustainable system of wraparound services for them not just for today but into the future. When we presented to Albertans, we presented that to them, that concept of sustainability, and they were completely fine with the idea that we would be able to accomplish that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the other argument that we've heard ad nauseam here is this idea that we are taking away their right to be able to represent their people. Unfortunately, at 19 hours we are nowhere near taking that away from them.

The Speaker: Hon members, we are back on the amendment. I see that the hon. Premier has risen.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, allow me to thank you and all personnel of the Assembly for their tremendous dedication and hard work. We appreciate their facilitating the work of this place. I'd like to congratulate and thank all members who have been participating in this debate around the clock as we approach 7 a.m.

The Member for Edmonton-South suggested that I was disrespecting this debate, that I wasn't respecting the Assembly. The fact is that I've been respectfully listening to speeches here this evening for some 11 hours and last night for some seven hours, about 18 hours of the nearly 24 hours that this matter has been debated in this Assembly. I've listened respectfully to all of the opposition speeches and those from the government side as well, Mr. Speaker.

I'm speaking against the recommitment amendment brought forward by, I believe it is, the Member for Edmonton-McClung because the Assembly has already decided to pass this matter through to third reading and I do support the adoption of Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, at third reading.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre suggested moments ago that – I guess I should be flattered by his attribution to me of great sort of omniscience. The truth is that we were rather busy creating a new political party and running a very vigorous campaign, and I only became aware of the current state of play with respect to collective bargaining agreements with public-sector unions in the transition phase, shortly after our government took office several weeks ago. I think that about two weeks but perhaps a week into the term of this new government senior officials from the Department of Finance and Treasury Board and from Executive Council informed me that a number of the current agreements were coming up for wage reopeners in the weeks to follow and that this new government does not yet have adequate information to enter into those negotiations on the wage reopeners and that we need a really solid understanding of the current fiscal reality.

That is why the fourth “whereas” clause of Bill 9 says:

Whereas significant changes have occurred in Alberta’s economy since the 2018-19 Third Quarter Fiscal Update and Economic Statement . . . [and]

Whereas the Government of Alberta needs to gather and fully consider the information and advice prior to wage arbitration hearings under collective agreements in respect of 2019-2020 that affect the Government of Alberta as an employer or funder, that advice coming from

. . . the Blue Ribbon Panel on Alberta’s Finances, an expert panel appointed by the Government of Alberta, will deliver a final report by August 15, 2019, and time is required to gather . . . information on Alberta’s economy and the Government of Alberta’s financial state.

I and the ministers were presented with the emerging deadlines on wage reopeners, and we were briefed on the very significant fiscal implications therein, with some unions, I gather, making at least initial requests in the arbitration there for 5 or 6 per cent increases. At the same time, we’re being advised by Treasury Board and Finance that the fiscal situation of the province has deteriorated significantly since the former government’s third-quarter update. The advice we received is that we needed, to use an idiomatic phrase, to hit the pause button on this arbitration until we could come to the table in good faith with all of the necessary, requisite information. That’s exactly the responsible position that we’ve taken.

Mr. Speaker, we’ve heard over the last 24 hours of debate no end of conspiracy theories. We’ve heard about this bill being, according to some NDP members, analogous to slavery, to jackboot authoritarianism, to an end to unionism, to an attack on fundamental human rights. Bone-chilling accusations of every kind have been levelled at what is, frankly, I humbly submit, a modest effort by a new government to truly understand the fiscal context in which we will be negotiating collective bargaining agreements that collectively represent some 50 per cent of the $49 billion in expenditures of the Alberta government. What government would not ask for a few more weeks, a few more months to actually have a proper understanding before proceeding?

It would be grossly irresponsible, I submit, for us to have ignored the advice that we received from the senior public service, to say, “No; we’re just going to move ahead based on a mandate from the previous government, based on dated information on our fiscal state,” which has since deteriorated, when we have some of the leading experts in Canada working right now to provide us with comprehensive, timely information and advice on our fiscal situation, a panel chaired by one of the most highly regarded modern Canadian Finance ministers, a New Democrat, Dr. Janice MacKinnon, also in her own right, by the way, a highly regarded Canadian historian; co-chaired by Dr. Mike Percy, the former shadow Finance minister of the Liberal Party in this place, the former dean of business at the University of Alberta, a man of widely accepted acclaim and deep economic credibility; as well as the former Deputy Minister of Finance in the province of British Columbia; as well as Mr. Mowat, the former chief executive officer of Alberta Treasury Branches; as well as Jay Ramotar, who has been a deputy minister in I think at least five Alberta governments.

I want to thank on the floor of this Assembly those remarkable individuals for having given up much of their spring and summer to do a very difficult task, a deep dive into Alberta’s finances to help inform the fiscal policy of this new government and this province. I believe we owe it to them to get the information before we move ahead with decisions which ultimately could affect 50 per cent of the expenditures of the Alberta government, Mr. Speaker. About $24 billion of the $49 billion that we spend is represented by public-sector wages, salaries, and benefits.

I know that what I’m about to say gets dismissed by the opposition as being trite, but it’s true, Mr. Speaker. I and this government do respect the work of not only our public servants but those in the municipalities, universities, schools, hospitals, agencies, boards, and commissions, those in the broader public sector. I can tell you authentically – and you can speak to any of the senior public servants, for that matter – that I’m pretty sure that most of the front-line folks that worked in the departments that I had the privilege of serving in in Ottawa will say that I had a fantastic relationship with the public service there. I respected their advice, their fearless advice, their loyal implementation.

In a couple of departments over the course of several years, with their support and advice, I led deep and, I think, pretty positive reforms, complex policy reforms, even during a time of fiscal restraint, when we were reducing, in the two major departments I was at, by an average of 7 per cent operational expenditures without, I believe, negatively affecting the delivery of services. I trusted the public service to come forward with advice on how that could be done without layoffs but, rather, with attrition where it was necessary and without reductions in public-sector compensation.

Mr. Speaker, we were elected with a very clear mandate to restore the province’s finances to balance within this term. I think Albertans were right to give us that mandate. We cannot achieve that mandate by pretending that 50 per cent of expenditures on wages, salaries, and benefits are somehow immaterial to the fiscal health of the province. You know, I suppose we can infer where the NDP would go with this, which would be: take the wage openers and just throw a dart at the wall and see where it lands. It’s that kind of fiscal mismanagement which took us to nearly a $60 billion debt.

With that, I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Government Motion 24, agreed to on June 19, 2019, I must now put every question necessary for the disposal of Bill 9 at third reading.

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, the prayer. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and her government, Members of the Legislative Assembly, and all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through the love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudice, keep in mind the responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of guests visiting. They include guests of the Minister of Seniors and Housing: Sandra and Don Beach and Roy Dallmann.

Welcome to all.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

National Indigenous Peoples Day

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for allowing me to wear this shirt in the House today. We acknowledge that we are on Treaty 6 territory, a traditional meeting ground and gathering place, and we recognize all the many First Nation and Métis footsteps which have marked these lands for generations.

Today I stand to recognize an important day on our calendar. Tomorrow, June 21, National Indigenous Peoples Day will be celebrated across the country, our province, and right here in our city. It's an honour to join in the celebrations that are being hosted throughout the month to celebrate the first people to inhabit this land. Many of the members in this Assembly will be doing just that in their own home constituencies tomorrow. I'd like to remind all Albertans that it's a time to honour the diverse history, language, and culture of the indigenous peoples, that strengthen Alberta.

We're proud to say that there are more than 258,000 First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people who call Alberta home, many residing right here in Edmonton. While the growth of the population is exciting, it also brings challenges, but this government will work towards making life better, safer, and more engaging for our First Nations peoples. This incredible segment of our society contributes to the social, economic fabric of Alberta each and every day, making our province a great place to live and to work. Their history and culture enriches our province. With the 48 First Nations and eight Métis settlements in Alberta, our government recognizes that indigenous people are an important part of both the history and the future of this province.

We're working towards including Alberta's First Nations as true partners in prosperity. Ours is a new approach that gives real meaning to the reconciliation where Alberta's First Nations are real owners of the resources on their land. Our government took this historic step to meet with all Albertan First Nations leadership within the first 50 days of our mandate. This clearly shows the priority we place on including our indigenous citizens as true owners of the resources on this land. We recognize the value of their input, the incredible energy and ideas they bring, and the positive and humble manner in which they live. The indigenous population is the youngest and the fastest growing segment of our population. We need their creative spirit, entrepreneurial skills, and desire to benefit from our economy to help us build a strong and free Alberta.

I encourage all Albertans to join me and the government in celebrating June 21, National Indigenous Peoples Day, across our great province. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to address this House on tomorrow's important day. Join me. Hay-hay.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has risen to respond.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin by acknowledging that we are on Treaty 6 territory, a traditional meeting ground and gathering place. We recognize the many First Nations and Métis footsteps which have marked these lands for many generations.

I rise today on behalf of our caucus to speak about National Indigenous Peoples Day, on June 21. It is an honour to join in celebrations that are being hosted throughout the month to celebrate the first people to inhabit this land. This is a day for all Canadians to celebrate the diverse cultures and outstanding contributions of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit peoples: the 48 First Nations, including the Beaver, Cree, Dene, Nakoda, and Blackfoot nations; the eight Métis settlements; and the Inuit people.

This is a day of celebration, but it's also a day to recognize that the path we are on is one of reconciliation. The history of settler involvement with indigenous people is a difficult one, involving residential schools, the '60s scoop, and other forms of oppression, but we can be part of the change and join in truth and reconciliation.

Our government was proud to focus on a renewed relationship with indigenous peoples in Alberta based on reconciliation, mutual respect, and co-operation. I'm proud to have been the first Minister of Indigenous Relations to have personally visited all 48 First Nations and all eight Métis settlements. I am proud to have been in the first government in Alberta to deliver apologies for residential schools and the '60s scoop, to have been among the first to call for a national commission into murdered and missing indigenous women and girls, and to make the commitment to equal access to health care under Jordan's principle.

I'm proud that we were the only provincial government to put $100 million to bringing clean water to reserves. We initiated the redesign of the K to 12 curriculum to better reflect indigenous history, knowledge, and traditions. The indigenous climate leadership program saw over $80 million committed to building green energy solutions. We supported indigenous languages, including Calgary's first-ever indigenous languages resource centre. Our indigenous housing capital program made available $120 million to increase affordable rental housing units for indigenous people in need. We significantly increased funding for native friendship centres in 21

Alberta communities, and we supported economic development to create $600 million worth of wind projects.

We are proud of our steps toward reconciliation, but there's much more work to do. That is why I'm calling on this government to protect and continue this important work and to commit to true partnership with First Nations, Métis, and Inuit communities. I recommend that all members of this House and all Albertans get out on National Indigenous Peoples Day, wherever you are, and join the celebration. All summer long there are powwows, rodeos, and sun dance ceremonies throughout the province. Go with an open mind and open heart, and you will find your life enriched.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

World Refugee Day

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and speak before you all today on World Refugee Day. Ever since our province was founded, more than 100 years ago, Alberta has been blessed to be a bastion of security, freedom, and liberty. As our province and our nation have grown, so has the standard of living for those who choose to call Alberta home. Because of this, today we enjoy an impressive quality of life that would have been all but unimaginable to the first pioneers that established our province.

However, to this day there are still areas throughout the world that aren't afforded any of the luxuries that we take for granted. In fact, there are millions of innocent people that still endure armed conflicts and social upheavals on a scale that would seem incomprehensible to most Albertans. As a result, countless civilians whose lives have been irreversibly altered by these conflicts have little choice other than to leave and flee their homes. These refugees have few financial prospects, and often it is only their unwavering desire to create a better life for themselves and their families that pulls them through.

This is why today, Mr. Speaker, we seek to honour the trials and hardships of the refugees across the world, who are fighting to improve their own lives and the lives of the ones they love. World Refugee Day serves to remind us of the common humanity we all share.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Climate Change

Ms Renaud: The level of carbon now in our atmosphere has not been seen in 12 million years. The carbon dioxide in our air is at an all-time high of 415 parts per million. This pollution is rapidly pushing the climate back to a state not seen since the Eocene epoch, more than 33 million years ago, when there was no ice on either pole. We have a paleorecord, so we know quite a bit about what life was like millions of years ago. It was not conducive to life as we know it.

Our scientists have for decades been warning us that we have caused global temperatures to rise too quickly. Peer-reviewed science tells us that 75 to 80 per cent of the permanent ice on our planet has melted in the last 35 years. They also tell us that the likelihood that there will be any permanent ice left in the Arctic after 2022 is essentially zero. The loss of ice will speed up the devastation as more heat is absorbed and sea levels rise.

We no longer have the luxury of time, contrary to what the current UCP government would like you to believe. We need aggressive policies and actions to ensure that rising global temperatures do not exceed two degrees, and that requires swift and aggressive action. We need to do more than acknowledge we have a climate crisis. This new government will be remembered for their failure to take this crisis seriously because they're too busy plotting political strategies or paying special-interest groups and donors.

Children around the world are demanding action from decision-makers. Sixteen-year-old Greta Thunberg said it best, and I quote: in the year 2078 I will celebrate my 75th birthday; if I have children, maybe they will spend the day with me; maybe they will ask me about you; maybe they will ask why you didn't do anything while there still was time to act; you say you love your children above all else, yet you are stealing their future in front of their eyes. Unquote.

Are you listening, Mr. Premier?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche.

National Indigenous Peoples Day

Ms Goodridge: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1996 the government of Canada declared June 21 of every year to be National Indigenous Peoples Day. The date of June 21 was chosen to celebrate National Indigenous Peoples Day in part because it corresponds to the summer solstice, the first day of summer, and the day with the longest light and midnight sun. As a northerner this is one of my favourite days of the year. It is also the day when many First Nations, Métis, and Inuit groups have traditionally celebrated their culture and heritage. It is a day to celebrate the diverse histories, languages, and cultures of indigenous people who have enriched our vibrant province.

I am proud to say that more than 258,000 First Nation, Métis, and Inuit call Alberta home. This is 1 in 6 Albertans who are indigenous Canadians, which makes Alberta's the third-highest population of indigenous peoples in any province in Canada. Indigenous peoples contribute to the social and economic life of Alberta each and every day, making our province a great place to live and work.

Throughout the month of June communities across Canada host events to celebrate the cultures, histories, achievements, and contributions of the First Nation, Métis, and Inuit people to Canada. In fact, we are privileged to have our Legislature Building located just steps from Rosedale Flats, an important historical meeting ground for indigenous peoples that goes back almost 3,000 years. I encourage all of you to join our National Indigenous Peoples Day celebration and to attend other events taking place in your community and across this province. It is my honour to be able to participate tomorrow in the First Nation, Métis, Inuit Festival, hosted by the McMurray Métis, in my home riding of Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche. It's a great opportunity to recognize and celebrate the dynamic heritage and culture of indigenous people in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, while we cannot change the past, we can strive to do better so that history does not repeat itself. With a sense of optimism we can develop a path forward together. [Remarks in Dene]

Vikings in the Streets Festival

Ms Lovely: Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of attending the eighth annual Vikings in the Streets Festival in the town of Viking this past weekend. This festival celebrates and promotes Viking heritage to the world with a variety of family-friendly events ranging from face painting to Viking foods and crafts and including a lutefisk contest. Lutfisk, to those who don't know, is a traditional Norwegian dish which is dried and salted fish with lye and is gelatinous in nature. The name lutefisk literally means lye fish and is a traditional food eaten by those with Norwegian heritage at Christmas. I would like to send my congratulations to the third-time-winning champion Nancy Tkacyk. I admire your technique. The festival also includes a chili cook-off, jail-and-bail fundraiser, a parade, and a variety of vendors as well as a big top show.

The event was well attended this year by the community, and the weather was exceptional, ensuring that everyone enjoyed themselves. Another highlight to the festival was Odin's Ravens, a group of locals who dress in traditional costume and participate in historical re-enactment, demonstrating combat techniques. The kids in the audience were invited to participate and thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

The town of Viking was settled in 1909 by Sivert Hafso and Ole Sorenson from Norway. Those who settled and founded Viking did so in the spirit and tradition of Norwegians dating back to the Vikings, who pioneered the first shores of eastern Canada. The event was well received, and I was happy to deliver greetings on behalf of Premier Kenney and the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: I might just remind all hon. members that, no matter the circumstances, the use of names would be wildly inappropriate here inside the Chamber.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has a statement.

Education Funding and Bill 8

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the government caucus reminds this House frequently that they won the 2019 election, and they remind this House pretty frequently that their promise to Albertans was laser focused. They were focused on jobs, economy, and pipelines. They had some candidates forced out due to flirtation with hate groups, but still they vowed to Albertans that they would not be distracted on social issues.

Yet the Education minister has started to do exactly the opposite of what these honourable folks were elected to do. The education and training of our young people is surely one of the most fundamental economic issues for any family, but on this front this Education minister is silent and idle as school districts across the province hit the panic button and start laying off teachers and educational assistants. Alberta's kids are going to suffer, stuffed into overcrowded classrooms with classmates that have lost the developmental and behavioural supports that they rely on.

This minister is inexplicably oblivious to this urgent problem unfolding right now in every constituency across Alberta. All of her energy and activity has focused on the bizarre vendetta against gay kids, which has come to be known as Bill Hate. So I have to ask my honourable friends across the aisle: is this what you came here to do? How do you reconcile a laserlike economic mandate with a minister who is utterly ignoring a huge economic problem so she can focus on her own personal social agenda? Of course, it's not me that the members opposite will have to answer to. It's the parents that will be calling and writing and showing up at their offices and events this fall and for years to come. For those parents' sake and for their kids' sake I hope my honourable friends will tell this minister to put aside Bill Hate and focus on the issues they were elected for.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I've dedicated my life to serving vulnerable people. Specifically, I spent 15 years serving the homeless in Calgary. I built and managed programs designed to help people overcome addiction and poverty. I've also built programs that help people who have been pushed to the margins of society to rise up and find purpose, community, and hope.

This experience included managing a youth shelter. Over my time working in the shelter, I heard gut-wrenching stories of youth fleeing abuse and neglect. I also met many youth in my programs who identified as LGBTQ. I heard many stories about youth running away from home or being kicked out of home. My team and I worked extremely hard to make sure that all the youth in my program were safe and knew that they were loved. This included hiring many members of the LGBTQ community and designing programs specific for LGBTQ youth, but more than that, making sure that all the youth in my program were valued and felt safe to be themselves.

I can say with confidence that nobody in this House is happy about how these youth were treated by the people who should have loved them the most. That is why it is so very disappointing to hear members opposite hurl insults and insinuate that members of this government would ever want harm to come to these youth. It is why our government and our legacy parties stood united in support for GSA legislation. It is why our government is not supporting mandatory notification. The issues youth are facing in our schools are not black and white, and as such we cannot handcuff our teachers in a way that prevents them from seeking appropriate interventions in extreme cases. Any teacher I've talked to on this issue has cited this as an overreach and a conflict with their duty to care.

I will no longer stand for the NDP's fear and smear on this topic. The members to my left keep saying: the kids don't trust you. I would suggest their continuation in spreading misinformation about the heart of this government is to blame. I look forward to restoring that trust as these youth discover that the NDP's fear and smear is just that: a ploy to create fear amongst an already vulnerable group.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Parliamentary Debate and Public Discourse

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to give the government members a second to pop in their earplugs. My colleagues and I watched in shock last night as the Premier limited debate on his bad-faith bargaining bill, and then he proceeded to pass out earplugs and insult working Albertans with his childish and arrogant stunt. Cutting wages for nearly 200,000 public-sector workers and then literally plugging your ears so you don't have to hear the pain that it causes is spineless. Will the Premier apologize for this disrespect that he showed working Albertans last night?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this is a ridiculous question from the deputy Leader of the Opposition. What is so outrageous is the behaviour that continues to come from the NDP in this House. I get letters almost every day at my constituency offices or on Facebook about the appalling behaviour of the opposition; for example, just the other day when one of their hon. members inside this place compared Bill 9 to slavery. So, through you to that hon. member: will he stand in this House and finally apologize for that behaviour? Here's the reality. The NDP keep bringing decorum down in this place, and it's appalling.

Ms Hoffman: Speaking of social media, it turns out this Premier's immature leadership is setting a bad example for his MLAs, too. When asked by a constituent on social media to explain how he could possibly support the bad-faith bargaining bill, the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane provided no response and promptly blocked the constituent. That's right, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has now taught his MLAs that they're above accountability to their own constituents. To the Premier: will you pledge to do better from here on and set a better example for your MLAs?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Alberta, when he was Leader of the Opposition, brought the level of decorum to the highest levels in this place, unlike the current deputy Leader of the Opposition, who continues to bring it down. Speaking as a former deputy Leader of the Opposition, as you were, too, Mr. Speaker, I've been appalled to watch the current deputy Leader of the Opposition continue to allow her caucus to disrespect this Chamber so much, to disrespect the people of Alberta, to disrespect the people that elected us to come to this Chamber. The behaviour of the NDP inside this Chamber is appalling. It's ridiculous. They should stand up inside this Chamber and apologize for what they've been doing.

Ms Hoffman: Standing up for our constituents isn't appalling; it's our job. Listening to what those constituents have to say is the government's job, so I have to say that what I find beyond reproach is saying that we aren't allowed to bang our desks, but what? We'll bring in time allocation. We'll plug our ears, literally, and we'll fail to listen to the nearly 200,000 public-sector workers who this government is attacking. What is the government so afraid of, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, nobody from the government plugged their ears during debate. That's a ridiculous accusation by the hon. member. She should do better than that. This Chamber deserves better than that. Her position deserves better than that.

Let's talk about the Member for St. Albert, who last night accused me of being intoxicated in this place. Is that the type of behaviour that the Leader of the Opposition expects from her caucus? Is that the type of behaviour that Albertans expect from the Official Opposition? Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition has an important job to do in this place, and so far they're failing Albertans at that job. They should stop their ridiculous behaviour and get to work for the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Bill 9 Debate

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The bad-faith bargaining bill, Bill 9, will allow this government to rip up contracts and impose new ones on 200,000 Albertans who do some of our society's most important jobs. The Minister of Finance has tried to claim that the omnibus clause in his bill doesn't do that. In fact, he's accused us of lying. Last night while Albertans were sleeping and this government was ramming the bill through, I tried to amend the bill to remove this clause. To the minister: if the clause isn't intended to be used, why didn't you take it out when given the chance?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, nobody was ramming the bill through the Legislature. In fact, this Legislature has sat since Monday well into the night working very hard on this important piece of legislation. Now, what did the Official Opposition do while we were debating that legislation starting Monday night? Played silly games, trying to adjourn debate, trying to be able to go home, spent most of the time complaining about the fact that they had to work late because they wanted to go home instead of doing the important work. Their constituents and people that are concerned about this legislation, that expect them to do a job should be very disappointed in their behaviour because they spent most of their time doing anything but actually working on the bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has rammed through Bill 9 in the dead of night to interrupt ongoing wage discussions that are happening right now. The government says that they want to delay these talks by four months to allow time for their so-called blue-ribbon panel to assess the budget, but that panel's report is due in August. So my colleague from Edmonton-Manning reasonably proposed to move discussions to that month, too. To the minister: did you oppose her amendment to try and buy yourself more time to figure out how deeply you're going to cut the pay of public-sector workers?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we've been clear all along. The intent of Bill 9 is simply to delay wage arbitration until this government can hear from the MacKinnon panel, develop a thoughtful, prudent path forward to bring this province back to balance. Albertans expect this from government, and we will deliver.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People who represent public-sector workers sat in this House for hours last night watching as this government rammed through the bad-faith bargaining bill. They came here concerned for their members and about the breakneck speed at which this government forced the bill through the Legislature. To the Premier: I know you wanted to plug your ears when we were telling you about how bad your bill was, but did you or any member of your caucus attempt to talk to the folks who were here last night? In fact, have you talked to any of the 200,000 Albertans that you are directly impacting?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of our Premier, who sat inside this Legislature throughout the debate on Bill 9, spent his time in even speaking to this piece of legislation and articulating why our government is headed this direction, stood here and had a great discussion with the opposition when they would discuss it. But, again, let's get back to actually what the opposition has done the last week. They've done everything but debate the bill. They spent most of their time talking about anything but the bill. The constituents that they claim to be trying to help inside this House should be very, very disappointed in the Official Opposition because they did nothing for them the last week. It's very disappointing.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-North West.

Postsecondary Worker Contract Negotiations

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now that the most odious Bill 9 has been exposed for what it really is, I think it's important to trace it back to a letter from this government sent to Advanced Education employees, stating that the government is considering "all available options . . . including legislation." This is a full-blown attack on the public service, including thousands of postsecondary workers, but we have yet to hear a peep from the Minister of Advanced Education. I'm wondering if the minister can explain the implications of breaking legal contracts with postsecondary workers.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Again the opposition continues to mischaracterize things inside this House. It's disappointing that they always do that. This is their go-to with Team Angry. Here's the reality. We have a situation that has been inherited from the NDP government, who put us on track for $100 billion in debt, absolutely devastated the Alberta economy. We ran on a platform to get us on a path to balance. The Finance minister and all ministers in this cabinet are taking time to make sure that we get this right for Albertans. Why? Because that's what we promised Albertans. I want to assure Albertans, through you, Mr. Speaker, that we're going to keep that promise.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are several contracts in postsecondary education that are well past due. Bill 9 breaks the law and removes the rights for postsecondary workers to collectively bargain. This government has literally cut off debate and plugged its ears, refusing to listen to why it's critical that they negotiate in good faith. I can feel the lawsuits coming. Can the Minister of Finance tell us how much this illegal action will cost, considering legal fees, fines, likely labour disruption, and the negative impact to the good reputation of Alberta's colleges and universities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, Bill 9 is simply about deferring, temporarily postponing arbitration hearings for public-sector workers. This is about a government listening to Albertans. This is about a government taking time to ensure that we have all the information to make the best decisions on behalf of Albertans and the public sector. The previous government sent us on a trajectory to $100 billion of accumulated debt. That is unacceptable to Albertans.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this government is committed to contract discussions with Bow Valley College, NAIT, SAIT, the Alberta college of art and design, Athabasca University, and many others and then just a few weeks later they draw up legislation that not only delays these contract talks, but they won't even commit to whether they'll ever actually occur, to the Premier, the quarterback of this massive pickpocketing scheme on workers: don't you think it might be just a little bit awkward to show up on campuses when you made it abundantly clear that you cannot be trusted?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, speaking of pickpocketing bills, let's talk about the NDP's bill when they brought in the carbon tax, the largest pickpocketing bill in the history of this Legislature, something that they never campaigned on, something that they hid from Albertans while they were campaigning, and then came into this Assembly and forced it through on Albertans, a bill that was all economic pain, no environmental gain, that not just punished our economy and the businesses that are in it but went after fixed-income seniors, went after homeless shelters, went after food banks, went after schools and swimming pools, and attacked our community on a daily basis. We will not be lectured by that hon. member on anything, quite frankly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Edmonton Medical Laboratory Infrastructure

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "The physical state of laboratory facilities in Edmonton has long been a... concern... The inability to replace aging equipment and to keep up with innovation was the most significant issue... brought forward through the stakeholder engagement process." Those are quotes from the Health Quality Council of Alberta's recommendations on the future of lab services in Alberta. Our government moved to address them by building the Edmonton clinical lab hub. This government just announced that they are cancelling that project, with no solution other than maintaining the risky privatized model that's failed us for years. To this minister: what are you thinking? Is it worth putting people's health at risk to maintain your political posturing?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. member: did he just admit that his government failed to invest in infrastructure during their time in government? When it comes to this Alberta lab project, promise made, promise kept. This was a key campaign commitment of ours. We're pleased also to announce that we will be stopping the plans of the previous government to nationalize DynaLife. We will make decisions about health infrastructure based on what's best for patients, not based on an ideological drive to nationalize lab services.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Claiming savings for cancelling this project is like claiming savings by not fixing your roof or buying your children's insulin.

The Health Quality Council of Alberta was clear that there is a pressing need for "new laboratory infrastructure to meet the urgent needs in Edmonton," which we were building. To the Minister of Health: do you have an alternate plan to deliver the lab testing Albertans depend on for their health and their well-being, or have you simply jumped without a parachute because the Premier told you to?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, let's remember what the NDP planned for this site: first, to displace student housing; second, to build a giant parkade next to a train station here in Edmonton; third, to take pathologists out of hospitals, all to nationalize lab services. Let's start making decisions in the best interests of patients.

Mr. Shepherd: As always with this government, Mr. Speaker, no plan, stale talking points.

The Health Quality Council stated that our government's commitment to fund and plan for a new Edmonton lab hub was "very well received by the stakeholder community." There has been over a decade's worth of reports and reviews, all reaching the same conclusion, that we need new lab infrastructure for Edmonton and northern Alberta. We had it under construction. Albertans were building it. To the minister: will you tell this House how many jobs are now lost as a result of your decision, or will that come in due course?

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, every patient care decision is going to either require an X-ray or lab work. Imagine all the patient care decisions in this province which were compromised by the NDP in the timeliness and the quality of that lab work. I look forward to the hon. member rising in this Assembly and apologizing to Albertans for the previous government's decisions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod has a question.

Film Industry Tax Credit

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You might not know this, but southern Alberta has a steady, growing film industry. It is an industry with huge potential. But despite the desire of many companies to shoot here, they're held back by our current system of government grants. As such, in our platform the government promised that we would transition provincial grants such as the screen-based production grant into a competitive tax credit like those used in other jurisdictions. Can the minister explain to this House how this will attract jobs and investment in the film industry into Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. The amazing thing about some of these incentives is that if the incentives are there, the productions will come. We have crews that are ready to work. There's spinoff to tourism, transfer of skilled jobs, which is actually a very important piece of the puzzle given the economic downturn at this point in time. Also, one of the things that's really important within this industry is that for every dollar that is invested, there's a $3.50 return to the Alberta economy. The tax credit actually gives an incredible ability for predictability and stable funding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the previous government failed to do necessary consultations when it considered changes to funding programs such as this and given that the previous government was notorious for failing to consult Albertans in general and given that the previous government dropped the ball specifically as it pertains to consultations over changes to the film industry in Alberta, can the minister tell us whether or not she did the necessary consultations concerning the changes to the grant program?

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much for the question. I'm very pleased to say that at this point in time we've actually met with well over 30 stakeholders. Alberta has the absolute pleasure of holding the Alberta media festival, and through that, there's an ability to actually have conversations with people around the world. Alberta is open for business. People are really excited about being able to film here. But we want to make sure that we get this right. There is a tremendous amount of consultation that needs to happen. We're really looking forward to that. So we will continue to consult to make sure that we get this right.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Minister. Mr. Speaker, my last question is once again for the minister. Given that the government committed to the implementation of this tax credit in favour of grants and given that the minister plans to follow through with the results of her consultation, can the minister tell this House what her timeline is for rolling out the new tax credit?

The Speaker: The minister of culture.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much. Actually, I think my answer for question 2 will probably answer this a little bit. Because of the necessity for consultations and because the industry is so incredibly diverse, we are looking at making sure that this tax credit is done appropriately. We're looking to have these consultations over the summer and into the fall, and hopefully we'll be rolling out legislation here in the near future, within the next year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has a question.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to keep my words soft and sweet so as not to damage the hearing of the members opposite, that they're so eager to protect. The Premier has been busy criss-crossing the country, campaigning for the federal Conservative leader, Andrew Scheer, and seemingly setting himself up to run for Prime Minister one day. He's also indicated his support for Scheer's climate plan. I want the members of the executive benches to tell us what aspects of the federal Conservative plan to tackle climate change they support.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The biggest aspect that I support right now is that it does not have a carbon tax, unlike what the NDP and the Liberal Party want to do. The NDP and their ally Justin Trudeau and the Liberal Party want to go with a carbon tax to deal with climate change, which is all economic pain and no environmental gain. It does nothing to deal with the issue. From what I understand of Andrew Scheer's climate change plan, it has no carbon tax. We support that. As our Premier has said and as our caucus and our cabinet have said, we will fight the Justin Trudeau carbon tax both at the ballot box and in the court system if that's what's required.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question was about what aspects of the Conservatives' plan they do support.

Given that the Scheer plan states that it will collaborate with indigenous people on undertaking climate mitigation and adaptation projects, will the government follow the federal puppet master, work with indigenous communities, and commit to maintaining existing Alberta indigenous mitigation and adaptation programs like the indigenous retrofit program, the indigenous green employment program, and the indigenous solar program?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm excited to answer this question again. Of course we'll commit to working with indigenous communities and consulting with them. I'm really proud of our Premier and our government, who were able to reinstate meetings with all of the nations just a few weeks ago, something that the NDP, when they were in power, shut down, much to the disappointment of indigenous communities inside the province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, through you to indigenous communities, I want to assure them that the Alberta government is committed to consulting with them and working with them, going forward, to better their communities but also to better Alberta. We're excited to talk more about that, I'm sure, when the hon. member follows up with another question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that those programs the hon. member mentioned were developed in consultation with the indigenous community here in Alberta and given that Scheer's plan also pledges to provide money for homeowners to retrofit their homes to be more energy efficient, much like our plan did, will the government commit to following the plan from Scheer, much like he follows his campaign path all across Canada, and maintain funding for Energy Efficiency Alberta's existing residential retrofit rebate program?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we've already committed to our direction. We're going to be focused on the TIER program. We'll have more to say about that over the summer as we begin to unroll that. But I can tell you another thing: what we will not commit to is going the NDP route, which is hiring Ontario companies to come install light bulbs and faucets inside our homes. We are not focused on taxing hard-working Alberta families, like the NDP and the federal Liberals do, which is all economic pain and no environmental gain. Instead, we focus on working on technology, working with our industry, and making sure that we continue to be the best energy-producing place in the entire world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night hundreds of Albertans from all over this province attended the rally to save GSAs right here at this Legislature. They had a clear message for this Premier: leave our kids alone. But still the Premier carries on with his Bill Hate, which will destroy GSAs and out LGBTQ youth. What's more is that he didn't even bother to attend the rally or acknowledge the young people gathered outside. To the Premier: what were you doing last night that was so important that you couldn't attend the rally? Buying earplugs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We've been very, very clear that once a GSA, QSA, or an inclusion group is requested, it is not optional; it has to be allowed. I will trust the word of the independent Privacy Commissioner over the scare tactics of the NDP any day. We have always been there to support all our students.

Thank you.

Member Irwin: You know who's scared? The thousands of queer and trans kids who worry that they'll be homeless or worse if they're outed without their consent.

Given that Lea Cheeseman, a student from Calgary, came all the way to this Legislature to make one last attempt to be heard by this government and she called on this government to scrap this hateful bill in order to protect her and her peers from harm, to the minister. Not listening appears to be a pattern of this government. Why are you refusing to listen to the thousands of young voices that are telling you that Bill Hate will make them unsafe?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Our government has been extremely clear that we will not be outing kids. Our government will have the most comprehensive statutory protections for lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, two-spirited students in Canada, period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that former teacher and school trustee Terry Reilly, a decades-long card-carrying member of the Progressive Conservative Party until this Premier invited extremists and homophobes into his party and his government, travelled all the way from Medicine Hat to say that, quote, protection for the rights of student privacy is our duty, is there any member of this cabinet that is willing to stand apart from the Premier or the Minister of Education and actually honour this duty?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the Premier and this cabinet and all of this government caucus continue to stand for LGBTQ rights. We continue to stand with all Albertans. Most importantly, I want to assure LGBTQ students, through you, that we will continue to have the strongest statutory protections in the entire country. We will continue to stand for Bill 10. We will continue to stand and make sure GSAs are protected inside schools. That's a fact. I know they're hearing a lot of fearmongering from the NDP. That's what you get from Team Angry. But I promise we are going to keep care of it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order is noted both at 2:13 and 2:14.

The Member for Calgary-West is asking a question.

Tourism Industry

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's economy has been suffering, and we all know that there are many industries with potential for growth in our province. Now, tourism is one sector that has huge potential in our province, and Calgary is just a short trip from the Rocky Mountains. What is the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism doing to grow the tourism sector for our province's largest city?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government is dedicated to growing the tourism industry across Alberta, which is why we are developing a 10-year tourism strategy with the goal of doubling tourism investment in our province by 2030. As a gateway to the Rockies and its beautiful scenery Calgary will be a key part of that strategy due to its size, strategic location, and its need for economic recovery after the disastrous reign of the NDP.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Now, given that the tourism sector was neglected under the previous government and they failed to create an environment that allowed for investment or growth and they created huge, burdensome bureaucracies and regulatory regimes, what is the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism doing to help private-sector tourism operators?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again, thank you to the member for the question. Our government has already taken action to make things easier for private-sector tourism operators by cutting burdensome red tape and extending tourism tenures for tourism and commercial recreation operators' leases from 25 years to up to 60 years. This change puts us in line with British Columbia and the national parks and will make it easier for operators to secure long-term financing and will stimulate private-sector investment in our tourism industry, which in turn will make us more competitive.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that Calgary has untapped potential as a tourist destination and given that it is a world-class city that, unfortunately, has faced four years of neglect under the previous government, what is the minister doing to promote Calgary as a tourism destination?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As I mentioned in my previous answer, we are cutting the red tape that burdens the tourism industry. One example is the changes to public land leases and lowering taxes for tourism operators with our repeal of the carbon tax and the job-creation tax cut. We are focused on making private-sector tourism a cornerstone of our economy, and we are working hard every day to develop a plan that will grow the industry in Calgary and across the province.

The Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has a question.

Educational Curriculum Review

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Teachers, parents, academics, and students have been working hard for years on a much-needed modernization of the K to 12 curriculum. Tens of thousands of Albertans provided their input, and hundreds of thousands of students are relying on a new curriculum to prepare them for a changing world. This Premier cares more about his ego than our kids. He said he would take the new curriculum and put it through the shredder. To the Education minister: will you first apologize to teachers, professionals, and volunteers who have worked tirelessly on this new curriculum while your boss dumped on their work for his political stunt?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Our government is pausing the curriculum to review and to consult more broadly with stakeholders, including parents, teachers, students, and other subject-matter experts. We want to ensure that all of Alberta's new curriculum focuses on teaching essential knowledge and ensuring students develop foundational competencies and job-ready skills for life. That's what we're committed to; that's what we're going to do.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the curriculum process is now on pause or shredded and given that field testing of the new curriculum that so many people worked on was to begin this fall and given that the current curriculum is more than 30 years old – it predates the Internet, for crying out loud – to the Education Minister: what are you now planning when it comes to developing the new curriculum, and how will you remove your personal biases from it? Because, frankly, those really scare me.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. The consultations are actually going to begin this summer. I've heard from my department. They're actually refreshed, and they're feeling very positive about the direction that we're going to be going in. I look forward to sharing that as soon as I possibly can.

Thank you.

2:20

Ms Hoffman: Given that the Premier wants to roll back rights for LGBTQ youth and that many of his views seem to be stuck in the past and given that he often takes advice from extremists like John Carpay, to the Premier, then: will you tell Albertans who exactly is working on the curriculum, and is the reason why you're stalling because you'd prefer our province was stuck in the 1980s?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again you continue to see Team Angry, particularly from the deputy leader of the NDP. Nobody on this side of the House, particularly the Premier, is going to be lectured by an hon. member who came to this place and called Albertans sewer rats. It's absolutely ridiculous. She should stand up and apologize for that behaviour inside this House, which she did, but not really because then she went out and said that, oh, that was not what she really meant. That's what you get from the NDP. They don't care about Albertans. They don't like Albertans. That hon. member showed it that day when she called every Albertan a sewer rat. Think about that.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to stand in this House every day for our students, our teachers, our parents. The government caucus should be doing the same. Instead, Wetaskiwin Composite is going to see their career and technology class sizes double, and they're being forced to lay off their literacy and numeracy specialists because this government is cutting the classroom improvement fund. To the minister: is this what modernizing our education system looks like? Because that's what you're claiming to be doing.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I've actually been meeting with numerous boards. This morning I met with the CBE and they were able to confirm for me that the reports of 300 job losses are false. Their plan is to keep teachers in front of students and maintain existing staff levels. I'm happy to share that. I'm hearing positive things from our boards.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the teachers in the Parkland school district that I've been talking to are worried that layoffs will put staff in danger, that simply not having the educational assistants to support students with behavioural needs actually puts teachers at risk, that apparently assaults on teachers are on the rise and layoffs are planned for this fall because the Education minister keeps bungling the budget, to the minister: should teachers really have to worry about getting beat up at school because you want to cut their budget further?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I've also met with Edmonton Catholic, Edmonton public, and Calgary Catholic in this past week. None of those concerns were raised to me. Individual school districts are in the best position to address any questions about their specific budgets, but our government's commitment to funding education has been clear. Enrolment growth is being accounted for and funded.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks for bringing up Edmonton Catholic because when I met with their teachers, they said that special education funding was being cut by 9 per cent. Given that we know that the classroom improvement fund that was introduced by our government is now being killed – the minister admitted to that in supplementary supply. It was designed to specifically target students with complex needs. To the minister: will you admit that students with severe learning disabilities take a back seat in your mind when you're looking at ways to give billions of dollars to wealthy corporations?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. The hon. member knows, having been a former trustee herself, that it is the boards and the school districts that make the funding decisions, not the teachers. Therefore, I am quite confident that our boards know that we have continued enrolment growth funding. We are going to be building schools. That has been very clear. I'm not sure what else she needs to hear.

Nurse Practitioners

Mr. Rowswell: Mr. Speaker, recently a constituent of mine named Lynette Adamson brought to my attention how nurse practitioners are underutilized in all areas of care in our health care system despite their ability to provide care outcomes equal to their physician colleagues. As a nurse practitioner herself Lynette is vastly concerned about how limited her ability is to serve patients. In the government's platform it pledged to integrate nurse practitioners into the health care system. Can the Minister of Health tell my constituents how he plans on doing that?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we campaigned on a commitment to strengthen our publicly funded health system, and that includes making better use of the skills of nurse practitioners, an important and underused asset. We recently launched a new nurse practitioner support program for our 41 primary care networks. The program will oversee the hiring of 50 additional nurse practitioners over two years across Alberta. We're also expanding the services that nurse practitioners can provide. They can now set and reset bone fractures, as an example, and courtesy and provisional registrants can now provide the same range of care as fully registered nurse practitioners.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that wait times are often from there not being enough doctors and given that nurse practitioners are able to perform many of the same roles as doctors, from writing prescriptions to ordering tests to referring patients to a specialist, and given that our government was elected on a mandate to improve wait times in the health care system and given that rural communities suffer from longer wait times than urban communities, can the minister tell this place how nurse practitioners can help lower wait times?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a few ways, especially in primary care. They can, as an example, help address long-standing issues with lack of access to physicians, not instead of physicians but working with them as a team, and that means offering after-hours access and being available in underserved communities. That includes smaller and remote communities but also parts of our big cities. Nurse practitioners can help in other ways as well. They can provide urgent care to reduce crowding in emergency, provide triage for specialty services, and support acute care in a variety of ways.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental is to the Minister of Health. Given that one of the largest barriers to Albertans in accessing the services provided by nurse practitioners is the lack of a stable, reliable funding formula for nurse practitioners and given that the lack of funding applies to all sectors of Alberta Health Services in hospitals, long-term care, and, most importantly for my constituents, in rural communities, my constituents want to know why this is. Can the minister please inform them?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the member that budget constraints will not stop us from moving forward and adding more nurse practitioners in our health system. That is a platform commitment, and we will deliver on it, Mr. Speaker.

Integrating nurse practitioners into the health system is about more than just how we pay them. Nurse practitioners are not just substitutes for doctors; they're nurses who bring their own strengths to the team. The team needs to adapt and make good use of their skills. That's happening, and our government is going to make sure it continues, as we promised Albertans in our platform.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

United Conservative Party Fundraising

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago I raised a concern in this House about the UCP using their government positions to raise money for their party. I was very relieved to hear the Government House Leader say that they had "indicated to the party that we would prefer in the future not to use our titles that we have in this place," so you can imagine my confusion when I was shown again a UCP invitation dated June 3 advertising that the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction would be a special guest speaker. My question is to the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction. Did you approve this invite using your government title for this partisan event?

The Speaker: I might just remind hon. members that I didn't hear a particular topic of government policy there. I am more than happy to hear from the Government House Leader if he'd like to respond, but I wouldn't expect him to do so.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I didn't hear any government policy there . . .

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

Mr. Jason Nixon: . . . but I would like to talk about some government policy. I'm really happy the hon. member brought up red tape and, in particular, the hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction, who is doing a really good job of keeping the promises that we've made to Albertans, working on cutting red tape and helping to get Albertans back to work, focusing on jobs, the economy, and pipelines. Big contrast to what the NDP did when they were in power, which focused on taxing Albertans, causing job creators to have to shut down, starting the largest unemployment in the history of this province, and driving us towards the largest debt in our history.

Ms Sweet: Well, given that we're talking about government positions and government ethics and given that the Government House Leader assured this House twice that the UCP practice of using taxpayer-paid government positions for their partisan gains was over and given that this invitation was sent well after he made this pledge, again to the Government House Leader: is it going to be the policy of the UCP to promise one thing in this House and do the opposite outside?

The Speaker: Much better.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member did a good job on changing that back to government policy. I want to congratulate her on that. She is correct. I made it clear inside this Assembly that we have informed the party that we expect them to not use our Executive Council titles. The Ethics Commissioner has confirmed that that's not required, but we think that was the right thing to do. I saw the hon. member bring it up yesterday, and I have sent a note to the party to ask them what has taken place in this case. I am assured by the hon. member that he did not approve that message, and we'll wait to hear back from the party, but our direction has been clear in the future.

Ms Sweet: Well, given, Mr. Speaker, it's always great to hear the Government House Leader think that I can learn and given that I wrote about this issue to the Ethics Commissioner and given that in her response the commissioner cautioned the UCP about the use of government titles in their party fundraisers and warned that the use is considered inappropriate but it's not strictly prohibited by the Conflicts of Interest Act, to the Government House Leader: will you respect the advice of an Ethics Commissioner, apologize to this House for continuing this inappropriate practice, and commit to finally stopping the use of your government positions as fundraising draws for the UCP?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I've already addressed that question, but now that we're on the topic of the Ethics Commissioner and the things that she's written, she's actually called on that hon. member and her party to stop abusing the Ethics Commissioner's office for partisan gain. She does that in the exact same letter. She's referred to that hon. member many times, calling her out for playing political games with the Ethics Commissioner's office, so I'm curious: is she going to take the Ethics Commissioner's advice? We have. Maybe she should start.

Regulation Reduction

Mr. Nielsen: A few weeks ago, when the Premier and the minister of red tape announced the introduction of Bill 4, the Premier and the minister bragged about having cut 17 regulations. At the time, the media pointed out that these eliminated regulations had not been posted anywhere publicly. This lack of transparency is a little concerning. To the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction: is there a reason these regulations haven't been posted publicly, and what are you hiding from Albertans?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. The question was actually brought up by the press when we did our announcement, and we told them that it was an oversight, that we would try to be able to take care of it as quick as possible, and that's what we're doing.

Mr. Nielsen: Given this minister's failure to be public with Albertans about the 17 regulations he's already cut and given that the Premier's commitment to post these eliminated regulations online appears to have gone by the wayside – another promise made, promise broken, I guess – and given that Albertans have a right to know what this minister is doing, to the minister of red tape. This is your third chance in as many weeks. Can you please identify for this House just one piece of red tape you've cut?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question. We've already stated that we are going to do everything we can to be able to make sure that it's on the website. There's no conspiracy. This is Team Angry continually saying that there is a nefarious approach this government is taking. We're trying to work through the process to make sure that Albertans are seeing what we're doing with red tape reduction, and we'll make sure we do that.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, given that this minister appears to struggle with transparency and given that the minister wields a great deal of power and that there is a potential to cut red tape that actually is helpful when it comes to keeping Albertans healthy and safe, to the minister: will you commit to a simple task of tabling a copy of every regulation you have cut in this House before the end of Routine today, and if not, what are you hiding?

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, it's important that the member knows that the first thing we did to be able to cut some red tape is get rid of the carbon tax. That's a $1.4 billion hit to Albertans that we were able to get rid of. Stay tuned. We're going to be making sure that we get rid of at least a third. I've got my scissors out. We're going to make sure that Albertans are the ones that we're protecting.

The Speaker: The Member for Sherwood Park has a question.

Investment in Alberta and Job Creation

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For Albertans to prosper here at home, we must be deeply engaged abroad. On April 16, 2019, Albertans decisively elected a UCP government on the mandate of reversing record capital flight caused by damaging big-government NDP policies. Will the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism explain what her ministry is doing to signal to the world that Alberta is once again open for business?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development and trade.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Under the NDP, capital fled Alberta at a devastating rate. Many companies and communities were crippled by their job-killing policies and their tax increases. Our government has already taken common-sense steps to bring investment back to Alberta with our repeal of the carbon tax and the job-creation tax cut, and I and my ministry are working hard every day to let the world know that Alberta is once again open for business.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the minister. Given that investment declined under the NDP due to increased taxes and regulations, hurting Alberta's economy and profile abroad, and given that strong engagement with the Asia Pacific region, which contains 60 per cent of the world's population and 9 of our 12 Alberta international offices, is particularly important to making Alberta prosperous again, can the minister please elaborate on what her ministry is doing to raise Alberta's profile in and attract investment from the Asia Pacific?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development and trade.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government is absolutely dedicated to increasing our profile in the Asia Pacific and to attract investment from our trading partners there. As I mentioned before, I recently returned from a trade mission to Japan and South Korea on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, where I showcased the safe, reliable, high-quality goods of our agrifood sector as well as our tourism and energy sectors. Japan, in particular, is our third-largest agricultural trading partner, and South Korea is hungry for our energy resources.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given our commitment to get Albertans back to work, in part by attracting international investment from big economies such as Japan, China, and South Korea, and given that Alberta must be competitive and engage internationally to ensure prosperity here at home, will the minister please explain how attracting international investment will make Alberta prosperous once more?

The Speaker: The minister.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for the question. Alberta has some of the highest quality products in the world, and by attracting international investment, we can ensure that those products are getting to new markets and expanding our presence in existing markets. The United States will always be our closest friend, ally, and trading partner, but we need to grow our exports to the rest of the world. Our government is working hard every day to make that happen.

The Speaker: The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Highway 28 Capital Plan

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Highway 28 stretches from Edmonton all the way to Cold Lake. While the section from Edmonton to highway 63 intersection has seen very much-needed repairs lately, the section from highway 63 to Bonnyville and Cold Lake has been neglected despite multiple requests from local MLAs and local municipalities. To the Minister of Transportation. Under the NDP improvements to this section of highway 28 did not even show up in the three-year plan. Will you be reassessing the priority plan and look into this vital stretch of highway in my constituency?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. I'd like the hon. member to know that highway 28 had a corridor study recently completed. The study identified a number of improvements that could be done along the corridor, and they include intersection improvements, passing lane opportunities, and places where safety rest areas could be added. The study also looked at the possible twinning between Bonnyville and Cold Lake. As is so often the case, this is amongst our capital planning and budget planning process, and we are . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Minister, for the answer. Given that highway 28 is one of the only routes connecting one of the busiest and most productive bitumen-producing areas of the province and given that this area has contributed significantly to the economy of not only the province of Alberta but the entire country, Minister, would you agree that areas like this that continue to drive our economy deserve a second look and perhaps some special consideration when it comes to setting infrastructure priorities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. The hon. member is correct. Cold Lake and area are very important and big contributors to Alberta's economy. One project of the ones I mentioned is now being considered. That's pavement between highway 63 and Waskatenau. There is also, I'd like the hon. member to know, the possibility that we're considering a roundabout at the intersections of highway 28 and 831. Other rehabilitation projects are also in the works and under consideration.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you again for the answer, Minister. Given that 4 Wing Cold Lake is the busiest fighter base in Canada and depends on highway 28 for fuel delivery as well as pretty much everything delivered by truck and given that 4 Wing hosts Maple Flag, an exercise attended by our allied forces from around the world, Minister, will you agree to drive up to my constituency this summer, preferably on your motorcycle so you can get the full experience of the highway, and visit this busy highway that is often the first impression of international visitors to our province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to see an hon. member so proud of the area that he represents. There's certainly much to be proud of, with 4 Wing and the military up in Cold Lake. As the member knows, it's always my pleasure to meet people and discuss transportation projects and priorities. It's also my pleasure, whenever I can, to get on the motorcycle, and it's certainly my pleasure to go for perogies and to visit good people up there. I'll tell the hon. member that I would love to talk to him. I'll do my best to get it in the schedule and make that happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Trade with Asia

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much. In November of 2016 our NDP government led the largest trade delegation in Alberta's history to China, with more than 86 different businesses and entities. Mr. Speaker, between 2016 and 2019 trade with China increased by 25 per cent, or over a billion dollars. Companies like Nelson remediation have secured tens of millions of dollars in contracts because they participated in trade missions with our government: not my words; their words. To the minister of economic development: how many businesses did you bring on your mission, and how are you demonstrating a collaborative team Alberta approach the way our government did?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is open for business, and our government is taking action to expand and diversify our trade market. While in Japan and South Korea we met with more than 30 groups of government officials, industry stakeholders, and front-line workers, and we had positive, productive meetings. The NDP went on multiple trade missions as well. On our trade missions we brought people from the canola industries, beef industry, and pork industry as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As did we. I asked how many businesses accompanied you.

Given that our NDP government introduced the export expansion program because we know that we need to support Alberta businesses to access new markets and given that opening up new markets for Alberta businesses means more jobs here at home, higher revenues, and new supply chains and given that this program helped companies like Absolute Combustion, who's now doing business in more than 10 different countries, to the same minister: will you stand up today and assure Alberta businesses that this program will continue?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister for Economic Development, Trade and Tourism.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The biggest relationship that we could have had with China was the Northern Gateway pipeline, which they killed. Referring back to my mission to Japan and South Korea, we had people with us from the Canola Council of Canada, the Canadian Canola Growers Association, Cereals Canada, and Pulse Canada, just to name a few.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta canola producers have been hit hard by China's ban and given that this government recently completed a trade mission to open markets, although I find it fascinating the minister didn't invite business leaders, and given that canola farmers really need our help, not empty words or politicians playing the blame game, to the minister of agriculture: what specific supports are you giving to Alberta farmers to offset their losses in dollars, or are you just going to blame us, the federal government, or anyone else you can pass the buck on to?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Dreesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. We do have a suite of programs, BRM programs, business risk management programs, that farmers will be able to get access to this year. But I do find it a bit rich coming from this member, who, I think it was a couple weeks ago, in this House came up and said that if farmers or any businesses were having difficulties paying $3,000 or a few extra thousand dollars a month in carbon taxes, they should look at their management and they should look at their own business plan. That is just disrespectful, and it's surprising he asks these types of questions.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will move to the rest of daily Routine. I encourage everyone who has other engagements to exit quickly and drive safely.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Bill 12 Royalty Guarantee Act

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to seek leave to introduce Bill 12, the Royalty Guarantee Act.

This legislation would deliver on a commitment that ensures that the royalty structure in place when a project is permitted and when investment decisions are made will have no major changes for at least 10 years. This legislation would strengthen Alberta's ability to compete in the global market while maintaining the flexibility needed to address significant market conditions and technology changes. This guarantee can be legislated by an amendment to the existing Mines and Minerals Act, ensuring that the day-to-day business of the royalty structure would not change. By ensuring that the rules can't change halfway through the game, we will signal that Alberta's oil and gas sector is a stable place to invest and create jobs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is rising.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to table three letters in support of Bill 201, with the prescribed number of copies of each. The first is from Assistant Principal Stan Travník in Leduc, the second is from the St. Paul education regional division 1, and the third is from Food Allergy Canada. We have indeed been consulting with stakeholders, and these letters show it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling an article called Why CBC News Is Doing a Series on Climate Change. That series is called In Our Backyard, and I have tabled other articles this week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of e-mails to table from some angry constituents. One is from Chris Sadoway, who says that the member who was supplying the earplugs "should resign immediately." The second e-mail is from a constituent named Carrie Holstead, who said, "if I did anything like that in a meeting at my workplace, I would be fired." I have the appropriate number of copies of those to submit.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings today? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table correspondence regarding constituents from Lethbridge who were very concerned about what they termed the earplug stunt, thinking that it was quite repulsive and that the members involved should apologize.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a document which I received from a constituent who is "disgusted and appalled by the actions taken by the UCP and, regretfully, our premier" in regard to last night's debate, where, of course, he walked around and handed out earplugs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Yes. I'd like to also table some correspondence from a constituent about the earplug incident, about them frankly being "livid that the government decided to put in earplugs while the opposition was fighting for my spouses and families income." I have the requisite five copies.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. At approximately 2:13, 2:14 the hon. Member for Edmonton-West raised a couple of points of order.

Mr. Ellis: Calgary-West, but thank you.

The Speaker: Oh. Potayto, potato.

2:50

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission, could we combine the two points of order that I had there?

Point of Order Epithets

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity to speak on this point of order. I certainly rise under 23(h), (i), and (j), but, I will say, more specifically, “language of a nature likely to create disorder.”

Last week, Mr. Speaker, in your ruling, which can be found on page 799 of Alberta Hansard, about the opposition referring to Bill 8 as Bill Hate, you stated:

I ask members, as we move forward, to choose their language carefully. Ask yourself whether your intention is to insult or to inflame debate or to levy an accusation against a member opposite or – and perhaps this is the [most] important part – to knowingly cause disorder.

I reference 23(j) of our standing orders.

If I may go back to the quote:

If so, I would suggest that you find another means to make your case.

You further remarked:

However, this ruling should not be considered carte blanche to proceed with using the mock bill title Bill Hate on a regular basis.

Now, I think it is quite clear that the intention of the members opposite is to insult or inflame debate on what is a very sensitive and important topic. I think that we are headed to a point where any use of the term “Bill Hate” in this Chamber will lead to points of order being called, which will disrupt question period and could very well lead to a point where order cannot be maintained. I would further add, Mr. Speaker, that if the opposition, of course, goes down this road, again I will continue to reference 23(j), of language that appears to be of an intent to likely cause disorder, it is only reasonable to conclude that it is meant to cause disorder.

I thank you for the time to speak on this. I certainly do not believe that this is a matter of debate or opinion. I think that this is a case where there is a clear intent by the opposition to cause disorder in this Chamber.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. deputy Opposition House Leader.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not a point of order. As you know and as we’ve discussed in this House many times, the government, when they were in opposition, nicknamed many, many, many of our government bills. We had the job-killing carbon tax, we had the no-more-pipeline law. Repeatedly the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo used “job-killing carbon tax.” The current Premier used “no more pipelines.” The hon. Minister of Transportation used “job-killing carbon tax.” This has happened numerous times in this House. When the government was in opposition, they were creative in many different ways on many different bills. We’ve discussed this already. I don’t believe that it’s a point of order.

The thing that I also find very interesting is that there is no consistency on the government side when they decide whether Bill Hate is actually inflaming something or not. It’s used frequently in this House, and even within this question period members referenced it more than once and there was no point of order. Then a certain member stood up, and all of a sudden it became a point of order. So I would also like to maybe remind the government that sometimes they may be responding to certain members on our side of the House more frequently than they necessarily do other members in this House.

Again, I do not think that this is a point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am prepared to rule on the point of order. This particular point of order has been the subject of significant discussion in the House over the past couple of weeks. On numerous occasions the Speaker has provided caution with respect to the use of the term “Bill Hate.” On more than one occasion I provided guidance with respect to the ruling from 2013 of Speaker Zwozdesky. Even as late as yesterday I said:

I would conclude by saying that I am yet hesitant to rule Bill Hate out of order during question period. I would say again that I will be listening closely, that it would be hard to imagine another time or a scenario where Bill Hate used during question period would be unlikely to cause disorder. As such, I will be left with very little option but to deliver a similar ruling to that of Speaker Zwozdesky in 2013 when he ruled “climate change denier” as something that is likely to create disorder.

I don’t know that my direction could have been any stronger.

I take the deputy Official Opposition House Leader’s comments with a sense of reverence, around members utilizing names of bills other than the designated title. I can certainly see in the future that that practice will be permitted. However, with respect to Bill Hate I could also suggest that that particular title implies that other members may in fact hate individuals or the government hating individuals and has the ability to be particularly disruptive with respect to when the government may or may not call a point of order based on who may use it or may not use it. I’m not sure that that is particularly relevant with respect to this point of order today.

Having said that, I am prepared, as did Speaker Zwozdesky, for during Oral Question Period to rule the term “Bill Hate” out of order in the context that it is likely to create disorder and potentially lead to debate, as we have seen here today. Having said that, I am not prepared to rule that comment out of order during regular debate, as we have seen that it is significantly less likely to create disorder. Having said that, I wouldn’t provide a carte blanche ruling that would allow the opposition or other members of the Assembly to use the term “Bill Hate” during regular debate without consideration that it may in fact create disorder.

I consider this matter now concluded and would urge all members to refrain from using the term “Bill Hate” during Oral Question Period.

Point of order 3, raised by the hon. Opposition House Leader at approximately 14:27.

Ms Sweet: That was by the hon. Government House Leader, correct?

The Speaker: Sorry. Point of order 3 was raised during the question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. The Official Opposition House Leader raised the point of order, perhaps on your behalf, but I’m happy to hear from you if you are the one who is going to be arguing it today.

Point of Clarification

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m actually standing under 13(2): “The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member.” The reason I’m raising this as a point of order – and I believe that the Government House Leader at the time raised it as a point of order – is that if you reference my first question, which I anticipate you may have a copy of the Blues on already in front of you, it spoke specifically to raising a concern in the House about the UCP using their government positions to raise money for their party. You interrupted me during that period of time to caution me around whether or not I was speaking to government policy. You then allowed the government side to not have to answer the question and recommended that they didn't actually have to answer the question, which I feel is a little bit out of turn given how my question was actually formed.

I'm just requesting clarity from you as to why you would, first off, indicate that my question was not in order and then why you would also allow the government to not have to answer my question given the way that it was framed.

The Speaker: Thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. What I did say in my remarks – and I do have the benefit of the Blues – is: “I might just remind hon. members that I didn't hear a particular topic of government policy there. I am more than happy to hear from the Government House Leader if he'd like to respond, but I wouldn't expect him to do so.”

At no point in time did I rule your question out of order. In fact, I didn't provide a ruling, only a cautionary tale. And, in fact, the Government House Leader did choose to answer your question, as is his responsibility.

What I would say in addition to that is that, now having the benefit of the Blues and having the opportunity to read the way that your question was framed, perhaps the intervention was unnecessary. But I do caution members, and I have spoken about this in the past. I'm happy to have members of the opposition or members of this House ask questions and ensure that they are tied to government business.

I also recognize that we are members of political organizations and that sometimes those two things can be very close. I want the opposition to be assured that I have no desire to prevent them from asking questions where those two things may join. But I want to encourage them to ensure that they do that in a manner that focuses on how that impacts the government or otherwise.

It is a cautionary tale, and I also will heed some of the advice or the reflection that the Member for Edmonton-Manning has provided today because upon reading the question, I would say that it's possible that the intervention was not warranted. If an apology is necessary, I'm happy to provide one both privately or publicly, but I encourage members that these questions need to be clearly tied to government policy so that the Speaker has clarity during the cut and thrust of debate around exactly what the member is asking.

As such, I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

I see the hon. deputy Official Opposition House Leader rising.

Ms Sweet: Standing Order 13(2), hon. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm happy to hear from you. Are you seeking . . .

Ms Sweet: Clarity here, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are you asking for Standing Order 13(2) on a 13(2), where I've literally just spent the last three minutes explaining why I said what I said?

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, I am rising under 13(2) to get clarity around your ruling around this particular issue. Given that I am the critic for ethics in democracy, I just need a little bit more clarity as to how you see fit that I am able to ask questions of this government and these particular members within the role of ethics in democracy when it relates specifically to government policy but also members of that government.

The Speaker: I think you did a fine job on the second question, as I gave indication there. I also literally just provided three minutes of clarity on the ruling that I had previously made. I also said that I considered the matter dealt with and concluded. I don't think it's very reasonable for the hon. member to continue to challenge the chair when the chair has ruled. If the hon. member would like to continue the discussion outside of the Chamber, my door is always open, as she is very well aware. As such, I consider the matter concluded.

We are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the committee to order, members.

Bill 2

An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business

The Chair: We are on amendment A1. Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm very pleased to join the discussion that has been happening on Bill 2 in Committee of the Whole. I do have a number of concerns about this bill, which we've colloquially called the pick-your-pockets bill, specifically because of the financial impact it is going to have on workers in Alberta, particularly workers who depend on the minimum standards that are included in employment standards. To be clear, it is primarily vulnerable workers who rely on employment standards' minimum standards.

There are many, many, many workers around Alberta who work in environments that have employers who give them far, far more than the minimum, and that's wonderful. But as a government there is a responsibility to make sure that there is a fair and balanced minimum standard for all workers. Bill 2 actually rolls back standards in a number of really important places.

We've had members rise in this House even today to accuse the opposition of misinformation or misrepresenting things. I would suggest to you, Madam Chair, that the government has been misrepresenting some of the changes inside of Bill 2 through social media channels and in talking to Albertans, and I would really like to spend a little bit of time talking about that.

First, let's talk about overtime. To be very clear, the opposition understands quite well the overtime change that is being proposed in Bill 2. At this point I question whether the government and the minister of labour, who is moving this piece of legislation, do understand. There have been a number of back-and-forth discussions, let's say, through different mediums, including social media, where the opposition has been pointing out that the overtime changes in Bill 2 will literally take money out of the bank accounts of 400,000 Albertans who work overtime, and in response the government has been talking about the parts of overtime that they're not changing. So let me be clear. We understand that the government is not changing paid overtime – we are not talking about paid overtime – but the changes to banked overtime will cost Alberta workers money.

Even during question period we've been able to talk a little bit about this. The Leader of the Official Opposition rose in this House and gave what I thought was a very clear example of how overtime will impact workers. For example, today at time and a half overtime banking, if a worker does the two-week equivalent of banked overtime, they would then get three paid weeks off, which means that in their bank account they will have the pay from three weeks' worth of work. Under this bill the minimum standards would change and that worker, rather than getting three paid weeks off - time with family, which they deserve, having done overtime hours - they would actually only get two. Not only is that less time with family, but that is less money in their bank account because their bank account now only has the money from two weeks' worth rather than three.

I'm confused as to why the government, that is bringing forward this bill, continues to mislead Albertans and continues to post graphics that show there are no changes to paid overtime. I agree that this bill doesn't try to change paid overtime, but it does significantly change banked overtime. I think that not being able to have a legitimate, factual conversation with Albertans about this is a sign of a flawed policy and one that the government isn't proud of. I think that's really unfortunate.

Certainly, in my time as a minister working to improve the minimum standards that protect vulnerable workers, I saw it as my responsibility to always deal with factual truths, to always deal with the debate, and to come at it from a place of honesty. To have the minister talking about paid overtime, which isn't even changing and isn't in the bill, as if the opposition doesn't understand, is disingenuous. I know he is a very, very intelligent person; I know he is well intentioned, but he is providing incorrect information to the Alberta public and confusing their potential understanding for these changes.

I know this because when I talk about what is actually happening, I get a number of questions: the government said that there wasn't going to be a change. Well, there is. There's a big change, and it's a change where instead of getting time and a half for banked overtime, they'll only get straight time.

Ms Sweet: Point of order.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning called a point of order.

Point of Order Quorum

Ms Sweet: Madam Chair, I believe that under Standing Order 5(1) "the presence of at least 20 Members of the Legislative Assembly is necessary to constitute a meeting of the Legislative Assembly."

The Chair: Ring the bells.

[Pursuant to Standing Order 5 the division bell was rung at 3:10 p.m. and the Chair of Committees confirmed that a quorum was present]

Debate Continued

The Chair: Please proceed, hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. I'm very pleased to continue talking about the changes to banked overtime. As I was just explaining to you, Madam Chair - but we have a number of new people who have joined us for the discussion - paid overtime is not changing, but banked overtime, which has been time and a half, is moving backwards to straight time. That is going to have a very real impact on working Albertans.

Now, we have tabled in this House documentation that shows 400,000 . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

The Chair: A point of order. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to rise. The hon. member was referring to members that aren't in the Chamber. Again, not within the rules. The member knows that. Please instruct her to change her tone.

Ms Gray: I certainly don't want to disrespect anyone. I believe I referred to members who were in the Chamber, but I apologize, and I'm happy to withdraw.

The Chair: Sure. I didn't hear that there was a specific absence of any particular member in this Assembly . . .

Ms Gray: No. I didn't.

The Chair: . . . but perhaps a reference to new members in the chairs. I would express that you should take some caution, as you have already mentioned that you will.

Edmonton-Mill Woods, please proceed.

Debate Continued

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Now, the other interesting factor in the difference between paid overtime and banked overtime and the changes introduced in Bill 2 is the fact that the changes to move to straight overtime put Alberta in an entirely unique position within all of Canada. Everywhere in Canada, including Alberta today, workers who do overtime and choose to bank that overtime are given the banked overtime at a rate of time and a half. This is specifically because overtime work that a worker will provide to their employer is seen to be done at a premium because you have someone who has already done either eight hours of work in a given day or 44 hours in a week, as the case may be.

This is additional time and effort over and above those minimum standards that deserve to have the compensation of time and a half either paid, which, again I acknowledge is not changing in this bill, or when they bank it because the additional overtime that those workers are doing is time away from their family, is often work done when they are working very hard, have already done eight hours and continue to do more to achieve the goals that they need to accomplish in their place of employment.

Overtime pay, whether it's paid out or banked, deserves to be done at time and a half. That is the Canadian standard, and I have not heard a good argument for why Alberta workers should deserve less than the average Canadian worker across the country. In British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Quebec: where a jurisdiction allows overtime banking, it is always at time and a half. Looking at that Canadian standard and looking across the board at what Alberta workers deserve and expect is an important job of any government. I think that we need to really consider why this bill is suggesting that Alberta workers deserve less. Again, I will make the point that I think it's incumbent upon the government to stop confusing the issue and talking about paid overtime, which we all know and fully understand is not changing in this bill, but banked overtime is.

So I would encourage the government members either in this Chamber or even in public communications on social media to engage reasonably and factually about banked overtime changes. When I raise a concern about banked overtime, it's not reasonable to tell me that paid overtime is staying the same. We all understand that. The only thing that's happening is trying to confuse Alberta workers, and that's disappointing, when I see that behaviour happen.

Making sure that workers who deserve that overtime premium when they spend extra time get it is very important to my caucus and me. That is one of the strongest reasons why I am in opposition to Bill 2, the pick-your-pockets bill, because it will have a very significant impact on workers who depend on overtime banking to balance out their lives. A lot of workers in Alberta work in scenarios where they travel to their place of work and potentially stay there for weeks at a time. Taking away banked overtime at time and a half is potentially costing them time with their families, literally costing them time with their families, because, again, when they do two weeks' worth of overtime banking, rather than being able to take three weeks with their family, they will only be able to have two. That's time and less money in their bank accounts. Of course, as you know, Madam Chair, time is money, so taking time away from people is taking away money, especially because this is paid time. So I'm very concerned about this overtime provision.

Now, there's a second provision that changes the minimum employment standard for Alberta workers. I keep referring to the minimum standard because this government has made the point – and it is a fair point – that employers are able to do more than the minimum. Many, many employers do, but there are employers who will and do only provide the minimums that are in employment standards. Often the workers who find themselves relying on minimum employment standards are the least empowered workers in our workforce. This might be young workers, this could be newcomers, this could be many different people in difficult situations who may not feel empowered to argue with an employer. I think it's really important to consider that.

I would be interested to know if members in this House have that personal experience of not getting a statutory holiday, because that's what this bill will do to some workers, not to all workers. But some workers, as a result of this, will find themselves not getting time with their family or not getting statutory holiday pay because the holiday has fallen on a weekend or has fallen on a day they don't typically work.

Now, a point I made earlier in second reading, Madam Chair, I think bears repeating. We know from looking at this in the past that a lot of employers, particularly big employers who hire a lot of people, have very sophisticated HR management systems. What they used those systems to do before our government brought in the change that all workers deserve stat holiday pay is that they would specifically set up scheduling to make sure that as few workers as possible got statutory holidays. That is a cost to those workers. That is a detriment to those workers.

I do not see the reasoning for why Alberta workers don't deserve the same rights and benefits as other workers across Canada, because, like the overtime banking change, the holiday pay change for statutory holidays would put Alberta as the only jurisdiction where someone could get nothing for Christmas. No time off, no stat holiday pay: why would Alberta want that to be its distinguishing feature? Why would Alberta want to be out of step on that policy? Is it because there are no businesses that run anywhere else in Canada? That is not the case. Businesses are able to grow and thrive across Canada while their governments still respect workers and implement minimum standards that benefit all Canadians, except potentially here in Alberta if Bill 2 is allowed to continue without amendments to these sections.

I would also like to submit to you, Madam Chair, that one of the reasons we made changes to holiday pay and to statutory holidays in particular was to align with the rest of Canada to make sure that we have workplace minimum standards here in Alberta that match other jurisdictions. Again I remind you, Madam Chair, because our employment standards hadn't been updated in 30 years prior to the changes our government brought in, we were way out of line in so many ways, and a lot of workers were, I would say, falling through the cracks. It was hurting a lot of particularly vulnerable workers. This was not the white-collar workers in office towers that this was happening to primarily.

When I questioned the re-addition of very complicated new criteria, which were old criteria reimplemented that employers had asked us to simplify, this struck me very seriously as the addition of red tape from a government that is focused on reducing red tape. Employers needing to calculate: if in the last five of the nine weeks preceding the work week in which the general holiday occurs, this is how we handle it, et cetera, et cetera. These calculations and this system complication aren't necessary if we all just agree that every worker deserves statutory holiday pay, which seems to me to be a very reasonable premise and something that all Canadians appear to believe except for this government here in Alberta.

Being in a position of working a full-time job, going in day in and day out, and then, because Christmas and New Year's Day fall on a weekend, not being able to spend extra time with family, not being able to have that extra statutory holiday pay that, I would suggest, all Canadian workers deserve, including workers in Alberta, is disappointing and not something that I believe a majority of Alberta workers agree with from this government. Making sure that we have minimum standards that align with the rest of Canada, that are fair and treat our workers with respect would be my recommendation to this government.

Not doing that seems like this government just wants to pick the pockets of these workers. Again, who are these workers? The most vulnerable workers, generally speaking, those who rely on those minimum employment standards. Many, many of our employers in this province provide far greater than the minimum employment standards, and I thank all employers who may be doing that. Minimum employment standards are perfectly adequate, but here we're lowering them, and that's what I object to. I think our minimum employment standards in Alberta should match the minimum employment standards from across Canada and in other jurisdictions. It does not make sense to me that workers in every other province will get either time off at Christmas or stat holiday pay but not in Alberta.

Those are two of the major concerns that I have with the changes in Bill 2. After decades of inaction Albertans finally got to the point where they had the same rights and benefits as every other Canadians, finally had more family-friendly workplaces, job-protected leaves, improved maternity leave, compassionate care, and changes to overtime banking and changes to statutory holiday pay that would put us in line with other jurisdictions.

Now, we had talked about overtime and the people that this will impact. I think it's really important to really focus on or highlight the fact that a lot of the workers who use overtime banking, who use overtime in general, whether it's paid out or banked, work in the oil and gas sector, work in construction, and work in seasonal industries where they may not have a lot of flexibility. So these changes are going to impact a large number of Alberta workers, and I think that's very unfortunate.

Now, another change related to Bill 2, the pick-your-pockets bill, is starting a new policy or, rather, revisiting an old policy that was cancelled in the '90s of paying youth, students, less than the minimum wage, a new minimum of $13 per hour. I have a lot of concerns with this aspect of the package of changes that were announced with An Act to Make Alberta Open for Business because we know a number of things about youth and youth who work. They have different backgrounds, priorities, responsibilities. A lot of people opposed to increases in minimum wage will paint the picture that all youth who are working are living in their parents' basement and using the money to buy video games. We know that is not true. Of the youth who are working, there are youth who are supporting a family, either by helping to contribute to the family budget and support parents who may be in difficult situations or because they themselves are parents.

At the same time, I would hope that we would be encouraging all our youth in this province to stay in school because we know how beneficial that is not just to them but to our overall society and our economy, to have well-educated Albertans who are able to support themselves, who are able to not just survive but thrive. Getting a good high school education is an important first step, but this package of changes is actually going to encourage our most vulnerable students to drop out of school to get a $2 per hour raise.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods not just for her comments but for all of the work that she did to support working Albertans in her time as minister of labour in the past government.

I know that one of the significant advances that she made in furthering the economic situation of working people was to grant them the ability to bank overtime hours at an overtime rate, just like our counterparts all across Canada. I, of course, want to speak to the amendment that is before us, which tries to at least re-enshrine this right to allow workers to bank their overtime hours at the overtime rate. It's concerning to me that the members on the treasury benches continue to misrepresent what's actually going on here, because as my hon. friend from Edmonton-Mill Woods has stated time and again, time is money. If you're getting paid out overtime at the overtime rate, it only makes sense that you should be able to bank time at the overtime rate.

I want to share some personal stories about my own experience, family's experience, rather, working overtime. My dad is a welder. He continues to weld for a living, and that's how he supported his family when he was raising us, Madam Chair. My dad, of course, was smart enough to realize that you got better working conditions and wages and benefits if you worked union, so he continues to be a proud member of the plumbers and pipefitters local 488 here in Edmonton. Because of the higher wages and better benefits provided to unionized workers through local 488, he was able to provide for his family, a good life for his family, provide extended health care and dental benefits to us as children.

We are incredibly grateful for that because we know that there are many workers, particularly in Alberta, who don't have the benefit of a union and are really struggling to make ends meet because they don't have the high wages and the extended health benefits and pension plans that come from unionized work. I don't know, Madam Chair, if the contracts that he worked under guaranteed that they were able to bank at overtime rate for overtime hours. I would suspect that they do because, of course, construction labour unions are quite successful at negotiating good contracts with their employers. Certainly, it was the case when he worked on non-union jobs that that wasn't provided.

Now, Madam Chair, it was the case when we were children that my father had to work long hours far away from home. When we were kids, we lived in southern Saskatchewan, and this was the early to late '80s. Of course, as you know, Saskatchewan at that time was being ravaged by the Grant Devine Conservative government, which was, without a doubt, the most incompetent and corrupt provincial government that any modern Canadian province has seen, and because of the incompetence and corruption of that government, the economy of Saskatchewan tanked. It had been managed effectively by NDP governments for decades, and it only took a few short years for Grant Devine and his gang of crooks to drive that economy into the ground. As a result, of course, my father had to seek employment outside of the province, and to do so, he often came to Alberta, which, you know, even though it was under a Conservative government, was at least managed competently and without the kind of corruption that Saskatchewan was seeing at the time.

So my father plied his welding trade in a number of locations. He worked at the pulp mill in Hinton. He worked at the pulp mill in Peace River. He worked on a number of pipeline projects all across the province. You know, he did his best, as many Albertans do, to provide a good living for himself and his family, but that work required him to spend long hours far away from home, like many Albertans do. I know that there are thousands and thousands of Albertans who are just like my father, who have to travel long distances and stay away from their families for extended periods of time.

You know, to think that my dad and thousands of workers like him don't even have the opportunity to bank their overtime hours at the overtime rate is a shame. That means that, you know, he was sacrificing his time from his family, his children and only getting paid at the normal hourly rate for that. That's not how work should be structured, Madam Chair. We don't exist to simply work for our employers. We work for our own benefit as well, and an economy that works for everybody is one where people can work for a reasonable length of time and provide a good living for themselves and their family.

It's been a long-established practice to divide the work hours into eight-hour chunks – eight hours of work, eight hours of play or recreation or time with family, and eight hours of rest – and if you exceed that eight hours of work, Madam Chair, you should be paid or allowed to bank your overtime hours at the overtime rate because we recognize that that takes time out of the eight hours of rest and eight hours of time with your family and recreation that our society has agreed everybody should be entitled to.

Now, Madam Chair, working those long extended hours far away from home takes a toll on a family. There are thousands and thousands of Albertans who know the toll that it takes on a family to work those long hours away from home. In fact, when we were debating this bill in the filibuster last week, members of the UCP caucus identified that, you know, having to spend time here took time away from their other duties. As a result, we recognize that working beyond the normal hours takes time out of the things that we would also like to be doing with our time. So it's only fair that people be compensated at a premium rate for the time that is taken out of that eight hours of recreation and eight hours of rest that we deem to be appropriate. [interjections]

I have a feeling that the general noise in the Chamber is escalating to a point where nobody would really care what I'm saying. I could just talk about the weather.

Mr. Nielsen: I'm listening intently.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you. Yeah. Good. Good. Excellent. Thank you.

Back to my point, some of the projects that my dad worked on were pipeline projects. He continues to work on pipeline projects or would. He is currently unemployed because the line 3 project by Enbridge is held up in the Minnesota courts, but he will be back at work once that project resumes. Of course, like thousands of other Albertans, he is looking forward to going to work on, potentially, the TMX pipeline. It's remarkable to me, Madam Chair, that we are now creating a situation where we're very grateful that the pipeline projects are going forward, but if a person is working on the TMX pipeline or Enbridge line 3, working on those pipelines here in Alberta, they won't be guaranteed the ability to bank their overtime hours at overtime rates, yet the same person doing the same job on the same pipeline in British Columbia or Saskatchewan or Manitoba would be guaranteed the ability to bank their overtime hours at the overtime rate.

Now, like I said, many of these workers are unionized, and I'm sure that thanks to the power of the union they're able to negotiate reasonable overtime payment agreements on behalf of their employees and their members. But not everybody, like I said, Madam Chair, works for a union or is covered by a union, and certainly there are measures in this bill that will make it harder for Albertans to unionize, so that's concerning to me. Not only are we taking away the guarantee that Albertans will be able to bank their overtime hours at the overtime rate; we're also making it harder for them to organize collectively so that they have a union to bargain on their behalf to make sure that that guarantee is in place, which the government is failing to provide to them, which is grossly unfair, especially when we can look at any other province in the country and realize that that is the minimum standard that every employee is entitled to in every other province in the country.

It's also interesting that the ability of workers to bank their overtime hours at the overtime rate doesn't seem to have any impact on employment rates. Certainly, if you look at B.C., right now they have the lowest unemployment rate in the country. Saskatchewan, even though it's also had its challenges, has lower unemployment rates. In fact, almost every other province except for, of course, the Atlantic provinces, have lower unemployment rates than Alberta, yet they don't take away the ability for overtime hours to be banked at the overtime rates, Madam Chair. It just doesn't seem to make sense to me that taking away this significant economic benefit from people who are building this province will do anything to create jobs. There's no evidence that it will.

In fact, even in spite of this bill being before the Legislature right now and in spite of the government's successful repeal of the carbon tax and successful giveaway of 4 and a half billion dollars to the wealthiest corporations, we're still seeing layoffs occurring in this province, Madam Chair. We lost 21,000 full-time jobs in the month of May. Of course, the government caucus had been on the job for six weeks already at that point. We're, you know, more than two months into their mandate, and we see hundreds of people being laid off by Repsol just this week. Nexen, of course, is laying off hundreds of employees as well. At what point do we ask whether or not the legislation that has already been passed or that is under consideration by this House is having its intended effect of creating jobs and stimulating the economy?

It's interesting, Madam Chair. Every time we raise the fact that when workers have more money in their pockets, that stimulates the economy, of course, the members opposite disagree with us in the most vociferous terms possible, yet just in debate around Bill 9 the other night, you know, the Member for Calgary-Hays was telling us that we absolutely had to cut the deficit on the backs of public-sector employees because that will create jobs and those jobs will put money in people's pockets that will stimulate the economy. The members opposite obviously agree that putting money in the pockets of working people will stimulate the economy. It's just that they don't want to do it through minimum-wage measures or allowing people to have overtime rates.

One of the other aspects that my hon. friend from Edmonton-Mill Woods raised was the fact that a lot of these employees who are affected by overtime rate changes are seasonal employees. They can't rely on regular work, Madam Chair, and it just makes sense that if they were able to bank their overtime hours at the overtime rate, they would be able to give themselves more of a cushion to look for that next job. Instead of having two weeks of overtime banked or three weeks of overtime banked, they could have three weeks or six weeks of overtime banked when they inevitably lose their jobs due to the seasonal nature of the work that they're engaged in. That would give them a little bit more time to find the next job.

I know from my own experience watching my father go to work that once one job was over, it was often a long time until the next one rolled around. That anxiety, that nervousness about not being able to make ends meet once the time ran out and the money in the bank was running short created a lot of stress for him and our family. I'm sure that that creates a lot of stress for thousands of Alberta families who find themselves in the same position. So why are we reimposing that stress and that anxiety on the workers of Alberta now? What did they do to deserve to be put into a more precarious position?
